Helena Postoffice, etc.—This office was established in 1865, with John Potter, master, and the first regular mail brought in October 14, that year. The office was in the Taylor & Thompson building, until removed to the old office on Broadway. Previous to the establishment of this office, letters were brought in by Oliver's express, at twenty-five cents each. Silas H. Crounse succeeded Mr. Potter and moved the office to upper Main street, where it was conducted until the fire of January 9, 1874, when it was transferred to the Holter block, whence it was removed to main street, next the St. Louis hotel. Mr. Fisk, the postmaster up to 1883, was succeeded by D. H. Cuthbert. Mr. Cuthbert's staff comprises R. P. Barden, assistant postmaster; Wm. Bishop, general delivery clerk; W. R. McDowell, registry clerk; R. S. McBride, mailing clerk. The business of the office for 1884 shows a large increase over any previous year. Nearly three-quarters of a million dollars represent the cash matters for the year ending December 31, 1884. The history of the collector's office is given in other pages. Colonel Thomas P. Fuller is the incumbent. Collections of his office from 1865 to the 30th of June, 1879, were $789,582.89, the same being a greater total for the same time than has been collected in any other territory. The collections for 1877 were $20,729, for 1879, $30,429, a gain of 50 per cent. The increase since 1879 has been in higher proportion.

Assay Office.—The United States assay office is a handsome brick and stone building, erected by the United States government at a cost of $60,000. The grounds about it are nicely laid out and fenced. The government kept here prior to 1879 $100,500 for the purchase of gold and silver. This amount has been increased to $250,500. R. B. Harrison is the assayer in charge. The history and statistics of this office are given in the general history. The deposits of gold and silver in this office for six months ending December 31, 1883, amounted to $525,939.41; for year ending December 31, 1884, $884,915.19, and for one-half year ending June 30, 1885, $439,150.46.

Health Department.—The annual report of Dr. Bullard shows that the death rate in the city during the year 1882 did not exceed eight per 1,000 inhabitants. This establishes the claim of this city to being one of the healthiest, if not the healthiest, city in the world. The last reports of the death rate per thousand of the principal eastern and European cities ranges from 23.36 to 46.80.

Hotels.—J. B. Stuart erected the first hotel, on Lissner's corner. The International, corner of Bridge and Main streets, is the pioneer hotel of the city, dating back to the first days of mining in Dry gulch, when it was built by Judge Stuart. The house was enlarged and re-enlarged in 1878 by Rinda and Sklower.

The Cosmopolitan, established in 1868, by Schwab & Zimmerman, absorbed the St. Louis House. In connection with this hotel is a farm of 500 acres.

The Grand Central hotel, constructed in 1884–5 by the enterprising citizens, Reed & Rinda, is a handsome four-story brick building, situated on the south side of Main street, a few doors north of Edwards street, just in the center of the business part of the city. This building, which is only half of the proposed hotel, was opened May 7, 1885, under the name conferred on it by Mrs. Reed. It contains sixty rooms, newly furnished, carpeted with Brussels carpet and supplied with gas and steam heaters. Each room is connected with the office by electric bells, well lighted and ventilated, and easily accessible through the large and airy halls. Bath rooms and closets, fitted up and put in by Sturrock & Lang, who did all the plumbing work of the hotel, are found upon each floor. Every floor is connected with the office by means of speaking tubes, while an elevator affords ready travel. The parlors are on the second floor in front, while the ladies' and gentlemen's dining rooms are on the first floor. In every particular this Grand Central is one of the best appointed houses in the whole mountain region.

New Merchants' Hotel, formerly known as the Jumbo block, was remodeled and converted into a hotel early in 1885, by O'Brien & Son, the lessees. Admirable plans for the arrangement of the interior were adopted and carried out, rendering the building just as convenient as though it had been built for hotel purposes. It is supplied with all modern conveniences, and a billiard room, barber shop and bath rooms are run in connection with it. There are many small hotels and boarding houses in the city.

Theatres.—The first theatre was instituted by Jack Langrishe in 1865, in C. C. Huntley's building on Wood street. Captain Parkinson erected a concert hall on Main street, opposite the International Hotel, in 1869, which was opened as a theatre by Jack Langrishe September 4, 1869. This continued in use until the fire of January 9, 1874. The Broadway theatre was built in September, 1878, by J. & L. Sawtelle. The actor Waldron, known so well in the early days of Helena, died recently in New York city.

Gambling Houses, etc.—The gambling business is as openly conducted as the dry goods stores—in fact, more so, since the stores do close up once in a while, which is more than can be said of the "tiger dens." The principal business is carried on in twelve or fifteen places, all run in connection with saloons. Most of the tables are on the first floor, and in several saloons operations can be plainly seen from the street. Some few have an up-stairs apartment, a little more exclusive and more handsomely furnished, which it seems to be the fashion to call "reading rooms." Faro, roulette and poker are the most popular games, and every one given to a life of gaiety plays, from the small boy who makes bets of a quarter each, to the man who has "struck it rich," and lays down a pile of $20 gold pieces on the ace. The element of risk and uncertainty in mining operations—in which everybody out here is in some way interested—seems to stimulate this feverish anxiety to take a chance in something, and the gambling table affords the same kind of excitement to be found in the occupation of the prospector and the miner. To the man who is poverty-stricken to day and possibly a wealthy man next week, any ordinary amusement is entirely too tame. Then there are men here who have made fortunes at gambling, but they are the dealers.

The Hospitals, etc.—If there is anything which bespeaks the true nobility of a people, it is the number and adaptability of their public institutions. From the council chamber of the country to the miniature school of some new settlement there is to be found a basis on which may rest all political, social and religious calculations; but in the hospital alone is to be found that beautiful and refined attribute of mankind—charity—an attribute which decks a nation's brow in lustre, and places it foremost among countries claiming christian civilization. It is therefore well that the attention of a people should be directed toward such a noble work—a work which reserves for the friendless a home to which their spiritual hopes may be turned when the ills of this world weigh heavily upon them.

St. John's Hospital was established in 1870, by Sister Julia, of the order of Sisters of Charity, Leavenworth. This institution has for the last 15 years provided for the care of patients from many districts of the territory, and so important did the work become and so numerous the calls upon the hospital, that its enlargement was effected in 1874, entailing an outlay for building, up to the close of that year, of about $12,000. In 1884 this heavy building was moved westward by Vaughan and Weller, without disturbing the patients, to make place for the new hospital building. In 1885 the corner-stone of the proposed building was placed in position. The average number of patients cared for is 65—there is no room for more—so that the sisters are compelled to refuse admission in many instances. These sisters had charge of the Territorial Insane Asylum for many years before the removal of that institution to Deer Lodge.

The Miners' Hospital Association was organized January 29, 1866, with T. E. Tutt, president. R. W. Mimms reported in favor of renting the Helena House at $50 per month for hospital uses.

The Ladies' Aid Society, of Helena, was organized in December, 1868, for the purpose of assisting the suffering poor.

St. Jerome's Orphan Asylum was founded in April, 1880, by the sisters of the Leavenworth order, for the care of orphans of both sexes. Its name is derived from that of the first orphan received within its walls. The average number of orphans cared for is 15. The congregation, together with liberal donations from the people generally, support these important charities.

Helena Fire Department.—In 1865 Companies A B and C of the Helena Fire Department were organized by Chas. D. Curtis. These companies consisted of one hundred and sixty men made up of the best citizens of Helena. It has been said that the members of this organization also assumed the duties of the Committee of Safety, and in this role succeeded in establishing a line of conduct for citizens and visitors. Even after reorganization in 1866, the department was always in readiness for fires or desperadoes. On November 9, 1866, Montana Engine and Hook and Ladder Company No. 4 elected the following officers: L. Levey, foreman; Jas. Hancock, first assistant; B. J. Priest, second assistant; Joseph Bloomingdale, president; John H. Ming, treasurer, and M. B. Edinger, secretary. The organization of December 28, 1873, comprised one hundred and twenty-two members, of which number forty-nine belonged to the Engine Company, thirty-three to the Hose Company, and forty to the Hook and Ladder Company. On December 30 rules for the government of the department were submitted by a committee consisting of Martin Maginnis, A. M. Holter, J. K. O. Sherwood, J. P. Woolman and M. Lissner. Seth Bullock was elected chief engineer; A. R. Wright, secretary, and H. M. Parchen, treasurer. The annual election, held on same date, resulted in the choice of M. G. Chase, C. E.; E. Frank, assistant engineer; J. F. Wilson, secretary, and T. H. Kleinschmidt, treasurer. The officers for 1874 were Seth Bullock, C. E.; Wm. Sims, second engineer; Henry Klein, treasurer; A. R. Wright, secretary. S. A. Richardson was appointed night watchman. The act of the Legislature of 1873–4 provided: "That the county commissioners of Lewis and Clarke county be authorized to levy a special tax, not to exceed one mill on each dollar annually, upon all property within the town of Helena, liable to taxation, both real and personal, for the support and maintenance of the Helena fire department. This with other sections passed the Legislature, but failed to obtain the Governor's approval. On its return to the house it was approved by a two thirds majority and became a law January 17, 1874. The election of 1875 resulted in the choice of Seth Bullock, C. E.; Chas. Jefferies, second engineer; T. H. Kleinschmidt, treasurer, and A. J. Davidson, secretary. The officers elected in December, 1876, were Chas. M. Jefferies, C. E.; E. Frank, second engineer; T. H. Kleinschmidt, treasurer, and A. J. Davidson, secretary. The officers for 1877-8 were T. Sweeney, C. E.; James L. Davis, second engineer; T. H. Kleinschmidt, treasurer, and A. J. Davidson, secretary. The same officers were reelected in December 1878, for 1879. The officers for 1880 were J. H. McFarland, C. E.; J. W. Hathaway, second engineer; T. H. Kleinschmidt, treasurer, and F. P. Sterling, secretary. The officers for 1881, elected December 29,1880, were James W. Hathaway ,C. E.; F. P. Sterling, second engineer; T. H. Kleinschmidt, treasurer, and Dr. W. R. Bullard, secretary.

The fire department of 1884–5 is made up as follows: Charles D. Curtis, chief fire marshal, 1882–3–4–5; James Sullivan, assistant chief fire marshal. Engine Company No. 1 has in charge two steam fire engines, two two-wheeled hose carts, one fuel cart, three horses and harness, with all necessary equipments for service. The officers and members are: Foreman, George E. Conrad; first assistant foreman, Frank S. Lang; second assistant foreman, Anthony Coldrup; secretary, W. W. White; treasurer, M. A. Meyendorff; engineer, Samuel E. Richardson; driver, Richard Nagle; George Bashaw, C. F. McKinnon, Benjamin Benson, W. La Rue, M. Witmer, Charles Reinig, C. C. Mitchell, R. M. Calkins, George H. Curtis, C. L. Brown, Sobert Sandles, A. Volkey, Thomas Charles, G. Alchrist, Charles Kraindell, John McDougall, Eugene Meyers, Charles Krandle, J. R. Witmer, George Gibbs, L. C. Brown, P. F. Tarleton, Calvin Ferree, Jack Hammond, A. Kountz, R. A. Craig, James Anderson, Thomas M. Fallon, J. J. Rohrbaugh, R. Von Tobel, F. Lang. Tiger Engine Company No. 2 has in charge one hand engine, one hose cart, with all the necessary equipments for service. The officers and members are: Foreman, T. H. Kleinschmidt; first assistant foreman, Ross J. Mills; second assistant foreman, George M. Reed; secretary, W. R. Bullard; treasurer, D. H. Cuthbert; W. H. Allen, C. W. Cannon, Frederick Gamer, Ike Greenhood, A. Gerhauser, Jerome Norris, W. K. Roberts, J. M. Sweeney, N. H. Webster, John E. Blaine, A. J. Fisk, W. H. Gebauer, Henry Hedges, T. L. Martin, H. M. Parchen, Charles Rumley, B. H. Tatem, H. C. Yeager. Hook and Ladder Company No. 1 has in charge one four-wheeled truck, with all necessary ladders, hooks and equipments for service. The officers and members are: Foreman, George Booker; first assistant foreman, L. A. Walker; second assistant foreman, George E. Boos; secretary, H. B. Wilkins, jr.; treasurer, A. Seligman; members, C. Albrecht, Jake Feldberg, M. M. Holter, R. B. Harrison, William Lorey, Nick Millen, Benjamin Price, H. E. Riddle, W. E. Sharpe, W. D. Wheeler, W. G. Bailey, W. F. Franklin, John Horsky, W. C. Humbert, G. R. Metten, A. Nappy, M. Reinig, J. R. Sandford, F. P. Sterling, J. J. McCoy. Salvage Corps No. 1 has but recently been organized. The roster of officers and members is as follows: Captain, S. C. Ashby; first lieutenant, F. K. Turner; second lieutenant, Charles E. Comstock; secretary, DeWitt C. Oliver; treasurer, S. E. Atkinson; members, Solomon Poznainski, W. E. Wells, S. H. Kennett, J. Silverman, D. P. Patenaude, William Glasmann, James L. Davis, A. Tonn, W. E. Bach, George J. Ringwald, Louis Auerbach, W. A. Armitage, John J. Smith, B. R. Roberts, John Sturrock, G. B. Foote, W. C. Humbert. There are thirteen supply cisterns and ponds, seven Silsby hydrants, twenty-one alarm boxes, engine house, etc.

The Water Companies are the Helena City, the Helena Ditch, and the West Side Companies. In July, 1883, a company composed of twelve citizens was formed for the purpose of sinking an artesian well at a point west of Dry Gulch, in the foot hills. The Helena City Company's works begin four miles south of the city, and the water taken from the springs through an arched tunnel 350 feet long, and thence through box-flumes to the several water stations in the center and eastern parts of the city. The Helena Ditch Company (Yaw Yaw) was commenced in 1864, and a flume eight miles long completed at a cost of $35,000. The capacity is 2,000 miners' inches, the supply being obtained from Ten Mile creek. The Helena ditch, twenty-one miles in length, also receives a 500-inch supply from Ten mile creek. This ditch was constructed at a cost of $85,000. The West Side Company furnished water to the central and western parts of the city. In October, 1884, Frank Wilkinson and John Dempster began work on what is known as the Underground Water Works, at Clore street, just north of Bridge street, for Mr. Chessman. Up to April, 1885, a thousand feet of tunneling was made under the city, and water pipe laid, through which a full supply of spring water is added to the old supply of the city. In May, 1885, a reservoir with a capacity of 100,000 gallons was constructed at a cost of about $16,000.

Other Improvement Companies.—The Montana Navigation Company was organized October 1, 1878, for the purpose of improvement and navigation of the Upper Missouri, above the falls, to a point 12 miles from Helena. The officers are: John T. Murphy, president; Albert Kleinschmidt, vice-president; E. W. Knight, treasurer; Cornelius Hedges, secretary. Trustees are: H. M. Parchen, A. M. Holter, James M. Ryan, T. C. Power, J. T. Murphy, A. Kleinschmidt, Henry Klein, A. Sands, Chris. Kenck.

Mount Hope Cemetery Association was organized in July, 1884, with the following as the board of directors: G. C. Swallow, T. H. Kleinschmidt, R. H. Howey, Wm. Muth, E. D. Edgerton, C. Hedges, A. R. Gates, and E. Ballou. The association has purchased forty acres of ground about one mile east of Dry Gulch, lying below the foot-hills, and having a very beautiful location.

At the annual election of the Helena Electric Light and Power Company in July, 1883, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President—E. W. Knight; vice-president—H. M. Parchen; treasurer—T. H. Kleinschmidt; secretary—John W. Eddy.

The organization of the Helena Gas Light and Coke Company was perfected by the following stockholders in August, 1884: H. M. Parchen, T. H. Kleinschmidt, C. W. Cannon, E. W. Knight, A. G. Clarke, E. D. Edgerton, A. R. Gates, John C. Curtin, and others, of Helena, and Wm. McDonough, of Cincinnati. The trustees named in the articles of Incorporation are T. H. Kleinschmidt, C. W. Cannon, H. M. Parchen, E. D. Edgerton, and W. B. McDonough.

The Helena Artesian Well Co. elected the following officers in July, 1884: President—M. M. Parchen; vice-president—B. H. Tatem; treasurer—T. H. Kleinschmidt; secretary—F. P. Sterling.

The Helena Reduction Works were erected in 1871 by John T. Murphy, A. G. Clark, D. C. Corbin, John Kinna, E. G. McClay, S. H. Bohm, G. G. Symes, John H. Ming, and W. C. Child. Owing to the temporary decadence of mining in the immediate neighborhood, the works were closed down, and are now idle.

Military Officials at Helena.—The following appointments were made in the Chief Paymaster's Dept. of Montana: Major Valentine Hanna, 1868; Major Justis Steinberger, 1870; Major George W Candee, 1870; Major Robert C. Walker, 1871; Major Rodney Smith, 1874; Major John E. Blaine, 1875; Major Henry B. Reese, 1879; Major John E. Blaine, 1879–1885, and Major Henry Clayton. In May, 1885, Major Blaine was transferred to New York, and Major Clayton to Baltimore. In the Commissariat Dept., Capt. J. F. Weston was appointed Chief Commissary for Montana, September 24, 1877, and Capt. H. W. Janes, November 11, 1877, as Chief Quartermaster of the district. In the Army Dept., Col. John Gibbon took charge of the District of Montana in 1870, his command, 7th U. S. Infantry, relieving the 13th U. S. Infantry at the several posts.

The 7th Infantry arriving in Montana in 1870–1, Col. John Gibbon commanding the regiment and District of Montana, relieving the 13th at the several military posts. The 3d Infantry arriving November 7, 1877, Colonel DeLancy Floyd-Jones commanding, established the post of Helena, on the Ten Mile, near the Capital, companies A, C, E, F and K building the barracks, and companies B, D, H and I taking station at Fort Missoula, and company G going to Camp Baker (now Fort Logan). The 18th Infantry, Col. Thomas H. Ruger commanding, was ordered to Montana, April, 1879. Col. Ruger has been in command of this military district up to 1885. The proposed changes of 1885 have not been confirmed at date of writing.

MARYSVILLE.

This village is twenty miles northwest of Helena, is one of the latter-day settlements, and may be said to owe its existence to the enterprise of the Drum Lummon company. This mine was discovered by Thomas Cruse about eleven years ago. It was developed gradually by the discoverer, without any of the ore being milled, until 1880, at which time Mr. Cruse erected a five-stamp mill on the property. The record of the mill results since that time have been $45 per ton, which is the average richness of the ore clear across the vein, eighty feet wide of solid pay. The assay value is almost double the amount that was saved in the mill, the remainder being in the tailings. The vein on which the Drum Lummon is situated runs a little east of north and south of west, and has been traced on the surface about 2,000 feet. Of this 2,000 feet about 1,000 is on the Drum Lummon proper and 1,000 on the North Star, an extension of the Drum Lummon, still owned by Mr. Cruse. The most important mining transaction of 1882, not only in this country but in the world, was the purchase of the famous Drum Lummon silver and gold mine for $1,500,000, by a strong English company. R. H. Kemp, writing 1882, says of the discoverer: "There is scarcely a score of people in the west who have not heard of Pat Casey, of the Gregory-diggings in Colorado. Those who know "Tommy" well, can easily draw their comparisons, the only difference I can see from my acquaintance with both men being that Pat struck it rich in the "Boroughs" and Tom found his in the Drum Lummon; Pat rushed things "and used up six lead pencils a day," Tommy runs a five-stamp mill on a hundred-stamp mine." In December, 1884, George Atwood was succeeded as manager by R. M. Brereton. The latest report at hand, June, 1885, credits manager Bayliss with the following statement: "The bullion shipments now average $80,000 per month. There are abundant ore reserves in the upper working. The apprehension that the ore in the Maskelyne tunnel level would prove too base for free milling proved groundless. The profits of the company now vary between $40,000 and $50,000 per month, and the payment of dividends is assured before long. We still use the air compressor. The mill workings are about 80 per cent, and the tailings are saved. We will probably not resume the sinking of the main shaft before about a year." Monarch, of the north lode, on the Drum Lummon vein, and the North Star close by, developed by Cruse in 1882, are promising mines. The present Drum Lummon mill was partly supplied by the P. I. works, of San Francisco, in 1883, taken to Deer Lodge by rail, and thence by team to Marysville. The business circle of Marysville is made up as follows: Montana Company's mills; Conrad, Murth & Bach, Lauer & Dorrity, C. S. Matthews, Jurgens & Price, general merchants; Dillon & Millairy, E. Peterson, James Sampson, and P. J. Winston, hotel keepers; Young & Lynch, Fisher & Farrell, Matthews & Williams, Paul Reckman, and P. D. Sullivan, saloon-keepers; John H. Jurgens, postmaster, and R. H. Kemp, insurance agent.

On August 8, 1883, J. A. Macdougald, Deputy Grand Master Workman for Lewis and Clarke county, organized Silver Creek Lodge, No. 19, Ancient Order United Workmen, at this place. The following is the list of officers then elected: P. M. W., George W. King; M. W., James D. Conrad; Foreman, C. C. Bowen; Overseer, Charles S. Matthews; Recorder, Randall H. Kemp; Receiver, D. B. McKillican; Financier, James L. Conrad; Guide, Charles L. Boyha; I. W., Charles Monogan; O. W., Benjamin C. Jones; Medical Examiner, George W. King; Trustees, M. A. Lynch, M. F. Curran, Robert J. Forrey. The lodge was organized with a membership of sixteen—three members admitted by card from Helena and thirteen charter members. The officers for 1885 include D. B. McKillican, P. M. W.; R. A. Cross, M. W.; C. L. Bayha, R.; and S. J. Frame, Financier.

Randall H. Kemp, writing in January, 1882, on the mines of Silver Creek, says: "The Silver Creek country is by no means a newly discovered region; it runs back as far as '63, and is now famous as the home of the Drum Lummon. Years ago there were many miles of sluice boxes in operation, and many a sack of the precious yellow dust has been cleaned up and sold. But although the early placer miners knew of the existence of gold bearing quartz in the neighboring hills, never until about five years ago did quartz mining begin in earnest. The mineral belt, as far as developed, appears to be about two miles wide. It commences about one mile below Marysville and runs to or beyond Vestel, a distance of some five miles. How much farther either way this system of lodes may extend has never yet been determined."

FORT SHAW.

The history of the military post at Fort Shaw is given in that chapter of the general history devoted to military affairs, while in the general history, as well as in that of the new settlements, many references are made to the old Sun river fort. In 1869 there was a postoffice at Fort Shaw, and a mail route from Corinne, on the Central Pacific railroad, via Helena to Fort Benton. Coaches passed regularly over the road, and brought the mail three times a week. The distance from the post to Corinne is about 500 miles. A telegraph wire extended along the route, with an office at the fort. J. H. McKnight is the present postmaster. Here are the government saw mill and post store. General John R. Brooke, of the 3d Infantry, commanding in May, 1885, is reported to be the successor of General Ruger in command of Montana district. The elevation of the bluffs or foot hills in the neighborhood of Fort Shaw, on the north, is abrupt, but on the south less than 250 feet. All the steeper slopes are covered with a thin soil, hence the valley has not that exposure of the bare sandstone strata and desolate aspect so universal in the valley of the upper Missouri. In the vicinity of the post, on the south, are three isolated buttes of considerable height, the central and longest of which encroaches upon the valley. From the base of this butte a nearly level plateau of some extent slopes with a gentle incline to the river, and ends in an abrupt bank. This plateau is two or three miles in width, and considerably higher than the prairie bottom upon which it trenches. At the extremity of this bench, on the southern bank of Sun river, is the post, forty feet above the water, commanding an extended view of the valley westward, and of the Rocky mountains in the background. The post is a quadrangle, 400 feet square, built in accordance with plans made by General Reeves, in 1867. The adobe brick used in the building are 6x12x4 inches.

SETTLEMENTS.

Sun River, eighty-five miles northeast of Helena, was settled in 1867, but did not make id progress until 1883. Here the Sun River Sun was established, and in the neighborhood were founded many of the great stock-raising industries of the Territory. The business circle of the village is made up as follows:—Geo. Steele, postmaster and general merchant; Dyas & Murray, general merchants; Ford Bros. & Co., live-stock and meat market; J. C. Adams, Wm. Bernard, T. Clong, Thomas Dunne, E. D. Haslin, Robert Vaughan, R. P. Walker, stock growers and dealers; J. H. White, James Law, James Gibbs, hotel keepers; Steele & Ellis, millers; H. B. Strong, John Nixon, James Gibson and Birkenbuac & Ellis, livery stable proprietors; Dyas & Orsum, blacksmiths; Haslin & Blossom, saloon; C. G. Holt, express agent; H. L. Hull, J. Wood, and W. P. Burchen, carpenters, and V. G. Hall, painter. The Protestant Episcopal church has a mission at this point. The Missouri and Sun River Ferry Co. was chartered in 1883, with George Steele, president; E. B. Largent, secretary; E. D. Hastie, treasurer; A. M. Holter, John Largent, J. P. Dyas, J. T. Lee, John Castner, Jos. Largent, and W. H. Ford, trustees. John Largent is manager. The population is estimated at about 400.

St. Peter's Mission, near Fort Shaw, is presided over by Rev. J. Damiani, Rev. C. Imoda, and Rev. P. P. Prando, S. G. The stations of this mission are Fort Shaw, Sun River, and South Fork, in Lewis & Clarke county; Old Agency, Choteau county; Judith Basin, Meagher county; Piegan and Birch creeks, Indian reservation; Fort Belknap and Milk river, Indian reservation. (Vide chapter on Churches.)

Beaver Town was founded by M. Cartwright, George Horne, William Insley, and W. Hopkins, under a charter granted by the legislature, January 20, 1865. A postoffice was established at Beaver Creek in 1883, and in March of that year, J. N. Kelly was appointed postmaster.

Augusta is the name of a post office village established a few years ago in the northwestern part of the county. A cave inlaid and festooned with sulphur of varying thickness was discovered near the Alta Mineral Springs, on the north fork of Sun river, in March, 1885. The supply is unlimited, the earth surrounding the cave being impregnated for miles. Claims have been located by or in the interest of the following named persons: Phil. A. Manix, John R. Watson, Charles Barnum & Co., E. M. Robinson, Dave Cory and Will H. Clarke. There is intense excitement at Augusta, caused by the huge specimens of pure sulphur exhibited by the locators of Discovery claim. The location is near this settlement.

Gloster, twenty-six miles northwest of Helena, may be said to date its settlement from 1880. The business circle of the village in 1884–5 comprised Charles L. Bayha, Conrad Murth & Bach, general merchants; John Langan and W. Cox, hotel-keepers; J. Henneberry, fruit and notion store; Ackroy & Co. and W. O. Angell, saloons; James Matterson, barber; Thomas Cox, blacksmith; Cha Lee Kee, laundry, and the mills of the Gloster Mining Company.

The Gloster Mine at this point is characterized by its regular system of stopes and faces, affording an easy means of furnishing 150 tons of ore daily. The sixty stamp silver mill erected in 1882, containing twenty-four pans, twelve settlers, fifty-six tanks and four boilers; a powerful engine is employed together with an electric generator. The estimated value of annual product is placed at $600,000. The mine and the mill, which are about half a mile apart, are connected by a T-rail tramway, over which the ore is transported for five cents per ton. The capital stock of the company is $2,000,000, divided into 200,000 shares of $10 each. The head office of the company is in New York. E. F. Child, of Boston, president; H. W. Child, of Helena, general manager.

Red Mountain and Ten Mile districts, eighteen miles from Helena, were discovered in 1864–5. The whole district is marvellous in natural beauty and wealth, each waiting, as it were, to reward developing hands. The Nelly Grant, General Grant, Good Friday, Little Jenny, Frohner, Treasury and Lober lodes are among the best known lodes located on Red mountain. And the Lee mountain includes the best known lodes in Ten Mile proper. In 1883 the New York syndicate tested the products of Ten Mile, or the Russell group, and approved such products. A large percentage of the ores from the Red Mountain district can be manipulated by the milling process at far less cost than would be requisite to smelt them, and there can be no room for doubt as to the abundance of the product in the North and South Pacific, American Flag and Bassett lodes. Up to August, 1883, the shipments of ore from the South Pacific mine aggregated 1,000 tons, and the assay value of this product was from 133 to 380 ounces of silver to the ton. The average value of the 5,000 tons of ore claimed to be in sight then in the North and South Pacific mines, according to the test made under the supervision of James G. Murphy, was sixty-two ounces silver per ton and the veins are about four feet wide between walls. In the Lexington the product is known as horn silver, assaying from $4,000 to $20,000 per ton. In July, 1883, Jos. M. Taylor discovered and located a silver bearing lode, two miles above Hot Springs. In 1884 the Murphy, Churchill & Buchanan concentrator was constructed and opened at Red mountain, and a smelter subsequently established: so that now there is a prospect of the 300 or 400 claims in the district being developed. The new reduction works of the Philadelphia Company on the Ten Mile were erected a short distance below the mouth of Beaver creek, where it empties into Ten Mile, and where John Caplice has a fine water-power from both streams, a few hundred yards above the old Gilt Edge mill on the north side of Ten Mile.

The former owners of the Nellie Grant lode, in the Red Mountain district, organized into a stock company, with a capital stock of $600,000 in June, 1885. The following officers were elected: President, Moses Morris; vice-president, E. M. Dunphy; treasurer, Samuel T. Hauser; secretary, W. E. Cullen. Machinery is to be shipped at once.

On the Parker and Griff mines (situated on the same lead at Bald Butte, 15 miles west of Helena), five 100-foot shafts have been sunk, showing a narrow streak of very rich ore, which assays from $5,000 to $9,000 per ton, and a four-foot body of $40 ore.

The Empire, Mount Pleasant District, developed inJune, 1884, by Hickey & Cotter, is a regular broad gauge lead, at some points measuring twenty-six feet, showing an average saving of gold and silver of $172 per ton. At other points on the lead, where the vein is four feet, the assay amounts to $6,000 per ton, and free gold is distinctly seen sprinkled through the quartz. The Empire has been developed by three shafts 150 feet deep at distances of 300 feet apart. These developments, showing so much of the wonderful richness of this lead, have required additional machinery for the manipulation of this vast body of ore, which is free milling and easily mined. The owners, therefore, have purchased the Whippoorwill 10-stamp mill, and will put it to work at once, in addition to the 10-stamp mill at work on the Bluebird and Hickey mines at Mount Pleasant, which make their regular output of $15,000 per month.

Unionville, four miles south of Helena, is the postal village for the mining centers known as Whitlach Union, Yellow Boy, Black Swan, Black Alder, and other claims. Yellow Boy, about two miles northeast of the village, is the property of Constans & Springer. Unionville is also the business, religious and educational center of this mining neighborhood. The cost of the proposed Baptist church of Dry creek is estimated at $1,000. The Whitlach Union mines are credited with having added $4,000,000 to the wealth of the country previous to the loss of the leading ore vein. The Big and Little Muddy veins were formerly known as the Leviathan. In 1865 the National Mining and Exploring Company, of New York, was organized, and may be said to control the location. The first building erected at Unionville, known as the Whitlach Boarding House, was destroyed by fire May 19, 1876.

Belmont.—The Belmont mine and mill of 30 stamps, the Whippoorwill and mill of 10 stamps, and the Hickey and Cotter mines and mills, may be said to belong to this district. A fire in the Belmont mine, February 11, 1881, exploded a magazine of Hercules powder. Six men lost their lives, viz: J. Shorter, H. McDonnell, Thomas Woods, James Kuger, John Braslaw and Pat. Loughlin.

Pear Creek Valley.—The first settler in the valley was Buffalo Bill, an employe of the American Fur Co., who took up a ranch here, but Patrick Woods was the first actual settler. On September 23, 1864, a few members of T. A. Holmes' party locatedsat Montana City. The first child born in the Prickly Pear Valley was Jessie Coburn, daughter of Mrs. Robert Coburn, then living on the Gannon farm. About the same time a gaughter was born to Mrs. Thomas Purcell. When Mr. Jones came to the valley there was a Mrs. Durgan residing there. This lady is supposed to be the first white woman who settled in the valley. The first school house, named "Harmony," was built in the early part of 1865, and the first teacher was Miss Frazier. James Ray raised the first crop in the valley, growing 100 bushels of oats to the acre. The first meeting in Prickly Pear Valley was held on the first Sabbath in February, 1863, when the first organization of the church in Harmony school house took place. The first church was built in the spring of 1873. Pastor R. S. Clark, M. E. Church South, preached the first sermon in the valley.

The Water Corporation of Prickly Pear Valley, organized in 1883, is made up of ranchmen—claimants of the water of Prickly Pear creek, known as claimants 1865–6–7, and 1868, 1869, 1870, and those who have possessed ditches since 1870. The committee on organization comprised: Gilmon Riggs, Chris. Kenck, John Murphy, Wallace Breck, Robert S. Clark. The names of those present at the meeting to receive the report of committee are: John Y. Stewart, Joseph D. Farrow, Harry N. Sykes, Michael L. Geary, Thos. A. Grimes, C. Jump, Herbert L. Cram, W. James English, L. B. Sykes, S. A. Clark, William Warren, James G. Jones, H. H. Clark, Hugh J. Rogan, N. G. Bryson, Willard Grattan, Robert S. Clark, Francis A. Short, Gilmon Riggs. The first scarcity of water was felt in 1866, and again in 1869. In 1866 there was only about one-tenth as much land under cultivation as now, but since then there is more water in the creek. Much litigation has been experienced in consequence. There were but two lawsuits in reference to water-rights. In 1869 the citizens hired a man to divide the water equally among the farmers according to the amount of land they had under cultivation. W. L. Milligan holds the oldest water-right. So far there has been plenty of timber in the valley for wood and fencing purposes. Wheat averages about 40 bushels to the acre, when properly taken care of; oats, 30 bushels; potatoes, 250 to 400, while fruit is only an experiment.

Canon Creek settlement is twenty-two miles northeast of Helena, on the Little Prickley Pear river, is an old settlement, the population of which is about thirty.

Cartersville, thirty-six miles north of Helena is one of the modern settlements of the county, now containing a population of fifty. Kisselpough & Carter conduct a general store.

Dearborn, a settlement fifty-six miles north of Helena, dates back to 1869, and now claims a population of over 100. The business circle of the village is made up as follows: H. A. Milot, postoffice and store; C. H. Ellis, carpenter; T. Marquis, blacksmith; C. H. Ellis, T. Marquis and J. Silverman, hotel-keepers; James Ross, lawyer and teacher; Louis Ballou, notary; Jacob Darley, music teacher; Peter Hanson, mechanic; C. D. Labache, lime kiln; Geo. Warner, butcher; W. C. Gillette, sheep-grower and notary.

Florence, eighty miles northwest of Helena, dates its settlement back to 1869. The business of the village is made up as follows: P. A. Mannix, merchant; E. Lippincott, postmaster, blacksmith and farmer; W. S. Barrett, D. J. Hogan, J. W. Lemon, E. J. Thomas, stock-growers; Dearborn Sheep-growing Co.; F. Wilreth, blacksmith; E. S. Lippincott, constable. A saw mill in the vicinity is driven by water power, furnished by Sun river.

CONCLUSION.

To the visitor of to-day, witnessing the vast resources and accumulation of capital now wielded in this section, it may seem almost incredible that some of the wielders of this capital commenced business only a few short years ago with nothing but their own indomitable energy and perseverance. This has been accomplished, not by speculation and the adroit, lucky turning of fortune's wheel, but by actual creation of much wealth, added to the store of human comforts, using only the advantages supplied by nature's abundant and common storehouse. What must have been the feelings of the citizens of early days when they entered upon the miner's work, when only one dim sign appeared to remind them that man was here before them? What must have been their reflections as they shoveled the golden clay, that through all the ages remained undisturbed, or hewed down the stately tree, that for a thousand years had flourished and grown, unnoticed and uncared for by the hand of man? He wonders how it occurs that he, of all the people that lived and still live on the face of the earth, swarming, as it does, with so many millions, should be the first to appropriate to his comfort and convenience the riches so long held in reserve in nature's vast storehouse. He wonders, too, why his race should require all the resources of the earth, the production of forests, mines, rivers, lakes, oceans; of the soil plowed, planted, cultured and garnered; the flocks and herds feeding and gamboling on a thousand hills, for his subsistence, while other races have remained, from generation to generation, in all the untamed wilderness of the wild deer and elk and buffalo, on which they subsisted. What of the race that but yesterday was here! Have these rivers, fields, mines and forests, now so peaceful, always been so calm and still, or have they, like the old world, been the scene of some sanguinary and savage conflict? We speculate in vain on the long-ago dwellers in these valleys. Their war-dance and yells may have been the only sounds that ever waked the stillness of these hills, or a race long extinct may have plowed and sowed, and builded, and mined, and loved and worshiped, and cultivated all the graces and amenities of civilized life, but the records of their deeds and virtues have been obliterated by the convulsions of Time's relentless changes.

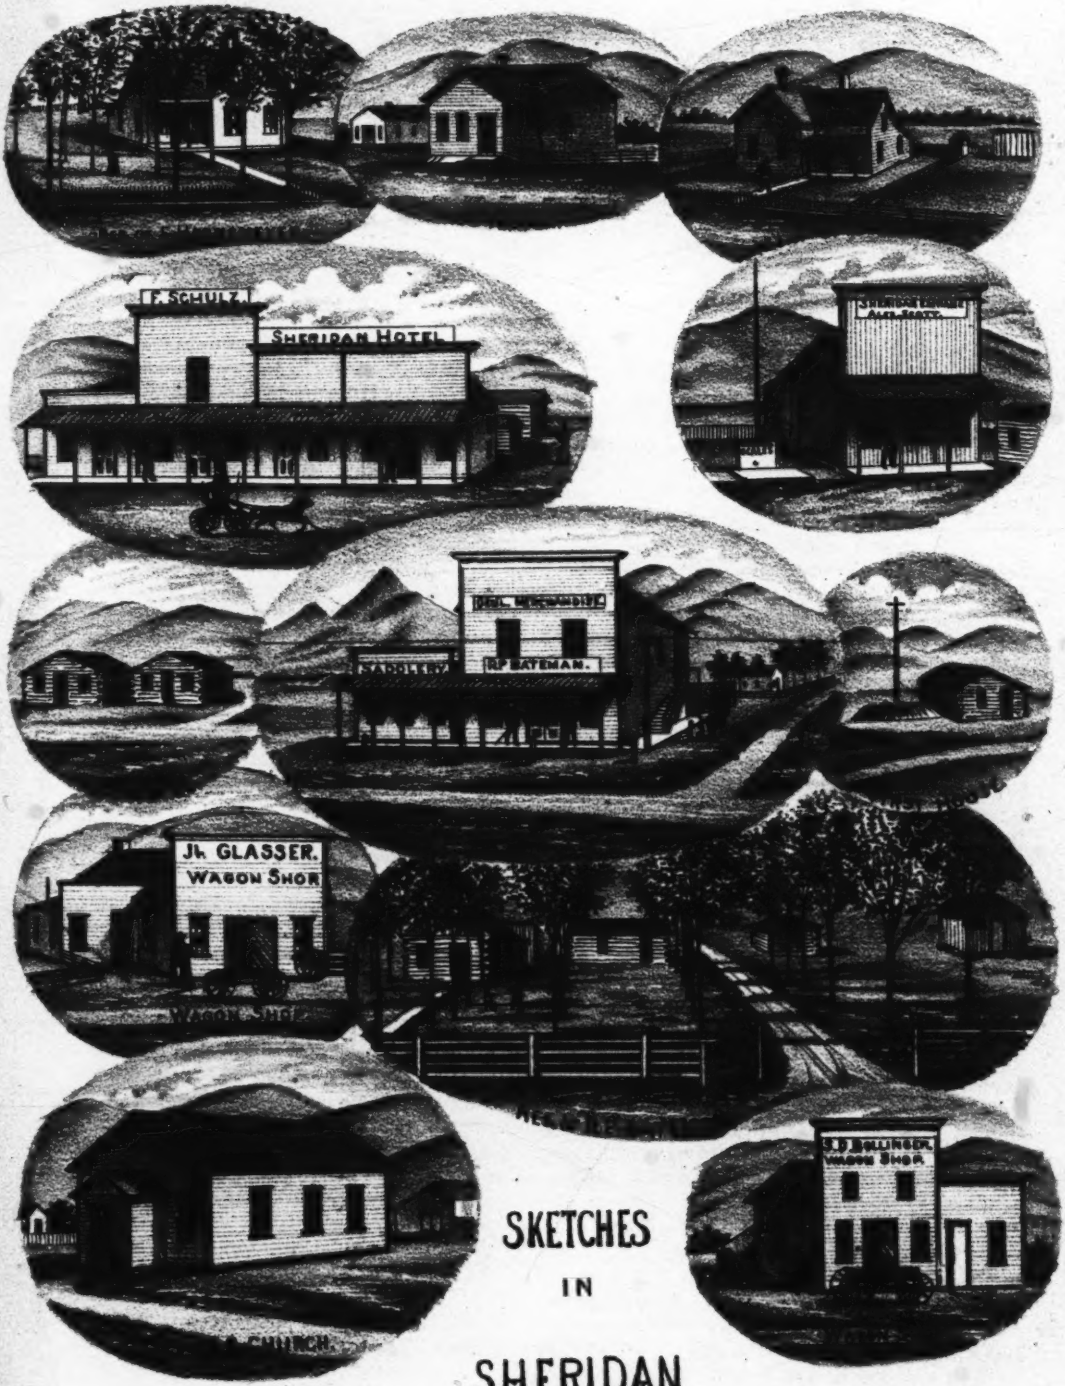
CHAPTER XXVI.

MADISON COUNTY.

THIS county occupies the center of the extreme southern portion of the Territory, being separated from the National Park by the twenty mile strip of Gallatin, and from Idaho by Beaverhead county. Its length from a point northwest of the confluence of the Jefferson & Boulder rivers is one hundred and eighty miles and its width seventy-five miles. This area is divided into the Madison, Meadow creek, Willow creek, Passamari, Milk creek, Jefferson, Red Rock and Lower Beaverhead valleys. The Madison sweeps through the valley, enters the Fifteen Mile canyon, and rushes to its confluence with the Jefferson and Gallatin. On the east side of the river are Jordan, Jack, Cedar, Bear, Wolf and Indian creeks. The Firehole river, having its source in the Upper Geyser basin, forms the head of this majestic river. At the head of Bear creek are a number of hot springs. Along the water-courses the Thawega, or Indian flour root, grows. Among the early ranchment in the valley were Geo. Watkins, Wm. Mitchell, A. W. Switzer, Wm. Ennis, J. F. Hayden, H. Maynard, Ray Woodworth, O. C. Whitney, Geo. Thexton, Charles Johnson, "English George," Cooley & Bickford. In the Meadow creek neighborhood were S. D. Pinckney, Don O. Spalding, Allen & Shingleton, Church, and perhaps a few others. In the Willow creek valley were H. H. Mood, A. W. Paul, Royer Bros., James M. Grant and H. C. Harrison. The Passamari valley was named by the Snakes "Quaking Ash Grove." Among the first settlers were Alex. Metzel, O. A. Sedman, Dr. L. W. Frary, Robt. Caswell, John Robb, Isaac Pendarvis, James Williams, John Taylor, A. H. Van Brocklin, E. H. Combs, J. B. Laurin, John Redfern, John Harrison, A. M. Cisler, R. P. Bateman, H. M. Fitch, G. H. Baker and John Temple. In the Jefferson valley, forty miles of which are in Madison county, are many beautiful farms. Among the early stock-growers and farmers were James A. Slavin, Z. D. Foster, John Jamieson, G. J. Wickham, James Gordon, Mrs. H. J. Caryl, John Manheim, Norris, Bell, Joseph Gans, Louis Keyser, John Carpenter, and a few others whose names are given elsewhere. Red Rock valley, called by the Indians Pipestone valley, lays in Madison county for a distance of forty miles. Black Tail Deer creek, the upper portion of which is in Madison county, is a magnificent district, while Porter creek is the original Pipestone canon where the Indians were accustomed to come for pipe clay. Samuel Holman erected an arastra in Porter canon at an early day, and here Webster discovered placers in the winter of 1866–7, which caused the California stampede and won from the miners for the locality the name Mariposa first and Hell Canon subsequently. L. D. Porter, after whom the creek was named in 1871, developed the quartz of the district. The Beaverhead and Big Hole rivers claim fifteen miles and twenty miles respectively of their valleys in this county.—Pollinger was among the first stock-raisers here, and Bishop introduced sheep farming in 1869 or 1870.



SKETCHES IN SHERIDAN.

The mountain ranges comprise the Madison, Tobacco Root, Snow Crest, Ruby and the main range of Rocky Mountains. The Madison range leaves the Rocky Mountains near Yellowstone lake, forms the divide, at first, between the Yellowstone and the Fire Hole rivers, and then the dividing line between the counties of Madison and Gallatin; it runs very nearly parallel with the Tobacco Root range, and is about the same length. Its principal elevated peak is Mount Washington. Tobacco Root range of mountains shoots out in a northerly course from the Rocky Mountains west of Henry's lake. It separates the valleys of the Madison and Willow creek from those of the Jefferson and Passamari. Its principal peak is Mount Baldy, which attains an elevation of 9,711 feet and has an extensive plateau at an altitude of 6,285 feet. The range is 85 miles in length. Snow Crest range, a spur from the Tobacco Root, shoots out from Mount Baldy in a southwesterly course, and separates the valleys of the upper Passamari and Black Tail Deer. It is thirty miles in length, and at the headwaters of Black Tail Deer creek attain an elevation of 10,067 feet. The Ruby range, the most beautiful mountains in the county, appears to be isolated from other ranges and spurs. It forms an angle and is thirty miles in length. It separates the valleys of Beaverhead and lower Passamari, and attains an elevation of 8,300 feet above the level of the sea. The main range of the Rocky Mountains, which divides the head waters of the Columbia and Missouri, comes into the county near the headwaters of the west fork of the Madison river. They meander, send out sharp spurs, and swing in ox-bow shapes, but their general course is west by northwest. The principal elevations are Mount Jefferson and Table Mountain. Mount Jefferson is situated two miles west of Henry's lake, at the termination of the principal meridian of Montana surveys. Its height is 9,000 feet. Table Mountain, at the dividing line between Madison and Silver Bow counties, has an elevation of 8,350 feet. These mountains and valleys are timbered with spruce, cedar, fir, white, red and yellow pine, cottonwood, birch and passamari or quaking aspen trees. The geological formations of the county are treated in the general history. It has been and still is rich in its mineral deposits. "There is a reason to believe," says Prof. Hayden, "that the entire series of strata known in the Northwest, above the metamorphic rocks, were originally deposited all over the Territory of Montana. We may conclude, therefore, that the erosive forces have operated with great power in the district around Virginia City, stripping bare to the metamorphic beds large areas. The gulches may have been carved entirely out of the massive strata, or may have been partly due to erosion and partly to an interval formed during elevation, that is, a monoclinal valley." To whatever cause these beautiful valleys and rich gulches owe their origin, the direct one which leaves the golden rock and golden sands to the prospector is manifest throughout this county. The 26 mines produced in 1881 gold, silver, and other metals, valued at $450,000, against $93,278 in gold and $378 in silver during the year 1880. The gold product in 1882 was valued at $260,000, increased to large amounts in 1883-4.

Organic.—The act establishing the county of Madison passed by the first legislature, and approved February 2, 1865, was couched in the following words:—"That all that portion of the Territory of Montana embraced within the following boundaries be, and the same is hereby, created a county, to be known as Madison county, to-wit:—Commencing at the point where the line of longitude one hundred and eleventh degree crosses the Rocky Mountains, thence due east to the point of the dividing ridge or range between the waters of the Madison and Gallatin rivers, thence along said dividing range to the southern boundary of the Territory, thence along said boundary to the eastern boundary of Beaverhead county on meridian of longitude one hundred and twelve degrees, thence along said meridian of longitude north to where the same crosses the summit of the Rocky Mountains, thence east to the place of beginning; and the county seat of Madison county is hereby located at Virginia City." The true meaning of the act will be better understood by reading 112th instead of 111th degree of longitude, as laid down in the amendatory act of December 23, 1867, which defined the boundaries of Madison, Beaverhead and Deer Lodge counties. By the act approved January 12, 1869, the northern and northwestern boundary of Madison was established as follows—"Commencing at the Beaverhead rock, on Beaverhead river, thence in a northwesterly direction to the nearest point on Big Hole river; thence up said river to the mouth of Camp creek, thence up Camp creek, and its right hand fork, to its source, thence to the summit of Table Mountain; thence in a direct line to Parson's bridge on Jefferson river." An act approved February 7, 1874, provided, that the portion of the public domain as described in the Congressional act approved February 17, 1873, readjusting the western boundary of Dakota Territory, lying east of an extension due south of the line dividing the counties of Madison and Beaverhead be, and the same is hereby, attached to, and shall hereafter comprise, a portion of the county of Madison. That all the remaining portion of said public domain lying west of said line be, and the same is hereby, attached to, and shall hereafter comprise, a portion of the county of Beaverhead. In May, 1885, County Surveyor Mead completed the new survey of the line between Madison and Gallatin county. By the survey Finegan's ranch, Anceny's sheep ranch, part of the ranch of Edwards Bros., and a number of lumbermen and quartz miners on Spanish creek, all of whom have heretofore been assessed in Gallatin county, are shown to be in Madison county. The ranch of old Mr. Clark, on Elk creek, which has hitherto been assessed in Madison county, is beyond the line, and belongs to Gallatin county.

The county officers in 1871–2 were: commissioners, J. M. Knight, H. H. Mood and James Williams; sheriff, Thomas Deyarmon; deputy sheriff, James Gormley; probate judge, M. H. Lott; county clerk, Andrew V. Corry; assessor, George Gohn; treasurer, Major C. J. Kinney; superintendent public instruction, William I. Marshall; coroner, A. M. S. Carpenter; district attorney, H. N. Blake. The officers in 1879–80 were: sheriff, A. J. Edsall; treasurer, W. W. Morris; clerk and recorder, Nat. J. Davis; assessor, James Boyd; probate judge, O. G. Smith; superintendent of schools, Amos Purdam; county coroner, S. Edmunds; county commissioners, C. L. Dahler, T. S. Hamilton, George Gohn; council, W. W. Morris; representatives, J. E. Callaway and J. M. Page. The officers for 1885 are: sheriff, T. B. Carruthers; assessor, Allen Wilcox; treasurer, H. S. Gilbert; clerk and recorder, Barclay Jones; probate judge, J. F. Williams; superintendent of schools, J. C. Mahoney; public administrator, H. H. Edwards; coroner, Stephen Edmund; surveyor, C. Mead; commissioners, William Morris, Alexander Metzel and S. B. Page. The assessment for 1883 was $2,471,800, and for 1884, $2,491,800.

Schools.—The condition of the schools of the county at the beginning of 1883 is shown in the following report of Superintendent A. J. Bennett: Number of organized districts, 23; number of white persons between four and twenty-one, 1,161; number of African descent, four to twenty-one, 7; number of pupils attending school during the year, 657; number not attending school, 511; number of male teachers employed, 6; number of female teachers employed, 17; total number of teachers, 23; average length of school in days, 101; number of brick school-houses, 1; number of frame school houses, 5; number of log school houses, 13; number of graded schools, 1; number of ungraded schools, 22; total number of schools, 23; rate of county tax for school purposes, in mills, 3; amount per capita of school census children, $7.30; amount raised by county tax for schools, $8,491.67; total amount from all sources apportioned during the year, $8,494.24. According to the supplemental report, the number of children in the county between the ages of four and twenty-one years was 1,233; under four years, 348; and the total number, 1,581. The total population of Madison in June, 1880, was 3,916, the number of voters in November, 1882, 1,279, and in November, 1884, 1,414.

VIRGINIA CITY.

Throughout the general history of the Territory, the story of the discovery and settlement of Alder creek and Virginia has been referred to repeatedly, and the leading parts of it related. It could not be otherwise, for here were enacted many, if not all, of those stirring scenes which marked the earlier years of Montana, and imprinted upon the character and minds of her people that magnificent idea of self-reliance that continues to distinguish them. Here, amid the foot hills of the Tobacco Root mountains, the party of 1863 camped, 5,483 feet above the sea level, and as they cooked the game for a frugal meal, one seized a miner's pan and prospected the bed-rock of the bar close by, finding there the wealth which built up the Territory from 1863 to 1866, and which summoned to the creek and its vicinity no less than 20,000 persons within the two succeeding years. Virginia was the center of enterprise, and from it went forth these men of the present day who are the principal builders of Montana's towns.

The Louis Simmons contingent of the Yellowstone expedition of 1863, referred to in the Stuart papers, comprised Louis Simmons, William Fairweather, George Orr, Thomas Coover, Barney Hughes, Sweeney, Rogers, S. S. Short and Henry Edgar. Those men arrived at the rendezvous of the expedition too late to set out with the main body, and so had to push forward over the trail. Their adventures are graphically told by Granville Stuart in a note to his brother's journal of 1863. In the midst of their trials, William Fairweather discovered his famous claim in Alder gulch. On June 6, 1863, the Fairweather district was organized, with Dr. Steele, president, and James Fergus, recorder. Bill Fairweather, the discoverer, remained in Montana until 1868, when he left to prospect the north Pacific slope from Oregon to Alaska, leaving his name and claim to be ever identified with the first true development of the mining interests of the Territory. The men who cooked on that evening of June 2, 1863, while Fairweather prospected, are no less worthy of identification. Dimsdale, in his reminiscences, says:

"After a long and unsuccessful tour, they came thither on their way to Bannack, and one of them took a notion to try a pan of dirt. A good prospect was obtained, and the 'lucky panner' gave his name to the far-famed "Fairweather District." Tom Cover and some others of the party returned to Bannack for provisions, and for the purpose of communicating the discovery to their friends. A wild stampede was the consequence. One poor fellow, while in the willows at Beaver Head, being mistaken for a beaver, was accidentally shot by his comrade. He lived several days, and was carefully nursed by his slayer, who was greatly grieved at the occurrence. The stampeders came in with pack animals. Colonel McLean brought the first vehicle to the gulch. The stampede reached the gulch on the 6th of June. The course of the stream was marked by the alders that filled the gulch so densely as to prevent passage in many places. Some people camped on the edge of the brush, about three-fourths of a mile above the town, accidentally set it on fire, and with a tremendous roar, the flames swept down the creek and burned up the entire undergrowth. Almost immediately after the first great rush from Bannack—in addition to the tents, brush wakiups and extempore fixings for shelter—small log cabins were erected. The first of these was the Mechanical bakery, now standing near the lower end of Wallace street. Morier's saloon went up about the same time, and the first dwelling house was built by John Lyons. After this beginning, houses rose as if by magic. Dick Hamilton, Root & Davis, J. E. McClurg, Hall & Simpson, N. Story and O. C. Matthews, were among the first merchants. Dr. Steele was first president of the Fairweather district. Dr. G. G. Bissel was the first judge of the miner's court. The duty of the recorder's office was, we believe, performed by James Fergus. Among the citizens were S. S. Short, Sweney and Rogers (discoverers), Johnny Green, Nelson Ptomey, Judge Potter, of Highland, Jem Galbraith, Judge Smith (afterward banished), W. F. Bartlett, C. Crouch, Bixter & Co., Tom Conner, William Cadwell, W. Emerick, Frank Heald, Frank Woody, Marcellus Lloyd, Washburne Stapleton, John Sharp, Jerry Nowlan, E. C. Stickney, Frank Watkins, T. L. Luce (Mechanical bakery), Robinson & Cooley, the first bakers (open air), Hugh O'Neil, of fistic fame, Jem Vivian, Jack Russell, the first man who panned out 'wages' in the Grassh pper creek, Sargent Tisdale, W. Nowlan, of the bank, Tom Duffy, John Murphy, Jem Patton, Jno. Kane, Pat. Lynch, John Robertson, Worcester Wymans, Charley Wymans, Barney Gilson, and many others. The first name given to the present capital of Montana was 'Varina,' in honor of Jeff. Davis' wife, but it was soon changed to 'Virginia.' Dr. (Judge) G. G. Bissel was the first man who wrote it 'Virginia.'"

The horse which carried Fairweather to Alder gulch is known as Old Antelope. In later years this animal was taken by George Smith to Lost river, under the impression that luck accompanied him. Noticing this relic of 1863, the editor of the Madisonian says: "The animal is now the property of Mr. E. F. Johnson, of Virginia City, and that gentleman has turned him out in a Ruby Valley pasture, near the scene of his old master's early triumphs and later death. No more work will be required of the old horse, and he will be fed and cared for until he follows his old-time master 'over the range.'"

Freighting and Flour Riots.—In the spring of 1865, before the terrible winter of 1864–5 had given way to summer, freighting between Alder Gulch and the outside world was almost entirely suspended, and as a result the provisions in camp gave out; so that flour sold for $150 gold per 100 lbs. At this juncture a report gained ground that an attempt was being made to corner the provision market, and the people organized in Leviathan hall to end such an attempt. S. R. Blake was chairman, and Hugh McQuaid was nominated for secretary, but declined to serve. Immediately after organization, three men entered a store on Content's corner to begin sacking the store. Neil Howie, one of the chiefs of the Vigilance Committee, was summoned to protect the store, who on arriving addressed the men thus: "Gentlemen, this uprising is to get flour and pay a reasonable price for it; it is not to sack the town. The first man that steals from a store or saloon will be shot or hanged. The same men that fought for law and order a few months ago are prepared to fight for it now." Col. Sanders and others addressed the crowd; but notwithstanding all entreaties, the search for flour was carried forward, and an order issued to hold all provisions then in the camp. Taylor, Thompson & Co., and other holders of flour, were compelled to surrender their stocks of flour, which were carried to Leviathan hall, and there sold in small lots to consumers. The committee in charge of this politic means of supply paid the owners at the rate of $36 per 100 lbs. This state of affairs existed for three days; but the scarcity of flour was experienced for a much longer time, people being well pleased to purchase it at $40 per 100 lbs.

The following extracts from the Montana Post, dated September 15 and September 22, 1866, respectively, point out the means of travel and its dangers in 1866 between Virginia City and the outside world:

"Trains Arrived.—During the week the following trains arrived in Virginia City: Twenty-three wagons for Tootle, Leach & Co., which left Plattsmouth on May 26. We regret to learn that the wagon master, Thos. Dillon, was murdered by the Indians on July 23. 'Eight wagons for Cyrenus Beers and Vaile & Robinson. * * * At the Big Horn the Indians stole forty mules from Mr. B ers' train, and thirty from Vaile & Robinson.'"

"Six wagons from Great Salt Lake City arrived on the 17th, in charge of Van Slack, with salt, for Mr. Ulm; eleven wagons on the 18th, with goods for Cyrenus Beers. This is part of the train that was left at the Big Horn, where the Indians stole about ninety mules. Fourteen wagons, with goods belonging to Phillips & Freeland, of Leavenworth, which started from that point on May 28."

Incorporation.—The act approved December 30, 1864, authorized the incorporation of Virginia City, and ordered an election of its first officers in February, 1865. The boundaries acknowledged in this act were as follows: Beginning thirty feet in the rear of the northwest corner of the double cabin now occupied by Frank Raeger & Co., located on the west side of Alder creek, thence in a southerly direction parallel with said Alder creek one mile and a quarter, thence in an easterly direction one mile and a half, thence in a northerly direction one mile and a quarter, thence in a westerly direction one mile and a half to the place of beginning. The charter was subjected to several amendments, and an attempt was made in 1869 to revoke it. The act approved January 12, 1869, authorized an election to be held in January, 1870, to test the question whether the charter should be repealed. This election was duly held February 6, 1865, and resulted in the continuance of the city government. The first City Council was composed of P. S. Pfouts, Mayor, later of the firm of James A. Jackson & Co., St. Louis, Mo.; Dr. L. Daems, Jacob Feldberg, Major James R. Boyce, J M. Castner, John Le Beau, James McShane, H. A. Peace and Wm. Shoot, Aldermen. James M. Castner was elected mayor in February, 1866; Dr. L. Daems, in 1867; Henry Elling, in 1869; Judge H. L. Hosmer, 1870. Thomas Baker is mayor at present.

From 1864 to 1866, the city grew with surprising rapidity, notwithstanding the discoveries at Last Chance, Boulder, Silver City, and at other celebrated locations. Even up to 1868 this great mining camp seemed secure in its marvelous prosperity, the yield from the gold mines being no less than $40,000,000 for the five years. Then began the decadence of the mining interests, and men who labored and lost or labored and won, tired of the great old camp and looked to the north and east and west for some new field for enterprise. Captain Mills, one of the early residents of Virginia, visited the city in the fall of 1869, and returning, contributed the following pen picture of it to his newspaper: "It is," says he, "preeminently a city of happy memories. Who, in these latter years, has lived within and left it, but cherishes happiest recollections of Virginia? Virginia has been spoken of as dead, crooning over the embers of departed glory," etc. And in 1864 there were 10,000 people in Alder Gulch, one half of whom lived in Virginia. To-day, the population of the town is about 1,000 and from 600 to 800 miners are in the gulch. The proportion of the industrial and merchandizing elements is far larger than in 1864. We found the principal business of the town distributed as follows: Groceries and general merchandise, 12; boot and shoe dealers, 2; boot and shoe shops, 5; tobaccos, 2; tin and hardware, 2; saddlery and harness, 2; drugs, 2; livery stables, 4; billiard hall, 1; breweries, 2; banks, 2; Chinese stores, 2; lumber yards, 4; barber shops, 2; clothing, 4; dry goods, etc., 5; jewelry, 3; tailors, 4; blacksmiths, 5; books, etc., 1; hotels, 4; newspaper, 1; restaurant, 1; saloons, 7; bowling alley, 1; furniture, 3; bakeries, 2; gunsmith, 1: total, 85. Besides there are 10 lawyers, 5 physicians, 2 ministers, 2 churches (3 places holding divine service), 2 schools; on all of which the assessed tax valuation in 1869 was $800,000. The sales for the past year aggregated $3,000,000, over $8,000 per day. Virginia is the metropolis of Madison county. During the present season the gold product of Alder Gulch was $1,000,000, of which $800,000 was sold in Virginia. There are in the gulch eleven bedrock flumes, as follows: Griffith, Thompson & Co.; Stager, Hargrave & Co.; Sweet, Davis & Co.; Oscar Sedman; Knight, Notware & Marshall; Parker, Williams & Selsey; Hathaway, Hardwick, St. Clair & Reed; Rodgers, Renshaw & Co.; Hall & Southmayde ["Cony"]; Duncan & Co., and Hall & Southmayde [Summit]. The aggregate length of these is four and one half miles; capital invested $350,000, and ground owned nearly nine miles of the gulch. Besides these there are in Bivens' Gulch, 6 bedrock flumes; Norwegian Gulch, 3; Brown's Gulch, 5; Haines' Gulch, 3; California Gulch, 3; Washington Gulch, 6; Ramshorn Gulch, 2; Needs Gulch, 1. The capital invested in these aggregates about $375,000. There are in the county erected sixteen quartz mills with two hundred stamps [estimating Chaliam mills], built at a cost of $387,000; and two more are being erected in Brown's Gulch. The cost of reduction is estimated by Judge Lovell under $5 per ton, and the average yield in the neighborhood of $20. There are twenty-three arastras running in the county, and paying. Virginia is also the nearest accessible trading point for Sterling, Summit, Nevada, Sheridan, Argenta, Bannack, Rochester, Highland, Silver Star, and the farmers of the Madison, Passamari, Jefferson, Beaverhead and a portion of Gallatin valley. Last year Madison had 53,000 acres returned "under cultivation," and 8,401 head of stock, valued at $39,915 more than those of Deer Lodge, the second highest in Montana. This year the tax valuation of property in the county is $1,700,000, $600,000 higher than Deer Lodge. We give these figures because the erroneous impression is abroad in the land that Virginia is played out. We are convinced that the indications for next year are such that property and population will have no further decrease; that the Queen City has passed the ordeal of remote excitements and "lives to prosper." This writer, always so precise in statement, was also correct in his deductions. The population in April, 1872, fell to 500, since which time it has increased slowly and surely, reaching 624 in 1880, 800 in 1883, and is now estimated at over 1,000.

On November 2, 1866, the telegraph line between Salt Lake and Virginia City was opened. The work was commenced July 17, and the first pole was planted at Virginia City on September 17, 1866. E. Creighton sent the first telegram from Salt Lake. The first telegram from Montana was that of Governor Smith to President Andrew Johnson, from Virginia City, November 2, 1866.

The Virginia City Water Company was incorporated January 27, 1865, with A. M. Holter, O. Norelins, and J. P. Oleson, incorporators.

The Virginia City Gas Company was chartered January 20, 1865, with George B. Parker, S. T. Hauser, James G. Spratt and W. J. McCormick, stockholders.

The first legislature also granted charters to the several ditch companies, and from this period to the spring of 1868 Virginia was a synonym for liberal enterprises and extraordinary developments.

Under a charter granted December 27, 1864, to W. B. Dance, S. T. Hauser, N. P. Langford, T. C. Evarts, William S. Doolittle, James W. Taylor, H. L. Carver, Reece Anderson, W. A. Spencer, George L. Curran, James Foster, W. Y. Pemberton, Samuel Wood, F. B. Kercheval and William L. Brown, the Missouri and Rocky Mountain Wagon Road Company was organized. The company was empowered to build a road from Virginia to the Yellowstone and Missouri rivers.

In 1864 Colonel Curtis aided in organizing the Virginia City Fire Department. R. E. Cook and W. A. Rumsey were also organizers.

The business and professional circles of the city in 1879–85 were made up as follows:

Armstrong, W. P., clothing.

The banking interests are represented by Henry Elling, who established his general banking, bullion market and exchange in 1873, and Hall, Harrington & Co. (successors to Raymond, Harrington & Co.), general bankers, dealers in gold and silver bullion, county and territorial securities, exchange, etc.

Schools.—The city maintains a good school and has a fine school house. This building is of brick, with stone foundations, two stories, 53x43 feet. Upon the lower floor there are two rooms, 35x20 feet, and a hall fifteen feet wide across the end. In the upper story there is a room 40x35 feet, fourteen-foot ceiling, with a recitation room 20x15 over the hall. The house cost $8,400. The public school has been well attended under the able tutelage of three teachers—J. C. Mahony, Miss Conyne, and Miss Bartlit. There are 137 scholars on register and nearly all in daily attendance. The home school has acquired a wide spread reputation, and many advanced pupils of other districts of the county are availing themselves of the opportunities presented in affording them the pleasure and profit of acquiring a knowledge of the higher branches of education and of other necessary accomplishments not generally taught in our public schools. At present this school register shows an attendance of 47 pupils. The teachers are Mrs. J. M. Butler, Miss Allen and Miss Milner.

Court House.—One of the finest court houses in the Territory was built here by the county at a cost of $35,000. This building is 80x50 feet and has three stories. The basement contains the jail, 50x47, with three rooms for the use of the sheriff. The next story contains five rooms, twelve-foot ceilings, which are occupied by the county officers and the United States Marshal. The third story contains the court room, 50x47 feet, seventeen-foot ceiling, and two jury rooms. The walls of the basement are of stone, and those of the superstructure of brick. There are four fire-proof vaults in the second story. The old court house passed into possession of the Catholic congregation, and opened as an hospital by the sisters of charity.

Churches.—St. Mary's congregation, Virginia City, was founded in 1863, with Rev. Father Giorda, S. J., presiding. A theatre building was purchased in later years by the congregation, refitted, and blessed for the purposes of a house of worship. This house has been used down to the present time. The Jesuits—Rev. Giorda, D'Aste Vansenna, Kuppens, were pastors at various times up to 1873, when Rev. F. J. Kelleher was appointed priest of the mission. Father Kelleher has presided over the missions in Madison and Beaverhead counties from that date. Under his direction the church at Laurin was erected, at a cost of $2,000, in 1874–5, while the new building at Virginia City cost about $5,000. The mission includes Laurin, Argenta, Darling, Dillon, Sheridan and Salisbury—an area of about 300 square miles. (Vide Gen. Hist.) Protestant Episcopal Church.—The first celebration of divine service, according to the book of common prayer, in Virginia City, and the first also of the Protestant Episcopal church within the limits of Montana, was held in Judge Lovell's office, Christmas day, 1865; T. J. Dimsdale, an Englishman, acting as reader. Prof. Dimsdale held services in the same place, and afterward in the "Young Men's Literary Hall" for about twelve Sundays. On Sunday evening, March 17, 1867, in the house of Judge H. L. Hosmer, there was a meeting of persons favorable to the formation of a parish. The persons present associated themselves together under the title of "St. Paul's Parish." On March 24 public services were re-commenced in the school house, Wm. I. Marshall acting as reader. These services were continued for about six Sundays. On the 18th of July, 1867, Bishop D. S. Tuttle, D. D., and the Rev. E. N. Goddard arrived at Virginia City. They held services for three Sundays in the "Council Chamber," after which they went on to Helena. Bishop Tuttle returned to Virginia City August 15, and assumed charge of the parish.

On November 27, 1867, Bishop Tuttle was chosen by the vestry to be rector of St. Paul's parish. On December 8, a Sunday school was opened with four teachers and twenty-seven scholars. Soon after the arrival of Bishop Tuttle steps were taken by the parish toward obtaining a building of their own for church uses. A considerable sum was raised by subscription. Bishop Tuttle bought the building on Idaho street, unfinished, which is now known as St. Paul's church, and proceeded to complete it. The first services in the new church were held on Sunday, May 24, 1868. The bishop made public statement that the church had cost about $3,400, all of which expense had been paid, or was covered by pledged subscriptions. At this first service the church was unpainted, without pews, and with muslin for window lights. Bishop Tuttle resigned the charge June 28, 1868, and was succeeded the same date by the Rev. E. N. Goddard. On the 16th of December, 1868, the first Protestant Episcopal confirmation service was held here, four persons being confirmed. The Rev. Mr. Goddard continued in charge of the parish until July 1, 1871, when he resigned. In November, 1871, the Rev. H. H. Prout became rector in Virginia City, remaining until May, 1874. He was succeeded in June of the same year by his son, the Rev. E. G. Prout, who still retains the charge. Since the beginning of parish work there have been 156 baptisms, 39 confirmations, 53 persons enrolled as communicants, of whom about 30 are still on the list; there have been 44 marriages and 99 burials.

The Methodist Episcopal church of Virginia City was founded in 1864 by Rev. A. M. Hough. The house of worship, known as Grace Methodist church, was erected in 1875 at a cost of $4,650, and dedicated December 3, that year, by Rev. Messrs. Riggin, Vanorsdale, Iliff, and Clarke Wright. Rev. W. E. King, B. D., is pastor. (Vide Chron. Churches.)

Hospital.—In 1876 the Sisters hospital at Virginia City was founded, but owing to the fall of the mining interests, the exodus of the people, and the limited calls upon charity, the institution ceased its good work in 1879. This institution was founded by Father Kelleher in 1876. The old court house formed the hospital, to which additions were made by the founder.

Societies.—The orders of the A. F. and A. M. have a magnificent temple, which, at the time of erection, cost $30,000, and have since fitted up a commodious public hall in the building adjoining the temple, 160x25 feet. The building known as the Masonic Temple was dedicated December 27, 1867, when Bishop Tuttle acted as Chaplain and Judge J. L. Hosmer, Orator. So much was this enterprise of the fraternity esteemed that the legislature of 1867–8 passed an act relieving that body from the payment of Territorial or county taxes on its real estate in Virginia City, and directing that the tax levied in 1867 be refunded.

Virginia Lodge, No. 1, reorganized January 29, 1866, comprised the following named members: J. J. Hull, W. M.; W. F. Sanders, S. W., Lewis Trapp, J. W.; Joseph Griffith, treasurer; R. T. Kennon, secretary; F. C. Cornell, S. D.; S. Star, J. D.; O. P. Raymond, tyler; George Hanna, steward; J. M. Wolf, steward; P. S. Pfouts, P. W.; N. P. Langford, P. M.; F. C. Cornell, P. M.; J. The Virginia City Commandery Knights Templar, No. 1, was organized in 1868-9, the first lodge of K. T. in the territory.

Virginia City Lodge, No. 7, I. O. O. F., Virginia City, was instituted July 19, 1875, by Joseph A. Hyde, G. M., with Thomas Stees, N. G.; Ferd. Bohm, S.; Daniel Copeland, V. G., and R. O. Hickman, treasurer. The members were F. Bohm, D. D. G. M.; R. O. Hickman, P. D. Haywood, Thomas Stees, C. B. Hauser, E. T. Yager, P. G's.; James M. Herndon, G. W. Howe, O. B. Barber, D. D. Coughland, W. A. Means, Amos Purdum, James Wyruck, T. T. Jones, W. L. Hargrave, A. W. Switzer, Tim Kelley, S. B. Percy, H. A. Peace, T. A. Riggin and John Cornell. A motion to declare the charter of this Lodge forfeited was, on motion of P. G. M. A. D. McPherson, adopted by the Grand Lodge and carried into effect July 1, 1881.

Montana Lodge, No. 1, I. O. G. T., was organized by T. E. Bramhall at Virginia City, March, 1868. This lodge suspended shortly after, but was reorganized March 1, 1869, with sixteen members. A. B. Davis was the first lodge deputy. After the second reorganization of January 18, 1870, John H. Davis was elected deputy.

Star of the West Lodge, No. 53, I. O. G. T., Virginia City, Madison county, was organized by M. Bullard February 17, 1876, with H. A. Pease, deputy.

Alder Lodge, No. 29, A. O. U. W., was organized in Virginia City May, 1885. Theo. Muffly, M. W.; Thos. Baker, foreman; N. McGregory, overseer; Barclay Jones, recorder; Jas. Mitchell, financier; O. Baker, receiver; J. N. Merkle, guide; George Rief, inside watchman; J. H. Ries, outside watchman; J. B. Carruthers, P. M. W. The delegates to the Grand Lodge, which met in Butte in May, 1885, are J. W. Carruthers and Thos. Baker.

The Young Men's Literary Association of Virginia City was formed in January, 1866.

NEVADA CITY.

To the old settlers of Montana this once great center of wealth and enterprise presents to-day a scene, which more than any other reminds them of the transient character of riches. Cotemporary in settlement with Virginia, it was the first to rise to the dignity of an incorporated city, and also the first to fall. The act of February 9, 1865, constituted the inhabitants a body corporate and politic, and declared the following boundaries as the limits of the city: Commencing at a point four hundred feet west of W. R. Lockwood's house in Central City, thence south one-half mile, thence west one and three-fourths of a mile, thence north one mile, thence east one and three-fourths of a mile, thence south to the place of beginning. In 1869 the population fell to one hundred souls, and the mercantile representation to three general stores and two saloons. In April, 1872, the city contained one miners' store, one brewery, blacksmith shop, butcher shop, livery stable and a Masonic hall. Most of the citizens were engaged in mining pursuits, but some of the residents had farms and stock in the valley.

Societies.—The Masons organized here in 1866, and Nevada Lodge, No. 4, was chartered January 29, 1866. The officers and members of this Lodge in 1883 were Thomas Webber, W. M.; Leander Goetchins, S. W.; Adriel B. Davis, J. W; Abraham H. Scribner, treasurer; James Mitchell, secretary; Isaac R. Alden, P. M.; Wm. G. McGregory, P. S. G. W.; Dan J. Emery, P. M.; John E. Wynne, P. M.; Peter Hartwig, J. D.; Francis Long, S. S.; Hiram F. Lane, J. S.; Andrew J. Edsall, Tyler; James Mitchell, P. M.; A. J. Edsall, P. M.; Joseph O. Moulton, P. M.; Nathan D. Johnson, Henry Mellen, J. C. Newberry, Cornelius O'Neil, Martin Peel, Isaac S. Pendarvis, James B. Snapp, Warren W. Sweetland, Louis F. Stalthford, William H. Taggert, Perry Willsey, Louis Anderson, Richard Coad, John B. Carruthers, Andrew V. Corry, John B. Cook, Nathan Davis, Edward R. Durston, Robert Ferguson, Paul D. Hayward, R. O. Hickman, P. J. G. W. The Independent Order of Good Templars was introduced in 1868. Liberty Lodge, No. 2, Nevada City, was organized in March, 1868, by T. E. Bramhall; ceased work the same year, and was reorganized by Mr. Bramhall in March, 1869, with twenty-five members, including Lodge Deputy John Donegan. Valley Lodge, No. 43, was organized by John Cady, February 5, 1874. R. S. Clark was elected deputy.

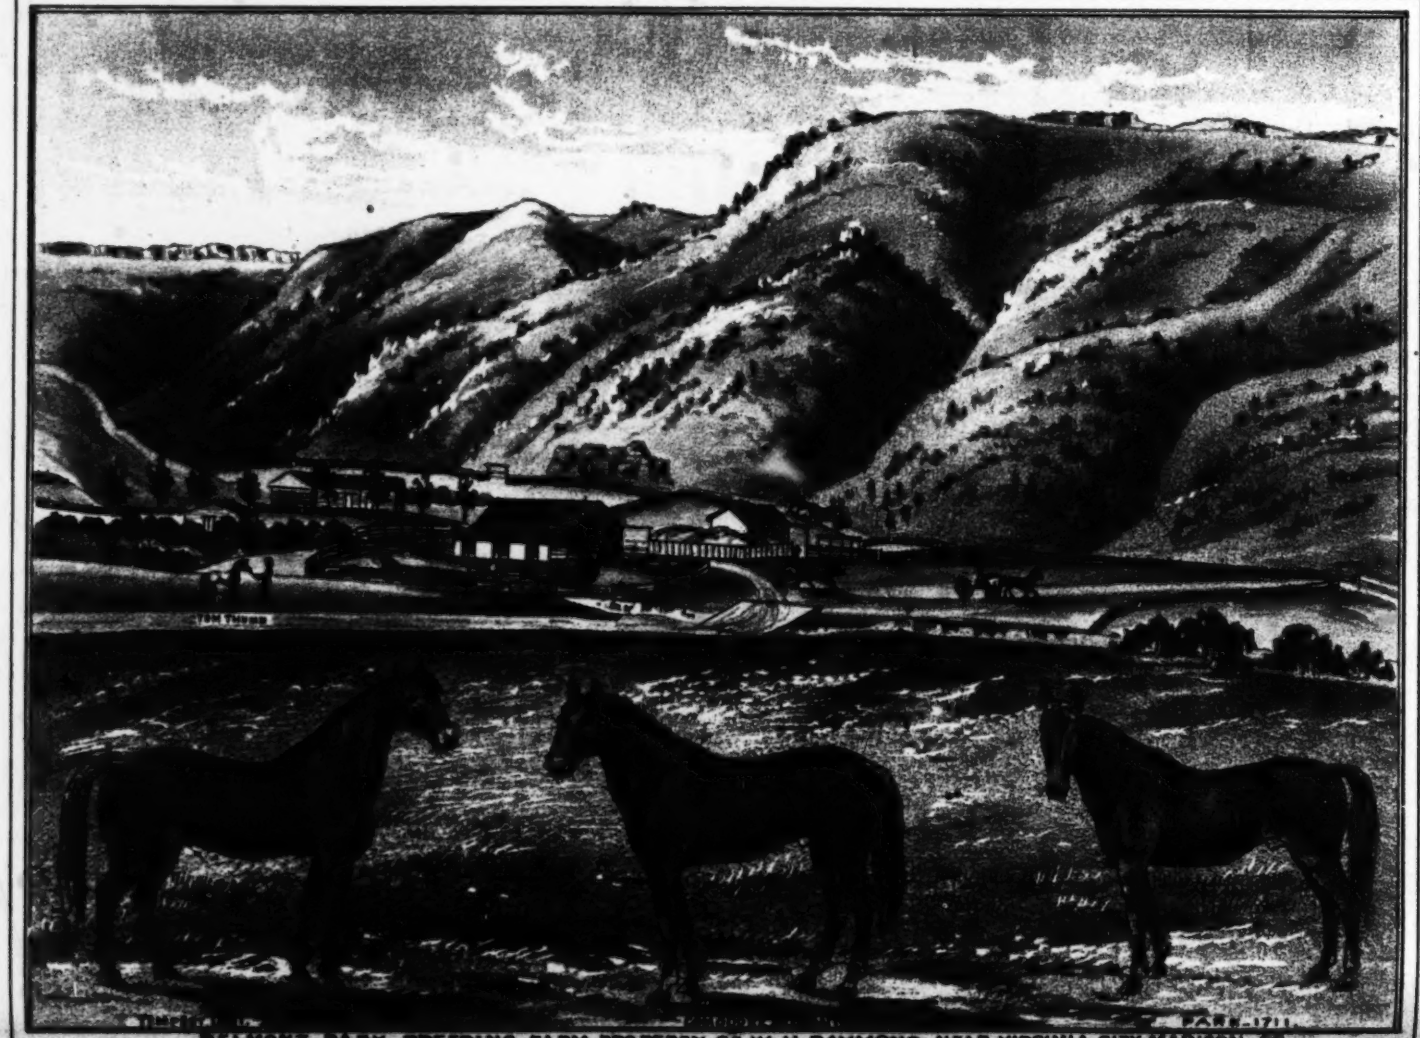
CENTERS OF SETTLEMENT.

The Town of Brandon.—The organic act of January 20, 1865, authorized Marilius Branham, Samuel Wood, James G. Spratt, W. J. McCormick, Wesley Jones, George B. Parker and C. C. Branham and their associates, to take possession of and occupy the lands lying within the following boundaries, to wit: commencing at a stake on the lower or west side of the upper road leading from Virginia City in said county, to Grannell's mill or mill creek, where said road crosses said creek; thence running north forty rods; thence west one hundred and sixty rods; thence south three hundred and twenty rods; thence east one hundred and sixty rods; thence north two hundred and eighty rods to the place of beginning, containing three hundred and twenty acres, more or less, it being the same lands conveyed to said corporators by J. Henry Smith and William McKenney on the 6th and 8th of September, A. D. 1864. The Broad Gauge mine, owned and operated by Alfred Cisler, is located here. Alki Town Company was incorporated February 2, 1865, with L. R. Maillet, H. A. Milot, T. L. Hains, proprietors.

Summit City.—This town holds its lofty position on the Tobacco Root Mountains, near the head-waters of Alder creek, at an altitude of 6,742 feet above the level of the sea. It had a population ranging between two and three hundred, during the spring and summer of 1872, who found occupation in working the rich placer mines in the upper portion of Alder Gulch, and in developing the numerous gold-bearing quartz lodes in Summit District. There were six quartz mills adjoining the town at the close of 1872. It also had stores, shops of mechanics, and numerous dwellings of miners. It is seven miles south of Virginia City, and was one of the most prosperous mining towns in Montana. Its quartz lodes are reputed exceedingly rich, and there are many placer diggings in the vicinity that will pay from $8 to $10 per day to the hand. Summit Lodge, No. 20, Good Templars, was founded at Summit, Madison county, July 21, 1870, with fourteen members. W. A. Shroyer, lodge deputy.

Sterling is situate on Hot Spring Creek, twenty-eight miles northeast of Virginia City, between Madison and Willow Creek valleys. It is in the heart of a rich quartz district, and contains some of the finest quartz mills in the mountains. The Midas Mill, a model building in every respect, was erected at a cost of $80,000. Previous to April, 1872, no less than $1,000,000 were expended here in building quartz mills and developing the lodes. All the old enterprises were unattended with success until 1872, when better management began to show its effects. Present appearances would hardly indicate that Sterling had once been a booming quartz camp; although a number of the old settlers still reside here. The mining population has been principally attracted to the new camp of Richmond Flat. R. E. Shutes writing to the Madisonian in June, 1885, says of this camp: "The owners of the Revenue mine have the main shaft down 230 feet, and have started levels east and west. They have from six to ten feet of ore in the face of both levels. Superintendent Williams informs me that he has over eight thousand tons of this ore in sight. Col. J. H. Johnson, the general manager of the company, says he is satisfied that the Revenue lode is a No. 1 mine, and is highly elated over the encouraging prospects. The Arkansas lode is another mine that shows up in good shape. The shaft is down thirty-five feet, with eighteen inches of $250 ore in sight. The owners are feeling away up over the outlook of the mine, and true they should, for it is a little fortune for the boys, for a fact. That is, if I am any judge of a mine. The Idaho mine also shows up a splendid crevice, which is three feet wide at a depth of thirty feet. A one-half interest has been bonded to Pony men, who will proceed to open up the mine in good order soon. The Treasurer lode, another mine, shows a three-foot crevice of ore, some of which is quite rich. Williams & Co. are the owners. They intend to sink the shaft fifty feet deeper forthwith. At that depth, they are of the opinion that they will show up a mine that will be hard to beat."



BELMONT PARK BREEDING FARM, PROPERTY OF W. H. RAYMOND.-NEAR VIRGINIA CITY, MADISON CO.

Gaffney. This little town is two miles from the confluence of the Passamari and Beaver Head rivers, and at the junction of the stage roads from Helena and Virginia to Corinne. It has a United States postoffice, two hotels, store, feed stables and saloon.

—Adobe Town, two and one-half miles from Virginia City and one mile from Nevada, is at the junction of the old Salt Lake City stage route, and the later Corinne route. In 1864 this was the center of the riches of Alder Gulch. During that year sixty men took out $125,000 on the California Company's ground on Wood's Bar, which, with other products, equaled almost $2,000 for each inhabitant, or $350,000. In 1872 the population was 150. The buildings of the village were one mining store, a blacksmith shop, two hotels and two public halls. Cary and O'Brien subsequently represented the commercial interests of the district. Nicholas Cary is postmaster.

Cicero, on the Passamari river, is twelve miles from Virginia City, in the heart of a beautiful farming country. In 1871 a hotel, store, blacksmith shop and postoffice formed the nucleus of the village.

—Junction City, one mile from Adobe Town, was named on account of its proximity to the confluence of Alder Creek with the Passamari river. Junction City Town Company, C. S. Bagg, John S. Lott, A. B. Davis and Alexander E. Mayhew, corporators, was chartered January 17, 1865. For years it was one of those sprightly mining towns, but like other settlements it entered on a downward career in 1868–9. In 1872 its population was 100. Stores, mechanics' shops, a meat market, schoolhouse, public hall, were found there. Its location near a rich agricultural country, and in the midst of a great quartz-mining district, give promise of the revival of trade. Junction Lodge, No. 15, I. O. G. T., was organized here by George Peck, July 21, 1869, with 13 members.

Silver Star and Iron Rod date their settlement back to the early days of mining in the county, when the Iron Rod and Green Campbell lodes attracted miners, and filled up both camps with an industrious population. James Hanley, writing on these locations in 1872, says: "They are on the Jefferson river, three miles apart, and at a distance of forty miles from Virginia City. They are surrounded by an endless number of quartz lodes, considered to be the richest in the territory. In fact, no quartz from these lodes has been crushed without rendering profitable returns. There is a large quartz mill in the town, a miners' store and hotel. The town has a population of one hundred, and derives considerable trade from Porter Creek and the Jefferson Valley. The foremost quartz lode is the far-famed Iron Rod lode, from which fortunes have already been taken, and the lode will last for many years to come. The most fully developed lode at Silver Star is the Green Campbell, and probably no lode in Montana has been more successfully or profitably conducted. This town is very pleasantly situated—has quartz mills, stores, hotel, school house, Masonic hall, temperance lodge, and many nice private residences. Its population numbers two hundred and fifty. There are some splendid hot springs a short distance from town." This description still holds good. The mines of the district have maintained a reputation for productiveness, which has placed them in the front rank. The mining villages have shared in the prosperity, and to day, amid all the wrecks of old enterprises, Silver Star and Iron Rod appear prosperous, and richer still in greater prospects. All that was left of the Broadway Gold Mining Company (limited), of London, at Silver Star, went up the flume in June, 1884. The company had "put in" about $500,000 to work refractory ore after an English process, which proved a failure. The remains of the $500,000 outfit, consisting of a tramway, hoisting works, big pile of wood, scales, blacksmith and mining tools, and other minor articles were knocked off to the highest bidder at sheriff's sale.

Societies.—Silver Star Lodge, No. 17, A. F. and A. M. Silver Star was chartered October 3, 1871. The Past Masters are: P. J. G. M., Harrison Jordan; P. M., James Gordon; P. D. G. M., John Anderson. The Master Masons are: William H. Archer, Robert Courtney, M. M. Delaney, Charles DuBey, Frank Foster, Thomas B. Harper, William A. Haynes, George Lapoint, John T. Lewis, W. W. McCall, Frank Pink, Frederick Root, D. B. Sinclair, John G. Wiant, H. H. Stackpole, Burton W. Sperry, Richard Tremboth, Pat. Carney, W. H. Johns, J. D. Kerby, Paul E. Bean, Charles Weineman, W. A. Gray.

Silver Star Lodge, No. 21, I. O. G. T., was established at Silver Star August 1, 1870. Fifteen members joined the lodge, who elected H. W. Tuttle, Lodge Deputy.

Commercial.—The business circle is made up as follows: Joseph D. Kerby, postmaster and merchant; Joseph Barkell, mineral springs; Burnby and Kirby, merchants; J. F. Dullea, hotel; Frank Sipfle, brewer; Toefry & Hatch, tinners; S. F. Filchett, blacksmith; F. Eling, wagon-maker; A. D. Campbell, meats; A. F. Bernard, billiards.

Twin Bridges.—This town is situate where the waters of the Passamari, Beaver Head, and Big Hole rivers form the Jefferson branch of the Missouri. It takes its name from the bridges which span the Beaver Head and Big Hole rivers, a short distance apart, and nearly opposite each other. Its position on one of the great highways of the Territory is the principal contributor to its support, as it was brought into existence to supply a demand for a convenient trading point and post-office for the people of this locality, and no doubt its many natural advantages will enable it to grow into a town of no small importance. In June, 1885, the village was surveyed for Judge Lott. The hotel is conducted by Judge M. H. Lott, the district school by Miss Edith Stone, and religious services by itinerant preachers. Two saloons are kept by John Gilfoil and Geo. Pilcher. The co operative store is well managed, and the bridges kept in good condition.

Societies.—Twin Bridge Lodge, No. 35, I. O. G. T., was founded January 9, 1873, by John Willhart, who was also first deputy. In 1874 the name was changed to Liberty Lodge. Liberty Lodge, No. 7, I. O. G. T., was organized in 1874. The number of members in April, 1883, was 94, including the following named officers: L. M. Pickett, Eva Page, Lizzie Larson, Mrs. Stevens, C. Eckstorm, Carrie Edghill, C. L. Utley, J. T. Parker, F. H. Mott, A. N. Page, and Nellie E. Eldred.

On November 1, 1884, William Zastrow, Deputy Supreme Commander for Montana, instituted the second legion in the Territory of Select Knights of the Ancient Order of United Workmen at Twin Bridges. It is known as Madison Legion No. 2, and was organized with the following charter members: B. F. Shaubert, Geo. T. Lewis, J. R. Comfort, Rodney W. Page, F. T. Counter, James Doren, Donald McKay, D. A. Rightenour, L. M. Pickette, C. J. Eckstrom, Giles Clark, James R. Sias, James M. Page, M. H. Lott, and T. D. Eldred.

Church.—The Methodist Episcopal society may be said to have been organized here in May, 1885, by Rev. W. E. King. At this time a subscription of $520 and a donation of a site for the church and parsonage were accepted, while Judge Lott offered a town lot to any one who would subscribe another hundred dollars.

North and South Willow Creek, at the head of which are the mines of the Potosi District, dates its settlement back to March, 1864, when Norwegian Gulch was discovered, and to 1874, when Hughes and Howe discovered the Bullion lode, and organized the district. The ditch from South Willow Creek to the Norwegian placers was constructed in 1865 to carry 300 inches, and enlarged in 1874–5 to carry 1,000 inches by a company of Bozeman capitalists. North Willow Creek, at the base of the Tobacco Root Range, has been known in mining circles since 1864; although the development of its mineral resources was not really undertaken until the Strawberry was prospected by L. C. Moreland. Then followed the Ned, Boss Tweed, and Willow Creek, and early in 1876 the Mallory 5-stamp mill was erected, to which 5 stamps have since been added. In the summer of 1877 five more mills were built. Upper Willow Creek valley is eight miles long, with an average width of one mile. It is connected with lower Willow Creek valley by the Two Mile Cañon. The lower valley is four miles long by one in width.

Pony.—This mining district, forty miles north of Alder gulch, is being now developed by Henry Elling & Co., and gives promise of becoming one of the great mining camps of the Territory.—In 1878 the population was 100. A school house, forty private houses, two stores, two hotels, a blacksmith shop, a billiard saloon and one public hall made up the village. The stampede to the Pony district, in the spring of 1877, was large. Miners rushed from all parts of Montana to this camp, and there was great excitement over the gold quartz discovered. Fully five hundred men collected at that time, and Pony was, for awhile crowded with prospectors. In the fall of 1876 the discovery of rich gold quartz in Crevice, Willow creek and Ned lodes, and of good paying rock in the Strawberry, Keystone and Boss Tweed lodes indicated that a good gold district had been discovered. With a five-stamp mill in operation for a few months that fall, $10,000 was cleared on quartz mined from the Crevice claim. But the excitement subsided in a few months and Pony was almost deserted for the more favored mining districts of Butte, Glendale and Phillipsburg. During the year 1881 the mines of the pony district that have been worked have yielded profitable returns, and, for the number of men employed, the yield of the district will compare favorably with the other gold districts of the Territory. A ten stamp mill was erected and the free ore above the water line milled to produce $25 per ton. The five stamp water mill and fifteen stamp steam mill are ready to assist in the development of the district. The twenty stamp mill of Elling & Morris is in full blast, working on ore from the Boss Tweed, Keystone and other mines which the company owns in the Mineral Hill district. The business circle comprises Isdell & Patten, general merchants; Thos. Carman, quartz mill; J. T. Gore, superintendent of mines; W. R. Reel, hotel; A. Wilcox, saw mill; Lloyd & Stradling, carpenters; Tom. Beckwith, wheelwright; W. L. Taft, livery; L. Smith, barber; company quartz mill; E. Rogers, blacksmith; H. Baynard, shoemaker; Thos. B. Hunt, justice of peace; Mrs. F. Binnis, restaurant, and Thomas Carr, saloon. N. J. Isdell is postmaster. In April, 1885, Dr. D. A. Pease and J. D. Kirby organized a lodge of the A. O. U. W. at this point.

VIRGINIA, CITY.

Red Bluff, in the Potosi district, is thirty-five miles north of Alder gulch, and five miles north of Pony, discovered in 1864, by Smith. The Urbana mine was opened in 1872, subsequently abandoned, and opened by Mr. Doll, of the original owners (Doll, Oles & Walbank), in November, 1882. The Grub Stake is the best developed mine in the camp, having been operated by Pope, McKee & Bayliss for the last six years. The ore is free milling and yields between $60 and $80 per ton. The Cummins claim was located in 1883, and it is believed the new proprietor will erect a ten stamp mill and smelter. These, with the arastras and the Oles ten stamp mill already in existence, form the introduction to the true revival of mining interests in the camp. Business is represented by Cummins & Williams, mill and smelters; L. B. Olds, quartz mill; Pope, McKee & Baylis, quartz mine; C. H. Peck, postmaster and merchant; J. H. Scanlan, hotel; R. H. Foster, blacksmith; J. S. Minnet, shoemaker; Joseph Willbanks, saloon; P. J. Leonard, owner of Emmet mine.

Montreal Town Company was incorporated February 9, 1865, with John Frazer and James Reed, incorporators. The boundaries described in the charter were: "Beginning at a point on Stinking Water river, about four hundred yards above the house now occupied by Lorain and Gunn as a hotel, thence running easterly eight hundred and eighty yards, thence northerly eight hundred and eighty yards, thence westerly to a point on Stinking Water river, thence up said river to the point of beginning, and will embrace one hundred and sixty acres of land."

Laurin.—This settlement, located on the Ruby, was named after J. B. Laurin, who came to the valley July 15, 1863, and opened a store at this point in a canvas-house. Peter Day, who arrived about the same time, built the first cabin in the valley, at Ramshorn Gulch, Laurin following his example immediately after. Louis Blanchet settled in the valley in 1863 as a farmer, but turned his attention to freighting, leaving the Redfern brothers the honor of raising the first crop in California Gulch. Edward Combs, Michel and Henry Pierre, also settled in the valley in 1863. Henry Lettice settled at Laurin, in 1866. Mr. Thrasher was the first school-teacher. In 1864, Rev. Father Giorda held the first religious services there, and the church building erected in 1874–75 under the direction of Rev. Frank J. Kelleher. The postoffice was established February 24, 1869, with J. B. Laurin, master. He also kept the first hotel, and the general store which he established in 1863 has now grown into a very extensive mercantile concern. In addition to the Laurin store are two shops, two saloons and one hotel. The first justice of peace was Lee Goets, who was succeeded in 1882 by L. Lahaise. The first blacksmith was Tony, who came in 1864. The first law case was tried in 1881; but as a souvenir of early day justice, the tree on which Brown and Red were hanged is still to be seen in the settlement. Laurin is in the midst of a rich farming country, and has a trade of over $25,000 per annum.

Sweetwater.—This settlement derives its name from the sweet grass or sage which grows along the creek which rises in the Sweetwater Park. During the first years of the county's settlement there was a stage station on or near the site of W. H. Raymond's residence, and close by is the grave of a victim of the road agents, whose murderer was subsequently hanged by the Vigilantes. A. Caldwell is said to be the first permanent resident of this part of the valley; but it is conceded that Raymond was the first to develop the agricultural resources of the neighborhood. The first school for white children was opened in January, 1866, by Miss S. E. Raymond, now Mrs. J. M Herndon, of Virginia City.

Meadow Creek and Fish Creek settlements contain a contented and prosperous people. They are among the early settlements of the county. Excelsior Lodge, No. 3, I. O. G. T., was organized at Meadow Creek, Madison county, in April, 1868. Fish Creek Lodge, No. 22, I. O. G. T., was organized August 2, 1870, with H. Jordan, lodge deputy. The charter members numbered 11.

At Meadow Creek are two sawmills and a quartz mill worked by water power. There are also a church and school. The business circle comprises Geo. Bess, postmaster and hotel-keeper; Carter & Walton, Yands & Co., quartz miners; Wm. Ennis, general store; Hawkins & Higbee, blacksmith shop, lumber manufacturers, owners of shingle mill and quartz mill; Wm. Fletcher, meat market; P. N. Clark, millwright; Christian Richter, cooper. Here also C. M. Pinckney is physician; John Kerr, lawyer; V. B. Case, justice, and Henry Kroger, constable.

Salisbury, named after one of the owners of the great western line of stages, is a modern village, though its settlement is cotemporary with the establishment of the southern stage route. Liberty Lodge, No. 7, I. O. G. T., was organized by John Wilhart, January 9, 1873. Charter forfeited in 1879.

Sheridan, eighteen miles northwest of Virginia City, is the center of a rich agricultural district, and close to large tracts of placer ground and gold quartz mountains. The location of the village on Mill creek is pleasing and useful. Mr. Hanley, writing in 1871-2 on this location, says:—"These localities are being fast settled with an enterprising and thrifty class of people, who are making this portion of the country bloom with the fruits of their industry, and who are taking much pride in the growth and prosperity of Sheridan. In the way of buildings it has a hotel, store, temperance hall, school house and blacksmith shop. Adjacent to the town is a large flouring mill, tannery, saw mills, quartz mills and smelting furnaces. There is much prosperity among the people of this locality, and all of the homes bear marked evidences of thrift and comfort. There is much travel through this burg, as it is on the road to places of importance in the county and Territory, and on the direct road to and from the States. Surrounded as it is with thousands of acres of rich farming lands, acres and acres of placer mines, hundreds of gold and silver quartz ledges, we doubt not that it will become one of the most important and flourishing towns in Madison county." The progress of the settlement up to 1884 is shown in the following list of business houses existing there:—J. A. Hall, postmaster; Hall & Hardesty, general merchants and dealers in wagons and agricultural implements; S. Hall, owner of flouring mill, four miles distant; J. Y. Baker, sawmill; Hart & Taylor, owners of sawmill, seven miles distant; Fred. Heminmeyer, sawmill, ten miles distant; Ramsay, French & Co., flouring mill, near village; R. P. Bateman, general merchant; R. Courtney, shoemaker; Thos. Dee, blacksmith; James Falkner, meats; J. Glasser, carpenter; I. H. Hatfield, harness; B. S. Marshall, hotel and livery; O'Brien & Ingram, saloon.

The Sheridan group of mines is located on the west fork of Wisconsin creek, a short distance from the town of Sheridan. These mines—the Grey Eagle, Champion, Damsel and Sheridan—are owned by David McCranor and T. S. Hamilton, of Butte, and have been opened and developed to a great extent. The gold ores of the district are free-milling, and the metal easily saved by the ordinary process of milling.

Samaritan Lodge, No. 10, I. O. O. F., was organized at Sheridan. The members, at present, are J. R. Holden, N. G.; A. Styer, V. G.; O. F. Parmeter, Secretary; J. C. Bell, Treasurer; D. Cameron, Mark Brown, Fred. Ellinghouse, Archie Hyndeman, G. W. Hardesty, J. R. Hartt, W. A. Meares, O. H. McCormick, C. M. Lynd, C. Pietsch, Amos Purdum, James Jobb, Albert Sample, Geo. Spencer, R. Simpson, E. W. Thomas, John T. Williams, J. Wyrouck and Aug. Wehrle. Sheridan Lodge, No. 4, I. O. G. T., was organized March 9, 1870, with 24 members. The present number of members is 77, including the officers, whose names follow:—T. T. Taylor, Maggie Duncan, G. W. Rightenour, W. Fitch, P. G. Johnson, T. L. Atkins, W. Thomas, J. Duncan, Geo. Glasser, S. D. Mullinix. Sheridan Lodge, No. 20, A. F. & A. M., was chartered October 2, 1875. The following list contains the names of members at the beginning of 1885, with names of officers in 1885 added: A. H. Sennott, P. M., T. S. Hamilton, P. M., Thomas T. Taylor, Addie Vincent, P. M., O. S. Brooks, P. M., Rosela P. Bateman, J. D. Bock, Edward B. Bailey, Mark Brown, George Comfort, J. D. Castleman, George Comfort, R. Courtney, James Duncan, A. Eastman, W. F. Foreman, J. L. Galusha, W. J. Galahan, A. Hyndman, G. W. Hardesty, James Cobb, John O. McEwan, B. S. Marshall, Henry McGlinch, D. A. Morrison, A. G. Noble, R. Richmond, Daniel Smith O. M. Sweet, S. H. Taylor, Thomas Thompson, E. H. Williams. In 1885 a lodge of the A. O. U. W. was organized in the village.

Pullers Springs, fifteen miles southwest of Virginia City, dates its settlement to 1865. The business of the village is made up as follows: Alexander Metzel is postmaster, stock-grower, and dealer in meats; John Donegan and W. C. Smithmayer are stock-growers; Murphy & Metzel, saw mill; Kyle Bros., saloon; A. H. Davis, justice of the peace; C. Christnaught, constable.

Ruby Lodge, No. 21, I. O. G. T., was instituted June 27, 1885, with eighteen names on the charter and four more whose names were on the petition, making in all twenty-two charter members. The names of the members elected to fill the several offices in order of rank are: J. H. Davis, Mrs. C. W. Pendarvis, Mrs. F. Laine, Thomas A. Metzel, William Maloney, Perry Willsey, C. W. Pendarvis, May Williams, J. C. Cowan, Mrs. J. C. Cowan, Mrs. Maloney, Wm. Hope, Miss Jessie Davis, J. S. Garroutte.

Ennis, twelve miles northeast of Virginia City, dates back to 1863. The place was named in honor of one of the early settlers. Wm. Ennis is postmaster and general merchant here. A small population supports a church and school. The main route to the Yellowstone Park is via this village, while a second route is via the new bridge at West Fork.

Jefferson Island, near Harrison village, dates its settlement back to 1864. Religion is represented here by the Methodist Episcopal society and the Latter-Day Saints, and education by the district school. James W. Lacey is postmaster.

Home Park is one of the settlements of 1879, twenty-five miles southwest of Virginia City. Though only a few years in existence, it boasts of a Methodist church and district school. James B. Snapp is postmaster.

Harrison, on the county line, twenty-seven miles southwest of Gallatin City, is the new name of an old settlement on a feeder of the Jefferson river. The population is about 100, supporting a school and church.

Beavins Gulch is a tributary of the Ruby river (formerly known as the Stinking Water), about fifteen miles north of Virginia City Madison county. These were very rich placer diggings—in fact second to Alder Gulch—which were then the best in the Territory. The miners in this gulch made on an average from thirty dollars to fifty dollars per day to the hand.

Mountaineer City was located on a branch of the Big Hole, west of German gulch, in August, 1865, as per some writer, under cognomen of "Big Medicine," set it down at thirty houses, three stores, two blacksmith shops, shoemaker's shop, usual number of whisky mills and a "Hurdy Gurdy." The gulch was two and a half miles long, and the gulches in the vicinity were First Chance, Moose Creek, Lincoln, Oregon, California and American.

Mill Creek was settled in 1865, in which year Cowan and Hall opened the first large farms. They had in 1865, forty acres of wheat, twenty-eight acres of barley, eight of oats and six of potatoes. They also were granted a charter for a ditch.

Societies.—Lodges of the I. O. G. T. were organized at Rochester, Mountain City and Beaverhead settlements as follows: Rochester Lodge, No. 11, I. O. G. T., was organized at Rochester, March 8, 1869, with twenty-four members. L. A. Woodworth was Lodge Deputy. Red Mountain Lodge, No. 12, I. O. G. T., was founded at Red Mountain City, Madison county, March 11, 1869, with eleven members, including the Lodge Deputy, E. H. Jeanjequett. Beaverhead Lodge, No. 28, I. O. G. T., was formed April 12, 1871, by A. B. Davis. The original members numbered ten, who elected Nicholas Darnutzer, L. D. Charter forfeited April 30, 1872.

Madison Valley.—The first persons married were Miss Whitney to Henry Riblett at Virginia City, and the second, Miss Nelly Bowen to Fay Harrington. The Weaver family had a child born in the fall of 1865, and Switzer stopped with them when he came to the valley. Weaver kept a tavern, and his wife was the first white woman there. First minister was Rev. Mr. Duncan. Lytton and Jordon passed the winter of 1863–4 on a creek in the valley, also a young Kentuckian named Miles. Maynard, Newman and Allen came in 1863. Miles had a comfortable cabin, but it is thought Switzer built one as early as any.

Big Hole Basin, above the canon of the Big Hole river, surrounded by picturesque hills and beautiful scenery, is a little valley known as the Big Hole basin. A number of good ranches are located and well improved. Here live the old-timers of Madison county, Mike Ryan and Mike Kane. The famous hot springs, known as the Ryan springs, are in this valley, the proprietor of which, Charles Zeigler, is finishing a large hotel for the accommodation of invalids and visitors, in June, 1885. This hotel contains twelve rooms and is an ornament to the valley. A saloon building is also in course of construction.

Bear Creek Settlement, in the upper Madison valley, contains a number of young men just beginning in life, but who have the nerve and enthusiasm of pioneers, and the results already achieved indicate that before many years shall have passed they will rival their old neighbors of the lower country. In this Bear Creek section is located the large tract of land watered by the Indian Creek canal, which was constructed in 1883. W. D. Canby conducts a hotel on the south fork of the Madison.

Waterloo is the name of a new village in Madison county, and boasts already of a lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

A writer in 1869 says: "More densely populated than any other (excepting Gallatin, possibly), these valley settlements are what gave Madison its heavy vote, heavy revenue, and Virginia its really heavy retail trade. Rancheros and country dealers are the predominating consumers and producers of Madison county. The villages known as Junction, Central and Nevada were prominent centers in the busy days of the past, they are now mournfully quiet and deserted; yet there are men, women and 'wee bairns,' some three hundred and fifty souls, pursuing different avocations below Virginia. The men are principally miners. Nevada has one hundred and ten people, three stores and two saloons. Adobetown, a 'wen' grown on the body of Nevada, has one hundred and seventy-five people, and Junction about fifty. About two hundred whites and forty Chinese were engaged this summer in mining below Virginia, and the product is reliably estimated at $300,000. This is a heavy decrease in yield. Sixty men in 1864 took out $125,000 in the California Company's grounds on Wood's Bar."

Mines and Mining.—The county seat of Madison county and the center of mining interests, Alder Gulch, extending eighteen miles, is rich in gold and silver, principally placer gold. Quartz mines were not developed until 1884. Alameda mines, owned by Geo. Sexton, quartz, and producing fabulous specimens of ore, $4,800 to ton. The Wakoosta mine is equally as rich, owned by Devarman & Thexton. The U. S. Grant, owned by John King, all qnartz, and one mile from Virginia City, shows gold and silver specimens of $40 to ton. Prospect mine, owned by Layton & Rice, shows a stong vein of high grade gold and silver ore. Bell mine, owned by Br. Bell ($\frac{1}{4}$) and Carman & Co. ($\frac{1}{4}$), and other mines, Brown's, Granite, Alder, Biven's and Barton are good ones, and yielding fair returns. Quartz quartz concentrator mill just opened for summer, or longer, if ores will justify. Placer mines in Alder Gulch, owned by large companies, yielded in 1884 $200,000. The first discovery of gold at Red Bluff was made by Smith in 1864, and the same year John Lawn sunk a one hundred and fifty foot shaft in the Red Bluff lodge. Before 1867, the mines now known as Grub Stake, Rip Van Winkle, Boaz, Sioga, Blue Wing, Red Chief, Golconda, Walter & Bo's., and the Centennial, were discovered. In 1877 a party of miners "struck it rich" in one of these lodes, and named it the Grub Stake. This mine is now developed by Pope, McKee & Bayliss. The Mohegan is operated by a company of which Mr. Peel is superintendent. The Wordwainer is developed by Wm. Minnis. In 1878 there were one ten stamp water mill in the district, owned by Olds, Hurst & Thomas, and also one arastra. The Urbana is owned by Messrs. Doll, Oles & Walbank. It was opened in 1872, but afterward abandoned. Mr. Doll again opened it in November, 1882, since which time considerable gold has been taken out and the mine still looks well. The Cummins mine of 1883, and the Cummins ten stamp mill and smelter, are very important additions to the interests of the district. The Olds mill of ten stamps and the arastra are two old industries, while the five stamp mill, recently built for Elling & Word, is an important addition. In June, 1885, Blaine, Chisholm and Van Tassell located a silver lead four miles from Red Bluff. The ore is said to be very rich. Besides, gold, silver and copper lodes of considerable richness have been discovered. A specimen from a silver mine shows large quantities of native silver. On South Boulder creek, about seven miles northwest of Pony, the first find was the Mammoth lode, by John Hughes and James Howe, about a year after the Strawberry discovery. There are numerous other lodes found in the district. South Boulder district has ample water power and an abundance of timber. The Mammoth, Leviathan, Grand Central, Buckeye, Sultan and Bullion are all old and well-known lodes. A ten stamp water power mill was erected by the Grand Central prior to 1878. Two large ditches were constructed in 1885, one on the east side by Gray, Ketchum, and a number of other settlers, who have located ranches on what is known as the "Dog Town basin." On the west, Sparrell, Noble, Powell and others have turned water into a large ditch seven miles long. This ditch was surveyed and work commenced three years ago. Richmond Flat is the name of a new camp. Although having but one mine that shows any degree of development, this camp at present shows indications of becoming a lively camp. There are now about fifteen men employed, and a larger force will be put on in a short time. The Revenue Mining Company, of which Williams is foreman and J. H. Johnson is superintendent, seems to conduct operations in a systematic, intelligent way. Developments thus far show what is likely to be a great mineral wealth to the county and territory.

The Pony Mineral Hill District, situate on North Willow creek, which joins South Willow five miles below Pony, and running easterly empties into the Jefferson river twelve miles distant, lies along the base of the range, about ten miles from its northern extremity, and is forty miles from Virginia City. The first discovery made was the Strawberry lode, by L. C. Moreland. The Ned, Boss Tweed and Willow Creek were respectively discovered, and eighteen months from the date of first discovery (which was in the spring of '75), the greater part of the lodes mentioned below were found, besides many others. The spring following, A. J. Mallory built the first mill—a five-stamp water power, to which has since been added five additional stamps—and in the spring and summer of '77, five more mills (two of them steam) were erected by different parties, making fifty-six stamps in the district, ten of which have since been removed to Vestalburg. The principal mines are the Strawberry, Elephant, Ned, Willow Creek, Boss Tweed, White Pine, Crevice Cub, Sam. Tilden, Clipper, Belknap, Keystone, Custer, Last Chance, and Atlantic. Henry Elling, of Virginia City, owns quite a number of mines here that pay well when worked. Near one of these he has a ten-stamp mill, and a twenty-stamp stone mill. Several concentrators are in use. The White Pine lode, owned by Thomas Carman, is from one to two feet in width, and mills from $50 to $60. Mr. Carman bought the Getchill mill in 1883. This district is rich in gold, silver, and copper, and men with capital and enterprise, with confidence enough to risk capital in developing mines, will some day make it a bonanza for themselves and the country. In 1881, Elling, Morris and Pfouts developed the Keystone, the first ore being hauled to Butte for reduction.

The Potosi Silver district lies at the head of South Willow creek, well up in the Tobacco Root range, is about twelve miles southwest of Pony, and forty miles north of Virginia City. A trail up South Willow creek leads to the mines. South Willow furnishes plenty of water power near the mines, and immense bodies of timber grow upon the mountain sides—extending in many places to the creek—among which is a great abundance for lumber purposes. The first discovery (the Bullion), by Hughes and Howe, was made and the district organized in the spring or summer of 1874; other discoveries soon followed, continuing from time to time to the present time. The old mines are the Ina, Clara Hathaway, Bullion, St. Louis, Independence, Palmetto, Brown Flint, Triphon, Paymaster, Potosi, Silver Seal, Keystone.

The Norwegian gulch mines, below Pony, are old and well known contributors to the wealth of the county. The gold lode is a quartz mine, which was worked by two arastras. The Norwegian placer mines are supplied with water from South Willow creek, by a ditch five miles long, and with a carrying capacity of 1,000 inches. The original ditch was made in 1865, and carried about 300 inches. In 1875 it was enlarged, at a great expense, to its present capacity by a Bozeman company, who owned a large amount of mining ground in and adjacent to the gulch. Work is carried on by means of hydraulic hose and a bed rock flume. A few farms lie along the creek, and a saw mill was built in 1885, at the head of the valley.

CHAPTER XXVII.

MEAGHER COUNTY.

THIS county, to which so many references are made in the chapters of the General History, forms to-day the objective point of the miner, farmer, and stock-raiser. Its development may be said to have only commenced in 1880; for the palmy days of 1866-1869 were only the forerunners of greater and more general prosperity. Abounding in deposits of gold, silver, hematite and magnetate, lead, copper, zinc, antimony, coal, limestone, gypsum, it is not a matter for surprise to learn of the revival of mining, on a grand scale, within the borders of the county. The valleys and foot-hills, sheltered by the mountains, afford to the farmer and cattleman a large area of good lands upon which to carry on their trades; while to the merchant and mechanic, the growing industries of the county and the influx of settlers offer a true field for enterprise.

The archaeological treasures of Meagher county are doubtless of a varied and interesting character. Their exploration has scarcely begun, yet a new cave was discovered in 1883, between Meadow Lane and Lovely Dale, about four and a half miles from White Sulphur Springs, which has been penetrated a half or three-quarters of a mile. Early in the winter of 1882-3, Edmund Spencer, a prospector of the Judith mountains, made a remarkable discovery. He states that he found a cave in which were two petrified Indians, seemingly about seven years old. They were perfectly natural in appearance—finger nails, ear-rings, paint on face, and every resemblance of the Indian being present, just as death left them.

Ram's Horn cave, or Bandit's Retreat, is a great subterranean passage situate in a small detached range of mountains between Willow creek and Four-Mile, about four and a half miles east of White Sulphur springs. It is of immense size and extent, and inspires the visitor with awe at every step, though there is little in it to admire. The entrance, though not so grand as Crystal cave, near by, is very easy. When you pass under the arch you enter a large room, probably 50x60 feet, with a 20 or 30 foot ceiling. From this you clamber over a mountain of tumble-down stone, and then commence a descent at an angle of about 45 degrees for a distance, it would seem, of no less than a quarter of a mile, the passageway varying in width from 20 to 50 feet. The floor, which once was smooth, is now a mass of stones, which have been precipitated apparently from the sides and roof in ages gone by. At one place a great pyramid of stone suspends itself across the way. At another, two great stones half the size of a house, have in their descent become wedged in the corrugated ceiling, and hang threatening over the main passage. When about half way down, the main passage forks. To the right the descent is made over high stones with some difficulty for several hundred feet to where the fallen debris has barred the way. Here are several smaller passages leading off, one to a room well studded with stalagmites and stalactites. The descent to the left is still more difficult, but may be made through several channels, one by passing through a narrow crevice in the walls; another by meandering about over precipitous stones and around sharp jagged walls; the other by a small circuitous tunnel, very smooth, yet small and forked. Attempting the main passage a precipice of 12 or 15 feet intervenes, which is descended by means of a rope. Here a very nice room is reached, the floor of which is smooth and the walls and ceiling have not been so disturbed as to make them tumble down. Here are many curious formations, which fully repay the tourist for his toilsome descent. From this room run off many small passages of sufficient size to admit of their being entered, but as their general tendency is upward, all of their windings have not yet been traced. Here are also great crevices, which seem to split the mountain asunder for thousands of feet, and one small passage leading still deeper into the bowels of the earth, but not quite large enough to admit of a medium sized man passing it. A few hundred feet from the main entrance, in a nice cove to one side, is the remains of an old camp fire, where highwaymen or Indians have in some age or other found refuge. (Husbandman.)

tion of Meagher county, and decreed "That all that part of Montana Territory embraced within the following boundaries be, and the same is hereby, declared to be Meagher county, to-wit: Commencing in the middle of the main channel of the Missouri river, opposite the mouth of Sixteen Mile creek; thence easterly along the center of the main channel of said Sixteen Mile creek four miles; thence north to the northern boundary of Gallaiin county; thence due east along said line to the one hundred and ninth parallel of longitude; thence due north along the one hundred and ninth parallel of longitude to a point due east of the middle of the main channel of the Missouri river opposite to the mouth of Deep creek, or Smith's river; thence west to the middle of the channel of the Missouri river, opposite to the mouth of Deep creek or Smith's river; thence southerly up the middle of the main channel of the Missouri river to the place of beginning." The western boundaries remain unchanged. The eastern and southeastern boundaries were formed by the Muscleshell river, extending east to longitude west 30 deg. 30 min., and the northern boundary by a line drawn from a point south of the confluence of the Muscleshell river and Crooked creek to the bend of the Missouri at the mouth of Meagher creek, south of the great falls, giving an area of 16,000 square miles.

Those boundaries were observed until 1885, when Fergus county was set off from the eastern part of Meagher. The name was given in honor of General Thomas Francis Meagher, who was drowned at Fort Benton, July 1, 1867. The principal valleys are the Missouri, Smith, Muscleshell and Judith rivers, each having an agricultural area of from forty to seventy miles in length, and from five to fifteen miles in width, and possessing a total arable extent of nearly 2,000 square miles. Separating these are mountain ranges of medium height, often covered with a thick mat of the most nutritious bunch grass, and yet possessing sufficient pine timber for all practical needs. The product of the thirteen mines for 1881 was valued at $100,000, principally in gold. The value of all metals produced in 1882 may be set down at the same amount. The old diggings known as Confederate, Montana, New York, Cave, Oregon, Wood, White, Boulder, Diamond, Slaughter, Pilgrim, Gold Bar, Duck and Trout have yielded over $10,000,000 since they were first developed to the present time. The new gold fields promise an equally rich yield, so that in mines as well as grazing and agricultural lands this large county is singularly endowed.

The total vote of the county in November, 1882, was 1,985, of which number Martin Maginnis received 994, and A. C. Botkin, 991, for delegate to congress, a democratic majority of three. The total vote recorded in November, 1884, was 2,184, distributed as follows:

Delegate—Hiram Knowles, R., 1,126; J. K. Toole, D., 1,058.

District Attorney—W. H. Hunt, R., 1,121; J. A. Johnston, D., 1,068.

Councilman—James Fergus, R., 1,132; Granville Stuart, D., 1,010.

Representatives—George M. Hatch, R., 1,229; James E. Stevens, R., 1,000; Perry J. Moore, D., 1,114; H. M. Parker, D., 950.

Commissioner—Ralph Berry, R., 1,062; Thomas A. Wall, D., 1,101.

Probate Judge—B. W. Badger, R., 1,162; J. E. Murray, D., 996.

Treasurer—David E. Folsom, R., 1,135; J. F. McClintock, D., 1,030.

Clerk and Recorder—L. Rowitt (on both tickets), 2,127.

Sheriff—Henry Simons, R., 826; Jeff Howell, D., 1,315.

Assessor—Wm. Wallace, R., 662; Samuel Snyder, D., 1,282.

Superintendent of Public Instruction—Miss Alice S. Nichols, R., 905; Miss Alice M. Darcy, D., 1,250.

Surveyor—George M. Stafford, R., 1,200; R. G. Wight, D., 968.

Coroner—C. W. Cook, R., 1,039; J. M. Kumpe, D., 1,120.

Public Administrator—H. H. Barnes, R., 1,166; J. M. Gray, D., 995.

For the Constitution, 646; against Constitution, 979.

The officers then elected succeeded the following named officials in 1885: Sheriff, W. D. Cameron; probate judge, J. E. Murray; clerk and recorder, Louis Rotwitt; treasurer, J. F. McClintock; assessor, Jeff Howell; superintendent of schools, Miss Alice Nichols; coroner, T. L. Lapalme; commissioners, P. H. Clark, W. F. Haase and William Berkins. The precincts of the county in 1882 were: Beaver Creek, Belt, Big Elk, Canyon Ferry, Chestnut, Deep Creek, Diamond, Duck Creek, Flat Willow, Gold Run, Hughesville, Jimtown, Maiden, Martinsdale, Merino, Oka, Philbrook, Pittsburg, Reedsfort, Round Grove, Sellew's Ranch, Stuart's Ranch, Ubet, Utica, Wagner Creek, Whites, White Sulphur Springs, Wolf Creek.

Schools.—The schools of the county, as shown in County Superintendent Miss Alice S. Nichol's report for December, 1882, are far above the primitive institutions which one might expect to find in the scattered and sparsely settled districts of this large county. Number of organized districts, 13; number of white persons between 4 and 21, 600; number of African descent, 4 to 21, 5; number of pupils attending school during the year, 279; number not attending school, 326; number of male teachers employed, 5; number of female teachers employed, 8; total number of teachers, 13; average length of school in days, 156; number of frame school houses, 4; number of log school houses, 9; number of ungraded schools, 13; total number of schools, 13; rate of county tax for school purposes in mills, 3; amount per capita of school census children, $9.29; amount raised by county tax for schools, $5,574.29. The increase in the figures for 1884 is very marked.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS.

White Sulphur Springs, the seat of justice of Meagher county (1881), is situate on a tributary of Smith river, 15 miles southeast of the Gaddis trading-house, nee Fort Logan, and 74 miles east of Helena, was formerly known as Brewer's Springs. This quarter section was pre-empted by James S. Brewer, of the expedition of 1867, in 1870. In 1871 Major R. C. Walker, U. S. A., purchased a half interest from the pre-emptor, and to them a patent was issued. These gentlemen erected dwellings, bath-houses, stables, etc., and to them is accredited the honor of being both pioneers and founders of the town. The property was subsequently purchased by Dr. Wm. Parberry, the pioneer physician of the village. In 1878 the merchants were Spencer Brothers and Jonas Higgins; Wm. Parberry, physician; J. B. Thompson, blacksmith, and I. O. Proctor, cheese manufacturer. The cattle-raisers or stockmen represented or residing there were I. G. Stone, J. O. Hussey, P. H. Clark, B. R. Sherman, C. W. Cook, Frank Ellis, Wm. Luppold, Mayn Brothers, and Potter & Ford.

The business circle in 1884–5 was made up as follows: Anderson Bros. & Co., general store; Rev. Wm. Catlin (Presbyterian); Dunham & Maloney, saloon; Alexander Gipson, wagonmaker; Rev. M. J. Hall (Methodist); B. M. Hanson, meats; A. G. Hatch, lawyer; J. J. Hennessy, boots and shoes; Higgins House; G. E. Kumpe, physician; G. E. Kumpe, jr., druggist; J. M. Kumpe, physician; E. A. Kyes, saloon; James McDonald, harnessmaker; L. Marks, clothing; Mayn & Heitman, general store; Potter, Moe & Co., Meagher Co. Bank; Price & Price, planing mill; Reece & Lewis, livery; Reece & Downey, blacksmiths; Elias Shelby, restaurant; B. R. Sherman, livery; N. B. Smith, lawyer; J. E. Sprague, hotel; Sutter & Ring, barbers; Swope & Robertson, blacksmiths; White Sulphur Springs Ass'n, hotel; Wilson & Attwood, saloon. In November, 1884, the Higgins House was erected by Jonas Higgins, and conducted by E. C. Dyer.

The taxable property of White Sulphur Springs school district is assessed at over $700,000, but the true value of the property is nearly double that amount. There is a practical route for a railroad from Livingston to Benton via White Sulphur Springs and Neihart. The route, with the exception of about twenty miles, is over a rolling prairie, and over it the iron horse will certainly push forward at an early day. In August, 1883, White Sulphur Springs subscribed $1,000 in stock for a telegraph line to connect that town with the Western Union system of wires. The estimated cost of the line to Livingston was $4,000.

The First National Bank of the town was organized in August, 1883, with a capital of $50,000. L. H. Hershfield, Aaron Hershfield, John H. Moe, of Helena, and Charles Mayne, J. J. Mayne, Louis Heitman, Almon Spencer, Wm. Parberry, W. T. Ford, John Potter, Jonas Higgins, P. H. Maloney, B. R. Sherman, A. Lincoln, A. Brucket, William Luppold, of Meagher county, are the principal stockholders.

In the latter part of 1882 negotiations were entered into for the purchase of the Sulphur Springs, and in December of that year a company composed of Helena, Benton and White Sulphur Springs capitalists, purchased of Dr. Parberry the Springs, together with all improvements thereon, and all that portion of the town site not deeded to other parties. The purchase included nine acres of ground surrounding the springs, seven acres of ground on which the springs hotel is situated, and 1,000 town lots. The incorporators of the company are T. E. Collins, Aaron Hershfield and Henry Sieden. The board of trustees is composed of the three gentlemen named and Dr. Parberry, A. W. Sias, Robert Coburn and Louis Heitman. The valuable qualities of the sulphur waters, and the resources of the neighborhood which await development, led to this business like proceeding. Mr. Sutherlin, writing in the Husbandman, speaks of this town and wonderful springs as follows:—"Unlike most other medical resorts, the Springs are situated in the midst of a beautiful valley, and the roads around about are the finest for driving to be found anywhere. From three to five miles away rises in picturesque grandeur one of the most romantic ranges in all the Rocky mountains—a range, whose recesses, defiles, summits, peaks and caverns, the home of bear, lions and other game, are yet unexplored. In fact, all the mountains that surround the valley are beautifully picturesque and very interesting to the explorer, and abound in game. The streams that cross the valley are alive with trout, and from them tons of finny beauties are taken every year. It is to the abundance of game and fish around about this valley that we in some measure account for pleasure associated with the great medicine region by the Indians, for while they were healing their maladies they could obtain plenty of game to subsist upon without effort. There is probably no place on earth where nature has done more to combine the advantages of health and pleasure than this; and when it shall be refitted with the modern appliances of the age, which is to be done at an early day, it will stand without a rival as the health asylum and pleasure resort of the great Northwest." In 1883 the White Sulphur Springs Association was organized with Aaron Hershfeld, president, and I. Salhinger, secretary. Supt. of Schools Cornelius Hedges, while attending the Teachers' Institute, held there in the summer of 1883, speaks of his arrival in the town thus:—"It is larger by far than we anticipated, and its location is beautiful as well as convenient. The public and business houses are commodious and the private residences are nice, new and neatly painted. The Central Park, containing ten acres, has just been enclosed with a substantial picket fence, painted. Everything about the town is new, except the faces of many old friends, whom in years past we have known in other places, Diamond contributing the larger share."

TOWNSEND.

This new town was commenced in May, 1883, and before the winter of that year set in the following business houses were established: Bonner's hotel, Skinner & Burk, blacksmiths; Brodock Bros., saloon; Weston & McGeer, druggists; Beckney & Noah, wholesale liquor dealers; Byron DeWitt, hardware; Wm. Wood, postmaster, millinery and ladies' goods; Jerry Shinnick, hardware; Bullock & Co., furniture; Tiernay & Co., general merchandise; Shaw & Gilogly, blacksmiths; Smith, blacksmith; Hutton & Co., livery stable; H. C. Graves & Co., lumber yard; B. Burch, boarding house; Thos. Dixon, livery and saloon; Davis & Shinnick, store and saloon; Zeigler & Co., saddlery, etc.; Thompson, notions, etc.; Berg Bros., general merchandise; Knowlton & Bro., restaurant; Mr. McCormick, livery and saloon; LeClaire, fruit stand; Durnam, saloon and lodging house; Nye & Co., forwarders; Robinson & Burns, builders; Geo. Cardwell, architect; Miss Wilkinson, boarding house; A. W. Williams, railroad agent and notary public; James Barker, Centreville, general merchandise, and Tiernay & Company's $10,000 hotel building. The Townsend postoffice was established in June, 1883. The location of the town in the Missouri valley, on the line of the Northern Pacific railroad, and in the heart of a rich agricultural and stock-raising county, justifies its pretensions. The business interests in 1884–5 were represented by the following named persons and firms O. H. F. Allen, photographer; T. N. Averil, carpenter; Mrs. W. P. Baker, hotel; George Ballord, horses; James Barker, general store; Beckney & Noah, wholesale and retail liquors and cigars; Alf Belcher, physician; Berg Bros., general store; C. L. Berry real estate; F. Bonner, saloon and bakery; J. E. Williams, proprietor Bon Ton hotel

Brodock Bros., saloon; Carr & Fietland, carpenters; W. A. Clark, constable; George Cardwell, carpenter; Cotter & Mahoney, livery; Martin Crahan, saloon; Thomas Crane, saloon; Moses Daggett, justice of the peace; Byron Hewitt, hardware, stoves, glassware and crockery; Thomas Dixon, brewery and saloon; Molton & Radburn, cattle and horses; James Driscoll, telegraph agent; Thomas Durnan, saloon; H. C. Graves, horse dealer and deputy sheriff; Lewis Greenwood, carpenter; Haley & Hollingsworth, restaurant; Rev. George Hall, Methodist; Hoover & Nanoe, blacksmiths; Joseph Hopkins, carpenter; Horsfelt & Ripley, meats; Jarvis & Howell, lumber mills; J. E. Kanouse, lawyer; A. G. Lombard, real estate; Wm. Lunhordy, horses; F. F. McCormick & Co., livery; Thomas McCormick, justice of the peace; McCormick & Co., saloon; Wm. Manning, shoemaker; J. L. Mason, carpenter; Hultz Maynes, barber; George Noah, saloon; Mrs. Noram, hotel; George Norton, cattle and horses; Nye Forwarding Company (John Nye, C. L. Berry), grain, commission and coal; M. H. Parker, lawyer; Potts & Harrison, cattle and horses; C. C. Ray, wagonmaker and farm implements; Robinson & Burns, carpenters; Shaw & Gelogly, blacksmiths; M. Shelby & Sons, flour mill; J. J. Shinnick, hardware; Short Bros., horses; Smith & Hussy, blacksmiths; J. E. Stephens, editor Press; Sullivan & Loyd, carpenters; A. Talbott, dentist; W. E. Tierney, wagonmaker and farm implements; W. E. Tierney, general store; newspaper; Trudell & Leffer, carpenters; C. Vanscork & Co., meats; J. R. Weston, lawyer and druggist; Weston & McGear, furniture and carpets; Mrs. M. Wilkins, hotel; E. S. Willett, carpenter; J. E. Williams, proprietor Bon Ton Hotel; J. H. Williams, railroad and express agent; J. P. H. Williams, notary public; H. Wood, Baptist; Wm. Wood, watchmaker and postmaster; John Woodworth, carpenter; Ziegler & Co., saddlery and harness. The manufacturing industries comprise a water-power flouring mill, a steam planing mill, a sash, door and blind factory, Methodist, Episcopal and Baptist churches, and two weekly newspapers, the Townsend Press and the Tranchant. In November, 1884, Prof. Marsh, of Helena, made an important discovery of coal in the mountains a few miles east of Townsend. The coal is of a very fine quality and the vein is eighteen feet thick. Prof. Marsh placed a force of men at work developing his find. The discovery is situated about three miles from the railroad.

DIAMOND CITY,

the old seat of justice of Meagher county, and the mining capital of eastern Montana, from the date of the discovery of Confederate gulch to the fall of the placers in 1870, has struggled with fortune for the last 14 years. The town is distant 38 miles from Helena and 36 miles from White Sulphur Springs, the present county seat, at an elevation of 5,200 feet above the sea level. In 1879 the district offered some evidences of its former greatness, and supported a population of 225, together with the following business interests:—L. Marks, general merchandise and express office; Wm. T. Haase, general merchandise and post office; Central hotel, John Smith, prop.; Thos. Flemming, livery stable and meatmarket; Diamond City Hotel, Ed. Brassey, prop.; Marks & Patterson, livery stable; G. Ecker, shoemaker; H. Ramspeck, brewery; Donald McLean, saloon and billiard hall; T. E. Collins, attorney at law; Rocky Mountain Husbandman, R. N. Sutherlin, prop., now published at White Sulphur Springs. According to the census of 1880, the number of inhabitants had decreased to 64. Judge Hedges visited the once great mining camp in July, 1883, and in a few words gave a history of its fall:—"Diamond City," he says, "is desolate, deserted and dreary to behold in the shreds of its departed glory, yet those who have known it in the days of its pride, wealth and activity, cannot fail to recall pleasant associations. Its very site will soon go down the flume, which is already within the borders of the old town and gleaning a rich harvest—probably the last. There are only four families left of all the hundreds that have dwelt here since the glorious days of '66. If the goose that laid the nestfull of golden eggs can only be found in the shape of a prolific mother vein of gold-bearing quartz, the days of Diamond's departed glory may return; otherwise, it will disappear utterly with another season." The first birth in Diamond was on January 15, 1866, when the miners all agreed to have the baby called Diamond. W. P. Hare, postmaster and general merchant, G. A. Hampton, hotelkeeper, and L. Conn, saloonkeeper, represent the business interests of the village in 1884–5.

Societies.—The Sarsfield Center of the Fenian Brotherhood was organized at Diamond

City, December 17, 1865, with Denis Sheehy, captain; Lawrence Campbell, treasurer, and Owen Garrigan, secretary. Diamond City Lodge, No. 7, A. F. & A. M., was chartered October 7, 1867. The members of the Lodge in 1883 were, Nicholas Fretz, P. M.; George Walwork, P. M.; William Parberry, P. M.; S. Anderson, D. Butterfield, P. M.; S. Butterfield, Albert Bruckert, Charles W. Cook, Benjamin B. Cook, A. Davis, Geo. Ecker, Henry Eckhoff, T. J. Fleming, Green A. Hampton, F. J. Keene, Frederick Miller, Archibald McGregor, W. R. Morgan, Leopold Marks, P. M.; Hanson H. Barnes, P. M.; Harvey L. Keene, P. M.; Coleman C. Puett, *Wm. C. Pierce, Joseph A. Stephens, A. J. Stephens, Charles Siebricht, Daniel A. Steele, J. M. Tubbs and Thomas Williams.

Diamond Lodge, No. 1, I. O. G. T., Diamond, Meagher county, was organized April 17, 1868, by T. E. Bramhall. The membership in 1883 was 42, comprising 15 women and 27 men. The present officers are: B. W. Badger, W. C. T.; Annie Kirchman, W. V. T.; W. H. Gutherlin, W. S.; J. G. Moriarty, W. F. S.; R. F. Carter, P. W. C. T.; C. E. Settles, W. T.; M. McDermott, W. M.; Alice S. Nichols, W. C.; — Yancy, W. I. G., and Chas. Richards, W. O. G. The first Lodge Deputy was H. H. Barnes, who represented a society of 84 members, the most important circle of Good Templars in the Territory at that time.

SETTLEMENTS AND MINING CAMPS.

White Gulch, three miles across the mountain from Diamond, and fifteen miles by wagon-road, was once one of the famed placers of Montana, and is still the scene of placer mining. It was discovered May 2, 1865, by Mr. White. In the fall of 1878 there were 30 voters here. In June, 1880, the total population was only 35, in November, 1882, the number of voters was 19, and the population lower than in 1880; so that White's Gulch, which contributed, in early days, so much to the wealth of the Territory, is, like its transmontane neighbor, Diamond, a village of the past. Alex. Gibson transacted a general trade here for years. The hotel and livery stable were conducted by J. H. Welscher.

Cañon Ferry and Cavetown in the Kingsbury mountain district, are little centers of population. Cañon Ferry was established by John Oakes early in 1865. The following year J. V. Stafford bought the Ferry interest, erected a hotel, and founded a store here, together with taking an interest in mines and stock-raising. The post-office was established in 1866 or 1867, since which time the place has been known as the Cañon Ferry Station. The store, hotel, ferry, and post-office are all conducted by Court Sheriff; Wm. Angell is blacksmith; R. Hartoff, Jos. Phillips, Thomas Cooney, Sam Marshall and Jacob Hart, with a few others, form the population of the village. The vote polled in the village and vicinity in 1882 was 54, including the vote of Cavetown.

In the fall of 1882 inquiries were made regarding the amount of grain raised between Canon Ferry and Horseshoe Bend. It was found that the total yield of all kinds of grain raised in the scope of country mentioned for the year 1882 was 274,946 bushels. Of the land under cultivation in the same section only about one-third was used for the growing of cereals, the remainder being devoted to hay, vegetables, etc. Within the last two years the area of cultivated land has been extended.

Cave Gulch was famed for its rich mines, and at one time was notorious for its claim jumpers. Those jumpers organized in Idaho and Nevada, and selected Cavetown in which to operate. To oppose them the five camps in the Kingsbury region united, and taking possession of a log cabin, the confederates prepared to resist the jumpers. When the latter opened work, the rightful owners fired on them, succeeded in killing three and driving the others away. The mines of Cave are still worked by Peterson and others, and sustain a population of 40.

Confederate Gulch, discovered December 3, 1864, was one of the most productive gold fields. Montana Bar, the name given to a two-acre foot-hill in the gulch, yielded to one small party of workmen, in one season, no less than $600,000, and it is estimated that the aggregate product of this knoll alone, from December, 1864, to the present time, has been about $1,800,000. The condition of these once rich placers in 1880 was poor indeed—the population was only 41, and the outlook in the summer of that year very disheartening.

*Deceased.

Later in 1880 James King, of the Diamond Flume and Hydraulic Co., built two flumes, giving them eight miles of ditches and 4,000 inches of water.

New York Gulch.—The rich treasures of this gulch were discovered in the spring of 1866, and a town site surveyed the following summer, at its confluence with Trout Creek, to which the name New York was given. Opposite, the Town of Brooklyn was platted, and thus, in the heart of the mountains, history was repeated so far as nomenclature was concerned. During the years 1866 to 1869, the placers yielded richly, while the quartz (owing to the primitive process employed for its reduction) produced little or no profits. During those years the population of the Trout Creek Districts was counted by thousands—in 1880, the number of inhabitants was forty-nine. Thus, like many other mining centers of old, the glory of the two cities departed, leaving to other times and newer men the easy task of their revival. The condition of the gulch in October, 1884, is recorded thus: "For some years the camp has been deserted almost entirely, except a few families engaged in ranching and stock-growing. John Byrd, who is one of the early settlers here, was also an old timer at Alder gulch away back in the sixties. Mr. Potting and a few others compose the population of the once famous New York gulch with the exception of the late arrivals here, who are quartz mining and refitting the ten stamp mill to crush the quartz. This industry is being renewed by John S. Tooker and D. G. Merrill, who purchased the Montana Chief gold mine and ten stamp quartz mill. The latter is built on Trout creek, and will be furnished with a turbine wheel of 20-horse power and a twelve foot fall. In a few weeks the mill will be pounding away under the superintendence of Milo Courtwright, of Helena. This great water-power will attract other industries which may bring New York as much into prominence as it was in the early days." In January, 1885, these gentlemen developed the Gold Bluff, Home, Ticket and Chase, all gold-bearing, free-milling quartz lodes, the water power being taken from Trout creek by a quarter-mile ditch. The Gold Bluff Mining and Manufacturing Company filed articles of incorporation in May, 1885. Its objects are mining, dealing in quartz, lumber, etc., and purchasing and selling water rights and privileges. It has a capital stock of $30,000, fully paid up and non-assessable. The business will be conducted at Trout creek, Meagher county, and the principal office will be at Helena, The officers elected by the company are: John S. Tooker, President; J. B. Clayberg, Secretary and Treasurer; Thomas G. Merrill, General Manager; Trustees, August M. Spratt and George L. Maltz, of Michigan, and John S. Tooker, T. G. Merrill, J. B. Clayberg, of Montana.

Fort Logan.—The history of this old post is given in the general history of the Territory, and many references are made to it in the chapter on Indian wars. So recently as April, 1879, the place was garrisoned by two companies of U. S. infantry; while without the fort there were about 400 inhabitants. The stockmen represented there at that time were the Walker brothers, the Stephens brothers, G. L. Lewis, J. G. Sarter, A. J. Smith, John T. Moore, Bennett & Goodale, — Burt, and Auerback & Klein. According to the census returns of 1880, the population was 136. In the summer of 1883, this beautiful location was tenantless, so to speak, since Major Gaddis, the former post trader, was the sole representative of its faded greatness. Here Darlington Lodge, No. 39, I. O. G. T., was organized May 23, 1873, by T. W. Flowers and G. O. Folsom.

Deep River Valley narrows about nine miles below the springs, and the county from this point is hilly and only fit for grazing land as far as Fort Logan, with the exception of one ranch some two miles above the latter place. Fort Logan, now abandoned by the troops, is owned by Judge William Gaddis, he having bought the property from the government at the time of its abandonment. There are a few ranch and stock men in the vicinity of Fort Logan and on Beaver Flats, some ten miles northwest. A few miles above the mouth of Deep river are the coal mines belonging to Bullard, Barbour, Ballou & Edgerton, of Helena, discovered in 1883. The rock is first-class bituminous coal, that will make good gas and good coke. It has all the qualities of the Pittsburg coal, with cubes, squares and peacock hues and is mined in large blocks.

Duck Creek is a quartz mining village twelve miles from Diamond. Here a quartz mill and two arastras were in operation. Thompson Gulch, high up in the mountains, just east of Duck Creek, has been worked by the Smith brothers, who take during the short season of four months from $4,000 to $8,000. It is the center of a district which holds out great promises for its future. The number of votes polled here in November, 1882, was twenty-five.

Centerville, twenty miles south of Diamond City, on the Missouri, is one of the old towns of eastern Montana. Here Valley Lodge, No. 11, A. F. & A. M., was chartered October 5, 1875, the membership of which now comprises: E. P. Woods, P. M., Austin Bledsoe, James J. Bunch, W. J. Carpenter, Thomas Kemper, W. L. McCormick, J. E. McCormick, J. M. Provence, Gavin Johnson, Samuel Johnson, W. D. McCormick, Alex O'Neil, Milton White, J. M. Powers, P. M., S. W. Keaton, P. M., W. J. Sharpe, Amos Teague, A. F. Watkins, J. R. Weston, P. G. M., J. J. Woods, P. G. M., C. H. Keaton, James Long.

Missouri Valley Lodge, No. 52, I. O. G. T., was organized by Massena Bullard, January 6, 1876, with a large number of members; but this association has ceased to exist. James Barker is postmaster at this point.

Ulidia, on the Missouri river, sixty-five miles northwest of the county seat, was settled in 1879. Business is represented by George Steele, general merchant; John P. Dayas, general merchant and postmaster; C. H. Austin, J. Cadge, Charles Johnston, John E. Morgan, James Perkins, Philip Travis, Wm. Smett, stock-growers and dealers; M. McDaniel, dairyman; Joseph Beckett, blacksmith; B. Schramerick, thresher; and O. G. Robie, lumber manufacturer. The settlement is seventy-five miles southwest of Benton, in a beautiful country.

Toston, thirty-seven miles southwest of the county-seat, on the Missouri river, and a postal village on the Northern Pacific railroad, is contemporary in settlement with the construction of the railroad. The population is about fifty, supporting two general stores and a hotel.

Baltane, seventy miles north of White Sulphur Springs, was settled in 1880, and a post office established there. In the neighborhood are some coal mines, but the leading industry is stock-raising. The population of the district is about 200. Canton is one of the early business centers of the county, being established in 1872. The location is on the Missouri river about seven miles northwest of Townsend. Business is represented by A. M. Darcey & Co., dry goods, and W. E. Tierney, general merchant. The last named is also postmaster. Castner, eighty-five miles north of White Sulphur Springs, is one of the old coal mining centers of the county. The first permanent settlement was made here in 1877, a post office was established, and the beginnings of a commercial center made. John K. Castner and J. J. Murphy are owners of coal mines at this point, while Charles Peterson and D. J. Price are general merchants. Chestnut, eighty miles northwest of the county seat, is a postal village, settled in 1870. J. A. Harris is postmaster. Clendenin, thirty-eight miles northeast of White Sulphur Springs, is a small but busy center of trade, named in honor of the late George Clendenin. F. Reed & Co. are general merchants at this point, E. M. Robinson, druggist; Henry Madison and John Guthrie, restaurants; Thomas Karn and J. P. Dapper, saloons. A twenty-ton water jacket smelter was put in operation December 1, 1881, by the Clendenin Mining and Smelting Company. In the spring of 1881, immediately after the Wright and Edwards stampede, through the efforts and representations mainly of the late George Clendenin, a smelter was established at Barker, and in the latter part of November, of that year, its belts were adjusted and the work of treating ore commenced. Since then the works have been running continually to the extent of their capacity and a great many tons of valuable bullion have been turned out and shipped to the eastern markets. J. H. Emery, of Helena, is one of the owners of the Clendenin works; Prof. N. A. Foss, superintendent, and H. D. Burghardt, manager. Other mines in the camp have also undergone considerable development, of which we may mention the Barker, Pittsburg, Silver Belle, May & Edna, Kalloch, Joe Weeks, Benton, Flintlock, etc., etc., owned by Fitzpatrick & Sturdeboush, Largent Bros., William Ulm and others.

Hughesville, near Clendenin, 40 miles northeast of White Sulphur Springs, was at one time a postal village, but the office was moved to Clendenin a few years ago. The population of the village is small, but the district supports a church, school, and a few business houses.

Neihart, 75 miles west of Maiden, contains many promising silver lead prospects, the ore in some cases assaying up into the thousands. But little development has been made, however. The mines are not only without facilities for home reduction, but they are too far from railroad communication to admit of shipping any except the richest of the ores.

Martinsdale, at the confluence of the three forks of the Muscleshell, is in the center of a stock raising and agricultural district. The number of votes polled here in 1882 was 66. The village is 37 miles southeast of the county seat and 60 miles northwest of Big Timber, on the N. P. R. R., was settled in 1877, and to-day forms one of the most progressive little towns in the county. The business circle is made up as follows:—R. H. Clendenin, general store and blacksmith; Coates & Lowdes, saloon; Charles Dunning, wool grower and rancher, Frank Flannery, ranchman; F. J. Gangler, general store; H. W. Gardiner, hotel; J. E. Hall, hotel and sawmill; James Jackson, railroad and express agent; Henry Kertz, ranchman; T. L. Linton, live stock; George Lyons, live stock; A. McGregor, wool grower; Thomas Mayne, ranchman; P. J. Moore & Bro., cattle dealers; S. F. Morse, hotel and livery; J. E. Murray, probate judge; Newman & Campbell, builders; A. E. Pound, mail contractor and justice of peace; Pound & Busha, wool growers; Ed. Sayre & Bro., wool growers; Smith Bros., live stock; G. R. Wilson, stock broker. Here in 1882 two rival villages were known, Richard Clendenin, general merchant and postmaster, representing one, and A. E. Pound, mail contractor, the other.

A contributor to the press in 1882, speaking of this neighborhood, says:—"There are a number of ranches on either fork, and on the tributaries, among them those belonging to Smith Bros., on the south fork, whose sheep number into the tens of thousands, Duffy & Veasy, also sheep men; Hatch Bros., who are the largest shippers of sheep in Montana; Chas. Dunning, a cattleman, and a number of others whose names we cannot recollect. There are big bands of cattle on the Muscleshell ranges, some of the big owners being Wm. Gordon, and others; J. H. Freeser and Mr. Sweat, of Helena; R. A. Collins, P. H. Clarke, Mayn Bros., Henry Kiel, Gilbert Ecker, Gaddis & Bryan, and others of Smith river; Doc. Cooper and others, of the Missouri valley. The stage road from Martinsdale to the White Sulphur Springs, passes by the big sheep ranch of Sayre Bros., on the south fork, who last year had nearly 20,000 of their own and others in charge. They have a splendid place, and are fitted up in fine shape. Next, two hay ranches and a sawmill."

The buffalo hunting party which left Helena for the Muscleshell in the fall of 1867, comprised J. S. Brewer, W. S. Jenkerson, W. S. Hamilton, Messrs. Davis, Newman, Hawkins, Greenhood, Flatig, Crittenden and Bennett, all of Deep Creek and Copperopolis; T. P. Ames, of Helena; C. P. Head, George Phelps, James Grubb and Messrs. Howard, Regan, Toole, Maguire and Fox, of Diamond City; with Morrow, Heiler, Smidt and Samped, from the Missouri river. These men were well armed and equipped, and prepared to meet the Indians at every point should they be attacked. Their journey was a direct benefit to that portion of the Territory, since the reports which they rendered confirmed all the favorable accounts given of it hitherto.

Captain Andrews and twenty others located ranches at an early day on the Muscleshell and Deep rivers, erected buildings, and discovered a new route crossing the Missouri and Belt range above Confederate gulch. Copperopolis, seventeen miles east of the county-seat and about sixteen miles from Martinsdale, is a rich copper region, on a low divide in the Bull mountains, and we expect to hear some day of rich discoveries at any place along this portion of that range, which on the north and east has given to Montana the now famous Barker, Montana, Yogo, Running Wolf and Belt Park districts. This is the dividing line between the Muscleshell and Smith river valley. About nine miles from Copperopolis the valley of Smith river begins to appear, and the road passes by a number of ranches along the north fork of that stream, and about six miles further on the traveler arrives at White Sulphur Springs, aptly called the Saratoga of Montana. The settlement here was made in 1866–7; but owing to the non-development of the rich copper mines, the location seems to await the coming of the Yellowstone and Benton Railroad to realize its importance. The mines are known as the A. M. Holter Copper Mines.

Unity is the name given to a settlement of farmers and stock-growers, nine miles southwest of White Sulphur Springs. The first permanent settlement dates back to 1873. Here C. W. Cook was appointed district postmaster.

Oka is the postoffice town of the Judith Gap District, and is one of the old settlements of this portion of the Territory, dating back to 1879. A. J. Stephens conducts a general store and hotel, and is also postmaster; J. Lawrence & Son are engaged in wool growing and freighting. This settlement is seventy miles northeast of White Sulphur Springs. Near this point are the ranches of Collins, Severance & Co., with immense fields of grass, dotted with cattle.

Crazy Mountain took its name from a Mrs. Harris, who went insane on the plains and escaped from the party. She was found near the mountain, and from this arose the name Crazy Woman's Mountain. Woman was dropped, and hence the name Crazy Mountain. In August, 1865, four men left Diamond City to prospect in the Crazy Mountains. No tidings of them were ever received, and it is supposed that they fell victims to the savages' lust for blood.

RETROSPECT.

Why have men left their homes in the States—left gay circles and old friends, to contribute, perhaps, like the coral insect to its jeweled reef, their very lives to the splendid, new civilization building up here? There were reasons. Ambitions and hopes were to be satisfied, and to the golden mountains the laborer, as well as the adventurer, looked for that which promised a competence if not wealth. Many of those, who in early days made their homes in Meagher county, have advanced in measure with the county; but the majority, the greater number of toilers, have failed to win the wealth which their labors merited, while many have gone over the unknown range to seek recognition and reward, and share in the unassessed dividends of that country beyond the grave.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

MISSOULA COUNTY.

THE area of this county is estimated at 30,000 square miles, embracing the entire northwestern portion of Montana west of longitude 36 deg. 30 min. It is bounded on the north by the Canadian possessions, on the east by Deer Lodge and Choteau counties, on the south by Beaverhead county, and west by Idaho Territory. The Missoula (or Hell Gate), the Bitter Root, Jocko, Flathead, Pen d'Oreille, Lo Lo, Stony creek, St. Regis de Borgia, Lewis Fork, Big Blackfoot, Ashley creek, and hundreds of small streams run through the county, while Flathead lake, Lost lake and numerous ponds afford never failing reservoirs. The valleys are from 30 to 150 miles in extent and from one to ten miles wide. In the chapter on Topography and Natural History, is given Prof. Canby's account of the discovery of a glacier by his party, and a description of the country around the upper Marias Pass, between the headwaters of the Flathead river west of the Rocky mountain range, and Cut Bank creek east of the same. The locality is about 150 miles north of Missoula. The Bitter Root is a longitudinal valley, a little more than one hundred miles in a direct line west of the main range of the Rocky mountains. Camas prairie, Jocko valley, Hell Gate valley, and many other sheltered fertile tracts, distinguish this county from almost all others on the Pacific slope. To Father De Smet and his associate missionaries the credit of the beginnings of the county must be credited. The Jesuit mission was at once the school of industry and knowledge, and there the first attempts were made to introduce agriculture, the grist mill, the art of building, the school and the church, as related in the general history. H. F. Brown, in his recent paper on the Advancement of Horticulture, speaks of the Bitter Root valley thus: The first settlement of the valley was made in 1841, by the Catholic missionaries when the St. Mary's mission was founded, about thirty miles above the present town of Missoula. In 1850 Fort Owen was built on the site of St. Mary's mission, and became the nucleus of a farming settlement. The soil proved very prolific and the climate such that everything common to the temperate zone would flourish and mature in the open air. In 1866 Philip Ritz imported some fruit trees and they were sold to various parties. The following year they were nearly all killed by grasshoppers. In 1870 Bass Bros. imported about 100 small apple grafts from Plymouth, Mass., and began the first successful fruit growing enterprise of the Territory. The first orchard was set out on low ground, but subsequent experiment proved the higher ground next the hills to be much better adapted to fruit raising. Others followed, until now an orchard is as much a part of a farm in the Bitter Root valley as in the East. The Pine Grove fruit farm of W. E. Bass & Bro. has now an orchard of over 1,000 trees from one to thirteen years old, but few, however, being over ten years old, and the larger part from three to four. This orchard consists of about 1,000 apple trees of standard varieties and Siberian crab. Of standard apples the Duchess of Olenburg, Red Astrakhan, and a variety known as the Wealthy apple have so far proved the most prolific varieties. They have also over 100 plum trees of different varieties and fifty cherry trees. In 1882 they harvested over 100 bushels of strictly fine standard apples and about the same of Siberian crab apples. Also gathered their first crop of plums and cherries, amounting to several bushels. The crop of fruit was equal to what could be gathered from any orchard in the world of equal average age, being literally more than the trees could hold up. They also sold from one and one-half acres of strawberries, 3,000 quarts, besides all that were used for family and neighborhood use. From one-eighth of an acre of currant bushes eight years old, six barrels of excellent currant wine was made at a total cost of twenty dollars per barrel, and all sold for $100 a barrel. Two hundred gallons of gooseberries and one hundred gallons of raspberries were also gathered. They have a fine lot of blackberries that will be in bearing this season, and a nursery of several thousand grafts of standard varieties of fruit. This being the oldest and most extensive fruit ranch, particular mention is made of it Nearly every ranch that has been settled over one year has its orchard started, and some of the older ranches have from two to twelve hundred trees, and without exception are meeting with the most gratifying success. In 1878 W. B. Harlan moved from the more thickly settled country near Stevensville, about thirty miles farther up the valley, being willing to stand the rigors of the upper Bitter Root winters and the privations of frontier life for a fresh cattle range. As an experiment he planted some fruit trees in 1879. To these he has added each year, until he now has 700 trees, including twenty varieties of standard apple, and many varieties of plum and cherry. Five hundred of these trees are over one year old, that is, have been in his orchard over one year, and not even one twig has been winter killed. Instead of braving excessive cold, he finds the temperature averages ten degrees higher the entire winter than in the valley below, and instead of being on the frontier, ranches have been taken for thirty-five miles above him to the number of over fifty, and are being improved. Fifteen miles above him fruit is being grown equal to his own, and he is now satisfied that the upper Bitter Root will prove the fruit growing region par excellence of Montana. In small fruits I can but quote the words of Bitter Root's tallest, and one of her most reliable, farmers—"I do believe we can beat the world," and I will add that without exception the testimony of the entire valley, based upon actual results, backed up and emphasized "Uncle Elijah's" convictions. For myself I will testify that in every log cabin, and every more pretentious, but no more hospitable mansion, these fruits, dried, canned, jellied and preserved, were a staple article, in quantity lavishly abundant, and in quality fit for an epicure." The lumber industry promises great results. Missoula county has long been known to possess extensive tracts of timber, her valleys being abundantly supplied. In the Jocko valley red cedar may be seen growing that measures from ten to twelve feet in diameter and attains 200 feet in height before the first limb is reached. The enterprising firm of Eddy, Hammond & Co., of Missoula, had the contract for furnishing the lumber for the railroad, from the Thompson river to the Divide, and employed about 250 men. Saw and planing mills have been constructed to supply the local demand for lumber, and even now, such establishments have outgrown their original plan and supply manufactured timber to consumers east and west of the main range. With the growth of the agricultural and manufacturing interests, the merchant's trade has advanced. Where a few years ago a little village gave life to the valleys, towns have sprung into existence, and instead of the solitary post of the fur trader, large mercantile houses supply the wants of the people.

Organic.—The mutations of Missoula form in themselves a series of political connections which give it a place in the history of four territories and of five counties. In the Centennial history Mr. Woody says: "Missoula county, with the exception of a small portion of the northeast corner, lies on the west side of the main range of the Rocky mountains, and, at one time, constituted a portion of that vast territory of the northwest known as Oregon. Oregon was, for a long number of years, claimed by both the United States and Great Britain; and was held in joint occupation by the citizens of both nations. Great Britain claimed by right of discovery and the United States by right of discovery and by virtue of the French cession of the territory of Louisiana, of April 30, 1803, and the treaty of limits with Spain, of February 22, 1829, and also by right of actual occupation of the soil for a long number of years. The "Oregon question" engrossed the attention of Congress for considerable length of time, and came near resulting in a war between the United States and Great Britain; but the matter was amicably adjusted by the treaty of June 15, 1846, by which the forty-ninth parallel of latitude was established as the boundary line between the two nations. Oregon was organized as a Territory, by act of Congress passed August, 1848, and included within its limits the present county of Missoula. By act of Congress approved March 2, 1853, the Territory of Oregon was divided and this portion of Oregon became a portion of Washington Territory. The legislature of Washington Territory created the county of Clarke, extending from a point below Fort Vancouver, on the Columbia river, to the summit of the Rocky mountains, a distance of some six hundred miles. The present county of Missoula was then a portion of Clarke county. Clarke county was afterward divided, and the county of Skamania created, and we became a portion of the last named county. The legislature then divided Skamania and created Walla Walla county, and we then became a portion of Walla Walla county, with our county seat located on the land claim of Lloyd Brooks, on the Walla Walla river. Walla Walla county was afterward divided and we became a part of Spokane county, with the county seat located at Fort Colville. We remained a part of Spokane county until December, 1860, when the legislature of Washington Territory divided the county of Spokane, and created the county of Missoula, with the county seat at or near the trading post of Worden & Co., Hell's Gate Ronde. The county of Missoula, as first established, embraced all those portions of the present counties of Missoula and Deer Lodge lying on the west side of the main range of the Rocky mountains. Missoula county remained a portion of Washington Territory until Idaho Territory was organized, on the 3d day of March, 1863, when it became a portion of that Territory. The first legislature of Idaho created Missoula county with nearly the same boundaries that it has at the present time, and located the county seat at Wordensville. The legislature of 1864–5 organized Missoula county, and the act was approved February 2, 1865. The boundaries were thus described: "Commencing at a point of intersection of the parallel of latitude forty-nine degrees with the line of longitude one hundred and sixteen degrees, thence along said line of longitude south to the summit of the Bitter Root mountains, and along the summit of the Bitter Root mountains, in a southerly direction, to the summit of the Rocky mountains, and along said summit of the Rocky mountains dividing Deer Lodge Valley from Bitter Root Valley, in a northwesterly direction, to meridian of longitude one hundred and thirteen degrees and thirty minutes to the parallel forty-nine degrees, and along said parallel of latitude to place of beginning. The county seat was located at Hell Gate."* The act approved December 14, 1866, provided: "That the county seat of Missoula county be, and same is hereby located at the town of Missoula Mills, in said county, and the legal voters of said Missoula county, at the next general election, shall inscribe upon their ballots the place where said county seat shall be located, and the highest number of votes designating the place shall be the county seat of said county thereafter." The seat of justice was ultimately established at Missoula, which is to-day the capital of the county.

Political.—The officers of the county, named in the organic act passed December 14, 1860, by the legislature of Washington Territory, were: C. P. Higgins, Frank L. Worden, and T. W. Harris, county commissioners; M. W. Tipton, sheriff; and H. M. Chase, justice of the peace. Commissioners Higgins and Harris alone qualified. Their official work consisted in the advertisement of elections for 1861, and the canvass of the votes polled at that election. According to Mr. Woody's statement: "The county was attached to Spokane county for judicial and legislative purposes; and we were allowed one representative with Spokane. The first election held in Missoula county was a general election in June or July. Polls were opened at Fort Owen, Jocko Agency and Hell's Gate, and the entire vote polled was seventy-four (74). Wallace, Garfield and Lander were candidates for congress, and Lander received the entire seventy-four votes. Dr. Bates, of Spokane county, was elected representative. The following county ticket was elected: Henry Cloren, probate judge; John Beadle, treasurer; Wm. T. Hamilton, sheriff; Frank H. Woody, auditor; Granville Stuart, C. P. Higgins, H. VanDorn, county commissioners; Henry Brooks, justice of the peace. None of the officers qualified except the county commissioners, auditor and justice of the peace, and as there was no business to transact no records were kept. The commissioners met once or twice but had no business, no bills to audit nor assessment rolls to correct. The only business there appeared for county commissioners and their clerk in those days was to meet annually to canvass the votes of the different precincts and serve their constituents without reward." The elections of 1862 were held at Fort Owen, Pioneer Gulch and Hell Gate, July 14, when James Stuart was elected sheriff and L. L. Blake representative.

On the organization of Idaho, March 3, 1863, the county became a portion of that territory. No elections were held. The first county officers of Missoula, after the organization of Montana, were appointed by Governor Edgerton in 1864 to hold their positions until their successors should be elected in 1865. The officers thus appointed were: George P. White, probate judge; Charles Shafts, clerk; A. J. Campbell, sheriff; Thomas Roup and Charles Shafts, justices of the peace. The October elections of 1864 resulted in the choice of F. L. Worden, councillor; and John Owen, representative. Owen did not attend, when E. B. Johnson was declared entitled to the seat. The county was reorganized under authority of the Legislature, given in the act approved February 2, 1865, and the first election held September 4, 1865.

ELECTION, 1884.—The vote, according to unofficial returns, exclusive of Camas, is as follows: Delegate, Knowles, 964, Toole, 959; District Attorney, McBride, 821, Pemberton, 1,014; Councilman, Will Kennedy, 953, Bass, 939; Representatives, Emigh, 897, Eastman, 1,017, McCormick, 882, Megeath, 890; Commissioners, W. J. Kennedy, 1,059, Hubbard, 971, Allen, 719, Clark, 801, Latimer, 113; Treasurer, Speck, 780, Williams, 1,114; Assessor, Catlin, 852, Cunningham, 1,045; Sheriff, Lane, 1,095, Cave, 819; Probate Judge, Farman, 792, Reeves, 1,086; Clerk and Recorder, Lent, 974, Stephens, 922; Public Administrator, Morton, 862, Wolf, 1,032; Superintendent of Common Schools, Ryman, 1,239, Bond, 634; Surveyor, Wheeler, 1,811; Coroner, Lindsly, 921, Hedger, 859. Missoula precinct cast 486 votes in all, of which 51 were straight Republican and 38 straight Democratic. The Constitution received 460 favorable votes and 21 unfavorable.

In January, 1885, a bill was introduced by Mr. Emigh, Representative, asking for the establishment of a new county in the upper Bitter Root country. The division of the county at this time meets with strong opposition; but that the county of Ravalli will be established is a matter of a short time.

First Legal Execution.—The first legal execution which ever occurred in Western Montana, took place August 16, 1883, in the hanging of Ah Yung, a chinaman, in the Missoula jail yard. It was witnessed by about one hundred people. The crime for which this execution was the penalty, was committed January 29, 1883, when in an attempt to blow up the tent of the China paymaster at Horse Plains and rob the inmates, Ah Yung shot and killed the Chinaman who owned the tent, and wounded his brother who attempted to follow him. To the last Ah Yung maintained his innocence.

Schools.—The condition of the public schools of the county, December 31, 1882, is shown in the following abstract of Ex-Officio Superintendent Thomas Williams' report: Number of organized districts, 12; number of white persons between 4 and 21, 813; number of pupils attending school during the year, 487; number not attending school, 326; number of male teachers employed, 4; number of female teachers employed, 9; total number of teachers, 13; average length of school in days, 84; number of brick school-houses, 1; number of frame school houses, 6; number of log school-houses, 4; number of ungraded schools, 13; total number of schools, 13; rate of county tax for school purposes, in mills, 4; amount per capita of school census children, $4.95; amount raised by county tax for schools, $3,510.45; total amount from all sources apportioned during year, $4,432.43.

The convent schools afford a first-class education to a large number of girls, while the schools attached to the mission of St. Ignatius give instruction to the Indian children of the Jocko valley. Captain Mills, writing on the subject under date October 22, 1869, says: "Missoula county has a good start in schools. We did not visit them in the character of 'Superintendent of Public Instruction,' and therefore make no elaborate report. There is a public school at Missoula with some twenty scholars, under the charge of Miss Emma Slack, of Baltimore. At Willow creek, Mr. L. Kelly, a half brother of Miss Slack, is instructing the young idea. Last winter the average attendance was twenty-two; this year it will be larger, although some of the scholars live two and three miles distant. During the winter, schools are maintained at Stevensville and French Town. At St. Ignatius Mission, a school for Indian girls was started in 1866, and in 1868 one for boys. There are twenty or thirty scholars, under instruction of three Sisters, Father Palladino being Superior of the school. They have a difficult task, but already a number of them are studying arithmetic, geography and history, and making progress."

The Mullan Road.—The Mullan expedition, and building of the military road have been referred to in the chapter on explorations. For the purposes of this chapter, the following reminiscences are given; but the name of the writer is unknown: The project of an overland route to the Columbia to facilitate immigration had been talked over in Washington, and was strongly favored by Jefferson Davis, then Secretary of War, as early as 1852. In furtherance of this design, Isaac I. Stevens, the newly-appointed Governor of Washington Territory, was instructed to survey a practical route from the Missouri river to the Columbia. Accordingly, during the year 1853, he organized a party near St. Paul, and traveled to the Missouri river, where boats were taken to Benton, and a route surveyed as far as Missoula. Arriving in the valley, the party separated—the main party going round by Pen d'Oreille lake, while Stevens' party took the Indian trail across the Cœur d'Alenes. In his capacity as Governor of Washington Territory, he was also Superintendent of Indian affairs, and in 1855, met the Columbia River Indians in a grand council, near Walla Walla, and concluded a treaty with the reds, by which it was agreed that the whites were to be allowed free travel over this route. Here he came near losing his life, inasmuch as the Gayuses, Umatillas and other Columbia river Indians were in favor of killing the whites; but Lawyer, the chief of the Nez Perces, refused to be a party to the treachery, and the treaty was concluded peaceably. He also, in his capacity as Superintendent of Indian Affairs, made treaties with the Confederated tribes of Flatheads, Pen d'Oreilles and Kootenais, and with the Blackfeet. Afterward being elected to Congress, Mr. Stevens managed to get an appropriation of $40,000 for the building of a military road from the Columbia to the Missouri rivers, and Lieutenant Mullan, a young engineer, was ordered to superintend its construction. In 1856, he started his expedition from The Dalles, Oregon, and worked up as far as the Cœur d'Alene Mission; but the Indians becoming very insolent and threatening, the expedition was abandoned for the time being. The next spring, RES. OF WM. N. SMITH, SWEATHOUSE CREEK, MISSOULA CO.

1857, Colonel Steptoe went up among the Indians, and suffered a signal defeat. Colonel Wright followed after the victors in 1858 and gave them such a trouncing that his name has been mentioned with fear among Indians of that region ever since. He drove the Indians into the mountains, and corralled some 800 head of Indian horses, which he shot dead almost before their eyes. He demanded the delivery of a certain number of murderers who had been committing depredations in the land, and hung to the trees near which they were captured. These rigid measures had a most salutary effect, and the next spring (1859) Mullan was allowed to prosecute his work unmolested. He worked through the mountains that season to within about thirty miles of what is now known as the Bitter Root Ferry, and wintered there. The next season he worked through this valley, and wintered on the Blackfoot, doing considerable grading in the cañon that winter. In the spring of 1860 he was ordered forward to Benton to meet Major Blake, who was on his way through to the Pacific coast via this military road, and he did little further work on the road. From that time on, this, all the work ever put upon the road, has been of a merely temporary nature, done by immigrants who were pushing their way through, and as the bridges were carried out the first season after being built, it soon fell into disuse, and became simply a packer's trail.

The Territorial Legislature adopted a joint memorial in 1866, which was approved December 13 of that year, asking Congress for an appropriation of $75,000, to be expended on improving the road, under the supervision of a resident of Montana. In the second section of the memorial it was represented, "that the national road leading from Fort Benton to the navigable waters of the Columbia, through neglect, has become entirely impassable for wagons for a distance of two hundred miles, embracing all that portion from French Town, in Missoula county, across the Bitter Root and Cœur D'Alene Mountains in Idaho Territory. That the line of road surveyed and laid out by Lieut. Mullan, crosses, in its ascent of the Bitter Root Mountains on the eastern slope, the St. Regis Borgia river some forty-seven times, and that said road, in its ascent of the western slope of said mountains, crosses the Cœur D'Alene river some forty-two or forty-three times, and that the bridges, with but four exceptions, have been swept away, rendering these streams entirely impassable during the spring and early summer, at a time when our people are most in need of necessaries not attainable from the east at that early season of the year." This reasonable demand secured little or no attention from the General Government; but the necessities of freighters urged private parties to undertake its improvement. In an act approved January 7, 1869, it was declared a public highway, and the collection of tolls from Fort Benton to the summit of the Cœur D'Alene made a misdemeanor. Gen. Sherman passed over the route during the season of 1877, and became impressed with the importance of keeping this road open, not only as a public highway for the accommodation of overland travel to the Pacific, but as a military necessity, and recommended that the road be reopened by the military force as soon as they could be spared. Accordingly Gen. Penrose with two companies was detailed from Fort Missoula, and ordered to make the route passable for wagons to the summit, and a like work done on the other side by a detachment from Fort Cœur D'Alene. When Mullan was building the road, he made mile posts on various trees along the route, some of which are yet to be seen, on which he placed the magic letters "M. R." with the number of miles distant from Walla Walla at which that particular tree was stationed. The letters were intended to represent "Military Road," but a popular error has changed the same to "Mullan Road." In August, 1882, Col. W. F. Wheeler received a letter from Col. F. C. Deimling, of Virginia City, then in Washington, in which he says:—"I met Captain John Mullan here, the man who in 1858 laid out a route from the head of navigation on the Missouri to the head of navigation on the Columbia. We had a talk about old times, and Capt. Mullan referred with particular interest to his old friends Baron O'Keeffe, Frank Woody and C. P. Higgins, of Missoula, Judge Irvine, of Butte, and Col. DeLacy, of Helena. Capt. Mullan is now practicing law in San Francisco."

Stage Coaches.—In August, 1883, the last coach over the Deer Lodge and Missoula route ceased to run. On the 6th of that month the office was transferred to Cramers, with Agent Mahoney in charge. On the completion of the N. P. R. R., the coaches were withdrawn. Fourteen years ago Gilmer & Salisbury established their Missoula branch as an extension to their network of stage lines covering a large extent of territory. The line was the legitimate outgrowth of the Cedar Creek gold excitement, and the first year's business was very large. While the fever kept up there were two lines, the other operated by Huntley, but as the excitement subsided the business dwindled down to almost nothing, and from '71 to '80 a single two-horse coach each way daily handled the business. The business began to increase rapidly in 1880, and kept right on until the opening of the railroad.

In 1882–3 daily stages ran from Missoula to Deer Lodge, 90 miles; to Helena, 135 miles; and to Stillwater, then terminus of the east branch Northern Pacific railroad, 341 miles; to Fort Shaw, 215 miles; Fort Ellis, 240 miles; to Bozeman, 235 miles, and to Fort Benton, head of navigation on the Missouri river, 275 miles. Semi-weekly stages ran to Stevensville, M. T., 25 miles; to Corvallis, 40 miles, and to Shalkaho, 50 miles. Tri-weekly stages ran from Missoula to Beaver creek. Northern Pacific railroad steamboat runs irregularly during the summer from Shannonville to Beaver creek. Spring wagons ran semi-weekly from Missoula to Superior City, 60 miles, via Frenchtown, 18 miles. The first four-horse coach over the Missoula and Pen d'Oreille route came in on September 6, 1883. It is a new, commodious Concord coach, with all modern improvements, carrying eleven passengers, and is drawn by four splendid horses.

Occupation and Settlement.—In the history of the occupation and settlement of Missoula county, it will be seen that two of her citizens tell the story of her progress. The centennial history by Frank H. Woody and the chronology by Chauncey Barbour, form in themselves a high testimonial to the intelligence of the people, and render this history of the county complete in detail.

Mr. Woody's address is as follows: "Probably the first white men who visited this portion of Montana were Lewis and Clarke, who with their party, sometime during the summer of 1805, entered the Bitter Root valley from the south, through a pass known at the present time as the Big Hole mountain, near the head of Bitter Root river. Between 1820 and 1835 a number of hunters and trappers visited this portion of Montana, but of these we have nothing very definite. About this time, the Flathead Indians, who inhabited the Bitter Root valley, had gathered some little knowledge of the Christian religion from the Canadian voyageurs and Iroquois Indians who visited the country for the purpose of trapping and trading for furs. The Flatheads were anxious to gain further knowledge, and sent to St. Louis, Mo., for a priest, or as they called him, a "Black Gown." Three different parties of Indians were sent in as many different years. Of the first party sent but little that is definite is known, except that none reached St. Louis. The second party on their downward trip were all killed by Indians—probably Blackfeet—near Fort Hall. The third party started in the spring of 1839, and sometime in the summer of that year two of the party reached St. Louis. Of the two who successfully accomplished the journey, one was named Ignace Iroquois and who died in this county last winter. The other was the father of a Flathead named Francois Saxa, of Bitter Root valley. The superior of the Jesuit establishment at St. Louis promised to send them a priest in the following spring. Ignace remained in St. Louis all winter and came up with the father in the spring. The other Indian came back the same fall to tell the news. In the spring of 1840 Father De Smet and Ignace came across the plains and found a camp of Flatheads and Nez Perces near the Three Tetons, near the eastern line of the present territory of Idaho. The father baptized a few Indians and came with the Flatheads to the Gallatin valley, near the place where Gallatin City now stands, and finding that he could do but little without aid, returned to St. Louis for assistance. In the spring of 1841 Father De Smet returned coming by way of Fort Hall. He brought with him two other fathers—Point and Mengarine and several lay brothers, among whom were Brothers W. Claessens and Joseph Specht, now residing at St. Ignatius mission, and who are eminently entitled to the appellation of "oldest inhabitants," having been residents here for more than the third of a century. The party brought with them wagons and carts, horses, mules and oxen, and came by way of the Deer Lodge valley and came down the Hell's Gate canon. These were the first wagons and oxen brought to Montana. In the fall of that year the first settlement was made in the Bitter Root valley, by the establishment of St. Mary's mission on the tract of land upon which Fort Owen is now situated. During the fall and winter of the same year dwelling houses, shops and chapel were built, and nearly all of the Flatheads and some Nez Perces and Pen d'Oreilles were baptized. Probably the first farming attempted in our territory was in the spring of 1842, by the fathers at the mission. This year they raised their first crop of wheat and potatoes. The same year the first cows were brought from Fort Colville on the Columbia river. About this time or a little later the fathers also erected saw and grist mills—the burs for the latter being brought from Belgium. In 1844 the Cœur d'Alene mission was established by fathers Point and Hocken. After establishing the St. Mary's mission, Father De Smet returned to St. Louis, and thence went to Europe, but returned to the Bitter Root valley in 1844, making his third trip, and bringing with him a number of fathers and lay brothers; among the number was the well known and highly esteemed Father Ravalli, now a resident of this county. St. Mary's mission was kept up until November, 1850, when the improvements were sold by Father Joset to Major John Owen. The bill of sale—now in the possession of the writer—bears date, St. Mary's mission, Flathead country, November 5, 1850, and is without doubt the first written conveyance ever executed within the limits of Montana. The St. Mary's mission was abandoned for the reason that the missionaries were continually harassed by the numerous war parties of Blackfeet that visited the valley on their marauding expeditions. These war parties were so numerous and murderous that no man's life was safe away from shelter. In 1849, while Father Ravalli was in charge of the mission, having with him one lay brother and a few Indians, the mission was attacked by a war party of about fifty Blackfeet, that proceeded to make it quite uncomfortable for the father and his companions. During the attack two bands of horses belonging to the mission and Flathead Indians made their appearance, and the Blackfeet preferring horses to scalps, withdrew from the attack, drove off the horses and left the occupants of the mission to meditate on their narrow escape. After the abandonment of St. Mary's mission, the fathers and lay brothers were sent to the different missions that had been established further northwest. St. Ignatius mission, situated on the present Flathead reservation, was established by Father Hocken in 1851.

In 1847 the Hudson's Bay Co. established a trading post on Crow creek, on the northern portion of the present Flathead Reservation, with Angus McDonald in charge. In 1850 Major John Owen came to the Bitter Root, purchased the improvements of the Catholic Mission, and began trading there. Sometime about 1849–50 a number of trappers and hunters, who for a number of years had followed trapping and hunting in the mountains, relinquished in a great measure their former occupation, and turned their attention to trading with the immense emigration that annually thronged the great overland thoroughfare from our western frontier to California and Oregon. Among the number were Joseph Lampre, William Rodgers, Ben and Jim Simons, Ben Keiser, Gabriel Prudomme, and others. These men led a regular nomadic life. Spending the summer on the emigrant road, they would trade for large numbers of poor and sore-footed cattle which they would drive to some good wintering place on Green river, or to the Beaver Head or Bitter Root valleys—but more frequently the latter, where they could readily exchange them with the Flathead Indians for horses, and would the next season drive the horses to the emigrant road and dispose of them to the emigrants. In this way a regular trade was built up between the Bitter Root valley and the "Road," as it was usually termed, which continued for many years, and by which means many of the Flathead Indians became possessed of large herds of fine cattle. This emigrant trade brought a number of persons into the valley to engage in trade with the Indians, among whom were Thomas W. Harris, now of the Bitter Root valley, and C. E. Irvine, of Deer Lodge, who came here about 1851 or 1852. Somewhere between 1850 and 1854 an old Mexican trapper by the name of Emanuel Martin, but generally known as "Old Emanuel," brought wagons into the Bitter Root valley from Fort Hall or Salt Lake. These wagons were brought through the Big Hole prairie and over the Big Hole mountain and down the Bitter Root river. Old Emanuel had spent a lifetime in the mountains, and knew the country perfectly from Mexico to the British Possessions. He died near Fort Owen some three years since.

In March, 1853, the Territory of Washington was organized, and Isaac I. Stevens appointed Governor of the same. He was also entrusted with an expedition fitted out from St. Paul, Minnesota, to make the first survey to determine the practicability of a route for a Northern Pacific Railroad. This expedition arrived in what is now Missoula county, in the fall of 1853, bringing with it a number of men who afterward became citizens of Montana, among whom were Capt. C. P. Higgins, of Missoula, and Thomas Adams and F. H. Burr, who were for a long time residents of Missoula and Deer Lodge counties.

In the fall of 1853 Lieut. John Mullan, a member of the expedition, was directed to establish winter quarters in the Bitter Root valley, and to make certain observations and explorations during the winter. His party consisted of a few soldiers and citizens. Among the latter were Messrs. Adams and Burr. Lieut. Mullan erected four buildings of logs at a large spring at the mouth of Willow creek, in the Bitter Root valley, and named the place Cantonment Stevens, in honor of the commander of the expedition. At this time (1853) Fort Owen, with a few cabins built near by Indians and half-breeds, and Cantonment Stevens comprised all of the buildings in the Bitter Root valley.

In the fall of 1855 Neil McArthur, an old Hudson's Bay trader, having retired from the company's service, came to the Bitter Root valley accompanied by L. R. Waillet and Henry Brooks. McArthur brought with him a band of horses and cattle, and located and occupied the buildings at Cantonment Stevens, and engaged in stock-raising. Governor Stevens having, during the summer of 1855, concluded a treaty with the Flatheads, Blackfeet, Crows, and other mountain tribes of Indians, the Blackfeet had in a great measure ceased making raids into the Bitter Root valley, and lives and property were comparatively safe. The treaty between the United States and the Confederated Flathead nation, consisting of the Flatheads, Pen d'Oreille, and Kootenai tribes, was concluded in a council held in July, 1855, in a large pine grove on the river, about eight miles below the present town of Missoula, and opposite to the farm of John S. Caldwell. The place was for a number of years known as Council Grove.

In 1854 the first white woman came to the country now constituting Missoula county, and was probably the first white woman who honored our Territory with her presence. In that year a Mrs. J. Brown came from the east, and while crossing the Rocky mountains gave birth to a male child, now grown to manhood, and a citizen of a neighboring Territory. She, with her baby and two little girls, rode alternately a stout, hardy Manitoban steer and a Canadian pony. She visited the Hudson's Bay post in the northern part of our county and remained several days, and proceeded the same season to her present residence in Washington Territory. This was probably the first white child born within the limits of our present Territory, but as we do not know at what point Mrs. Brown crossed the mountains, we cannot assert it as a fact.

In 1854 Governor Stephens appointed Thomas Adams special agent for the Flathead Indians. In 1855 the government appointed the first regular agent for them in the person of Dr. Lansdale, of Oregon. The doctor established his agency at the mouth of the Jocko river, and erected one or two log cabins, but made no permanent improvements. The agency remained at this place until 1860, when it was established at its present location by Major John Owen, who had succeeded Lansdale as agent. In the spring of 1856, Dr. Lansdale went to Fort Hall, and while there engaged Henry G. Miller and his wife, Minnie, to take charge of the Jocko agency; Miller and his wife arrived here the same spring, and remained at the mouth of the Jocko till the fall of 1857, and then went to Walla Walla. This was the second white woman who visited our county, and the first one who made it her residence. Miller and his wife came here again in the fall of 1860 and remained during the following winter, and are now residents of Cache valley, Utah.

Just here it is proper that some explanation should be given as to some of our local names and their derivation. The Bitter Root valley and river are so called from a root that grows abundantly in that valley, and which is largely used by the Indians as an article of food. The root has a strong, bitter taste, and is anything but palatable to a person unaccustomed to its use. The early Catholic fathers called the valley and river St. Mary's, and by that name it appears on some of our older maps. The large, round valley lying below and adjacent to the present town of Missoula was called by the early Canadian trappers who visited this country, "Hell's Gate Ronde," and the river, Hell's Gate river." The name Hell's Gate originated in this wise;—In an early day when the warlike Blackfeet overran the whole of Montana, the canyon above the town of Missoula, was a regular highway for their war parties, and if a party of trappers or Flatheads camped near it, they were sure to lose their horses, so it became a saying that it was as safe to camp within the gates of hell as to camp near the mouth of the canyon; and it was called by them in their language, Port d'enfer, Gate of Hell, or Hell's Gate, from which the river and subsequently a village took their names. The writer has never been able to find a translation for the word Missoula. The word appears to have been first used and applied by Lieutenant John Mullan; as to where he obtained it, or what it means, we are left in doubt.

In the fall of 1856 several parties who had been spending a summer trading on the "Road," relinquished that business and came to the Bitter Root valley and took up their residences, among whom were T. W. Harris, Joseph Lamprie and Wm. Rodgers. An unusually large number of Indian traders also came to the valley that fall. In October of that year the following named parties came into the valley;—Van Etten, a Mormon trader, with three ox teams, and with him George Goodwin, Sames Brown, Bill Madison and the writer hereof; Hooper & Williams' outfit, consisting of one mule and two ox teams, and with them George and Frank Knowlton, brother-in-law to W. H. Hooper, of Utah; Arch and Alma Williams, brothers of Thomas Williams, of the firm of Hooper & Williams;——Merrill and Portugee Louis. There also came at the same time Robert Hereford, who at a much later date was county assessor of Lewis and Clarke county. All of these parties, with their wagons and teams, came in at the head of the Bitter Root valley. Upon our arrival in the valley, we found Henry Brooks and Thomas Adams at Cantonment Stevens, and at Fort Owen, Henri M. Chase and wife, W. W. Tallman and Louis Robouin, commonly called Louis Marango. The last named parties had been driven out of the Nez Perces country by the Indian war of 1855–6, Major John Owen, P. M. Lafountaine and Delaware Jim at that time being absent on a trip to Fort Benton with ox teams. These parties, with the fathers and lay brothers at the St. Ignatius mission, constituted the entire white population of the country now known as Missoula county. In November of the same year, Fred H. Burr came in from Salt Lake by the same route, bringing three wagons and a large band of cattle, and with him came Judge C. E. Irvine, now of Deer Lodge, George Hatterbaugh, John Saunders, called "Long John," and John Silverthorne, now of the Bitter Root valley; and still later in the season came Neil McArthur, with three ox teams, and with him L. R. Maillet, James Holt, —— Jackson, and an odd specimen of humanity named Bill West, but commonly called "Pork" for short. If time and space permitted, the reader could be regaled with many reminiscences and narratives in which "Pork" played an active part, and in which the ludicrous was a prominent feature. Van Etten wintered in the Jocko, McArthur stopped at the Cantonment, Burr built houses on the west side of the river, near the mouth of what is now known as Fred Burr creek, George Knowlton, in charge of Hooper & Williams' teams, located on Grant creek, just above the farm now owned by Abner G. England, and the creek for some years afterward was known as Knowlton's creek. About the first of December Frank B. Owen, David Patte, and one or two other men, arrived from Fort Colville, and later in the month Major Owen and P. M. Lafountaine returned from Benton, bringing the first goods over that road with ox teams. During the winter of 1856–7 the population of the Bitter Root valley was larger than it again was until the fall of 1860.

Up to this time no settlement had been made in the Hell's Gate Ronde. Soon after the arrival of Mr. Pattee, he contracted with Maj. Owen, and commenced the erection of a grist and saw mill at Fort Owen. In the latter part of December, 1856, McArthur having determined upon erecting a trading post in the Hell's Gate Ronde, dispatched Jackson, Holt, Madison, "Pork" and the writer to Council Grove to get out the necessary timbers to erect the buildings the next summer. Our quarters consisted of an Indian lodge and we fared sumptuously on bread and beef, with coffee without sugar, about once a week. The snow fell deep during that winter and the weather was quite cold, but we lost but little time and by spring had gotten out a large quantity of square timber. In the spring McArthur paid us off for our winter's work, each man receiving a Cayuse horse in full of all demands. With the coming of spring there was a general breaking up of winter quarters and not many men were left in the country. Burr drove his cattle to the "Road," going by the way of Deer Lodge, and with him went "Pork," Jackson, Madison, "Long John," Hatterbaugh, and some others whose names are forgotten. A party of two or three went to Benton and went down the river, among whom was F. B. Owen. Van Etten and Knowlton with their respective parties returned to Salt Lake with large bands of horses. Adams and Hereford went to the "Road" to trade, McArthur and Brooks moved their stock to Hell's Gate Ronde—or as it was commonly called Hell's Gate—and located on the land now owned by J. S. Caldwell. James Holt and the writer still remaining in the employ of McArthur, broke about eight acres of land and sowed to wheat and also planted a garden. This was the first attempt made at farming in the Hell's Gate Ronde. The potatoes, carrots, beets, turnips and onions grew well, but the wheat, while in the milk, was completely killed by a heavy frost on the night of the 14th of August, 1857. McArthur was absent during the entire summer and fall, having went to Colville and thence to the Suswap mines in British Columbia. In those days we did not have our daily papers and telegraphic dispatches containing the latest news from all parts of the globe, but considered ourselves fortunate if we got one or two weekly Oregon papers once in six months; Eastern papers we never saw. The following will show our isolated condition; The Presidential election was held in November, 1856, but we knew nothing of the result until about the middle of April, 1857, when Abram Finlay arrived from Olmypia, with a Government Express for the Indian Department, bringing two or three Oregon papers from which we learned that Buchanan had been elected and inaugurated President. During the summer of 1857 Jas. M. Minesinger, now of this county, came to the Bitter Root valley, having come to the Beaver Head valley the previous fall with John Powell. In the fall of this year Hugh O'Neil and a man named Ramsey, came to Hell's Gate from the Colville mines, on the Columbia river and were employed by Mr. Brooks to put up two buildings with the timber cut the previous winter. These were the first houses put up in the Hell's Gate Ronde. But few events of historical interest occurred from the fall of 1857 to the fall of 1859. During the spring and summer of 1858 an Indian war in the Spokane and lower Nez Perces county cut off all communication with the West, and placed the settlers of this county in a dangerous situation. Congress having made a large appropriation to build a Military Wagon Road from Fort Walla Walla to Fort Benton, placed Lieut. John Mullan in charge of the work. He organized his expedition at the Dallas, Oregon, in the spring of 1858, but was forced to disband it on account of the Indian hostilities. He again organized in the spring of 1859, and constructed the road over the Cœur D'Alene mountains as far as Cantonment Jordan on the St. Regis Borgia, where he went into winter quarters, sending his stock to the Bitter Root valley. During the winter the greater portion of the heavy grades between Frenchtown and the mouth of Cedar creek was constructed. In the spring of 1860 he resumed his march and took his expedition through to Fort Benton, doing but little work, however, between Hell's Gate and Fort Benton.

In 1858 or 59, Baptiste Ducharme and Louis Brown, two old mountain men, located farms and built houses, where they now reside near Frenchtown. Ducharme came from French Prairie, Oregon, and Brown from Colville valley. About 1859 R. A. Pelkey and W. Bills located farms and built houses in the Hell's Gate Ronde, in what is now known as Grass valley. About the same time Angus McLeod and James McIvor settled on "Two creeks." Also about the same time, Capt. Richard Grant, a former officer of the Hudson Bay Co., and for many years a well known trader on the emigrant road, came to the Bitter Root valley, and resided there during the winter, and in the spring of 1860 removed to Hell's Gate, and resided during the summer about two and a half miles below the present town of Missoula, and in the fall of that year built houses and settled on the creek that now bears his name, some four miles north of the town of Missoula. Capt. Grant was the father of Mrs. C. P. Higgins, of Missoula. He, with his eldest daughter, died at Walla Walla in the spring of 1862, while on a visit to that place. His widow, Mrs. Helen Grant, resided at Hell's Gate until her death in 1863. In the spring of 1860, Maj. John Owen, having been appointed Indian agent to succeed Dr. Lansdale, abandoned the old agency at the mouth of the Jocko, and established it at its present site. A large number of men were employed, a farm opened, buildings erected and saw and grist mills built, putting in circulation a large amount of money and making times lively generally.

In June, 1860, Frank L. Worden and C. P. Higgins, under the firm name of Worden & Co., started from Walla Walla with a stock of general merchandise for the purpose of trading at the Indian agency, but upon their arrival at Hell's Gate, they determined to locate at that point, and accordingly built a small log house and opened business. This was the first building erected at that place and formed the nucleus of a small village that was known far and wide as Hell's Gate, and which in later years had the reputation of being one of the roughest places in Montana. The town originally stood upon the tract of land now owned by Clices Lavasseur. During this year 400 U. S. troops under the command of Major Blake passed over the Mullen road from Fort Benton to Fort Walla Walla and Colville. During the fall of this year a number of settlers came into the county, and new farms were taken up at Frenchtown, Hell's Gate, and in Bitter Root valley, and during the winter of 1860–1, a considerable number of men wintered in the different settlements.

In the spring of 1861 Lieutenant Mullan organized another party and started for Fort Benton to finish up the road that he had merely opened the year before. His expedition was accompanied by an escort of one hundred men under command of Lieutenant Marsh. The expedition came as far as the crossing of the Big Blackfoot river, where they erected winter quarters and named them Cantonment Wright, in honor of Colonel, afterward General Wright, who quelled the Indian war of 1858 so effectively. During that winter the heavy grades in the Hell's Gate canyon were constructed. In the fall of 1861, R. A. Pelkey and wife, G. A. Pelkey, wife and child, Mrs. Mineinger and child, Mrs. Queen Pelkey and William Tisson arrived from St. Louis, Mo., and settled at Hell's Gate. The same fall Peter J. Bolte opened a saloon at Hell's Gate, being the first one opened in the country.

The winter of 1861–2 was one of the most severe ever known in the mountains. Prior to this time stock-raisers had never made any preparation to feed their stock, consequently no feed had been put up. The weather was extremely cold and the snow fell deep. In February 1862 a thaw came, and while the snow was soft it turned cold and the snow was frozen perfectly solid, rendering it impossible for stock to move or get feed, and the result was that hundreds of cattle died, as did many horses.

The expedition of Lieutenant Mullan and the building of the Jocko agency brought a large number of men to this county, and a number of them remained and are now prominent citizens of our county, among whom are W. B. S. Higgins, John S. Caldwell, C. C. and D. C. O'Keeffe, E. D. Dukes, John Chatfield, Charles Shaft, and some others whose names the writer has forgotten.

On the fifth day of March, 1862, the first marriage of two white persons in Missoula county was solemnized at Hell's Gate; that of George P. White to Mrs. Josephine Minesinger. The ceremony was performed by Henry Brooks, Justice of the Peace, and who was ever afterward known as "Bishop Brooks." This was probably the first marriage of white persons within the limits of the country now Montana. On the 13th day of February, 1862, at Grass Valley, near Hell's Gate, there was born to R. A. and Adeline Pelkey, a son, who was christened Jefferson Henry Pelkey, and is now residing at Walla Walla. This was the first white child born in Missoula county.

In the fall of 1861 A. S. Blake came here with the intention of prospecting, and in the spring of 1862, in company with "Bud" McAdow, W. B. S. Higgins, Dr. Atkinson, C. P. Higgins and E. D. Dukes went to Gold creek and commenced operations, where a number of the party engaged in mining during the summer of 1862. In the spring of this year Cantonment Wright was broken up, Mullan with his party going to Benton and the escort under Lieutenant Marsh returning to Walla Walla and Colville. During the summer of this year Henry W. Miller and family came from Colorado and settled near Frenchtown, being the first white family in that settlement.

The Kootenai mines having been discovered early in the spring of 1863, hundreds of men flocked to them, passing by the village of Hell's Gate. This stampede created a demand for all kinds of supplies, and everything sold at war prices. In the spring of this year seed wheat sold as high as $10.00 and potatoes at $1.00 per bushel; yeast powders were cheap at $1.50 per box and coffee at $1.00 per pound, and flour of the poorest quality sold readily at $30.00 per hundred pounds and everything else in proportion. In the fall of 1864 the ruling price for wheat was from four to five dollars per bushel. Potatoes from the field sold readily at three dollars per bushel. The currency at this time was principally gold dust. These high prices were caused by the immense number of people who had flocked to the mines of Alder and other gulches on the East Side and by the demand made by the settlers in the Gallatin, Jefferson and Madison valleys for seed grain and potatoes. In November of this year Matt Craft killed a man named Crow, at Hell's Gate. In February, 1865, James Doran killed two men, named —— McLaughlin and William G. Cooke, at the same place. The fight was between Doran and McLaughlin, and Cook was probably shot accidentally.

During the winter of 1864–5 Worden & Co. erected a saw-mill at the place where Missoula now stands, and in the spring of 1865 commenced the erection of a grist-mill and business house, and in the fall of that year moved their store from Hell's Gate to their new building. Other buildings were put up by other parties, and thus was the town of Missoula established, and was at first called Missoula Mills, but eventually the last part of the name was dropped by common consent. The town of Frenchtown was established in 1864, Stevensville the same year and Corvallis about 1868. In December, 1865, Tom Haggerty shot and killed Matt Craft in the town of Missoula. It was a cold-blooded and cowardly murder, but as Craft was a bad, dangerous man and a terror to the whole community, but few were sorry to hear of his death. In the spring of 1866 J. P. Shockley committed suicide at Hell's Gate, and was the last victim who died a violent death at that place.

The following list embraces the names of residents during the winter of 1862–3. It is taken from the Historical Society's Contributions, 1876, and forms, with the names mentioned in this chapter, a full list of the adult inhabitants of that period.

G. P. and Josephine White were married March 5, 1862, at Hell Gate, and were the first white couple ever married within the present limits of Montana.

John Dillingham was killed by Haze Lyon, Buck Stinson and Charley Forbes in July, 1863, being the first man killed at Alder Gulch.

Jeff. Henry Pelky, son of R. A. and Adeline Pelky, was born at Grass Valley, three miles below Hell Gate, January 13, 1862, and is beyond doubt the first white child born within the limits of the present Territory of Montana.

The first settler in Hell Gate valley was Robert Dempsey, who came about 1858 or 1859, soon after the completion of the Mullan road. The first white child born there was William Perryman. The first marriage at Hellgate was that of Charles Carroll, which was followed by that of George P. and Josephine White. The first white woman who settled in Bitter Root valley in 1862 was Mrs. S. Dobbins, wife of George W. Dobbins. Her daughter was the first white child born in the valley in 1862. The first marriage among the Americans was that of Henry Cahn and Elva Johnston.

The First White Woman of Montana.—A writer under the nom de plume of XX, contributed the following reminiscences, in 1880, to the Record: "On a cold evening, in the month of December, of the year 1859, I, a solitary and tired traveler, arrived at the house of Antoine Plant, on the Spokane river, in Washington Territory, and begged the proprietor of the half-breed establishment for a much-needed night's accommodation. The lord of the mansion was a sour-looking breed from the Red river settlements of the North, and I just happened to strike him in one of the moods when it is impossible for those people to comprehend the English language. I could not elicit the slightest intimation from him to make myself at home. In fact he would not speak at all, but stoically sat there, drawing the tobacco smoke from his calumet. Finally he gave a sort of angry growl, pointed to the door with his dirty index finger, and indicated an easterly direction with his head.

I knew that to the east of the ranch was situated the house of "Spokane Garry," at present a chief of the tribe, but in those days looked upon as an unmitigated scoundrel. However, there was no alternative for me except to camp out in the dark or seek the hospitality of a full-blooded and suspicious Indian.

It was only a short mile from one house to the other, and I made the journey in a few minutes. A knock at the door was responded to by its being opened, but instead of meeting the swarthy visage of Garry, I was partially stunned by being confronted with the pleasing countenance of a young white woman, who no sooner perceiving that I was a pale-face traveler, cordially invited me inside and calling her husband from an adjoining room, my immediate wants were soon supplied and I was requested to remain for a week, or longer, if I chose.

This family, whom I found here in the wilderness, consisting only of the man and his wife (but of course accompanied by several servitors), were named Miller. Their conversation showed that they had enjoyed the advantages of good education and society, and on the two days I remained with them I learned that they were Mormons, and had made a journey in the preceding summer from Salt Lake via Deer Lodge valley and Missoula to Walla Walla, to visit some relatives, and that now they were upon the home trip; but dreading to cross the Bitter Root mountains so late in the season, more on account of their animals than themselves, fearing that not sufficient pasturage would be found on a route that had been occupied by a large military expedition all summer—they had come to the conclusion to spend the winter on the Spokane. Garry had cheerfully agreed to rent them his substantially-built log-house for a mere nominal consideration, and they had fixed up things as comfortably as circumstances would permit. Mrs. Miller was a very young woman, a mere girl, and to my eyes she appeared as the handsomest creature I had ever met. This Mormon lady has been credited once or twice, in local prints, as being the first white woman who traveled over the soil of Montana; but she was not the first one. The first one turned out to be the second one I met in this winter's travels, as will be hereafter shown.

Private affairs did not allow me to tarry long with the Millers, and one bright morning I bid them a reluctant adieu to prosecute my lonely journey. By urging my steed I succeeded in reaching Fool's Prairie for the next camp. The sovereign of this part of the country, who appeared to be "lord of all he surveyed," was an octogenarian Canadian, named Francois. He was full of genuine hospitality, and under his direction his juvenile squaw-wife of thirteen, soon had both myself and horse provided with all we needed. On the following day it was my intention to reach the American garrison at Fort Colville, but when upon the point of starting, Francois said in his broken English, "Your cheval is much 'cave in;' you go to a leetle riviere (the Little Pen d'Oreille) and you shall see some maison where you mange, and your cheval eat too, you know!" I determined to follow his advice, but the road was heavy on account of snow, and I made but slow progress, and it was nearly sundown when I reached a cluster of houses. They were occupied by a party of white men employed by the "Boundary Commission," and who were in charge of the government animals belonging to the "Survey." An application for oats was refused. The article was scarce, and they had special instructions not to furnish forage to any one except upon order of Lieutenant Parke. The packmaster in charge of the outfit said that he would accommodate me with lodging and grub, but "I'll be hanged," he said, "if I'll feed your horse." I felt disappointed, for just then I cared more for the animal than myself. My face probably portrayed my feelings, when a good-looking, fair-haired man, with blue eyes, and dressed in a Hudson Bay coat, stepped up and said: "Stranger, I feel for you; you go to my house and you will find accommodations for both yourself and animal; tell them I sent you and they will be glad to see you there." "Where is your place?" I inquired, rather angrily. "Oh, just follow up the creek for a mile," he replied, "and after you cross the bridge, take the first house to the right."

I went, and finding the bridge, led my horse across it, into what appeared to be quite a settlement. A white woman approached, and without any preliminary ceremony, ordered a young half-bred girl to put my horse in the stable, and invited me in the house. Astonished at meeting this other white woman, I tried to stammer forth an apology. "Probably I am mistaken," said I, in regard to the place I wanted to go to. "Oh, no," she answered, "indeed you ain't, this is the place. Did you see anything of my old man?" "I asked her what kind of a man is he?" "Why he is a half-breed," she exclaimed, "you must have met him, for no one else would have sent you here." "The man who sent me here," said I, was no half-breed; he was a blue-eyed fellow with light hair." "That's him," she cried, "that's my old man, and he is a half-breed sure enough, of course he is." I could dispute no further, but while eating a nicely-prepared supper, the lady of the house made the following explanation:

"You deem it strange," she remarked, "to find me way out here, and married to a breed, but for my part I feel contented and happy. I was a young lassie in Scotland, when a lord, taking his lady out to the Selkirk settlements, wished to engage a girl to go out with them as servant maid. I was the only one in the place bold enough to go. We went to Red river; it was a very lonesome place, as we had to stay inside of the stockade most of the time, but I found means to get acquainted with my old man, Tom Brown, and many were the stolen meetings we held in the dark hours of the night. He wanted to marry me, but the lady was opposed to the match, and it was not till after she was dead, and I had been offered a passage home, that I felt independent to do as I pleased, and we were married. I accompanied him here to Colville, and those two girls are my daughters."

The girls referred to showed Indian blood very plainly, although no one would have suspected a drop in the veins of either of the parents. The family emigrated from Red river in 1857, to go to the Colville settlement, and their road took them through the northwestern part of what is now called Montana, and I believe they spent one winter at the Hudson Bay Post on the Pruin' river of the Jocko reservation. Mrs. Tom Brown was undoubtedly the first white woman who passed over any portion of this Territory. She is yet living in Colville valley, and I learned not long since that her oldest daughter Mary was married to a half-breed.

Another white woman I had become acquainted with during the season, was a Mrs. Mary Lowry. Herself and husband attached themselves to the Mullan expedition as cook and servant for the engineers. She spent a portion of the winter of 1859–60 in the cantonment of the Regis Borgia river in Missoula county. Afterward she became well-known in Western Montana. Having parted with her husband at Florence, in Idaho, she associated herself with a noted character named Matt Craft, and returned to this Territory in 1863. In December of 1865, Matt Craft, having made himself obnoxious by desperate bearing, was assassinated in the town of Missoula by a man named Thomas Hagerty. After this Mary, who was rated a good cook and housekeeper, lived in widowhood until 1867, when she was lawfully married to a Mr. Collins; but finally becoming separated from him through incompatibility of temper, she drifted to California, where she is living now. She was born in Scotland, and is now probably fifty years of age. Missoula county has within its limits perhaps the only white women who first came to this Territory for permanent residence. I did not become acquainted with them until several years after their arrival, and cannot just now remember the exact time when they did come, but they must have come to Montana previous to 1860, and have lived here ever since. The parties referred to are Mrs. Pelletier, afterward known as Mrs. La France, and her daughter Josephine, known in the early days as Mrs. Meininger, she having become widowed in crossing the plains by the accidental drowning of her husband. Mrs. P. is now a very old woman; she must be past eighty, but she is yet active and proud of being able to do considerable work. Her daughter, at present known as Mrs. Dukes, is highly respected, and lives in comfortable circumstances in Missoula valley. The last named two ladies are of French descent, and were born in Missouri."

Chronology.—The chronology prepared by Chauncey Barbour in 1879–80 may be said to take up the history where the historian of 1876 left the subject. Mr. Barbour's papers begin with the year 1870, and he continues his careful review of events down to 1879.

1870.—In 1871, when the first paper was published, we find the following named persons in business in various parts of the county: In Missoula—Worden & Co. and Bonner & Co., general merchandise; A. H. Ross, grocer; J. P. Reinhard, hardware; J. B. Buker, druggist; Wm. Stevens and Lent & Stubblefield, hotels; Chas. H. Hayden, stable; McWhirk Brothers and John Wells, saloons; John M. Parker, bootmaker; Wm. J. McCormick, lawyer; J. P. Tiernan and J. B. Buker, doctors; W. G. Edwards, butcher; Chas. Love, barber; C. C. Huntley was running a stage-line from Helena to Cedar Creek; J. W. Winslette was merchandising at Stevensville and Willow Creek; Geo. P. White, merchandising at Hellgate; T. J. Demers and R. A. Eddy & Co., merchandising at Frenchtown; Wiles & Decker were running a saw mille at Frenchtown; Charles Cusson, keeping a hotel at Frenchtown; D. W. Sprankle and Ed. Rafferty were running hotels at Superior, and Edinger & Co. were bankers in Cedar; Buck & Cave, Caplice & Smith, Beaupre Brothers, were the principal merchants in Cedar. W. H. Baker surveyed the town of Missoula September, 1870. Dick Moore was shot by Dave Lyons about October 1. James M. Cavanaugh, Congressional delegate, visited Missoula county in October. Montroy & Drolette advertised their hotel at Louisville. Town of Corvallis was named in October. John Owen was running the Fort Owen mill. C. S. Jones arrived as agent at Jocko in October. Alfred Mahler built the Missoula brewery in 1870. He afterward went to the Black Hills, became rich, and died in Denver in 1879. Christian Martin advertised his wife for desertion in October. Chris. went back to the Fatherland in 1876, where he married. Considerable land in the vicinity of Missoula was filed on in the fall of 1871, and O'Bannon & Woody went into partnership as land lawyers that fall. The October term of court, 1870, was an important one. John Stanley was tried for murder committed at Frenchtown. There was a hung jury in the case, and he afterward escaped. L. P. Williston was then judge of this district. The grand jury failed to find a bill of indictment against Phil DeRouche for the murder of Kelley at Cedar. Phil afterward went down to California, where he died with his boots on. Victor, the famous Flathead chief, died while on a buffalo hunting expedition, that year. Considerable building was done in Missoula during the year. The court-house and jail were commenced. F. L. Worden, C. C. O'Keefe and J. S. Caldwell were county commissioners; Robert A. Pelkey was sheriff; F. H. Woody was county clerk and clerk of district court; T. M. Pomeroy was superintendent of common schools; W. G. Edwards, treasurer; Reeves & Larrivee opened the Western hotel, Frenchtown, with a house-warming dance October 31. Dr. J. A. Nichols was practicing dentistry in Missoula in October. Gilmer & Salisbury bought out Huntley late in the fall. A. H. Ross added drugs to his business in the fall of 1870. A. J. Simmons left Cedar to act as special agent for the Bannacks, and was afterward appointed agent for the Teton Sioux, managed to save something out of his salary and went to California, where he figured as a stock-broker. He is now in the Black Hills. Colonel W. W. Delacey was here in November, looking out passes for the Northern Pacific. A lodge of Good Templars was organized November 22. W. G. Edwards was worthy chief Templar; George A. Baker, secretary; John J. Long, marshal; H. C. Myers, inside guard, and Eugene Lent, outside guard. The Masonic lodge in Missoula had T. M. Pomeroy for W. M., and J. M. Minesinger for secretary. December 15th Missoula had a one hundred dollar billiard match—H. D. Gamble and Ben Levy—Levy winning. Hank Sutton ran a pack-train to Cedar. He married a Miss Patrick, and was living at Phillipsburg at last accounts. John Doyle was shot at Cedar Creek by Charley Melgrem about the middle of December. Doyle got well and was afterward one of the lucky ones in Stickeen. W. J. Stephens, came to Missoula and put out his shingle in the fall of 1870. From advertisements in the latter part of the year, we observe that George Sandy was running a "gin-mill" at Superior; George W. Dobbins, ditto at Stevensville; a man by the name of O. P. Roberts made furniture at Corvallis; Allen McPhail dealt in harness and saddlery in Missoula; Buckley & Adams were keeping a half-way house between Missoula and Stevensville; James Fruin was keeping the Stevensville house; Robinson & Tippe a saloon, Corvallis; H. H. Lyons, a feed-stable, Frenchtown; Harry D. Gamble, a stationery and notion store in Missoula; Chris. Martin, blacksmith, Missoula; W. G. Brown, saloon, Stevensville; Con Murphy and Johnny Manning, saloon, Missoula. In December meetings were held in Missoula to bring an irrigating ditch on the flat south of town. Dr. Tiernan was Agency physician under Major Jones. Late in December Hugh O'Neil shot and killed an Indian he was trying to arrest on the reservation for horse-stealing.

1871.—The streets of Missoula were surveyed and laid off in January. Frank Tudor was up on the Lo Lo mountain ascertaining the depth of snow and other important facts for the Northern Pacific company. Booth & Sheehy opened saloon at Frenchtown. A meteorological register, furnished by J. M. Minesinger, showed the average temperature for January 35 degrees; lowest, 12 degrees; snowfall during the month, 0.75 inches. Well might the ancients in Missoula county blow about their Italian skies! Contract for stone block let by Worden & Co. to J. J. Tasker in January. J. H. Robertson was acting as agent for Gilmer & Salisbury in Missoula. The tax levy for 1871 was 19 mills. W. J. McCormick advertised the Fort Owen property at sheriff's sale in February. Wiles & Decker moved their saw-mill to Missoula. The Missoula and Walla Walla mail was changed to tri-weekly, and petitions were circulated for a tri-weekly from Ryan's to Missoula. Wm. Kennedy opened a restaurant opposite the present Kennedy house. The mean temperature for February was 29.51 degrees; lowest, 4 degrees. The county built two bridges at Frenchtown. Thos. Williams was postmaster at Forrest City. W. J. Grooms was arrested in February for selling liquor to Indians. Missoula was made a money-order post-office in June. Capt. Lyons contracted to build water-works for Missoula in March. Capt. Higgins started for California via Oregon in March. Mart Adams, the county assessor, was performing his official duties in the spring. W. G. Brown and G. W. Dobbins had a shooting-match at each other in February. Both were severely hurt, but recovered. A. S. Blake was mail contractor between Missoula and Gird's Creek. Considerable feeling and neighborhood bitterness grew out of the entry of the town of Missoula in the spring of '71. F. H. Woody resigned as postmaster in March, and Geo. A. Baker was appointed. house and jail completed in spring of '71—cost, $22,600. Joe Pardee constructed large irrigating ditch at head of valley—cost, $5,000. In the spring of '71 the steamer "Mary Moody" was making regular trips on the Pen d'Oreille lake. Reeves & Larrivee dissolved partnership in Western hotel, Frenchtown, in March, Reeves succeeding to the business. The buckhouse bridge was completed April 27. McWhirk & McCune got wire rope for ferry across Missoula river in March. Hog-Eye Mary attempted suicide in Cedar, April 2. W. H. Taylor started an opposition express to Gilmer & Salisbury, and made things lively for a while. Louis McMurtry was district attorney for the 2d judicial district. Entry of Missoula town lots commenced August 6. John Walton and I. G. Abbott opened feed-stable in Frenchtown in April. Sam D. Johns, who had been the quaint local on the Pioneer almost from its first number, left for Corinne in April. It was afterward reported that he was an inmate of an insane asylum in California, and has since died. Buz Caven opened a restaurant in April in a building erected by Wm. McWhirk below the Cottage house. Mormon crickets were troublesome to Grangers that year. An attempt was made that year to transport logs for lumber by the Hellgate river, and catch them in a boom at town; but the boom burst in high water in May, and let the logs proceed to the Columbia. The Democratic convention was called for June 10, and an unusually large number of sovereigns offered themselves for positions as public servants. C. P. Higgins and W. J. McCormick, who had applied to enter lands adjoining the town of Missoula, were summoned in May to appear at the land office in Helena, which decided that patents were to issue to them for the lands claimed. G. W. Windes was running the Burnt Fork grist-mill in '71. J. W. Patrick spent the winter on the Mullan road crossing of the Cœur d'Alenes for the Northern Pacific company, and reported the route practicable for a railroad. During the month of June there was a spirited contest between the political friends of Cavanaugh and Toole for the delegate nomination. Toole got away with Missoula county, and was nominated by the territorial Democratic convention. Court house was dedicated by a way-up ball June 21. T. R. Dana was running a butcher-shop here in '71. J. A. Nichols bargained for the Fort Owen property in the spring of '71. Thos. Newman was keeping the Keystone ranch, thirty miles above Missoula, and one of his children was bitten by a rattlesnake in June, but recovered. In those days the people thought the Northern Pacific was coming right along, and almost every issue of the paper had something concerning it. Elections were then held the first Monday in August. Toole and Claggett were opposing candidates for delegate. Claggett was elected by a majority of 413. The following tickets were in the field in this county: Democratic—John Owen, council; J. C. Robinson, district attorney; A. B. Babcock, probate judge; F. H. Woody, county clerk; W. G. Edwards, treasurer; Wm. Burmeister, assessor; A. W. Sharp, commissioner. People's—J. H. McKee, council; E. J. Stone, treasurer; J. B. Wright, assessor; A. Brunett, county clerk; I. A. Robinson, commissioner; P. M. Pomeroy, probate judge. The entire Democratic ticket, except W. G. Edwards, was elected. W. S. Scribner was post-trader at Jocko Agency in the spring and summer of 1871. During that summer the Peace river stampede took a number of miners from the county. Chaxel & Hirsh located in Missoula as jewelers in June. The bridge across the Missoula, opposite the Sisters' hospital, and one span of the Buckhouse bridge, went out that year. This probably occurred between the 8th and 15th of June—copy of the paper is gone, and there is unfortunately no account of the matter. Rev. T. C. Iliff, Methodist preacher, located in Missoula September 1. Wm. Dickinson was taking pictures in Missoula in July. John Rankin and Wm. Raup were seriously injured by a wad from a cannon that had been carelessly placed in the street on the evening of a political meeting, July 29. Miss Emma Slack, now Dickinson, closed a public school in Missoula the first week in August. Bishop Tuttle visited Missoula August 20—probably his first visit. C. P. Roberts, engineer for the Northern Pacific, arrived in Missoula about the middle of August. The death of Geo. P. White, in August, left Hellgate without a store and post-office, which was soon discontinued. A party of Minnesota fellows, who were following Robinson, "the bilk," reached here in August. Gov. Potts, Indian Superintendent Viall, and Claggett arrived in Missoula August 26, to see what steps were necessary to be taken for removal of Flatheads from the Bitter Root valley. Rev. E. G. Frazier arrived in Missoula November 1, in the interest of the M. E. South church. October 31 the county advertised to bond $20,000 of its indebtedness. This was the first step in the financial disaster that has since overtaken Missoula county. D. J. Welch settled in Missoula and commenced business in October. There was some dispute when officers qualified in November whether O'Keefe or Worden should go out of the board of county commissioners; but it was agreed to submit the matter to Judge Knowles, who decided for Worden. Bonner & Welch dissolved in fall of 1871. The stone block in Missoula was occupied in November. The machinery for the Agency flouring and saw-mills passed through Missoula in November. There was some very cold weather in the latter part of November, the thermometer registering 30 degrees President declared Bitter Root valley not a reservation, and open for settlement.

1872.—At the commencement of this year the "Bitter Root Direct" war commenced. It seems that some of the Missoula folks turned up their noses at the project, and some of the Bitter Rooters got hot. Only a small part of the road from Stevensville to Philipsburg was ever built. Proposals to construct the present bridge across the Missoula river invited in January. Louis Caro was drowned by the breaking of the ferry rope, and allowing the boat to capsize, in Missoula river, May 17. T. R. Dana took charge of the Stevens House May 16. The Methodist church building commenced in May. Northern Pacific railroad plats filed April 22, and lands withdrawn from market. J. B. Bailey, who had been running the St. Charles Hotel, left in June, and was succeeded by Wm. Kennedy. A. H. Ross was drowned in Clarke's Fork, near Moose Creek ferry, about July 8. He went in a boat down the river with a party of N. P. explorers, and the boat was swamped in the rapids at the place where he was drowned. Henke & McFarland succeeded to his business. In August, General Garfield, President-elect of the United States, visited Missoula county, and made what purported to be a treaty with the Flatheads of the Bitter Root, for their removal. The following named officers were elected at the August election that year: Martin Maginnis, delegate; W. E. Bass, council; James Kennedy and C. C. O'Keefe, house; J. E. Marion, sheriff; Richard Childs, probate judge; John Caplice, commissioner; Thos. Bass, superintendent of common schools. A former legislature had provided for election of assessors by districts. The following named were elected: 1st district, T. M. Gray; 2d district, Daniel Woodman; 3d district, Moses Clemens. The entire democratic ticket was elected except Daniel Woodman. Diamond fields of South Africa took off some of our miners during the summer. R. A. Pelkey resigned the position of sheriff, and W. G. Edwards was appointed by the board for the unexpired term. I. A. Robinson sub-contracted the mail route to Cedar, in August. Jake Leiser established himself in business in Missoula some time during the spring. Hiram Knowles confirmed as judge December 12. The first of the subsidy schemes of the territory made its appearance late in the season of 1872. Seth Bullock came from Helena to Missoula, and industriously circulated a petition for aid to a north and south road.

1873.—An extra session of the legislature was called for April 14, and our members of parliament went up to Virginia City, at that time the capital. The files of April and May are so broken that it is impossible to tell exactly what was done at that session; although we are sure that no subsidy bill was passed. Daniel Shanahan was appointed Indian agent at the Jocko reservation, early in the year 1873, and with him came our J. G. Dooley, who took the position of post trader, which he held long after Mr. Shanahan had returned to Washington. The present Missoula bridge was completed in the spring of 1873, and shortly after it was thrown open for use there was serious apprehension that it would go out during the unusual high water about the middle of June that year. It was only saved by throwing several tons of rock about one of the abutments. At the election in August that year, the following tickets were in the field: Democratic—A. E. Mayhew, district attorney; L. R. Maillet, joint councilman; W. G. Edwards, treasurer; F. H. Woody, county clerk; M. M. McCauley, commissioner. Republican—Charles Cooper, joint councilman; W. R. Turk, treasurer; A. G. England, commissioner. The entire democratic ticket was elected, with the exception of Charles Cooper, candidate for joint councilman, who being a Deer Lodge man in a heavier voting county got away with the most votes. McCauley succeeded Worden on the board of commissioners, and A. W. Sharpe resigning, Robert Linder was appointed, making the board stand for the ensuing year, Caplice, McCauley and Linder. Jay Cooke failed September 19, 1873, and with his failure faded the prospects of the Northern Pacific in this region. In August a rich point of bar diggings was found in Trout creek, which for a long time stimulated a pretty extensive hunt for more of it in the bed of the creek. Rev. J. B. Catlin, of M. E. South, located in Bitter Root in fall of 1873. Abram Whitson, miner from Cedar creek, was found on Dead Man's island, a mile below town, in October. It was supposed that he left his bed at the hotel and jumped in the river. His was the fourth or fifth corpse found on that island. Jim Gash and Pete Matte were arrested in October for the murder of a man named Goodwin, on Snake river. Matte made a full confession. Jim Gash escaped from jail November 16. He had been visited the evening of his escape by his brother, Ad. Gash, and as he was in the hall of the jail previous to being locked up, he commenced firing at Sheriff Marion, inflicting a wound in the arm from which he has never fully recovered. The question of making free roads throughout the county came up late in the year. The commissioners advertised for proposals to bridge Big Blackfoot, and make grades in places where toll roads then were, which led to negotiations by which the Big Blackfoot bridge and Newman's and Marshall's grade were bought.

1874.—The French Guiana stampede took off some of the miners from this region early in 1874. The I. O. of O. F. was established in Missoula. The Missoula bank was established. Daniel Shanahan resigned as agent of Jocko reservation in the spring, and Peter Whaley was appointed. Granges established in the valley. W. E. Bass was first master of the Stevensville grange, and Elijah Chaffin of the Corvallis grange. The blowhards of Missoula organized a brass band, but it does not appear to have been in full blast until the next season. Jimmy Osborne was buried by a falling stable, in June, and miraculously escaped with his life. Martin Maginnis was running against Judge Hedges that year for delegate, and got away with it by 603 majority. The following tickets were in the field that year: Democratic—Wm. Graham, joint councilman; Alfred Cave, Thomas Bass, and C. C. O'Keeffe, representatives; F. H. Woody, probate judge; John Miller, sheriff; J. S. Robertson, commissioner; J. B. Buker, superintendent common schools: assessors, 1st, T. M. Gray; 2d, Geo. Allis; 3d, C. W. Berry; 4th, J. K. Clarke. Republican—J. M. Merrill, joint councilman; F. L. Worden, J. B. Catlin, and Walter Clark, representatives; Dwight Harding, sheriff; assessors, 1st, G. B. Hartman; 2d, Daniel Woodman; 3d, Wm. Eaton; 4th, V. H. Coombs. The entire democratic ticket was elected, with the exception of Worden beating O'Keeffe for the legislature, and Woodman beating Allis for assessor. Perhaps the most important question, for their own welfare, the people of Missoula county were ever called upon for a decision at the ballot-box was the capital removal question. By supporting Helena, they brought the political center of the territory nearer to them, and raised up political friends that have been advantageous to them ever since. The county gave 151 majority for Helena. Hugh Duncan succeeded Iliff as M. E. preacher for this circuit. The Stevensville bridge was contracted for in October, and completed during the following winter. T. J. Curtis was a M. E. South preacher in the valley. Nine Mile was discovered in October, and a stampede broke out in November. The Fair association was organized in November. John Hammer and Charley Alard got caught on the Lo Lo trail with a band of horses, in November, and barely escaped with their lives. Rev. W. A. Hall located in Bitter Root valley.

1875.—The winter of 1874–5 was an unusually severe one, and considerable stock perished. The question of subsidy was agitated considerably throughout the Territory that year, and our Mr. McCormick went up as a delegate to a railroad convention held in Helena in April. The sentiment of whatever aid might be given, seemed to favor the Northern Pacific. The following tickets were in the field that year: Democratic—A. E. Mayhew, district attorney; W. E. Bass, council; W. J. McCormick, representative; T. J. Demers, commissioner; G. A. Wolf, treasurer; F. H. Woody, county clerk. Republican—L. C. Elliott, council; J. R. Latimer, representative; I. A. Robinson, commissioner; C. B. Mahony, treasurer; A. Buker, county clerk. The entire Democratic ticket was elected. An election to fill vacancy for assessor 1st district, resulted in the election of Samuel Gray, Republican, over M. D. Fulkerson, Democrat. Henry Larrivee was killed in felling a tree July 6, at Nine Mile. A suit against the Stevensville town site by G. W. Dobbins was decided in favor of the town site by the General Land office. Emigrant grasshoppers made their appearance in Missoula August 13, and destroyed all the gardens hereabouts. They did not enter Bitter Root valley that year, but deposited their eggs in the foot-hills between Missoula and Frenchtown. Charles S. Medary appointed agent, vice Peter Whaley removed. T. J.

Demers commenced his Frenchtown mill. Jack Allen was killed by an Indian above Flathead lake in September, and some apprehensions were felt of a general Indian outbreak. A prospecting expedition was formed late in the fall to search for diggings on Fish creek. Maurice Block was shot through the lungs by Ed. Connors at Corvallis in December. Block recovered; Connors escaped. Dixson opened a factory for putting up canned goods in the fall.

1876.—The remains of Barney Langenhan, who was killed by a cave in a drift at Bear gulch, were brought here for burial in January. General Wesley Merrit, who was specially detailed to investigate the needs of the people of Missoula county for military protection, arrived in Missoula in January. The legislature passed subsidy acts giving $3,000,000 to the Northern Pacific and $1,150,000 to the Utah and Northern. Fortunately for the people of the territory the Utah and Northern was about changing owners, and the subsidy going into the pockets of the original bankrupt owners would put them on their feet again, which the Union Pacific directors did not care to see; so that subsidy was declined with thanks. The election on the Northern Pacific subsidy proposition was beaten in the territory by about 200 majority, of which Missoula county gave 150 majority against; so this county can claim three-fourths of the credit of defeating it. The commissioners let a contract for a wagon road up east side of Bitter Root to Mosier and Slocum; but when it was ascertained that payment was to be made in depreciated scrip, the contractors declined. Black Hills excitement that spring took away a large number of our miners. Peter Deery, while engaged in cutting driftwood from one of the piers of the bridge, fell into the river and was drowned May 24. The high water of that year was nearly up to the '73 mark. The grand jury at the June term of court indicted a number of persons of both sexes for living together without first having some remarks made by a priest or civil officer. Innumerable young grasshoppers hatched out and did considerable damage to the ranches between Missoula and Frenchtown; when old enough, they flew into Bitter Root valley and cleaned up several ranches in that classic locality. The Custer massacre occurred June 25, and the news reached here July 3; but the Indians knew of it before the telegraph had brought the news. The Centennial Fourth was appropriately commemorated in various parts of the country. The first fair in Missoula county was held September 13. The elections that year for the first time were held on the "Tuesday after the first Monday in November," congress having passed a law requiring delegates to be elected on that day. The candidates for delegate were Martin Maginnis and E. D. Leavitt. F. L. Worden and E. B. Waterbury were candidates for joint councilmen. Waterbury was elected. The following county tickets were in the field: Democratic—W. J. McCormick, F. C. Ives, J. A. Dixon, representatives; David Austin, Joseph Pardee, commissioners; M. M. Droulliard, sheriff, F. H. Woody, probate judge; J. S. Booth, assessor; M. D. Fulkerson, superintendent of common schools. People's—A. J. Urlin, John J. Long, C. B. Perry, representatives; Alfred Cave, Samuel Gray, commissioners; Dwight Harding, sheriff; Daniel Woodman, assessor; W. A. Hall, superintendent of common schools. The entire Democratic ticket was elected, except Booth, assessor, and Fulkerson, superintendent of common schools. At the November term of court an important suit, to test the validity of the redemption fund act, was decided in favor of the county.

1877.—Agent Medary, having some trouble with the Indian chiefs, who he alleged threatened to put him off the reservation, called for a detachment of troops, which came under Lieutenants Scofield and Fuller. The danger was probably magnified, and Agent Medary, in his zeal to assist the people of this region to a military post, may have gone beyond what was really necessary; but the fact remains that Charles S. Medary did more to hasten the establishment of a military post in Missoula county than any official ever located here. A fire company was organized early in the year. It probably saved the town of Missoula from a general conflagration from a fire which afterward originated in the Kennedy house; but its hooks and ladders are scattered, and its buckets long since kicked some other bucket. The legislature convened January 8, and at that session was passed a special law for Missoula county, for which the writer hereof has been censured without stint. The year preceding the passage of that law the county expended $20,025.05, and on years preceding that over $24,000 and $17,000. The year following the passage of the law the current expenses of the county were $3,625. Not a dollar of interest has been allowed against the county on any warrant drawn since the passage of that act. The many-mouthed multitude, too, have found fault because they were required to perform some duties as citizens without promises of reward. They sold their warrants before the passage of the act for thirty cents on the dollar; after it, for nearly par; so that they really got more in cash for their services than they did before. But human nature is unfortunately so constituted that many prefer to do business as it was done in the south before the war closed, when it took a hat full of confederate scrip to buy a meal of victuals. The legislature passed a $1,700,000 subsidy for the Utah and Northern, which that company, fortunately for us, declined. In one of the most eventful years of the history of this county—from April, 1877, to April, 1878—the files of the Missoulian are unfortunately lost. Some time in June of that year Captains Rawn and Logan reached here with their companies, and commenced the erection of Fort Missoula. The Nez Perces passed Rawn's entrenchments on the Lo Lo in the latter part of July and passed through Bitter Root valley. The battle of Big Hole was fought August 9. During the winter there was considerable excitement from extensive horse stealings. Pete Matte was lynched by the outraged and excited Bitter Rooters. Revs. Stewart and Cook located in Missoula some time that year. Major P. Ronan was appointed agent at the Jocko during the year.

1878.—Wm. Brown was arrested some time in the spring for horse-stealing, and broke jail May 28. Sister Victor left for Canada in May. Court convened June 25 and found indictments against M. M. Drouillard, sheriff, and James Thompson, under-sheriff, for criminal negligence in the escape of Brown. Thompson went over to the reservation the first week of court, on court business, and there died from congestion of the brain. Ranches taken up on flat south of town in the summer. July 10, a straggling band of returning Nez Perces murdered Lynch and Myers at Deep Gulch, and on the 12th murdered some miners on Rock creek. They then crossed into Bitter Root valley, and made their appearance at Sleeping Child on the 17th, driving off Jerry Fahey's pack-train. They went on to Doolittle's, where they shot a man in the arm. Lieutenant Wallace, then in the valley with a squad of fifteen men, pursued them, along with some forty-five citizens, to the crossing of the Clearwater on the Elk city trail, and recovered most of the stolen stock. A total eclipse of the sun occurred July 29. Wallace mining district struck about that time. Wagner's house burned July 11. At the election in 1878, Martin Maginnis and Sample Orr were candidates for delegate. Maginnis was elected. Fair was held October 11, during cold, raw, drizzling weather. November 15, Felicite Sanchez killed Kelly, was afterward tried, and sentenced to three years in the penitentiary. Sheriff Drouillard tried for criminal negligence for escape of Brown, and acquitted. Phil Lynch dropped dead in jury-room. Lieutenant Wallace perished while out hunting December 8, and found week afterward near Bedard's house. M. M. Drouillard shot by his wife December 15, and died the same night.

1879.—Fair association reorganized. Legislature met second Monday in January, and spent most of its time on railroads. Our house members on their return had a neat little set-to concerning failure of beneficial legislation for Missoula county. County Clerk Woody made a statement for benefit of legislature about February 1, that the debt of Missoula county was $132,891.92. A big snowstorm and blizzard occurred February 9, and the legislature convened at the Capitol in extra session July 4. The main business at that session was railroad and Missoula county bill, neither of which passed.

The events characterizing the years 1880-1-2 and 1883 are noticed in the general history, and referred to in the sketches of the settlements of the county. The first settlements of the county were St. Marys, St. Ignatius, Fort Owen, Hell Gate, and Missoula mills. Corvallis, Stevensville, Horse Plains, O'Keefe Canon and Ashleyville are of a later date; while later still the railroad towns of 1882-3 mark the advance of settlement.

MISSOULA.

It has been shown that the first settlers in Missoula county were the Jesuit Fathers, the pioneer of whom was Father DeSmet, who came out in 1841. The following year the first actual settlement by whites took place in the founding of St. Mary's Mission in the Bitter Root valley. The first farming was done in 1842, the Fathers of the Mission raising potatoes and wheat, and a little later they built their first saw and grist mills. For a period of twenty-two years the site of the present town of Missoula was known to them and indeed to all the travelers and Indians between the valleys of St. Mary and Gallatin. In the winter of 1864–5 Frank L. Worden & Co. realized the advantages of the locality for trade and there erected their saw-mill. In April and May, 1865, their grist-mill was built, and in the fall of 1865 the firm moved their goods and store fixtures to their new trading post at Missoula Mills. The county seat was located there the following year, and the progress of the settlement actually entered upon. Captain Mills, who visited the village in September, 1869, gives the following description in his Clover Leaves:

Hell Gate Canon is a horrid name, and yet as picturesque and lovely a nook as there is in the mountains. It is not more than a half mile in length, an eighth wide, and the smooth road sweeps through it on a Broadway grade. From time immemorial, however, the northwestern Indians have regarded it with a dread but little less than the Sioux have for the Yellowstone canon—through which they have not passed for fifty years. On their annual trips to the southeast for buffalo, the Pen d'Oreilles, Flatheads, Kootenais, Nez Perces and others, must enter and go through this dreaded canon, as they leave the broad, open, Missoula valley, and here were ever waiting the Blackfeet, Piegans, or Bloods to give them fierce battle and steal their horses. In the latter event they were set afoot on the eve of the hunt and in the enemies' country, without opportunity to procure other horses. Here lurked in these fastnesses their enemies, the evil spirits in their path, and they gave it the name, which is liberally but expressively translated into the sulphuric sobriquet—Hell Gate. But if it is Hell Gate one way it opens abruptly into an Eden the other—the extensive, beautiful, productive valley of Missoula county, land of the vine and the leaf, of flowers and fruits, and golden grain. First settled—in 1841—yet polling but 266 votes in 1869, the senior county of Montana, yet least populous, most remote from the center of trade, and youngest in development; with farms in it tilled when it was a part of Oregon, then Washington, then Idaho and now Montana territory; the warm, rich, well-watered soil yielding its harvests plentifully—the very garden of all Montana—yet having in 1869 only 153 farmers with 22,280 acres of land under cultivation, while the Bitter Root valley alone has ten times that amount of arable lands, where every grain and fruit that the northern tier of states produce, can be grown plentifully and profitably. This anomalous condition of affairs is owing wholly to its remoteness from the mines, the Reservation of the Jaco and the retention of the Bitter Root valley as a possible reservation for the Indians. No county in Montana is superior to Missoula save in minerals. In warmth, moisture, timber, pasturage and productiveness, it excels. The building of a railroad will give a wonderful impetus to farming in Missoula.

Missoula City is located well, on a level stretch of gravelly table land edging on the river, at the mouth of Hell Gate canon—the only exit from the Missoula valley to the mines and other counties of Montana, and is on the line of the projected railroad. There are about fifty dwellings in the town; one flouring mill; two wholesale stores with large and well assorted stocks, owned respectively by Messrs. Bonner & Welch and Worden & Higgins; two large and good hotels, one kept by "Uncle Billy" Stevens, the other by Y. R. Dana; two blacksmith shops, in one of which R. B. Campbell plays the anvil chorus; two livery stables, one of which is well conducted by Charley Hayden; one billiard room, etc., etc. The building used as a court house is owned by Major McCormick, and although a good one is too remote for convenience. We trust the "Court" will soon be adjourned to his new house, now approaching completion, and which will be the best dwelling on the west side of Montana. The Masons have a large and excellent lodge room, comfortably and tastefully furnished, over Worden & Co.'s store. The lodge of which Dr. J. B. Bucker is the W. M., is working harmoniously, although the membership is small and several of the brothers ride twenty and thirty miles to attend. The great feature of the town is the flouring and saw mill of Worden & Co. It was finished in November, 1866; is 40x40 feet, 3 stories high and has two run of stones, with all the machinery requisite to hoisting, cleaning and packing in most convenient shape and best workmanship. The quality of flour made is unexcelled, if equaled, in Montana. The saw-mill has a capacity of 2,000 feet per day; the flouring mill, a capacity of 400 sacks in twenty-four hours. The cash cost of the concern was $30,000. It has ground, of the wheat crop of 1866, 10,000 bushels; of 1867, 15,000; of 1868, 20,000. There are now in the mill over 2,000 bushels of grain, and this year's crop is just coming in. The mill will grind over 20,000 bushels of grain this year. The postoffice is an amazing institution for a town of that size. In the absence of Mr. Pomeroy, P. M., it is presided over by "Old Stone" and Petroleum V. Nasby, jr. They have a delivery system only equaled by Chicago, and it costs Uncle Sam "nary a cent." It is principally a labor of love, the salary of the office amounting to $12.50 per year, and the work of the office is worth that much per week. The only perquisites are an occasional stray copy of the New North-west, which is considered ample. "Frank" and "Mack" are entitled to the gratitude of the public, and newspaper men particularly, for the mails but seldom go astray from the Missoula office.

The act to incorporate the city of Missoula as approved March 12, 1885, provide that the name be changed from the Town of Missoula to that of the City of Missoula. The boundaries of the new city are as follows:—"Commencing at the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of section 21, township 13 north, range 19 west, running thence north 80 rods; thence east 320 rods; thence south 80 rods; thence east 160 rods; thence south 320 rods, more or less, to the middle of the channel of Hell Gate river; thence down the middle of the channel of said Hell Gate river to the head of the so-called Big Island; thence down the middle of the south channel of said river, to a point due south of the place of beginning; thence north to the beginning."

The business circle of the city is made up as follows:—

The Montana Improvement Company had seven sawmills in active operation—one each at Weeksville, Eddy Siding, Mill City, Ravalle Creek, and three others at various points above Missoula, in the Hell Gate Canon, in August, 1883. The company placed one of the largest of their mills in close proximity to Missoula, and extended their business from the Cœur D'Alenes to Glendive in the east and Dillon in the south.

The ground for the new railroad roundhouse and machine shops at Missoula was staked out in May, 1885. The roundhouse will contain fifteen stalls; the shop building will be 200 x 62 feet, and the warehouse 132 x 31 feet in dimensions. Other improvements between the old town and the railroad depot are projected. The Northern Pacific Elevator Company are to erect a grain elevator at Missoula this year. The building will be 80 x 30 feet in size and about 50 feet high. Elevators of the same capacity, 50,000 bushels, are to be erected at Spokane Falls and Cheney.

The Missoula fire of September 2, 1884, destroyed 22 buildings. The total loss is $30,000, with insurance of $15,000. Worden & Co. lose eight buildings, valued at $13,000, including the First National Bank building. The contents of the bank vault was uninjured. The fire started in Leber's bowling alley, and is supposed to have been of incendiary origin. Another attempt to burn Missoula was made the same night. A pile of oil-soaked kindling ignited in a stable near the burned district, was extinguished without damage. A strong force of extra police patrolled the town for some time. This sweeping away of old landmarks of trade has been more than compensated for by the erection of the pretentious buildings, which mark the progress of the city. One of the illustrations in this work is a view of the old Worden block.

Bank.—The Missoula National Bank was organized April 5, 1873, with C. P. Higgins, president, and Ferd. Hewett, cashier. In March, 1882, the capital stock was increased to $75,000, and on September 1, 1882, to $100,000. The surplus fund is now $20,000, and the undivided profits $30,000. The president and cashier, who were elected in 1873, still hold office. September 9, 1882, A. B. Hammond was elected vice-president, and G. A. Wolf, assistant cashier. The directors are C. P. Higgins, A. B. Hammond, A. G. England, F. L. Worden, Ferd. Hewett and S. T. Hauser. The bank was opened July 8, 1873, in rear of Worden & Co's. store. In 1881–2 the present bank building was erected, and opened in March, 1882. This building is fire-proof and altogether forms one of the most complete banks in the mountain region. The business of the company for the six months ending December 31, 1882, amounted to $5,000,000.

Schools.—The schools and churches are noticed in the chapters of the general history so also are the newspapers.

Societies.—The Masonic circle, known as Missoula Lodge, No. 13, was chartered October 7, 1868. The officers and members of this lodge according to the last report are Samuel Bellew, George D. Belt, David Austin, Stephen C. Travis, George B. Hartman, Patrick McLaughlin, Thomas M. Pomeroy, P. M. (deceased); Christopher P. Higgins, P. M.; F. H. Woody, P. M.; William E. Boss, Hugh T. Cavanaugh, Richard A. Eddy, Thomas W. Flowers, Elbert E. Farman, 2d; B. W. Harris, Levi F. Keirn, Reuben J. Latimer, Robt. W. Martin, Alex. Mitchell, J. B. Mitchell, Sam'l F. Mitchell, M. M. McCauley, Robt. Nelson, J. S. Robertson, J. L. Sloane, W. R. Sparks, Oliver Talburt, J. W. Winslett, J. R. Wright. Union Lodge, No. 3, A. O. U. W., at Missoula, claims a large membership. The I. O. G. T. was one of the leading organizations of early days. Missoula Lodge, No. 24, was organized by Thomas E. Clohecy, November 21, 1870, with thirty-eight members. J. B. Baker was elected L.D. Lodge, No. 34, was organized by W. W. Alderson, in November, 1872. Charter forfeited 1874. Lodge No. 17, now in existence, is in good condition. Covenant Lodge, No. 6, I. O. O. F., Missoula, was founded February 19, 1875, by Joseph A. Hyde, G. M. The members in June, 1883, were Byron C. Benson, N. G.; Andrew W. Swanly, V. G.; Tetus D. Russ, secretary; Andrew Logan, treasurer; W. E. Bancroft, S. Bellew, Joseph, G. Booth, G. D. Belt, William Case, V. D. Clark, W. W. Carpenter, W. H. H. Dickinson, F. Dievman, G. Dickson, R. A. Eddy, J. Ferdeline, Peter Hanlon, E. A. Kenney, F. P. Kern, F. M. Kun, H. Kohn, J. S. Leiser, J. J. Long, J. A. Leopold, H. C. Myers, J. P. McLean, F. A. McLean, C. Otto. D. Pattee, M. S. Quist, T. P. Quilter, J. Rankin, T. D. Reese, W. Sparenberg, J. P. Smith, J. Savage, E. Sherwood, E. Verue, Israel Vail, T. H. Woody, Daniel Woodman, George A. Wolfe, O. F. Wingett and David Zeigler. Encampment No. 5, was organized in 1883.

Churches.—So much has been written in the general history respecting the churches at Missoula, little remains to be said here on the subject. The church of St. Francis Xavier is presided over by Rev. J. Menetrey, S. J., with Rev. A. M. Folchi, S. J., assistant priest. The Protestant Episcopal Church of the Holy Spirit is in charge of Rev. George Stewart; Rev. D. McGregor is pastor of the Baptist Church; Rev. W. A. Shannon of the Presbyterian; Elder W. D. Lear of the Disciples, and Rev. George M. Fisher of the Presbyterian.

When Dr. Sheldon Jackson organized the Presbyterian church at Missoula, in 1872, he induced a freighter named Cunningham, who was in the village only one night, to act the part of Ruling Elder on the occasion, and this done the temporary Elder left the town never again to be identified with the church which he was appointed to rule.

STEVENSVILLE AND VICINITY.

In the chapters of the general history devoted to Settlement and Occupation, Fur Traders, Forts and Churches, the early history of this district is very fully treated. Again in the history of the county, the reminiscences of F. H. Woody and the journalistic sketch by Chauncey Barbour, contain the minutiæ of its history. Stevensville is located on the eastern side of the Bitter Root river, thirty miles south of Missoula. It is situated in the center of one of the richest agricultural districts in the Territory, and is named in honor of Governor Stevens. Its present population is rated at eight hundred. In April, 1884, the people completed an elegant two-story frame school-house, which speaks loudly in favor of western progressiveness. They have also two frame churches, and the old mission church, which is a combination of dressed timber, adobe and frame. This was called Father Ravalli's church. Many old Indians, with their entire lodges, reaching into Oregon and Washington Territory, were accustomed to make frequent pilgrimages to the bedside of their good old friend. Captain Mills, when a visitor to Fort Owen in September, 1869, noted carefully all that which he observed, and contributed the following descriptions to his journal:

Thirty miles south of Missoula comes purling and bubbling from its cold fountains in the Bitter Root Mountains a limpid little stream, diving into nooks shaded by dense woods and anon gliding out into grassy glades and sunshine. Sixty-four years ago two captains of the United States Service, with a little escort, had crossed the continent through savage wilds, and returning here, just where we cross it, they camped for the winter, and named the stream Travelers' Rest. Here they separated in the spring into two commands, journeyed hundreds of miles apart, and met at the mouth of the Yellowstone. What they called Travelers' Rest is now known as Lo Lo Fork, the Indian name having been adopted by the Hudson Bay Company employes. This is the northern boundary of the Reserved Lands, and all the good land there is in the Bitter Root valley, lies southward of it. A solitary tumble down, tenantless cabin, and a rail fence in the last stages of decrepitude, alone totter as pitiable evidences of departed humanity. A few miles above, the settlements begin. There are considerable arable lands, numerous irrigating streams, and an inexhaustible forest of splendid pine timber along the valley eighteen miles to Stevensville, St. Mary's Mission and Fort Owen. We believe it was in 1847–8 that a force of United States soldiers crossed to the Pacific coast. A portion of it was the Rifle Regiment, and accompanying them as sutler was John Owen, of Weston, Mo. They wintered in Cache valley, near Salt Lake, and during the winter his stock perished, with hundreds of others. The command moved west in the spring; he sent a couple of teams loaded with officers' stores with the command, and remaining behind with a few employes, guarded his stores, and finally, securing transportation, packed his goods and steered due north until he reached the Burnt Fork in Bitter Root valley, then a great rendezvous for Indians, and in which no body of white men had been since Lewis and Clarke had wintered there forty-five years before. Here he established a trading post, and in 1850 began building a palisade fort, which stood until 1857. At this time, the Indians having murdered one of the employes and torn down a portion of the palisades, the remainder were taken down and the present structure, yet in good condition, was begun. The fort covers an area of 125 x 250 feet, is built of adobes, the walls eighteen feet high and two feet thick, with ponderous gates at the north and south ends. High bastions, twenty-seven inches thick, portholed for musketry, flanking the fort, and commanding all approaches, stand at each corner. Within are quarters capable of accommodating 150 men, shops, well, armory, and all fixtures and appurtenances of a well regulated garrison, including flag-staffs, parade ground, a six pounder howitzer, and broken bottles. It stands some two hundred yards from the river, on the bank of which is the flouring mill. The second mill (other than that at the mission) was built here by Major Owen in 1856. The ironwork was all made from wagon tire and such old iron as could be obtained around the old Mormon settlement on Salmon river. The stones were made from granite found in a canyon near at hand. It was a rude affair, but answered the purpose until 1865, when machinery was brought from St. Louis, and an excellent three-story frame, 30 x 40 feet, erected on its site. The mill—the only one in the valley proper—cost $15,000, does good work, and is kept busy. The books are an oddity, nearly the half of the entries being to Indian names, and about the mill are their grists, in curious, rare-colored pokes and sacks, of a pattern not yet standard on the Corn Exchange. "The Patriarch of the Valley" is one title applied to Major John Owen, and it is well bestowed. He looks the patriarch and is. His religion is hospitality, generosity, good will. His creed: "If thy neighbor ask thee for thy coat, give him thy cloak; if he smite thee on thy cheek, fight him." For twenty years he has kept open doors, entertaining with right good welcome and unceasing kindness. Stevensville is a busy little village of twenty houses and 100 people, is situate a few hundred yards south of Fort Owen. There are two very good stores, one owned by J. W. Winslit, the other by T. B. Rollins, who is also completing a hotel; a blacksmith shop and butcher shop, a billiard saloon by Messrs. Reeves & Dobbins, etc., etc. The people have prudent anticipations of the town. It will be sustained only as a farmer's town, growing slowly, but holds its grip. Just near Stevensville is St. Mary's Mission. There is a neat chapel, a log building, surmounted by a belfry, and that again by the emblem of the Catholic faith. Attached to it is the dwelling of the fathers, and close by, a few outbuildings and Indian tepees. Here Father Giorda, in charge, attends to the spiritual, and Father Lavalli, who came in 1844, more particularly to the temporal welfare of their charge, consisting of the Catholic white residents and the Blackfeet tribe of Indians, for whom the Mission was established many years ago. Father Ravalli is the Good Samaritan of northwest Montana. Here he has a miniature drug store, and in summer's sun and winter's storm no journey is too long or dangerous, nor labor too arduous, when rich or poor, white or Indian, of any creed, needs the ministrations of religion or surgery—and they are rendered without money and without price. A school for Indians was once established, but it was not a success, and it was abandoned for a short time. Father Giorda, who keeps a register of births, etc., among the Blackfeet, computes their number at 600, cultivating about fifty farms.

The village was located in 1864, and the first store opened by Honk & Johnson. The town-site entered consisted of 80 acres. Lots 42x100, streets 100 feet wide N. and S. and 80 feet wide E. and W. Alleys 40. Eight lots were reserved for school-grounds, and two lots were purchased to be added to this reservation. The site was re-surveyed and platted in 1879 by Frank H. Woody, then probate judge, under the U. S. law, which provided that the lots thus laid off should be sold for $14 each, the net proceeds to be granted to the school fund. From this source the sum of $1,500 has been transferred to the school fund of district No. 2. This sum, with the powers granted by the legislature of 1882–3 to borrow

The business men of Stevensville are named as follows: Fred. Buck & Bros., Hammond & Co., general merchants; L. Solomon, seed dealer; Wells & Smally, druggists; Callin & Harris, hotel; J. W. Winslett, meat market; Mary Winslett, milliner; McClaren & Delzel and Chapman & Baggs, blacksmiths; A. Baker, saloon; Joseph Barnett, harness; E. J. Hills & Co. and McCormick & Griff, flouring mills; F. C. Ives, saw-mill; Fred. Buck, postmaster.

Churches.—The society of the Methodist Episcopal Church South erected a church building in 1881–2. This society was organized for the first time in Bitter Root valley during the winter of 1871–2, with Rev. G. O. Helton pastor. This gentleman was killed by a falling tree in January, 1872. The present pastor, Rev. E. J. Stanley, is also Presiding Elder of Butte district. In this district there are 100 members. In Stevensville circuit, including Victor, Etna, Corvallis, Skalkaho, and Stevensville, there are 60 members. The Presbyterian church is in charge of Rev. E. M. Ellis. The church of St. Mary, referred to in the chapter on churches, has a large congregation, presided over by Rev. J. D'Aste, S. J. The Methodist Episcopal society, organized here recently, is presided over by Rev. W. M. Milling.

Garden Valley Lodge, No. 14, I. O. O. F., Stevensville, was organized in early days. The roll of membership comprises the following names: Amos Buck, N. G.; T. C. Ives, V. G.; W. J. Kennedy, S.; Levi Baker, A. B. Wisenflul, Geo. Arnscough, John Merehan, R. W. Nichols, L. Blodgett, W. J. Kennedy.

Stevensville Lodge, No. 11, I. O. G. T., was organized May 4, 1882. The roll of members gives 56 names. The officers of the lodge are J. H. Chilson, Lula Brechtill, H. L. Sexton, Mary Winslett, Thomas W. Flowers, J. M. Chapman, C. Warhurst, Sarah A. Barker, John M. Cobble and Jas. Kenney.

Two miles north of Stevensville is Ravalli Island. This is nine miles long and one and a half miles wide, containing about four thousand acres of good hay land, and forms in itself a property of great value.

SMALL SETTLEMENTS.

Corvallis, a settlement on the Bitter Root, forty-five miles south of Missoula, was surveyed July 15, 1879, about nine years after its settlement. The village contained, in 1883, thirty families. Commerce is represented by three stores; religion, by the Christian Church society of forty members, with Rev. Mr. Hendrickson, pastor, and education by the school of District No. 1 of eighty children.

Eureka Lodge, No. 25, I. O. G. T., was chartered January 26, 1871, with twenty-two members. This lodge was organized by J. B. Buker. Campbell Mitchell was its first deputy. The charter of No. 25 was forfeited July 31, 1872. Bitter Root Lodge, No. 18 (new No.), I. O. G. T., was founded by T. W. Flowers, October 20, 1877, with W. B. Harlan, L. D. Ceased work in 1879. In March, 1885, the Surprise Ditch Company, of Missoula, incorporated with a capital stock of $2,625. Their object is to build an irrigating ditch from the Bitter Root river, and the incorporators are John F. Allen, William D. Lear, Ferdinand Weir, Naaman Johnson and Benjamin F. Sanders, all of Corvallis. The location is desirable, lands very fertile and water supply good. The hotel, two stores, Christian church (attended by Elder W. D. Lear, of Missoula), and the common school, may be said to make up what is known as the village of Corvallis. The Methodists have a society here, so also have the Presbyterians, Rev. E. M. Ellis, of Stevensville, attending.

Frenchtown, eighteen miles northwest of Missoula, and about half that distance from Ardrum on the N. P. R. R., claims a population of about 160 in both village and valley. The flouring mill here is operated by T. J. Demers, while J. E. Marion is general merchant. The church of St. Joseph, of Frenchtown, is one of the old churches of the Territory, outside the pioneer missionary stations of St. Mary and St. Ignatius. Rev. L. G. Tremblay, S. T. L., is pastor. Missoula Valley Lodge, No. 54, I. O. G. T., was organized by M. Bullard, March 11, 1876. P. J. Kline was elected first lodge deputy. The French Canadians organized a St. John the Baptist society, with Joe Marion as president, Moses Clemens and Dr. L. H. Choquette as vice-presidents, A. H. Morin as secretary and treasurer, and Father Tremblay as chaplain, in May, 1885.

Thompson Falls, on the Clarke's Fork of the Columbia, is thirty-five miles from Murray in the Cœur d'Alenes, and the outfitting point for the Cœur d'Alene mining region. A wagon road over the Indian trail to the mines was built in 1883–4. Trout creek, twenty-four miles from the Falls, is another outfitting point. Noxon is the name given to the site of the Montana Company's mill, one mile west of the railroad depot. The population of this settlement is about fifty. In May, 1885, a land-slide occurred near Thompson Falls, which carried 750 feet of Northern Pacific track and road-bed into the Clark's Fork river. Eight to ten thousand cubic yards of earth were displaced by the slide. A steam shovel and work-train were engaged in removing the bank, and only by good fortune were out of the way when the slide occurred.

O'Keefe Cañon, on the border of the Flathead Reservation, assumed all the importance of a great mining camp in 1882. Construction camps, saloons, stores, hotels, restaurants, etc., sprung into existence as if by magic. It is named in honor of Baron O'Keefe.

Como, fifty miles south of Missoula, dates its establishment as a hamlet back to 1880. A post office was established here with W. B. Harlan in charge.

Cramer's, the old stage station, is now a station on the N. P. R. R., having been used for a time as stage station prior to the completion of the N. P. R. R. The location is between the present railroad settlements of Wallace and Turah.

Fort Missoula was located in 1876 by Lieutenant Colonel Gilbert, of the 7th Infantry, and Lieutenant Worden, of the same regiment, and acting engineer of the district of Montana. They came in pursuance of orders from the head-quarters of the military district of Dakota, to select a site for the post as near as practicable to the Cold Spring ranch. Section 31, Township 13 N., Range 20 W., was surveyed, set apart and declared by the President, troops were sent on and the erection of the buildings commenced. The post was partially completed in 1877, and has been garrisoned since that time. (Vide Gen. Hist.) Ardrum, thirteen miles N. W. of Missoula, is a railroad village of 1882–3.

Heron, an important railroad town on the N. P. R. R., is a place of about 400 inhabitants. Here are located the shops of the Idaho Division of the R. R., while the N. P. Hotel, operated by the company, and a half-dozen of stores represent the business of the place.

Ravalli, named in honor of the illustrious pioneer of that name, is five miles south of St. Ignatius mission. This railroad town is in one of the most charming localities in the Territory.

Cedar Creek.—During the autumn of 1869, Louis A. Barrette and B. Lanthier discovered paying mines on Cedar creek, in the western part of this county. This camp drew a great many men to it, and in the spring of 1870 it contained an estimated population of 1,500 persons. The discovery of other mines in the immediate neighborhood soon followed. It is estimated by competent judges that the entire product of Cedar creek and surrounding gulches, since its first discovery, has been something over $1,000,000.

Willow Creek.—Under the act approved January 28, 1865, the Willow Creek Town Co. was incorporated. This act provided that John Slack, H. M. Cone, E. B. Johnson, William Chumasero, N. P. Langford, and their associates and successors, are hereby created a body politic and corporate, by the name and style of the "Willow Creek Town Company. Said company shall have power to manage and control the following tract of land, viz: Commencing at a stake set at the southeast corner of H. M. Cone's farm, on Willow Creek, in Missoula county, running thence east three hundred and twenty rods; thence north three hundred and twenty rods; thence west three hundred and twenty rods; thence south to the place of beginning, which they may lay off into lots, blocks or squares for the town of Willow Creek, and to sell, improve and convey the lots, or any property, or any part of said tract. Sections three and four of the act provided for additions to the town, and for the company's rights to convey water from Gurd and Willow creeks for the use of the inhabitants.

Ashleyville was laid out by Ashley, Hall, Everts & Co. in the fall of 1869. The site on Thompson's river was well selected. In October and November, 1869, the first settlers began to build.

Wallace is the name of a village recently established. Its location is Wallace gulch, a few miles above the old Baker station, 23 miles east of Missoula and within a short distance of the quartz mines. A post office was established here in the summer of 1883, of which E. Bryan is in charge. Catching & Wilson opened a store there in the fall, and the Catching saw mill was moved to this point from Weeksville later in the fall of 1883. The rich quartz mines are situated some twenty miles east of Missoula, on the Northern Pacific. Wallace gulch, so called, is a tributary of the famous Hell Gate canon, and extends northward, or nearly so, for about four miles, rising in this distance nearly 1,200 feet. The main lead is found two miles from the mouth of the gulch, and has a due north and south trend.

The natural position of this camp is all that could be desired. With a fine stream flowing from the head of the gulch, and timber for building purposes, and fuel in large quantities, a finer site for mills could not be found. The Hidden Treasure is said to be one of the richest claims in the camp. Its discoverer gave it to parties on condition that they would open it; before they had sunk eight feet they were offered $5,000 cash for the claim. Several mines are now bonded, with improvements under way. The ledges are the Kennebeck, on which is located the Southern Cross, Kennebeck, Savage, Potosi and Northern Yuba. On the West Point are the Hidden Treasure, U. S. Grant, Billy Bay, etc. On the Missoula, the Eldorado, Missoulian and Extension. The Hemisphere, Black Hawk, Aladin, May Flower, Clear Grit, Webster, Beecher and Northern Pacific are important veins. The quartz of this camp is silver-bearing and its fairest assays are from 60 to 225 ounces per ton on an average, with numerous assays of 400 ounces and over to the ton. The surface croppings in no case have been under 20 ounces to the ton.

Sweat House is the name given to an old settlement in this county, and one of its old mining camps. A silver lead was discovered near Sweathouse creek in 1871, of which the different assays ranged from 114 to 206 oz. in silver, with a trace of gold. It is a free milling ore, yet little prospecting was done that year. On the opposite or east side of the valley, good quartz was discovered about the same time, and prospecting entered upon. The Sweathouse mining district is situated in the foot-hills of the Bitter Root mountains, four miles south of Deep Canon, and about twelve miles southwest of Stevensville. The Bitter Root Prince mine is a full claim, trending easterly and westerly, with a northerly dip. It has one shaft down, 5x7, 25 feet. Its croppings are about 8 inches wide; and at the bottom of the shaft the ledge matter has expanded to twenty-six inches wide. The ore is milling, but may require roasting. South of the shaft a tunnel has been run in, 4x6, forty feet. It was started with a view of tapping the ledge below the shaft, and when driven sixty feet more should intersect the vertical line of the shaft 100 feet below its face. Pleasant View mine is owned in part by W. E. Bass, who has a working lease of the entire property. It is a full claim, trending easterly and westerly, with a dip southward. It has a shaft down, 5x5x170 feet. Several levels have been run east and west from face of shaft. The mine is being worked by a whim. A seam of this rich ore trends easterly from the upper east level to the lower level, ranging from four to fourteen inches wide.

Deep Canon mining district is situate in the foot-hills of the Bitter Root mountains, and is about nine miles west of Stevensville. There are no developed claims in the district, which indicate that their owners are not miners. Among the many recorded locations, the Elizabeth and the Curlew have received the most attention. Still, owing to their unskillful development, they are in a very unsatisfactory condition. The facilities for developing quartz mines, in both the Deep canon and Sweathouse districts, are the very best—an abundance of fine timber and water. Teams can be driven to all the dumps.

Flathead Agency.—The northwestern villages are in the neighborhood of the celebrated country of the Flatheads. Major Ronan aptly describes this beautiful land. He says: "On a small tributary of the Jocko river, and distant about two miles from that stream, at the head of the Jocko valley, is situated the Flathead agency. One mile to the rear of the agency buildings a chain of lofty mountains rise abruptly from the valley—forming no foot-hills—and towering grandly above the scene. The mountains are covered with a dense forest of fir, pine and tamarac, which grows very large, and furnishes excellent lumber. In this lofty range, and in close proximity to the agency, are several clear mountain lakes, abounding in speckled trout, and from one of these lakes a waterfall or cataract over one thousand feet high, of great beauty and grandeur, plunges into the valley, forming one of the tributaries of the Jocko river. Leaving the Jocko to the left and passing through a narrow canyon and over a low divide of hills, the road leads to St. Ignatius mission, some seventeen miles from the agency, where the Indian boarding and manual labor school is established. This mission is one of the largest institutions of the kind in the United States, and is presided over by a number of Jesuit priests, lay brothers and Sisters of Charity. A large convent, church, school-house and dwelling is surrounded by a picturesque Indian village of some seventy snug log houses, where principally Pen d'Oreille Indians dwell and cultivate the rich soil in the surrounding valley. The Mission valley is a broad and extensive plain, well watered from streams which flow from the lofty and broken ranges of mountains that rise on both sides, and from the mission to the Flathead lake—a distance of thirty miles—and around its borders, there are farming lands enough for a thousand settlers. Flathead lake is embosomed in one of the loveliest and most fertile countries that the imagination can well picture, surrounded by towering cliffs and ranges of mountains broken like the sea lashed by a furious storm. It is some twenty-eight miles in length, and has an average width of ten miles. In the center of the lake is a chain of beautiful islands, and upon its clear broad bosom wild waterfowl of every description, even to sea-gulls, disport themselves. Around the foot of the lake, and amid the most delightful scenes, is grouped another Indian settlement, where snug houses, well-fenced fields, lowing herds, and waving grain, give evidence of the rapid advance of these Indians in the ways of civilization and thrift. Here it is that the Pen d'Oreille river takes its rise, rushing and leaping through narrow gorges, and again widening out into a broad and placid stream, winding through lovely valleys for hundreds of miles, when it falls into Pen d'Oreille lake, a sheet of water larger than the Flathead lake." (Vide Hist. of Catholic Church).

Arlee, or Flathead, 12 miles west of Ardrum, and 25 west of Missoula, was founded in 1883. This is one of the most enterprising railroad villages west of Missoula. The present population is stated to be 400. Business is represented by Deman & Tuott and E. Hammond & Co., general merchants; O. H. Green, R. R. agent; J. J. Anger, Tel. agent, and L. V. Tuott, postmaster. This village is situate in the beautiful Jocko valley, 5 miles southwest of the reservation, and here a flouring mill and saw-mills are kept busy. The Catholic church at this point claims a large congregation; the public school is an institution here already, and in all respects the village gives evidence of stability.

Duganville.—This district, for a long time, claimed as its only inhabitant Maj. Jas. Dugan, a resident of the wilderness, in the northeast corner of the reservation, thirty miles away from anybody, and off from any roads or trails traveled by Indians or whites. The location is delightful, and Major Dugan's ranch one of the most fertile in the whole Territory.

Slowey's Ferry, 18 miles from Missoula, is situated on the Mullan road, and besides the ferry is a house, barn, saloon, and telegraph station. The buildings are all of the primitive style of architecture, having shack roofs, and the lumber used in their construction being whip-sawed, owing to the trouble of getting sawed lumber over the mountain.

Crow's Nest.—Crow's Nest is situated 17 miles south of the summit of the Cœur d'Alene mountains. There is one log house, barn and corral. The occupants are two telegraph operators and the proprietor of the ranch, S. J. Cokely. One of the operators acts as repairer of the line. Oats were nine cents a pound, and $120 per ton for hay. The country is well wooded. Near this settlement is a sign board marked ☞ Road to Royal Hell.

Nigger Prairie, which was included in the original boundaries of Missoula, was so called on account of a negro being murdered there for his money in 1867.

Horse Plains.—The village of Horse Plains, the temporary terminus of the N. P. R. R. in 1883, ninety miles west of Missoula by stage route, is located on the Lynch ranch. Neptune Lynch has been the owner of the site since 1865, when he settled there. The N. P. R. R. Co. has an agency here; a post-office once existed, but for some time past the mails are forwarded from Missoula. Business is represented by Lynch & McDermod and J. A. McGowan, general merchants; N. Lynch, hotel; Geo. Staples and Joe Boyer, liquor dealers; G. W. Harrison, R. R. agent; Henry Horner, meats, and J. A. McGowan, drugs. Shipments are dressed beef and vegetables. Population about 100.

Quartz is the name given to a little settlement, 50 miles north-west of Missoula, in 1870. A postoffice was established here some years ago, of which James Vamier is master.

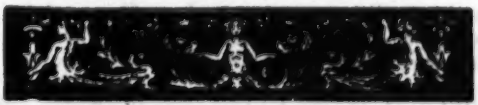
Selish, 95 miles north of Arlee, and 125 northwest of Missoula, boasts of a postoffice, Catholic church and school-house.

Superior, 30 miles south-west of Three Crossing depot, on the N. P. R. R., claims a population of 70, a church and school-house.

Belknap.—The village of Belknap was among the centers of settlement, which the Northern Pacific R.R. created in Western Montana, but since Howell's rupture with the Northern Pacific, it has steadily declined, and the population which, at the height of its prosperity was about 3,000 souls, had dwindled down to less than 100. A small fire early in July, destroyed about a dozen buildings, and the fire of July 18, 1884, finished its doom. The fire broke out in an abandoned house near the outskirts of the town. There was a high wind at the time, and it was apparent from the first that the town was doomed. There was no fire department. At this time only five buildings besides the depot were left standing. Among those not burned is the large hotel built by the Belknap Improvement Company. This sheltered almost the whole population of the town. It had been abandoned as a hotel. The depot was saved by getting a work-train from Trout Creek with about seventy-five men, who organized a bucket-brigade. Nearly all the buildings were unoccupied. It is safe to place the loss at $100,000. The principal losers were: Mrs. Max, restaurant; R. L. James, Brunswick hotel; Z. Sales, flour and feed; Mrs. Gorman, hotel; J. R. Marks & Co., hardware. The last named lost about $3,000 worth of goods that were packed to move to Murrayville. No lives were lost, but in two hours after the fire was discovered the town was in ruins.

Libby Creek.—During the summer of 1867, mines were discovered on Libby creek in the north-west portion of this county, which were worked by a number of men during the summer. During the month of August of that year a party of four men, prospecting on the same creek, were attacked by Kootenai Indians, and three of them killed and one badly wounded. The killed were Anthony Kavanaugh, John Moore, and William Allen. After killing them the Indians burned or attempted to burn their bodies. The other man, Joseph Herren, was shot in the right breast, the ball passing entirely through his body. He escaped with only the clothes that he had on at the time, and in this condition lived for twenty-one days, subsisting on such berries as he could obtain. He was found by a party of prospectors and brought to Missoula, where he remained until he entirely recovered.

Conclusion.—The history of this center of the pioneers of Montana claims a large share of attention in the pages devoted to the general history, as well as in this chapter. Again, in the pages devoted to personal history and reminiscences, a great deal of most valuable information is contained, and throughout all the chapters, continued references to Missoula are to be found. To avoid repetition, every item of history relating to Missoula which is given place in any one page of the work is omitted or bears only a mere reference in this chapter. The advances made by this division of the Territory since the first business settlement was made at the mouth of the canon of the Hell Gate are as remarkable as they are conciliating. From being the seat of a distant frontier mission of the Church, the county has grown to be great in its mercantile, manufacturing, agricultural and stock-raising industries, giving wealth to the present inhabitants and promising a competence to the tens of thousands who will yet people its beautiful valleys.



CHAPTER XXIX.

SILVER BOW COUNTY.

THIS small division of the Territory is in fact the county of the city of Butte, detached from the present county of Deer Lodge at the solicitation of the people of Butte; organized and administered by them, and raised to the position of being one of the richest counties in the world. In 1880, the population did not exceed 5,000—it is now estimated at about 16,000. In 1880, there was no such county as Silver Bow. Since 1881, a little Republic, equal in population and exceeding in wealth the old Spanish Republic of Andorra, at the foot of the Pyrenees, has been brought into existence, and within it a city, marvelous in its beginnings and growth, has been raised—all resting on gold and silver rocks, springing, as it were, out of fountains of richest mineral. In this chapter, as well as in the general history, and in the pages devoted to personal history and reminiscences, an effort has been made to give all facts relating to the settlement and development of this camp.

The discovery of rich placer diggings in the northern districts in 1865, caused an exodus of population in that direction, and resulted in the removal of the county-seat to Deer Lodge. What now constitutes Silver Bow county remained a portion of Deer Lodge county until the spring of 1881, when it was created a separate organization, with Butte City as the county-seat. The area is less than 800 square miles. The county contains but little agricultural land that is unoccupied. The great industry of the county is mining, and out of it has grown, within six years past, Butte City, a magic city, whose growth has few parallels in the history of mining camps. Although much the smallest county in area, its assessed value considerably exceeds that of any other county in Montana, being about $5,000,000, nearly all of which has been created during the last five years. The history of occupation and settlement is graphically related by Captain Mills in Clover Leaves, written by him in November, 1869. He says: "Never prettier name was coined, and it came of this. On the evening of a cloudy day in January, 1864, Bud Barker, P. Allison, Joe and Jim Ester, on a prospecting trip, reached the vicinity of the creek near Butte, and a discussion arose as to its name. As the argument went on, the clouds rolled from the sun, its bright glance fell on the waters sweeping in a graceful curve around the base of the mountains, burnishing them to brilliancy as they clasped the vale in a bow like silver. And so they named the farthest southeast waters that flow through Columbia to the sea. To them it was a land of beauty, of promise and profit. G. O. Humphreys, Denis Leary and Alex. Scott followed in May. They were the discoverers of the camp, where every pan prospects and every sluice pays; a camp nearly twelve miles square, almost every gulch, bar, sag and hill yielding pay; with fifty-three miles of public ditches; where the best ground is on the hills, and good pay on their very summits. The twelve miles embraces the little towns of Silver Bow, Rocker, Butte and McMinnville. Silver Bow town is a village of sixty or seventy houses and three times as many people. Bollanger & Allen and Thomas Low furnish the merchandise; Norton & Dean and Warren & Doran the billiards and bibulations, while Price or Robbins give kindly care to the traveler. We should judge the prevailing style of architecture to be the Pan Doric—a heathenish one of many evils. The material used is wood, but the presence there of Colonel E. Lane, who is a first-class mason, induces the belief that nobler works will be raised. And, speaking of buildings, in Butte and Silver Bow, seven miles apart, year about houses are torn down in one and removed to the other. Last year houses were hauled from Silver Bow to Butte; this year the movement is reversed. But Butte has lost by the operation a number of buildings, including the store now occupied by J. B. Wilcox & Co., and which was the first court-house building in Deer Lodge county—having been transported on to Deer Lodge city, forty-two miles. This was to save timber, we suppose, as there is not more than a million or two acres of good timber land in this immediate vicinity.

Silver Bow is in the Summit Mountain District, the most northerly of the several mining

Total cost of ditches, $106,000. Number of gulches, 40. Number of bars and hills, 18. Number of gulch claims, 781. Bar and hill claims, 226. Total number of claims, 1,007. With this showing of extent and richness in but one of the several districts, in the easiest worked ground in the country, scarce more than prospected save in the main gulch, with the product of only a few claims in the first twenty gulches, on a very limited amount of water, reaching nearly one-third of a million in 1869, and nearly two millions to date—is not the assertion sustained? The camp is A No. 1. Flow its ditches full of water for five months of 1870, and Silver Bow will yield more gold than all Deer Lodge county in 1869.

In regard to the placers in the fall of 1869, the same writer says:

Strictly speaking, there are but two or three gulches—"Silver Bow Creek," "Missoula" and "Town" gulches. But, as at Silver Bow, every gulch has names for the contiguous bars, side gulches, sags and channels, to distinguish them on the District Records. Butte claims centrality in the vast Silver Bow mining region—nearly twelve miles square. Comparatively but little of the mining ground in the vicinity has yet been worked, lying above all the ditches yet in. The yield where water is obtainable is large. Even in the gulches covered by the two or three ditches, only a few claims could be worked in 1869, owing to the scarcity of water, but the product of these claims for 1869 will give an idea of the richness of the ground:

Gulches or Channels.	Claims Worked.	Yield.	Gulches or Channels.	Claims Worked.	Yield.
Missoula	4	$23,000	Barbour	9	28,000
Buffalo	5	13,000	Sultana	5	6,300
Burgoo	1	18,000	Others [Est.]	16	54,000
Wheeler	1	13,000
Parrott	4	6,000	Total	45	$161,000

There are hundreds of claims above the level of the present ditches—far above. These will quadruple the yield on the completion of the Humphrey Ditch, now being built by the Humphrey Brothers. This is one of the gigantic works of the day. There is nothing like it in America. And it will be built; indomitable energy and pluck are in the hearts of the builders. Butte, on the Pacific slope, needs water; Boulder Basin, on the Atlantic slope, has it. To carry it from the one to the other, a ditch 30 miles long, with a tunnel twenty-four hundred feet long, through the main divide of the Rocky Mountains, is undertaken, and is almost completed. It will carry 2,000 inches of water high on the Silver Bow region, and give employment to 5,000 men. The Humphrey Brothers deserve credit, more than that—fortunes. The predictions of Captain Mills were not to be verified immediately. On the contrary, the mining interests may be said to have collapsed in 1870. The population of the Summit district grew less and less, until the great revival, which claims its beginning December 31, 1874, when W. L. Farlin placed his notices of relocation on the black ledges near the butte. In the history of Butte, which is in reality the history of the county, the subject is fully discussed.

Organic and Political.—The county was established under authority of the legislative act of 1881, which provided for detaching from Deer Lodge county its southern townships, and organizing them under the name of Silver Bow county. The first elections were held in 1881, of which the returns are given as follows:—

County Commissioner:
John Downs, D. 1,149
Samuel Marchessceau, D. 1,122
Christian Nisler, D. 1,104
Wm. M. Jack, R 1,192
Wm. Hall, R. 817
Chas. Wanderlick, R. 1,112
Joseph A. Hyde, appointed vice Marchessceau.

Sheriff:
L. P. Smith, D. 926
T. M. Lowry, R. 1,240

Clerk and Recorder:
S. Hughes, D. 1,065
A. C. Witter, R. 1,140

Probate Judge:
Caleb E. Irvine, D. 1,239
John O'Meara, R. 929

Daniel O'Grady, D..... 1,718

The recent (July, 1885), commission issued to Treasurer J. D. Welch, by the President, leaves the office of Treasurer vacant.

The officers of the county elected in 1884 are: sheriff, E. D. Sullivan; assessor, H. Waisman; treasurer, D. J. Welch; clerk and recorder, H. S. Clark; probate judge, C. E. Irvine; superintendent of schools, T. J. Booker; public administrator, Henry Jacobs; coroner, C. S. Whitford; surveyor, J. H. Harper; commissioners, J. R. Clark, W. M. Jack and H. C. Kessler; council, Stephen DeWolf; representatives, W. O. Speer, J. D. Baldwin and John F. Forbis. The republican nominations, made in October, 1884, were as follows: Councilman, Thomas Couch; representatives, E. Herbert, Lee Mantle, W. O. Speer; sheriff, H. C. Kessler; clerk and recorder, J. M. Knight; treasurer, E. C. Freyschlag; assessor, L. E. Manning; probate judge, John Madden; county commissioner, Amos Purdum; public administrator, R. C. Knox; superintendent public schools, T. T. Baker; coroner, Dr. C. S. Whitford; surveyor, George F. Marsh. D. J. Walsh was commissioned Collector of Internal Revenue of the district of Montana in July, 1885.

The townships of Silver Bow Divide and Red Mountain formed the political divisions of the county in 1882. The political condition of the several precincts is shown in the following statement of votes cast in November, 1882, for delegate to Congress:

Assessed Valuation.—The valuation in 1881 was $4,106,767; in 1882, $5,770,530; in 1883, $6,015,101; in 1884, $6,644,783, and in 1885, estimated at over $7,500,000.

Improvements on mining properties are assessed, not the value of mines. Silver Bow county owes $64,814.50. It has as an offset her magnificent court house and jail—furniture and eight lots costing $153,000.70; also the county poor farm.

Heavy Taxpayers.—Below is presented a list of taxpayers who each pay more than $100 taxes. In 1883 a similar list contained only 131 names—22 less than for 1884:

Schools.—The schools of the county number five, one in each district. According to the school census for 1882 the number of children between 4 and 21 years of age was 1,628, and under four years, 556. According to School Superintendent Clinton H. Moore's report for December, 1882, the number of pupils who attended school during 1882 was 951. Number not attending school, 306; number of male teachers employed, 6; number of female teachers employed, 14; total number of teachers, 20; average length of school in days, 105; number of brick school houses, 2; number of frame school houses, 1; number of log school houses, 2; number of graded schools, 1; number of ungraded schools, 4; rate of county tax for school purposes, in mills, 4; amount per capita of school census children, $13.90; amount raised by county tax for schools, $17,477.50; total amount from all sources apportioned during year, $17,047.37. During the last year the additions to the number of pupils, teachers, and schools have been marked, indeed, keeping step with the advances of the county. In 1874 there were 7 school children; in 1882, 951; beginning of 1885, 3,024, and in summer of 1885, over 4,000.

Mining Statistics.—The small new county of Silver Bow, with its 25 mines, produced in 1880 $1,428,088.26, in 1881 gold ,silver, lead and copper valued at $2,825,000, almost a half million in excess of the credit given to all the mines in Deer Lodge county in 1880. In 1882 the silver product alone was valued at $3,500,000, and other metals at $240,000. An estimate made in 1881 of the total value of mineral output placed the figures at $4,075,150.70; but the official figures are given above, so in 1882 the home estimate far exceeded the sum credited in U. S. statistics. In 1883 the value of product increased cent per cent, while in 1884 the figures equal the old time placer estimates of Alder Gulch, the value of product being placed at $16,000,000. What the result of growing mining enterprise may be, what it may bring these figures up to, is a matter beyond calculation.

Location.—Summit valley nestles among the mountains 5,700 feet above the sea level, and the waters which start from the surrounding peaks on their devious courses to the sea, descend over a mile before they pass the mouth of the Willamette, below Portland. One of the most interesting features in the topography of Silver Bow county is the extreme apex of the eastern and western water sheds, which is formed in a spur of the Rocky mountains, at a point six miles east of Butte City, and which literally divides the waters of the Pacific and Atlantic oceans. From this point flow the clear mountain waters of Boulder creek eastward into Jefferson river, and thence through the broad channels of the Missouri and Mississippi to the Gulf of Mexico; and on the western side the head of Silver Bow creek forms the extreme and principal source of Clarke's fork of the Columbia, which in its meanderings bears various names, commencing at the mouth of Silver Bow creek with Deer Lodge river, then, successively, Missoula, Flathead, Pen d'Oreille, Clarke's fork, and Semiacquitaine rivers.

SILVER BOW VILLAGE.

The earliest settlement of the county, and the first Seat of Justice of Deer Lodge county, was at Silver Bow, now a small town, situated seven miles southwest of Butte City, upon the banks of the creek from which it takes its name, near the Butte and Deer Lodge junction of the U. N. R. R. The village is built upon a bend of the stream, which forms a perfect figure of a gracefully curved Indian bow, and from the mountain peaks which surround the beautiful valley the glistening waters of the "silver bow," etched in shimmering sheen upon a dark ground of furzy grass, form a striking feature of the landscape. According to the Miner a troop of hardy and adventurous fortune seekers, attracted by the fabulous reports of Fairweather's discovery, were not content, when they found themselves on the gold-yielding Alder, to accept the chances of wealth offered in a camp already discovered. The unopened gulch claims might contain, as indeed they did contain, millions of treasure; but the possibilities of the new Territory were depicted in such glowing tints in the imagination of the prospector, the charm of pushing out over the untrodden hills, and being the first to lead the way to golden treasuries as yet undiscovered, proved so irresistible that many of the more energetic turned aside from the certainty of moderate fortune to take chances on "striking it big" in some portion of the unexplored interior. And they were not disappointed in their expectations. Arguing from past experience, they maintained that no gold producing country was ever known to contain but two streams whose placers would pay for working, and this experience was found to be a safe guide in estimating the extent of the Montana mines. During the course of 1863 strikes were made in quick succession, first in the neighborhood of Alder or of the previously discovered mines of Grasshopper Creek, at Bannack, and then the more remote as the prospectors pushed out further and further from those points. Finally, in the summer of 1864, Budd Barker, P. Allison, Joseph and James Esler pushed across the main range of the Rocky mountains and struck promising placer mines a short distance below where the village of Silver Bow now stands. For about a month the fortune prospectors remained in the vicinity, testing as far as they could in that short time the character and extent of the new diggings, and then Allison returned to Virginia City for supplies. In returning he brought with him G. O. Humphrey. In those early days the movements of every prospector, suspected of having "struck it," were closely watched. When Allison and his friend Humphrey set out for the new El Dorado, the sharp eyes of a plainsman trailed them through gulches, over prairies and across mountains, until finally their secret became his. The person serving so efficiently as detective was Dennis Leary, later a member of the Silver Bow Mining and Milling Company, of Butte. In the summer of 1864 Mr. Leary, accompanied by Alexander Scott, arrived at Silver Bow, and shortly afterward they were followed by Geo. W. Newkirk and H. H. Porter. Previous to their coming Allison and Humphrey had discovered the placers adjacent to the present townsite of Butte, and soon an energetic stampede in this direction set in. Like all camps supported by easily opened and productive placers, it sprang up with extraordinary rapidity. In 1866 the creek channel from Butte to Silver Bow was worked by a company of four or more men to every claim of 200 feet. Those toilers in the stripping claims lived in tents or brush shanties adjoining their work, labored faithfully six days of the week, and generally made it a point to go to town and make it lively on the seventh. Sunday was the day of business for the whole week. It was then that the merchant sold his goods; on that day the gambler could count on a good run for his little game, and the dance house keeper on a better dividend than was declared by the richest claim in the district. Prosperity was universal, there was work for every hand. Wages were from $6 to $7 per day; so it is not surprising that times were lively.

A new district was formed in the lower part of the gulch, known as Summit Mountain district, in October, 1864, with W. K. Cogswell, recorder. Silver Bow soon became a town. During the winter of 1864–5 it was a lively place, and many lodes were recorded. In the spring of 1865 Summit Mountain district was divided, and claims numbers 75 to 310 were formed into Independence district. During the winter of 1864–5, while stores were being started at Silver Bow, Ford & Dresser established a store at Butte. Gov. Sidney Edgerton appointed G. O. Humphreys recorder. He was succeeded by E. N. Lewis, with C. E. Irvine, probate judge; Fred. Burr, sheriff; Louis McMurtry, county treasurer. The first court in Deer Lodge county was held at Silver Bow, July 10, 1865, Hon. L. P. Williston presiding; C. E. Irvine, clerk of the court; E. B. Phelps, district attorney; F. H. Burr, sheriff, and Geo. M. Pinney, U. S. marshal. The first political convention in the county was the Democratic, at Silver Bow, the latter part of June, 1865, with James Stuart, chairman, and Robert Wells, secretary. The first election was held September 1, 1865, and by popular vote the county seat was removed to Deer Lodge. The decline of the mining interests here began in 1870. Even the revival of 1874–5 did not strike the pioneer village of the county, so that now the population is limited to such a small number that the census enumerators of 1880 make no mention of the village.

Under authority of an act passed by the first legislature, and approved February 6, 1865, R. Anderson, F. Ruff, R. H. Cogswell, J. Nelson, J. H. Brown, Joseph Clark, R. N. Hill,

C. E. Irwin, E. P. Lewis, and Granville Stuart were empowered to lay out the town of Silver Bow. Business is now represented by L. A. Foster & Co. and Felix Omil, general merchants; Christ. Neplin, brewery and saloon; James Pace, saloon; Wm. Stolte, hotel and saloon; W. Thompson, blacksmith; Tofeur & Mather, butchers; E. M. Ratcliffe, postmaster, and the Powder Mfg. Co.

BUTTE CITY.

The name is derived from the mound or butte just north of the original town. The city is situated on a gently sloping hillside, with southern aspect, and surrounded by the grandest of scenery. The main range of the Rocky mountains, distant only ten or twelve miles, sweeps in a magnificent curve from east to south, then west, leaving in front of town a circular basin, bordered by gently undulating foot-hills covered with evergreens. Situated over one hundred feet above the level of the creek, half a mile distant, the town enjoys the full benefit of the mountain air, free from every taint of miasma. The declivity of the ground enhances this advantage by affording natural drainage; hence Butte is one of the healthiest towns in the world. Typhoid fever and miasmatic diseases of every description are unknown.

In the history of Silver Bow village an account is given of the first occupation of the old Summit valley district, in 1864. In the summer of that year G. O. Humphreys and William Allison came to Butte, and camped on Babboon gulch, prospected for one month, returned to Virginia City for provisions, and returned to Butte for permanent residence. These were the city's first settlers. They located the Missoula lode, and formed what is known as the Missoula Company. Soon after, Dennis Leary and H. H. Porter, who had been fishing on the Big Hole river, followed the wagon tracks of Humphreys and Allison into camp, being favorably impressed with the ore from the Missoula lode (Eagle Bird). Probably the first lead started in this Summit valley district was the Black Chief, formerly the old Deer Lodge, discovered early in 1864 by Charles Murphy, May, William Graham and Frank Madison. At the time Humphreys and Allison came into the valley no stakes were stuck, nor were there any signs of any work having been done, except on what is known as the Original lode, on which was found a hole four or five feet deep. Near the hole were elk horns, which had been used as gads. From all indications this hole had been dug years before, but by whom there is no way of telling, and it will probably never be known. When C. E. Irvine and party came to the location, in 1856, they saw this evidence of prehistoric mining. In the fall of 1864 rich placers were discovered in the vicinity of Butte, and in August the same year the first mining district was formed, with William Allison president, and G. O. Humphreys recorder. In the fall of 1864 the old town of Butte was located on Town gulch, and the name of the isolated mound or butte just north of the original town site given to it. Thomas H. O'Connor erected the first saw-mill. G. W. Newkirk came from Alder gulch in 1864, at which time there was not a house on the present Butte townsite; and he, together with Dennis Leary, T. C. Porter, and Humphrey Bros., were the first to build one. It is located on Quartz street, and is still occupied as a portion of the Girton House. In 1869 they sold it to Mr. Girton for $100, and threw in the lot which is now valued at $12,000. Mr. Newkirk states that in the fall of 1867 a smelter, of which all traces have since disappeared, was built to work ore from the Parrot, which was struck by Joe Ramsdell about that time. The company, which was composed of Joe Ramsdell, W. J. Parks, Dennis Leary, T. C. Porter, and others, shipped some copper matte to Swansea, but the enterprise was soon after abandoned. When David N. Upton arrived at Butte, in September, 1866, this house was not standing on the original town site. He states that "there were no buildings where the town site is now, but in Buffalo gulch, near Centreville, there were about forty men and five women, and they thought they had the biggest town in the mountains. They were placer mining there with rockers, and did pretty well. In the spring of 1867 the Butte townsite was laid out, and at one time the population reached 500. Then the placers gave out, and nearly everybody left, and the town did not get lively again until 1875, when Farlin struck the Travona. I stayed with the camp, and have located and bought about twenty quartz claims, and have enough placer ground around here to last me ten years. We cleaned up 870 ounces this summer."

A. W. Barnard came to Deer Lodge county in 1866, when the placers at Rocker and Silver Bow were booming, and when no man considered himself safe without a brace of six-shooters strapped around his person, and a bowie knife stuck in his boot-leg. At that time no man thought of hotel accommodations. Wherever he went he carried his blankets. That was a year after the flour famine, when that commodity arose to the enormous price of $150 per sack, and when Beef Straight gulch received its name, from the fact that the miners of that camp lived on beef straight for four months. When the quartz excitement in Butte broke out, Barnard was one of the first comers. He now owns valuable placer ground and large interests in many leading quartz properties of the district. John Noyes came to Butte in August, 1866, and since 1854 has been a partner of David Upton. Noyes was the first man to bring water on the placer ground south of Butte, having dug the Noyes & Upton ditch, in 1866, at a cost of $20,000. It is twelve miles long, and is still in use. Mr. Noyes has been remarkably successful in Butte. He owns twenty mines, 500 acres of placer ground, forty town lots, a half interest in the Noyes & Upton addition to the Butte townsite. Among the other pioneers were Denis Leary, T. C. Porter, Wm. Owsley, Chastine Humphreys, Chas. Colbert, W. L. Farlin, Levi Prentis, Jos. Ramsdell, W. J. Parks, Joel W. Ransome, Adam Farraday, Perry Blaine. Peter McMahon, J. H. B. Foster, J. B. Wampler, Caleb E. Irvine, J. Schwartz, Anson Ford, A. J. Davis, Hendrie, Charles Murphy, and others. The pioneers and old settlers are referred to more fully in the chapter on personal history and reminiscences of Silver Bow county.

In the summer of 1866, the lower mining ditch, still in use, was brought in by Humphrey Bros., and the middle ditch by Messrs. John Noyes and J. Schwartz, Mr. Noyes having arrived in camp early in the spring from the placers of California. Early in 1867 the upper ditch was brought in by Humphrey & Co.

In 1867 Butte, as a placer camp, reached its climax. In that year its glory culminated, and from the beginning of 1868 its decadence is to be dated. This was hastened by the dry season of 1869, the failure of the usual water supply causing many to leave the country. In leaving they sold their claims to those who remained. Thus their places were not filled by others, and the placer interests passed into the hands of few owners. In 1870 Rocker was a lively placer camp, but its day was short. During 1871, '72, '73 and '74, the course of the entire district was steadily downward, until the less sanguine began to look forward to the day when this neighborhood would be peopled only during the hydraulic season, when the owners of the rich placers would reside elsewhere, returning to the old camp only while water for gulch mining was abundant.

But those gloomy views of the future were not indulged in by all. In the earliest days of the camp its numerous quartz veins had attracted attention, and from the very first many were strong in the faith reposed in the mineral wealth of those ledges. In 1866 the Original lode, located two years previously, by Humphrey & Co., was developed by a shaft 75 feet deep. The Parrott lode was also located in 1864 by Dennis Leary and others. Both the Original and Parrott, as well as many other lodes, were faithfully represented year after year, their owners feeling confident that reduction processes, through which their property could be made valuable, would yet be introduced. Among the most sanguine of those believers in Butte as a quartz camp, was Dr. Anson Ford, deceased, who stoutly maintained, against all comers, that this district was destined yet to be the mining center of the Northwest. But time passed, one year after another, without the achievement of any success to support and nourish this faith. Efforts to work lodes, since become famous, were repeatedly made, but failed in every instance. To account for this failure we must remember that the early prospectors looked only for copper or gold bearing lodes. The former they found, but not having the necessary fluxes, failed in their reduction. In their search for the latter they were less fortunate, since they did not chance to discover the La Plata or any of the other lodes rich in gold—lodes whose croppings would have paid well if reduced only for the gold contained. In 1868 Dennis Leary and T. C. Porter erected a copper smelter in Town Gulch, where its furnace still stands, a short distance north of the Girton House. The smelting enterprise failed for the reasons stated. Another smelter erected two years earlier, by Joseph Ramsdell and Wm. Parks, failed for the same reason. In 1868 the Hendrie mill, now owned by A. J. Davis & Co. and known as the Lexington, was built by Hendrie & Co. for the reduction of gold bearing ores, but after a short run the works were closed. And so with all the earlier attempts at quartz mining in this neighborhood. The placer mines were pouring out their wealth in hundreds of thousands of dollars every season, in dust worth six dollars per ounce less than that taken from the Highland placers, distant only a few miles. The inferior quality of the Silver Bow gold dust was due to the large percentage of silver it contained, but still prospectors refused to take the hint and continued experimenting on copper processes, or looking for free gold ore, while untold wealth in silver lay openly before their eyes. So one year after another passes, the population of the district steadily becoming less and less as one believer after another loses faith or courage, until 1874 is reached. In the fall of that year, one of Butte's earlier residents, W. L. Farlin, returned and began to busy himself in prospecting, his favorite pastime in former years. The law of Congress by which all quartz claims unrepresented for one year should revert to the United States, was about to go into effect. The first of January, 1875, was the date upon which unrepresented claims could be re-located under this statute, and Mr. Farlin was on hand to secure ledges of whose value he was made aware during his two or three years' absence in the silver regions of Idaho. In leaving Butte he had taken with him several specimens from her despised black ledges, but it was not until those samples were assayed at Owyhee that he learned the value of the lodes whence they were taken. He returned immediately, kept his own counsel, continued prospecting every day in the ostensible search for copper, and finally, at 12 o'clock on the last night of the year, placed his notices of re-location on the Travona and several other lodes whose fame has since spread far and wide. The news that the black ledges of Butte were rich in silver quickly spread abroad, and soon new comers came flocking in from all directions. Old locations were renewed and new ones made. With renewed energy prospectors interviewed the surrounding hills, and were well rewarded for their search, the La Plata, Burlington, Late Acquisition, Great Republic, and many other lodes of less fame, being discovered almost immediately. Reports of the rapidly occurring strikes helped to swell the excitement and increase the stampede. The town continued to grow steadily and rapidly, but new Butte was strongly different from old placer Butte. In 1867 it had a population of 350. Of this number something over 300 were unmarried men, but the settlers attracted to new Butte, influenced by the promise of permanency always extended by paying quartz mines, brought with them their families, and prepared to establish their homes here, in case subsequent developments should confirm the expectations aroused by the fabulous yield of the lode croppings. The Alice mine was located January 2, 1875. In the summer of 1875 John Howe & Co. entered upon the erection of the Centennial mill; after the first Dexter mill of ten stamps was completed. The building of these mills was followed by others previous to 1878. Quartz mills and copper smelters have been erected, and new mines opened in every direction, until the city of Butte has emerged almost at a single stride from the uncertainties of an undeveloped mining camp, with an unsettled and turbulent population and possessed of but few of the modern appliances of civilization, into the dignity of a city populated by 14,000 inhabitants, an increase of 11,000 since June, 1880.

During the year 1878 a number of substantial business buildings were erected, viz: Kinna & Jack, brick, hardware; Caplice & Co., brick, groceries, etc.; John Caplice, brick; Marchesseau & Valiton, stone, groceries; D. Cohen Sr. & W. Cophinus, stone, groceries and clothing; James Mathews, stone, billiards; Butte City Bank, brick; Charles Blum, brick, dry goods, etc.; Peter Schoning, brick, occupied by Geo. T. Hale's drug store; L. W. Foster & Co., brick, groceries, powder, etc.; Wm. Owsley, brick, lower story occupied by Brown & Frank, wholesale liquors, upper story public hall; Alex. Cohen, brick, groceries, etc.; Fred Potting, brick, meat market; Daniel Duyer, brick, rented; Miner Office, brick. During this year also, the building of brick residences was begun, and the era of true progress intrdouced. During the year ending February, 1883, brick buildings were erected, the estimated value of which was $225,000, while the frame houses built during that year were valued at $175,000. Last year as well as the present year the work of city building has been carried forward with a Chicago-like earnestness, the new court house, churches and hundreds of mercantile houses and private dwellings have been added, rendering Butte at once a large city and a wealthy one.

The community in 1878–9 was represented by the following-named firms and individuals:

Anderson, Fred. C., barber, Main street.

The growth of business and business houses of Butte necessitated the publication of a city directory in 1884, which, containing, as it does, 4,888 names, is in itself a simple record of the city for that year. Another material index to the city's progress is the record of shipments for 1884, based on railroad records in possession of C. W. Scott, agent of the U. N. R. R.. From such records the following figures are taken:

FREIGHT RECEIVED.	1883. POUNDS.	1884. POUNDS.
Coal	16,730,013	30,690,100
Coke	4,718,390	4,556,190
Lumber	15,334,990	48,506,000
Grain	9,792,769	7,612,009
Flour	2,323,860	3,053,690
Vegetables	236,395	3,427,850
Machinery	1,034,127	1,959,600

FREIGHT RECEIVED.	1883, POUNDS.	1884. POUNDS.
Agricultural implements and vehicles	265,571	452,850
Other merchandise	40,336,589	61,329,390
Totals	90,772,904	161,527,609
Excess of 1884 rec'ts over 1883		70,754,705

FREIGHT FORWARDED.	1883. POUNDS.	1884. POUNDS.
Ores and matte	73,541,600	163,723,590
Hides and wool	135,854	167,230
Other merchandise	4,894,730	4,998,720
Totals	78,572,184	168,889,480
Excess of 1884 shipments over 1883		90,317,296

The U. N. R. R. brought into Montana in 1881 about 33,000,000 pounds of freight; in 1882 this weight was doubled; in 1883 it was estimated at 90,000,000 pounds. The exports from the territory by way of the Utah and Northern in 1881 was less than 8,000,000 pounds. This year it is over 168,000,000, or more than twenty-one times as much. It is also more than six times the amount exported in 1882, and more than double the amount exported in 1883.

The postoffice, reference to the establishment of which is made in other pages, is the leading office of the country northwest of St. Paul. W. Egbert Smith is postmaster, and under his direction the office was fitted up in its present convenient and elegant style. It was created a money office June 26, 1878.

The first passenger train of the Utah and Northern railroad arrived at Butte at eleven p. m., December 21, 1881, completing the line four hundred and seventeen miles to Ogden. This pioneer railroad of Montana, the history of which is given in the chapter on railroads, has had a most important part in building up the city and its suburbs.

The Centennial, the St. Nicholas, Girton, Grand Central and other hotels and restaurants are well-kept hostelries. The Centennial is the pioneer hotel. A portion of the Girton House is the first house erected in Butte in 1864.

Butte Townsite.—In 1875–6 the entry of the Butte townsite caused much anxiety. When Judge O'Bannon made official application for entry of the Butte townsite, the papers were sent in proper shape to his attorney at Washington, to be passed through the department. After progressing with the entry until nearly all the desirable lots had been taken, and after the entry should have been perfected in the department, he learned, indirectly, that the application was in suspense at the department, on account of there being placer ground included in the survey, and was liable to be rejected. Without awaiting further notice, Mr. O'Bannon started immediately for Washington. In the letter of Commissioner J. A. Williamson, dated October 27, 1876, he deals with the entry of Townsite 610, Butte, made July 25, 1876. He says: "The evidence submitted in this case shows that there are placer claims in the southeastern and central portions of said townsite, and lodes of gold and silver and copper bearing quartz have been discovered and located in almost all portions of said tract. The laws regulating the disposal of the public lands for townsite purposes provides, section 2,386, Revised Statutes of the United States, that 'where mineral veins are possessed, which possession is recognized by local authority, and to the extent so possessed and recognized, the title to town lots to be acquired shall be subject to such recognized possession and the necessary use thereof.' * * * The fact that a given tract of land has been entered or patented as a townsite, in no way prevents the owner of a lode claim from securing a patent to his mine, upon compliance with the terms of the mining act, as the same is excluded from the operation of such townsite patent. In the case under consideration, it will be necessary to have a re-survey made of said townsite excluding therefrom all placer claims and mining ground." On November 20, 1876, the commissioner telegraphed to suspend action under his decision of October 27. The reconsideration of the question by the land department resulted in allowing the entry and the issue of a patent for same.

Organization.—The village of Butte was under township organization until a charter was obtained, when city officers were elected. The elections of 1881 resulted in the choice of the following officers:—Mayor, H. G. Valiton; Police Judge, J. B. Wilcox; City Attorney and ex-officio Clerk, Patrick Talent; City Marshal, Wm. Warfield; Treasurer, Collector and Assessor, J. F. Beck; Councilmen—E. C. Freyschlag, W. H. Young, Jere. Roach, Daniel

In 1884 William Owsley, D., was elected Mayor by 19 majority; J. B. Wilcox, D., Police Magistrate by 18 majority; Geo. W. Newkirk, D., Treasurer and Assessor by 131 majority; Simon Hauswirth, R., City Marshal by 75 majority; H. B. Smith, City Attorney by 285 majority; J. H. McCarthy, Chief of Fire Department, and David Mieklejohn, Street Commissioner, were elected. The Council was made up as follows:—John Branagan, Wm. McNamara, George Falligan, W. N. Aylesworth, P. R. Dolman, F. C. Anderson, H. McMurphey, Max Lelande. Justices of the Peace were:—J. B. Wilcox, Erastus A. Nichols, John Eddy, John Smith, and Constables—Simon Hauswirth, James M. Fish, Wm. A. Ralston. Clerk of Municipal Court, Louis E. Danjen.

In 1885 the Democrats elected H. L. Frank, mayor; J. R. Russell, treasurer; and J. P. Reins, alderman. The Republicans elected Milo French, police magistrate; H. B. Smith, city attorney; I. W. Stoner, city marshal; and Messrs. Grix, McMillan, Pinkham, and Richards, aldermen. The first meeting of the new council was characterized by the act of relieving the marshal of the police appointment power. After discussing the matter fully the council made the following nominations: By Alderman Aylesworth, Harry Nichols; by Alderman Lalande, Ed. Brisbois; by Alderman Brannagan, Thomas Cody; by Alderman Pinkham, David Meikeljohn; by Alderman Grix, James Dwyer; by Alderman Richards, Charles Carleton; by Alderman McMillan, Henry Hutchinson; by Alderman Reins, Burt Reynolds; by Alderman McMillan, Frank McDonald. A ballot resulted in the election of the following six gentlemen as the force: Burt Reynolds, James Dwyer, H. Hutchinson, Charles Carleton, David Meikeljohn, Frank McDonald, David Meikeljohn was unanimously elected chief of police.

Banks.—Donnell, Clark & Larabie, bankers, established a branch of their banking house at Butte, in February, 1877, under the management of W. A. Clark. In the historical sketch of their Deer Lodge bank reference is made to this branch. The bank block, completed early in 1882, is one of the principal buildings of the city. The interests of Mr. Donnell in Montana were purchased by Messrs. Clark and Larabie recently, and now their banking houses are conducted under the title Clark & Larabie's bank (Vide History of Deer Lodge).

The First National bank of Butte originated in the bank of S. T. Hauser & Co., which was opened in the city by the First National Bank Company, of Helena; in 1878. In 1881 the name was changed to the First National bank of Butte. Judge A. J. Davis is president; Samuel T. Hauser, vice-president; C. L. Dahler, cashier, and H. D. Hauser, assistant-cashier (Vide History of Lewis and Clarke county). This banking company was incorporated in March, 1883, the authorized capital being placed at $500,000.

Hoge, Brownlee & Co., bankers, established their banking house at Butte in the summer of 1882. The following named gentlemen compose the firm: W. L. Hoge, M. B. Brownlee, Marcus Daly, R. C. Chambers, and F. E. Sargeant. They do a general banking business, under the management of M. B. Brownlee. November 5, 1883, they opened a branch house at Anaconda, M. T., under the management of W. L. Hoge.

Insurance Agencies.—On the 28th day of August, 1879, the first fire insurance policy written by a duly authorized resident agent was issued by Mantle & Marsh, and at that time the first resident fire insurance agency of Butte sprang into existence, and rapidly became known as one of the growing permanent institutions of the growing city; at this time but three companies were qualified and represented by this firm, viz: the Liverpool and London & Globe Insurance Company, of London, with United States assets of $4,400,000; the Home Insurance Company, of New York, assets $6,500,000, and the Fireman's Fire Insurance of California, assets $750,000, making total representation of $11,650,000, in the then itinerant companies first to establish an agency in Butte. The several great companies referred to in the general history are now represented here by Geo. L. Marsh, Cobban & Forbes, F. E. W. Patton, Green Majors, and others.

Silver Bow Water Co.—This company was incorporated in May, 1881. John Noyes was elected president, Dr. Geo. W. Beal, vice-president; H. A. D'Achuel, secretary; J. Ross Clark, treasurer; and John McCormick, superintendent. The company started with a capital stock of $40,000, since which time it has been increased $25,000 In August, 1881, O. P. Blain succeeded Mr. McCormick as superintendent. In 1882 the same officers were re-elected, except Dr. Beal, who was succeeded by Wm. M. Jack. At the annual election, August 20, 1883, J. R. Wharton succeeded J. R. Clark as treasurer. The other officers were re-elected. In 1884 John Noyes was elected president. The works were completed and the water let into the pipes December 12, 1881. The source of supply is Bull's Run, a tributary of Brown's Gulch. The water is brought a distance of seven miles in covered mains. They have five and a half miles of mains within the city. The larger ones are seven and five inches diameter. The charges are from $5 to $30. The water is conducted in wooden boxes to the tanks, and thence in iron pipes. The water supply is abundant, and the quality of the purest and coolest imaginable.

Summit Valley R. R. Co.—This company was incorporated in October, 1883, the stockholders being P. A. Largey, Geoffrey Lavelle, A. Talbot, Wm. McDermitt, S. B. Rice, with a capital of $50,000. The object was to build a railroad from the depot to Walkerville, with branch lines to all the different reduction works and mines by January 1, 1884.

Butte-Gallatin R. R. Co.—In the summer of 1884 Wm. A. Clark, Chas. X. Larabie, Samuel N. Keith, Daniel J. Welch, Noah Armstrong, Henry Elling, B. F. White, John T. Connor, Phil. Shenon, Lee W. Foster, Geo. W. Stapleton and James R. Clark—all of Butte—filed articles of incorporation with the territorial secretary for the Butte & Atlantic Railroad Company. The object for which the company was organized was to construct, conduct, maintain and own a standard gauge railroad from Gallatin station, on the Northern Pacific railroad, in Gallatin county, Montana, up the Jefferson river, through the Jefferson canyon, to a point near the junction of Pipestone creek with the Jefferson river, in Jefferson county; thence up said Pipestone creek to the summit of the main range of the Rocky mountains; thence by the nearest and most practicable route to Butte City. The company also proposes to build a standard gauge branch line, diverging from the main line near the mouth of the Pipestone creek, and running up Jefferson and Beaverhead rivers by the most practicable route to Dillon. A second branch will diverge from the last-named branch at or near Twin Bridges, Madison county, and running thence up the Ruby river valley, proceed by the nearest and most practicable route to Virginia City. The amount of capital stock is placed at $3,000,000. The principal place of business will be in this city. The route of the main line of this road was surveyed several years ago by one of the incorporators (Mr. Keith), at which time the Northern Pacific was looking for a pass through the Rocky mountain main range.

The Church of St. Patrick was founded by Rev. R. De Ryckere, now of Deer Lodge, in 1866. Butte then formed a portion of his mission, and to him the honor of building the first Catholic house of worship at Butte belongs. Rev. John J. Dols, of the Oregon mission, was appointed pastor of St. Patrick's in 1881, arrived at Butte March 8th that year, and is the first regular priest of the mission. The old frame church building west of the new church was blessed by Archbishop Seghers August 1, 1879, but services were held therein in 1876. In May, 1882, Father Dols undertook the work of building the new church, the foundation stone of which was laid the same month by Rev. R. De Ryckere, assisted by Rev. Frank Kelleher, and before the close of the year was ready for the uses of worship. The estimated cost of completing the church, furnishing it, etc., is about $18,000. The building is brick on stone foundation, with granite facings. The style adopted is plain Gothic, with spire, 108 feet high. The stained glass windows, pulpit, altar and church ornaments, as designed, promise to be in keeping with the style of the church. This building was dedicated September 17, 1884. The pastoral residence was built in 1881, at a cost of $3,500. The statistics of the parish give the number of the congregation at 2,500, and the number of regular communicants at about 1,600. Rev. Father McManus is assistant priest of the parish.

The Protestant Episcopal Church was organized October 20, 1875, at the new store of Foster & Ray, by Rev. M. N. Gilbert, pastor of Deer Lodge. Rt. Rev. D. S. Tuttle preached the sermon. From this time until July, 1876, Mr. Gilbert held occasional services at different places in the city. On July 6, 1876, Bishop Tuttle revisited Butte, and appointed a missionary committee, consisting of Charles Murphy, John Noyes, R. S. Jones, A. M. Essler and T. C. Miles. Rev. M. N. Gilbert was engaged to hold services once per month. On July, 8, 1877, Bishop Tuttle made his third annual visit, when nine persons were confirmed, and the parish named St. Johns. The permanent missionary committee was instituted, comprising Noyes, Essler, Jones, Roach and Argyle, with Mr. Gilbert ex-officio. From 1877 to September, 1879, there were no services held at Butte. September 1, 1879, Rev. C. O. Tillotson was appointed missionary of Butte and Deer Lodge. During the first part of Mr. Tillotson's labors, services and school were held in Owsley's hall, again in Good Templar's hall, until St. John's Church was partially completed, and first services held therein November 13, 1881, by Rev. Mr. Tillotson, Bishop Brewer preaching the sermon. The resignation of Mr. Tillotson was accepted November 30, 1882. Rev. S. C. Blackiston, the present pastor, accepted the rectorship of the mission March 1, 1883.

The roll of communicants of the Episcopal Church of Butte comprises 112 names. The pupils of Sunday school number 88. The trustees of the church are W. A. Clark, Charles Clark, John Noyes, Fred. Gilbert, W. M. Jack, S. Tyler and J. A. Moss. The superintendent of Sunday school is Frederick Gilbert.

The foundation stone of the new church of St. John's was laid July 8, 1881, by Bishop Brewer, assisted by Rev. H. C. Hutchings, and first services were held therein November 13, 1881. The building in its exterior is pure Gothic, built of granite, with gable windows, one of which—the chancel window—was presented by W. A. Clark. The cost of the building was about $15,000.

The Presbyterian Church was organized at Butte May 12, 1878, by Rev. J. R. Russell, its pastor. The original members were Robt. Allen, Mary A. Davidson, Jennie Foster, Sam. M. Fawsett, Lavinia W. Fawsett, J.E. Hoffman, Nancy E. McDaniels, Jas. A. Pack, Alice Stevens, Therese Shiner and W. Egbert Smith. Of this number Mrs. McDaniels died June 12, 1881. From the establishment of the church in 1878 to August 2, 1883, there were eighty-eight marriages celebrated by its pastor, nine baptisms of adults, and eighteen baptisms of infants. The record of deaths of those who were members of the church or belonged to the congregation, or funerals attended by Rev. Mr. Russell from 1878 to July, 1883, gives the names of 115 persons. The records, as kept by Rev. F. W. Flint, Mr. Russell's successor, are exceptionally regular, and in other years will form a valuable addition to the history of the church. Rev. J. R. Russell's first visit to Butte was made in the spring of 1876. He held services in a little schoolroom, where there must have been one hundred persons present that night, for there was not left even standing room. After that visit he came regularly once a month. Services were held wherever he could find a room. Sometimes he found an unfinished building, sometimes got a traveling minstrel or concert company to let him have their room for Sunday—buying them out. After several months a rough building was erected as a theater. This the different ministers who visited Butte hired at $8 a Sabbath. This was a great relief to all, but it did not last. The building was, after a few months, rented to a firm at $250 per month as a saloon and dance house. After this the society got an unfinished room in the school-house for a while. In May, 1879, Mr. Russell was sent here by the Presbytery of Montana to live here and devote his whole time to the work in Butte. The Methodists by this time had a church building inclosed, but without doors or windows. No other room could be found, so the ministers who preached here agreed to hold services there each on one Sunday in the month. This house of worship was used by the Presbyterians for about three months. Mr. Russell had to preach most of the time, and didn't know before he got to church that the other ministers had failed to keep their appointments. Then when it came to his own Sunday, when his congregation would be present (for the Christians would each go to hear their own minister, and did not care to hear the others), the Methodist minister would come and ask him for the church. After several weeks' negotiations he succeeded in renting the Good Templars' Hall. The room was about 25 x 35 feet, but it was filled every morning and crowded to overflowing every evening. Steps were taken to build the Presbyterian Church in the spring of 1880. A lot was bought for $600, and work was begun in August of the same year. The first service was held in the basement of the church on the Christmas Sunday of 1880. Services were held in that room for just one year, when the congregation moved into the upper room, which was finished in 1883-4 at a cost of $8,000. The present membership of the society is fifty-eight. The names of elders are Jas. A. Pack, J. D. Jenks; and of deacons, Jesse R. Wharton, Henry M. Patterson.

The Methodist Episcopal Church (Mountain View) was established four years ago by Rev. T. A. Riggin, who was then pastor. The foundations for the present building were begun in 1879, and the house so far completed that it was dedicated July 17, 1881. Rev. G. C. Stull, now preacher at Bozeman, had charge of this mission until succeeded by Rev. J. B. Chynowith.

The Congregational Church of Butte City was organized in 1882 by Rev. James A. Smith, and the church on West Granite street erected the same year. A. B. Peebles took charge of the church in 1883, then Rev. John E. Smith, and lastly, Rev. C. L. Diven.

The Baptist Society was organized in 1883 by Rev. C. W. Clark. During the summer and fall of that year services were held in the Main street and East Park street chapels. In September the lot on the northwest corner of West Broadway and Montana streets was purchased, and preparations made to erect a house of worship. Rev. C. C. Frost of this denomination originated the Baptist chapel at Dillon.

Methodist Church South was represented here by Rev. Mr. Boyns, who held services in the Central schoolhouse, now held in Miner's Union Hall by Rev. E. Stanley.

The Jewish Society of Butte propose to erect a synagogue. Three-fourths of the amount required for the building has been already raised, and a subscription paper for the balance is being circulated (April, 1885). The site selected for the new temple is on the corner of Mercury and Washington streets, and opposite the Catholic church. It is the determination of the projectors of the enterprise to have the synagogue completed by the fall of 1885.

Schools.—In the summer of 1866 the old town site of Butte was laid out by Oatman, the builder of a hall bearing his name, and intended to answer the purposes of a town hall. In the fall of 1866 the first public school of Butte was opened in Oatman hall by Col. Wood, a competent teacher, and in addition, a cultivated musician, who taught the young idea how to dance as well as read and write. On days of good humor his violin was taken with him to the school room, and then, during the noonhour, the mysteries of the multiplication table gave place to the magic of a dance. Since that time the school system of Butte has been wonderfully changed. Large brick buildings are devoted to the purposes of education, the teaching staff is of the first order, and the support tendered by the citizens to education is most material in character.

The City Press is characteristic of Butte. The growth of newspaper interests is as remarkable as the growth of the city. In the Press chapter of the General History a sketch of each paper is given.

The Fire Department is well equipped, and equal to any emergency which may call for its services. J. H. McCarthy is chief of this department.

Hospitals.—The Hospital of St. James was founded by Rev. J. J. Dols in 1881, and opened by the Sisters of Charity of Leavenworth in October of that year. The buildings are constructed of brick, resting on stone foundations, at a cost of $11,000. The actual cost of buildings and furniture is set down at $15,000, the amount being contributed by the people of Silver Bow county, without religious distinction. The number of patients cared for in 1881-2 was 45. Owing to the removal of the county poor in 1883 from the care of the sisters, the number of patients was below the average of the former year.

Sister Mary Xavier, who died July 8, 1884, made her novitiate and entered the order at Leavenworth, being professed in 1870. Coming to Montana in 1873 she was ordered to Deer Lodge, and remained there until the completion of the Butte hospital, where she remained a faithful servant, devoting her life in fulfilling the vows of her order, and contributing her full share to the good of others until her death. The Miner's Hospital was established in 1876, now conducted by O. B. Whitford & Son. The Alice Hospital is in connection with the Alice works.

The Societies of Butte are well organized. The I. O. G. T. was the first introduced as Lodge 51. This was followed by the Odd Fellows, Masons, etc.

Independent Order of Good Templars, Butte City Lodge, No. 14, was organized January 1, 1876, by Massena Bullard. The present roll of members is 111, including the following officers:—L. E. Danjen, H. Shawl, A. A. McMillan, A. G. Stanley, David M. Evans, A. Adams, John Astle, Mary E. Reagan, Maggie Watt, W. F. Girsel. Damon Lodge, No. 1, Knights of Pythias, was organized November 10, 1879, with twenty-eight members. The lodge in 1883 embraces sixty-six members, with a reserve fund of $500. The past Chancellors are Charles S. Warren, B. C. Kingsbury, E. C. Freyschlag, Lee Mantle and Wm. Zinn, and James H. Butler, C. C. The principal officers in 1882–3 are Edwin G. Leiter, K. of R. & S.; Allen E. Hale, treasurer; Walter L. Bretherton, deputy supreme chancellor of the supreme lodge of the world for Montana. The first lodge was established in Butte, on November 7, 1879, and is now known as Damon Lodge, No. 1. It was first instituted with eleven members, by P. A. Miles, a member of Myrtle Lodge, No. 1, of Salt Lake. Damon Lodge so increased in membership that new lodges were instituted, and every city or town of any importance soon claimed kin to the order. At present nine subordinate lodges owe allegiance to the Territorial Grand Lodge, just organized, as follows; Three in Butte, one in Bozeman, one in Deer Lodge, one in Benton, one in Helena, one in Miles City, one in Dillon, and the membership numbers 600. The first Grand Lodge convened in Butte, January 14, 1885. P. A. Miles, T. H. Kleinschmidt, and W. L. Bretherton are P. G. C.

Endowment Rank, K. of P., Butte, April 14, 1882, with eleven charter members, namely: John J. Garvin, C. H. Richardson, F. E. Gleason, David Cohen, Jr., J. H. Butler, Chas. P. Schmidt, C. S. Shoemaker, W. Pinkham, E. C. Freyschlag, T. G. Wampler, and W. W. Chapman. The rank was instituted by Walter L. Bretherton. The number of members at present is twenty-six. The principal officers are: C. H. Richardson, president; Henry Jacobs, V. P.; Geo. P. Bretherton, secretary and treasurer.

Ivanhoe Lodge, K. of P., No. 5, is one of the leading organizations of the Territory. John G. Evans was C. C., and J. M. Knight, K. of R. & S. in 1884; Joseph Morris and G. E. F. Duffet held the respective positions in 1885.

Oswego Lodge, No. 9, K. of P., is now presided over by J. Carter Smith, C. C.; E. E. Ocobock is secretary.

Butte Lodge, No. 22, A. F. & A. M., was organized October 3, 1876. The past masters of this lodge are: J. F. Beck, Thos. C. Porter, O. P. Blaine, Joseph A. Hyde, Patrick Talent. The master masons in 1883 are named as follows: John F. Allen, W. L. Beall, Perry W. Beall, J. M. Bell, A. W. Barnard, A. H. Barrett, Tees. Branett, J. F. Beach, Oliver P. Blaine, John M. Bowes, W. T. Boardman, Israel C. Burkett, John A. Campbell, Thos. J. and J. T. Carmony, Joseph K. Clark, Samuel B. Cornick, William Copinus, Daniel N. Dellinger, James E. Dickey, Al. J. Montana Commandery, No. 3, Butte, was organized June 26, 1879, with the following charter members: W. A. Clark, I. I. Lewis, D. N. Dillinger, H. A. D'Acheul, Joseph A. Hyde, W. M. McCormick, H. S. Clark, W. N. Baldwin, Preston Scott. The eminent commanders have been W. A. Clark, W. A. Barnard, Joseph A Hyde, and the recorders H. A. D'Acheul, H. S. Clark and A. H. Barrett. The delegates to Chicago conclave of 1880 were J. A. Hyde and W. A. Clark, while A. W. Barnard, J. K. Clark, and Rodney Wing were delegates to the San Francisco convention of 1883.

Deer Lodge Chapter, No. 8, Royal Arch Masons, claims a total membership of about thirty-five. The officers in order of rank, are: Henry G. Valiton, E. D. Aiken, William E. Hall, Perry H. Beal, O. P. Blaine, J. H. McQueeney, Ed. Reimel, Thomas Carmony, John D. Thomas, Patrick Talent, Joseph A. Hyde.

Beta Lodge of Perfection, No. 2, A. & A. S. Rite, is presided over by Joseph A. Hyde, with W. A. Clark, S. W., and A. H. Barrett, secretary.

Ruth Chapter, No. 2, Order Eastern Star, was presided over in 1884 by Mrs. Elmira Noyes, and in 1885 by Mrs. George F. Marsh. Mrs. M. E. Ragan was secretary in 1884 and Mrs. I. M. Morsehead in 1885.

A. O. F. Court, of Butte City, No. 7,202, is now presided over by L. E. Holmes, with Moses Cohn, secretary.

Lincoln Post, No. 1, Grand Army of the Republic, was organized at Butte August 30, 1883. There were about twenty-five veterans present. Rev. Duncan J. McMillan, from the James B. McKean Post, Salt Lake, mustered in the recruits. The election of officers resulted as follows: Post Commander, P. R. Dolman; Sr. Vice Commander, S. R. Knight; Jr. Vice Commander, H. C. Kressler; Adjutant, Charles S. Warren; Quartermaster, L. F. Wyman; Surgeon, L. E. Holmes; Chaplain, Frederic Lockley; Officer of the Day, Charles E. Shoemaker; Officer of the Guard, J. J. York. The Post was assigned to the Provisional Department of Utah. This was the first G. A. R. Post organized in Montana. The officers for 1885 in order of rank, are: Charles S. Warren, Charles S. Shoemaker, John Bechtel, Harry C. Kessler, Frederic Lockley, L. E. Holmes, John Raley, Bennet Benson, Gilbert Engle, W. W. Jones, John Madden.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians, Division No. 1, is a powerful organization, organized in 1880. The division headquarters are at Walkerville, a suburb of Butte. John Sweeney was president of the division and Patrick O'Neil secretary in 1880. The present officers are: P. J. Brophy, president; Denis Driscoll, vice-president; Patrick O'Neil, secretary; and D. J. Hennessy, treasurer.

The Ancient Order of United Workmen, Butte Lodge, No. 1, was the first lodge of this society introduced into the territory. Green Majors was M. W., and J. M. Venable, recorder. Summit Valley Lodge, No. 16, is presided over by Geo. Pascoe, M. W. Silver Legion, No. 4, Select Knights A. O. U. W., was instituted by Wm. Zastrow, deputy supreme commander. The legion has twenty-five charter members, as follows, to-wit: W. A. Mensch, H. McMurphey, C. S. Kimball, James G. Evans, E. F. Jacke, T. H. Rutter, C. O. Zeigenfuss, W. H. Archer, W. A. Ralston, T. D. Featherly, Wm. Bowen, John Riley, J. L. Onderdonk, J. H. Shaw, C. H. Fiske, N. C. Anderson, W. E. Wheeler, A. A. Gibson, W. D. Fenner, L. E. Holmes, Joseph Renfrey, H. S. Clark, T. Prescott, C. L. Thompson, and A. S. Rife. The officers are as follows: S. C., H. McMurphey; V. C., W. H. Archer; L. C., W. A. Ralston; Rec., Jas. G. Evans; Rec. Treas., E. F. Jacke; Treas., W. D. Fenner; Marshal, T. H. Rutter; Med. Ex., L. E. Holmes; Trustees, H. S. Clark, C. H. Fiske, C. O. Zeigenfuss. Appointments were made by Select Commander McMurphey as follows: Standard Bearer, C. H. Fiske; Chap., J. H. Shaw; J. W., T. D. Featherly; S. W., Wm. Bowen; G., Joseph Renfrey.

The Butte Lodge of Improved Order of Red Men was organized in January, 1885, under the guidance of H. C. Foster, P. S., of the Apache tribe of Nevada. The following officers were elected: Sachem, John G. Evans; Senior Sagamore, W. W. Bennett; Junior Sagamore, C. W. Hanscom; Chief of Records, A. L. Buker; Keeper of Wampum, G. M. Jenks.

The miners of the Summit Valley Mining District, on the 13th day of June, 1878, formed a union, an attempt having been made in the camp to reduce wages. The organization started out with a membership of 400, its only avowed purpose being to protect and uphold underground wages. The population of Butte at that time was about 3,000, and the wages of miners were $3.50 a day. The effort made was to cut them down to $3 by the mine owners, and the union was merely desirous of holding them at their former figures. The little disturbance and excitement caused by their opposition to the reduction it is not our desire to deal with in this article, as the differences of opinion were peaceably and amicably settled without any serious results. At the present time there is no cause for dissatisfaction between employes and employers, and the very best of feeling prevails in regard to the labor question. The first president of the organization, known at that time as the "Butte Workingmen's Union," was A. C. Witter, who served four terms in that capacity; the second was John Eddy, one term; third, Chas. Shoemaker, two terms; Bart. Malloy, two terms. The first vice-president was Peter Allen, who served one term; second, Frank Shovelin, one term; third, Frank Carroll, one term; fourth, Mike Grace, one term; fifth, John Eddy, one term; sixth, James Caddigan, two terms The first secretary was J. B. Cameron, who served two terms; second, Jerry Murphy, one term; third, J. B. Cameron, one term; fourth, V. A. Cook, one term; fifth, J. F. Leaver, one term; sixth, Chas. Hoskins, two terms; seventh, Patrick Boland, two terms. The officers are elected semi-annually. On February 15, 1881, the name of the organization was changed to the "Miners' Union," which name it still bears, and is incorporated under, to sue and be sued. The roll of the Miners' Union of Butte contains the names of 1,530 members. The present officers are: President, Frank Hollywood; Vice-President, Alex. Pearse; Secretary, P. F. Boland; Treasurer, A. J. Harris; Warden, John Welsh; Conductor, Thos. Doyle; Recording Secretary, Jas. M. Reilly. The main object of the Miners' Union is self-protection in the matter of wages. Its sessions are held in secret, and it is a charitable institution, granting its members $8 a week benefits, in case of sickness, besides hiring nurses and showing them other attentions and kindness. They bury their deceased brethren under established rites and ceremonies, and in case of urgent need donate liberally to the families of deceased members. Their strength and thrift have increased with that of the camp; as an evidence of which they have built one of the finest structures to be seen in Montana to-day, known as Miners' Union Hall, located on Upper Main street. It is built of granite, and cost about $15,000.

The Union Guard of Butte was organized in March, 1883, by Capt. Samuel J. Reynolds, Lieut. Mitchell; Q. M., Wm. Moulder, and Thomas Trevaill, treasurer of the company. The original members are, Samuel Reynolds, W. H. Reynolds, W. H. Mitchell, George La Ford, George Ham, T. McCrimmon, J. Geach, Thomas Crapp, Wm. Moulder, Wm. Job, N. Tregear, Wm. Gerrans, S. Tonkin, Thomas Trevaill, John F. Pascoe, Harry Nichols, Stephen Thomas, John Odgers, Wm. Thomas, Andrew Hand, Simon Hauseworth, W. H. Tregloan, John Bozeman, T. Warren, Thomas Clark, A. Shepperd, Jos. Julian, V. Hancock, S. Hoar, A. Thomas, Henry Gundry, J. Job, A. Coombs, R. Coombs, A. G. Leiter, H. Hosking, C. Burge, R. Hobbe, M. Rickard, J. Blake, Geo. Clark, F. J. Taylor, W. E. Harris, T. Rodde, R. Nichols, —— Updegraff, J. J. Ealon, J. Fox, Geo. Pascoe, Geo. Thomas, J. Yates, Sol Lukey, T. Temby, John Gray, Joseph Callaway, J. A. McConville, Fred. Paul, Ed. Rodde, Wm. Doble, R. Rickard, and Nicholas Smitheram. The company's band of 18 performers is presided over by Prof. J. Viol (formerly the Alice band, October, 1881), and is the finest brass band west of the Rockies. The honorary members of the Union Guards are, Messrs. Medhurst, Williams, Wm. Hall, Geo. Irvin, 2d, Lee Mantle, N. J. McConnell, Maj. Warren, and Leyson. The company's flag was presented by Mr. Medhurst, in June, 1883. The officers for 1885-6 are named as follows: Captain, S. J. Reynolds; 1st Lieut., Jonathan Black; 2d Lieut., Thomas Trevail; 2d Junior Lieut., Wm. Doble; Orderly Sergeant, E. F. Page; Color Sergeant, Charles Gurge; Quartermaster Sergeant, James Geach; 1st Duty Sergeant, Albert Shepherd; 2d Duty Sergeant, Thomas Crapp; 3d Duty Sergeant, John Goldsworthy.

The Choral Harmony was organized at Butte in May, 1885, on a permanent basis.

It is contemplated by the Butte Leiderkranz society to incorporate with a capitalization of $20,000, the intention being to purchase grounds and erect a building for a hall, club-rooms, etc.

The Silver Bow Stock Growers' Association was organized in Butte on June 13, 1885. The officers are: President, Sample H. Orr; vice president, C. A. Small; secretary, J. W. Chapman; treasurer, Thos. E. Gardner.

The Butte branch of the Irish National Land League of America was organized June 16, 1883, with James Matthews, president; J. T. Sullivan, vice president; John H. Curtiss, corresponding secretary; James H. Lynch, financial secretary; Sam. Mulville, treasurer; James A. Murray, Patrick Conlon and John Maguire, trustees. What service this organization rendered to the cause of liberty is well known.

The Committee of Safety was organized in the summer of 1882, when the frequency of midnight burglaries and the assaults of footpads indicated that the city was infested by a band of desperate robbers. The object of the organization was not to defy the law, but to uphold and enforce it, and for mutual protection against the attacks of thieves and robbers. Some two hundred well known citizens were enrolled as members, among them some of the most substantial citizens in the community. Their edict was promulgated, warning all tramps and vagrants from the city, and the roads in every direction were thronged with the dangerous classes, seeking "pastures new and greener fields." Since then nothing has occurred to call the committee into action, unless it is indeed true, as alleged, that they have taken a hand in the flogging of a criminal.

The Montana Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized at Butte, August 1, 1883, when the following named officers were reported by the nominating committee: President, Mrs. Steele; vice-presidents, Mrs. F. E. W. Patten, Mrs. Zinn, Mrs. Monteith, Mrs. Walker and Mrs. L. A. Buzzard; corresponding secretary, Mrs. I. M. Moorehead; recording secretary, Mrs. Dolman; treasurer, Mrs. K. M. Shodair; superintendent of S. S., Mrs. Fred Lockley.

The literary and musical organizations of Butte are well founded, and, as society grows older, will form one of its most important elements.

SMALL SETTLEMENTS.

Walkerville is a modern village, one mile north of Butte. Rolla Butcher erected the first house there, January 30, 1877. It owes its existence to the great mining works located on the northern limits of Butte City. In 1878 the population of Walkerville was 364, classed as follows: twenty-one years and upward, 288; ten to twenty-one, 21; five to ten, 21; under five, 34. To-day the population is estimated at over 1,500. Business is represented as follows; Joseph Annear, hotel; Bielenberg & Falligan, meats; J. K. Bradley, blacksmith; Joseph Broughton, general store; Cameron & Blaisdell, saloon; Caplice, McCurrey & Co., grocers; John Cardigan, saloon; L. W. Foster & Co., grocers; G. Green, barber; Mrs. King, hotel; Jeff McNamie, saloon; O. McNulty, saloon; James Shea, saloon; Mrs. Stack, hotel; E. D. Sullivan, hotel; John Sweeney, saloon; Frank Wampler, shoemaker; T. B. Williams, saloon.

Gagnon District, just north of the limits of the town site of Butte, was located under the name Gagnon, February 21, 1877, by Patrick Meagher and Antoine Gagnon. The land in the neighborhood was, however, located in 1866 or 1867, by George O. Humphreys, who sold it to Colonel Thornton in 1869. Subsequently, G. O. Humphreys purchased an interest from Colonel Thornton. December 19, 1876, John C. Belk located the Anna Maria, and claimed the Gagnon location. This claim was carried to the United States Supreme court, and decided in favor of Colonel Thornton; but the colonel allowed the year to expire without representation, and Meagher & Gagnon re-located the claim under the latter's name. This claim being legal, Thornton purchased from them portions of their interests, while Timothy Kelly, Joseph Rosenthal and Joel W. Ransom purchased the remainder. During the year 1877 the new owners entered upon the work of development, using the windlass hoister until 1879, when the steam hoisting machinery was introduced.

Phillips Gulch mines, two and one half miles west of Butte, were discovered by John Phillips in September, 1869. Forty claims were entered by the recorder-elect, William Haynes. The Humphrey brothers began work on the cut and tunnel of the water ditch immediately after the claims were made.

Peterson Gulch was discovered by Joseph Cowan in 1866. The first mining companies were Adriance & Co., Joseph Cowan & Co.; Kelly, De Witt & Co.; Phillip McGovern and John McDermott. The Lucas and the Lawson & Allport ditches were purchased by the Stuart brothers, Keyser and Cowan, in September, 1869.

Divide, a settlement of 1871, twenty-seven miles southwest of Butte, now claims a population of about one hundred. The business interests of the village are represented as follows: F. E. Wunderlich, postmaster, wagon manufacturer and farmer; C. F. Wunderlich, livery and blacksmith; J. E. Branscome, rancher; T. Burton, rancher; J. Cartier, rancher; F. Copp, miner; Wm. Forrest, rancher and hotel; H. F. Fournier, rancher; Hartipee & Co., lime; T. C. Jackson, mules and horses; Jackson & Copp, cattle raisers; Jefferson Lovell, saw-mill; Joseph McMurrie, railroad ties; Moore & Kelkarney, ranchers; D. R. Parker, saw-mill; N. O. Partage, school teacher; R. Rurdest & Co., ranchers; Smith & Partage, silver mining; Tucker & Parks (J. H. Tucker), dairymen; A. J. White, railroad ties; R. K. Williams & Co., lime.

Grace is a small settlement on the border of Jefferson county, ten miles southeast of Butte, and the postal village of the district. Rich agricultural valleys as well as mines are in this neighborhood.

Melrose is a little village of 1881, with a pretty name and large expectations. A blacksmith shop, operated by W. L. Moore, formerly of Silver Star; a meat market kept by Ben Chester; a store and postoffice by J. G. Maddox, and other signs of progress are visible. Hotels are conducted by T. M. and W. L. Robins, E. B. Beckwith and Jasper Stacy. E. B. Fairfield conducts a meat market; W. G. Barkley is justice of the peace; Mrs. W. J. Barkley, school teacher; A. M. Shaw, railroad and telegraph agent; Z. C. Maddox, stock-grower and dealer, and James Peck, liquor dealer. The location on the Big Hole river offers water privileges.

Gunderson, a settlement of 1878, on Silver Bow creek, claims now a population of five hundred. In 1880 the population of Silver Bow and German creek valleys was only fifty. The business interests are: W. W. Adams, hotel; James Barry, saloon; Wm. Connor, carpenter; Dowling & Conroy, saloon; Mrs. C. Evans, hotel; Mrs. Mary Fletcher, hotel; Gunderson Bros. (Louis and Albert), general store and postoffice; Thomas Hamlin, blacksmith; John McAvoy, saloon; Thomas Ryan, carpenter; G. St. Mant, shoemaker; Charles Turner, blacksmith; Mrs. A. M. Westlake, hotel. No less than three ore mills are operated at this point.

Norwood is in Silver Bow county, fifteen miles from Glendale, and was named by the employes in honor of the little ten-year-old daughter of General Manager Knippenberg, Miss Mamie Norwood. The department established a postoffice at this place in 1882, and John M. Parfet, the superintendent of the Hecla, was appointed postmaster. The company's mines here yield daily twenty-five tons of iron, and the mines never looked better. Immense bodies of ore are developed, and a large quantity mined ready for hauling. The first settlement here was made in 1875.

MINES OF BUTTE.

So much has been said in this chapter, as well as in the general history and chapters devoted to personal reminiscences, regarding the mining history of this region, a short notice of the leading mines of Butte county is only necessary here.

Parrot Silver and Copper Mines.—In the spring of 1877 Achille F. Migron, of Torrington, Conn., and Franklin Farrel, of Ansonia, Conn., in connection with S. T. Hauser and A. M. Holter, of Helena, M. T., purchased the present Parrot mine, which has since been added to. It was allowed to remain idle until such time as there was a prospect of cheaper freights in and out of the Territory. Messrs. Farrel and Migron getting the stock subscribed, a company was formed and organized August 16, 1880, called the Parrot Silver and Copper Co., with Franklin Farrel, President; S. T. Hauser, vice-president; Thomas Wallace, Jr., secretary; A. F. Migron, agent. In the fall Mr. Migron selected a site for a smelter, and purchased land for the same in October, 1880. Contracted for and superintended the erection of works, since greatly enlarged and improved. In the spring of 1881 he selected the present site for a permanent shaft, and, with Benjamin Tibbey as mining captain, commenced the present development of the Parrot mine. The first run of copper matte was made in July, 1881. The result being satisfactory, more additional furnaces were immediately commenced, and buildings for the same were erected, which were in December brought to completion. The mine not being developed sufficiently, and the want of a concentrator to handle the low grade ore, prevented the running of all the furnaces. In November, 1881, Mr. Migron contracted for concentrating machinery, and suitable buildings were started. During the winter of 1882 and 1883 the present hoisting machinery and buildings were erected. July, 1882, Thomas Wallace was elected president; S. T. Hauser, vice-president; Thomas Wallace, Jr., sec. and treas. In January, 1883, Franklin Farrel was appointed managing trustee. In February, 1883, J. E. Gaylord was placed in charge of the works. June, 1883, Thomas Wallace was made president; S. T. Hauser, vice-president; J. E. Gaylord, sec. and treas.; Franklin Farrel, managing trustee. During 1883 the works were greatly enlarged, and the mine developed, at present being able to treat upwards of 300 tons of ore per day, 10,000,000 lbs. of matte, containing 6,600,000 lbs. copper, being produced in 1883. Value of product, including silver, upwards of $1,000,000. The product for 1884 equaled that of 1883. The plant now represents a capacity of 18,000,000 lbs. of copper annually.

Alice Gold Mining Co. was incorporated in February, 1878, and reorganized in December, 1879, capital stock, $10,000,000 in $25 shares, quoted December 20, 1884, at $2.40; last dividend December 1, 1884, 12½c per share—$50,000; total dividends to date, $550,000. This was the first mine of Butte placed on the N. Y. stock board, some time after its purchase by Walker Bros., of Salt Lake City, for the small sum of $25,000. The officers of the company are: Joseph R. Walker, president; Sam. S. Walker, vice-president; B. G. Raybould, secretary; Mat. H. Walker, treasurer; W. E. Hall, superintendent. Charles S. Warren, in his reminiscences, states that "this now famous mine was located on the second day of January, 1875, by Rolla Butcher. Joseph R. Walker, of Salt Lake, became the owner of the property early in the fall of 1876, and at once commenced the development of the property as 'The Alice Gold and Silver Mining Company.' There was erected a twenty-stamp mill, which, in the month of December, 1877, commenced to reduce ores. The mine is under the superintendence of Marcus Daly, who graduated in the Comstock, and is undoubtedly the ablest mining superintendent in Montana. The mill and all its operations are under the superintendence of Lathrop Dunn, and the success of the mill in working the ore to a very high per cent. is due to his experience, skill and ability." The machinery employed by the Alice Co. is of the most approved pattern, and includes a Cornish pump of 500 gallons per minute capacity. In 1880 the great sixty-stamp mill was constructed (west of the old mill) which enables the company to keep up its average output of $1,300,000 annually. The first bar of Alice bullion was shipped November 7, 1877, and silver bar No. 2,202 was shipped February 24, 1883, representing a total value of $4,404,000.

Magna Charta, or mine of the four ledges, is separated from the Alice by the Fraction claim. It is owned by the Alice company and operated under the same management. The old Alice mill (erected shortly after the mine was purchased) is one of twenty stamps located just south of the main shaft of this mine. Valdimere mine, owned and operated by the Alice company, is west of the Magna Charta. In 1883 a shaft was sunk and hoisting apparatus constructed, while in other directions the mine is worked from the levels of the Magna Charta, or mother lode.

Clear Grit introduced itself in 1872 as a silver lode, and converted itself in after years into a rich copper mine—the low-grade ore averaging $300 per ton. This location is one-quarter of a mile north of the city limits. Harry C. Kessler is superintendent.

Colusa, or the Meaderville copper mine, is owned by the Montana Copper Company, incorporated in 1879. The officers in 1884 were D. G. Littlefield, president; Adolph Lewisohn, secretary; Leonard Lewisohn, treasurer; Mark J. Mayer, manager; and E. Mueller, superintendent. The company's works were erected in 1880, under Alfred Wartenweiler, in which one hundred and fifty tons of low-grade ore are concentrated daily. The value of production in 1883 was $1,784,720 copper, and $318,700 silver; increased in 1884 and further increase in 1885.

Clark's Colusa was purchased by W. A. Clark in 1872. Speaking of the owner, C. S. Warren (1882) says: "Wm. A. Clark was the first to risk all his worth in milling the ores of Butte. If they had failed in richness he would have been a poor man. As it is he is said to have cleared half a million dollars in three years past in his mining and milling operations here. His success is one of the finest examples of what clear-headed energy will do in Montana. A dozen years ago he came to Montana a poor man. He first secured a mail contract from Missoula to Walla Walla, in Washington Territory, a distance of over four hundred miles, and carried the mail on horseback himself winter and summer. With his earnings he soon went into the firm of Donnell, Clark & Larabie, at Deer Lodge, a well known banking house, which is still in successful operation. He is the owner of the famous Original mine, the Frank Moulton, adjoining the Alice, which shows a most flattering prospect, the Anglo Saxon, which shows thousands of tons of forty ounce ore in sight, the Trivona, the richest base silver mine in camp, besides twenty other mines not yet fully developed. He and his brother, J. K. Clark, own the famous Dexter mill, twenty stamps, which has justly earned the name of "Old Reliable" from its regularity of working for three years past." John B. Read, writing in 1884, states that, "In 1872 W. A. Clark sunk a shaft on it about fifty feet deep and shipped a car load of the ore to Baltimore for treatment. The ore was hauled in wagons to Corinne, and although containing over thirty-five per cent. of copper, the excessive transportation charges prevented further working of the mine at that time. In 1882 work was resumed, and a vertical two-compartment shaft was begun, which has since reached a depth of three hundred feet, and sinking is still in progress. The present output is about one hundred and fifty tons per day. Of this amount about twenty tons is first-class ore, carrying thirty-five to forty per cent. copper, thirty tons second-class, carrying twenty-four per cent., and one hundred tons third-class, carrying fifteen per cent. The present hoisting machinery is only worked to half its capacity. An automatic tramway 1,300 feet long connects the mine with the new concentrating and smelting works. The present capacity of the concentrator is one hundred and thirty tons, and of the smelter seventy-five tons per day."

The Moulton Mining Co. reincorporated in 1884, is presided over by W. A. Clark, Eli H. Murray, vice-president; A. J. Johnson, secretary; J. R. Clark, treasurer; and J. K. Clark, superintendent. The stock, $2,000,000, is divided into 400,000 shares of $5 each. The company's property is west of the Alice, where the celebrated Moulton Mill of forty-stamps stands. The product in 1883 was $376,684, and in 1884, $600,000. A very important mining transaction took place on the 3d of July, 1884, by which the Moulton Mill and Mining Company of Utah took the name of the Moulton Mill and Mining Company of Montana. The transfer includes the mine, the forty-stamp mill, and all the properties of the former company. The condition of the mine at the close of 1884 is as follows: 400,000 shares, quoted December 20, 1884, $1.05; last dividend December 4, 1884, 7½c per share—$30,000; total dividends to date, $80,000. The Silver Safe is an extension of this mine and owned by the same company.

Clark's Fraction, owned by W. A. Clark, is an extension of the Alice, the ore averaging $40 per ton.

Lexington Mining Co. was incorporated in 1883. The officers are E. Renevey, president; G. De La Bouglis, vice-president; F. Medhurst, manager, and A. Wartenweiler, superintendent. Capital stock, four millions of dollars. The old Davis mill on this property commenced crushing ore in February, 1877, with the owner superintending. In 1880 the 500-feet shaft was sunk, and the 1,150-feet ore body struck. In August, 1881, the French company paid Judge Davis $1,000,000 in cash and $2,000,000 in preferred stock for the Lexington and the Allie Brown. From date of purchase to the close of 1884 no less than $560,000 has been paid to the stockholders. The 60-stamp mill is one of the most perfect in Montana, while the old Davis mill is now operated by Kellogg & Melvin on Zelia ore. In connection with the Lexington Judge Davis owned the Missoula, Allie Brown, Wappello, Anna and Ida, Atlantic, Transit and Alexander, all of which were patented, and nearly all of which are full claims. The condition of this property is shown as follows: Capital stock $4,000,000, in $100 shares; latest dividend, June 23, 1884, $4.62½ per share—$185,000; total dividends to date, $565,000. This is the mine which was purchased from the discoverer for a bob-tailed sorrel horse.

BUTTE.

The Mountain View Mine, property of C. X. Larabie, is one-quarter mile east of Anaconda, and is in fact an extension of the Anaconda and St. Lawrence ore beds, and like them is a silver and copper mine. In 1885 the present hoisting works took the place of the old-time whim horse, and the work of development entered upon with an earnestness which merits success.

The Original Mining Co. was incorporated in 1880. W. A. Clark is president; R. S. Jones, secretary, and J. R. Clark, treasurer. In 1864 the shaft was sunk to a depth of 90 feet, rendering it the senior in age of all mines in the district. The value of this property may be realized from the fact that within three years it has paid in clear profits over $100,000. The condition of this mining property at the close of 1884 is given as follows: Capital stock $1,500,000, in $25 shares; last dividend October 4, 1884, five cents per share—$3,000; total dividend to date, $114,000.

The Gagnon, says C. S. Warren, writing in 1881, "is owned by Thornton, Rosenthal, Ransome, and Reiley, and from the surface has proved to be one of the richest mines ever opened in the Western Territories. Over $200,000 in value of copper and silver ore has been shipped East, besides supplying a ten-stamp mill with the free ores of this mine. The working shaft is down 150 feet, showing native silver in large quantities. Joseph Rosenthal is the able and energetic superintendent of the mine and part owner." This mine has produced since 1876 over 120,000 tons of ore, and as the shaft has been extended to over 600 feet the product grows richer. Col. J. C. C. Thornton, W. A. Clark and others are interested in this great old wealth producer.

The Orphan Girl, about one and one-fourth miles west of the Court House, adjoins the Orphan Boy and Anglo-Saxon. This mine is worked under lease by Wallace, Moffatt, and Cleveland, and produces bullion valued at about $500,000 annually. In 1884 its true development was commenced, when its daily product of 30 tons of ore was crushed in the Dexter 15-stamp mill.

The Bell Silver and Copper Mine, one-half mile northeast of Anaconda, is presided over by James King, president and general manager. The ore carries about 25 oz. of silver and 20 per cent. of copper. The smelter is on the Butte side of the mine, two and one-half miles distant from the mine. The value of product for 1884 is placed at about half a million of dollars. Thomas Wallace, sr., is vice-president, and Thomas Wallace, jr., secretary and treasurer.

The Liquidator, located at Meaderville, is under the management of Wm. J. McDermott. This mine may be called an extension of the Colusa, which adjoins it on the west, and must be enumerated with the great mines of the camp.

Larmour Bros'. Mine, known as the Maria, shows a regular and continuous ore bed. This is a gold and silver rock of a rich class—the silver occurring as a sulphide, and the ore ranging in value from $75 to $500 per ton.

The Mabel, in Missoula gulch, is owned by A. W. Barnard & Co., who also owns the placer claims in the gulch. The Poser, a parcel of the Rainbow conformation, is now operated by the owners of the Mabel.

The Only Chance Mine was located in 1867, and continued to yield fair pay up to 1881. In April of that year the O. C. M. Co. was organized in New York to develop this golden property. Phil. M. Saunders was appointed superintendent, and under his administration the work of development is carried forward. The property is 17 miles distant from Butte in the Highland district. The company's gold mill was completed early in 1882. The Legal Tender mine is also under his supervision.

The Silver Bow Mining and Milling Co. was incorporated in 1881, with James A. Talbott, president. C. S. Warren, writing on the enterprise of the old company, says: "The company owns several good mines, among which are the rich La Plata, the Mount Moriah, Midnight, Josephine, Maximillian, Carlotta and Pawn Broker. All of these are paying mines and furnish sufficient ore to keep their mill supplied, although they occasionally run on custom rock to accommodate their neighbors. They have, at an expense of $140,000, erected one of the few first-class twenty-stamp mills in the Territory. It has automatic feeders and all the modern improvements. It runs with the regularity and smoothness of a good clock. It turns out from $45,000 to $48,000 per month of first-class silver bullion. The success of the mill is owing in great part to the personal superintendence of its owners, viz: James A. Talbott, general manager; Richard S. Jones, assayer and chemist; John Downs, superintendent of mines, and Dennis Leary. R. B. Wallace, superintendent of the mill, is a splendid specimen of a Nevada-educated mill man, and thoroughly understands his business." In later days the development of this series of rock is confined to the Josephine and the Gray Rock, both of which produce about fifty tons of ore daily, which is prepared in the company's thirty-stamp mill, one mile from Butte on the Helena road.

The Original Butte Mining Co. was incorporated in 1881 with capital placed at $5,000,000. Edwin F. Childs is president; J. W. Lilienthal, vice-president; George B. Childs, secretary, and Theo. M. Lilienthal, treasurer. This company has carried the shaft down over 300 feet, and erected first-class mining machinery. The Vulcan Mining Co.'s Tecumseh is owned by this company. Lionel R. Nettrie managed this mine.

Stevens Gold and Silver Mining Co. was incorporated in 1881 with capital placed at $4,000,000. A. Wartenweiler is president, and Mallock Davis, secretary. The shaft of the Stevens mine is over 200 feet, showing a vein of good ore ten feet in width. This has produced over a quarter of a million of dollars.

Mountain Consolidated Mining Co. was incorporated in 1881, with a capital of $4,000,000. Robert C. Chambers is president; M. B. Brownlee, vice-president; Walter Mackay, secretary and treasurer.

North Star and Salisbury Consolidated Mining Co. was incorporated in 1881, with capital placed at $2,000,000. C. F. Musigbrod is president; Mallock Davis, secretary, and John Hauswirth, treasurer.

The Ramsdell Parrott, near the junction of Wyoming and East Copper, is owned and operated by Joseph Ramsdell. The shaft is 300 feet in depth, showing a sixteen-feet vein of twenty-six per cent. copper ore, and sixteen oz. silver per ton.

The Shakespeare Parrott, so long under the management of John Longmaid, is a thirty-six per cent. copper mine. The concentrator and mining machinery used by this company are of the most approved pattern.

The Shoubar, owned by Le Caffe, Barrett & Co., adjoins the Tecumseh, shows 100 oz. of silver and $20 gold per ton. A steam hoist is the only equipment of this promising mine.

Amy & Silversmith Consolidated Mining Co. was incorporated in 1881, with a capital stock placed at $4,000,000. Hiram Knowles is president, with G. W. Irvine, secretary.

Colorado Smelting and Mining Co. was incorporated in 1883, with stock placed at $1,000,000. N. P. Hill is president; W. A. Clark, vice-president; H. R. Wolcott, secretary and treasurer, and Henry Williams, manager.

The Anaconda, St. Lawrence and other great mines, which naturally belong to the Butte mineral section, are in other counties, and to the history of such counties the reader is directed.

CONCLUSION.

In closing this chapter, the statistics collected by John B. Read and his deductions therefrom are selected. He states, "The mines within a radius of three miles of Butte produced during the year 1884 more money than Arizona, Nevada or California; more than twice as much as Utah; more than Idaho and New Mexico combined, and almost as much as Colorado. In no part of the world is mining prosecuted on a more extensive scale or with better results than at Butte. The capabilities of ore production seem to increase with development, and this fact is best illustrated by the extensive additions recently made to the Anaconda, Parrott, Montana, Colusa and Clark's Colusa concentrating and smelting plants. The quantity of copper ore shipped and treated in Butte in 1884 was fully twice as large as that of the previous year. The silver mining interests of Butte never looked as well as now. The Lexington, Moulton and Alice are now enrolled among the list of regular dividend payers, and a score of smaller mines, some of which are destined to become noted, are paying handsome profits to private investors. No other mining camp gives employment to more miners, and in no other place do the disbursements for wages reach a larger sum. The monthly pay rolls of eight of the leading Companies aggregate as follows:—Anaconda, $150,000; Lexington, $50,000; Parrott, $40,000; Colorado, $35,000; Moulton, $30,000; Alice, $50,000; Montana, $55,000; Silver Bow, Bell and Dexter, $60,000; Miscellaneous, $150,000; or a total of $620,000. These are eloquent figures in proof of their richness, extent and permanency. One of the very best evidences of the faith which the people of Butte entertain in the value of the mines, is the amount of money expended in the importation and erection of steam hoisting works. Heavy boilers and engines are in place on nearly all the following named mines, all of which are properties of ascertained richness:—Shaft of the Alice, 800 feet; Lexington, 650; Bell, 500; Gagnon, 600; Original Butte, 300; Anaconda, 800; Andy Johnson, 100; Salvador, 260; Mountain Boy, 300; Star West. 400; Colusa, 600; Gray Rock, 300; Vulcan, 130; Magna Charta, 600; Stevens, 200; Moulton, 500; Parrott, 350; Original, 400; Morning Star, 200; Isele, 200; Cora, 200; Belle of Butte, 400; Clear Grit, 400; Late Acquisition, 300; Modoc Extension, 200; Wabash, 100; Sheridan, 100; Shonbar, 325; Wild Bill, 150; Goldsmith No. 2, 100; Liquidator, 200; Clark's Colusa, 400; Mountain View, 600; Washoe, 212; Neptune, 200; Pollock, 100; St. Lawrence, 650; Ramsdell Parrott, 260; Shakespeare, 260; Clark's Fraction, 300; Mohawk, 125; Valdemere, 300; Poser, 200; Parrott, 300; Orphan Girl, 160; Silver Safe, 150; Original, 400; Elm Orlu, 80; Gambetta, 80; Adelaide, 200; Sunny Side, 130; Gold Flint, 160; Margaret, 100; Diamond, 160; High Ore, 160; Rock Island, 150. About 40 cars, containing about 400 tons of copper ore and matte, daily leave the Butte depot, destined either for Baltimore or Liverpool and Swansea. The five concentrators and smelters of Butte daily treat ore as follows:—Anaconda, 500 tons; Parrott, 300; Colusa, 300; Colorado, 75; Clark's Colusa, 150; Bell, 50; or an aggregate of 1,375 tons. Copper mines not connected with reduction works produce ore daily as follows:—Liquidator, 100 tons, Mountain View, 50; Ramsdell Parrott, 25; and other mines (estimated) 75, or a total of 250 tons. The silver mills are treating ore daily as follows:—Alice, 90 tons; Lexington; 50; Moulton, 40; Silver Bow, 30; Dexter, 30; Old Lexington, 10; making a grand total of ore handled daily in Butte of 1,875 tons.

"There are four mineral belts or parent lodes in the district, with a trend almost due east and west. On the north is the Rainbow, on which are located the Goldsmith No. 2, Rising Sun, Silver Safe, Amy, Silversmith, Moulton, Alice, Clark's Fraction, Magna Charta, Valdemere, Poser, Elm Orlu and Black Rock. Next, about 1,000 feet south, is a double series of prominent mines—the Lexington, Allie Brown, Josephine, Burnett, Mountain, Wake-up Jim, Bell, Grey Rock, Rock Island and others. Still further south is the great copper belt on which are located the Original Butte, Gagnon, Original, Parrott, Anaconda, St. Lawrence, Mountain View, and others of less magnitude and development. The fourth, or southern system, forms a part of what is called the Black Chief fissure, which is of vast extent though undeveloped. Running almost parallel with these four great lode systems are hundreds of claims of less extent, but of greater richness as far as they have been explored. In the district of Butte 4,000 claims have been located. The ore occurs in fissure veins of wonderful strength and regularity, in a granite country rock. These lodes may be traced over long distances by their prominent outcroppings. They vary in width from three to fifty feet, the Original, Anaconda, St. Lawrence and Mountain View being exceptionally wide. The pay streaks measure from two to six feet in width as a rule, and nearly all the lodes down to water level, which varies from twenty to fifty feet, are decomposed to such an extent as to render the ores friable and easily worked. In some of the copper mines the surface ores carried only a low grade of silver-bearing rock and little copper above water level, while below water, so far as explorations have yet been carried, the ores are partially oxidized, which accounts for the high percentage of copper they contain, and renders them easy of reduction. The ores may be graded into four classes—milling, smelting, concentrating and shipping. The first is stamped dry, chloridized and amalgamated, and averages in value about $40 per ton. The second carries from twenty to thirty per cent. of copper, and some of them from $15 to $60 per ton in silver, and is first calcined and then smelted to a 60 per cent. matte. The third assays from ten to eighteen per cent. copper, and the fourth is a high grade copper ore, sometimes carrying silver. This is shipped in a crude state to Baltimore or England, and carries from thirty to forty per cent. copper. Under the reduced schedule rates recently adopted by the Union Pacific Company, it is possible to profitably ship copper ore carrying over twenty-five per cent. The cost to England is about $26 per ton, and this is likely to be still further reduced."

RETROSPECT.

Scarce twenty years have passed away since the pioneers of this county built their cabins around the mining claims, and wished for the day, to see the narrow Indian trails yield precedence to roads made by the hand of man, to lines of travel connecting with the east and west and south through the darkness of the night; to see a city created in the solitude of the mountains, and the mighty rivers overcome and bridged from shore to shore. The places he knew in those days primeval have passed into obscurity, and their trials become as a tale that is told. The lives of men to-day are as holidays compared with those of men who were identified with the development and cultivation of this district. Life in those days was attended with unlimited hardships and privations, without the possession of a compensating number of blessings and privileges. The mighty achievements that have since been made are the result of small beginnings, supplemented by constant industry, daring enterprise and untiring energy. The waste places have been made to yield abundant harvests, villages and cities have arisen as if by magic, and civilization and the arts "soar phœnix-like to Jove." The marts of trade and traffic, and the work-shops of the artisan are thronged; a common school system increasing in value and influence with each succeeding year, has been established, and children of the rich and poor press forward, eager to participate in the benefits thereby afforded. Churches have been built, and a Christian ministry ordained for the cultivation of a religious life, the promotion of piety, the inculcation of morality and virtue. The press, the archimedean lever which moves the world, sends forth floods of light to illuminate the land and benefit the sons of men. Railroads are completed to facilitate the acquisition of independence, and the electric telegraph and the telephone shorten the intervals of space at the behest of mankind. As these pages are read, bright memories will blossom out of the shadowy past, glorifying and beautifying its dimness. Many herein mentioned have long since gone, like visions of the beautiful, to be seen no more. Many yet remain who have almost reached the biblical limits of human life, and are waiting to say, "Now let thy servant depart in peace," leaving as a heritage to their descendants, in long years hence, the ripe and perfect glory of a domain of which they laid the foundations. While a large number of those who participated in the foundation of the county, sleep after their labors, and their works do follow them, an equally large number remain who have survived the rush of matter and wreck of worlds, and contemplate the scene as a Rock of Ages cleft for the good and faithful servant.

CHAPTER XXX.

YELLOWSTONE COUNTY.

THIS division of eastern Montana may be said to grow out of the beginnings of commercial life on the Upper Yellowstone,—to have its mainstay in the enterprises which followed the work of railroad construction, and to base its hopes and ambitions on all that its location and physical characteristics promise for its future. From the beginning of Billings the people looked forward to the time when the district of which it was the trade center should be separated from Custer county, and the new town declared the seat of justice. Under date of January 28, 1883, H. H. Mund, F. H. Porter, Ed. B. Covely, Van Cleve and Wadsworth, with many other citizens, addressed the following letter to the Independent: "We thought it would be well to write you in regard to the formation of a new county off the western end of Custer. At the republican and democratic convention, held at Miles City last fall, it was understood and agreed by both parties that a division should be made by the next legislature. Under this agreement all the officers except the two members of the Assembly were given to the eastern end of the county, so as to save the expense of electing officers for the older county. The formation of this new county is a positive necessity. Our financial condition is becoming embarrassed, and the enormous expense of traveling to and returning from the county seat, attending the session of the district court, is piling up a debt that we are unable to bear any longer. The county is now settling up very fast, and increasing in population and wealth. All of the land in the large valley in which Billings is situated is now taken up, and a large proportion will be put in cultivation next spring. We also have a large field of good grazing land, which is now covered with cattle, sheep and horses. We assure you that we are amply able to take care of ourselves, and that the taxpayers throughout the length and breadth of Custer county are in favor of this division." While this letter was being printed, the house of representatives had actually approved of the establishment of such a county as the citizens of Billings desired. The measure was subsequently agreed to by the council, and was approved by the governor. The new county of Yellowstone embraces that portion of the territory lying north of the Yellowstone river, and extending to the Muscleshell, and east from White Beaver creek to a line running north by east from the Yellowstone, opposite the mouth of the Big Horn, to the Muscleshell.

The county jail was erected in 1883–4 at Billings. The assessed valuation in 1883 was $1,663,553, increased to $1,930,470 in 1884, and over two millions of dollars in 1885. The annual statement of Yellowstone county, published in April, 1885, shows its indebtedness, minus the debt due Custer county, to be $12,151.82. This debt is estimated by the people of Custer county to be about $60,000, while the authorities of Yellowstone place it at a few thousand dollars. The representatives of the county, in the Council and House of Representatives, elected in 1884 are: F. L. Greene, councilman from Dawson and Yellowstone; W. H. Norton, House of Representatives. The delegates to the Constitutional Convention of 1884 were: F. M. Proctor and F. M. Greene. The officers of the county elected in 1884 are: John R. King, sheriff; E. B. Camp, treasurer; F. W. Lee, clerk and recorder, John Tinkler, deputy clerk of the District Court; Jas. R. Goss, Judge of Probate; O. F. Goddard, county attorney; F. M. French, assessor; S. R. Oldaker, surveyor; J. H. Rinehart, coroner; D. M. Parker, M. D., county physician; Anna S. Shuart, superintendent of schools; W. B. Webb, E. S. Tutt, Omar Hoskins, commissioners. The political condition of the county in November, 1884, is shown in the following statement of votes given for Congressional Delegate:

BILLINGS.

Billings, the county seat of Yellowstone county, was founded in June, 1882, and named in honor of Frederick Billings, president of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. The town is built near the Yellowstone river, in the vicinity of Coulson, and where the Northern Pacific Railroad emerges from the old Crow reservation, to the north side of the river for the first time. Above it is a beautiful tract of valley land for thirty miles, all under a large ditch owned by the M. & M. L. I. C. North of it are the coal beds, extensive ranges for stock and boundless bench lands south of the Missouri river, while across the river, on the south, are the rich regions of the Crow reservation. This location can be depended upon—a location that will make it a railroad town, a cattle shipping, bullion shipping, and a town backed up by numerous and well-paying farms. It has grown with almost unprecedented prosperity, and it now waits the development of its resources and the investment of capital. In short, it is only a matter of time when Billings shall take its position as one of the leading towns of the whole northwest.

The history of the city is summarized from the sketch prepared, in December, 1884, by Alex. Devine. He says: "The history of the town embraces but a brief period, although Coulson, which is now comprised in one of the additions to the town site, was known as a point of considerable importance as early as 1876, when it was a stage station and steamboat landing, with a few buildings clustering around the store of P. W. McAdow. The approach of the Northern Pacific construction force in 1881–82, infused a new life and spirit into Coulson, which was even at that time a place of abundant promise, and men of foresight and experience had already begun to recognize that either there, or in the vicinity, a town would be built which would supply the demands of the large and developing surrounding country. A number of capitalists, who, in addition to noting these facts, had concluded to take advantage of them, associated themselves together under the name of the Minnesota and Montana Land and Improvement Company, and in March, 1882, purchased the railroad land in the Clark's fork bottom, and set apart 840 acres of the same adjoining Coulson, which they immediately proceeded to lay off into the present town-site of Billings. At this time, March, 1882, there was not a habitation of any kind within the borders of the town-site. Late in April, 1882, a building was erected by the railroad company for the accommodation of their engineers, and about the same time H. Clark & Co. opened a stock of merchandise in a building erected for the purpose. These buildings and the residence of F. B. Kennard, embraced the town of Billings up to May, 1882. Soon after that time, the beauty and advantage of the location having become generally known, hundreds flocked thither. The majority, recognizing the many advantages of the town, remained; and so sudden was the transition from an open prairie to a flourishing town, that it earned the name of the 'Magic City.' There are now in the town, exclusive of Coulson, over five hundred substantial buildings, and the merchants of Billings, having a very large territory tributary to them, do an immense business; the firm of H. Clark & Co. alone having sold, during the last seven months, $200,000 worth of goods, and P. W. McAdow during the same period having sold not less than $120,000 worth. The population of Billings is estimated at between 1,500 and 2,000, and is composed of the two best elements which meet in Montana, viz.: the men who have spent many years in the western country and have profited by their pioneer experience, and smart young business men from the East who are desirous of pushing their fortunes into this rich territory. Billings at no time possessed any attractions for the migratory western population, that, while always in search of some fresh excitement, are not the best class of citizens to build up a town on a solid basis; the society of the town will therefore compare favorably with that of any western town of its size, and would even bear comparison with eastern towns of much larger population.

"There are four church societies in Billings—the Catholic, Methodist Episcopal, Protestant Episcopal and the Congregational. The latter now worships in one of the largest and handsomest churches in the Territory, the gift of Frederick Billings, who also contributed $4,000 for the erection of the $15,000 school-house which was completed in January, 1885, when a substantial jail and jailer's residence, erected at a cost of $10,000, was ready for occupation. A number of societies are in active existence in Billings. A Masonic lodge, a literary society, a library association, a young men's social club, a ladies' guild of the Episcopal church, a ladies' society of the Congregational church, and the Knights of Pythias and Odd Fellows are now organizing their respective societies.

"Two newspapers, the Herald and the Post, have been published since the foundation of the town, and on April 1, 1883, the Daily Herald made its appearance and continues to meet with a fair measure of success.* An artesian well company was organized and incorporated by several of the citizens, and active boring operations commenced some months since. At the present writing, the drill has penetrated over 900 feet without striking flowing water, but the company is determined to drill until they do strike some. At Billings the stock yards are the most extensive which the Northern Pacific has along its line, it being one of the largest, if not the largest, stock-shipping point on the road. The usual railroad buildings at the division point have been erected by the Northern Pacific, comprising a round house, machine shops, etc. There are four first-class hotels in the town, all comparing favorably with the usual Western places of entertainment. The Marquis de Mores, realizing the importance of the position which Billings retains to the cattle and grazing country of Eastern Montana, has contracted to build large slaughtering and refrigerating establishments here."

Incorporation of the City.—Under the act approved March 10, 1885, the following described territory was set off and ordered to be organized as the City of Billings, viz.: "The south half of section 33, township 1 north, range 26 east, and the south-east quarter of the south-east quarter of section 32, township 1 north, range 26 east and section 3, in township 1 south, range 26 east, containing an area of 1,000 acres." The charter was ordered to be submitted to the inhabitants within the boundaries specified in April for approval, and Peter Larson, Albert L. Babcock, Sidney H. Irwin, Louis A. Fenske, and John W. Ramsay were constituted commissioners to act until the first board of aldermen should be qualified. The officers of the town of Billings for 1885 are: Justices of the peace, J. D. Matheson, R. T. Allen; constable, J. H. Bloom; road supervisor, M. B. Rademaker; fire warden, W. H. VanSinden. The officers of the city for 1885 are named as follows: Mayor, John Tully; clerk and attorney, E. N. Harwood; assessor and treasurer, Fred Sweetman; marshal, H. Terrell; deputy marshal, W. F. LeRoy; police magistrate, J. D. Matheson; city physician, J. H. Rinehart. M. D.; aldermen, L. H. Fenske, L. Whitney, J. J. Walk, H. W. Rowley, S. H. Erwin, C. E. Westbrook.

*The Herald and Post newspapers consolidated May 5, 1885, and is issued every morning as the Daily Gazette, and weekly as the Montana Stock Gazette.

STILLWATER. YELLOWSTONE VALLEY, YELLOWSTONE CO.

Board of Trade.—The Billings board of trade is now under the direction of the following named officers: H. H. Mund, president; John Tinkler, corresponding secretary; J. Breuchaud, recording secretary.

The Crow Lease.—No legalized wrong doing brought forth better organized opposition than that which is known as the Crow Lease. The Billings board of trade, composed of a large number of members, who are represented in that association by H. H. Mund, president; C. L. Tomlinson, treasurer; Paul L. Van Cleve, recording secretary; and J. D. Matheson, corresponding secretary, determined to investigate the Crow lease as far as in them lay. Accordingly, January 27, 1885, pursuant to the permission granted by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and at the suggestion of Henry L. Dawes, chairman of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, Jules Breuchaud, Paul McCormick, and Walter Matheson, the committee selected by the Billings Board of Trade, left Junction for the new Crow agency on the Little Horn to investigate the circumstances attending the negotiation and execution of the lease from the Crow tribe to John T. Blake and J. C. Wilson, supposed to represent a Colorado syndicate. They were accompanied by A. M. Quivey, Deputy U. S. Marshal, and Geo. R., more familiarly known as "Crow Davis," said to be one of the most accomplished Crow talkers in the country. Upon arriving at the agency Major Armstrong, U. S. Indian agent for the Crows, furnished the committee the following list, as showing the numerical status of the Crows and their relative strength as represented by chiefs, lodges and following:

Names of Chiefs.	Lodges.	Persons.	Names of Chiefs.	Lodges.	Persons.
Plenty Coos	47	294	Yellow Crane	23	118
War Man	29	168	Big Forehead	17	100
Takes-the-Wrinkle	30	198	Bull Goes Hunting	16	99
Bear Wolf	27	153	Spaniard	13	93
Bear-in-the-Water	24	138	Big Ox	15	93
Old Dog	24	138	Crazy Head	15	91
Two Belly	29	138	Pretty Eagle	15	88
Fringe	23	136	Horse Guard	13	87
Thin Belly	22	132	Long Elk	13	81
Old Guts	20	127	Bull Nose	12	75
Old Nest	17	120	Crazy-Sister-in-Law	10	60
Spotted Horse	20	119	Old Crow	10	58
Iron Bull	16	116
Medicine Crow	15	114	Total	514	3,123

It was then agreed that the chiefs, or as many of them as could be procured, should be examined. During the investigation fourteen of them appeared and testified. The evidence obtained pointed out the fact that the Indians were coerced into signing the lease. Thirteen chiefs, who, according to the rules of the Indian Department, represent over 1,400 members of the tribe, emphatically demanded that the lease be canceled. Agent Armstrong and Agency Clerk C. H. Barstow aided the committee in the investigation.

Business Houses.—The business circle of the city in 1884 was made up as follows:

Allan, Mrs. William A., milliner.
Allan & Bearup (William A. Allan, Albert Bearup), dentists.
Allison, William J., jeweler.
Allen, Robert T., lawyer.
Anderson, Robert J., proprietor Windsor hotel.
Ash & Boots (T. S. Ash, William A. Boots), brewery.
Babcock, John A., real estate.

Babcock & Miles (Albert L. Babcock, Arthur W. Miles), hardware.
Barney, Charles E., furniture.
Barth, George H., blacksmith.
Bates, Lesley, insurance and real estate, Montana ave.
Bennie, William A., manager W. U. Telegraph Co.
Berrick, Charles M., proprietor Park hotel.
Billings Opera house, Joseph Ryan.
Billings & Benton Stage Line, T. C. Powers, manager; Walter Burke, superintendent.
Bole, H. H. & Co. (Henry H. Bole, Dennis M. Parker), drugs, cor. Montana ave. and 28th st.
Bond, John C., carriage manufacturer.
Childs, Charles G., agent N. P. R. R.
Clark, H. & Co. (Heman Clark), general store, Minnesota ave.
Comer, James, barber.
DeMaris, Charles, live stock.
Devine & Matheson (Alexander Devine, Walter Matheson).

Fire of May 2, 1885.—The following account of the fire of May 2, 1885, is taken from FRUIT FARM & RES. OF HENSLEY & PETERS, RAPIDS, YELLOWSTONE CO. MONT.

RESIDENCE OF PAUL Mc CORMICK, JUNCTION, — YELLOWSTONE CO, MONT.

the Enterprise: "Fire was discovered in the Farmers' hotel, a two-story log building, a relic of the early days, but unoccupied except by two lodgers, J.W. Cobb and A. N. Thompson, of the local newspaper corps. The building was situated in block 111 on the main business street of the town, next east of the block burned last year. The flames spread each way and burned every building in the block except the Park hotel, a large building on a side street. The principal losers were: First National Bank, Tully & Freese, hardware; Gazette Publishing Company, Mrs. Fisch, building; Mrs. Lind, dry goods; Mrs. Cohen, building; M. Susman, building and general stock; W. R. Finch, photographic outfit and stock of liquors; G. B. Hulme, building; H. H. Mund, building. There were numerous other sufferers, but their losses were comparatively small. A liberal estimate places the total loss at $60,000. The insurance was a trifle over $30,000. One of the heaviest losers was the Gazette Publishing Company, consolidated from the Herald, Post and Rustler firms, and the combined printing outfits had that day been moved into a building in the burned block. Some of the type was saved, but mostly in the form of "pi;" a job press and a small card press were also rescued. The company's loss is fully $5,500, insured for $2,750. The First National Bank lost little or nothing by the fire. Its building was fully insured and its vault withstood the ordeal without damage to its contents. A small building has been erected over the vault in which to do business temporarily, and work on the bank's new building, some time in progress, is being rushed with all speed. J. W. Cobb was in bed in the building in which the fire started, and at that time. When he awoke the flames were all around him, and when he was rescued he was very badly burned and cut by forcing his way through a window. He is a printer, and was proprietor of the late Rustler; he was at one time proprietor of the defunct Miles City Press. The origin of the fire is a mystery. An unknown woman was seen to leave the spot where the flames originated about ten minutes before they were discovered."

Banks.—The First National Banking Co. of Billings, successors to Stebbins, Mund & Co., was incorporated with an authorized capital of $250,000 and a paid-up capital of $75,000. The officers, stockholders and directors are named as follows: W. R. Stebbins, president; W. L. Peck, vice-president; H. H. Mund, cashier; H. L. Richardson, asst-cashier; P. W. McAdow, John McGinness, John R. King, G. A. Griggs, J. W. Collins; Frederick Billings, N. Y. City; W. G. Reeve, Peru, Ill.; S. J. Anthony, Denver, Colo. This house conducts a general banking and collection business.

Churches.—The churches are the Congregational, Catholic, Protestant Episcopal and Methodist Episcopal. The Congregational church of Billings was completed in July, 1883, and is a fine structure, but not as handsome upon the outside as a structure costing $10,000 should have been made. Rev. S. A. Wallace is pastor. In June, 1883, Father Palladino, of Helena, made arrangements for the building of a Catholic mission, consisting of a church, school and hospital. Fred Foster donated the ground, consisting of about two acres, on which the church was erected. Rev. J. B. Holton is pastor. In July, 1883, Rev. Mr. Riggin, superintendent of Methodist missions, visited Billings, and secured lots for church buildings, Fred Foster donating the land in his addition to the original town site. Rev. S. E. Snider is pastor at Billings. The Protestant Episcopal church is the most recent religious organization. Rev. Alfred Brown is pastor of this mission as well as of that of Livingstone.

Schools.—The school building of District No. 2 (Billings) was erected in 1883. In July of that year the sum of $4,000 was contributed by Frederick Billings toward the building fund, and this sum was supplemented by $8,000 7 per cent. bonds of the district, sold by H. H. Mund, chairman of the Board of School Trustees, and prior to completion by a third subscription aggregating $15,000.

Societies.—A meeting of Master Masons was held in the court house on July 28, 1883. Judge McGinness occupied the chair and F. B. Stoneman acted as secretary. A resolution was passed to form a lodge, to be known as Ashlar Lodge, and requisition to that effect was signed by those present. The following officers were named as the first principal officers of the new lodge, viz: S. H. Erwin, master; F. B. Stoneman, senior warden; Alex. Devine, junior warden. S. H. Erwin is W. M. and John McGinniss, secretary, of this lodge.

Yellowstone Lodge, A. O. U. W., was organized last year with a large membership. W. B. Webb is M. W. and B. S. Scott, recorder.

Grand Army of the Republic, Post No. 24, is a new organization. J. R. Goss is commander and M. G. Mains, adjutant. There are other secret and benevolent societies represented here, but not yet organized.

The Billings Gun Club elected the following officers in March, 1885: president, A. C. Wustum; vice-president, A. H. Hersey; treasurer, E. B. Camp; recording secretary, W. H. VanSiden, corresponding secretary, Walter Mathews.

Settlements and Villages.—The early settlements of this county monopolize, so to speak, much of the early history of the Yellowstone valley, and for this reason occupy a great deal of space in the general history of the Territory, and many special references in the history of the old county of Gallatin.

Coulson, one hundred and forty-nine miles from Bozeman, is at the foot of a level valley, thirty miles long by eight to twelve wide, where several farms have been opened and profitable results obtained; among others that of McAdow & Westbrook, who, in 1879, cultivated four hundred acres to oats. The ferry across the Yellowstone en route from Bozeman to Fort Custer was at this place, where, in addition to a postoffice, is found a telegraph office, store, saloon, and a large two-story hotel, owned and conducted by John Alderson. Here a saw-mill was erected and a ferry established. Notwithstanding the advances made by Billings, two miles distant, Coulson not only holds the place she won before modern enterprise raised the magic city, but also shows signs of advancement. The village is connected with Billings by street railway, built in the summer of 1883. J. J. Alderson presides over the destinies of the street car railway, which runs about two miles —to Coulson. The trip is made in twelve minutes over a very smooth track and many curves. Mr. Alderson undoubtedly understands the construction of a railroad as he has made this one that all may be proud of. This is the first street railway ever established in Montana, and while it may never be made to pay large dividends it certainly bespeaks for its progenitors and stockholders a very enterprising spirit. Its patrons are those who ride solely for pleasure, and Mr. Alderson has had attached to every ticket a coupon which entitles every rider to two glasses of beer from Ash & Boot's brewery at Coulson.

Park City, twenty-three miles west of Billings, on the Yellowstone, is a settlement of 1882, with about 290 inhabitants. The location is singularly beautiful. The community is made up as follows: J. E. Clawson, hardware, notions and postoffice; Dunn, Lee & Co., general store; J. B. Emerson, telegraph and express agent; A. D. Lidle, saloon; J. P. Lidle, hotel; W. F. Meyer, lawyer and lumber; O. E. Miller, general store; L. Pevey, insurance agent; J. P. Rhoells, druggist; C. R. Rugg, justice of peace; F. R. St. John, carpenter; Mrs. F. R. St. John, milliner; E. P. Searls, carpenter. An irregating ditch, thirty-nine miles in length, is now contributing its wealth of water to the village and neighborhood.

Stillwater, twenty miles north of the hard coal mining region, opposite the mouth of Stillwater creek, or Little Rosebud, and east of Keiser creek, dates its beginning as a village back to 1882. The business interests of the village are represented by the following men: C. P. Abbott, carpenter and justice; Alexander Countryman, carpenter; C. H. Countryman, saloon; H. Countryman & Son, hotel and postoffice; E. C. Culver, saloon; C. D. Fox, meats; M. G. Martindale, general store; W. H. Morton, general store. Horace Countryman and son settled at Stillwater in 1875. In 1872 Andrew Bilman built a house on the creek, and, where Hoppy now is, located. Later a man named Quinn purchased the Bilman place, and conducted it alone. Bilman is yet opposite Benson's Landing.

Merrill, nine miles west of Stillwater, just east of the Gallatin county line, is the name given to a new depot on the Northern Pacific railroad.

Carlton is the name of a settlement on the Northern Pacific railroad, west of Billings.

Huntley, ten miles below Coulson and one hundred and fifty-nine miles east of Bozeman, is situate in a small fertile valley in Gallatin county, but the name extends north of the river. It is the center of an agricultural and stock-growing district, and claims a postoffice, two stores, a hotel and a blacksmith shop. It was originally a stage station, but owing to the arrival at that point of the steamer F. Y. Batchelor, July 6, 1879 (Capt. Grant Marsh), and the landing of fifty tons of freight for Bozeman consignees, the place assumed the importance which would attach itself to the head of Yellowstone navigation. Black, Daniels, Hoskins and McGirl were the first settlers. In 1877 Black & Daniels kept a supply point for their trains going up and down the river. A postoffice was established in March, 1878, RANCH & RES. OF EDWARD CARDWELL JR, NEAR STILLWATER, MONT.

RESIDENCE & RANCH OF B.F. PEARSON, NEAR MERRILL, YELLOWSTONE VALLEY MONT.

and the first postmaster was Omar Hoskins. The postoffice was called Huntley, formerly named Baker's Battle Ground, by hunters. Omar Hoskins, who owns a ranch at Huntley, claims to be the first white man to locate between the Crow agency and the mouth of Tongue river. At first he had no neighbors within two hundred miles. He was there when the Nez Perces went through, and was fortified in six or seven log-houses garrisoned by twenty-one men. The garrison had 7,000 rounds of cartridges to deposit in them should they come.

Junction City (towns 4 and 5 N., R. 33 and 34 E.), 102 miles west of Fort Keogh, nearly opposite the mouth of the Big Horn, and forty miles north of Fort Custer, is contemporary with Terry's Landing, two miles above, on the right bank of the river. The population of Junction City and the neighboring settlement of Sage Brush in 1880, was forty-one. The railroad depot is in Gallatin county.

Sherman.—On the north side of the Yellowstone, opposite the valley in which Custer and Riverside stations of the Northern Pacific railroad are situate, is Sherman, about 98 miles west of Fort Keogh. In the fall of 1879 there were 31 ranches in the neighborhood of this settlement.

Modern Indian Troubles.—The murder of settlers by Piegan Indians, in February, 1885, has not found mention in the chapter devoted to petty Indian wars. As the trouble took place in this county, the event is recorded here. In February, 1885, five Piegan Indians made a raid, from their reservation, crossed the Yellowstone at Clark's Fork river, to the Crow reservation, and stole 53 ponies from Plenty Coves, a Crow chief. They ran off these ponies, and picked up a number more belonging to white men, near Park City. Plenty Coves and three other Crows, accompanied by Joseph Gate, Chancey Ames, Philip Sidle, Lee M. Owens, and three other white men, pursued and overhauled them at Hailstone basin, near Painted Robe river, forty miles northwest of Billings. A fight ensued, in which Chancey Ames and Joseph Gate were killed, and Owens and Sidle wounded. Four of the Piegans were killed. The fifth was wounded, but escaped. The horses were recaptured.

The recent Indian troubles among the southern Cheyennes have affected their northern brothers. A telegram under date July 20, 1885, states that the commanding officer at Fort Custer reports that Acting Agent Stevens of the Rosebud and Tongue River Indians of the northern Cheyenne reserve is at Fort Custer, with Acting Agent Burslow of the Crows, and that Stevens reports there is danger of serious trouble between the Rosebud Indians under Two Moons and Little Wolf, and the Tongue River Indians, headed by Black Wolf and White Bull. The latter are attempting to force the Rosebud Indians to live on Tongue river, and threaten to kill Agent Stevens if he attempts to interfere with their plans." The Rosebud Indians positively refuse to go there and are now in camp with the Tongue River Indians and about 119 Pine Ridge Indians under Crazy Head and American Horse. The latter has said he will die rather than go back to the Pine Ridge agency. An exciting report has also reached here that the northern Cheyennes have broken out and they are led to the warpath by the news from the southern Cheyennes in the Indian territory. Still another report says that in an engagement between Carpenter and Robinson's cowboys, five cowboys and seven Indians were killed. These reports all seem well founded and there is great excitement among ranchers and settlers on the Tongue and Rosebud rivers at date of writing.

In the chapter on Indians, Indian wars and Indian troubles, a wholesale tale of murder, rapine and wrong by the Indians, is related. The territory, now known as Yellowstone county, may be said to have been irrigated with human blood; for, prior to the coming of the Crows and Sioux, predatory bands of Western savages came to these plains to exterminate each other, as it were; while in later days, our own Indians repeated the dreadful drama among themselves, and then turned their weapons on the white traveler or settler. The whole history of the district prior to the settlement of Billings shows a record blackened by heart-rending murders by savages, and retaliatory acts by the whites.

Incidents of the Settlement of Billings.—In June, 1883, a letter signed by R. J. Anderson, of the Windsor House, was published in the local journals. As it reviews one episode in the history of the beginnings of Billings, it is reproduced in these pages: "I have brought suit," says Mr. Anderson, "against the Montana and Minnesota Land Company, of which H. Clark is president, for non-fulfillment of contract, said suit being for $20,000 damages. The company referred to have not fulfilled their agreement to build the passenger depot according to their plans in the original plat. They further agreed and guaranteed to me to have the depot built upon the originally-proposed location, and open for public use and occupation by the time the first trains arrived—when the railroad was completed to Billings. They also guaranteed to every one else who bought lots from the company in the vicinity that the depot would be built as originally projected on the plat. * * * * In my opinion and in the opinion of numerous others who hold property here, the transactions of the land company have wrought incalculable harm to Billings, and brought financial ruin and disaster to numerous men of limited capital who have been induced to invest their all here upon promises of great improvements. Only a few weeks since, Henry Villard, when passing through Billings, remarked in the presence of a number of citizens, that H. Clark had done nothing which he agreed to, and satirically inquired where the 3,000 emigrants and Scandinavians were which Clark agreed to have at Billings this spring. Since his arrival in New York, President Villard has commenced suit against H. Clark for the forfeiture of 60,000 acres of railroad land on Clarke's Fork bottom obtained by Clark on condition that he should sell them to actual settlers. Clark induced the Ripon colony to come to Billings to the number of 500, assuring them that they could have all of this land which they wanted at $2.60 per acre, and a free town-site thrown in. When they arrived, they could not get the land for less than from $5 to $10 per acre, according to location. This turn in affairs disgusted the greater number of the colonists, and they returned to their former homes without catching on. Since then the railroad lands on Clarke's Fork bottom are lying in primeval solitude, totally unoccupied and unimproved."

Since this letter was given to the press, Billings, and, indeed, the entire county, rose above the disappointments which the Billings episode created. The year just closing has witnessed an advance in values as unexpected as they are conciliatory, while the citizenship of the city and county has assumed a permanency of form hitherto unknown. The stock-growing industry has steadily grown,—the statistics for 1884 giving the county the fifth place in the number and value of cattle among the fourteen counties of the Territory.

CONCLUSION OF COUNTY HISTORY.

In the foregoing pages the history of the Territory and almost every item which pertains directly to each of her political divisions, finds a place. Much of all that is interesting in the history of the counties, is, of course, incorporated in the chapters of the General History; because so many names and events are so closely connected with the progress of the Territory, as a whole, it would be a rank solecism to omit them in a history of the whole. Thus justice has been done to the general history without infringing on the absolute history of each county.

Again, in the chapters devoted to personal history and reminiscences, the minutiæ of local history is contained, since, in compiling a biographical statement, the various gentlemen, employed in that department, have given much attention to an enumeration of reminiscences and events linked with the lives of those who shared in building up their own as well as the Territory's interests. In this division of the work ten thousand facts are brought to light, which personal history alone could bring; the trials, the vicissitudes, the pleasures of settlement are all set forth and contrasted with the present; name after name and incident after incident follow in quick succession, giving to each chapter an importance which must claim the attention of him who would be thoroughly conversant with the real life of the people, and the principles on which rests the prosperity of the Territory.

PERSONAL HISTORY AND REMINISCENCES.

CHAPTER XXXI.

BEAVERHEAD COUNTY.

E. R. ALWARD, Glendale; born at Wathena, Kan., November 22, 1860; attended school both in his native town and at Red Oak, Ia., until 1874, when he entered his father's drugstore, and continued there until the spring of 1878, when he came to Montana. At this time he opened a drugstore at Virginia City, which he carried on for one year, and then came to Glendale, where he first took charge of the Elling store. In 1880 he purchased the store, and is at present the owner. He is quite a young man, and of good business tact.

H. H. AVERY, Glendale; born in Saratoga county, New York, in 1844; moved to Michigan with his parents in 1846. In 1864 he commenced the blacksmith's trade in Oakland Co., Mich.; two years later he was employed by Sage & McGraw, of Bay City, and remained with them until 1875, when he opened a shop at Chippewa Falls, Wis. In 1876 he prospected and mined throughout Utah. In September, 1877, he came to Montana and located at Glendale, where he had charge of the Hecla Company's blacksmith shops until 1880. During this time he built the Avery House, the only stone business building in the town, and since that time has operated it as a hotel.

ED. S. BALL, of Argenta, was born at Boston, Mass., June 30, 1834. He moved to Huron Co., O., in 1837, where he remained until the winter of 1858-9, when he started for Pike's Peak. There he engaged in placer and quartz mining for three years. In 1862 he proceeded to Montana via the Black Hills trail, striking the California trail at the Sweetwater, and reached Bannack August 16, 1862, where he soon found rich diggings. His wife and sister were the first white women who saw Grasshopper creek. In 1866 Mr. Ball visited Argenta, where the St. L. & M. Co. was erecting reduction works. Here he engaged in the carpenter's trade until 1868, when he resumed mining, continuing in it four years as foreman in the Tootle Mining Company, at Argenta, at the same time carrying on his stock business. In 1879 Mr. Ball rented the Tootle works and operated them down to the present time, and purchased the St. L. & M. Co's works, which have since been conducted by himself. In early years he was deputy under Henry Plummer, the sheriff. He it was who arrested this notorious criminal January 7, 1864, and succeeded him as sheriff, holding the office three and one half years. On January 8, after Plummer was hanged, Mr. Ball undertook to arrest a Mexican desperado, then secreted in a log cabin near the creek. The desperado shot Mr. Ball in the thigh, and Mr. Copley, acting deputy sheriff, in the stomach, killing the latter. Owing to the poor and intricate arrangement of the shot-gun which Mr. Ball carried, he was unable to shoot the Mexican; however the citizens brought out a mountain howitzer and bombarded the cabin. J. A. Brown then struck down the door with a heavy piece of timber. The citizens entered only to find that death had anticipated justice—they found the criminal dead. Mr. Ball was married to Miss Rose A. McCauley, June 7, 1862, at Denver, Col.

MARTIN BARRETT, Bannack, was born February 2, 1840, in Mayo county, in Ireland. At the age of 8 years went with his parents to Canada; in fall of 1859 went to St. Joseph, Mo. — and in 1860 to Salt Lake City and back, driving an ox team, in a train. In 1861, went to Colorado. While in Canada he learned the trade of tanner and currier, and then attended common school. In the spring of 1863, Mr. Barrett came to Montana, and he with Joseph Shineberger located his present ranch. Mr. Barrett remained on the ranch, attending to stock raising, etc., while Shineberger mined. After about 8-years' partnership, they dissolved by mutual consent,—Mr. Barrett remaining on the ranch, and Mr. Shineberger going to Red Rock and establishing his stock business. Previous to coming to Montana, Mr. Barrett mined in Colorado for two years. On August 6, 1867, he married Miss Alice E. Cook, at Sim Estes' place, Red Rock. In 1879, he was elected councilman, served one term, and was re-elected in 1884. He has 1,160 acres, hay land, mostly, from which he can cut 500 tons; as near as he can estimate has from 1,000 to 1,500 head of stock on his ranch and range. He is one of the oldest and most successful stock men on Horse Prairie.

CHARLES BLIVENS, Dillon, a native of Saratoga Springs, New York; was born December 10, 1841. He lived with his parents for thirteen years, then went to Brooklyn and took a clerkship in a retail hardware store owned by John Harmond, and at the death of Harmond, his uncle brought him to New York City and put him in his wholesale hardware store. He clerked for his uncle about one year, when the civil war broke out, when he entered the navy and served three years on board the sloop of war Cheyenne in the Pacific squadron. He was honorably discharged in New York City, and, getting the gold fever, crossed the plains to Virginia City, Montana. He arrived there in the latter part of September, 1863, and was with the first outfit to go with Bozeman over the new cut-off known as the Bozeman Cut-off. After reaching Powder river they were met by the Sioux Indians and turned back to Sweetwater bridge. They then came on around by Salt Lake City. Mr. Blivens on his arrival in the territory, took a claim at Alder gulch, but soon sold it and located in California gulch, and, using a miner's term, "busted up." However, having an interest in a ranch on the Madison with his uncle, Edward Brisbin, near the canyon, he sold his interest, took up the old George Ives farm, called it the Council Bluffs ranch, and herded stock on it for outside parties for one year. Then he wintered in Salt Lake. In the spring he went with the Helena stampede and took a claim in Jefferson gulch, working it until it froze up. During that winter he went on another stampede to French gulch; but, receiving news that his partner had sold him out, Mr. Blivens returned, but too late. He followed his partner as far as Virginia City and recovered only one horse. He then went up into the Pipe Stone range prospecting. Not meeting with good success, he bought the old worked-out claim of the Bruce boys, in a dry gulch which emptied into the Homestake, and took out

$3,000 in six weeks. One-half he gave to his partner. They bought out a Mr. Haufman, and, with twenty other claimants, put in a ditch costing $11,000. The water running over soft granite soil was absorbed, so that the ditch did not supply enough water to sluice with. They then resorted to their picks, and after investing in six months' work and $1,000, came out with just the amount put in. He next went to Silver Bow, and mined about six months. Then he prospected in Bear Canyon, near Iron Rod. While Mr. Blivens was prospecting a company built a furnace and employed him to run one shift. The company failed after twenty-three days' run. Mr. Blivens sold it out to get his pay. He then went into the employment of Greene, Campbell & Co. He was in their employ over four years, and while with this firm he married Miss Sarah D. Sullivan, November 2, 1869. The company closed up their works, and Mr. Blivens farmed the ranch of Geo. Wickham one year, and then located a ranch near what is now the town of Dillon. The ensuing year grasshoppers drove him off from his claim, and he went to Red Bluff and discovered a lead. There he mined eighteen months, taking out over $9,000. He put all back in the ground trying to get more out of the lead. He then went to Summit and worked six months in hydraulic diggings. That fall he moved to Silver Star and mined for two years, then returned to his deserted ranch of 320 acres, and remained there two years improving it. He then traded it for his present property in Dillon, consisting of a dwelling house, commodious livery, boarding and sale stables and corrals, all joining. He has superior facilities for outfitting tourists for the National Park and Geysers, Dillon being only 120 miles from the park, and he does a large business in outfitting commercial travelers, boarding horses and in buying and selling horses, being one of the best points in the territory for this kind of business. Mr. Blivens and Mrs. Blivens are the parents of four children, Anna R., Clifton C., Alice M. and James. Anna R. died January 25, 1883; James died February 26, 1883.

G. M. Brown, Bannack; born near St. Andrews, Scotland; came to the United States in 1858, and proceeded from New York to Kansas, where he remained until 1860, when he visited Pike's Peak. From 1860 to 1862 he was engaged in mining and also in joiners' and carpenters' work in Colordo. In 1862 he came to Bannack, via Ft. Lemhi and Deer Lodge, and there engaged in mining until he entered the Alder Gulch and Salt Lake freighting business. Returning to Bannack he resumed mining, and then established himself as a mill-wright. Since 1873 he has resided on his present ranch, devoting his attention to horse, cattle and sheep raising. He has 320 acres of land under fence, 150 head of cattle, 200 head of horses and 4,000 sheep. In 1882 he sold 1,400 head of cattle (vide General Hist.). In 1884 he was appointed County Commissioner, and still holds the office.

Joe. A. Brown, of Glendale, Montana, was born August 1, 1831, near West Alexander, Washington Co., Pa. He left home March 14, 1859, for the Rocky Mountains, prospected and mined in Colorado and New Mexico until May, 1862, when he started for the Salmon River mines; arrived in what is now known as Beaverhead Co., Montana, in July, 1862; continued to prospect and mine until 1870, when he engaged in stock-raising and ranching in the Big Hole Valley, but retained a large interest in several valuable silver mines; was a member of the Territorial Legislature for five terms, serving in both the upper and lower houses; was also a member of the Constitutional Convention that convened in the capital of the Territory, January 14, 1884, to frame a Constitution for the future State of Montana. Mr. Browne has held other responsible positions, and has been prominently identified with all acts of benevolence in his district. He was married April 9, 1872, to Miss Agnes M. Murray, of Dubuque, Iowa, by whom he has four children. It is to be regretted that he will not permit anyone to publish his adventures during the past twenty-five years in the Rocky Mountains. A man of his known love of adventures and unquestioned courage must have witnessed some thrilling scenes (Vide Hist. of County).

George V. Byrnet, born in Alabama, July 23, 1845; was a bookkeeper at Mobile for many years previous to 1878, when he came to Montana. From this time until 1882 he was in the employ of Perkins & Smith, of Butte. In 1882 he, with O. W. W. Rote and J. S. Wilson, organized the firm of Wilson, Rote & Co. Mr. Byrnett is a member of the A. O. U. W.

William B. Carter, Dillon, was born April 23, 1840, in Geauga Co., Ohio, near Parkman; and resided there with his parents until he was 18 years of age, when he went to Parkman and learned the carpenter's trade. He remained there three years. April 6, 1863, Mr. Carter, in company with a schoolmate, B C. Bennett, started for California. Mr. Bennett, remembering the advice of his brother to always go to the newest camps, he persuaded Mr Carter, when at Salt Lake, to go to Montana, and landed at Bannack, July 1, 1863. Before reaching Bannack their funds had become considerably reduced. Mr. Bennett sold his pistol, and with the proceeds and the little money Mr. Carter had, they arrived at Bannack with six cents in the latter's pocket. They sold those coppers to a jeweler for seventy-five cents apiece for alloy; left Bannack same afternoon and went to Virginia City, arriving July 4; found a job on the night shift, and went to work same night, and continued for forty successive nights. After that he worked on various other claims until October 13, when he started for Salt Lake to get provisions and return with them as a sort of speculation. After a three months' trip he sold his goods at $700 profit. He then started back for Salt Lake in the winter, suffering severely on the way. For four consecutive seasons Mr. Carter and his partner freighted from Salt Lake to Virginia City. In the fall of 1866 he gave up freighting and took up his ranch and spent the next year in fattening cattle for market. After disposing of them, he sent to Utah for cows. In the winter of 1864 he, with B. C. Bennett, Jackson and Nelson Verden, wintered on his present ranch in Beaverhead county, and they were then known as "the willow-wakiup boys," on account of the willow wakiup they lived in. July 4, 1868, Mr. Carter was married to Miss Anna Selway, daughter of John Selway, born in Kenosha Co., Wisconsin. To them has been born five children, viz: Caroline E., born November 6, 1869; Ada Bell, March 23, 1871; Fred W., born September 15, 1872; Lee S., born February 5, 1874; and Guy J., January 18, 1879. Mr Carter was the first supervisor in this district, and was county superintendent of public instruction for three years and county commissioner for two years.

J. M. Colson (now of Camas, Idaho), son of A. and M. S. Colson, was born in Madison Co., N. Y., January 10, 1835. In 1838 his parents moved to Illinois, where J. M. remained until 1863, when he moved to Virginia City, M. T. He located the first ranch in that neighborhood and conducted a public house there until 1868. His hay farm on the Upper Madison and an unsurveyed claim of 160 acres form his landed property, while 100 head of horses represent his stock.

Craig Cornell, Dillon, is a native of Porter Co., Indiana, and was born January 8, 1839, the tenth child of Isaac Cornell, a resident of Alleghany Co., Penn., who removed to Indiana in 1835. Craig remained in his native place until he was 25 years old; he then crossed the plains to Montana, and settling down at Bannack, July 20, 1864, worked there at day labor until January, 1866; he then removed to Beaverhead Valley and located a ranch. In 1871, he removed to his present home and has resided on it ever since; it consists of 480 acres, patented; he deals in sheep, cattle and horses, and is also engaged in dairy farming; has about forty cows, and supplies the town of Dillon with milk. He commenced dairying in 1870, and has sold butter as high as $1 per pound. November 16, 1871, in Indiana, he married Miss Eliza Keller, born in Montgomery Co., Ohio, in 1845 (daughter of John Keller); they are the parents of three children—Isaac Roscoe, Estella and Mary Viola, all born in Beaverhead Valley. Mr. Cornell has now about 1,300 head of sheep and a large band of horses and cattle. In 1882, his average yield was fifty bushels to the acre of grain. His residence is just out of Dillon.

J. B. CROW, Bannack, son of R. and Rebecca Crow, was born at Montreal, C. E., August 19, 1833; moved to New York State with his parents in 1836 or 1837. He worked at Redport, Vt., for E. Grosventer, watch maker, for one year, then resided in Essex Co., N. Y., thence he moved to Wisconsin, where he was engaged in agriculture until 1856, when he visited Omaha, Neb. He migrated in 1857 to Iowa, returning to Wisconsin in 1858, where he remained until 1864, when he started for Montana, arriving at Bannack in August of that year with Bill Kellogg and John Keefer. During the journey they were attacked by Indians, and while on the North Platte 350 head of horses were stolen by the red devils from immigrants camped close by—he only losing a steer, which was killed by a poisoned arrow. In July, 1864, while prospecting the Sweet Grass Country, Wy., his party were surprised by about 200 savages, but owing to the willow swamps and precipices, escaped One of the party left in the swamp was afterward rescued. Mr. Crow followed mining at Bannack, Argenta, Blue Wing, Alder Gulch and Rochester up to 1867, and hunting on the Yellowstone from 1867 to 1869, when he engaged in the butcher trade. In 1878 he preempted and homesteaded 960 acres on Horse Prairie, since increased to 1,760 acres, where he has 200 head of cattle and 275 horses. He was married March 9, 1873, to Miss H. A., daughter of Clark and Prudence Little, of Oneida Co., N. Y. During the present year he is interested in the lumber and also banking business at Dillon, on the Utah & Northern R. R.

G. D. FRENCH, Argenta, who was married to Miss Elizabeth Hughes in New York City in 1852, moved to Wisconsin with his wife in 1853, and conducted a hotel in Jefferson county, in that state, until April, 1863, when they started across the plains, arriving at Bannack in September, 1863. Mr. French established a cabinet and carpenter shop, and to him was assigned the duty of burying the bodies of Plummer, Stinson and Ray, who were hanged January 7, 1864. He purchased the old brewery from John Manime and operated it until 1870, when he sold to James Horby and removed to Argenta, where he was postmaster, hotelkeeper and merchant, from 1870 to July 21, 1879, when he died. (Vide Local History.)

GEORGE W. DART, Dillon; was born at Mount Clemens, Mich., in 1837; his parents were Thomas and Alice Dart, who came from Connecticut. At the age of 12 years George went to Detroit and learned the tinner's trade, staying there five years, when he went to St. Paul, and remained there eight years following the same business. About 1859 he went into business for himself on Robert street and remained in it about three years. In the spring of 1863 he started for Bannack, Mon., in the train commanded by Captain Fisk. He arrived at Bannack in October of the same year and spent the winter there. In March he started out prospecting in the Yellowstone and Wind river countries. After six months he returned to Bannack for the winter, and in the spring went to Diamond City, and mined from 1865 to 1868 inclusive. Then [illegible] eighted between Fort Benton, Helena and Bannack until 1869, when he again entered into his old business of hardware and tin shop at Bannack, in which he continued until the fall of 1882. He then moved his business to Dillon, where he still carries it on. Mr. Dart married August 28, 1877, Miss Harriett A. Fox. The ceremony was performed at Thomas Selway's Mrs. Dart was born at Pleasant Prairie, Wis., came to Montana in 1876, and remained with Mrs. Selway until her marriage.

WILLIAM D DAVIS, Dillon, was born December 13, 1834, in Clinton Co., Ky. His parents were James and Sabia Davis, with whom he lived until he was 20 years old, working on his father's farm, and receiving his education at the common schools. In 1855 he went to Putnam county, Mo., and stayed about five years farming. In 1861 he went to Colorado, starting from Putnam county. Was in Leavenworth when the news came that Fort Sumter was fired on. He hired a passage to Georgia Gulch, Col., and made the trip in 27 days, with mule teams. The price of passage was $50 a piece. On the route they met some soldiers who were very anxious to learn of the war and followed the train some distance to learn the particulars. Mr. Davis worked in Georgia Gulch all summer for Brice & Keene, and wintered at Pueblo. One day, the boys gathered some berries, and asked Mr. Davis, who was chief cook, to make them a pie; being so well versed in the culinary department, he immediately consented to their wishes; knowing the crust ought to be short, he put in plenty of grease to offset the richness of the paste, and also put in rather a bountiful supply of soda. Result: the crust of the pie was two inches thick and colors various. During the winter in Pueblo, he herded cattle at $10 per month; herding consisting of looking after the cattle once a week, and keeping them on the range. In the spring, he started with them for the South Park. His partner got snow-blind when only about half way—even the cattle and dog showed a sort of snow-blindness The next day he met two Germans, who told him to take the cattle back, as the snow was too deep. Mr. Davis let the Germans take the cattle back, and he and his partner went on, finding it a very hard journey. After resting a few days, they went back for the cattle, and in two weeks started again with them. The owner of the cattle was to meet him on the way, at a cabin where Mr. Davis was to find comfortable quarters. He got to the cabin about sundown, found it deserted, and, having no blankets, concluded to drive the stock on, to a little town about 10 miles distant. Just ouside the town was a small stream to ford. Mr. Davis thought it not best to cross in the dark and cold; so tried to make himself comfortable by driving up an ox every now and then, and lying down in his warm place. Finding this not very satisfactory, he decided to cross the stream, and drove the cattle over. He jumped on the back of the last ox and rode across dry, arriving at the hotel at four o'clock in the morning, tired, cold and hungry. After a few days the owner arrived and they drove the cattle on to the ranch. Arriving at Jefferson, he and three others were told that dirt taken from the chinks in the cabin panned out color, and that the dirt came from the well near by. It was sixty feet deep and had caved in. So they dug another well, which they tested every three or four feet, but found no color. When they dug down sixty-five feet deep, it dawned upon them that it was the well that was wanted and not gold. The diggers immediately gathered up old boards, poles and boxes and threw them into the well, then filled it up with dirt. Mr. Davis worked a little that summer in the Georgia Gulch; went then to Colorado and spent the winter and spring working in a quartz-mill. Having heard that his mother had sent him a package to Georgia Gulch, he returned there, and after remaining two months joined a party going to Virginia City; left Denver August 25; arrived at Virginia City in two months.

Here Mr. Davis mined a short time, spent the winter in the mountains hunting and the next summer prospected, but spent all his money, and then hired to a Gallatin farmer for $80 per month for one year; saved some money. He then took a farm three miles from Central Park on the Gallatin, and engaged in grain, stock and dairy farming for three years. He then came to Beaverhead Valley, entered his first ranch in 1870; in 1873 he raised 200 hens, from which he sold 1,100 dozens of eggs, and now owns a ranch of 440 acres bordering on the Beaverhead River and only five miles from Dillon. On October 9, 1866 Mr. Davis was married to Miss Eliza E. Selway at her mother's home in the valley. Their only child, Alma A., was born September 30, 1870. Mrs. Davis was born March 25, 1834, in Somersetshire, Eng. Mr. Davis represented the people of Beaverhead and Missoula in the Legislature in 1882, being elected on the Democratic ticket.

T. H. ELLIS, Red Rock, born in Scotland Co., Mo., March 2, 1845; came to Montana in 1863, in which territory he has since resided with the exception of two years passed in his native state—1867–68. He was engaged in freighting in early years; but since his return to the territory has devoted himself to agriculture and stock raising. He is the last settler in the Creek valley, and the owner of an unsurveyed claim of 160 acres, 20 head of cattle and a number of horses.

GEORGE W. EMERICK, Dillon, was born April 3, 1827, in the state of New York, and came to Wisconsin in the spring of 1844, settling in Walworth county on the Big Foot Prairie. In 1851 he went into the prairie on the Wisconsin river, staying there until 1860. He then went to Denver, Col., and engaged in mining until the fourth of July, 1862, at which time he left for Salmon river mines, accompanied by several others. He experienced some trouble with the Indians near Ft. Benton; however, he reached Beaverhead Valley safely on August 28, 1862. On coming to Snake river he was informed that "gold had been found at Gold creek" by Tom Levada and at once decided to go there; reaching Birch Creek was again told by a "half-breed" that gold had been found about 25 miles distant at a place called Bannack. He went there, and remained that winter mining. In the spring he prospected on Salmon river. Hearing of the excitement at "Alder's Gulch" he went there and worked at placer mining until the spring of 1864, when he turned his steps to the Yellowstone on Wind river. Shortly after he came back to Virginia City, and thence he went to British Columbia, wintering on the Columbia river. In the spring he returned to the mines at Blackfoot, and in the winter of 1865 he came to Beaverhead valley to remain permanently.

SIMEON ESTES, Dillon, was born in Androscoggin Co., Me., in the town of Lewiston, February 10, 1835, to David and Mary Ann, née Grant, Estes, who were also natives of Maine. In 1855 Mr. Estes left his native state and migrated to Mobile, Ala., where he remained until 1861. He then removed to St. Paul, Minn. In the south he had charge of a cotton factory, working some at his trade of house painting. In 1863 he crossed the plains with Captain Fisk's party, driving his team through to Bannack. The Indians were plentiful, but did not cause much trouble. When he arrived at Bannack he began freighting to Virginia City. The next year he put up hay for the Ben Holiday Stage Company. In 1865 he took up the Red Rock ranch, one of the first locations in the county, and in 1868 sold it to Joseph Shoneberger. He then took a contract to carry the mail between Virginia City and Bannack, three times a week, and also located a stage station for Gilmer, Salisbury & Co., 1872, on his present place. He was for eight years postmaster and express agent. He also kept a hotel and store. He now owns 150 head of horses, fine cattle, and about 1,100 acres of land delightfully situated. On April 14, 1867, Mr. Estes married Miss R. E. Jackson. His second wife was Harriet L. Wather, and native of Springfield, Ill. In 1868 he represented his district in the legislature at Virginia City, and is a Democrat in politics. Coming to the territory without a dollar, he is a fair example of the enterprise and spirit of American independence. He is fond of adventure and excitement and gives his spirit a free rein.

THOMAS H. HAMILTON, Horse Prairie; son of Robert W. and Mary M. Hamilton, was born at Toronto, Canada July 15, 1828; he was educated in the township of Murray, from 1838 to 1843, previous to the removal of his mother and step-father to Prince Edward township; there he apprenticed himself to a harness-maker, remained nearly two years, then went to Hastings township, and, in 1849, left for Danville, N. Y. In 1850 he returned to Hamilton, Canada, and started business in Northumberland county for himself. In 1853 he started for Australia, and arrived at Melbourne September 18 of the same year; he tried the mines at Bendigo and other places until 1854, when he settled at Ballarat, remaining there until January 1, 1857, when he left for Melbourne, en route to Liverpool; he arrived there in eighty-four days, and reached New York city May 5, 1857. He proceeded to Percy, Canada, where he was married to Miss Louise A. Stone, daughter of Rev. Joseph and Mary J. Stone, and where he purchased and settled on a farm. His wife died February 21, 1862. In November, 1862, he traveled to California, via Panama; there he worked for the Great Eastern Company until June, 1863, at Gibsonville, where his leg was broken; he then worked at Marysville, as harness-maker, until the spring of 1865, when he went to Gold Run, thence to the Salmon River Mines, where he ran a pack train on South Salmon river, and returned to San Francisco in January, 1866. In March, 1866, he sailed for Portland, Ore., thence to Montana, arriving at Ophir Gulch May 6, 1866; he went to Bannack that fall and opened a restaurant, which he conducted until the spring of 1868. He was married to Mrs. M. J. Lee, daughter of B. and M. Stanchfield, August 28, 1867, and with her moved to Horse Prairie, June 13, 1868, where he located his present ranch. He owns about 2,000 acres, devoted to stock and dairy farming; he has 900 head of cattle, 70 horses, and manufactures between 4,000 and 5,000 pounds of butter annually, which he sells at from 40 to 45 cents per pound. During the Nez Perces war he sent his wife and daughter to Bannack and remained to protect the ranch. August 12, 1877, he espied the Indians and with his men made every disposition to delay the advance of the savages; but ultimately the Indians gave chase. A. L. Cooper and A. J. Myers were making their escape, but the former dropped his rifle and the Indians calling him back, promising not to hurt him, he allowed himself to fall into their hands and was shot by them and his horse appropriated. Mr. H. reached Bannack at 3 A. M. on the 13th, after a close chase, while his men concealed themselves and thus escaped. Cooper's body was found and buried by Myers and Jack Wagner. The Indians stole from this place horses and other property, valued at $1,742. Mr. H.'s claim was allowed to the extent of $1,000 by the government but the money has not yet been paid. In 1878 the Bannacks and Shoshones threatened the district; Capt. Ball and 100 men from Fort Ellis arrived to protect the settlements, but the threatened invasion did not take place. Mr Hamilton has shared in many, if not all, the adventures of settlement referred to in the general history. He is widely known and highly esteemed.

C. H. HARDISTY, late of Glendale, now of Puget Sound, was born at Savannah, Mo., October 28, 1844, moved to Illinois in 1860, and to California in 1862, where he engaged in agriculture until 1865, when he returned to Illinois, entered Abingdon college, and graduated from that institution in 1870. From this period until 1878 he taught school. In 1878 he came to Montana and entered the employ of the Hecla Mining Company as weighmaster and entry clerk. He was married in 1870 to Miss C. A. Meadows, of Abingdon, Ill., to whom four children were born. The old homestead at Savannah has been purchased by Mr. Hardisty, who is now a resident ranchman at Puget Sound, W. T.

LOUIS HEINBOCKEL, Glendale; born in Germany, January 4, 1826, came to America in 1844, subsequently traveled through the United States, Australia, and South America, settling in Montana in 1869, when he established his ranch in Camp Creek valley. In 1879 he sold his Camp Creek interests, and in 1881 purchased for $15,000 from Gilg & Hoppy their brewery—one of the best equipped concerns of this kind in the mountain country.

MICHEAL B. HENNEBERRY, Red Rock, was born in County Limerick; came direct to Chicago at the age of 16, and engaged in the freight business four years. He then started a saloon and restaurant at the Galena Depot on Wells street, and continued the same until 1853; then going to Dubuque, where he kept a liquor store known as the Chicago House. This he conducted ten years, when he started across the plains for Montana, Alder gulch being his destination, having a train-load of goods to start a store in company with his cousin, James Ryan. Mr. Henneberry and his cousin received a charter from the legislature to build a toll road through the canyon, which enterprise they undertook in the spring of 1866 and completed in about six months, and it was known as the great Beaverhead Wagon Road. They operated it for ten years, and, the charter expiring, sold it to F. M. Barrett, who operated it about three years, or until his death. It was then thrown open to the public. Previous to the building of this road it was impossible to get through the canyon with a wagon. Mr. Henneberry was married January 14, 1853, to Miss Margaret Henneberry at Chicago. They have had eleven children, four of whom are now living—William Francis, aged 25 years; Michael A., aged 21 years; Ellen T., aged 11 years; Margaret M., aged 10 years. Mr. Henneberry is now one of the wealthy stock-growers of Beaverhead county.

PATRICK HOLEHAN, Bannack, son of James and Mary Holehan; born at Urlingford, Kilkenny Co., Ireland, March 16, 1833; came to New York city in 1847, then moved to Poughkeepsie, where he ran a stationary engine at the iron works for four years. In 1852 he went to San Francisco, where he mined until 1855 or 1856, when he went to Virginia City, Nev., remaining there until 1863, when he visited Boise City, Idaho, en route to British Columbia. He left Columbia September 1, 1864, and arrived at Alder Gulch twenty-six days later, where he mined until May, 1867. He then went to Wisconsin Gulch, Madison Co., to run diggings for Captain Wall, of St. Louis. In the fall he revisited California, returned to Bannack early in 1868, and mined in the vicinity until 1872, when he located his ranch on Horse Prairie. Until the fall of 1874 his attention was divided between ranching and mining, then came to reside permanently on his ranch. He owns 1,140 acres of land, 900 head of cattle, and 105 horses. He married Miss Annie, daughter of Michael and Mary Stanford, of Roscommon Co., Ireland, February, 1871. Late in 1884 he sold his ranch, but retained certain interests, which were disposed of early in 1885. He then went to San Jose, Santa Clara Co., Cal., where his sister resides, intending to make his permanent home there.

GEORGE H. HOWARD, Glendale, born near London, Canada, February 20, 1844; moved with his father to Michigan in 1849, immediately after the death of his mother. In 1861 he enlisted in Company G, 10th Michigan Infantry, and served one year. In 1863 he returned from the South and entered the lumber trade at Saginaw. In August, 1864, he visited Little Rock, Ark., where he worked at the carpenter's trade, he also engaged at farming near Leavenworth, Kan., for awhile. In 1866 he came to Virginia City, M. T. After a short visit to Salt Lake in 1867, he located in the vicinity of Bannack, where he was engaged in mining until 1870, when he took charge of the dinner station at Red Rock on the Salisbury Overland Route. In 1871 he placed a band of cattle on his ranch near Sheep Creek, and in 1874 moved to his present ranch of 300 acres on the Big Hole river. He is one of the charter members of the Bannack Lodge of Odd Fellows.

PETER GALLAGHER, Melrose P. O., born in Ireland in 1844; came to the United States in 1866, and at once engaged in that series of industrial travels which made him acquainted with the ranches and mines of Utah, Nevada, California, Colorado and Montana. On the death of his brother, in 1870, Mr. Gallagher settled on his present ranch, and entered extensively into agriculture and stock-raising. He was married to Miss Emma Feeley in September, 1882.

JOHN C. INNES, Dillon, was born in the Province of Ontario, Canada. In April, 1862, he left home for the far west; arriving at Omaha he joined a party destined for the Rocky Mountains, by way of the Landes cut-off and Snake river, where they were joined by other trains. Here he met Woodmansee's train, which had started for Salmon river and concluded to join forces with him. They arrived September 8, 1862, and found the mines in full blast, working some 300 men, but not a house visible. Their dwellings were made by digging into the hillside, and presented rather a queer appearance. In coming to the territory his train followed the John Grant's trail, which crossed the Beaverhead near James Selway's place. About the last of October building began in earnest and many houses were put up, giving the place a more civilized appearance. Mr. Innes was a member of the Vigilantes, and the discoverer of the Horse Prairie mines.

SAMUEL JAGGERS, Bannack; born at Beulah, England, March 21, 1832; emigrated to the United States in 1848 and came to a place near Galena, Ill. He lived there twenty-four years, keeping the United States Hotel at Galena for three years and was justice of the peace eight years. He first came to Montana in the spring of 1866, stayed in Virginia City a short time, then went to Bannack and made it his home until the spring of 1877, when he moved to his present ranch and engaged in stock business. While in Bannack he was in business about five years, then prospected and worked in quartz about five more years. Mr. Jaggers married, July 12, 1871, Mary Hamilton, a native of Huntington Co., Penn., who came with her husband direct to Montana. They have had four children, two living, Fanny and Maggie, aged respectively eight and three years. Gracie and Harry deceased. Mr. Jaggers has, by former marriage, Mary Ann, James, Joseph, Elizabeth and Robert. He is now one of the extensive stock men of the prairie.

KIRKPATRICK BROTHERS; James Kirkpatrick was born March 9, 1849, in Boston; Robert Kirkpatrick was born November 17, 1847, in Pennsylvania. They came to Adams Co., Wis., when very young, and in 1863 came with the family to Bannack, Montana. The mines not proving very profitable, they leased a ranch on the Rattlesnake creek and stayed two years there. They then secured a ranch of their own and stayed on it several years. James, thinking it a little slow, went to freighting; that not proving very remunerative, he purchased six horses and two wagons and went peddling from Fish Creek to Corinne and in the valleys of Beaverhead and Ruby. The brothers commenced business at Edgerton, Beaverhead valley, in 1879. In the fall of 1880 they removed to Dillon with their stock. Business increased very rapidly; they were obliged to enlarge their building in 1882 to accommodate their trade, which extended in all directions, being largely among the farmers. The Kirkpatrick brothers carried at one time a stock of about $40,000. James was married February 1, 1881, to Miss Alma Coffin, a teacher in Beaverhead Valley. Mrs Kirkpatrick came with two sisters to Montana in 1878. Robert went east in 1879, and married Miss Catharine May. They have two children, Roger B. and Viola Louisa.

THOS. LOUGHRIDGE, Dillon, was born in Huron Co., Ohio. At the age of 6 years he moved with his father to Nebraska Co., Ia., where he remained until 1860. He then went to Colorado to engage in mining. Shortly after the civil war broke out, and a call for volunteers was made. This determined his action. He immediately enlisted in Company B, of the First Regiment Colorado Cavalry, and served his full term of enlistment, being mustered out the 8th of August, 1864. The fall of this year he started for Montana, but did not arrive at his destination until the next spring, undergoing a very long and tedious journey and battling against the elements almost constantly. Arriving at Alder gulch, he remained there only long enough to gain information as to the best mining prospects and then started for Blackfoot, mining there two years; then to Argenta, mining two years, then freighting until 1879, when he settled down in Beaverhead valley to engage in farming, stock-raising and dairy business. He was married January 20, 1880, to Miss Martha A. Lowe, at Bannack, and is surrounded by an interesting family of children. He is a member of the Knights Templar, and much esteemed.

PHILIP LOVELL, Beaverhead valley, was born April 12, 1840, at Duffield, Yorkshire, Eng., to Jonathan and Anna Abbey Lovell, who raised a family of four sons and one daughter, of which Philip was the eldest. His father was a butcher, and the sons carried on the same business. Philip crossed the Atlantic alone, leaving England March 7, 1860, arriving in New York about the 25th of the same month. He went to Toronto, Canada; engaged in the butcher business for a short period; moved to River Falls, Wis., farmed a short time, then went to St Paul. In the spring of 1861 he completed his schooling at River Falls. After butchering awhile in 1862, he joined an expedition of eighty-two men bound for the Rocky mountains. The train journeyed by way of St. Paul, Georgetown, Red Run to Dakota, thence by way of Pembina. Here guides were hired to pilot them, but they deserted the train. An Indian was then employed to guide them to Fort Union and up the Missouri river to Fort Benton, then to Prickly Pear and Deer Lodge valleys. They arrived at the latter place late in July, and remained in camp until August. Mr. Lovell then engaged in mining and butchering at Bannack. In 1869 he moved to Lovell's Station, or Watson's Postoffice, which is now Sim Estes' place, and opened a stage station. In 1870 it was a junction for stages from Deer Lodge, Bannack, and other places. Thousands of travelers were taken care of here. The postoffice was established the same year. In 1873 he sold the place to Sim Estes, and then removed to his present home at Warm Springs. In 1866 Mr. Lovell commenced dealing in stock, and now has 3,000 head of sheep on the flat, as well as horses and cattle. He has 1,000 acres of land. The water running through his place is warm, and is a fortune in itself; its source is 250 feet above the residence. Mr. Lovell was married July 19, 1875, to Mrs. Ellen Thompson, whose maiden name was McGowan. In 1881 Mr. and Mrs. Lovell visited England, and spent four months there, then returned to their mountain home.

JAMES M. MANN, Dillon, was born at Oxford, N. H., on February 2, 1835. He resided at Oxford with his parents until he was 12 years old, when they moved to Illinois, near the town of Elgin, Kane Co. James Mann's father was Aaron Mann, and mother, Sarah (Ingram) Mann, who was born in Oxford, Grafton Co. His father was the first settler in the town, and brought all his worldly effects on horseback through the forests. James was a farmer's boy, and after coming to Illinois worked on his father's land. About 1856 he went to Wisconsin, and there made the acquaintance of his wife, Mrs. Kirkpatrick, and was married March 1, 1858. She was the wife of James Kirkpatrick, deceased, and had four children. Mr. and Mrs. Mann have one son, born February 2, 1859—Monroe Mann. In 1863 he traveled westward, and arrived at Bannack in the fall, after a tedious journey of seven months across the plains. After reaching Bannack he turned his attention to mining, but thought it too great a risk for one so little educated as himself in minerals; so, in 1865 he went to Rattlesnake and located his home there, and is now one of the old timers. He has a deed for 320 acres of good land, and, in connection with his son, has about 1,000 acres. Mr. Mann has a good education; attended Oberlin college for two years and Rush Medical college, of Chicago, two years, and studied two years with Dr. Sanford, of Elgin. In an early day Mr. Mann went to California and worked the mines at Diamond Springs. He spent the winter of 1850–51 at Mormon Ravine, Coloma, Greenwood Valley and Georgetown, and finally settled in Montana. Mr. Mann's farm is on the Rattlesnake creek (so called because of the great number of snakes found thereabouts). His farm is certainly one of the most fertile in the Territory.

JAMES MAULDIN, Dillon; crossed the plains in 1865. His first entree to Montana life was at Bannack, to which camp he brought a stock of goods that he obtained at Grinnell, Ia. This he disposed of in part at Bannack, and balance at Virginia City. He turned his oxen out on the Ruby near Laurins. The same fall he went to Bozeman and constructed a small boat or skiff sixteen feet long, five feet beam and eighteen inches deep. He paid a man $5 to haul it to the nearest point on the Yellowstone, where he launched it and in company with seven others made a safe trip to Sioux City, Ia. On the Yellowstone he would travel by day and camp at night on islands. After building a large fire to attract the Indians, they would go on fifteen to twenty miles and stop next to a high bank or bushes and spend the night. They made the trip in twenty-three days. Arrived at Sioux city, his money had run out and his "dust" not good there, he sold California blankets and went on to Boone, the terminus of the Chicago Northwestern Railroad. The rains and the floods came, and he had a hard and perilous journey via stage to Boone. Thence he went east to Boston and other places, and the following year he outfitted at Boone Station with merchandise, and with Benjamin Abbey started the second time for Virginia City—this time via Council Bluffs, North Platte and Bridger Pass to Gallatin Valley. While the first trip was fraught with no important events, the second one was a perilous one. The first trouble was with Spotted Tail, then with Big Mouth, and there were plenty of Indians all the way. They usually asked for "grub." At Horseshoe Bend an attack was made on them and some of their horses taken. At Rock Creek one of his men was killed by the redskins and a number of stampedes was made. Mr. Mauldin reached Bozeman in September and Virginia City the 17th of the same month and stored his goods. The next year he mined in the Salmon river basin and opened a store. In 1868 he went to Utah and returned with a band of 700 cattle and kept them in the Beaverhead valley. He has also kept a band of work-oxen in the valley, and since that time has been in the stock business and is now the largest individual horse dealer in Montana. In the winter of 68-9

he engaged in breeding fine horses at Willowburn. With his extensive breeding-farm and judicious crossing and breeding he has now 1,500 horses as good as can be found in the territory. In 1874 Mr. Mauldin imported from the east "Louis Phillippe," and "Mingo." The former was imported from France by Mark Dunham, of Illinois, and the first Norman horse ever brought into the Rockies. He also imported "Vidal" in 1876. Mr. Mauldin has a beautiful grazing farm in the valley on which he can cut from 400 to 500 tons of bunch and blue-point hay. His breeding-farm is east twelve miles from Dillon, at the base of the Ruby mountains. A beautiful stream of water passes through the corral and pastures. The same runs through the valley ranch. Mr. Mauldin was born on the eastern shore of Maryland, is the son of John Mauldin, who was a native of Maryland. His great-grandfather brought the brick across the Atlantic to erect the New World Mansion, that yet stands to commemorate their coming to the United States. He has been the proprietor of an addition called Mauldin's addition to Helena. He is in politics a republican and has been a candidate for several different offices. A view of his valley-home and breeding-farm is portrayed in this volume, shewing the corrals, the stallion stables, invalid pastures. Mr. Word, the agent for the Halifax Company in British Columbia, has earnestly solicited a plan of Mr. Mauldin's work, that he may erect similar ones.

D. E. METLIN, Red Rock, son of Robert and Elizabeth Metlin, was born in Juniata Co., Penn., June 14, 1837, and removed with his parents to Macon Co., Ill., in 1840. In 1863 he came to Montana, located at Bannack, where he engaged in freighting and stock-raising. He settled on his present place in 1868, where he has 320 acres under fence, 500 cattle and 50 horses. His marriage with Miss E. A. Kennison took place November 23, 1870. This lady was born in Scott Co., Md., December 8, 1850; came to this territory in 1863—died December 7, 1884.

A. M. MORRISON, Dillon, born in Indiana, April 5, 1844, was educated and learned the carpenter's trade in that State previous to 1864, when he crossed the plains to Bannack. In 1866 he engaged in mining at the head of Deer Lodge Valley, and in 1867 took up a ranch in that vicinity, and continued mining and ranching until 1874, when he opened a store at the old "Trapper Diggings," now Lion City; which enterprise he carried on with Mr. Clark, his partner. Mr. Morrison built the first two-story house at Butte. He was commissioner of Beaverhead county from 1875 to 1878, and in every particular has taken a full part in the progress of his district. At the present writing he is engaged in business at Dillon, on the Utah & Northern Railway, in partnership with Mr. Benjamin Fetler.

W. H. OLIVER. Among the first settlers of Beaverhead Co. is W. H Oliver. He was born in the parish of St. Valentine, Huntingdon Co., Montreal District, Canada, December 17, 1827. In 1850 he left Canada for St. Louis, Mo., remaining there until 1854, when he went to Fort Benton, M. T., where he remained two years, being employed while there by the American Fur Company. After leaving Fort Benton he engaged in various occupations in Wisconsin and Missouri. Returning to Fort Benton in 1861, he passed three years with the American Fur Company, when he went to Bevens Gulch and engaged in mining until 1868, then settled on the Bird's Creek ranch, where he lives at present. In the early days Mr. Oliver had several adventures with the Indians, himself and some friends being captured by the Blackfeet in 1855. They were condemned to death, but just before the time for their execution, a party of Crows made a descent upon the Blackfeet and released them. Another time he was captured by a marauding band of Crows in the Belt Mountains; they found out that he was aware of their depredations, and fearing he would inform upon them, after holding him captive for some time the Indians released him. Mr. Oliver takes a deep interest in the affairs of the county, and is ever ready to engage in whatever undertakings will benefit the community in which he resides.

WILLIAM C. ORR, Dillon, was born April 11, 1830, in Down County, near Strangford, Ireland. He is a son of Nathan and Hannah Orr. When William was but 6 years old his parents came to America and settled near the town of Birmingham, Ohio. At the early age of 16 he went to Wheeling, Va., and worked one year in a wagon shop, and then went to Vicksburg, Miss., where he remained until 1853. His first employment at Vicksburg was in a wagon and blacksmith shop, which he held for two years, then bought out the business and continued it until 1853; his health failing, because of too close application to business, he sold his interest and purchased a band of cattle and horses and started to cross the plains with a train of four or five families, his destination being Shasta valley, Cal., which he reached in October of the same year. He took up a ranch, put his stock on it, and remained there until the spring of 1854, when he engaged in mining on the Virginia bar, Klammath river. He found the work too severe for his health, and after a short time abandoned the mines and returned to his ranch. In 1856 P. H. Poindexter purchased an equal interest in the ranch and stock and the firm known as Poindexter & Orr has continued until the present time, covering a period of nearly 30 years. In the fall of 1861 this country was visited with a great flood, washing out the mines and destroying everything in its way. Poindexter & Orr was at this time engaged in butchering and supplying the miners on the Humbug river. The flood drove out the people. P. & O. suffered a heavy loss on their book accounts. Becoming discouraged with the outlook they immediately went to Lewiston, Id. While they were in Lewiston logs were worth $1 per running foot, and Mr. Orr went to rafting logs to town, but soon competition drove him from his business. He next prospected in the Powder and John Day regions, Oregon, until fall, when he returned to the ranch. In the fall of '63 he went to Cañon City with a drove of cattle. Mr. Poindexter remained on the ranch. Mr. Orr purchased all the cattle offered for sale in Cañon City to corner the market; there being so little money in circulation they did not realize much by this transaction. The following spring he went from Cañon City to Idaho City with a drove of cattle, and they furnished Idaho City with stock until the fall of 1864. Hearing of the Bannack mines in Montana, Mr. Orr started with a band of cattle for that far away camp, crossed the main range in November, and got caught in a terrible snow-storm. The thermometer fell to 40° below zero, but he pulled through to Bannack to find that he could not winter his cattle there, and he drove them into Beaverhead valley, where they wintered well. After looking over the country thoroughly he was satisfied this was the place for cattle. In 1866 Mr. Orr returned to the home ranch in California and drove another herd into Beaverhead valley. In 1867 Mr. Poindexter purchased 400 head of cattle in Oregon and drove over to Beaverhead valley, where he remained. In 1870 Mr. Orr returned to California and again drove over a band of sheep numbering about 2,700 head and 375 horses; the horses being the increase on the home ranch of his original stock of 11 mares he brought from the States. Mr Orr's education was received in the common schools. On February 27, 1869, he married Rachael M. Connard at Bingham, Ohio. They are the parents of six boys, viz; Matthew, born January 24, 1870; Ernest born August 21, 1871; William, born July 7, 1873; Charley, born May 11, 1875; Bert, born April 17, 1878; John, born September 1, 1881. Mr. Orr's life is fraught with adventures from boyhood to manhood, and is one of conspicuous success.

PHILIP H. POINDEXTER, was born September 5, 1831, at Danville, Pa., and is the fourth child and son of Watson G. and Judith Stewart Boyd Poindexter, who were Virginians. The family is of French ancestry. When Philip was but 8 years old his parents moved to Franklin Co. After the father's death in 1848 the family moved to St. Louis, Mo. In 1852 Mr. Poindexter crossed the plains to California, and for four years mined on the Humbug river. He then engaged in stock business with W. C. Orr; first occupied in butchering on the Humbug and afterward drifted into the stock business in the Shasta valley, and has continued the partnership until the present time. In 1867 Mr. Poindexter went to Canyon City, Ore. Since this time the ranch in California has been his home. He was married April 8, 1869, to Mrs. Mary E. Baxter, a native of St. Louis, Mo., a daughter of Tyrie Sappington, one of the early settlers of St. Louis, having moved there when it was but a small French village. They have had five children born to them, as follows: Francis S., Henry T., Emma May, Virginia E. and George G. The four youngest were born in Montana; the eldest one was born in St. Louis. In the home ranch of Poindexter & Orr there are 480 acres, and about 5,000 acres in the upper ranch, and on the range there are about twenty-five miles of fence. They are the largest dealers in stock in the territory. They have horses, cattle and sheep. In 1883 they made the largest sale of stock to the Codoran Cattle Company of British Columbia that has ever been made to them. Poindexter & Orr deal in thoroughbred Shorthorns, Cotswold sheep, and Percheron horses. They have made some large purchases from Mark Dunham, of Dupage Co., Ill., at a heavy expense. At present they have about 100 head of fine horses, 800 cattle, and about 10,000 sheep, which they keep in Custer county on an extensive range; and as they increase they are driven to Custer county, where they have the finest watered range in Montana. Mr. Poindexter has represented the people of Beaverhead county in the legislature one term at Virginia City in 1872. He is a Mason and Knight Templar. Mr. Poindexter's father was severely wounded at the battle of Cowpens in the Revolutionary War, but survived and raised a large family. When Philip Poindexter was a young man he adopted for his motto the noble principles of honesty, industry and economy, the strict observance of which has made him a very successful business man.

HENRY S. POND, Glendale, born near Springfield, Ill., August 15, 1841, entered Knox College at Galesburg in 1860; made a trip up the Missouri to Benton in 1862, and the same year took the position of clerk for Worden & Co., at Gold Creek or American Fork. In 1863 he visited Bannack, and established a carpentershop there. For some years he followed the carpenters' trade and mining, and in 1875 opened a general store at Bannack, which he conducted until he moved his stock to Glendale in 1878. Mr. Pond was deputy-postmaster at Bannack in 1864–65, and was postmaster at Melrose in 1881–82. On January 21, 1866, he married Miss Kirkpatrick, of Bannack, who died September 27, 1875. On March 18, 1877, he married Miss E. Romaine. They are the parents of three children.

THOMAS F. PORCH, Dillon, son of Thomas and Mary E. (Selway) Porch, was born April 6, 1850, in Kenosha, Wis. His boyhood was spent at home with his parents. When 16 years old he went to England with his parents, and returned in 1868. He then removed to Story Co., Ia., and engaged in farming until 1872. In the spring he removed to Montana and engaged in stockgrowing in Beaverhead Valley. On the 17th of July, 1879, Mr. Porch married Miss Delena A. Smith, daughter of William Smith. Mrs. Porch was born in Guernsey Co., Ohio, in 1858, and with her parents moved to California. After some time spent in Yuba and Siskiyou counties they returned to Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Porch have two children, Edwin and Freddie. Mr. Porch has 250 acres of rich and improved land, situate on Blacktail, Deer Creek. He was the architect and builder of his own residence in 1879. From 35 acres cultivated in 1882 he grew 3,500 bushels of grain. He runs a threshing machine, and to give some idea of the magnitude of the business, he earned $2,500 in two months in 1882. Mr. Porch is numbered among the successful farmers and stock growers of Beaverhead Valley.

WILLIAM REICHLE, Willis, postmaster at Willis, was born at Stuttgardt, Germany, July 17, 1856; at the close of his school days he entered the army and became a member of the imperial guard. In 1879 he came to the United States, journeyed west to Montana the same year, and shortly after located his present home. He was married to Miss Margaret Maier, May 1, 1879. His stock ranch claims 175 head of cattle and twenty-five horses.

DAVID F. REINHARDT, Dillon, was born in the Province of Wurtemburg, Germany, in 1846, and came to America in 1862. After a service of two years in the United States army, he came to Montana and located at Confederate Gulch for a short time; from 1872 to 1874 he prospected, and then received charge of the Hecla mine, which he retained for a long time. In 1880 he was elected sheriff of Beaverhead county, and now holds the office; was for two years an assessor, ex officio. In 1879 he was married to Miss Sarah Holland; they have two children—May and Maggie. The only education he obtained was from the common school in his native State. He had learned the butcher's trade but found mining more profitable and engaged in it until elected to office; in 1882 he assessed the entire county alone; during his term of office there were very few disturbances or infractions of the law.

RICHARD A. REYNOLDS, Dillon, was born in Wales and emigrated to the United States, with his father, when only an infant. His father was a blacksmith and settled at Utica, N. Y., where he resided two years; then moved to Kenosha, Wis., where Richard A. was raised. In 1864 he took a trip up the Missouri river to the mouth of the Yellowstone, where he spent eighteen months; returned to Eau Claire, Wis., and engaged in farming. In 1866, crossed the plains to Montana. He stopped in Beaverhead county and made an attempt at mining, but finding it did not pay well he went to Oregon, brought a large band of sheep into Montana and finally settled where he now resides in 1870. In June, 1870, he married Mrs. Virginia Johnson, who had one daughter. In 1875 Mr. Reynolds erected his present residence, the best in the valley. It contains eight rooms and closets, is plastered and hard finished. In 1876 Mr. Reynolds was elected county commissioner and served one term to the satisfaction of the people. His start in business was through work on a farm, at the small compensation of $11 per month. He now owns 1,200 acres of fine land, and has 175 head of horses, nearly all ranging on home place, and a band of about 2,400 head of sheep on the Yellowstone. He imported a car load of Morgan horses from Chicago. Mrs. Reynolds was born May 13, 1842, in old Virginia. Her maiden name was Poindexter. Her first marriage was with Dr. Johnson. Miss Georgia Johnson, her daughter, is now at school in Evanston, Ill. Mr. Reynolds came to the Territory a poor man with very limited means, and he says the grasshoppers ate that up.

O. W. ROTE, Glendale, was born in Rensselaer Co., N. Y., November 12, 1838. At the age of 17 he went to Stone Mills to learn the mill business. At the age of 19 he left New York, and went to Ohio and farmed for seven years; then came to Montana, where he mined two years; then went to Idaho, but returned to Ban-nack in 1867. He prospected here until 1872; then engaged in the horse and cattle business. In 1877 he came to Glendale, and was engaged in the butcher business until 1882, when he became one of the firm of Wilson, Rote & Co. Mr. R. was elected assessor of Beaverhead Co., for 1879 and 1880, and in the fall of 1882 was elected county commissioner for four years. For the past six years he has been school trustee of Glendale district. In May, 1883, Mr. R. was married to Lida Schreves.

HENRY SCHMALHAUSEN, M. D., Glendale; was born in Phillipsburgh, Penn., February 11, 1840; at the age of 5 years his parents moved to Lawrence Co., Ill., where he attended public school until 1849, when his parents moved to Rochester Co., Penn., where he attended high school. In 1852 the family moved to Wabash Co., Ill., where he remained until 1858, when he went to Rumsey, Ky., and apprenticed himself to a tinsmith for three years; in the spring of 1860 he engaged in the hardware business at Calhoun, Ky.; but in the fall of 1861 the political troubles preceding the war paralyzed business so that he closed his house and entered the Union army, by recruiting a company with J. Mattingly, joining the 26th Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, at Owensboro, Ky., in Company C; he served as 1st Lieutenant until after the battle of Shiloh, when he was promoted to captain of the company; in 1864 he resigned on account of sickness, having suffered since April, 1862. In the spring of 1864 he engaged in the drug business in Mount Carmel, Ill., but, on account of the confinement, had to abandon it; he then devoted himself to the study of medicine; in 1865 he went to Philadelphia to attend lectures at Jefferson Medical College, where the immortal S. D. Gross occupied the chair of surgery; in 1867 he graduated and engaged in the practice of medicine, at Bridgeport, Ill., and remained there until 1874, during which time he married Miss Mary J. Dunlap (in 1868), by whom he had eight children, five of whom are now living. In 1874 he moved with his family to Montana to engage in mining, but not succeeding at that he again resumed the practice of his profession, at Virginia City, M T.; in 1880 he moved to Glendale, M. T., to assume charge of the Hecla Hospital. The doctor always gave special attention to surgery, particularly of the eye; he removed the first cataract ever operated on in Montana Territory, in December, 1873; he has operated on five other cases since, and all except one were restored to sight, and that one improved. Being possessed by nature of a keen eyesight and steady nerve, he was eminently fitted for a surgeon, and succeeded in operations where many could not. In 1862 the doctor was a Master Mason, at Rumsey, Ky., and since 1882 has been a member of the A. O. U. W.

J. A. SCHUMACHER, Bannack; born in Germany, in 1851, studied chemistry at Weisbaden, and attended lectures on chemistry there. On coming to the United States he settled at St. Louis, Mo., where he resided until June, 1881, when he came to Montana. He was appointed in charge of the Silver and Copper Company's smelting works, at Silver Bow, as foreman, in March, 1882, having formerly been assayer. Recently, Mr. Schumacher moved to Bannack, where he is engaged in mining.

JAMES SELWAY, SR., the father of John, James, Robert and Thomas Selway, each a leading citizen of the county, was born in England, and emigrated to the United States in 1848. Not being satisfied with his American home, he returned to England in March, 1865, accompanied by his daughter, Mrs. Thomas Porch, who returned to the United States a few months before her father's death. He is buried in England, near the place of his boyhood. He had lived to the ripe age of 80 years.

JOHN R. SELWAY, Dillon, was born March 25, 1836, in Somersetshire, England. When but 11 years old he came to the United States with his parents, settled in Kenosha, Co., Wis., and lived on the farm until 1861. He then went to Eau Claire, Wis., making a new home for himself. In 1866 he crossed the plains for Montana with his wife and three children. On their arrival they settled on their present home ranch and engaged in stock raising and farming. At this time there were only nine ladies in the valley; his mother was the first white lady who made her appearance in the upper valley. Mrs. Selway, the wife of our subject, started the first Sabbath school in the valley, and she still wears a ring of native gold given her by her Bible class. This Sabbath school prospered until it grew into a church organization, and John Selway gave the last five dollars he had to help erect the little building in which to hold the school and church services. Economy and industry have been the principles by which he achieved success, and he is now a wealthy man. He helped in 1869 to bring the first sheep into the valley from Oregon. John Selway was married November 25, 1858, to Miss Jane Reynolds, in Princeton, Green Lake Co., Wis. Mrs. Selway, a daughter of Owen and Margaret Reynolds, was born in North Wales, and came to the United States in 1842. To this couple has been born eight children: Charles M., Loyd, Robert, Ernest, Delos D., Blanche, Richard, and Jennie R. Mr. John Selway erected the first farm house in the valley in 1872. He now has about 800 acres good land, 125 horses, 100 head cattle, and from 4,000 to 5,000 sheep.

JAMES SELWAY, JR., Dillon, was born December 3, 1840, in Somersetshire, England. At the age of 7 years he came with his parents to America and settled in Kenosha Co., Wis. He lived at home fifteen years, and then was apprenticed to a machinist in Racine, Wis., staying with him three years; then worked at his trade for a Mr. Skinner until the Pike's Peak fever broke out. He, with several others, started for the great Eldorado, and got beyond Fort Kearney, when they heard disparaging rumors, and all turned back. Ashamed to go home, he stopped at Davenport, Ia., and worked at his trade for seven months; after which he returned to Wisconsin and worked on his father's farm until the spring of 1863, when he started for Montana. At St. Joe, Mo., he joined a train as driver across the plains. He was to receive fifteen dollars per month; but it was never paid. He was, however, satisfied, as he reached Montana safely and got a situation immediately at mining at six dollars per day. He worked at mining until cold weather; then, in company with Blackwell and others, hunted and trapped up and down the Beaverhead, Gallatin and Boulder rivers for a living; having in the meantime purchased a squatter's right to his present ranch, where he moved the ensuing fall, when his father's family arrived. He has been engaged in stock business ever since. In the spring of 1881 he sold his cattle, and has been almost exclusively engaged in sheep raising since then; having only a few horses and cattle. Mr. Selway was married December 30, 1874, to Miss Eunice Noble, at Sheridan. They have had three children: Herbert Boham, aged 7; James Hawley, aged 3; and Luther Noble, who died when only 6 months old. Mr. Selway received his education at the district school. The old homestead is a beautiful spot—the Beaverhead river, shaded on either side with trees, running through it, and affording an abundance of shade.

ROBERT H. SELWAY, was born September 9, 1846, in Somersetshire, England. When but 2 years old his parents came to America and located in Kenosha Co., Wis. He lived with his parents until he was 18 years old, when he crossed the plains to Montana. The party with whom he came to Waterloo, Ia., numbered thirteen wagons. At Fort Laramie they were joined by others, for mutual protection against the Indians, thus swelling their numbers to about 200 wagons. They traveled in this manner, double-file, for several days. Mr. Selway reached Beaverhead valley September 30, 1864, being five months on the way. He immediately located his present ranch, but lived with his brother, James, a few years, improving his ranch and erecting buildings. He then occupied it. His third crop was totally destroyed, and he decided to do very little farming after that. He then turned his attention to stock raising. He sold a short time ago 600 head of cattle, and has at present 130 head of horses and a few dairy cows. Mr. Selway was married December 25, 1878, to Miss Julia Black, of Bannack. This lady was born near New Boston, Mercer Co., Ill. They have two children: Maud R., born February 9, 1880; and Erle, born August 22, 1881.

JOSEPH SHINEBERGER, Red Rock; born January 5, 1838, in Philadelphia, Pa., and there learned the trade of shovel making. In 1859 went to California, mined there, and then to New Mexico, remaining four years, or until he came to Montana. Outfitting at Omaha in the spring of 1863, he came here by cutoff trail. It was Mr. Shineberger's desire to go to Florence, Idaho, but when he reached Snake river he met a mail carrier who told him of the great excitement at the Bannack mines, and he, in company with several others of their train, directed their course toward this new mining field. They chose the route by Medicine Bow, and when in Horse Prairie district, hearing of the Horse Prairie mines, stampeded there. Mr. Shineberger's partner, Martin Barrett, located a ranch and commenced stock-raising and dealing, while Mr. Shineberger followed mining. He could not find a claim in Horse Prairie with sufficient water and started for Bannack. About this time the great excitement of Alder Gulch sprang into existence and he went there, staked off a claim and mined two years. After this time Mr. Shineberger freighted and engaged in various occupations, while stocking their ranch, it being the second ranch taken up on Horse Prairie. In 1868 he returned to the ranch, having it well stocked. He has been engaged in the stock business ever since. In 1869 the firm of Barrett & Shineberger dissolved partnership, each being abundantly able by that time to do business separately. Mr. Shineberger purchased his present ranch of Sim. Estes. His lands extend three miles up and down the Red Rock, with a fine range adjoining, making it one of the best stock ranches on the prairie. He was the first appointed postmaster at Red Rock, and has held the office for five years. In 1882 a stage station was established by Gilmore & Salisbury. The line extends from Red Rock to Salmon City, a distance of 100 miles, and the trip is accomplished in 24 hours. At Mr. Shineberger's the travelers find good, comfortable accommodations, and a genial, hospitable host. He is now numbered among the large stock dealers in Beaverhead Co., and is one of its most enterprising, energetic, industrious citizens.

ROBERT B. SMITH, of Dillon, Beaverhead Co., Mon.; born in Hickman Co., Ky., December 29, 1854, was reared on the farm and completed his education in the high school at Milburn, Ky., at the age of twenty, and was afterward employed one year as an instructor in the same institution. In September, 1876, he went to Charleston, Mo., and was elected principal of the Charleston Classical Academy, and held this position until June, 1877. He then went to Mayfield, Ky., read law with the Hon. Edward Crossland and was admitted to the bar in October of the same year. In the spring of 1878 he was married to the daughter of his preceptor in law and removed to Blandville, Ky., where he practiced for nearly four years, removing to Dillon, Mon., in September, 1882. In November, 1883, was elected as a democrat from Beaverhead county to the constitutional convention which met in the city of Helena, January, 1884, to frame a constitution for the State of Montana. Is now engaged in the practice of his profession.

GEORGE STANDAHER, Beaverhead Valley, was born April 23, 1836, in Austria. When 16 years of age he left his home and traveled quite extensively through Europe peddling wares. In 1858 he came to the United States, and made his first stop in Missouri, where he earned money enough to pay his way to Colorado. He arrived in Blackhawk, Colo., in 1860, and worked in the Bobtail mine until the spring of 1863, when he decided to work independently for himself. So, with two of his companions, he left Denver and started for Boise City, Idaho, and had gone as far as Salt Lake when they heard of the excitement at Bannack. Abandoning the idea of going to Idaho, they arrived in Bannack June 1, but followed the stampede to Alder gulch. They mined there four months with good success. In the fall of 1864 they went back to Missouri. February 12, 1865, Mr. Standaher was married to Miss Catharine Mellen in St. Joe, and returned to Alder gulch. In the year 1868 he bought the ranch adjoining his present one, and raised stock there until 1882. Selling his first ranch, he bought the ranch he now lives on, where he has better facilities for taking up more land. Mr. and Mrs. Standaher have eight children, four sons and four daughters—George J., born December 18, 1865, at Alder Gulch, Mont.; Nicholas M., born July 3, 1867, in Beaverhead valley; John A., born January 9, 1869, in Beaverhead valley; Louisa, born July 29, 1870, in Prickly Pear valley; William L., born September 6, 1873, in Beaverhead valley; Anna M., born August 9, 1875, in Beaverhead valley; Agata L., born December 22, 1879, in Beaverhead valley; May, born May 18, 1882, in Beaverhead valley. Mr. Standaher has now 620 acres of land, all fenced, and 200 acres of good grain land. His residence is one of the finest in the valley. Mr. Standaher came to the United States to find a fortune, and he has succeeded.

A. SULLIVAN, Dillon; born June 3, 1822, in Gilford Co., N. C. His father immigrated to Indiana in 1828. At the age of 21 he married. In the year 1849 Mr. Sullivan crossed the plains to California, remained two years, and in 1857 moved to Kansas City and here cast a vote for Abraham Lincoln, with 134 others, who left after their names were posted at the court house as evil doers. He was threatened with a rope once, just for political reasons. He left for Colorado in May, 1861, driving an ox team for $10 per month. He returned to Kansas City a short time and then back to Colorado September, 1863, where he found his claim jumped. He did not stop to unload his worldly effects, but journeyed on with his son and five other comrades to Montana. Arrived at Bannack one week before Christmas. They rented a house for the winter and went to work on Jennings bar. Worked one month in company with his son and two others and divided gold dust to the amount of $2.50 apiece for their month's labor. They decided they had enough of Jennings bar. Mr. Sullivan started out alone to try a new place and came in at night with $18; got $12 out of one pan. He wanted his chums to go next day. They said no, he had found the lead and he should enjoy the benefit of it. He, with his son, went out and worked until noon that day and got nothing. In afternoon commenced digging in another old tunnel and got $12 by night. They put in the balance of the winter on the bar and averaged about $15 per day. Mr. Sullivan has been prosperous ever since. He is a member of A. F. & A. M. and also I. O. O. F. societies.

GEORGE E. TARBELL was born in Boston, October 26, 1844, but in 1855 his father removed to Illinois. In 1862 he entered the army, joining the Third Wisconsin Cavalry, and served until the close of the war, when his command returned to Wisconsin, where he was discharged. In 1866 Mr. Tarbell left Stevensville, Wis., for Montana, the trip from the Missouri river to Bannack lasting from May 30 until September 16. At Bannack he engaged in mining and freighting until September, 1873, when he went to what is now Lion City. At that time there were only about a dozen souls in the camp. Since that time Mr. Tarbell has remained in Lion, being engaged in mining and other business, and taking a lively interest in everything pertaining to the good of the town he helped to found. Mr. Tarbell was elected assessor of Beaverhead county for 1877 and 1878, and has been justice of the peace in Lion from 1874 to the present time. He was a charter member of the Masonic lodge at Glendale, and likewise of the Odd Fellows lodge at Bannack, having at different times held all the offices in the latter society. Tarbell Hall, owned by this gentleman, is the handsomest building in Lion, and has the distinction of being the highest hall in Montana.

PHILIP THORP, Dillon, was born in Lancashire, Eng., May 8, 1829. His parents, William and Sarah Thorp, were born in the same place and died there. He left his home when 11 years of age and was apprenticed to Joseph Anderson, of this shire, and staid with him up to 1849. He landed in New York July 4, and started for Chicago via Buffalo and the lakes, to Kenosha, Wis. Here he remained until the spring of 1850 in the dry goods and grocery store of Kelley & Washburn. He then started across the plains for California. At Council Bluffs he joined a train going through and arrived in Sacramento about four months afterward. They started with but sixty days' provisions, and before reaching Rag Town had to live on beef that died in the yoke and a little cracked wheat and coffee. At Rag Town they procured supplies at exorbitant prices and proceeded to Hangtown. Here the company disbanded, Mr. Thorp and a Mr. Greewood going on to Sacramento. While crossing the main range of the Carson route, they met a "Pilgrim," who while waiting for the train to come along had shot a big grizzly. He wanted to sell him for $20. He was quickly taken up by a traveling trader, dressed and retailed at $1 per pound—and he weighed 1,800 pounds. The smile of joy that gladdened the "Pilgrim's" face, on receipt of the $20, soon faded to a look of sorrow. Just outside of Hangtown Messrs. Thorp and Greewood camped, and being hungry for fat pork and without money, they offered to trade for some. The trader, however, generously gave them about eight pounds. After consultation, they decided to boil it, as there would be less waste. When barely done, they sat down and ate it without any condiments, then spread their blankets and slept under their wagon till sundown. When they awoke and looked around them their horses were gone. Necessity compelled them to pack their blankets and proceed on foot to Sacramento. Upon reaching the city Mr. Thorp asked a jeweler how much he would charge for cleaning his watch. "Eighteen dollars," was the reply; and to the query, "How much will you give?" received a reply: "$5." Mr. Thorp took the $5 and soon after made a trip to Coloma with a pack outfit. He got $50 for his three days' trip. He then began prospecting and mining, continuing the same for three years. In the meantime Mr. Thorp and his partner, Jim McKey, discovered the famous Allison lead, but did not locate it, as they had another claim on Wolf Creek. They tossed a coin to decide which to hold. Fortune favored Wolf Creek. In the spring of '56 he returned to Kenosha, Wis., and from there went to Racine, Wis., entering the grocery and drug business, which he continued ten years. He then sold out and made another trip to the Mountains, passing through Central City and Salt Lake City for Bannack, Mon., arriving August 1, 1863. Virginia City and Gallatin valley were next visited. October 15 he started on a return trip to Racine, where he arrived in December, having had a very hard trip. The next spring he started back to Montana with the Selway families. Mr. Thorp went to Gallatin valley and built the first house on the West Gallatin. He engaged in dairying and stock raising until 1880, when he moved to Dillon and purchased a fine hay ranch near town, and added to it horses, cattle and sheep. Mr. Thorp was married October 20, 1853, to Miss Sarah Selway, in Kenosha Co., Wis. They have had a family of four children: Blanche Bartlett, born January 14, 1859, died January 1, 1878; Florence Eliza, born July 14, 1861, at Racine, Wis.; Alma Rosa, born April 29, 1867, at Hamilton, Mon.; Philip, born May 18, 1870, at Hamilton, Montana. Mr. Thorpe was one of the first County Commissioners of Gallatin county, is a republican in politics and one of the wealthy men of Dillon.

ISAAC VAN CAMP, Dillon, son of Tunis and Catherine Van Camp, was born February 26, 1822; moved to Harrison county, Ia., about 1834; remained there for many years; when he moved to Rock Island county, Ill., in 1840 or '43. On November 25, 1846, Isaac Van Camp was married to Miss Martha Stœden, daughter of Richard and Euphemia (Hunter) Stœden. Mrs. Van Camp was born in Clinton county, Ohio, in 1830. They have two children living, viz., John C. Fremont, born in Illinois, December 16, 1856, and Euphemia, born in Harrison Co., Ia., September 9, 1859. Four of the children are deceased, Mary E., Isaac Marion, George W. and Nelson D. When Mrs. Van Camp first came to Rattlesnake Creek, there were but two white women in the neighborhood. During the year, several others moved in and settled. When Mr. Van Camp came into the Territory, he brought some cows with him, and to secure a good place for stock went back into the country, but found the snow too deep. He then bought a ranch in company with Sim Estes, and again the snow drove them out, and in March moved to Bannack, where he kept a feed stable and put up hay for the overland stages. In 1866, he dissolved partnership, and moved to his present ranch. He deals mostly in horses, a little in cattle. The place is well watered; the streams never freeze; has good barn and outbuildings for stock. He cuts 150 tons of hay annually, and has some of the finest horses in the county.

A. C. WITTER, Argenta, was born in St. Joseph Co., Ind., June 13, 1850, and is a son of Jacob and Rebecca Witter, old settlers of that county. When a mere child his parents moved to Iowa and engaged in farming at Delhi, Dubuque Co., and afterward near Leon, where they remained until 1865, when they moved into Iowa City for the purpose of educating their children. Mr. Witter at that time attended the Iowa City University over two years; but his health failing, he was obliged to leave school, and he went to Des Moines, where he devoted his time to farming in the summer and teaching school during the winters. He remained in that vicinity until the spring of 1875, when he came to Helena, M. T. Remaining there a few months he went to Bannack, where he taught the first public school held at that place during the winter of 1875–76. During the summer of 1876 he engaged in mining at Argenta. He was sent as a representative of that district to the Territorial Legislature of 1876–77, being at that time the youngest member that had ever served in that body. In 1877 he went to the Pony mines in Madison county, where he engaged in quartz mining one year. In 1878 he came to Butte, and became interested in mining, and was elected as the first county clerk and recorder of Silver Bow county, in which capacity he served some twenty months, during which time he was also elected councilman of Silver Bow Co. He was the first man to prospect and open the famous Clear Grit Mine, now in the hands of other parties. Mr. Witter was married in Gallatin Co., on September 23, 1879, to Miss Sarah Gaulter, who, with her husband, has taken an active part in the organization of the Good Templars Association at Butte. He is also an active member of the Odd Fellows Association, and was presiding officer of the Order of United Workmen. Mr. Witter is now a resident of Argenta.

NATHANIEL H. WOOD, Dillon; born June 23, 1828, at Halifax, Va., where his youth was spent on the farm, in the common schools and in his father's extensive tobacco factory. In 1850 Mr. Wood went to California and mined two years, ranging up and down the Yubas with success. He then went into the stock business until 1859, when he returned to Missouri. In the winter of 1860 went into the army as captain and remained over two years. He was paroled in the spring of 1863 and came to Montana, where he has since resided. On first coming to the territory he stopped at Bannack two weeks; then went on to Alder Gulch and mined six months, after which he started a store and kept the stage station at the old crossing of the Stinkingwater, known as the Old Bob Dempsey Ranch. In 1865 he had charge of a train going to Ft. Benton. When about twenty miles from Benton, was met by a runner saying the Indians had killed 15 men the day before at the mouth of the Marias river. Another train being camped near by, they traveled to Benton in two wings, so as to meet in a few moments. Arriving there safely, he proceeded to the Titon river to turn his stock out to graze. When the horses went to water the Indians approached and cut at the loose ones and ran them off. Next day, borrowing arms, Mr. Wood, with his men, drove the Indians off and recovered his horses. On returning stacked the arms in his wagon; next morning, while handing them out, a pistol was discharged accidentally and the ball passed through Mr. Wood's right lung, coming out at his back. From this injury he has never fully recovered. In 1866 Mr. Wood went to Cala and purchased five hundred head of cattle. The markets appreciated and he sold his cattle, realizing a handsome profit. He then bought 260 head of horses and brought them to Montana. He disposed of 109 head to the Indian militia, and has ever since been engaged in the stock business; handling, at various times, horses, sheep and cattle in Beaverhead valley. He located his present ranch in 1866. Mr. Wood was married October 26, 1868, to Miss Carrie Kreamer. They have had six children, Henry Lee, born October 16, 1869; Wm. J., born September 23, 1870; James Franklin, May 4, 1872; Mary E., August 13, 1873; Mary Magdaline, July 22, 1878, and Eddie, July 5, 1879. Wm. J. died April 2, 1871; Jas. Franklin died September 16, 1872; Mary M. died July 21, 1878.

CHAPTER XXXII.

CHOTEAU COUNTY.

J. C. ADAMS, ranchman, P. O., Fort Benton; was born December 11, 1844, in Morgan Co., Ky., and at seven years of age he moved to Bates county, Missouri. In 1863 he began farming and stock raising. Then drove team on the South Platte river until 1864, in which year he left for Virginia City, where he prospected and freighted. In 1866 our subject came to Fort Benton and had charge of E. G. McClay & Co's wagon train, freighting for them through the different territories until 1874. He then came to Sun River and located a ranch where he makes a specialty of raising horses and cattle. In winter of 1874 Mr. Adams married Miss Eva Strong, of Illinois, by whom he has three children: Edward, Richard E. and Calvin E.

JOSEPH ALLEN, P. O. Ulidia, was born in Kentucky in 1830; was brought by his parents to Missouri in 1834, and there resided until 1850, when he went to California. After spending several years on the Pacific slope, he returned to Missouri, where he was engaged in mercantile business until 1864, in which year he left for Montana. From 1864 to 1866 he was engaged at mining in several gulches here. In the latter year he returned to Missouri, where he followed agriculture until 1868; was then elected county assessor, an office he filled for ten years; then established a grocery store which he carried on for one year, when he came with his family to Montana and established his farm and sheep ranch in the Sand Coulee Valley. Mr. Allen is a member of the Christian Church, Mrs. Allen of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

JAMES W. ARMSTRONG, Teton, P. O. Fort Benton, was born at Minneapolis, Minn, July, 1859. In 1865 he came to Fort Benton and afterward located a ranch at Prickly Pear, where he remained until 1869; then located a ranch at Sun River, and carried on a dairy and stage business until 1876. In 1877 Mr. Armstrong went to Oregon, but came to Fort Benton in 1878. In 1880 he located another ranch at Teton and is now engaged in raising cattle. January 1, 1882, he married Miss Smith.

JAMES M. ARNOUX, farmer and stock-raiser, was born in New York City, in 1841, and at ten years of age went to Cincinnati, Ohio; thence, via Cairo, to St. Louis, Mo., and until 1853 served as clerk on steamboats and railroad lines. In that year he went up the Missouri river to where old Fort Randall now stands, but soon returned to St. Louis, where he resumed the occupation of clerk, and remained until 1862. He then came to Ft. Benton, and spent the time until 1867 in roaming through various parts of the territory, engaged in various occupations. In 1867 he settled down, and securing a position as clerk at Ft. Benton, so continued until 1872. He then opened the first farm on the south side of the Missouri river, where he raises fine crops of grain and vegetables. In 1872 he also engaged in raising horses and cattle, which he has continued to the present time. He is also interested in mines in the Barker district. In 1868 he was elected clerk of Choteau county for three years, and in 1871 was elected county commissioner, and served two years, being again elected to that office in 1875 for a period of two years more. In 1882 he was again elected for a term of six years, and has also served as United States commissioner eleven years. Mr. Arnoux was married in 1867 to Miss Susan Ammell, of Dakota, by whom he has four children.

D. M. C. BELL, ranchman for Mr. Weatherwax,

P. O. Fort Benton, was born in Cawdor parish, Scotland, March 31, 1854. His parents, John and Ann (McCaffer) Bell, owned a farm in Cawdor parish, and there young Bell resided until 1883, when he emigrated, shipping from Glasgow, in charge of a band of blood-horses, consigned to Montreal. He moved to Benton, Montana territory, in charge of stock-horses, where he was engaged by Mr. Weatherwax as ranchman.

PETER BEROU, farmer of Teton Valley, P.O. Fort Benton, son of Frederick and Selina (St. Antoine) Berou, was born in Canada in 1851, where he was raised. In 1869–71 he was employed in the Michigan lumber trade, then returned to Canada, where he was engaged in farming until 1873, when he moved to Bismarck, Dak. There he was employed as teamster by the government for one year; then he moved to Butte, M. T., and was there employed in mining and prospecting for some months. He passed three years in the Upper Missouri timber country, and next located his ranch on the Teton, where he is now engaged in agriculture. Mr. Berou was married at Fort Benton, November 1, 1882, to Miss Minnie Marcotte.

JAMES H. BERRY (deceased) came from Nevada to Virginia City in 1867, his wife accompanying him, and here engaged in mining until 1869, when he and his family left for Missouri by way of Fort Benton. Here he followed agriculture until his death, which occurred October 17, 1877. He was married in Nevada September 26, 1865. Mrs. M. E. Berry was born in Callaway Co., that State, January 18, 1845, and was educated in the Fulton Female Seminary. In 1862 she visited Nevada. In 1879, two years after the death of her husband, Mrs. Berry returned to Montana, and lived one year on the Chestnut. In 1880 she located her farm of 240 acres on Highwood Creek, where she now resides with her family.

P. BERTRANG, Old Agency, P. O., Choteau, was born in Minnesota, May 11, 1859. When 16 years old he went to Dakota, where he worked at blacksmithing. In 1880 he came to Bozeman, M. T., where he remained until 1883, in which year he came to Choteau, where he opened a blacksmithshop, in which business he still continues.

C. W. BLACK, P. O. Fort Benton, was born in Bradford Co., Pa., January 1, 1831; moved to Iowa in 1855, and to California in 1860, where he was engaged in the mines for six years. In 1866 he visited Helena, M. T., and in 1867 proceeded to Oregon, again visiting California. In 1869 he left San Francisco for New York, visited his home in Pennsylvania, and returned to Montana the same year. He is the owner of a fertile farm of three hundred and twenty acres on Belt creek.

JOHN A. BLACKABY, P. O. Fort Benton, son of Henry and Mary E. Blackaby, was born in Missouri, September 10, 1859, and was there raised and educated. He came to Montana in 1880, was engaged in various industrial pursuits until 1882, and then located his present ranch on the Teton. Mr. Blackaby was married at Falmouth, Mo., January 17, 1876, to Miss Eliza Holly.

C. H. BOYLE, P. O. Fort Benton: This gentleman was born in the state of Alabama, in September, 1846, and received a fair business education. In 1866 he went to Kansas City, Mo., and in 1867 became interested in the gas works of that place, in which business he continued four years. He then moved to Fort Scott, Kan., where he became interested in similar business, and after remaining there a year, went to Jefferson City, Mo., and was interested in the gas works of the city one year. From there he went to Springfield, where he remained a short time, and thence to Lexington, Mo., remaining one year. He subsequently engaged in the gas business at Hot Springs, Ark., for a year, thence returning to Fort Scott, and engaging in the lime and cement business until 1879, at which time he came to Montana and settled on a ranch in the vicinity of Highwood, Choteau county, where he has since followed the pursuit of a farmer and stock-raiser, having imported some very valuable stock for breeding purposes. In 1882 he commenced the dairy business, which he still continues. While in Fort Scott, Kan., Mr. Boyle officiated as a member of the city council, and since coming to Montana has served as road supervisor, trustee of school district, and was one of the organizers of the school district in which he now resides. In 1868 Mr. Boyle was married to Miss Caroline Hicks, of Missouri, by whom he has one child.

HERMAN BRENKMAN, Fort Benton, was born April 8, 1836, in Bremen, Germany. He learned the trade of ship carpenter, at which he worked until 1858, when he came to the United States and located at New Orleans. There he worked at his trade for nine months; thence removed to St. Paul, Minn., where he worked on the steamboats, and thence to La Crosse, Wis., remaining until 1866. In that year he came overland with Colonel Holman's expedition to Fort Benton; was located at Helena; engaged in mining for two years; returned to Fort Benton and worked as a carpenter in summer, and hunted, sold furs and traded with the Indians in winter, continuing this business four years. He finally opened a butcher shop, but sold it after two years and went to Barker, where he was again engaged in mining four years. Mr. Brenkman married Marie Kirchhoff, April 18, 1860, at St. Paul, and has six children—William, Eda, Henry, Charles, John and Maggie. Mr. Brenkman is interested in various ranches and mines, also in stock-raising. He owns the addition to Benton known as the Brenkman Addition. He has been elected three terms as road supervisor; was school trustee for six years; public administrator for three years; also held the office of deputy sheriff for a short time.

D. G. BROWNE, Fort Benton, was born in Ireland January 16, 1859, and at an early age came to the United States, locating in Utah in 1866, where he clerked for Wells, Fargo & Co. for one winter. In 1877 he went to Deer Lodge, Mont., and engaged in the freighting business. Leaving that, he took charge of W. S. Wetzel's books for two years, and in 1882 purchased an interest in the Upper Ferry at Benton. After one and one-half years he sold out, and obtained the government contract for hay at Fort Assiniboine. He married Miss Wright in April, 1883. Mr. Browne is engaged in freighting, and December 13, 1883, he was appointed the assignee of W. S. Wetzel. Mrs. Browne was formerly a teacher in the public schools.

W. J. BROWN, Teton Valley, P.O. Fort Benton, son of Robert and Sarah Brown, was born in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., February 3, 1838. In 1861 he accompanied his father to California, settling in Contra Costa county, where they were engaged in farming eight years. In 1872 he visited Utah, returned to California, and thence started out on a round of travel through the West, settling in Montana in 1876. For some years he was engaged in freighting between Helena, Benton, Fort McLeod, Fort Shaw and many other points. He is now engaged in the wood business on the Teton for the Benton market.

H. R. BUCK, of firm Buck & Hunt, attorneys, Fort Benton, was born at Vicksburg, Miss., September 17, 1853. He came to Montana in the fall of 1879, and formed a partnership with Mr. Hunt in the practicing of law, the firm still continuing under same name, enjoying an excellent business and influential connection.

ROLAND W. BUCKLAND, Fort Benton, was born November 21, 1840, at Springfield, Mass. In 1855 he went to California, where he remained three years; then lived with Senator Phelps two years. In 1861 he visited the Frazer river country, thence went to the Cariboo mines, and in 1863 came to Walla Walla; in 1864 he was engaged driving pack trains to Idaho City; left for Lewiston during the stampede, and in 1866 came to Bears' Gulch, M. T. In 1867 he went to Fort Shaw; in 1868 made a stay at Helena; in 1869 came to Fort Benton; in 1870 he visited Carson, Nev., thence moved to Corrine and Deer Lodge, thence to Whoop-up trading post, where he traded with the Indians until 1874. Mr. Buckland is now engaged in farming and cattle raising at Highwood, and has an interest in the Barker mines.

F. W. BUCKSEN, Fort Benton, was born in Cumberland, Md., October 27, 1860, and came to Fort Benton in 1878, and clerked in the Overland Hotel for six months; then took charge of a restaurant, where he remained eighteen months. He then opened a notion store, which he carried on for two years. In 1883 Mr. Bucksen moved to his present quarters in the Odd Fellows' Hall, and has a full line of boots, shoes, fancy goods, cigars and tobacco, and a general line of everything found in a notion store.

SAMUEL BURD, P. O., Choteau, was born in the State of New York, February 15, 1815; a son of Samuel and Elizabeth Burd. When nine years of age, our subject removed with his parents to the State of Michigan, where he remained working upon their farm and attending school until 1864, when he came to Montana and followed mining at Alder Gulch about one year. The ensuing five years were spent in freighting between the important towns of the Territory. After quitting that occupation he became interested in stock raising and farming, which he has continued to the present time. He is now located in the valley of the Teton near the Old Agency.

JULIAN F. BURD, dealer in general merchandise, was born January 18, 1853, at Grand Rapids, Mich., and at sixteen years of age moved to Virginia City and began mining, and subsequently freighted between Benton and Helena. In 1867 our subject returned to Grand Rapids, Mich., attended school, and then kept books for one year. In 1872 he went to Sun river, located ranch, where he remained one year, again returning to Michigan. After a short time he moved to Kansas City, Mo., where he was engaged in a photograph gallery, which he carried on for four years, when he came to Dupuyer, M. T., and located a ranch. Mr. Burd is engaged in general merchandise business, which he commenced October 1, at that point, and operates two ranches. May 3, 1882, he married Miss Tillie Kahn, of Independence, Mo.

JOSEPH COPALL, P. O. Fort Benton, a native of Italy, came to the United States in 1849, landing at New York, moving in same year to New Orleans, where he was engaged in steamboating until 1850, in which year he moved to St. Louis, Mo., thence to St. Paul, Minn. Returning to St. Louis, he, in 1851, went up the river to Fort Benton for the American Fur Company. In 1853 he again moved to St. Louis, returning the year following to Fort Benton with a Mr. Ivrey. On entering the service of the American Fur Company he was made a hunter and trapper. He built the first house at Silver City in 1865, and ten years later he established the first white settlement on the Shonkin Creek, where he now owns 160 acres, 125 of which are now under fence and 100 cultivated, which produced in 1883 forty barrels of oats, 15,000 pounds of potatoes per acre, and 18,000 of onions per acre. Mr. Copall's first wife, to whom he was married in 1857, died in 1865, and a few years later he married his present wife.

JOHN M. CHEATHAM, farmer, P. O. Fort Benton, was born in Wisconsin, February 19, 1852; moved with his parents to Minnesota in 1857, thence to Pike Co., Mo., in 1865, and again to Illinois, where he was engaged in agriculture until 1870, in which year he moved to Omaha, Neb. He subsequently resided a short time at Blair, and was engaged in farming at Green Island until 1876, when he visited the Black Hills. Here he remained mining three years; then located at Bismarck, teaming in winter and working on the Missouri in summer. From this point Mr. Cheatham moved to Helena and thence to his present ranch.

CHAS. CHOUQUETTE, P. O. Choteau, was born in St. Louis, Mo., February 9, 1823; son of Henry and Rosalia (Piquette) Chouquette. Having learnt the blacksmith trade our subject left St. Louis at the age of nineteen, and hiring to the American Fur Co. arrived at Fort Benton, Mont., in 1844, since when he has passed the principal part of his time in the territory, having worked for the Fur Company some twenty-eight years. Mr. Chouquette is a man of remarkable energy for one of his age, and has been of great service in the settling up of the country. In numerous treaties with the Indians he has acted as interpreter, performing the duties of such office with great satisfaction to all concerned. He is now very pleasantly located with his family on the Teton river near Choteau City.

CHOTEAU & CO.—In 1765 Pierre Laclede Siquest (called Laclede), with August and Pierre Choteau, emigrated from France, and settled in the Mississippi valley, having a charter from the French government, giving them exclusive right to trade with the Indians of Louisiana as far north as St. Peter's river. In 1799, a post was established near St. Joseph's, and in 1800 another at Randolph Bluffs, three miles below the mouth of the Kaw, the whole Choteau family being fur traders when Louisiana was ceded to the American government in 1803. Before that time, the trade with the Indians was carried on by a system of monopoly; any person desiring to engage in the business obtaining of the governor the exclusive privilege of trading with a particular tribe, or upon a certain river. The only permanent establishment founded on the waters of the Missouri, under this system, was that of Pierre Choteau, who enjoyed a monopoly of the trade of the Osage nation for nearly twenty years, his fort or trading house being on the river below the great Osage villages. Manuel de Lisa was his successor, obtaining the privilege only a short time before the territory passed from the hands of Spain. Other enterprising individuals traded in a small way with the different tribes; but as no forts were establishsd by the Spanish government, and no companies for mutual co-operation and protection were sanctioned, the business was too hazardous to encourage many adventurers. After the change of government, the establishment of United States trading posts, and the abolition of the monopoly system, the trading with the western Indians rapidly increased. "The Missouri Fur Company" was organized in 1808, with Manuel de Lisa at its head, and Pierre and August Choteau and nine other members, among whom was said to be Hugh Glenn. Expeditions were sent out, and posts founded among the Indians of Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and some in Arkansas. The company was unfortunate; their trading posts were abandoned, and it was dissolved in 1812, the members establishing independent houses to prosecute the trade, and also to furnish outfits for hunters and trappers. The most advanced United States trading post on the Missouri river and the western limit of white settlement in 1811, was Fort Osage, 34 miles below the mouth of the Kansas. In 1813 the American Fur Company was formed, and the Choteaus formerly connected with the Missouri Company, and also Pierre, Jr., and his brother Francis became members. This company occupied the posts of the Missouri Trading Company, of which it was an outgrowth, and made great efforts to monopolize the trade in the Southwest by rooting out independent traders. Francis Choteau was sent to Kansas, and was employed for several years in this work. The post known as the "Four Houses," so called from its being built on the four sides of an open square, was established on the north bank of the Kaw, twenty miles above its mouth, and in 1821 a general agency for furnishing supplies was established at the mouth of the river, from which men were sent to the Neosho and Osage. In 1825 Francis was joined by Cyprian, his brother, and a house was built about opposite the present site of Muncie, on the south side of the Kaw, and in 1830 another trading post was established by Frederick on Mission, then American Chief's creek, in what is now Shawnee county. A few years later, posts were established through the country from the Platte to the Arkansas, and northward to the upper Missouri, while trappers, traders and hunters were sent throughout the entire mountain region by the arch traders known as Choteau & Co. (Vide History of Trading Posts and of Fort Benton.)

ROBERT COATSWORTH, ranchman on the Teton, P. O. Fort Benton; son of Robert and Bettie Coatsworth, was born in England; came to the United States in 1853, and was employed in the mines of Schuylkill Co., Pa., for nine months, when he moved to Shellsburg, Wis., where he worked in the lead mines until 1860, and from that year to 1863 he was in the gold mines of Colorado. In 1863 he returned to Wisconsin, where he labored in the lead mines until 1876, in which year he came to Montana. Mr. Coatsworth was engaged in mining until 1880, then located his ranch on the Teton. He was married in England to Miss Fannie Swinghank.

JERRY COLLINS, Editor River Press, Fort Benton, was born in Cork County, Ireland, in December, 1850. His parents on coming to the United States located at Wabash, Indiana. There Mr. Collins received his education and afterward edited the Wabash Courier. In 1878 he moved to Logansport, where he edited the Logansport Phero for eighteen months, and in the spring of 1880 he came to Fort Benton, where, with J. E. Stevens, he established what is known as the River Press Publishing Co., of which firm he is manager. Mr. Collins was married in June, 1878, to Miss Lettie Fitzgerald, of Logansport, Ind. (Vide History of Press.)

TIMOTHY E. COLLINS, banker, was born in Cork County, Ireland, in 1843, and a few years later came to the United States. He was educated at Wabash, Indiana, and in 1864 pushed westward and located at Virginia City, Mont., engaging for a number of months in mining. He subsequently passed one year in the mines of Grizzly Gulch and six years in Confederate Gulch and elsewhere. He was elected county clerk and served nine years; was also probate judge for one term. Removing to Fort Benton in 1880 he established the Bank of Northern Montana, which is now the leading banking house of Choteau and Meagher counties. In 1878 Mr. Collins and others established large sheep ranges. During 1872-73 Mr. C. studied law, and was admitted by the supreme court to practice in the courts of Montana. For several years he was the only attorney in Meagher county, and served four years as deputy district attorney. In 1870 he was chosen to the legislature from Meagher county, and in 1872 was elected legislative councilor by Meagher and Gallatin counties. His whole life in the territory has been full of energy and enterprise. Politically Mr. Collins is a democrat. In 1874 he married Miss V. A. Higgins, of Diamond City. They are the parents of three children.

C. E. CONRAD is one of the firm of I. G. Baker & Co., of Fort Benton, Mont., wholesale and retail dealers in general merchandise, Mr. C. E. Conrad and W. G. Conrad being the resident members of the firm at that place. Mr. C. E. Conrad was born in Virginia in 1850, and received a fair business education. After his school-days were over he removed to Stirling Valley, Cayuga Co., Va; where he was employed as clerk some 18 months; then came to Fort Benton, Mont., and served in the capacity of clerk for I. G. Baker & Bro. until 1873, becoming in that year a member of the firm of I. G. Baker, Bro. & Co., and so continued one year. Mr. Conrad and his brother, W. G. Conrad, at that time purchased the interest held by Geo. A. Baker, since when the business has been conducted under the firm name of I. G. Baker & Co. In 1874 this firm, in company with T. C. Power & Co., built the steamer Benton, and in 1875 I. G. Baker & Co. bought the steamer Red Cloud. In 1876 they built the steamer Colonel McLeoud. These boats run for a number of years between Fort Benton and St. Louis, Mo., and Fort Benton and Bismarck. The steamer Col. McCloud sunk in 1879 and the Red Cloud went down in 1882, while the Benton was sold in 1882 to T. C. Power & Bro. From 1865 to 1874 this firm did an immense business with the Indians, having trading-posts at fourteen different points, at one time, and collecting annually some 30,000 buffalo robes and $100,000 worth of fine furs. In 1874 the Canadian government sent into the country 500 mounted police, which I. G. Baker & Co. supplied with everything except guns, horses and clothing, and were the financial agents for the Canadian Government in the Territory of the Northwest. This trade they held for ten years, obtaining it by contract from the Canadian government. They have now two branch houses in the British Possessions, one at Fort McLeoud and the other at Fort Galgary, established in 1874 and 1875, respectively. Their supplies are received over the Canadian Pacific. The company are also largely interested in freighting by wagons, and have freighting outfits with a carrying capacity of 500 tons, plying between various points in Montana and the Northwest Territory. This firm is also interested in the hardware business of Wackerlin & Co., of Fort Benton, as also in the wholesale liquor business of T. J. Todd & Co., also of Fort Benton. Mr. Conrad is one of the founders of the First National Bank of Benton, established in 1880. In 1878, in company with several others, embarked in the cattle business, which in 1882 they organized under the title of the Benton and St. Louis Cattle Co., and as such are still known and doing business. In company with Messrs. Harris & Co. they bought the Morrow Bros.' band of cattle, making a paid up capital of $500,000. Their band at present numbers about 15,000 head. Mr. Conrad was married to Miss Nettie D. Standford, of Halifax, Nova Scotia, in 1880, by whom he has one child, Charles D. Conrad.

O. G. COOPER, Home Ranch, Dupuyer, was born in Washington Co., Pa., December 4, 1846. His parents came west to Iowa in 1850, and with them he remained until 1857. He removed to Memphis, Mo., and remained there until 1868. In 1871 he visited to Texas, where he resided until 1874, when he came to Wyoming with a herd of cattle, thence to Montana where he engaged in teaching school, and afterward engaged in freighting. His train was attacked during the Nez Perces war by the Indians, this they captured, destroyed it and killed Fred Barker. Mr. Cooper continued freighting until 1881, when he engaged in the cattle business. He was previously interested in sheep raising with his brother. In January, 1883, he disposed of his cattle and now his stock interests are confined to sheep, of which he owns a large band. He has three ranches and owns about five hundred acres at the old agency. He is president of the Montana Wool Growers' Association. His marriage with Miss A. M. Downing, of Memphis, Mo., was celebrated in January, 1882.

GEORGE W. CRANE, proprietor Novelty Store, Fort Benton, was born November 27, 1843, at Middlebury, Vt., and at 13 years of age he moved to Champaign Co., Ill., attending school at Springfield. From there he went to Mechanicsburg, where he learned telegraphy, and when 17 years old moved to St. Louis, where he enlisted in the army in company known as Independent Rifle Co., acting as Lyon's Guards until latter's death. He then returned to Illinois and raised a company there for the 26th I. V. I., served three years, and was then appointed chief clerk in the quartermaster's deparment, where he remained until the close of the war. After leaving the army our subject began railroading at Lafayette, Ind., then kept books at Helena, Mo., until July, 1866. Leaving here for Montana, after a short time, he went to Nebraska and hauled ties and wood for the railroad one year. Then went to Gallatin Valley, working as carpenter and mining six months, and on a ranch. June, 1868, he came to Fort Benton and drove mules to Helena. Arriving there he went on a stampede to Basin Gulch and was engaged in harvesting on a ranch in Gallatin Valley; afterward mined in vicinity of Lop Ear Gulch. In 1871 Mr. Crane arrived at Helena, where he clerked in A. M. Holters & Co.'s store for three months, then rented what was known as Farmers' Corral, which he kept until 1872, and in July of that year he prospected at Clancy, afterward working on a ranch until October, 1873; then engaged in general merchandise business, which he carried on until 1879, in March of which year he came to Fort Benton, and opened what is known as the News and Novelty Store. February 14, 1877, Mr. Crane married Miss Julia I. Payne, of Helena, and by her has three children—Edgar R., Oliver B. and Ezra L. Our subject held the position of postmaster five years and a half at Clancy, besides being Justice of the Peace. Mr. Crane also pays special attention to raising fine stock.

CHARLES CRAWFORD, livery, Fort Benton, was born September, 8, 1848, in Chester Co., Pa. At the age of 10 years he removed with his father to Fort Wayne, Ind., and two years later pushed for the Great West. He spent one year as teamster with a mule train at Leavenworth, Kan., and nine years as a cow boy, subsequently learning the machinist's trade at Cheyenne. For six years he was engaged in mining and at his trade in Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, Idaho and Montana. From 1877-79 he followed the fortunes of a stock raiser in Judith Basin, and after disposing of his interests located at Fort Benton and opened a livery stable in company with C. W. Trailkill, whose share he soon after purchased. After two years spent at the business Mr. Crawford sold out and bought a ranch on the Teton, resided one year upon it, and finally returned to Benton and again established himself as a liveryman. In 1880 he married Miss Mary Hewitt, of Fort Benton, who has borne him one child, Charles H. Mr. Crawford owns an interest in some very productive coal mines in Meagher Co. He was once elected city marshal of Benton, but resigned in order to give his whole attention to his livery business.

THOMAS A. CUMMINGS, Fort Benton; born in Kilkenny County, Ireland, August 3, 1845; settled with his parents in 1849, at Evans' Mills, Jefferson Co., N. Y., where he attended school until 1861. He then enlisted in Battery C, First New York Artillery, and served with the Fifth Army Corps, Army of the Potomac, until the close of the war. In July, 1867, he arrived at Helena, Mon., where he entered John Kinna's hardware store. In 1868 he took charge, at Blackfoot City, Deer Lodge county, of the Montana Hide and Fur Company's business, which closed in 1869. Our subject opened a general merchandise store at Washington Gulch, Deer Lodge county, in 1870; was appointed United States Collector of Customs for Montana and Idaho in 1873, with office at Helena, until 1877, and at Fort Benton until 1881. Since that time he has been engaged in the insurance business, representing all the leading companies both American and foreign. He is also largely interested in real estate and loans. Mr. Cummings was married in September, 1880, to Miss Mary Gallagher, of Carthage, N. Y.

T. J. DAVIDSON was born March 19, 1856, at St. Louis, Mo., and was engaged in farming in the vicinity until 1880. He attended the commercial college in that city one year, and after leaving college came to Benton and took charge of the branch house of A. J. Davidson, of Helena. This position he still occupies.

SAMUEL DEAN, ranchman, P. O. Fort Benton, was born in March, 1845, in Huntingdon Co., Pa. Here he was engaged in farming until 21 years of age, when he went to Jackson Co., Iowa, where he farmed three years. From here, accompanied by his brother, I. N., our subject went to Blakeley, Scott Co., Minn., and opened a general merchandise store, which he carried on for three years, and then sold out his interest. In 1871 he went to Pembina, Red river, Dak., with a surveying party, which was engaged for three years surveying the boundary line between the United States and British possessions. In 1873 Mr. Dean went to Helena and mined one year, and for two years longer was employed in different portions of the territory in the same line. He then purchased a farm in Prickly Pear valley. Selling out in the spring of 1881, he located a ranch on Sand Coulee, where he is engaged in the stock business.

EDWARD DENNIS, rancher; P. O. Choteau; was born August 1, 1845, at Knoxville, Tenn. In 1864 his parents moved to Sullivan Co., Mo. Here our subject farmed until 19 years old; then went to Utah, where he wintered, arriving at Virginia City in July, 1865. From there he moved to Helena, where he teamed for three years; then engaged in mining for three years in the vicinity, returning to teaming for two years more; then bought a ranch on Sun River, where he remained six years, raising cattle. In 1875 Mr. Dennis established a ranch at Old Agency, where he is at present engaged in stock raising. December 15, 1881, he married Miss Cealia Pambram, and by her has one child—Charles P. Mr. Dennis has held the position of school trustee for several years, but declined the last election.

CHAS. E. DUER, Banker.—Mr. Duer was born in the state of Maryland in 1830, where he received a fair business education, and at the age of 17 accepted a position as clerk, so continuing until 1853, at that time going to Galena, Ill., and engaging as bookkeeper. In 1860 he opened a grocery store in that city, which business he conducted about two years. He then embarked in the grain trade, which business he closed out in 1865, and soon after landed in Helena, Montana, where he served in the capacity of bookkeeper about six years. In 1872 he was appointed cashier of the Montana National Bank, which important position he held eight months, afterward accepting the position of bookkeeper in the People's National Bank, and thus remaining until 1877. From that time until 1880 he loaned money on his own account. In June, 1880, he went to Fort Benton, and in company with Messrs. Collins & Herschfield established the Northern Bank of Montana, which they have continued to the present time. The banking company was largely interested in the building of the Grand Union Hotel at that place. Mr. Duer is a member of the Odd Fellows' Association, and during the year 1876 was grand master of that order for the Territory of Montana. In the year 1873 Mr. Duer was married to Miss C. the same time he prospected and mined in the summer and traded with the Indians in winter. In 1871 he came to Fort Benton and engaged in Indian trading until 1875, when he purchased a wholesale liquor and grocery house, carried it on for five years, closed out the grocery, and has since carried on what is known as the Benton Brewery. Mr. Evans brews his own beer, having the only establishment of the kind in Benton. He married Miss Clara Peters, September 19, 1876. She died in 1882, having borne him two children—Clara A. and Harry (deceased). Mr. Evans is interested in ranches and horse raising. In 1873 the Indians having stolen a number of horses, Mr. Evans, with a party, followed them into Canada. Here the Indians attempted to surprise them, but in doing so forty-three were killed. Only one of the party of whites, Edward Grace, was killed. In 1875 the Canadian authorities had the entire party arrested, accusing them of murder. The trial lasted twenty-two days and ended by setting them free.

M. A. FLANAGAN, drugs and notions, and postmaster, Fort Benton, was born January 6, 1847, at Dubuque, Ia., and attended school at Sinsinawa College, Wis. He was engaged in a general mercantile business at Dubuque, Ia, for five years, and came to Virginia City, Mon., in 1866, bringing a stock of goods from the states, which he disposed of during the winter of 1866 and 1867. He then engaged in merchandising, in Highland district, M. T., for two years; also at Helena, M. T., for one year and a half. He sold out at Helena and removed to Fort Benton in 1869, taking charge of the books for T. C. Power & Co., and holding the position for seven years. He erected an adobe building on the corner of Baker and Front streets, where he is now carrying on the drug and notion business. In July, 1878, the postoffice was transferred to his charge and is in the rear of his store. Mr. Flanagan married Miss Elizabeth McKinley, of Dubuque, Ia, in April, 1871, and has four children, Genevieve, Virginia, Gracie and Frank.

M. FURNELL, ranchman, Sun River, was born in June, 1841, at Woodstock, Canada After leaving school he farmed until 18 years old; then went to Sierra Co., California, in 1860, and mined there for two years; thence to British Columbia at Cariboo, and mined there until 1864. He then moved to Virginia City, where he mined one year, thence to Helena, where he mined two years. Subsequently he went to New York, purchased a stock of goods, and, bringing them to Montana, engaged in merchandising. In 1868 he went to Sun River, located a ranch, and engaged in raising cattle and sheep. This he carries on at the present time. Mr. Furnell was married to Miss Della Peek, of Michigan, April 26, 1882. They are the parents of one boy, George R. Mr. Furnell has held the position of school trustee for two years. He subsequently followed mining for ten years in the different territories, and in August, 1869, came to Fort Benton, where he was engaged in freighting and trading with the Indians until 1877. He then purchased a ranch and was interested in the cattle business for three years, but sold out and went east, shipping horses to Benton. He formed a partnership with Mr. Strong and built the Park Livery Stables, soon after purchasing his partner's interest and subsequently disposing of an interest to Mr. Rowe. In July, 1883, Mr Lewis bought out Rowe, and business is now carried on under the firm name of Harris & Lewis. Mr. Harris married Miss Emma Babbage, November 7, 1881. He is engaged with Mr. Rowe in various land, stock and mining interests. In July, 1883, he was elected city councilman.

THOMAS B. HARWOOD, ranchman, Benton and Bellings road, P. O. Fort Benton, was born in Scott Co., Ky., October 24, 1834. In 1840 his parents, Albert G. and Delilah Harwood, moved to Illinois, where our subject resided until 1857, when he went to the mines in Colorado. In 1859 he settled at Fort Bridger, Utah, where he worked on a farm, assisted in keeping store, and was interested in a toll bridge. He came to Bannack in 1862, engaged in mining, which occupation he followed throughout the territory for several years. He was also three years in the Canadian Northwest trading with the Indians. Mr. Harwood settled on his present ranch in 1882. He has charge there of the stage station.

ISAAC N. HAZLETT, of the firm of Hamilton & Hazlett, P. O. Choteau, was born at Toledo, Ohio, April 29, 1850; son of Isaac and Emma Hazlett. In 1861 he went to Chicago, where he served as office boy in Potter Palmer's immense store and also attended school until 1865. At that time he started on a tour through Illinois and Iowa, where he engaged in various pursuits until 1869, at which time he came to Montana, arriving at Sun River in August of that year. He at once assumed the occupation of herding. Abandoning that he followed trading with the Indians and bookkeeping for Indian traders until 1876, when he joined Mr. Hamilton in general merchandise business. He is interested in horse raising and lands; is notary public, having been appointed in 1882.

STEPHEN HENAULT, P. O. Fort Benton, was born twenty miles above Quebec, Canada, in 1848. In 1859 he went to Missouri, remaining there until 1866, when he came to Montana, remaining at Virginia City several months. He then came to the Teton river, and has since spent the principal part of his time in that vicinity engaged in hunting, trapping and various other pursuits. Mr. Henault is married and has four children

JOHN HEZEKIAH was born February 3, 1844, at Harrison, O. His parents dying shortly after his birth, he was bound out as an apprentice at ten years of age, in a wagon maker's shop. At fifteen years he worked at the bench as journeyman. When twenty-one years old, he went to Cincinnati, O., and worked for J. C. Hollenshade four years, returning thence to his old home, where he remained two years. In 1866 he came to Helena, Mon., with the Fiske expedition, and worked as a journeyman for eight years; then opened a shop, which he carried on for two years. In 1876 he removed to Benton and opened a wagon shop, which he continues. Mr. Hezekiah is well known throughout the territory, and in his line always gives satisfaction.

JOSEPH HILL was born in New Mexico, where he was engaged in various pursuits. From New Mexico he went to Kansas, remaining some time at Leavenworth, and then moved to Salt Lake City. After spending a short time there he came into Montana in 1865, and has spent the intervening time at Deer Lodge, Missoula, Helena, Fort Benton, Sun River, Old Agency, and various other points, engaged in teaming, hunting and general work. He is now married, and has taken up a ranch in the valley of the Teton.

JOSEPH S. HILL, with T. C. Power & Bro., Fort Benton, was born in Florida in 1848. In 1863 he came to Montana, and was located on the Missouri river, where he established a post, and carried on trading. In 1875 he came to Fort Benton to take charge of T. C. Power & Bro.'s general merchandise house. This position he has held for eight years. Having entire charge of the house, by his close attention to business the house has reached its present prosperity, and is now one of the foremost in the territory.

GEORGE W. HOUK, deputy sheriff, was born January 20, 1846, and removed, with his parents, a few years after, to St. Louis. After leaving school, Mr. Houk attended bar on a Mississippi line of steamers, running between St. Louis and New Orleans, and gradually worked upward until he became pilot, which occupation he followed for three years. He went to Sacramento in 1858, and until 1864 was engaged in mining and prospecting in California, Nevada and Utah. He was afterward connected with the pony express one year; drove stage for Wells, Fargo & Co. two years, and in July, 1866, came to Fort Benton with a band of horses for Pease & Cullen, contractors for the United States, also owners of the Northwestern Fur Co. He worked for them one year, and was then sent by the Northwestern Fur Co. to build Fort Browning, on the Milk river. He afterward built the Black Foot agency, which was finished in March, 1866. Returning to Fort Benton, he engaged in the corral and livery business, but at the expiration of a year closed out and engaged in teaming until 1872, when he was appointed sheriff for Choteau county, to fill unexpired term. He was re-elected for two years; then engaged in the saloon business with J. S. Wells for one year; sold out and went to the northwest on the Whoop-up whisky trade; returned in one year to Fort Benton, and took charge of a mule train for T. C. Powers for two years; drove stage for the Helena & Fort Benton Stage Co. one year; had charge of the Cocoran Cattle Ranch Co. in the northwest for one year, and upon returning to Benton was appointed deputy sheriff under J. J. Healey, which appointment he still holds under James McDevitt. Mr. Houk married Miss Marie Simons, September 22, 1875, and has had two children—Francis (deceased) and George Presley. Mr. Houk owns the Fort Benton racing and driving park, the first opened in Choteau county, and is also interested in various mines and ranches in the territory.

JOSEPH HOWARD, P. O. Choteau, when a mere child left his home in St. Louis, and proceeded with a Captain Savory to Santa Fe, New Mexico, where he remained about eighteen months; then went to Fort Laramie, where he remained about one year, afterward coming up the Missouri river to near where Camp Randall is now situated, and in 1851 he arrived in Montana territory with the American Fur Co., with whom he was engaged sixteen years. After this he worked for John Grant at Deer Lodge seven years, and was with Carroll & Steele some eighteen months. In 1873 Mr. Howard moved to his present ranch.

EDWIN HUNT, P. O. Fort Benton, was born in Orleans, N. Y., July 14, 1851. His parents moved to Lenawee county, Michigan, in 1855, thence to Eaton county, same state, in 1869 or 1870, and in 1874 he (our subject) went to Minnesota, thence to Wyoming, where he worked on the U. P. railroad, removing to Corinne, U. T., from which town he came to Montana. On his arrival here he was employed as ranchman in Beaverhead county, where he remained eighteen months; he next herded sheep in Deer Lodge county, and in 1877-8 he was cook at the stage station on the H. & D. L. road. Afterward he was connected with stage lines until 1883, when, with his partner, Mr. Richter, he opened a sheep ranch on the Teton river, fifty miles from Fort Benton.

WILLIAM H. HUNT, JR., member from Choteau Co. of the Constitutional Convention of 1884, was born in New Orleans in 1858; was educated at the German school and at Yale College; studied law at the Louisiana law school and in his father's office; was admitted to the bar of Dakota in 1878, and has been practicing law at Fort Benton, M. T., since that year; was appointed collector of customs for Montana and Idaho by President Garfield, in 1881; was a member of the Republican Convention at Helena in May, 1881; is the member from Choteau on the Territorial Republican Central Committee, and was a member of the judiciary committee of the convention of 1884. (Vide Pol. Hist.)

A. C. JOHNSON, with T. C. Power & Bro., was born in Chicago, May 5, 1859. After completing his education he left at the age of 19 for Benton, and in the winter of 1878 had charge of business at Fort Walsh, Northwest Territory. In the spring of 1879 he commenced keeping books for T. C. Powers & Bro. This position he held until 1882, when he was appointed assistant manager of the house under Mr. Jos. S. Hill.

WM. D. JONES, P. O. Dupuyer, was born near Kansas City, Mo., July 20, 1857; son of John R. & Mary Jones. Until 19 years of age he remained on the farm with his parents and then came to Montana, where he worked for four years in Lewis & Clarke Co. He then moved into Choteau Co., settling on Dupuyer Creek. Taking up a ranch he turned his attention to the raising of sheep, of which he now has a fine band.

JACOB A. KANOUSE (deceased) was born June 16, 1814, at Newark, N. J.; graduated at Yale College, studied law, and was admitted to the New Jersey bar in 1839. He engaged in practice at Paterson, N. J., but in 1849 or 1850 removed to California, and for several years carried on freighting and mining business. In 1868 he located at Helena, M. T., and two or three years later at Fort Benton, where he opened a law office and engaged in the practice of his profession. In 1842 he married Miss Hall, of New Jersey, who died, leaving him two children. He subsequently married Miss Sarah A. Horner, of Peoria, Ill., who bore him three children. Mr. Kanouse was honored with numerous public offices, and for some years was a magistrate before whom a large amount of legal business was transacted, having been elected in 1879. He was to some extent interested in mines and ranches in the territory. His death occurred at Fort Benton, July 29, 1884, his widow and five children surviving him.

EDWARD KELLY, of firm Kennedy & Kelly, meat market, Fort Benton, was born January 24, 1847, at New London. After leaving school he was engaged in farming until 19 years of age, and June, 1866, came to Fort Benton. Here he formed a partnership with James Neibors and opened a hotel known as the Benton House. This they carried on for one year, then closed it up. Mr. Kelly next went into the employ of the Northwest Fur Co. going to the Northwest Territory, and working for them one and a half years. He then established the station known as Twenty-eight mile spring, keeping hotel and raising stock. This he continued for nine years. Then located a ranch on Teton, farming and raising stock for three years. In March, 1883, Mr. Kelly formed a partnership with J. J. Kennedy in the butcher business, Mr. Kelly giving especial attention to raising stock. He was married October 18, 1877, to Miss Rosa Medendorf, of Choteau Co., and by her had three children, John E., Myra, and George.

J. J. KENNEDY, Fort Benton, was born March 17, 1840, in Richland Co., O., where he lived until the death of his mother, which occurred New Year's Day, 1850. After this loss he found a home in the family of James M. Morrison until the spring of 1851, when he obtained employment on the Pittsburg & Fort Wayne R. R., then building. In the spring of 1852 he went to Cleveland, finally finding a home in the family of P. Smith, his employer, who still resides there, engaged in his old business—pile driving. In 1854 he visited his birthplace and went to Ft. Wayne with some cattle, remaining in Wabash Co., Ind., till the following spring, when he went to Fort Atkinson with H. D. Lowery, engaging in farming for the two years following. The great gold excitement known as the Cherry Creek Mines, caused him and his employer to start toward Pike's Peak, but meeting thousands of poor starving gold seekers returning, he also turned back as far as Nebraska City, where he joined the Cook survey party, and helped run the base line between Kansas and Nebraska to Fort Kearney, and laying the outlines for two counties and surveying the reservation. Upon his return he met Major Russel, who had the government freight contract for troop supplies in Utah, and engaged to drive a bull team to Camp Floyd, where he met his brother William. In the spring of 1860 he went to Dalls, W. T., miraculously escaping death from the Indians on this trip. In 1861 he started to Orl Fino Gulch, and meeting J. J. Healy at Walla Walla, they went into the mines together. During the summer Healy, having discovered the Florence, his brother William, who had joined them, went with Healey to the new mines, leaving him to oversee the claims at Ora Fino. Late in the fall he sold their claims and conducted a pack train into the Florence mines, where he remained till '62, when he started to search for Healy, finding him at Big Hole Pass. The party, consisting of himself and brother, Healy, Harley McCune, John and Frank Schuber, proceeded to Gold Creek, known now as Pioneer Gulch, where they remained one day, then started to the States via Fort Benton. Mr. Kennedy, with some forty others, left the latter place in mackinaws and met the steamer Shreveport near the mouth of Milk River, Captain La Barge in charge. Deciding not to bring the boat farther up the river, they unloaded at a trading post there. The Sioux, driven from Minnesota by the troops, swarmed on both sides the river; having stolen the horses, and placed one just outside of the woods, one-half mile from the boat, as a coy, he and his brother, Healey and McCune, determined to secure it, which they did by watchfulness, cocked guns, and the great risk of their lives. By the vigilance of the Captain they arrived safely at Omaha and proceeded in company to Chicago, when he and Healey went on to New York and then to Philadelphia, where they had their gold dust coined. Our subject visited his sister near Mansfield, Ohio, where he met his brother William, and in 1863 the various members of the party met at St. Louis and proceeded to Virginia City via Benton. In the spring of 1864 he went to the Kootanai mines in British America via Missoula, returning by Crow's Nest Pass and Fort Benton to Virginia City, engaging in freighting, and in 1865 built mackinaws at Fort Benton. In the fall of this year he located at the mouth of Prickly Pear Canyon; joined by his brother and wife, he remained here until 1868, when he again visited Kootenai mines. He built the stations on the popular stage line from Fort Benton to Helena for Wells, Fargo & Co., while living at the mouth of the canyon. Mr. Kennedy, after returning from the Kootenai mines, went to Cedar Creek mines, running a ferry boat there and spending the following winter in Missoula. Leaving there the spring of 1870, he came to Fort Benton, where he engaged in freighting until about 1876, then in buying and driving cattle, furnishing beef for the forts until October, 1879, when he opened a market in Fort Benton. He again visited his old home in 1881, and on his return built a large brick market on Main street. In the fall of this year he bought W. S. Stocking's and J. D. Weatherwax's herds of cattle; the following spring Edward Kelly became a partner in his business. In 1883 he again visited the old home in the Buckeye State, and while there sought and obtained in marriage the hand of an estimable lady, daughter of the late Rev. B. M. Morrison, and granddaughter of the old gentleman who gave him a home after his mother's death. Early in 1884 Mr. Kennedy brought his bride to his home in Fort Benton, where he still resides, actively engaged in the cattle business.

HENRY A. KINNERLY, ranchman, Teton Valley P. O., Fort Benton, was born at St. Louis, Mo., January 2, 1835; son of Geo H. and Alzierd Kinnerly. At St. Louis he received a good business education and in 1854 was engaged on the Iron Mountain railroad. In 1855 he accompanied Indian Commissioner Cummings into Montana and was with him at the time of making the treaty with the Blackfeet, Flathead and various other tribes whom they met at the mouth of the Judith Basin. He soon afterward returned to St. Louis and in the following spring came into the territory again. In the fall of 1856 he went into Dakota Territory, where he remained until 1861, when he went to Missouri and enlisted in the first Missouri regiment, where he was assigned to staff duty and remained in the service two and a half years and received a bullet wound below the knee. In 1868 he returned to Montana and was engaged at Benton as clerk and trader for several years. He has served a couple of terms in the legislature of the territory, was county treasurer two years and is at present assessor of Choteau county. He is now residing on his ranch on the Teton river, some thirty-five miles from Fort Benton.

JOSEPH KIPP, P. O. Dupuyer, was born on Heart river, Dak., November 29, 1849. When some six years of age he removed, with his parents, to Fort Berthold, remaining there two years, and then to Fort Union, where he stayed about three years; then came into the northern part of Montana Territory with a man named Dawson, who promised to educate him. The Catholic priests had opened a school on the Teton and he was placed in their charge in October, 1859; in 1860 he was sent to their school at Sun river, and they opening another school at St. Ignatius, he was sent there in March, 1861. Returning in fall of same year to Fort Benton, he went to the states and remained at St. Joe, Mo., until 1862, when he returned to Fort Benton and worked for the American Fur Company until 1864. He then clerked for Carroll & Steele two years; and again visiting the states for the purpose of attending school, he entered Bryant & Stratton's college at Peoria, Ill., where he remained about nine months. Returning to Fort Benton in 1867, he again worked for Carroll & Steele, remaining with them eighteen months. He then went north prospecting, and was engaged by the government one year as guide and interpreter at Fort Shaw, and led the troops at the time of the massacre at Fort Baker. This so enraged the Indians that Mr. Kipp had to flee the country for a time, and he moved into the British possessions. Here he was engaged in trading, remaining until 1874, when he returned and worked for Baker & Co., but soon went down the Missouri trading again on his own account, having so continued to the present time. He is now located on the Marias river at old Fort Conrad, where he has a stock of merchandise in company with Mr. Upham. They are also engaged in ranching and ditching, stock-raising and lumber. Mr. Kipp has served as interpreter in the following treaties with the Indians: General Meagher, General Cullen and General Upton He speaks eight different Indian languages and has been of great service in the settling up of this vast country.

SAM KOHLBERG, Fort Benton, was born in Germany in January, 1859; came to New York in 1864; went to San Francisco in 1876; to Virginia City, Mon., in 1878, and became partner of S. Genzberger, under the firm name of Genzberger & Kohlberg. In 1881 he bought in with Gans & Klein at Fort Benton. Mr. Kohlberg was married to Miss Davis in September, 1883.

JOHN LA MOTT, ranchman, P. O. Sun River; was born March 19, 1847, in New York State. His parents moved to Oswego while he was quite a child, and in 1861 he left for Chicago, Ill., where he worked in McCormick's reaping machine factory for five years, then in Graves' pail and tub factory for one year and a half. Leaving this he went to Green Bay, Wis., and was fireman on a tug for one season. From there he moved to St. Louis, Mo., where he worked as fireman on the Missouri Railroad, in the winter of 1867. He then came to Fort Benton, Mon., and has been engaged since in driving cattle, mining, trading with Indians; also had a woodyard on the Missouri. In July, 1881, Mr. La Mott located a ranch on Arrow Creek, and in 1883 devoted some of his time to building the road connecting Fort Benton with Judith basin. In 1880 our subject married Miss Sarah Craskan at Fort Benton, by whom he has one child—Minnie M. Mr. La Mott has been elected road supervisor for the first district of Choteau county. He keeps a toll-house and hotel on the road.

C. M. LANNING, jeweler, was born at Pontiac, Oakland Co., Mich. Upon leaving school he entered the employ of the Detroit Refrigerating Company and served as their clerk for two and a half years. Leaving that city he proceeded westward and up the Missouri river to Fort Benton, Mon., where he arrived June 25, 1868. He worked one year on a ranch in Deer Lodge valley; prospected for a year in the neighborhood of Pioneer City, and was for one year employed as bookkeeper by the Rock Creek Ditch Company. Resigning the latter position, he located at Deer Lodge, and in company with Lee Smith opened a general repair shop. After two years the business was closed out, and Mr. Lanning came to Benton and engaged in the same occupation. He made a trip to Fort Kipp, in the British possessions, and on his return dissolved partnership and went back to that place and opened a shop. Four years later he again returned to Benton and established himself in the same business, gradually increasing his stock and finally working into the jewelry line, which he has continued to the present time. He sold an interest in June, 1882, to G. F. Deltraz, and the firm is now C. M. Lanning & Co. Mr. Lanning married Miss Nettie Fairfield, of Oakland Co., Mich., in July, 1883. In March of that year he published a grammar and vocabulary of the Blackfoot language, which interesting and valuable work he had been eight years in compiling, giving it his attention during leisure hours.

J. T. LEE, proprietor of horse and sheep ranch, Sand Coulee, P. O. Ulidia, was born in Missouri in 1855, and was educated at Lewis College, that place. Our subject came to Montana in 1878 and worked four years for Mr. Perkins. He established his stock ranch in 1881. Mr. Lee owns 480 acres of land at this point, all under fence.

EDWARD W. LEWIS, proprietor of livery, Fort Benton; was born in March, 1844, in Kankakee Co., Ill., and was occupied in farming until 21 years of age. In 1864 he went to Virginia City and there mined one year; then teamed three years. During 1868 and 1869 he freighted between Benton and Helena; then left for Corinne, Utah, and here he freighted for one season. He located a ranch in Missouri valley, and was engaged in farming and stock raising for five years, but selling out he freighted with a mule train from Helena to Ft. McLeod one season; then from Fort Benton to Ft. McLeod. This he carried on for six years. In July, 1883, Mr. Lewis bought out Mr. Row's interest in the Park stable, and, in connection with that business, he runs a mule train to Helena.

WM. LILLARD, P. O. Choteau, was born in Tennessee, January 25, 1840; son of Joseph and Mary Lillard. He remained in Tennessee, principally engaged upon a farm, with his parents until 1862, in which year he moved in Illinois, working upon the railway in that state until 1865: then went to Utah, but he soon moved from there to Dakota, where he devoted his time to herding some eight months, at the expiration of which time he came to Montana, where he has since been engaged in trapping, hunting, ranching, etc., having first opened a ranch on the Teton in 1874, where he remained until 1878, at that time going to his present ranch on the Black Leaf creek, a tributary of the Teton.

MICHAEL LYNCH, ferryman, Fort Benton; was born February 16, 1856, in Longford County, Ireland. At 12 years of age he came to the United States, locating in Iowa, and after leaving school went to Wyoming, where he drove teams from there to the Black Hills; then engaged in mining three years. In 1879 he came to Fort Benton and ran a flatboat, trading in wood. This he carried on for two years, and in 1881 built the ferryboat

H. O. LYNG, P. O., Fort Benton, was born in Norway, September 10, 1842, and came to the United States in 1866. He followed the baker's trade for some time, and then moved to Wisconsin. He subsequently moved to Minnesota, where he worked in a foundry, and in the summer of 1867 left St. Paul for Fort Benton, M T. After spending two years at this city, Mr. Lyng moved to the Musselshell, where he kept a wood yard for three years. He revisited Fort Benton and Helena in 1872, purchased a band of cattle and ranched them near Fort Benton; then engaged in teaming for three years, when he moved to Fort McLeod with his cattle, and there remained until 1880, when he purchased his present ranch of 160 acres. Mr. Lyng owns 175 head of cattle and 100 horses. All his lands are under fence and many acres cultivated.

E. G. MACLAY, cashier of the First National Bank of Fort Benton, was born in Pennsylvania in the year 1844. He received a high school education, and at 17 years of age went to St. Louis, Mo., where he served in the capacity of clerk during the years from 1853 to 1861. At the expiration of that time he came to Montana in company with Captain Wall, of the firm of John J. Roe & Co., and locating at Virginia City, engaged in general merchandise and freighting, in which business he continued until 1866. He then went to Helena, and embarking in the same line of business at that place continued some two years, when, in company with Messrs. M. Carroll, George Steele and C. A. Broadwater, he bought the old Diamond R. freighting outfit, with a carrying capacity of 500 tons, and engaged in delivering freight between Corin, Fort Logan, Carroll, Fort Benton, and the terminus of the Utah & Northern R. R., which business they conducted until 1880. Mr. Maclay's health failed him in 1879, and not recovering till 1882, rendered him during that period unfit for active business, but in 1882 he became interested in business with Messrs. John T. Murphy and W. W. Higgins, under the firm name of Murphy, Maclay & Co., wholesale and retail dealers in groceries, hardware, wines and liquors, agricultural implements, machinery, etc., at Fort Benton, Mont. During the year 1882 Mr. Maclay also accepted the position of cashier of the First National Bank of Benton, which responsible duty he still holds to the perfect satisfaction of all concerned. In 1883 Mr. Maclay was united in marriage to Miss Blanche Murphy, of Missouri.

WILLIAM J. MARTIN; P. O., Fort Benton, was born in Ohio, June 15, 1857, was educated in that state and there entered railroading life. In the fall of 1875 he moved to New Orleans, where he was engaged in steamboating six months; thence he proceeded up the river by boat, landing at Fort Benton, May 10, 1876. Early in 1877 he returned to the states and was engaged in railroading in the neighborhood of Cincinnati until 1878, when he returned to Fort Benton and took a position in H. J. Wolkerlin & Co.'s tinshop. The same year he went to the Barker mines, where he was engineer for the smelting company. In 1881 he located his present ranch on the Shonkin, where he owns 160 acres of land, twenty-five of which are under cultivation. Mr. Martin is a member of the I. O. O. F.

ROBERT MILLER, ferryman, P. O., Fort Benton, was was born July 17, 1857, in Prince Edwards Island, Can. After leaving school he engaged in farming until 22 years of age, and in 1879 came to Fort Benton. He was engaged in carrying the mail to Martinsville for one year; then in 1883 he bought an interest in the upper ferry at Fort Benton, from D. G. Brown, Mr. Malcomb owning the other share. Mr. Miller, with an assistant, has entire charge of the ferry. He is always at his post ready to carry over passengers from either side of the river.

JAMES MCDEVITT, sheriff of Choteau county. Mr. McDevitt was born in Pennsylvania in the year 1849. He was reared on a farm, and at the early age of 11 years left home, and has since contrived to support himself. In 1863 he came to Montana and spent two years in the mines, after which he went to Fort Benton, where he was engaged in trading with the Indians some four or five years. At the expiration of that time, in 1874, he established his present livery business and also engaged in freighting from Fort Benton to various points in the territory, carrying some fifty-four tons. Mr. McDevitt is largely interested in farm lands and town property, owning ten business houses and residences in the city of Benton, several of which were built by himself. In 1882 he built the Odd Fellows' Hall at that place, and during the same year he was elected sheriff of Choteau county. Mr. McDevitt was married in 1877, at Winnipeg, to Miss Mary Vaugh, by whom he has two children.

MCMASTER, BANNATYNE & ELLIOT; P. O., Fort Benton; natives of Scotland, emigrated to the United states only a few years since, and in May, 1881, came to Montana Territory, where they have secured a fine tract of sheep and agricultural lands; located on the North Fork of Muddy creek, in Choteau county, where they now reside. They have a large band of sheep, and devote their time to agriculture. Mr. Elliot is the only one of the party who is married, his wife being a most agreeable and interesting lady, by whom he has two remarkably pretty children.

W. J. MINOR, druggist, Fort Benton, was born September 4, 1853, in Jefferson Co., N. Y. After attending public school some years he went to Ann Arbor, Mich., to complete his education, taking a special course of pharmacy and chemistry. After leaving college he located at Taylorsville, Ill., and was engaged in the drug business for four years. Upon disposing of his store, he went to Helena, M. T., and was there engaged in different kinds of business for two years. For two years afterward he operated a ranch on Sun river, and then came to Fort Benton and opened a drug store in Carroll & Steele's building. Three years ago he moved to his present location on Front street. Mr. Minor has also various mining and cattle interests in the territory.

RAPHAEL MORGAN, mail carrier, Chatham City and Sun River, P. O. Choteau, was born in Maryland, December 13, 1852. He moved to Cottonwood Springs, Neb., where he remained four years, freighting and herding, and at the expiration of that time he went to Helena, M. T., where he passed three years teaming; then he herded cattle for four years, and subsequently ranched on the Teton river for two years; then located his present ranch. During his travels Mr. Morgan experienced many adventures and hardships.

DAVID MORROW, P. O. Fort Benton, was born in Canada, October 12, 1853, and was brought by his parents to Iowa in 1857; moving with them in 1860 to Denver, Colo. From there the family came to Montana, and our subject remained with his parents at Helena until 1871, when he engaged in stock raising on the ranges between Helena and Fort Benton. In 1880 he established his present ranch of 140 acres, where he owns 200 head of cattle and thirty horses. Mr. Morrow was married January 12, 1882, to Miss S. E. Travers, a native of Wales, born June 29, 1864. Our subject is a A. F. and A. M.; Mrs. Morrow is a member of the M. E. church.

MALCOLM MORROW, P. O. Fort Benton, was born in Canada, November 7, 1823, and was there educated. Here he carried on the manufacture of lumber and potash, in connection with agriculture, until 1857, when he moved to Iowa. In 1860 he went to Colorado, where he was engaged in the dairy and stock business until the fall of 1863, in which year he moved to Blevin's Gulch mines, M. T. In 1865 he established his dairy business at Helena, and continued at that point until 1879, when he moved to Fort Benton, where he is now engaged in stock-raising—his stock of cattle alone numbering between 500 and 600 head. Mr. Morrow owns 160 acres of land on the Shonkin, the upper ferry on the Missouri, and four buildings at Fort Benton. Mr. and Mrs. Morrow are members of the Presbyterian church.

MALCOLM MORROW, Jr., P. O. Fort Benton, was born in Canada, February 7, 1848, and moved to Iowa with his parents in 1857; thence to Colorado in 1860, and to Montana in 1863. In 1866 he engaged in stock-raising, and in 1869 he established his quarters on Sun river; then ranched in the Little Prickly Pear valley; thence moved to the Missouri, holding his stock on the range north of Sun river for years, until his removal to Fort Benton. His present ranch on the Shonkin contains 160 acres, 100 being under fence, and over forty in cultivation. He owns 100 head of cattle and 100 horses. His dairy produced, in 1883, over 1,800 pounds of butter. Mr. Morrow was married July 25, 1875, to Miss Mary Ann Travers; born in Wales, September 1, 1857, and who came to Pennsylvania in 1866, and to Montana in 1869.

JOHN F. MURPHY, county clerk, Fort Benton; was born October 31, 1843, at Cork, Ireland. His parents moved to the United States, and located at New York. Here our subject attended school until 1860, and then left for Indiana to attend Asbury University at Greencastle. The war of the rebellion breaking out, he enlisted in Company B, Forty-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served through the war. He then re-enlisted in the regular service at Indianapolis; crossed the plains in 1866 to relieve prisoners captured during the war, and was stationed at Camp Douglass, Utah, thereby relieving General Patrick E. Conner. Afterward he was ordered to Fort Shaw. Here Mr. Murphy became Quartermaster Sergeant of the Seventh Regiment, and had entire charge of receiving all grain and provisions for the Fort. After his term of enlistment had expired, he went to Fort Benton, where he was engaged in painting two years. He then took a position as salesman in W. S. Wetzel's store, with whom he remained five years, resigning his position to accept the office of county clerk, to which he had been elected in the fall of 1882. Mr. Murphy was married in October, 1874, to Miss Ada Archer, of St. Louis, and by her has two children—Ada and Ellen. Our subject, during his career as a soldier, was thanked repeatedly for his bravery, being mentioned publicly at one time in General Pope's Roll of Honor. Afterward, at Fort Shaw, by his fair dealing and good judgment in relieving those in want, he became very popular with all classes. When he came before the people in 1882 he was elected by a handsome majority.

IRA MYERS, P. O. Fort Benton, was born in Ohio, December 18, 1839; son of John P. and Susan Myers. He remained with his parents at Mansfield until nineteen years of age, attending school and assisting in the store of his father, who was then dealing in general merchandise. Leaving Ohio, our subject went to Kansas City, Mo., and there continuing in commercial business until 1860. He then went to Colorado and became one of the original owners of Colorado City, being at the time, in company with ten other gentlemen, interested in various lands in the vicinity; he owned also the renowned "Garden of the Gods," which he disposed of for a mere song. He was also interested in merchandise and mining in and about Denver city until about the year 1863, when he went to Bannack. Here he turned his attention to mining during the ensuing years until 1876, then moved to the Black Hills, and there constructed the huge ditches that supply the Homestake mines with water. In 1878 Mr. Myers left the Black Hills and made a trip to the states for the purpose of disposing of mining stocks, having several times before made similar trips to the East in the interest of various mining companies. Returning in 1878 to Montana, Mr. Myers invested in cattle, and in 1879 formed the co-partnership of Myers, Buck & Co. This firm continued in business until the fall of 1883, when they sold out their cattle interests, retaining their ranch, which is nicely situated in the fertile valley of the Teton river, in Choteau county.

JACOB ODENWALD, butcher, Fort Benton, was born March 3, 1844, at Philippsburg, Baden, Germany. Here he learned the trade of butcher at sixteen, and at eighteen left Germany, coming to New York, where he engaged in the butcher business one year. Moving to Philadelphia he worked one year in same line; then opened a shop at Atchison, Kans., remaining two years; thence moved to Omaha, working there one year as butcher; then went to Sweetwater, where he engaged in mining; kept a butcher shop in Helena in summer, mining in the winter at Washington Gulch for two years; was then hired by Government to butcher at Fort Shaw for one year. Here he also opened and operated a dairy. One year later he went to Blackfoot city, carrying on butcher shop for four years. Next he kept a saloon in Helena for eight months; this he sold out and then moved to Tongue river, butchering for government one year. Returning to Helena he kept the Washington Brewery for one year and a half; sold out and engaged in butcher business for two years; left this to take charge of Kennedy & Kelly's meat market, where he has been butchering for three years. Mr. Odenwald married, December 19, 1878, Agnes McKittrick, of Helena. She died June 5, 1885, leaving one child—Eva Belle.

JOHN O'HERN, senior partner of the firm O'Hern & Smith, P.O. Fort Benton, was born in Ireland, October 21, 1850. His parents, James and Hannah O'Hern, came to the United States in 1856, settling in Huron Co., O. His father died in Huron county shortly after settlement, and the family then moved to Minnesota. Here young O'Hern was engaged in various pursuits until 1877, when he came to Montana. He revisited Minnesota in the fall of that year, but returned in 1878, and in 1880 entered into partnership with D. L. Smith.

GEORGE D. PATTERSON, P. O. Fort Benton, was born in Harford Co., Md., November 27, 1852, at a place known as Sweet Drive, named by Lafayette during the revolutionary war. He was educated at St. John's College. Up to 1877 he was engaged in agriculture, and that year he journeyed direct to Helena, thence to Smith river, where he remained at Cook's ranch a few months to obtain a knowledge of sheep farming. In 1878 he moved to Fort Benton, located his present ranch, and took charge of the herd of Greenleaf, Murphy & Chipman, whose ranch contains 2,000 acres, 1,200 being under fence. On this ranch are 7,000 sheep, 600 head of cattle and 30 horses. The clip of 1883 was about 32,000 pounds of wool. This is one of the leading ranches of the county, and has the reputation of being one of the best conducted. In 1879 he was made a partner of this firm, which partnership still continues. Mr. Patterson was married April 18, 1883, to Miss L. Pratt, who was born at Little Rock, Ill., August 3, 1865, and came to Montana in 1880, where she was married.

RUFUS PAYNE, proprietor Overland House, Fort Benton, was born February 18, 1831, in Richmond, Ky. R. S. TINGLEY was born at Marshall City, Illinois, December 25, 1841, and in 1846 located at Monroe, Wis. While in the Badger State he became more or less acquainted with Indian life and customs. In 1853 he removed to Iowa, and the six years following were spent among the numerous Indian tribes roaming along the Mississippi and Missouri rivers. His time was variously occupied, generally at hunting and trapping. Going up the Missouri river and crossing the mountains, he met with nearly all the Indian tribes ranging the adjacent country, and became familiar with them while hunting over the same territory. The winter of 1862 was spent mostly at Bannack, then the only mining camp of any particular note in this region. Gold had previously been discovered, however, on Gold creek, and Mr. Tingley assisted in opening the first gold mine in the territory, subsequently known as Pioneer Gulch. He was appointed deputy under the first sheriff elected in the territory, and at the mouth of the Rattlesnake arrested Henry Plummer, Buck Stinson and Charley Reeves, the first road agents captured in Montana. He took them to Bannack City, where they were tried and acquitted, but they were afterward re-captured and condemned. Plummer and Stinson were hung, and Reeves departed for a less dangerous locality. In 1863 Mr. Tingley went to Virginia City (Alder Gulch), and was for a short time engaged in mining. Leaving that place, he again resumed his old occupation as a hunter, and passed a portion of the succeeding winter on the waters of the Yellowstone. He discovered gold on a creek now called Emigrant Gulch; returned to Bevin's Gulch, and thence to Silver Creek, a newly-discovered mining camp. Not meeting with success at that point, he entered the first ranch ever taken up in Prickly Pear valley, and for a number of years made hay for the Helena market.

He was also, at the same time, engaged in freighting on the Benton and Helena road. He discontinued the latter business in 1869, and entered into the occupation of raising cattle and horses. He had, in 1867, built the "Twenty-eight Mile Ranch," where he had at various times considerable trouble with hostile Indians. January 23, 1870, the savages made the finishing stroke by setting fire to his entire premises, which were destroyed, and himself and wife left destitute. They, indeed, barely escaped with their lives, and proceeded on foot to Benton. The loss by this disaster, including buildings, goods, etc., was $32,000. After remaining for some time at Benton, Mr. Tingley moved upon a ranch on Smith's river, where he again engaged in the live-stock business, and has continued it to the present time. He has had, during his residence in this region, several battles with the Indians which are not particularized. The United States government has received from him on contract large quantities of hay, wood, beef, cattle, etc., and has paid him for more or less transportation. In his engagements he has been uniformly successful. He has visited all the principal cities in the United States, and become acquainted with all classes of people, high and low. During the four years next preceding the time at which these notes were given he traveled over the Pacific states and territories, from the Aleutian Islands, Alaska, to San Blas, Mexico, and the islands in the Central Pacific ocean. During all the years he has been among the mountains he has considered Fort Benton as his headquarters, although he is largely interested in property in other states, and has journeyed to the far northern portions of inland North America. He has experienced as much of hardship and privation as falls to the lot of one man, and the detailed story of his life, with its exciting adventures among savage men and beasts, would be material for volumes. On the 22d of June, 1868, he married Miss Campbell, daughter of Major John Campbell, the founder of Fort Campbell, which was the first adobe fort built in this locality. Their wedded life has been happy, and five children have been given them—viz.: John J., now fifteen years of age; Oliver C., thirteen; Robert S., eleven; Ida Eloise, eight; and M. C., the youngest son, aged five. Mr. Tingley's family are all church members, but he makes no profession of religion himself. He has a literary turn of mind, and has furnished various newspaper and magazine articles. For a man whose years are comparatively few, his life has had crowded into it so much of romance and adventure that it requires but a slight stretch of imagination to add double to the length of his days, and associate his experiences with those of the famous bordermen whose names were household words "years and years ago."

WILLIAM H. TODD, merchandise and real estate dealer. Mr. Todd is a native of Kentucky, and was born in 1843. In 1847 he moved with his parents to Independence, Mo., where he received a high school education, and at 15 years of age accepted a position in a printing office in Kansas, where he remained three years, afterward serving as clerk in a dry goods house at Kansas City. In the latter capacity he continued until the breaking out of the great civil war, when he enlisted and served until the close of the war in the Confederate army, after which he spent one summer in a dry goods house at Memphis, Tenn., and during the winter of 1875–76 was engaged with a dry goods firm at St. Louis, Mo. On the 18th of June, 1866, he landed at Fort Benton, M. T., soon after going to Helena, where he secured a position in a mercantile house and continued until the following fall, and was then employed by James R. Vivion to take a stock of goods to Highland gulch, where he remained until 1868. He then returned to Helena and obtained a position on the Rocky Mountain Gazette, remaining in that occupation until fall, when he accepted a position with Tootle, Leash & Co., and continued with them until 1869. He then bought an interest in the Deer Lodge Independent, but retiring from that business in the winter of 1869 returned to Helena and went into business with P. H. Rea. In 1870 he bought Mr. Rea's interest, and forming a partnership with Green Ervin, continued in business until the big fire of 1874, when they were burned out. They, however, resumed operations at once, and in April of the same year he sold out to Mr. Ervin, and accepted a position with the firm of Murphy, Neal & Co. at Carroll. He remained there until 1876, when the goods were moved to Benton and a branch house opened at that place. Mr. Todd continued in their employ until 1879, when he became a partner in the business. In 1881 he became interested in Benton as a dealer in real estate, which he still continues. In 1876 Mr. Todd was married to Miss Agustus E. Walker, of Louisiana, by whom he has one child.

ELLIS TRANUM, ranchman, Teton valley, P. O., Fort Benton, was born in Shelby Co., Ky., September 20, 1831; moved with his parents to Illinois, when a child, where he was educated. In 1850 he crossed the plains to California and engaged in the stock business near Sacramento City. In 1863 he went to Boise City, Idaho, and followed freighting there until 1865, when he proceeded to Helena, M. T., in charge of a bull train loaded with merchandise. Shortly after this he engaged in the stock business in Missoula county and also ran a pack-mule train. In later years he brought his cattle to the Sun River range, and now has a fine ranch in the Teton valley.

M. C. TRAVERS, of the firm of Hunsberger & Travers, proprietors of the Grand Union Hotel, at Fort Benton, M. T., was born in Ireland in 1847 and came to the United States when 20 years of age. He received an appointment as clerk in the commissary department of the United States army, and was stationed at St. Paul, Sioux City, Bismarck and Helena. In 1883 he settled at Benton and formed a partnership with S. Spitzley in the hotel business. Mr. S. sold his interest to John Hunsberger, otherwise there has been no change in the conduct of the hotel above named since Mr. Travers became one of the proprietors.

FRANK TRUCHOT, P. O. Choteau, was born in France, November 21, 1833; son of Herbert and Ann Truchot. He remained in his native country, where he worked in vineyards until 19 years of age. After coming to the United States he worked for a while in New York, soon going to Cincinnati and Louisville and through Arkansas, Florida and Kansas, arriving in Utah in 1857, where he was for some time engaged in herding mules for the government. In 1859 he came into Deer Lodge Co., M. T., and followed trapping, hunting and trading with the Indians, but soon after embarked in the freighting business, and was the first to commence farming in the vicinity of Deer Lodge. Here he remained from 1864 till 1868 and then went to California. After spending one winter there our subject returned to Utah, where he bought a band of cattle, which he brought into Deer Lodge county, where he opened another farm and where he remained until 1874. He then came to the Dearborn river, herding cattle and horses, remaining there until 1881, at which time he took up his present ranch on the Teton, where he is now residing with his family, consisting of his wife and six children.

HIRAM D. UPHAM, P. O. Conrad, was born in Madison Co., N. Y., February 22, 1839; son of Hiram and Delphia Upham. Before coming to Montana our subject had been for several years located at Coldwater, Mich., engaged as collector of back pay, bounties, pensions, etc., and came to the territory in 1865 as clerk under Maj. Upton, who located here as Indian agent and died the year after his arrival. Mr. Upham continued to work as clerk under other agents until 1871, after which he acted as Indian trader for T. C. Powers & Co., through Choteau county and in the British possessions in vicinity of Ft. McLeod, for several years. In 1878 he became interested with Jos. Kip in general merchandise on the Marias river at Fort Conrad, they being also engaged in ranching and trading with the Indians, and he is now interested in the Dupuyer Ditch Co.

A. J. VANCE, 28-Mile Spring, stage station, was born in Adams Co., Ill., May 15, 1837. In 1878 he removed to Montana. In the spring of 1880, located at 28-Mile Spring, near Benton. After carrying on the station for a short time, he sold his interest, but in September, 1883, again took charge of the station. He married Lydia Burns, of Harrison Co., Ky., in 1858, and has four children —Eva, Adelbert, Jennie and Edward. Mr. Vance, as a station-keeper, has always given satisfaction to travelers. In connection with the station he makes a speciality of taking parties to the Missouri Falls. Anyone wishing to go thither could not do better than to give him a call.

ROBERT VAUGHAN, Sun River, Mt., son of Edward and Elizabeth Vaughan, was born in Montgomeryshire, Wales, January 5, 1837, and came to the United States when twenty years old. He worked on a farm with his uncle, David Evans, at Palmira, O.; afterward worked in coal mines at Youngstown, and two years later was engaged in oil wells in Ohio, O. Subsequently he farmed and mined in McLean Co., Ill., until 1864, when he came to Virginia City, M. T., and mined in Alder Gulch. In the fall of the same year, Mr. Vaughan came to Last Chance (now Helena), mined and opened a meat market at Nelson Gulch. In 1869 he located his present Sun River ranch, the first in that district, and the first that proved up land claim in Choteau county. His attention is given to raising fine horses and cattle, his brand being very favorably known. He served as county commissioner for one term, and in 1882 was nominated by the republicans as a representative.

MILFORD S. WEARLEY, P. O. Fort Benton, was born in Stark Co., O., January 21, 1849; son of S. T. and Barbara A. Wearley. In 1858 he moved with his parents to Indiana, where he remained engaged in farming until 1866, when he went to Dakota territory, and was there employed by the government until 1869 as wagon master and master of transportation. He next engaged with Danforth & Johnson at their trading post as Indian interpreter, remaining there some eight months, after which he worked several months for James Webb, a government contractor. He next served Paxton & Morrow herding cattle about three months, after which he went to Fort Sully and again worked for Mr. Webb several months. He was next engaged as guide for Colonel Mayberry on his trip from the mouth of Medicine creek to Dirt Lodges, on the Jim river, in Dakota territory; from there he again went to Fort Sully, where he remained a short time, then going to Bismarck, where he worked for three months for Papinau Duchon; then went on the expedition to the mouth of Powder river in 1872, and in 1873 went on expedition to Fort Rice; was also with the expedition to the Black Hills, and in 1875 came to Fort Benton, where he has since been engaged discharging faithfully the duties assigned to him, and gaining the confidence and respect of the various people whom he has served.

W. S. WETZEL, general merchant, was born in Perry Co., Pennsylvania, January 3, 1843. In 1853 he went to Girard, Ohio, where he resided with his parents two years. In 1855 he removed with his father and family to Burlington, Iowa, and remained with his parents until August 12, 1862, when he enlisted in the 35th Regiment of Iowa Infantry, and served through the war in the Army of the Tennessee. He was mustered out by reason of expiration of term of service, having served as company clerk during the whole time, and took part in all the battles and skirmishes in which the regiment was engaged. He returned home to New London, Iowa, June 10, 1865, and in 1866 went to Helena, M. T., where he followed mining and other pursuits of labor until February 20, 1868, when he went to Fort Benton and entered into partnership with R. R. Mills in a restaurant. After two months he sold out to Mr. Mills. In September, 1868, he bought a bakery and grocery with Mr. H. E. Bond, and continued in that business until May, 1870, when he sold the business and visited his parents and relatives in Iowa. Returning to Benton in December, 1870, he bought a half interest with Mr. J. D. Weatherwax in bakery, grocery and liquors. He (Wetzel) conducted the business in Benton, and Mr. Weatherwax opened a trading post with the Indians in the northwest territories. In 1873 Mr. Wetzel bought the liquor stock of I. G. Baker & Co., and T. C. Power & Bro., and opened a wholesale liquor business, which he carried on successfully until 1875, when he established a general merchandise store with Mr. Weatherwax and continued in business with him until April, 1880, when he bought Mr. Weatherwax's interest in the stock, and has continued in business to the present. Mr. Wetzel served two terms as county commissioner and is now chairman of the board. He owns a large lot of the finest real estate in Fort Benton In 1875 he married Maggie Simons, who was born in Leavenworth, Kan., and has three children—Pearl, 7 years old; Daisy, 5 years, and William S., Jr., 3 years old. He owns one fourth interest in the Grand Union hotel, in Fort Benton, the largest and finest hotel in Montana.

J. W. WHEELOCK, M.D., Fort Benton, born in Erie Co., N. Y., July 31, 1831; moved to Burlington, Ia., in his youth with his parents, and there attended school for some years. Subsequently he moved to Keokuk, Ia., where he made his home until 1851, when he made the overland journey to California, wintering at Fort Bridger. On his return he studied medicine under Dr. Sanford, of Keokuk; next attended the medical school of the Iowa University for two years, when he received his diploma, and entered on the duties of his profession at Iowaville. Subsequently he practiced at Sidney, Ia., and in 1862 enlisted in the 29th Iowa Vol. Inf., with which command he served a short time, when he was discharged for disability. On returning he attended lectures at Keokuk. In 1864 he re-enlisted in the army and was commissioned assistant surgeon. He was mustered out in April, 1866, when he returned to Sidney; then practiced for one year at Nebraska City, when he crossed the plains to Helena, M. T., where he was engaged in mining for two years. Coming east he practiced for three and a half years at Yankton, Dak. In 1872 he returned to Helena and was engaged in farming and mining until 1876. From 1876 to 1878 he practiced medicine at Butte; came to Benton in the fall of 1878, in which city he has built up a lucrative practice. Dr. Wheelock was married to Miss Kittie Argyle, at Sidney, Ia., April 18, 1859. This lady died March 25, 1861. On June 6, 1869, his marriage with Miss M. Vivion, of Helena, was solemnized.

A. H. WILKINS, ranchman on the Teton, P. O. Fort Benton, was born in Minnesota. In 1872 he went to the Canadian Northwest, and in 1873 came to Montana with his father, passing one year on the Marias river, and for some years afterward he assisted his father in keeping the stage station on the B. & H. road. This station his father traded for his present ranch on the Teton, where they have since been engaged in agriculture and stock raising.

GEORGE M. WOODS, ranchman, son of Patrick and Eliza Woods, was born at St. Joseph, Mo., December 25, 1854. His father came to Virginia City in 1864. Mr. George Woods, with his brother Allen, accompanied him. Their father engaged in mining at Last Chance Gulch and Prickly Pear Valley, and in the latter located a ranch and began farming, also having a dairy in connection. Here George and Allen assisted him for six years. At Last Chance Gulch provisions became very scarce. Flour was sold at $1 a sack; no grain was to be obtained; all the cattle died except one, this one being kept alive by eating bread. At Prickly Pear the elder Woods bought a wagon load of potatoes from Joe Wilson for sixteen cents a pound, and after cutting the eyes out sold them for fifty and sixty cents per pound. Mr. George Woods, after leaving Prickly Pear, bought a farm in the Missouri valley near Readersburg, and remained upon it six years, dividing his time between that place and Helena. After this he took up the study of law with the firm of Wolfolk & Bullard. He removed to Butte in 1878, remaining two years; then with his father engaged in placer mining; sold out after a short time. Mr. Woods, accompanied by his brother Allen, came to Highwood, located a ranch, and is now engaged in agricultural pursuits. They also carry on a dairy, selling most of their products in Benton. Mr. Allen Woods married, December 6, 1880, Miss Alzory Woodswiss, of Ontario, and had two children, Harry and George.

JOHN WREN, P. O. Choteau, was born in Lancaster Co., Pa., December 27, 1824; son of James and Mary Wren. He remained in Pennsylvania until 24 years of age, attending school and working in glass factories at Pittsburgh. After leaving home he visited and worked at Cincinnati, St. Louis, New Orleans, St. Paul, and at St. Louis he engaged with the American Fur Company, coming to Montana Territory with them in 1857. Remaining one year, he returned to St. Louis; from there went to St. Paul, and from there again came to Montana on foot in 1858 with half a dozen companions. He at this time commenced trading with the Indians and continued so to do until May, 1859, having then returned to Red River. From there he went to the Frazier river, where he followed mining for a time, and then moved to Portland, where, in company with a surveying party, he remained until 1860, in which year he joined the Rock Creek expedition, leaving there in the fall for Vancouver, on Columbia river. Here he joined the Oro Fino stampede, and from that place went to Elk City, shortly afterward to Florence, and in July, 1862, he struck Helena, M. T., where he remained until fall, when he went down the Missouri river; visiting the various Forts on his trip and establishing wood yards for the convenience of the boats coming up the river. From Steele's Fort he returned to Fort Benton, and in the spring of '63 he went to Bannack City, finally drifting back to Benton, where he remained some time rafting, handling wood and coal, and whip sawing, and building. He next went to Milk River and returned to Benton City. From there, with an Indian prisoner who had just been captured out of a war party, he immediately started down to Missouri, again with dispatches, and at Fort Andrews joined a party of seven going down the river in mackinaws loaded with fur. At Dry Fork, being attacked by a party of Sioux Indians, they were obliged to take to the timber for safety, and our subject made his way to Fort Gilpin, where he remained three or four weeks and then returned to Fort Benton, and next season went on an expedition to Snatch'em, in Deer Lodge county, and in the fall of '64 returned to Fort Benton, and from there went to Belt mountains, Helena, Silver City, St Louis Gulch and Jeff Davis Gulch, being principally engaged in mining and prospecting, and in the fall moved to a hay ranch in the Boulder valley, where he remained the greater portion of his time until late in 1866, when he took 119 head of cattle to Camp Cook for Carroll & Steell, and returning to Fort Benton, he worked in Steell's store two years, after which he took another tour through the Snatch'em and Blackfoot countries and through the mountains in the High river district prospecting. Mr. Wren again returned to Fort Benton in 1870, and during the following seasons he went into the Whoop-up, Stand-off and Edmundtown districts, trading with the Indians. After this he was engaged in Hamilton's store, and in '75 and '76 worked for Indian agent Woods. He then went to work for Major Young, with whom he remained until 1882, then moved to his present ranch, located on the Teton.

W. H. WRIGHT, livery, Fort Benton, was born January 23, 1859, in Napoleon Co., Iowa. Parents moved soon after to Trenton, Mo., where he worked on a farm until 12 years of age; he then went to Plattsmouth, Neb., where he farmed two years, and then moved to Kansas, and there drove cattle one year. Returning to Trenton, Mo., he followed agriculture until the spring of 1878. He then went to the Black Hills and engaged in freighting until 1878, in which year he came to Fort Benton and hauled wood until 1880, then purchased an interest in the Fort Benton stable from Mr. McDevitt. After carrying on business one year Mr. Wright sold out stock and engaged in freighting for two years; then bought out Mr. Massie's interest in the Benton stable and formed a partnership with McDevitt. The present firm continue freighting in connection with their stable interests.

J. A. YORE, farmer and wool-grower, P. O. Fort Benton, was born at St. Louis, Co., August 27, 1859. He was engaged with his father in steam navigation on the Mississippi river for some years until he established his grocery house at St. Louis, which he carried on until 1876, when he came to Helena, M. T., Here he did business for Murphy, Neele & Co for about six months. Returning to St. Louis he resumed the grocery business, and continued in it until 1880. He then revisited Montana and took a position with Murphy, Neele & Co. at Fort Benton. In 1883 he established his present ranch. He owns 160 acres of land and is extensively engaged in sheep farming.

CONCLUSION.

This list was prepared by Dr. F Atkisson for P. M. Wilkerson, one of the canvassers for the work in Choteau. It just reached the editor in time to find a place in this chapter, and is valuable in this connection as a memoir of individuals whose names are suggestive of their history.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

CUSTER COUNTY.

WM. H. ALBRIGHT, postmaster at Rosebud, was born in Madison Co., Ill., May 3, 1855. He started on his western travels in 1880, through Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado and Montana, and settled at Rosebud in the spring of 1881, where he located 112 acres on the Yellowstone, and engaged in stock raising and merchandising, and was appointed postmaster June 1, 1882. Mr. Albright entered into the realities of pioneer life on the Yellowstone without a help-meet, but with an earnestness which deserves success. The town of Rosebud is platted on a portion of his original ranch, the balance being devoted to pasturage and grain crops. Vide History of Rosebud.)

THOMAS ALEXANDER, P. O. Forsyth, merchant and ranchman, was the first settler at Forsythe, where he located in 1877 on a 200-acre ranch which included the present town site. One hundred and twenty acres of this farm are now fenced. Mr. Alexander is engaged in the hardware and general dry goods trade at this point, and was appointed postmaster August 20, 1883. He is a native of Canada, where he was born in 1856, but was reared in Idaho. He left the latter territory in August, 1876, and came directly to Fort Keogh, M. T., settling the next year at Forsyth, as previously stated. March 7, 1882, he married Miss Melissa Wyant, who died March 23, 1883.

N. BORCHARDT, one of the pioneers of eastern Montana, came to the Territory with Mr. Paul McCormick, and assisted in the building of Fort Pease in 1874-5; remained at the fort until rescued by a batallion of the second cavalry in 1876. At the time of the rescue there were twenty-one men at the post. In company with Mr. McCormick, Mr. Borchardt had the sutlership in the field of the second cavalry and the second infantry; was with those regiments until the cantonment of Fort Keogh was established in 1876. In 1877 Mr. Borchardt and Mr. D. W. Ringer were commissioned by the governor to organize the county of Custer, which was done the same year. At that time Mr. Borchardt was engaged in merchandising, dairying and keeping livery stable, also in the employ of the government. He remained at Old Miles City until it was broken up or deserted, then came to the new town in 1878. He was commissioner of the county from its organization until 1879, moving to the new town in 1878, where he has since resided. He carried on business in partnership until 1881, since which time he has been in business for himself. In 1881 he was appointed postmaster at Miles City, and still holds that position. He is also engaged in the stationery and notion business. Mr. Borchardt was born in Poland, in 1838, and grew to manhood in Germany, coming to the United States in August, 1859, Newark, N. J., being his home until 1861. He served in the volunteer branch of the United States Regular Army for three years and in the Regular Volunteer Army for four years. While in the volunteer army he was promoted to lieutenant and captain; was quartermaster and lieutenant in the regular army. He served in the Army of the Potomac with honor and distinction, never missing a battle. He it was who brought the first cattle ever brought to the Yellowstone country, a band of twenty-five head.

PHILIP BRADY, a stock dealer of Miles City, who has been prominently connected with some of the leading enterprises in this vicinity, was born in Ireland in 1846, and came to America in 1849. He remained in New York for some years, and secured a position upon the Grand Trunk railroad in Canada, which was then being built. From Canada he came to Iowa, and from Iowa to Montana. At present he is engaged in raising stock, and interested to a considerable extent in the real estate business at Billings, owning houses, lots, etc., there. He has 500 head of cattle and 400 head of horses and mules on the range. He followed railroad building, and was one of the first contractors on the Northern Pacific, with which road he was connected until it reached Bismarck. He probably remained with the road longer than any other contractor. He served in Kentucky and Missouri also as road builder. Once he was compelled to tear up the track on the Northern Pacific in order to compel the company to pay him for services rendered. He is interested in the livery stable of J. McGurk & Co., and also a livery establishment at Billings. Mr. Brady was married in 1872, to Miss Jennie Breen.

M. BRANDENBERG, of Brandenberg & Van Gaskin, Miles City, a native of Southwestern Ohio, came to Last Chance (Helena), in 1865, and mined there until 1875, spending the winters of 1874-5-6, in the Judith country. In the fall of 1876, he settled in the Yellowstone valley. In 1878 he formed a partnership with William Van Gaskin in the cattle business, which has been continued to the present time. They now own a herd of 800 or 900 cattle.

GEORGE F. BRILL, of the firm of Brill & Osgood, Miles City, was born at Albany, N. Y., in 1847. At the age of fourteen years he went to Jersey City, where he learned the butcher's trade. In 1861 or 1862, he moved to Paterson, N. J.; one year later to Brooklyn, then to New York, where he resided five years, as an employe of Murray, of the Washington market, and Rowe Bros., of 33d street. Moving from New York westward, he passed three years at Indianapolis, next a few months at Chicago, proceeded thence to Deadwood, and in the fall of 1880 moved to Miles City, where he originated the manufacture of sausage, and assisted by Mr. Osgood, established the slaughter-house, canning establishment, and the present meat market. In the fall of 1884 this firm built the first refrigerator in Miles City, in which they stored beef slaughtered in the fall for spring use.

THOMAS J. BRYAN, lumber merchant, Miles City, was born in Winnebago Co., Ill., April 21, 1838, where he attended school and assisted on his father's farm. In later years he purchased a farm in his native county, which he conducted for several years, when he moved to Iowa to engage in the stock business. He came to Miles City in July, 1881, and formed the partnership of Canover & Bryan, who established the pioneer lumberyard of Custer county. Prior to this the cost of lumber was so exorbitant as almost to prohibit building. In January, 1882, Mr. Canover sold his interest, leaving Mr. Bryan sole owner of the lumberyard and paint, oil and lime warehouse. Mr. Bryan engaged in stock business in April, 1882, in partnership with B. B. Bishop, who has charge. In May, 1883, he was appointed county commissioner, vice the former officer removed, and was subsequently elected for a two years' term. In October, 1883, he was elected president of the Eastern Montana Stock Association, and later was appointed one of the trustees of the Tongue River Irrigating Ditch Association.

WILLIAM H. BULLARD, born in Missouri in 1849, visited Colorado in 1869, and subsequently Arizona, New Mexico, Nevada, California and the Black Hills, D. T., and in December, 1876, came to Montana, locating at Miles City in January, 1877. He was with General Miles at Snake creek during the four days' battle with the Nez Perces, and sheriff of Custer county in 1879–80. In April, 1883, he was elected county commissioner for Custer, which office he now holds. The Miles City Brewery, of which he is proprietor, was begun by him in the fall of 1880, and in February, 1881, it was formally opened. The capacity is 4,500 barrels per annum. The artesian well, near the brewery, was bored for Mr. Bullard to a depth of 352 feet in 1883, yielding a six-inch stream 380 feet from base of tube, or 28 feet above ground level. An analysis made by J. M. Wing & Company, of Chicago, shows it contains silica, 1.36; oxide, 0.54; carbonate of lime, 2.27; carbonate of magnesia, 1.83; chloride of sodium, 2.01; sulph. of soda, 1.80; and carbonate of soda, 60.40. The water is considered healthy and is extensively used in the city and neighborhood.

ANDREW F. BURLEIGH, born at Kittanning, Armstrong county, Pa., January 7, 1858, moved with his parents to Yankton, D. T., in 1861, and to Miles City early in 1881. Mr. Burleigh was educated in Iowa and Massachusetts, and graduated from the law department of the State University of Iowa June 18, 1878. In 1879 he entered upon the practice of law at Yankton, and since 1881 has continued to practice at Miles City. In November, 1883, he was elected delegate at large to the constitution convention of January, 1884. In December, 1883, he was appointed district attorney for the first judicial district of Montana, which position he now holds.

T. B. BURLEIGH, dealer in hardware and crockery, at Miles City, established in December, 1882, and now carries an average stock of $25,000 to $30,000. Mr. Burleigh is a son of the Hon. Walter A. Burleigh, a well known pioneer of Yankton, Dak., and of Miles City, M. T. He was born in Maine in 1842, and when 10 years of age removed with his parents to Pennsylvania. At the age of 19 he settled at Yankton, Dak., where he engaged in steamboating on the Missouri, and followed that business about ten years; was also engaged in ranching and other pursuits. He came to Miles City at the time of the building of the Northern Pacific railway to this point, and was engaged as contractor on government work.

WALTER A. BURLEIGH, born at Waterville, Kennebec Co., Me., October 25, 1820, was educated at the University of Vermont and at Castleton; took the degree of M. D., and began the practice of medicine in 1845. A year later he married Miss Elizabeth C. Lowe, to whom were born two sons and one daughter. The sons are now engaged in mercantile business at Miles City; the daughter died in infancy. In 1852 Mr. Burleigh moved to Pennsylvania with his family, where his wife died. In 1855 he married Miss Caroline Faulk, a daughter of Ex-Governor Faulk of Pennsylvania. To her two sons and one daughter were born—the latter died in infancy, while one of the sons is District Attorney, First Judicial District, and the second, a student in Yankton College, Dak. In 1861 Dr. Burleigh moved to Yankton, and the same year was appointed by President Lincoln to the charge of the Missouri River Sioux. In 1864 he was elected delegate to Congress from Dakota, re-elected in 1866 and served until 1868. He served in the Dakota Legislative Council subsequently; was admitted to the Dakota bar before the Supreme Court in 1868; retired from the medical profession and embraced that of law. Since coming to Miles City in 1877 his law business has been widely extended.

M. CAHN, born in Wurtemberg, Germany, immigrated in 1850, and settled at Metropolis, Ill., where he was engaged in mercantile life until 1859, when he moved to Evansville, Ind., to engage in the wholesale liquor trade. He disposed of his interest in this business in 1861, and was appointed sutler to the Twenty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, attending that command through the war. After the war he formed a partnership with Kauffman, and opened a distillery and rectifying establishment, which they carried on until 1877, when Mr. Cahn sold his interest therein, and came to Miles City in July of that year, with a commission as post trader. He erected a house in Old Town, and invested $3,000 in real estate, which proved of little value after the new town was founded. He built a store in New Town, and was there engaged in general trading until 1882, when he became a member of the firm of Leighton, Jordan & Co., which membership he sold December 7, 1883. He was the first man held up by highwaymen at what is now called Cahn's Coulie,* an honor which cost him several thousand dollars.

JOHN CARTER, proprietor of the Drover House, the Court House Sample-Room and the Key Saloon at Miles City, was the first settler at old Miles City, and built the first house there, opening it as a saloon March 4, 1877. Shortly after this General Miles ordered the settlers to leave the cantonment, when they gathered round the Carter location and erected homes. Mr. Carter left Old Miles in July, 1877, for an eastern trip, and did not return until spring of 1879, since which time he has been identified with the interests of the new town. He is a stockholder in the First National Bank and in the Daily Press, besides being largely interested in city real estate and leading industries. He is a native of Baltimore, Md., and was a resident of Chicago for some time prior to coming to Montana; is married and a man of family.

WILLIAM COURTENAY, Miles City, real estate and insurance agent; was born at London, Eng., in 1834, where he was educated and entered mercantile life. He came to the United States in 1859 and engaged in business in New York. In 1866 he purchased a stock of goods for the Yellowstone trade, and in May of that year introduced his wares to the Indians of the valley. He subsequently moved to the Judith country and confined his trade to that region for a number of years. During his stay there the Indians relieved him of his stock several times and barely gave him time to escape. He was one of the first to establish himself at Miles City, opening the pioneer real estate office at that point. With this

* "Coulie" is the Western term for "Dry Gulch," or "hiding place."

he carries on a large insurance business, representing the principal American companies.

CROSS BROTHERS—Henry G. Cross, Robert Cross and Veto L. Cross, engaged in the stock business on Pumpkin creek, about eighteen miles from Miles City and seven miles from Tongue river, are natives of Colchester, Vt., where they spent their boyhood days. Leaving the Green Mountain state in June, 1879, they came to Montana, locating on their present ranch on Pumpkin creek, and on the stage road from Miles City to Deadwood. They have 125 head of cattle and twenty-four horses, besides having convenient and comfortable buildings on the ranch. As an instance to show the success of young men in the West who are enterprising, it is well to relate that the two brothers who first came here had but $2.35 between them on their arrival four years ago, and now they are on the highway to general prosperity and success.

E. K. DAVIS, a farmer living near Hathaway Station on Graveyard Bottom, arrived in Montana in March, 1879, and settled on railroad land one mile north of Hathaway station. There were then no improvements on the Bottom except two cabins, one of them being occupied by a Mr. Matson and Wm. Steller, the other one on the lower end of the Bottom being occupied by two boys. At that time buffalo, antelope, deer, sheep and other game were plenty in the valley, and the early settlers were very much troubled by the Indians, who ran off all their stock for two seasons. Mr. Davis was born at Sistersville, West Virginia, about fifty miles below Wheeling. He removed to Missouri with his parents when about 9 years of age; lived in Missouri about ten years, subsequently in Colorado for three years, and some time in Utah. Returning to Colorado, he remained five years, engaging in the stock and dairy business. From Colorado he came to the Black Hills by way of Cheyenne, remaining in the Hills nearly three years engaged in ranching and the livery business. In 1879 he left the Black Hills and came direct to Montana, locating on Graveyard Bottom, where he owned one of the best ranches in the district. He was married August 12, 1883, to Miss E. J. Clara, of Cumberland, Ohio, this being the first wedding in this neighborhood.

HENRY DAVIS, ranchman, P.O. Sadie, a native of Pennsylvania, left that state April 1, 1849, for California, which he reached after a journey across the plains via Mexico and Lower California. In 1857 he left the mines of the Golden State for the gold fields of the Fraser river country, and remained in British Columbia until 1866. In 1867 he visited Boise City, Idaho, Loon creek and Salmon City, or Leigh, and arrived at French Gulch, Deer Lodge, M. T., in 1872. In 1876 he located his lands near what is now known as Sadie, where he owns 800 acres of good hay land.

CHAS. DOUGLASS, Miles City, clerk of the district court, first judicial district, was born in Brooklyn March 28, 1860, and was educated at a New York City college. In 1876 he went to St. Paul and engaged as bookkeeper in a wholesale dry-goods house. In 1881 he came to Miles City, and kept books for Leighton, Jordon & Co. until appointed deputy clerk of Custer county, May 4, 1883. In October of the same year he was appointed to his present position. He has also acted as deputy clerk and recorder since May, 1883.

SAMUEL R. DOUGLASS, Miles City, is a native of Scotland. His parents came to the United States and settled in Kansas. During his early boyhood he attended school there and came to Montana with his parents in 1868. In 1872 he was appointed cadet to West Point, taking full course, and graduated in 1876. After graduating he held a commission as lieutenant; was stationed at Fort Shaw, remained in service until 1882, when he resigned and engaged in sheep raising,—his ranches being about forty miles from Miles City. In 1878 Mr. Douglass married Miss Clara H. Russell, of Minneapolis.

LEON DUPONT, proprietor of saloon, P. O. Terry, was born in 1831 at Toulon, France, and was educated there, attending the cadet school. In February, 1847, Mr. Dupont enlisted in the French army, in which he remained thirty-three years. He served through the Crimean war under General McMahon, in Mexico under Marshal Bazaine, in Africa under General LaMorciere, and took part in the war with Prussia, when he was taken prisoner, but effecting his escape went to Canada, subsequently accompanying a party on the Red River expedition. He settled at Winnipeg, and there was appointed deputy sheriff. During his incumbency Mr. Dupont arrested the celebrated Ambroise Lepine, for whose capture $5,000 reward was offered. In the spring of 1875 Mr. Dupont came to Montana, opening a general store at Miles City, which he carried on until 1877, when he sold out, accepting the position of clerk in the Marshall Hotel. Later he was employed in the Commercial Hotel, where he remained till June, 1880, when he removed to Glendive and clerked there in the Merchants' Hotel. December 25, 1883, Mr. Dupont bought the saloon in which he is carrying on business at the present time.

ROBERT L EDWARDS, born in Maryland in 1843, was educated at Mt. St. Mary's College, Emmettsburg, Pa., in the class of 1861. He enlisted in the 3rd Pennsylvania Cavalry in June, 1861, and was commissioned second lieutenant in October, 1861. Was promoted gradually until commissioned major May 11, 1865. He was commissioned in the regular army as second lieutenant of the 13th United States infantry, then was transferred to 5th United States cavalry, and served under Colonel Reid in the southwest through the Indian war of 1869–70. He was wounded at Hatches Run October 19, 1864, captured, and placed in Libby prison for three months. He resigned his military position in 1870, and entered the Northern Pacific railroad service as assistant civil engineer of the road, and engineer of the Northwestern Construction Company of Minnesota and Dakota. In 1873 he accepted the secretaryship of the Pacific Mail Company, visited Japan and China, and served until 1877, when he was assigned the position of engineer in charge of the Western Division Northern Pacific Railroad. In 1879 he was appointed engineer of the Oregon Railroad Company, and in 1880 became general superintendent of the same road. In 1881 he was appointed superintendent of track and bridges on Yellowstone Division Northern Pacific Railroad, which he resigned in 1882, to engage in mercantile business at Miles City.

C. C. GATES, Miles City, assessor of Custer county, is a native of New Hampshire. He settled in Montana in July, 1876; was appointed deputy under assessor Irwin, of Custer, and elected county assessor in November, 1882.

ERNEST GOETTLICH, Miles City, Harness and Saddlery, was born on Long Island, N. Y., in 1855; moved to Booneville, Ind., in 1857, and there learned the harness and saddlery trade. In 1877 he came to Montana, and entered the employ of A. J. Davidson at Helena. He moved to Bozeman, where he worked for Frank Estler seven months, and then came to Miles City, in October, 1881, where he opened a shop. In February, 1883, he opened his present shop, and in February following established a branch house at Livingstone with Mr. Long in charge. The work turned out is all hand-made, and much admired by his customers.

CHARLES H. GOULD, Miles City, receiver of money in the United States land office, a native of Indiana, was born at Laporte in 1837. He served in the United States army, first in the Sixteenth Wisconsin regiment and afterward in the One Hundred and Fifty-First Indiana volunteers, during which service he was wounded at the battle of Shiloh. After recovering from his wounds he was made Assistant Deputy Provost Marshal of the Ninth Indiana district. From Indiana he went to Nebraska, where he was elected penitentiary inspector, serving for six years; was also commissioner of Burt county for two years and sergeant at arms of the senate. In 1879 he came to Montana and operated a trading post on Poplar river until he came to Miles City in 1880, where he has since held the office of receiver. At the close of the war Mr. Gould held the rank of Captain. In 1860 he was married to Miss Charlotte Outhwaite, and is the father of two children. In Mr. Gould's office are to be found good samples of several varieties of corn of excellent quality, raised in this vicinity—Dent flint and Egyptian; also several fine varieties of wheat, of which the white Russian has proved the best.

T. F. GRAY, P. O. Putnam, owner of the first ranch settled on Pumpkin creek, is the son of Daniel and Sarah Gray, and was born in Maryland in 1857. His father, who is still living, is a farmer by occupation. Our subject spent his boyhood days in Maryland, living in Baltimore county and in Baltimore city up to the time he was 15 years old, when he located at Columbus, O. After remaining for two years at Columbus, he removed to Kansas City in 1870, from which point he went to southern Kansas, stopping there for five years; thence came to Fort Keogh, M. T., where he arrived November 14, 1877. Remaining about Fort Keogh and Miles City until the spring of 1879, he took up a ranch on Pumpkin creek, where he has since engaged in farming and stock raising. His ranch is located on the stage road from Miles City to Spearfish, Black Hills, and the stage stops here to change horses. Mr. Gray was united in marriage in 1882 with Miss Jennie Flanders.

BENJAMIN P. GREEN, P. O. Etchetah, was born in Missouri, October 31, 1838, the son of John and Elizabeth Green. In 1854 he went to Texas, in 1858 returning to Southwestern Missouri. In the spring of 1859 he went to Pike's Peak, Colo., where he remained till 1863, when he came to Stinking Water, and later moved to Alder Gulch, where he had mines. Two years later Mr. Green moved to Gallatin Valley (wintering there in 1864), thence visited Last Chance, spring of 1865, and in September of the same year returned to Gallatin valley, where he lived for two years. Being seized with spinal complaint he was taken to Helena for treatment by Dr. Glick. From Helena he came to Bozeman, building a dwelling and living here for nearly two years, during which time he visited the Geysers (National Park), next went to Shell Creek, Nevada, and after spending one winter there, went to Cornucopia, same state, and a year later returned to Bozeman, where he remained two years and a half, running a planing mill and being engaged on government buildings at Fort Ellis. Soon after he built three flatboats and made three trips down the Yellowstone with grain and flour. In the spring of 1880 Mr. Green settled on his present ranch containing 160 acres in Pease bottom, near Etchetah postoffice.

J. C. GUY, P. O. Etchetah, one of the pioneers of Montana, was born March 31, 1823, in Virginia, and thence emigrated with his parents, John and Mary Guy, to Callaway Co., Mo., settling near Fulton. In 1849 our subject crossed the plains by way of Mexico and Arizona, and after being ten months and ten days on the road, arrived at the Mariposa mines, California. There for three years he engaged in mining and merchandising, and was a member of the company that turned the Mercer river from its regular course into the mines at a cost of more than $100,000. He then returned to Missouri, and in the fall of 1852 went to Dallas, Tex., where he remained for three years, driving cattle. His health failing, he went back to Missouri, living in Dade Co. till 1859. In the spring of the latter year he accompanied the Pike's Peak Expedition. In 1860 he built a hotel at what is known as Guy's Hill, between Denver and Central City, where he remained until the spring of 1863, when he moved to Alder Gulch, and in the fall of 1864 to Gallatin Valley, M. T., where he farmed until 1865. Mr. Guy was elected sheriff two terms, then, not being eligible, missed one term and was re elected, filling the office in all eight years. In 1868 he built the first hotel (the Northern Pacific) in Bozeman. Mr. Guy in 1864 was accidentally thrown from a horse and was crippled for a long time. In 1877 he came to Pease Bottom, in company with Mr. Ralston, who was elected sheriff of Gallatin Co., and pitched a tent under a large poplar tree (which stands near his present residence) and that year raised a crop of potatoes. Mr. Guy was the first settler in Pease Bottom, his nearest neighbor then residing at Huntley, seventy-five miles distant. His ranch, consisting of 160 acres (on which there is a good house, barn and other conveniences), was for a time a stage station and steamboat landing, and is really considered as the head of practical navigation on the Yellowstone. The farm was one of Custer's battle grounds with the Sioux in 1873, at which time Sergeant King was killed by a stray shot, and his remains were buried under a tree close by. Just above Mr. Guy's house, under some trees, is where Major Thompson, of the regular army, committed suicide on account of ill-health. His grave is on the bluff overlooking the Upper Bottom. Besides being Sheriff, Mr. Guy has held several other positions. He has been postmaster at Etchetah for some time, was one of the first elected commissioners of Custer Co., having been chosen for two years. He was one of the first members of the vigilance committee in Alder Gulch, and has been engaged in merchandising at Pease Bottom since 1874, as one of the firm of J. C. Guy & Sons. Mr. Guy was married in 1852, to Miss Amanda Green, a native of Missouri. They are the parents of four children: Sophia (now Mrs. Dyer), Robert J., Mason G. and Jefferson Davis. Our subject participated in all the adventures of importance with the Indians in the Gallatin Valley. He proved himself a very efficient officer while acting in the capacity of sheriff of that county, breaking up the numerous bands of horse thieves that infested the county at that time. Once, with a party of citizens, Mr. Guy followed five horse thieves to a point near the headwaters of the Madison, and when they showed fight, killed three and captured the others. While pursuing them alongside of a mountain, Mr. Guy's horse slipped and fell down about 150 feet, bruising him considerably, but he did not give up the chase. Many such incidents mark the career of this pioneer, some of which are told in the general history and in that of the county.

DANIEL HAMILTON, P. O. Miles City, was born in Newcastle, Co., Delaware, in 1827; son of James, a farmer, and Mary Hamilton, both now deceased. Our subject left his native state in 1854 and went to Iowa, where he remained until the spring of 1861, when, the war breaking out, he entered the employ of the government and drove teams until the close of the rebellion, continuing in the same occupation until after coming to Fort Keogh in 1878, when he severed his connection with the government, buying a ranch of one hundred and eighty-six acres, five miles from Miles City, on the Tongue river, where he is at present engaged in farming with reasonable success. His farm is nearly all fenced and in a good state of cultivation. The land is beautifully situated and well adapted to the purpose for which it is used. Mr. Hamilton has raised one hundred bushels of potatoes to the acre and of oats about thirty bushels without irrigating; vegetables can be raised in large quantities, and also fine melons.

F. E. HAMMOND, was born May 23, 1858, in Hillsdale, Michigan, where his father was one of the pioneer settlers. He was engaged in mercantile business there for many years, but is now out of active business and is living at Whitehall, Mich., as is also his mother. His parents have always been active members of the Presbyterian church, and have brought up a family of three sons and a daughter, who are all members with them of that denomination. At Hillsdale he had the benefit of a common school education until he was fifteen when he went to Ludington, Mich., as clerk in a hardware store. After six months spent there he entered the Lumberman's State Bank at Whitehall. In time became assistant cashier and remained in that position till his health gave out in 1878. He then engaged in lumbering for three years; then going to Grand Rapids, Mich., in 1881, as head bookkeeper in the Fourth National Bank. After a year there his health failed again and he removed to Montana in July, 1882; interested in the sheep raising business and spent nine months on a ranch in Custer Co., on the Tongue river. Selling out there he located at Miles City, and was deputy county treasurer from May, 1883, to January, 1884, when he became cashier and manager of the bank of Stebbins, Mund & Co. On January 1, 1885, that bank was succeeded by the Stock Growers' National Bank, capital, $100,000; W. R. Stebbins, of New York, president and principal stockholder. Next to Mr. Stebbins Mr. Hammond owns most of the stock, and as cashier and director he runs the business. He has real estate and stock interests here and has come to stay. He expects to see an A 1 town grow up. His two brothers have always remained in the East, in the banking business since they were fifteen years old. The oldest—twenty nine years—C. A. Hammond, has recently organized the First National Bank of Traverse city, Mich., is a large stockholder, cashier and managing director; the younger, W. L. Hammond, is twenty-three years old, is assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Whitehall, Mich., and is treasurer of the city. Both these brothers are married, though F. E. is not; his sister lives with him and keeps house for him at Miles City. The Stock Growers' National Bank, of Miles City, was organized January 2, 1885, with a capital stock of $100,000 paid in; W. R. Stebbins was selected president; Wm. Harmon, vice-president; F. E. Hammond, cashier, and H. B. Wiley, assistant cashier. The bank is in a large two-story brick building constructed for banking purposes and costing about $44,000, one half of which is owned by the bank company and the other by Charles Stebbins.

WILLIAM HARMON, Vice-President Stock Growers' National Bank, Vice-President Montana Stock Association and stock grower, P. O. Miles City, came to Dakota in July, 1869, at which time he was connected with the war department of the army, being sent by Gen. Sheridan to Grand River to issue supplies to the Indian agents. He held that position one year, then engaged in trading with the Indians at the same point, having a trading post there until October, 1874. In the spring of 1873 he had purchased a trading post at Fort Rice, which he conducted until 1876. In May of that year he sent sixteen wagon loads of supplies to the Black Hills, the first wagon train sent from Bismarck to that country. He was appointed post trader at Fort Lincoln in March, 1876. In consequence of snow blockades and other delays, he was unable to get his goods through so as to begin trade until June 2 of that year. He continued in this trade until late in 1883, when he resigned. In the fall of 1878 he started the first store at Sturgis City, Dakota. He shipped the first goods to Miles City, and also sent the first merchandise to Burleightown, now Bismarck, his brother, Charles T. Harmon, having charge of the goods. He has for several years been considerably interested in stock business, having cattle ranches in Dakota and Montana. He also has an extensive horse ranch in the Black Hills. He is a member of the Board of County Commissioners (resigned from same when leaving Bismarck). He is one of the directors of the Bismarck National and the Merchants' National Banks. He is a native of Springfield, Penobscot Co., Maine, born June 28, 1835, and was educated in Lee Normal Academy. In June, 1850, he came west with his father, Allen Harmon, who died at Minneapolis, Minn., in September, 1882. Arriving there in 1850, Allen Harmon built the first brick house in that city, and was among its very earliest settlers. William went to St. Paul in 1850, and was employed as a stage driver between that place and Stillwater, continuing in that capacity until the spring of 1851, when he purchased a team (having saved from his wages of $16 per month enough to get a start in life), and engaged in hauling lumber at St. Anthony. In 1852 he began his steamboat career, filling various positions until he became captain of a Mississippi steamboat. In 1857 he purchased the steamer "H. M. Rice," which he lost later by the ice. He entered the army April 29, 1861, as sergeant of Company D, First Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered out as First Lieutenant after three years' service. Although that was his rank, he commanded his company all the time after the battle of Gettysburg, and was also provost-marshal of his division. After leaving the army he was in the oil regions of Pennsylvania, and in Washington, D. C., until 1866, when he returned to Minneapolis, and soon after received the appointment of Second Lieutenant in the Eighteenth United States Infantry, being subsequently promoted to First Lieutenant and Captain; stationed at Forts Laramie, Saunders, Camp Douglass, etc. He was for five months commander of the escort which protected the civil engineers in their preliminary survey of the Union Pacific Railway. In June, 1869, he was ordered to Grand River, as stated at the commencement of this sketch, resigning in 1876. His mother, the last of her generation, is living at Minneapolis at the age of seventy years. He was married in 1871 to Zoe L. Picott, of St. Louis, who bore him four sons: Leo C., Milan T., Wm. E. and Joseph R. In 1882 he located 2,000 head of cattle near Miles City, which he has increased to 2,500, besides having sold many of the original herd. In 1885 he moved his family to Miles City, and has given his attention to the Vice-Presidency of the Stock Growers' National Bank, located here, and Vice-Presidency of the Montana Stock Association. Captain Harmon, as he is widely known, is a man of superior talents and strict integrity.

J. H. HAY, merchant, Rosebud, came from Colorado to Martinsdale, Meagher Co., M. T., in 1879, where he engaged in the cattle business for about two years; moved to Rosebud with the Wells brothers, went down the Yellowstone to Miles City, in the fall of 1880, severed his business connection with Wells Bros., and assumed the occupation of a buffalo hunter. The following season he settled in Porcupine Bottom, where poor success waited on his first attempt at farming, owing to a hail-storm which destroyed his crops. In the winter of 1881-2 he engaged in hunting, with success. Early in 1882 he opened a general store at Rosebud; was appointed first postmaster of Beeman early in 1883. Mr. Hay was born at Florence, Ala., December 22, 1858, moved to Missouri, with his father, in 1874, thence successively to Kansas, Colorado, New Mexico, Texas and Montana. His marriage with Miss Addie Vance took place June 8, 1882. In the reminiscences of the settlement of the Yellowstone some adventures are credited to Mr. Hay. An instance of his hardihood and courage is evidenced in the fact that during the hunt of 1880-1 his foot was cut severely, but, notwithstanding, he pushed forward after the buffalo, with a crutch in one hand and a Sharp's rifle in the other.

CHRIS HEHLI, proprietor of saloon and barber shop, Miles City, was born at Cadiz, Switzerland, in 1836. When old enough, he assisted his uncle in the brewing business, and came to the United States in 1866, locating at Titusville, Pa., where he engaged in brewing until 1868. He moved to Stillwater, Minn., where he remained over three years, when he went to Bismarck, Dak., in 1872. There he followed the barber's trade until 1877; sold his shop, and brought a stock of goods to Montana, by way of Benton. While on the way with a party of immigrants, they were attacked by the Nez Perces, who captured his stock, and merely left him his clothes. He visited Bozeman, re-crossed the Belt mountains, and proceeded in a mackinaw down the river to old Miles, where he carried on business until December of the following year, when he built on Park street in the new town. This house was burned in October, 1883. In November following he re-built what is one of the most complete barber shops and saloons in this section. In partnership with George Rich, he opened a saloon opposite the Inter Ocean hotel, which he subsequently sold to Mr. Rich.

L. A. HUFFMAN, photographer, Miles City, was the first in his line to locate in this region. He was born in Winneshiek Co., Ia., in 1854; received a common school education, and began the photograph business in 1874. He traveled in the south one year, and then turning northwest located at Fargo, Dak., where he spent eighteen months with Mr. Haynes, the photographer. In 1878 he came to Montana, and established himself at Fort Keogh, just then being built, and did work for the soldiers and tourists. Being ambitious to become a stock man he built a cabin in the Rosebud country and started a ranch. The following year he opened his present gallery at Miles City. Being an enthusiast on the subject of hunting he passed much of his time in the mountains. He joined Captain Baldwin's exploring expedition on the Big Horn, and accompanied him throughout the exploration. He accompanied G. O. Shields, of the "American Field," in his extensive hunting operations throughout Montana and Wyoming. Combining business with pleasure, he conceived the novel idea of carrying photographic apparatus with him in his hunting expeditions, in order that he might secure views of the many romantic and beautiful places. His instruments were packed on horses. When deep streams were to be crossed rafts were made and the outfit was transferred upon them. Hostile Indians were numerous, and, in fact, the whole experience was a fair illustration of photographing under difficulties. This business was carried on through the favorable seasons of four years, and quantities of game and interesting scenes secured. The game consisted of grizzly bears, elk, deer, mountain sheep, buffalo and antelope. In one of his hunting expeditions with Mr. Shields he packed his instruments over 1,400 miles. Mr. Hoffman's experience has been peculiar, and probably no other man on the continent has had a similar one. The development of the country and rapid destruction of game have made it now impossible to repeat it. In addition to his success in securing so many valuable negatives he has had the satisfaction of killing hundreds of buffalo, elk, deer, mountain sheep, antelope, and at least a dozen grizzly bears. He has secured negatives of prominent Indian chiefs, and the finest views of the National Park.

THOMAS H. IRVINE, Miles City, born in Madison Co., Ky., Aug. 19, 1845, removed with his parents to Buchanan Co., Mo., in 1849, and in May, 1864, came to Virginia City, M. T. After a short time he established a stock ranch in Deer Lodge valley, which claimed his attention until 1868, when he engaged in mining at Pilgrims' Bar, and was also interested in the Rock Creek Ditch Company, for which he was the agent eight years. In October, 1876–7, he explored the Clarke's Fork country; then came to Tongue river and engaged as independent scout for General Miles; served on the Rose Bud, was at Lame Deer creek in the affair of May 7, 1877, and was one of eighteen under Lieutenant Casey, who charged the Sioux and captured their village. He has served as deputy sheriff for Custer and Dawson counties, and was elected sheriff in 1878. He soon resigned to accept the office of deputy United States marshal, and was re-elected sheriff in 1881. Since November, 1882, he has continuously been deputy United States marshal and deputy sheriff. Mr. Irvine was one of the twelve first settlers in the new town in 1878, moving there from the old town. Here he was married June 15, 1882, to Mrs. Mary Flynn, widow of the late James Flynn and daughter of Frederick Siple, of Albany, N. Y. She is the Mother of Mary Flynn and Frederick Irvine. From the time of Mr. Irvine's arrival at Virginia City to the present time he has been in the lead of all movements directed against lawlessness. As an officer, he has made a most creditable record.

J. S. IRWIN, born in Fayette Co., Tex., in 1854, resided there, assisting on his father's ranch, until he was 19 years old, when he practically became a cowboy. In 1877 he took a herd from Texas to Kansas, and in 1878 took a large herd to Red Cloud Agency for Powers & Allen, contractors. In 1880 he took charge of E. S. Newman & Co's outfit, going to Oregon and driving a herd to Nebraska. In 1882 he took a herd from Oregon to the Powder river for Newman & Co., where he now has charge of Niobrara Cattle Co's ranch. Mr. Irwin is also interested in cattle growing on the Mizpah.

PETER JACKSON, P. O. Forsyth, ranchman, of Porcupine Bottom, is of Norwegian descent, born in 1847. He came to the United States in 1869, remaining two years at Menominee, Mich., when he moved to Helena. In 1872 Mr. Jackson arrived in the Yellowstone country, where he engaged in hunting for a few years. He was employed as scout by General Miles. In the fall of 1877 he took up a ranch on the Little Porcupine (forty-two miles from Miles City), which now consists of 320 acres, nearly all fenced in and under cultivation. He is also engaged in stock-raising. Mr. Jackson has been a very successful Buffalo hunter. In 1880–'81, there were 2,700 Buffalos killed in the neighborhood of his present ranch, most of them by himself, having in one week slain 500. At that time there were about 12,000 buffalos killed on the Bottom, and there were 10,000 hides piled up on the banks of the Yellowstone. In 1883 Mr. Jackson was married to Miss Mary Price, of Ohio. The gentleman relates many interesting tales of his hunting and scouting life. On the 5th day of July, 1877, he and a few other scouts engaged in a sharp fight with Indians on the Little Missouri river, the conflict lasting from two o'clock in the afternoon until dark. Three horses were killed and one wounded, and one Indian was killed; otherwise there were no casualties. The scouts managed to get back to Major Brisbin's command about four o'clock the next morning. In the winter of 1874–5 Mr. Jackson was engaged in hunting on the Muscleshell. He killed during one winter 400 elk, slaughtering 52 of them in one day, out of one band; also, killed 400 deer and antelopes. This he reports was the greatest exploit ever known among Montana hunters.

J. W. JOHNSON, sheriff of Custer county, was born in Orange Co., Pa., in 1847, and moved with his parents to Iowa in 1857. He enlisted in the Twenty-fifth Iowa Volunteer Infantry in 1863; was wounded during the battle of Pea Ridge; was captured, left in charge of one guard, whom he knocked down and whose horse and gun he captured in turn, and fled amid a shower of bullets from rebel scouts. He escaped to the Union lines and was promoted to Sergeant, in which position he served until the close of the war. He came to Montana in the fall of 1866, being all summer en route, and entered on mining at Gregory. In 1876 he was U. S. scout with Gen. Miles in his pursuit of the Nez Perces He was elected sheriff of Custer county in November, 1883. In addition to his wound received at Pea Ridge, he was wounded in a mining camp, and again while acting officially as sheriff. He, with D. W. Ringer, conducted a livery in 1881, which business they still carry on.

OLE JOHNSON, a ranchman, P O. Miles City, was born in Sweden in 1850, coming direct from his native land to Yankton, D. T., in 1873. A year later he went to Nebraska, thence to Wyoming and the Black Hills. He arrived in the fall of 1876 on the Yellowstone, and engaged in the dairy business at Miles City. In 1879 he located his ranch on Pumpkin creek, a branch of the Tongue river, where he cultivates 100 acres of land and has 1,500 sheep, together with cattle and horses. In 1882 Mr. Johnson was married to Miss Lizzie Davidson, a native of Montana.

JOSEPH KENTZLER, of Tongue river, P. O. Cutler, arrived in Montana September 15, 1877, coming from the Black Hills, and on the first of October in the same year, located his present ranch, where he is engaged in stock-raising. Mr. Kentzler was born May 26, 1857, at Pittsburg, Pa., but was reared at Denver, Colo., his parents, Andrew and Mollie Kentzler, emigrating to that state during the Pike's Peak excitement. July 10, 1883, the subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Miss Millie Tompkins at Miles City, M. T. Mr. Kentzler was the pioneer of the lower Tongue river, owning the first ranch there. He came into the territory without funds, and during the winters of 1877–78–79 and 1880, made quite a sum hunting buffaloes. This he invested in cattle and horses, and it has proved a decided success, netting its owner a handsome revenue each year.

GEORGE KING, P. O. Etchetah, son of James and Sophia King, was born in Hall Co., Ga. In 1852 he joined in the California stampede, and was engaged in the placers of the northern part of the state until 1864, when he moved to the Owyhee country, Idaho. There he made a stay of fourteen years. In 1877 he visited the Yellowstone country, and located his present ranch on Pease Bottom. He owns 280 acres of prime land at this point, which are given up to hay and grain farming.

W. D. KNIGHT, of the Yellowstone Journal, Miles City, was born in Maryland in 1850. He learned the printer's trade in Washington City, D. C.; removed to the Black Hills, Dakota, in 1876 and established the Black Hills Miner at Crook City, being the first paper started in that region. He subsequently moved to Deadwood, but left there in 1879 and came to Miles City and established the Yellowstone Journal. He was appointed public printer of Custer county. June 24, 1883, he established the National Park Pioneer at Livingston, M. T., a weekly paper that he published a short time and then sold to Wright & Hendry, the present publishers.

EDWARD A. KREIDLER, born at Dansville, N. Y., April 18, 1844, enlisted in the Twenty-third New York Infantry in 1861; re-enlisted in the 141st New York Volunteer Infantry, and served in the Army of the Potomac until after Gettysburg, and in the Army of the Cumberland until the close of the war. During his service he was promoted gradually to a captaincy. On his return he taught school at Dansville for three years; in 1870 was appointed Clerk of the House of Representatives, and was next appointed Chief Clerk in the Preemption Department of the General Land Office. He was admitted to the bar of the United States Supreme Court at Washington, D. C., in 1878, having graduated from the Columbia Law College. He came to Miles City August 1, 1880, and opened there, October 9, 1880, the United States Land Office, of which he was Register until May, 1884.

C. B. LEBCHER, M.D., P. O. Miles City, physician and druggist, was born in Pennsylvania in 1850; moved with his parents to Akron, O., in his childhood, and was there educated. His study of medicine was carried on at the University of Michigan for two years, and at Jefferson College, from which he graduated as M.D. in 1874. He entered on the practice of medicine at Avilla, Md., and continued it at Baltimore for fifteen months. In 1875 he was appointed surgeon at the Crow Agency, but resigned in 1877, and started down the river on a raft to Miles City, intending to begin practice there. The raft upset, resulting in the loss of his stock of medicine. The doctor traveled east in 1878, and purchased a large stock of drugs, which he brought by ox-train to old Miles City, where he built a store the same fall, and purchased a half interest in the town site. He removed to the new town, where he built his present store. Dr. Lebcher was county physician for four years and coroner for one term.

LEIGHTON, JORDAN & Co's wholesale and retail general merchandising establishment, of Miles City, with its various branches of industries, real estate, banking, Yellowstone Line steamers and post-traderships at Fort Buford, Poplar River Agency and Woody Mountain, Northwest Territory, is not only one of the leading firms of Montana, but among those of the entire Northwest. The Miles City house was established July 4, 1881, by Joseph Leighton & Walter B. Jordan, they coming to Miles from Ottumwa, Ia. Messrs. Leighton & Jordan are equally interested as stockholders of the First National Bank, formerly corner of Bridge and Park streets, Miles City, but since moved to its present commodious quarters. This firm transacts a general wholesale and retail trade, supplying a large number of stock men in this vicinity and in Upper Wyoming. Some idea of the extent of their business may be had when taking into consideration the fact that they pay four times the amount of tax of any other firm in Miles. They receive large contracts from the government for furnishing supplies to the different posts and to the Indians. The sales of this house have been continually increasing, in 1882 reaching about half a million dollars. Two and one-half miles from the mouth of the Tongue river, on a small stream, the firm has one of the finest ranches in this entire section. They were the first to come up the Yellowstone with merchandise in 1876.

THOMSON P. MCELRATH, born in New York city June 2, 1837, received his education at Columbia College, N. Y., and graduated from that college in 1856. He was on the staff of the N. Y. Tribune in 1857–8, and assistant editor of the Philadelphia Evening Journal in 1858–9. He held a similar position on the N. Y. Weekly Century in 1859–60, and was admitted to the New York Supreme Court in 1860. On the outbreak of the war he received the commission of lieutenant in the 9th New York volunteer infantry in April, 1861. He served with the command in Virginia until May following, when he received President Lincoln's commission as 2d lieutenant in the 5th United States artillery, and served with the army of the Potomac through its first campaign. On June 27, 1862, he was breveted captain for distinguished service at Gaines' Mill, and on March 15, 1865, was breveted major in the United States army by President Johnson. Major McElrath served as adjutant of the 5th artillery from July until September, 1864, and regimental quartermaster from December 2, 1862, to October, 1867, when he was promoted in regular order to a captaincy. He commanded battery L until January, 1870, when he resigned to take the position of editor of the Brooklyn Daily Union. In February, 1874, he purchased the Goshen Republican, New York, which he conducted until February, 1876, when he received editorial management of the Frank Leslie publishing house. While holding this position he founded the American Dairyman in New York city, which he sold in 1878. In June, 1878, he was obliged by reason of ill-health to resign that position and seek a western climate. He came to Miles City in May, 1879, as corre-pondent of the N. Y. Times. Here he found the climate all that was required to improve his health, and here he remained. In May, 1880, he was elected secretary of the Custer Co. Republican committee, and delegate to the Republican Territorial convention at Helena in August, 1882. From October, 1880, to August, 1881, he held the office of Receiver of United States Land Office at Miles City. Major McElrath was married June 3, 1858, to Miss Kate Florida Ross, daughter of the late Captain E C. Ross, United States army, and professor of mathematics at Kenyon College, O., also at New York College. They are the parents of three children who reside at Miles City.

DONALD MCEWEN, farmer, Tongue river, P. O. Etna, a native of Scotland, came to the United States in the fall of 1864. He passed the first six years of his residence in America in Michigan and on the lakes. In 1870 he located in Illinois, and spent four years subsequently in Minnesota, and four in Dakota. He came to Montana in 1880 and located on the Tongue river within four miles of Etna, where he is engaged in agricultural pursuits.

ALEXANDER MCINTOSH, P. O. Rosebud, one of the pioneers of Alder Gulch, went to the Canadian Territory in 1864; returned to Idaho; wintered in Washington Territory; visited Deer Lodge in the spring of 1865; returned to Idaho in the fall of that year, and to Montana in the spring of 1866; passed the following winter seventy miles up the Clear Water; was at Bear Gulch in the spring of 1867; wintered on Crow Creek; thence went to Helena early in 1868; proceeded to Lincoln Gulch, where he was engaged until the fall of 1872 (with the exception of 1870, passed in the Judith country), when he visited Utah. In 1881 he located his present ranch of 160 acres on the Rosebud river. Mr. McIntosh was born in New York, but at an early day went to California. In 1860 he visited Nevada; returned to California during the winter of 1861–2; proceeded to Oregon; thence to Boise City, Idaho, and finally to Montana in 1864. His marriage with Miss Barbara Jamison took place in 1872.

DONALD F. MCMILLAN, blacksmith, Miles City, was born in Glengary Co., Canada, in 1849, and moved to Alexandria, where he learned the blacksmith's trade. At the age of 18 he came to the United States, locating in Pennsylvania. He arrived at Helena, M. T., in 1869, when he was employed by the Kemp Bros. The firm of McMillan & Stoner was subsequently formed, and their blacksmith and wagon shop was carried on there until 1873, when Mr. McMillan sold out, and moved to the Crow Agency, where he served as wheelwright until 1876 under the administration of three agents. In 1875 he was one of the Fort Pease rescue party. He established a shop with one Finch in 1876, sold out in 1877, and moved to Miles City, rafting to that point the first lumber used in the town. He made three trips, each raft of lumber being brought down on contract with the post-trader. In the fall he and D. W. Ringer built a stable in the old town, and in November, 1878, moved to the new town, where they erected a stable on Park street. In January, 1879, this structure was burned and the stock lost. They rebuilt it, however, and dissolved partnership, when Mr. McMillan erected the first blacksmith and wagon shop in the town. He has had repeated adventures among the Indians, and in other ways has shared the hardships of pioneer life.

WILLIAM N. MACQUEEN, owner of the Inter Ocean hotel and post-trader at Fort Keogh, came to the Territory in 1880 to represent the interests of Gibbs & Turner of St. Louis, in the firm of W D. O'Toole & Co., then post-traders at the Fort. A short time after his arrival he engaged in the lumber trade; built the Inter Ocean hotel early in 1882, and was appointed post-trader in June of that year. In 1884 he leased the Inter Ocean hotel to Mr. W. B. Andrews, under whose popular management it still continues. Mr. MacQueen is a native of Ohio, but for a quarter of a century prior to 1880 was prominently connected with the pork packing trade in St. Louis, Mo.

WILLIAM MARIAT, a ranchman of Pease Bottom, P. O. Etchetah, was born in Scotland in 1851, and came to the United States in 1870, settling in Colorado. In 1877 Mr. Mariat visited Pease Bottom and took up his ranch there in 1878, at a time when J. C. Guy was his nearest neighbor. He owns 360 acres of land, of which 200 acres are under cultivation. He keeps about thirty head of cattle and some other stock, devoting the greater part of his attention to agriculture.

J. W. MATSON, P. O. Putnam, a son of Aaron and Elizabeth (Wilson) Matson, was born in Ohio, October 16, 1853. In 1856 the family moved to Minnesota and continued to reside there until 1875. In that year Mr. Matson visited Denver, Colo.; thence proceeded to the Black Hills, and in 1879, in company with E. K. Davis, located their ranch in Graveyard Bottom, M. T. After a stay of three months here, he visited the Black Hills, joined the Leadville stampede, worked in a Colorado cow camp, was clerk at the Wentworth hotel, Denver; and after a series of travels and employments returned to his ranch, where he is still interested with Mr. Davis in stockraising and agriculture.

GEORGE MEYERS, of the firm of Meyers & Brother, general stock dealers, at Miles City, came to Montana in 1878, and shortly afterward secured a government contract to furnish the Fort Keogh garrison with beef for two and one-half years. On the expiration of this contract, he established his sheep farm, to which he has since added a horse ranch. The firm now owns between 5,000 and 6,000 head of stock on the Tongue and Powder rivers, while Mr. Meyers is individually interested in another herd of 2,000 or 3,000 head. He is a native of Missouri, from which state he came to Montana.

G. M. MILES, born near Boston, Mass., October 25, 1854, was educated in district schools and graduated from Amherst Agricultural College in July, 1875. The next year he was appointed Clerk in the Quartermaster Department of the Fifth U. S. Infantry, under General Miles, and went with this command to Fort Keogh, M. T., where he was stationed until 1878, when he resigned. Mr. Miles located a ranch that year almost on the site of Miles City, where he farmed for three years. In 1877 he purchased the first flock of sheep brought into Custer county, and engaged in sheep raising. He was appointed Notary and United States Commissioner for Custer county in '77, and had a seal, the first in the county, made in the local blacksmith shop at Keogh. In 1878 he was appointed Justice of the Peace, and the same year built the first residence erected in Miles City. In 1879 he drove the first band of wild horses from Madison to Custer county. In 1881 he entered into partnership with C. N. Strevell and is now the principal of the pioneer hardware house of Miles & Strevell. Appointed vice president of the First National Bank in 1884; invested largely in cattle business in 1883; held office of County Commissioner in 1883.

W. H. OSGOOD, Miles City, was born at Hartford, Conn., in 1836, and moved to California in 1856, where he mined in Green Valley for ten years and in other districts of Northern California, Nevada and Utah, during which time he experienced the various phases of mining life, such as striking rich diggings, selling out, prospecting, buying poor claims—wealthy to-day and poor to-morrow. During his stay in Green Valley, Cal., he opened a grocery store, which he conducted two years. After his mountain experiences, he traveled eastward to Chicago, and engaged in the packing business for three years in that city. He moved to the Black Hills in 1877, where, in partnership with a Mr. Helms, he engaged in cattle and horse raising. Mr. Osgood disposed of his interest in December, 1882; came to Miles City in January, 1883, where, with Mr. Brill, he carries on a meat market.

W. H. OXLEY, head bookkeeper with C. W. Savage & Sons, and one of the leading insurance agents of the county, was born at Toronto, Canada, and educated at St. Paul, Minn., where he became a partner in the dry goods firm of Cathcart & Co. For four years he was assistant teller in the First National Bank, and for three years chief bookkeeper with the German-American Banking Company. He came to Montana in December, 1881, where he assumed his present position. He represents the following-named insurance companies: Phœnix, New York; German-American, Hartford Life and Accident Company, Liverpool and London & Globe Company, California Insurance Company, Fire and Marine Insurance Company, St. Paul; Com. Un. Association of London, Springfield F. & M. Insurance Company, Mass. He was married in September, 1883, to Miss Portis, daughter of T. J. Portis, a leading lawyer of St. Louis, Mo.

LOUIS PAYETTE, Miles City, dealer in liquors, cigars, tobacco and fruits, was born in Worcester, Mass., May 18, 1841. Came to Chicago at 12 years of age and accepted a position as salesman in a mercantile house. In the spring of 1855 he moved to St. Paul and opened a general merchandise store, which he carried on from September, 1870, to October, 1876. He then sold out and came to Montana to accept charge of M. Carroll & Co's stock of merchandise, located at General Miles' cantonment, at the mouth of Tongue river. He continued here until the winter of 1879, at which time he went east for a few months' visit. When he returned he formed a partnership with John F. Murphy in the blacksmith business, selling out to him two years later, when he began his present business. In 1877 he was appointed the first postmaster at Miles City.

JOHNSTON PRATT, P. O. Miles City, an enterprising and ambitious ranchman of Tongue river, sixteen miles from Miles City, is of Irish descent, but was born at Williamsburg, Canada, in 1832. His parents are John and Elizabeth Pratt, who still reside in Canada, his father being a farmer by occupation. In 1869, our subject left his native province and came to Shakopee, Minn., from which place, after remaining two years, he removed to Minneapolis, engaging in the lumber business. At the end of five years he left Minneapolis and went to the Black Hills, via Bismarck. After a short stay in the Black Hills, in company with three other parties, he traveled to Fort Buford. By request of General Hazen he concluded to stop there for a time, and remained on an island at the mouth of the Yellowstone, for four weeks, waiting for a government train. On the arrival of the train he came up the Yellowstone and assisted in building the old cantonment of Fort Keogh. As soon as Miles City was located he went there and herded stock for other parties; but about two months afterward the Indians came in about four o'clock one day and captured all the stock except fourteen head of colts. After this occurrence he relinquished herding, and engaged in taking out hewed logs for a store at Fort Keogh, then in process of construction. In four or five weeks after this he commenced building a house in the old town of Miles City, which was afterward known as the "Senate saloon." This saloon was run by Captain John Smith, the receipts of which at one time ran as high as $800 per month. He remained in the old town for about two years, but in the meantime the town was moved to its present site and left the buildings of the old town deserted. After leaving the old town he came up on Tongue river with his brother to the foot of the Wolf mountains, and was employed that winter in logging for a man by the name of Hubbell. The next spring, being injured by a sawlog, he came down to Miles City, where he was taken sick with bleeding at the lungs. The next winter he went back and assisted Hubbell in the store at the logging camp. In the spring he was employed in Mr. Hubbell's store in Miles City, but his lungs became so bad he was compelled to leave the store. He next prepared a place in the old town and started in the saloon business, but that summer the effects of the sawlog injury appeared again, and he lay sick for nine weeks. After improving he went into Dr. Burleigh's store on Porcupine creek, but left there in 1879 and came to his ranch on the Tongue, which he had previously located in 1878. The ranch is very favorably located for farming, and 100 acres are at present under cultivation. Mr. Pratt, besides being very industrious, is one of the most genial and jovial of farmers, and well-known for his hospitality.

D. W. RINGER, of the firm of Ringer & Johnson, proprietors of the sale and livery stables, Miles City, was born at Catlin, N. Y., December 20, 1847, and moved with his grand-parents to Michigan in 1854. He was educated in that state and assisted on the farm until 1872, when he journeyed to Dakota, locating two ranches at what is now known as Wahpeton, that season. He was also employed by the Northern Boundary survey party; afterward visiting Fort Benton and Helena. He then came to the Crow Agency in 1875, and was there employed until the spring of 1876, when he visited the Black Hills, where he carried on a boarding-house for a few months. He next became wagon-master of a government train for Fort Buford, and once camped where Miles City now stands. Early in 1877 he was engaged in hauling hay, and in the fall of that year built a livery barn for McCormick and McMillan, of which he had charge. In September, 1878, the firm moved the structure to new Miles City, where it was destroyed by fire early in 1879. Mr. Ringer rebuilt in 1879, purchased McCormick's interest, built his present stables in June, 1881, and, in partnership with J. W. Johnson, now conducts one of the best equipped livery outfits in the valley of the Yellowstone.

SPENCER ROBERTSON, ranchman, Porcupine Bottom, Custer Co., was born in Stephenson Co., Ill., in 1855, moving to Iowa in 1856, with his parents, who settled near Dubuque, and resided for two years; removing thence to Minnesota, where they remained eleven years. In 1878 Mr. Robertson visited Bismarck, Dak.; thence proceeded to Miles City, and in 1882 located his quarter section on Porcupine Bottom, where his ranch now stands. Mr. Robertson is unmarried.

JOHN A. ROSS, ranchman on Tongue river, about four miles south of Miles City, settled at present location in 1878, being one of the pioneer settlers of that neighborhood. He is a native of Boston, Mass., where he was born in 1843. He came to Montana in 1877. His parents were Hugh H. and Jessie Ross, both of whom died in 1860; his father was a ship builder by occupation. Mr. Ross spent his boyhood days in Massachusetts, and lived there until he was twenty-four years of age, then went to Colorado, where he remained about four years. From Colorado he traveled to Wyoming, where he spent two more years. He next went to Kansas, in which state he lived until 1877, when he came to Fort Keogh, M. T. engaging in the stock business with William H. Cook, of St. Paul. Together they have about 150 head of cattle. Mr. Ross owns 160 acres of land, which he uses mostly for raising hay and grain. It is highly favored for cultivation, as the moisture is sufficient to raise crops without irrigation. He was married to Miss Ella Maguire, a native of Kansas, and they have three children.

W. H. Ross, attorney at law, Miles City, arrived at Old Miles City in 1878, and was appointed deputy county clerk in the fall of that year, by T. B. Wilson, who was then elected. He served two years in this office, when he was appointed deputy treasurer, under C. W. Savage, for two years. He was appointed prosecutor in December, 1880; since which time he has devoted his entire attention to law, being the legal representative of many leading firms. He graduated from the Albany, N. Y., Law School; was admitted to the bar of Minnesota in 1870, and has been in continuous practice, with the exception of a few years beginning in 1874.

PERKINS RUSSELL, stock-grower, P.O. Miles City, was born at Weld, Franklin Co., Me., in 1819. When of age he moved to Boston, where he was depot-master for the B. & L. R.R. Co. for four years, and was then appointed an officer of the South Boston prison, holding that position three years. He then engaged in the express business for two years, after which he emigrated to Minnesota, in the spring of 1858, opening a general store at Oronoco, and also interesting himself extensively in farming. In 1859 he removed to Lake City, where he established a meat market contracting business. He built a mill at Red Lake, and contracted to build Bishop Whipple's church and house, two stores and forty dwellings for Indians. He remained at Lake City for seven years, then moved to Minneapolis, purchased an interest in a mill, engaged in the lumber business, and dealt in real estate very successfully. Was appointed assistant superintendent of construction for the life-saving service, with station at Delaware. In 1876 he was appointed United States special agent to assist seven men in removing currency from California; was appointed licensed Indian trader in 1877 for the Crows, and took charge in May of that year, holding office for two years. In 1879 he purchased a ranch near Bozeman, and in July, 1881, he removed to Miles City, where he built the first house with a stone foundation. In December, 1883, Mr. Russell erected the first skating rink. In connection with his son, Milton M., he now carries on an extensive sheep business.

C. W. SAVAGE, Miles City; born near Syracuse, N. Y., October 30, 1833; settled in Michigan with his parents in 1839; came to Minnesota in 1855. After some years passed in this state he visited Dakota, and in 1876 became a pioneer of the Yellowstone. During this year he established a store at Fort Keogh, and thus became the first regular merchant in the valley. Early in 1877 he opened a store at Old Miles City, and in 1878 was the first to move to the new town. He was the second P.M. at Miles City, serving from 1878 to 1881. He was the first elected county treasurer of Custer, holding the office for four years. Mr. Savage served in the First Minnesota Infantry in the War for the Union, and was wounded at Fredericksburg. He was married January 1, 1853. C. W. Savage & Sons, pioneer merchants, dealers in dry-goods, hardware, groceries, crockery, boots and shoes, etc., carry one of the largest stocks in Montana, varying from $50,000 to $75,000. William E. and George W. Savage are partners with their father in this large business.

GEORGE SAVAGE, of C. W. Savage & Sons, dealers in dry-goods and notions, Miles City, M. T. The firm is composed of C. W. Savage and two sons, Wm. E. and George. A branch store was established at Livingstone in July, 1883, and was under the management of George Savage. Their stock averaged about $18,000 in value, located in a good brick building. George Savage was born near Minneapolis, Minn., in 1860; received a common school education, and was made acquainted with business in his father's store. He came to Montana with his father in 1878.

KONRAD SCHMID, Miles City, dealer in and manufacturer of harness and saddlery, was born at Kempten, Bavaria, in 1840, where he attended school and learned the trade of harness-making. In later years he opened shops at Kempten and at Lindau, which he conducted until 1860, when he was drafted in the Bavarian artillery under Colonel Prince Leopold. He emigrated to the United States in 1866, and settled at Davenport, Ia., where he remained until 1870, when he enlisted in the 4th United States infantry, serving five years with this command in Kentucky, Arkansas and Wyoming. In 1876 he enlisted in the 2d United States cavalry and served through the entire war against the Sioux and other tribes, under General Crook. He was discharged on his own petition in 1879 by General Miles; settled at Miles City that fall, and erected some houses on Main street, in one of which he established his pioneer harness shop. He was engaged in ranching for some time, and now is interested solely in his business and real estate. He was married in 1860 to Miss Maria Zapf, a native of Lindau, Bavaria.

GEORGE B. SILVERBERG, Miles City, born in Poland September 2, 1842, was brought up in England, and in 1858 came to the United States and mined in California until 1871, after which he mined 19 months in Nevada. He went to Granite City, U. T., and served four years as postmaster. In 1876 he moved to the Black Hills. Mr. Silverberg was one of the first settlers at Miles City, and carried on a saloon there. In 1880 he sold the property and went to Billings, where he engaged in the wholesale liquor business, but in 1883 sold his stock, and returned to Miles City, where he opened a saloon, which he still carries on. Mr. Silverberg was foreman of the first jury at Miles City.

JAMES SIMPSON, P. O. Forsyth, one of the pioneer farmers of the Lower Yellowstone, residing on Little Porcupine Bottom, located his present ranch in 1877—at that time his nearest neighbors being at the two stage stations, one six and the other fifteen miles distant. The first winter afterward the western station was moved to his own ranch. At that time Traverse, Piatt Gilmer and Salisbury were proprietors of the stage line. Mr. Simpson has a fine ranch, which consists of 352 acres, devoted to hay, grain and pasture, all fenced except about twenty acres of timber, 130 being under cultivation. There are numerous convenient buildings besides the dwelling house, and the water privileges are excellent, the farm having a frontage on the Yellowstone river of one mile. Mr. Simpson is a native of Somerset Co., New Jersey, thirty miles from New Brunswick, and from his native state went to Springfield, Ill., thence to Oregon in 1852, coming to Montana in 1876, where he has since been engaged in the stock business. He drove the second band of cattle (through to British Columbia from Oregon) that went across the country.

A. SLOGGY, P. O. Putnam, is a native of Pennsylvania. He moved to Wisconsin, with his father, when but ten years old, and resided there until 1870, except four years spent in the army of the Tennessee as a member of the fourteenth regiment Wisconsin veteran volunteer infantry. Fourteen years of his life he spent in government employ, surveying and exploring the timber resources of northern Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, and also the northern shores of lakes Huron and Superior in Canada. He went to Florida in 1870 and resided there until 1879, when he came to Montana Territory and engaged in ranching on Graveyard Bottom. He was appointed postmaster in July, 1883, which position he now holds.

JOHN W. SMITH, Miles City, is a native of Kentucky, born in the city of Louisville in 1828. His early life was spent in a printing office as a compositor. In 1857 he went to Fort Laramie, where he was engaged as an Indian trader for ten years. He was next engaged by the government as chief scout and guide for five years, after which he was with General Harney and was instrumental in moving Sioux Indians from that county to the reservation. He operated as Indian trader at White Stone agency four years; built the cavalry barracks at Fort Lincoln as government contractor, and afterward went with General Custer to the Black Hills as sutler, being the means of opening up that country. He was next at Bismarck, Dak., as government contractor in grain and hay, until 1875. In 1876 he went with General Custer on the Yellowstone expedition, after which he was appointed trader on Tongue river, now Fort Keogh, where he remained two years. He then built the first house erected at Miles City, and invested about twenty-six thousand dollars in improvements in the town. Residing there until the spring of 1882, he removed to Bozeman and erected a brick block at a cost of twenty-two thousand dollars. Mr. Smith owns large mining interests in Montana, and improved a fine ranch on the Tongue river. He is a charter member of the board of trade of Bozeman, and was one of the first commissioners of Custer county. In 1883 Mr. Smith was married to Miss Josie Allen, of Michigan.

W. S. SNELL, member of the firm of Leighton, Jordan & Co., Miles City, is a native of England; came to the United States in 1872, and to Miles City in 1877, since which time he has been connected with the firm at Fort Buford, Ft. Meade, and at Miles City, where he took up his permanent residence in June, 1882.

WILLIAM C. STAEHLE, attorney and councilor at law, Miles City, was born in Tübingen, Wurtemberg, Germany, December 10, 1850. His parents reside in Joliet, Ill. He graduated at the Michigan University in 1875, was admitted to the bar in Illinois in 1879, and enrolled in Montana in 1882. He finally located in Miles City, where he enjoys a lucrative practice. He is a competent advocate in English and German. He was appointed a United States Commissioner and Notary Public for Custer county.

RICHARD E. STOWER is a native of Essex county, in the northern part of New York, where he was born twenty-eight years ago. He has been in this western country for the past eight or nine years. He was connected with the Merchants' National Bank in St. Paul for some time, being selected afterward by Mr. Merriam, cashier of the bank, to take the position of assistant cashier of a bank under his management in Anoka. In 1879 Mr. Stower moved to Montevideo, Minn., where he established the Citizens' Bank, which is still in successful operation at that place. Subsequently he returned to St. Paul in the capacity of private secretary to Col. Merriam, president of the Merchants' Bank, which position he resigned to come to Miles City as cashier and manager of the First National Bank, in January, 1882. He is an expert accountant and a man of principle in all his relations in life Socially he is quite popular, although numerous business cares engross the most of his time. As county treasurer he will doubtless make a brilliant record.

C. N. STREVELL was born at Pontiac, Livingston Co., Ill., completed his education in Illinois, and then engaged in the hardware trade. He established the firm of C. N. Strevell & Co., which was continued for twelve years previous to 1879, when Mr. Strevell's health failing, he came to Montana and located at Miles City in October of that year. Here he at once opened a hardware house, which he conducted individually for two years, when George M. Miles was admitted as a partner, and the name Miles & Strevell adopted as the firm title. They are proprietors of the pioneer hardware store of the city, one of the most extensive establishments in that line west of St. Paul.

WILLIAM STRONG, P. O. Putnam, was born in 1845, in England, thence came to Illinois in 1866, and from there went to Cincinnati, where he enlisted in the army in 1868. After serving in all the military posts from Omaha to Fort Ellis (participating with Cook's command) in the campaign against the Sioux in 1876, he came from Wyoming to Montana (in 1878), at that time being quartermaster sergeant of company I, 2d United States cavalry. He made application and was granted his discharge at Fort Keogh in 1880, and then purchased his present ranch on Tongue river, about three miles from Miles City. He owns 200 head of cattle and some other stock. The ranch, comprising 160 acres, is improved with buildings, well fenced, and under a good state of cultivation. As an instance of the productiveness of the same, Mr. Strong states that from thirty-eight acres of oats (in 1883) he threshed 500 bushels; from five acres of barley he threshed 200 bushels; one-half an acre of potatoes yielded 4,000 pounds, and a half acre of beets, four and a half tons. Mr. Strong was married in 1876 to Miss Elizabeth Fellhour, a native of Tennessee.

C. B. TOWERS, of the firm of C. B. Towers & Co., Miles City, was born at Richmond, Vt., in 1855; was educated in the schools of that town, and graduated from Tufts' College, Medford, Mass., in 1878. He then started for Montana, going up the Missouri to Fort Benton, and thence to Helena, where he sojourned for nearly one year engaged in surveying and mining. He finally located at Miles City and established the business under the name of C. B. Towers & Co. Their boot and shoe and gents' furnishing store was founded at Miles City in September, 1881, being the pioneer store in that line at this point. In 1883 the firm started a branch house at Livingston, M. T., with John McAusland in charge. Their trade extends over the whole of eastern and central Montana, and even into Wyoming. John S. Towers, of New York city, is a partner with C. B. Towers.

W. B. TOWNE, born at East Wilton, Maine, in 1846, was employed for several years as salesman in mercantile houses in Boston and in New York city, also as salesman for Hall's Safe & Lock Co., at Chicago, and the Diebold Safe & Lock Co. He was the first salesman in this line to enter the Black Hills, Montana and Mexico. Early in 1882 Mr. Towne located at Miles City, and in December of that year was appointed Clerk of the Probate Court.

WILLIAM VAN GASKAN, of the firm of Brandenberg & Van Gaskan, Miles City, is a native of Delaware, born in 1853. He moved to Missouri and thence to Helena, M. T., in 1873. He visited Idaho, where he remained until 1875, going thence to Cottonwood, south of Salt Lake; then to the Black Hills in 1876; joined in the Big Horn stampede in the fall of 1877, and ended his journeyings at Ft. Keogh later that year. In the spring of 1878 he started a dairy and joined Mr. Brandenberg in the stock business, the firm now having about 800 or 900 head of cattle. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1884, held at Helena

CHARLES WALKER, Probate Judge of Custer county and practicing attorney, arrived in Montana in 1862. He was born in Allegany Co., N. Y., August 28, 1822, and reared in Yates county; Left New York in 1844 for Fort Wayne, Ind. From Indiana he went to Dodge Co., Wis., being proprietor of the first hotel at Lowell county. From Wisconsin he crossed the plains to Oregon; thence to northern California, where he remained nine years. In the spring of 1853 he went to southern Oregon and was elected Justice of the Peace for Jackson county and also Justice of the Peace for Klamath Co., holding both offices at the same time. He resigned these offices about six months afterward. In the spring of 1862 he went to Florence, Idaho, and on to Boise basin, acting as magistrate under Governor Wallace for twenty-two months before the territory was organized. In the fall of 1865 he visited Elk Creek, Deer Lodge Co., M. T., and became interested in mines there; was made Recorder of that district. In ninety days he made about $16,000, and sold out, leaving there and going to Sioux City; thence to Minnesota. He arrived at the Black Hills in 1876. In the spring of 1877 he went with a party to the Big Horn mountains, and from that section to Bozeman. From Bozeman he moved to Miles City in the fall of 1877, where he has since resided. Mr. Walker was the first attorney that ever pleaded a case in Custer county, and was Probate Judge for the last two years, being the second person in the county elected to that office. He is also engaged in buying and selling land. Judge Walker was married to Miss Eliza Morgan, at Orangeville, Ind., in 1846, and is the father of two sons and two daughters. The eldest son enlisted in the army at 14 years of age, and while on his way from Fort Wadsworth to be discharged, perished in a Minnesota blizzard, February 14, 1866. His name was Philo J. C. Walker. Judge Walker has been a cripple nearly all his life, having lost the use of one of his limbs from a fever-sore, which compels him to use crutches.

CHARLES WHITMAN, P. O. Rosebud, stock grower, on Sweeney creek, son of Newton and Mary Whitman, of Berlin, Wis., was born at that place in 1857. Mr. Whitman came to Fargo, Dak., in 1872, and to Montana in 1881, where he purchased the Brainerd ranch, near Miles City. Here he has since been engaged in stock-raising, owning now 250 cattle (some Shorthorns) and a number of horses.

C. S. WHITNEY, surgeon-dentist, Miles City, born in Massachusetts, near Boston, in 1856, was educated in his native state; studied dentistry in Lowell, and began practice in Rutland, Vt., in 1878. He removed to St. Paul, Minn., in the summer of 1883, and in the following September came to Miles City, M. T., where he opened his present dental rooms. Dr. Whitney is the only practicing dentist at this place.

LUTHER J. WHITNEY, real-estate agent, stock-grower and dealer, Miles City, was born in Hancock Co., Ill., in 1841. He moved to Kansas in 1853; thence to Utah in 1870, where he passed five years in mining and other pursuits, and in 1875 to the Black Hills. In 1877 he settled in Montana, locating in Custer Co., where he now has a herd of 200 cows and a flock of 4,000 sheep. He became largely interested in Miles City real estate, and in July, 1883, opened an office there, which he closed up recently. Mr. Whitney was married at Leavenworth, Kan., in 1869, to Miss Jane Palmer. He was elected county commissioner in 1884, for a term of four years, and served as school trustee in 1880.

H. B. WILEY, assistant cashier Stock Growers' National Bank, Miles City, and was born in Massachusetts; a son of A. S. Wiley, and vice-president of the Detroit Iron Safe Company. He came with his parents to Detroit in 1874, and there attended school for two years. He then clerked and acted as cashier for Newcomb, Endicott & Co., dry goods merchants at Detroit, until 1880. He located a claim in that year in Dakota, which he gave up in 1882, and engaged as clerk for Marks & Soule, merchants at Billings, M. T., for two years, save about two months during which he was book-keeper for H. Clark & Co., contractors on the N. P. R. R., being located at Helena. In January, 1884, he was employed in Stebbins, Mund & Co.'s bank, at Miles City, since when he has remained and is assistant cashier of the Stock Growers' National Bank, and has also been a stock holder in the same since the former bank was merged into the latter.

A. B. WOLF, proprietor of the Commercial Hotel, Miles City, was born at Louisville, Ky., May 5, 1846; moved with his father to St. Louis, Mo., a few years later, where his father established the first steam bakery. Mr. Wolf, when of age, took a position as salesman in the bakery, which he held until 1877, when he came to old Miles City. On arrival here he took charge of Capt. Smith's restaurant; moved to new Miles City in 1878, and carried on a restaurant until 1881. He erected the Merchants' Hotel this year, which he managed until August 1, 1882, when he purchased a farm near town, and entered upon fruit tree culture. In September, 1883, he opened the Commercial House, which he conducts with remarkable ability.

J. JAY WOOD, Miles City, physician and surgeon, was born in Vermont in 1851; moved to Ohio in 1860, and thence to Illinois, where he was married to Miss Georgia Weythe, of Springfield, in 1881. He came direct to Montana from Cincinnati, and established an office at Miles City.

CAPTAIN C. P. WOOLFOLK, farmer and stock-grower, P. O. Etchetah, is a native of St. Louis, Mo. He removed with his parents to Kentucky in 1853, making that state his home until 1860, when, on the death of his father, he returned to Carroll Co., Mo., where he resided for several years. He was engaged in the Missouri river trade between St. Louis and Omaha for some years previous to 1868, and next was one of the pioneer steamboat men of the Yellowstone, having piloted the "J. H. Durfee" up that river in 1876. He was captain in the "Josephine" at the time she came up with the "Far West" in the trip to Fort Custer, then being built. Mr. Woolfolk now has charge of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company's fleet. Capt. Woolfolk purchased the site of old Fort Pease, in 1882, and here his ranch is located. He states that the seasons are so mild here that melons, sweet potatoes and such vegetables grow well. He was married in 1878, to Miss Ida Chrum, a native of Carrolton, Mo.

*W. B ANDREWS, proprietor of the Inter Ocean Hotel, Miles city, came to this territory in the spring of 1881, from Chicago, where he had served several years in the Palmer House as clerk and cashier. He took the position of bookkeeper for O' Toole & Co., post traders at Fort Keogh. On the retirement of W. D. O'Toole as trader, he came to Miles City and engaged in the drug business, but soon after accepted the management of the Inter Ocean Hotel, which position he occupied until 1884; at which time he secured a lease of the hotel, and has since conducted it as sole proprietor.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

DAWSON COUNTY.

SAMUEL R. AINSLIE, P. O. Glendive, was born at Sandusky, Erie Co., O.; received a common school education, and began railroad work on the S. D. & C. R R., the first railroad constructed west of the Alleghenies. He began as errand boy, and was promoted chief clerk in the general office after a term of five years' service. He left the office to accept the agency at Lawrence, Kan., for the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company. In after years he had charge of various offices along the line to Denver, where he was freight agent in 1874. This company appointed him superintendent of the Denver division, and subsequently traffic manager of the Denver & Rio Grande railroad. This last position he held for a year and a half, resigning in 1881 to accept the position of superintendent of the Yellowstone division of the Northern Pacific railroad—463 miles of main line, fifty-one miles National Park branch and twenty miles Helena and Jefferson Co. branch. Such a series of promotions tell at once the story of the man's capacity

S. L. BEAN, Glendive, was born in Franklin Co., N. Y., in March, 1850; he learned the machinists' trade in Blood's Locomotive Works, at Manchester, N. H., and in 1873 moved to Wisconsin, where he was employed as machinist in the shops of the W. C. R. R. Co., at Stevens Point. In 1879 he left Stevens Point to take charge of the C., St. P., M & O. R. R. Co's shops at Hudson, Wis. In February, 1880, he entered the employ of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company as foreman in the Brainerd shops; in February, 1881, was assigned to the Little Missouri. He has been master mechanic at Glendive since 1881. In charge as master mechanic on construction engineers at Little Missouri. Mr. Bean is now serving as county commissioner of Dawson, having been elected in November, 1882.

JOHN H. BOYD, Glendive, night policeman and councilman, was born in New York city in 1851; went to Wisconsin in childhood with his father, Henry Boyd, and thence to Mower Co., Minn., in 1863, where they resided 19 years. Subsequently, in 1880, Mr. Boyd moved to Lake Co., D. T., and in 1881 entered the civil engineers' department of the Northern Pacific railroad under J. W. Kendricks, in charge of the Yellowstone division, serving until February, 1883, some time after his settlement at Glendive. He was appointed deputy under sheriff James Taylor in February, 1883, but resigned the following June, when he was appointed councilman and constable by the commissioners of Dawson Co. Henry Boyd enlisted in the 3d Wisconsin infantry in 1861, serving 18 months, when he was discharged on account of wounds.

MORRIS CAIN, blacksmith, P. O. Glendive, was born at Barkersville, Mass., in 1838; moved with his parents to Wooster, Mass., in 1847, and assisted them on the farm which they purchased near that town, until 1852, when he set forth on his western course. In 1875 he enlisted in the Seventh U. S. Cavalry, at Boston, and served until July 4, 1877, when he received his discharge at Fort Rice. He then engaged with Joe Rimmel, as blacksmith, working on the road to Bismarck. Six months later he opened a blacksmith and wheelwright's shop at Bismarck. During this time a volunteer was called for to deliver mail at Fort Keogh Mr. Cain offered himself, and performed the hazardous undertaking successfully. On his return he sold his shops and operated a hack line for a short time, then followed the Northern Pacific Railroad to Glendive, moving his shop in advance of the R. R. construction. He located at Glendive in 1880, built a grocery store in old Glendive for M. J. Quinn, of which he was given charge. February 1, 1881, he built the first blacksmith shop, and also erected two buildings on Front street. Since then he has accumulated valuable real estate, owning several houses; he carries on a stable and corral, together with a freighting outfit.

N. W. COMFORD, Glendive, Commissioner of Dawson Co., and dealer in real estate, was born in Canada in 1844; moved with his parents to Chilton, Wis., in 1850, and went to Minnesota in 1858 to engage in farming. In 1868 he moved to Elk Point, Dak., where he established his farm and stock-growing business. In 1872 he arrived on the site of Bismarck, Dak., and erected the first house there, subsequently becoming engaged in freighting from Sioux City through Dakota. He visited Fort Benton in 1875, where he engaged in the live stock trade, and in June, 1881, he settled at Glendive, where he acquired large interests in village property, and also a timbered tract of 200 acres adjoining the town. Many of the most substantial business houses of Glendive are the property of Mr. Comford, or are leased by him. He was one of the first Commissioners elected by the people of Dawson, an office in which he served with scrupulous assiduity.

JAMES COSTELLO, Glendive, born at Faribault, Minn., in 1862, moved to Dakota in 1874, where he was engaged in various occupations until 1876, in which year he came to Montana. From 1876 to October, 1883, when, with Frank Muzzy, he purchased the Glendive stables, he took the parts of herder, stage driver, hunter and trapper. (Vide Hist. of Glendive) In January, 1885, he moved to the north of the Yellowstone river, opposite to Glendive, and is running a saloon.

H. S. DAVIS, Glendive, dealer in drugs, stationery and toilet articles, was born in Michigan in 1857, and was educated in the public schools of that state. In 1874 he engaged in the drug business at Almont, Mich. He continued at that place until July, 1881, when he came to Glendive and established his present business. Mr. Davis has a well stocked establishment in his line, and is in possession of a very satisfactory trade.

HENRY DION, Glendive, one of the pioneer business men of Glendive, was born near Montreal, Canada, in 1846. Nineteen years after he moved to the North Atlantic States, and in December, 1867, moved westward to Omaha, Neb., thence to Wyoming and Utah. Returning as far as Chicago, he remained some time in that city, and in July, 1872, went to Dakota, where he was engaged as carpenter, in building Little Ft. Lincoln and other government works. In 1875 he visited the Black Hills, but returned to Bismarck, where he remained till 1880, and then moved to Glendive. He was appointed first sheriff of Dawson county September 17, 1882. He has conducted successfully a billiard hall and sample room since May, 1881, and has been engaged in the wholesale liquor trade for over two years.

ANDREW R. DUNCAN, M. D., Glendive, was born in Charlotte-Town Royalty, Prince Edward Island, in the year 1851. He came to the United States in 1877; received his medical education at the Universities of Pennsylvania and Vermont, attending two years at the former and one year at the latter, from which he received his degree of M. D. in 1882. He practiced a short time in his native province, whence he came direct to Glendive, Montana. In September, 1882, he entered into partnership with Dr. McIntosh, under the firm name of Drs. McIntosh & Duncan, who were appointed district surgeons to the Northern Pacific Beneficial Association. On the 27th of January, 1885, the firm dissolved, and Dr. Duncan was retained as the district surgeon. He is also United States examining surgeon, coroner of Dawson county, physician to the Board of Health, county physician and surgeon, and medical examiner for several insurance companies.

M. FARRELL, Glendive, proprietor of lunch counter and saloon, was born in County Longford, Ireland, in 1848. He came to the United States in 1857 with his parents, and remained with them in Brooklyn, N. Y., until 1866, when he moved to Kansas, and there passed three years. After spending seven years in Texas and the Indian Territory, he moved to Montana, where the cantonment at the mouth of Tongue river was constructed. He was in business at Miles City until November, 1880, when he and a Mr. Butler came to Glendive and opened a restaurant—November 7, that year—the first business place at Glendive. In July, 1881, Mr. Butler retired, leaving Mr. Farrell to conduct the business alone. He is widely and favorably known throughout the Yellowstone country. December 17, 1884, his restaurant was burned, and on December 22, 1884, he opened a saloon and lunch counter.

PETER GALLAGHER, Glendive, Deputy Clerk of the District Court, and junior partner of the firm of Poutet & Gallagher, wholesale and retail dealers in wines, liquors and cigars, Glendive, M. T.; also land agent—homestead, pre-emption and tree claims filed; does a general land office business. The subject of this sketch was born in Ireland in 1856; came to America in the spring of 1878; located at Bismarck, Dak., where he served as night watchman from April 1 to August 1 of that year. He then engaged with the firm of Galloway & McGarvey, to take charge of a general store, on the line of the Bismarck & Black Hills railway, serving in that capacity one year; next clerked for Brady & McGarvey, railroad contractors, on the line of the Northern Pacific railway. In September, 1880, he came to Glendive, M. T., and bought a half interest with Robert Poutet in the clothing business, and in wholesale and retail liquor trade; they enlarged the business and included in their line flour and feed and hunters' supplies. In April, 1883, they closed out all but the wholesale and retail liquor business, which they have since carried on exclusively. Mr. Gallagher has held the office of Clerk of the Court since the establishment of a court at Glendive, being the present incumbent.

HARRY HELMS, saloon and restaurant, Glendive, was born October 8, 1845, in Cincinnati, O. He early learned the carpenter's trade and at the age of seventeen began for himself in that line in his native city. In 1864 he worked at his trade in Indianapolis, Ind., where he helped to construct several buildings, among which were two public schools. In 1870 he went to Louisiana and helped to build vessels at Algiers for nearly three years. In 1880 he located at St. Louis, going thence to Montana and locating at Glendive, before the U. P. R. R. was extended so far, opening a saloon two years later he added a restaurant and now carries on a lucrative business. He has been delegate to democratic conventions. Was married in 1882 to Lizzie May, of Minneapolis, Minn.

ANTON KLAUS, Glendive, son of Anton Klaus, of Jamestown, Dak., and formerly of Green Bay, Wis., was born at Green Bay in 1861; was educated and resided there until his removal to Jamestown, Dak., where he was engaged in the lumber trade and interested in real estate. In 1882 he formed a partnership with Ela C. Waters (Vide Hist. of Hotel, also sketch of E. C. Waters), which existed until the summer of 1885, when Mr. Klaus withdrew from the firm.

WILLIAM E. LONERGAN, Glendive, son of Thomas and Margaret Lonergan, was born at Boston, Mass., February 12, 1851, where he attended school until 1867, when he entered a grocery establishment. There he passed five years. In 1872 he began the study of law in the office of Grover & Ames, and subsequently in the office of Benj. F. Butler. He was admitted to practice in the U. S. Court and the Supreme Court in 1877, being the youngest candidate ever granted that honor. He settled at Mandan, Dak., in 1878, and was the first judge of the courts there. He located at Glendive October 12, 1881, being one of the very first attorneys who settled here. He was elected Probate Judge in November, 1882, having previously been the first Prosecuting Attorney of Dawson. He was married February 14, 1883, to Miss Nellie, daughter of General Powell C. Adams.

WM. LOWE, Glendive, was born in England in 1829; he emigrated in 1839, and located in Rhode Island, where he learned the tinner's trade, and resided until 1853, removing thence to Canton, Ia., to open a hardware store. He was among the pioneers of Montana, coming here in 1864 as one of a party who discovered Ruby Gulch and Emigrant Gulch. He worked in those gulches for some time without success, when he left for Virginia City; subsequently returned to Emigrant Gulch; then proceeded to Rochester Gulch on Beaverhead; drifted back to Virginia City the following spring, thence to Clarke's Fork and Judith Basin regions. He was also a member of the company who built a boat about where Livingstone now stands, and proceeded down the Yellowstone in it to the mouth of Powder river, where his party killed eight and wounded several Sioux who attacked them. After spending 18 years prospecting and mining, he settled at Glendive in January, 1882, and established a hardware, tin and sheet-iron factory at that point. He married, in 1857, Miss Ellen Byard, and has four children, Nellie, Esther, Guy and Ray. He is now public administrator for Dawson county.

WILLIAM W. MABEE, editor and publisher, Glendive, was born near Vittoria, Canada, February 24, 1857, was educated in the schools of that district, and at the Can. Lit. Inst., Woodstock. He entered the drug business with Dr. Stewart at Pt. Rowan, Canada, in 1875; visited Greene, Ia., in October, 1877, where he took a position in Young's drug store; subsequently took charge of Harrison's drug store at Clarksville, and in 1878 moved to Lansing, where he held a similar position until May 10, 1880, when he set out on that journey which terminated in his arrival on the site of Glendive, November 19, 1880. He found at this point the canvass towns in advance of the railroad track. At that time the Eagle Butte Cut, 1¼ miles west of Glendive, was commenced. The journey was the result of Yellowstone fever, from the effects of which Mr. Mabee, like his fellow travelers, suffered much, having worked at everything from grader on the track to mail carrier. In April, 1881, he was the first driver of the Engineers' Mail into Miles City from Glendive. In July, 1881, he went to Bismarck, and there purchased a Washington hand press and a stock of type. This outfit was brought into Glendive, an office established in a log shanty in the rear of Davis' drug store, and the first number of a Glendive newspaper issued August 11. Our subject was married to Miss Effie C. Ayotte (daughter of the D. U. S. M. at Buford, Dak.) December 24, 1882.

D. M. MCINTOSH, M. D., Glendive, was born in Pictou Co., N. S., in 1837; graduated from Harvard University in 1871, practiced for about one year at Cam-bridgeport, near Boston, then moved to Prince Edward Island, where he continued to practice until 1882, when he came to Glendive. Some time after the partnership with Dr. Duncan was formed, he was appointed surgeon to the N. P. B. Association, for the district between Little Missouri and Billings; and to this medical firm of McIntosh & Duncan also was given the contract for the care of the poor of Dawson county. The partnership with Dr. Duncan ceased January 27, 1885.

A. J. McMillan, Glendive, was born in Ontario, Canada, in 1848, and came to the United States in 1863, locating in Pennsylvania, where he resided until 1871, when he moved to Chippewa Falls, Wis., and engaged in the lumber trade. In 1881 he visited Minnesota, pushed further westward, and in the fall of that year arrived at Glendive, where he established his hotel business. He was elected county treasurer in November, 1882, an office which he filled with credit to himself and to the county. He was married to Alice S. Getty, in 1881, at Chippewa Falls.

John F. Maloney, P. O. Glendive, born at Faribault, Minn., in 1859, was educated at St. John's College, St. Cloud, and Shattuck School, Faribault, Minn.; was admitted to practice in the courts of Minnesota. He settled at Glendive in July, 1881, and in September of the following year was appointed probate judge by the Governor, holding the office until January 1, 1883, having previously (November, 1882,) been elected a member of the legislature. In November, 1883, he was elected member of the constitutional convention of January, 1884, and was deputized to represent Dawson at the Assessor's Convention held at Helena.

Edward Marron, stock-grower, fifteen miles from Glendive, at Seven-mile creek, was born at Utica, N. Y., in 1856. He moved with his parents to Christian Co., Ill., in childhood, and resided in that State until 1877, when he came to Montana, locating his ranch at the mouth of Seven-mile creek, fifteen miles from Glendive. Here he engaged in hunting and trapping, making his camp one mile south of the present town of Glendive. At that time he was the only white man in the region. The Indians made it a point to steal his horses every spring. Once he caught a party in the act, and sent at least one of the redskins to the happy hunting-grounds. Some years ago he met a party of New York hunters, and was employed by them as guide; on their return the next season he was re-employed. At the close of this season they proposed to start a stock ranch, making him manager and partner. The proposition was carried out with profit to the pioneer and his New York friends, who visit him annually. Mr. Marron's share numbered 140 head of cattle in 1883.

Frank H. Marsh, Glendive, was born in Norwalk, O., June 2, 1854, and was engaged in 1867 as message boy in the Western Union Telegraph Office at Norwalk, O. In 1868 he was appointed telegraph operator in the railroad office at that point for the L. S. & M. S. R. R. Co. He was removed to the Cleveland, O., office for the same company in 1869, remaining there about one year. In 1871 he was engaged as telegraph operator by various roads, among them the P., Ft. W. & C., P. C. & St. L., and T., W. & W. railways. Mr. Marsh went to Kansas City in 1872, where he was employed in the general office as telegraph operator. In 1883 he went to Ellis, Kan., as train dispatcher, remaining until 1876. He then went to Palestine, Texas, remaining one year as train dispatcher for the I. & G. N. Ry. Co. He was appointed chief train dispatcher of the Yellowstone Division of the Northern Pacific Ry. at Glendive, M. T., in 1882, where he still remains.

Frank Muzzy, Glendive, of the firm of Costello & Muzzy, was born at Kader, Ia., in 1850; moved to Minnesota, where he resided until 1871, when he went to Dakota, and made that territory his home until 1876. In the latter year he came to Montana with the Perry and Custer expedition, but soon after left that party, and, in partnership with Fred Ronsaville, engaged in cutting timber on Crittenden Island, and in steamboat wood supplies. This partnership was dissolved in 1879–80, when Mr. Muzzy was employed on the railroad. A year later he located a ranch, which he operated in summer, devoting the winter to buffalo hunting. He settled at Glendive in October, 1883, and, with James Costello, purchased Comfort & Raymond's livery outfit, which he carries on at the present time. (Vide History of Glendive.)

J. J. O'Brien, Glendive, dealer in ice, was born at North Brookfield, Mass., in 1854, and resided there until 1876, when he enlisted in the U. S. army, served in Texas and along the frontier, and the same year came to Montana with Gen. Buell's command. He was with Gen Rosseau in his survey of the N. P. line, and subsequently engaged in grading the road until the construction party reached Glendive, in July, 1881, when he located here and engaged in the ice trade—putting up about 1000 tons annually. Mr. O'Brien was elected assessor of Dawson Co., in November, 1882.

Robt. Poutet, Glendive, was born in Dublin, Ireland, December 25, 1843, and embraced a seafaring life in 1856. He shipped as a cabin boy, for an Australian voyage, in 1861, and passed three years in that country; made a voyage to South America, and continued in the merchant service until 1868, when he landed at Baltimore, Md. From 1869 to 1871 he visited Illinois, Wyoming and Utah, remaining one year at Chicago, and railroading and mining in the West. In April, 1871, he moved to Minnesota, and later that year to Fargo, Dak., where he resided until the fall of 1878, when he entered the Bismarck and Black Hills freight business. Early in 1880 he began mercantile life at Green River, Dak., and on December 20, 1880, he, with Peter Gallagher, opened a clothing store at Glendive. Subsequently they closed out their stock and opened their wholesale liquor and cigar house. Mr Poutet was elected commissioner of Dawson county, in November, 1882, in which important office he has rendered most valuable service to the new county.

W. H. Raymond, Glendive, County Clerk and Recorder of Dawson Co., was born in Marengo, Ill., in 1848; removed to Iowa in 1855, and from 1872 until 1877 he was in the grocery business at Charles City. In 1877 he went to Minnesota and engaged in mercantile business until 1879, when he returned to Iowa, remaining there one year, and then went to Fergus Falls, Minn., where he remained until 1880, when he came to Glendive and engaged in the livery and feed business. He was elected County Clerk and Recorder of Dawson County, in November, 1882, and still holds the position.

George D. Richmond, Glendive, was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1850; he, in early life, came to America and remained in New York city until 1870, when he moved west, spending five years in Fort Ellis, M. T., in government employ. Returning to New York he remained one year, and then came to Fort Custer and worked three years, after which he came to Glendive and opened a station for papers, fruits and confectionery in October, 1881. In May, 1885, he sold out his business.

B. A. Savignac, Glendive, a native of St Louis, moved to Kansas in 1868, which state he left in 1879, going to Fort Benton, M. T. During the winter of 1881–2 he moved to Miles City, and thence to Glendive in March, 1882, where he purchased the N. W. Comfort Meat Market, and conducted the same in partnership with R. W. Snyder.

J. D. Sears, boot and shoe merchant, Glendive, was born in Delaware Co., N. Y., in 1836, where he learned the trade of boot and shoe maker, and resided until December 28, 1865. On this date he moved to Wilmington, Ill.; in July following he went to Denison, Ia., and in February, 1867, to Yankton, Dak., where he carried on the boot and shoe business for 12 years. He joined in the Black Hills stampede in 1876, operated in mining and lost a snug fortune which he earned at Yankton. In May, 1881, he settled at Glendive, resumed his trade, and by industry again accumulated a fair capital, on which he re-established his boot and shoe business A. A. Tebo is Mr. Sears' partner (non-resident). The stock carried ranges from $3,000 to $4,000 in value.

R. W. SNYDER, Glendive, of the firm of Snyder & Savignac, was born in Kentucky in 1847, and resided there until 1865, when he moved to Kansas. In 1871 he went to Cheyenne, Wy.; then visited Sidney, Neb; thence moved to the Black Hills, where he engaged in freighting and mining until March, 1882, when he came to Glendive and formed a partnership with B. A. Savignac as proprietors of the Glendive Meat Market, formerly operated by N. W. Comfort. The partnership continued for several years, when Mr. Savignac withdrew, and Mr. Snyder now has sole control of the business.

JAMES TAYLOR, Glendive, was born at New Bedford, Mass., in 1844; moved with his parents to Canada in 1852, and in 1862 to Houghton, Mich., where he resided until 1869, when he engaged in the work of Northern Pacific construction at Duluth. In 1870 he located at Brainerd, Minn., and was elected chairman of the Cass Co. board of county commissioners. He operated a ferry at Brainerd until 1877, when he moved to Bismarck, Dak., as outside manager for the post-traders, Winston Bros. & Shaw. He came to Montana in 1879 in the interest of this company and opened a saloon at the mouth of Glendive creek, where a small settlement was formed. Mr. Taylor established a wholesale and retail liquor house here a year later; but in January, 1881, moved to New Glendive. He was appointed deputy to the famous sheriff, Thomas Irvine, in February, 1881, and was elected sheriff of Dawson Co. in November, 1882. His services need no comment. Mr. Taylor married Miss Lizzie Gloster, of Toronto, Canada, in June, 1882.

ALEXANDER TINLING, Glendive, was born at Brantford, Canada, in January, 1861, and moved with his parents to Ossian, Ia., when quite a child. He was educated and conducted a school there. He came to Montana in 1882, when he received the position of clerk in the freight office of the Northern Pacific railroad. In 1883 he was transferred to Forsyth as agent in charge of that office; but within four months was re-transferred to Glendive as general ticket and freight agent at that point, as well as express agent. His brother, G. W., was born in the year 1863 at Brantford, Canada, received some schooling, and worked on the farm until 1883, when he came to Forsyth and learned railroading under our subject. He came to Glendive in July, 1883, and is in the same office with his brother.

JOHN TRUMBULL, attorney at law, Glendive, was born at Glasgow, Scotland, May 21, 1856, and there received a primary education. In 1865 he came to the United States, studied at the Iowa College, from which he graduated with law class of 1879. He was admitted to the bar, and entered upon the practice of his profession at Cresco, Ia. He removed to Bismarck, Dak., in the spring of 1881, and to Glendive in December, 1882. He was appointed deputy district attorney under T. R. Edwards August 10, 1883, which position he held until Mr. Edwards' death in December, 1883

SAM. L. WALLACE, train dispatcher, P. O. Glendive, was born at Cedar Rapids, Ia., in 1849; moved to Marshalltown, Iowa, in 1861, and there learned telegraphy. He was appointed operator at State Centre, Ill., in 1865, which position he resigned to accept another with the Illinois Central R. R Co. Two years later he was appointed to a position on the Union Pacific R. R., and served that company for three years. Again he held a position in the Western Union Telegraph Co's office in California for three years, afterward serving one year for the Mormons at Deseret and at Pioche, Nev. Returning to the States, he held positions at Indianapolis, Cincinnati and Chicago, being special operator for the Inter Ocean at Chicago. He held a similar position at Washington for the New York Associated Press He came to Glendive in 1883, where he was appointed train dispatcher, and after a service of two years resigned to accept the position of general manager for the Angus Cattle Co., of Chicago.

ELA C. WATERS, Glendive (of the late firm of Klaus and Waters, proprietors of the Merrill House), was born at Martinsburg, Lewis Co., N. Y., in 1849; moved to Fond du Lac, Wis., in childhood; was educated in the schools there and also attended Ripon College until he entered commercial life. In 1870 he was appointed traveling salesman for a New York house, and continued on the road from that period up to 1882, when, with Mr. Klaus, he opened the Merrill House. He enlisted in Co. A, 38th Wis. Inf., early in 1864, and served as drummer until the close of the war. His ideas, gained from experience on the road, have been put in practice at the Merrill House, rendering it one of the most pleasant hotels in the Northwest. In addition to his hotel interests, he is also interested in the cattle business. Mr. Waters was married, March 4, 1877, to Miss Martha B., daughter of John B. Amory, one of Fond du Lac's oldest citizens. Early in 1885 he became sole proprietor of the Merrill House.

CHAPTER XXXV.

DEER LODGE COUNTY.

JOAQUIN ABASCAL, P. O. Beartown, member from Deer Lodge, of the Con. Convention of 1884, was born in Spain, in 1835, in the province of Castile; removed to California in 1852; came to Montana in 1866, and has been engaged in mining, freighting and merchandising since that time. He was a member of the council of the Ninth Legislative Assembly of Montana; has been for years engaged in mining and merchandising at Beartown.

ADOLPH AHREN, produce and commission house, Anaconda, was born in Germany, August 24, 1858, and is a son of Frederick and Catharine Ahren. In 1868 he came to the United States with his parents, with whom he remained in the vicinity of Verona, Wis., until 1880, when he came to Montana, and worked the first year in the vicinity of Cable. In 1881, in partnership with his brother, he opened a hotel at Cable, at which business he continued until the summer of 1883, at which time he came to Anaconda and opened a meat market; this he sold out after a couple of months and invested in his present business. Being a young man of quiet and gentlemanly bearing, his prospects of success in life are exceedingly promising.

JAMES M BAILEY, Deer Lodge City, was born in State of Maine, July 13, 1826. In 1846 he settled at Pittston, Pa., where he worked as a carpenter three years. In 1849 he moved to Grant Co., Wis., and engaged in farming, also at carpenter work, until 1864, when he left for Montana. Arriving at Alder Gulch, he began mining. In 1865 he went to Blackfoot, and mined there until the fall of the same year, when he left for Deer Lodge county. He purchased the Warm Spring ranch, built a hotel and kept a traveler's house on the stage road for three years. He mined one summer at Pioneer and attended to his ranch in the winter. In the fall of 1869 he came to Deer Lodge, engaged in the cattle business, and bought a ranch thirteen miles from town. In 1871 he entered the lumber business, which he sold out in 1883. Mr. Bailey married Miss Catharine House, in October, 1849, and by her has one child, Mina M. He has a ranch on Big Blackfoot, is engaged in raising horses and cattle, and has charge of a lumber yard, besides being interested in real estate in town.

JUDGE JOHN Y. BATTERTON, Deer Lodge City, county commissioner of Deer Lodge county, was born in Boone Co., Mo., October 22, 1826. He was brought up in his native county, and engaged in the live-stock business He was elected judge of the county court of Boone county, re-elected, and served seven years In June, 1877, he moved to Montana, and located at Deer Lodge City. The following year he was elected county commissioner, was re-elected, and has served till the present time.

L. P. BECK, P.O., Race Track, was born in Denmark, in 1844; son of Nelson and Annie Beck, farmers. He remained in his native country until 22 years of age, when he came to the United States, and settled in New Jersey, where he remained one year, working in a brick yard. From New Jersey he moved to Nebraska, and for two years was engaged in general work. Pushing on to Montana, in 1872, he settled at Deer Lodge City, where he was engaged in the wood business until 1878, when he located upon his present ranch, near Race Track. Mr. Beck was married in New Jersey, in 1869, to Miss Maria Christian, by whom he has five children.

NELS BECK, P.O., Race Track, ranchman and stock grower, was born in Denmark, May 6, 1847, a son of Nels and Annie (Jensen) Beck. He grew to manhood on a farm, and came to the United States in 1872, finding employment at general work in Ohio for three years. In 1875 he came to Montana and bought a small tract of land near Deer Lodge City, where he raised, and supplied the people of the city with, vegetables for a period of six years. In February, 1882, he moved upon his present ranch, near the mouth of Race Track creek. Mr. Beck was married in Denmark, May 12, 1872, to Miss Mary H. Hanson, by whom he has five bright and intelligent children.

WILLIARD BENNETT, Deer Lodge City, was born in Ontario, Canada, in October, 1845. At 16 years of age he left Ontario and went to the oil regions in Pennsylvania. Here he associated with his brother, Nelson Bennett, and began taking contracts for putting down wells by the foot. After carrying this on for some years, he returned to Canada, purchased land and engaged in farming. He went to Qu'Appelle valley in the northwestern portion of Canada and purchased large tracts of land, which he has constantly improved. In this he was associated with two others. After farming for twelve years he left the land in charge of other parties and came to Deer Lodge City in April, 1883, taking charge of the Pacific Wagon and Implement Co., as general manager.

CHARLES P H. BIELENBERG, city market, Deer Lodge City, was born at Hamburg, Germany, May 1, 1847. His parents moved to the United States when he was 8 years old, settling at Davenport, Ia. Here he attended school until 14 years of age. In 1861 he enlisted in the 8th Iowa Infantry. Toward the close of the war, being taken sick at Mobile, Ala., he obtained a furlough and returned home. In the spring of 1865 he came to Fort Benton, M. T., and walked to Helena, having no money to pay expenses. He went to Virginia City and was employed in a butcher shop for three months, and in the fall of 1866 came to Deer Lodge City and opened the City Market. This business he has carried on to the present time. In 1873 he engaged in the stock business, raising horses and cattle. The firm of Bielenberg & Bro. is known all over the Territory. Their stock is of the highest grade, and always brings the best prices in Chicago, to which they ship each year several herds. Mr. Bielenberg was married in 1869 to Miss Mary Wilhelma, of Iowa, and has three children: Clara, Katie and Charles O.

N. J. BIELENBERG, Deer Lodge City, was born at Holstein, Germany, June 8, 1847. His parents emigrated to the United States, and located at Davenport, Ia. Here he partially learned the butcher's trade, then went to Chicago to finish it, remaining there four months. Coming to Montana, he located at Blackfoot City, where he engaged in the butchering business for eight years, at the same time having a shop in Helena. He sold out both places of business and came to Deer Lodge valley, buying ranches and engaging in the stock business, in 1872, which he has carried on to the present time. Mr. Bielenberg married Miss Annie Bogk, of Deer Lodge, in 1872. They have four children: Alma, Howard, Gustave and Annie. He has two city meat markets and a slaughter-house at Butte, where he also has a large wholesale trade. He owns a city market at Anaconda, and is interested with his brother John in stock business, having herds on Sun river and the Musselshell.

M. BIEN, furniture, Deer Lodge City, was born December 24, 1830, at Naumburg, Germany, where he attended school until he was 14 years of age. He then learned the trade of harness-making and upholstering at Ciegenhang, and after working three and a half years traveled as journeyman for five years through Germany. Finally emigrating to the United States, landing at New York, he worked at his trade for three years, and then left for California. Upon arrival at San Francisco, he opened a furniture store, forming a partnership with Mr. Goldberg. After carrying on business for three years he sold out and went to Virginia City, where he was foreman of a furniture factory for three years. He located next at Blackfoot and established a restaurant; this he sold in four months, then went to Washington Gulch and there kept restaurant till fall. He purchased property at Helena and opened a harness shop, but after carrying it on one winter sold out and returned to Blackfoot. Here he conducted a brewery for three years when he sold it and came to Deer Lodge City, formed a partnership with Mr. Whatly, and purchased a brewery. That institution burned down a year later, but Mr. Bien rebuilt it and continued the business another year. In 1873 he engaged in his present business as furniture dealer, and carries a large and well assorted stock. He married Miss Johanna Boehl, of Virginia City, and has five children by this union—Frank, Julius, Albert, Annie and Clara.

E. L. BONNER & CO., wholesale and retail dealers in general merchandise, Deer Lodge City; established business in 1873. The Deer Lodge City firm is composed of E. L. Bonner and James H. Robertson; John A Farnsworth, manager. This house carries a stock of an average value of $80,000. Mr. Bonner is also interested in the large wholesale and retail house of Eddy, Hammond & Co., of Missoula, which is the largest general merchandise establishment in the territory; the business was founded by E. L. Bonner, who took his former clerk, J. D. Welch, as partner, the firm being known as Bonner & Welch. Subsequent changes occurred till the firm was organized as at present, consisting of Richard A. Eddy, Andrew B. Hammond and E. L. Bonner. This house carries a stock of an average value of $300,000. E. L. Bonner & Co. opened a wholesale and retail dry goods and clothing store in Butte in 1876, under the firm name of E. L. Bonner & Co., Mr. Bonner having associated with him in this business J. H. Robertson and M. J. Connell. This house carries a stock of an average value of $200,000. They have recently built a fine brick business block, one of the most imposing in the Territory.

E. L. BONNER, merchant, Deer Lodge City, was born in New York. He lost his father in early childhood and was thrown upon his own resources. He entered the mercantile house of Lord & Taylor as store boy, and worked his way up to the highest department of the business by industry and good business habits. In 1853 he went to Walla Walla, M. T., and operated a ferry for a while. He soon started in mercantile business in a small way, by packing goods over the mountains and selling to dealers. He worked up to Missoula, M. T., and opened a general store. By energy and perseverance he accumulated wealth, and soon started another store at Deer Lodge, where he now resides. He subsequently opened another large store at Butte. In all of these he has partners (see above). Mr. Bonner is now rated among the wealthiest citizens of Montana.

COL. W. W. BOTKIN, warden of the U. S. Penitentiary for the Territory of Montana, situated at Deer Lodge City, was born at Alton, Ill., January 13, 1840. In 1841 he removed with his parents to Madison, Wis. He received his primary education in the city schools, then entered the State University, took a scientific course, and graduated in the class of 1857. He then went to Grand Rapids, Wis., where he was engaged in the banking business. On the breaking out of the late war, he entered the military service, and was commissioned 2d lieutenant of the 12th Wis. Vol. Infantry. He was regularly promoted 1st lieutenant and captain. Early in 1864 he was promoted to a 2d lieutenancy in the 42d Wisconsin, and served until the close of the war. In February, 1865, he held the same command that Grant did in 1861, and issued orders from the same books. Col. Botkin was a gallant and popular officer, and left the service at the close of the war with a record of which any officer might well be proud. After the close of the war he went to Chicago, where he was engaged in banking, and subsequently in the U. S. postal service some eleven years. In 1878 he came to Montana, and was appointed warden of the U. S. Penitentiary, May 15 of that year, resigning the position in June, 1881. He was appointed deputy U. S. marshal, and reappointed warden of the penitentiary in August, 1882. (Vide Hist. of Penitentiary.)

DARWIN BUTLER, Keene, son of Jonathan and Lormey Butler, was born in Greene Co., N. Y., December 19, 1832, and was there educated. His early pursuits were those of a farmer. In 1852 he went to the city of New York and engaged in boating on the Hudson river, which business he continued one summer. In 1853 he emigrated to California, his route being seaward, by way of the Isthmus of Panama to San Francisco. From the latter point he traveled to Sacramento City, and from there to the Manna Island mines. He was there engaged in mining and farming until 1865, when he made an overland trip to Nebraska and stayed during the winter at old Fort Kearney, on the Platte river. He worked at the Ben Halliday station, on the overland route, and afterward proceeded 25 miles down the Platte to Alda, on Wood river, between Fort Kearney and Grand Island, on the Union Pacific railroad, in the spring of 1866. There he engaged in making ties and cutting wood until spring. He finally left for California by railroad, arriving in San Francisco January 3, 1870. After remaining on the coast visiting different points until February, 1870, he started for Corinne, and from there brought a company to Deer Lodge City, where he made a contract with Col. Thornton to work on the race-track ditch. On the 4th of April he started for the ditch, 25 miles from Deer Lodge City, and took a mile thereof to complete. After he had finished his work he returned to Deer Lodge City and engaged with Henry Brundy and Klinesmith Brothers to work in a sawmill. Remaining with them until June, 1872, he came to his present ranch, which since that time has been his home. Since locating here he has been engaged in stock-raising. He was engaged in jobbing and prospecting at Butte City for some time, and while there located the Ben Butler lode in the Summit Valley district, for which he has applied for a patent. This lode contains silver and copper, and is on the same lead with the original Butte and Gannon and Anaconda, which is known as the richest lead in the Butte district. Mr. Butler owns at this point, 200 acres of land under fence, 50 head of cattle, half blood Durhams, 70 head of cattle on shares for three years, and 40 head of horses. This good range with fine meadows is on Little Blackfoot river, with the Northern Pacific railroad passing through the valley—distance from Deer Lodge 18 miles northwest, and from Helena 40 miles west.

J. H. BUXTON, P. O., Deer Lodge City, was born at Nashua, N. H., March 14, 1829. At ten years of age he went to Vermont and assisted his father in a mill. At eighteen he commenced railroading, which he followed for nine years, building bridges principally in the states of New York, New Hampshire and Vermont. He left the states to engage in building in upper Canada, and in 1860 went to Colorado and began working at his trade of millwright. In the fall of 1863 he located at Virginia City, where he worked at his trade until 1869, when he engaged in mining at Blackfoot. He associated with him a partner, and began mining in the mountains, purchasing machinery and putting it up in leads. This venture being unsuccessful he gave it up and returned to Deer Lodge City. In the fall of 1870 he was a guard in the penitentiary; this was the year that institution was built. He relinquished that position to accept another in the post-office, where he remained until the spring of 1880. Then for a time he hauled ties for the railroad company, and at present has charge of the Deer Lodge City omnibus line.

JOHN CARTEN, P. O. New Chicago, was born in Washington Co., Me., on the 19th of February, 1837, and is a son of John and Sophia Carten. In 1856 he came to Australia, where he followed mining for six years. He then sailed for San Francisco, and after visiting various parts of California, went to Arizona, returning after eight months to San Francisco. He next located for a short time at Boise City, going thence to Alder Gulch, M. T., and soon after to the Courtney mines, in the British possessions. The winter of 1864-5 he spent at the Hudson Bay trading post, in the Indian reservation, and in March, 1865, came to Helena via Blackfoot, and from Helena to Washington Gulch, the Yellowstone, Big Horn, and Elk Creek counties, prospecting during the winter of 1865-6. In the following October he bought a ranch at the mouth of Gold creek, where he remained until 1873, and then went to Salt Lake City, staying through that winter, and returning in the spring of 1874 to Montana. He became engaged in the liquor business at Pioneer, and was also interested in mines in the vicinity. In 1876 he located at Clear Creek, where he kept a public house and stage station until 1878, in which year he moved to his present ranch, where he has since been engaged in ranching, stock-raising, and keeping public house.

THOS. W. CATLIN, superintendent of public instruction for Deer Lodge Co, Deer Lodge City, is a native of Augusta, Ga., born April 20, 1831. In 1844 he removed with his parents to Jacksonville, Ill. He entered the Illinois College in 1848, studied two years, and then entered Yale College in the sophomore year, and graduated in 1854. He was engaged in the book business at Jacksonville, Ill., till 1863. From 1863 to 1866 he served as principal of the public schools of Beardstown. He was next engaged in the lumber business at Jacksonville till 1870. From 1873 to 1875 he was principal of the Second Ward schools of Springfield, Ill. He then accepted the position of principal of the schools of Havana, Ill., which he taught from September, 1876, till June, 1880. He came to Deer Lodge City, M. T., in September, 1880, to take charge of the city schools. One year later, or in June, 1881, he was appointed superintendent of public instruction for Deer Lodge Co. He was subsequently elected to the same office, and served to this writing. Mr. Catlin is a gentleman of fine culture and good natural ability. He has worked faithfully in the cause of education, and is recognized as an efficient and earnest officer. He was married at Jacksonville October 4, 1862, to Mrs. Cornelia Chapin, widow of George Chapin. Three children were born to them, two sons and a daughter. The sons died in infancy; Mrs. Catlin died September 8, 1869. Mr. Catlin was married again July 17, 1875, at Springfield, Ill., to Miss Belle Sayward, who was born in Gloucester, Mass. They have two children, both daughters.

WILLIAM B. CLINE, Deer Lodge City, was born in Williams Co., O., July 7, 1845, a son of Henry and Mary Cline. He remained in Ohio with his parents engaged in the duties attendant upon farm life until 1867, when he came to Montana, arriving in Fort Benton on the 9th day of June. For several years he followed mining, having worked and held an interest in various mines in the territory until 1871, when he gave up mining and engaged in ranching at the mouth of the Little Blackfoot. He has since continued that business and with fair success, being now located in the valley of the Hell Gate, where he is engaged in ranching and stock-raising. Mr. Cline is a gentleman of agreeable and courteous manner, and is held in high esteem by his many acquaintances throughout the territory.

DAVID COHEN, SR., merchant, Anaconda, was born in Prussia, February 16, 1837, and is a son of A. and Ida Cohen. While he remained in his native country he devoted his time to his studies (having attended Berlin College for several years) and assisting his father; then engaged in the mercantile business. He came to the United States in 1855, landing at New York city, where he remained in the capacity of clerk for a couple of years, after which he came to Montana via St. Louis and Omaha, crossing the plains in 1864. Arriving in Virginia City he at once embarked in mercantile business, which he has followed, to the present writing, in the cities of Virginia, Deer Lodge, Helena, Butte and Anaconda, and in the latter place is now busied with the various duties of his occupation. In 1867 Mr. Cohen made a visit to his native country, and there espoused Miss Rosy Lee Engle, by whom he has two children. Being a man of much experience and ability in the occupation he has chosen, his future career will doubtless be successful.

LEWIS COLEMAN, Deer Lodge City, was born May 9, 1842, at Germantown, O. In 1860 he came West and began mining at California Gulch, Colo. After remaining one summer he left on the San Juan stampede, and went to Buckskin Joe mines. In the fall of 1861 he enlisted in the 3rd Colorado Infantry, and was at once ordered to march to Fort Leavenworth. Upon arrival there he was transferred to the 2d Colorado Cavalry. After serving one year with his company he obtained a position in the quartermaster's department, where he remained until the close of the war. The winter of 1865–66 he spent in Kansas City, Mo., clerking in the Colorado House. After making a trip to Denver and Salt Lake City, he started for Virginia City and engaged in mining at Alder Gulch and Highland Gulch. In the spring of 1867 he was one of those who went to Salmon River during a mining excitement, but after remaining one season he returned to Highland Gulch, where he mined until 1869. In the fall of that year he sold out and came to Deer Lodge Here he formed a partnership with Saml. Lewis, erected a stone building and engaged in the general merchandise business, which they carried on for three years. The firm then dissolved, Mr. Coleman accepting a position with Osborn & Denny, for whom he kept books for two years. Since then he has been in the employ of Murphy, Higgins & Co. Mr. Coleman was elected treasurer of Deer Lodge City in 1878, and in 1880 was re-elected for the same office. In 1875–76–77 he acted as agent for the Diamond R. Co. He is interested in quartz mining, ranches and real estate. He married Miss Cynthia Kantner, of Highland Gulch, in September, 1871, and has three children: Wm. E., Lewis J. and James R.

WM. COLEMAN, of Wm. Coleman & Co., notions, fruits, firearms, etc, Deer Lodge City, was born at Germantown, O. Here he attended school until March, 1864. He enlisted in the 131st Ohio infantry; being wounded was sent home, and after recovering learned the trade of a blacksmith. April 1, 1866, he went to Kansas City and opened Spaulding's commercial college, which he carried on a short time. May 2, 1866, with his brother and J. T. Clark, he purchased a mule train, and started for Colorado. Going from there to Salt Lake, Utah, they disposed of their stock, and in July, 1866, arrived at Alder Gulch, where Mr. Coleman prospected, and also had a contract for a water ditch. He left on a stampede to Highland gulch, where he mined until June, 1869. He went to the headwaters of the Wise river, prospecting; then to French gulch, prospecting between that point and Deer Lodge. Returned to Highland gulch July 20, then left on the Loon creek stampede, and went from there to Yellow Jacket, Three Forks of Salmon river. Here they had great difficulty settling claims, but finally decided to draw lots. Finding nothing there they turned back, and while endeavoring to take a cut-off, lost their way, and nearly starved to death. After returning they began prospecting between Fort Hall and Horse prairie; then left for Bannack, and bought twelve claims. Mr. Coleman was the first man to work the main channel of Grasshopper creek. He also invented a suction pump, which was the first one used there. He remained there until July, 1871, and was very successful. Being wounded in the mines, he sold out and came to Deer Lodge. Here he took charge of a store, and was agent for John McCormick's opposition stage lines, running between Deer Lodge City and Helena. In October he bought goods and opened a store, keeping notions, fruits, papers, etc. In February, 1872, the entire block, including his store, burned down, but he started again in the same line, purchasing stock from Stackpole & Fuller, and placing a man in charge. This was known as the post-office store. Mr. Coleman acted as deputy postmaster. This business was carried on until November 15. He then established his present store, where he now carries notions, guns, fruits, etc. In 1873 he opened a branch store in Pioneer City, which was carried on till September, 1874. In 1875 he started a branch house at Phillipsburg. August 1, 1880, he closed the house, and afterward formed a partnership with Sam'l Lewis, and opened a branch in Butte, April 1, 1877, Mr. Lewis being in charge. Business at both places was conducted under the firm name of Wm. Coleman & Co. Mr. Coleman is also interested in mines in Silver Bow and Deer Lodge counties, and owns shares in Silversmith and Goldsmith No. 2 mines at Butte. He married Miss Lucy Hammond, of Deer Lodge, August 2, 1875. They have two children, Alice and Joseph.

R. L. DAVIS, Deer Lodge City, clerk of the district court for the second judicial district, composed of Deer Lodge, Silver Bow, Beaverhead, and Missoula counties, was born in New Jersey, December 13, 1838, and moved to Illinois in 1850. In 1880 he came to Deer Lodge City, M. T., and was appointed to the clerkship of the district court in December, 1882. He was a candidate for the office of clerk and recorder of the county, on the republican ticket, at the fall election of 1882, and was defeated by only a small majority.

CHAS. DUBEY, proprietor of the Anaconda House, Anaconda, born at St. Johns, Canada East, November 16, 1849, is a son of Charles and Ada (Boldue) Dubey. At 17 years of age he came direct to Montana via the Missouri river. The boat on which he came was attacked several times by Indians, and two men killed by them on the trip. Arriving at Fort Benton, he remained there but a short time, removing to Helena, where he succeeded in buying two yoke of cattle, a wagon, and a shingle mill, on time, with which he began business in the Prickly Pear valley, and continued until 1869, when he sold out and fitted up a freighting outfit. This he also sold in the fall of 1869, and engaged in mining at Cedar Creek, in Missoula county, following that business until 1881. Two years of the time were spent at Phillipsburg, Deer Lodge county, where he learned to run mills and amalgamate. In 1873 he went to Pioneer, where he spent several months, and thence to Rochester, Madison county, where he remained until 1876. He located in that year at Bannack, and in 1878, at Pony, Madison county, which was a new camp. After spending the summer there he went to Silver Star, and remained till 1880, when he went to Camp Creek. In 1883 he removed to Butte City, and engaged in wood business, but soon left there for the new town of Anaconda, where he at once engaged in the hotel business. Mr. Dubey was married at Anaconda on the 23d day of August, 1883, to Miss Paulina Kraugh, theirs being the first marriage consummated in the village.

D. M. DUNKELBERG, New Chicago, Hell Gate valley, was born February 4, 1839, in Northumberland Co., Pa., and was the son of Joseph and Mary Dunkelberg. He resided in Pennsylvania until he was 19 years old, then moved to Kansas and remained until 1860. Going thence to Colorado, he only remained two years, and in 1862 came to Montana. There were six persons in his company, viz.: Reuben Allhouse, Clinton Miller, James McRay, Theodore Harris, Joseph Smith, and himself. Together they had loaded heavily with provisions at Salt Lake, and started for the Salmon river mines, in Idaho. In 1858 the Mormons had established a settlement at the head of Lemhi valley, but had been driven out by the Indians. Mr. Dunkelberg and party had been informed at Salt Lake, that at this old settlement they would find the Idaho mines. When they reached the Lemhi valley they followed the old trail made by the Mormons, and upon reaching the old settlement, found the mines were still 200 miles farther on, with no road and an almost impassable trail. The Dunkelberg party camped at the fort for some time. Other parties came along; some abandoned their wagons and pushed along. Two men from the train were detailed to go ahead and return and report. They went as far as Big Hole basin, where they met a party of prospectors that had found surface mines. The men returned and reported, when the party started for the new camp, taking their wagons over a divide between Lemhi and Horse Prairie, a feat never accomplished before or since. After getting over, all went to work, and mined here until September, when two men came to their camp from Bannack, the first intimation they had of any persons aside from their party being in the Territory. These men had some gold nuggets with them, and said they got them on the bank of a creek. Messrs. Dunkelberg and Miller started on foot to accompany these men to the spot where the nuggets had been found. On arrival they found a large number of people, but nothing had been done in the way of mining. The prospects were favorable, and word was sent to the Big Hole for all hands to come on. Mr. Dunkelberg had a whip-saw with him, and with this primitive mill began the manufacture of lumber, which found ready sale at 25c. per foot. Acting under advice of friends, Mr. Dunkelberg purchased a claim, and it proved a poor investment, leaving him not only without a dollar, but badly in debt. He went to Alder Gulch in the fall of 1863, and worked during the winter. In the spring he went to British Columbia; in the fall of 1864 he returned to Virginia City, and in coming up the Deer Lodge river, was so favorably impressed with the country that he abandoned mining and located his present ranch. He has 320 acres under U. S. patent, and has entered a large amount of railroad land. He farms 250 acres; one half is summer fallowed each year. For several years he has almost entirely abandoned irrigating. He raises an average of 50 bushels of barley to the acre. On 40 acres of oats in one field he threshed 2800 bushels on summer fallow, and had not irrigated. He has 200 head of cattle and 60 horses, and cuts about 70 tons of hay, realizing $12 to $15 per ton, on the ranch. Mr. Dunkelberg is well located, and so situated as to enjoy life comfortably.

JOHN EDWARD, P. O. New Chicago, was born in South Wales October 4, 1832. In 1836 he emigrated to America with his mother and located in Ohio. In 1851 he returned to England and finished his education. He was there employed as time-keeper on the S. W. R. R. In 1856 he emigrated to California and followed mining in Sierra Co. In 1865 he came to Montana and located a farm in Hell Gate valley, upon which he still lives. Mr. Edward, who is a farmer and stock-raiser, owns 320 acres of good farming land.

ERIC ELIASSON, P. O. Race Track, was born in Sweden, May 2, 1817, and is a son of Elias and Christina Eliasson. He was raised on a farm and learned and worked at the blacksmithing trade in his native country until 1860, when he came to the United States and settled in Utah, having paid the passage of three companions who came with him. He remained in Utah engaged in blacksmithing and ranching until 1862, when he went to Soda Springs, Idaho, and there entered into the business of stock-raising and dairying, and thus continued until 1877, when he came into Montana and settled on his present ranch in Deer Lodge valley, where he still resides and is engaged in ranching and stock-raising.

JUDGE ORREN EMERSON, Deer Lodge City, of the Probate court of Deer Lodge Co., M. T., since 1877, was born in Kennebec Co., Me., in 1831. When twenty years of age he removed to the state of New York, and from there to California in 1854. He engaged in mining and remained in California till 1862. He then removed to Boise City, Idaho, and three years later to Deer Lodge. He continued his favorite pursuit of mining till 1872, when by an accident he lost his left arm. In 1877 he was elected judge of the Probate court of Deer Lodge Co. He has been twice re elected, and is now serving his third term. He was admitted to the bar in 1883.

J. W. ESTILL, livery, Deer Lodge City, was born in Montgomery Co., Mo., May 27, 1840. He worked on a farm and attended school in the winter until 19 years of age, when he journeyed to California and engaged in the sheep business for six months. He afterward went to Nevada and mined at Aurora and Esmeralda until 1864, in which year he returned to California, and there spent the following winter. He came to Montana in the spring, and after prospecting for five months passed three months in mining at Deep Gulch. He began prospecting at Big Hole; came to Phillipsburg in July, 1866, and located the Salmon, Estill, Willard and San Francisco mines. Here he remained mining until 1873, when he came to Deer Lodge and purchased a ranch. In 1879 he bought the Strickland livery stable, where he is doing business at the present time, always keeping the best of stock and being ever ready to carry parties to all parts of the territory. Mr. Estill was married in 1874 to Miss Seasongood, of Kentucky, and has five children—Nora E., Delia B., James E., Edward W. and Alice.

MORGAN EVANS, Mill Creek, Deer Lodge Valley, the subject of our present writing, holds a title to 800 acres of land on Mill Creek, and has erected the most commodious and elegant dwelling house in Deer Dodge valley. This house stands on a smooth green flat of ground that extends for miles north and east, while close by, on the south, high mountains rise for a back-ground. To the west the mountains rise to a great height, and their summits show clear and bright against the sky, thousands of feet above the valley. To the eastward the peaks of the Highland mountains tower far above the Rockies themselves, and to the northeast the main chain of the Rockies forms a wall grand and imposing. All combine to make Mr. Evans' home one of beauty, grandeur and comfort. He is a native of Wales, born June 30, 1833, in Glamorganshire. He emigrated to America in 1856, going direct to Utah, where he resided until 1864, when he came to Virginia City, Montana, and engaged in freighting between that place and Utah. In 1865 he moved to Deer Lodge valley, and in 1867 purchased a portion of his present ranch, and made a homestead and pre-emption claim. He has purchased land at different times, until he now owns 800 acres all in one body; and he has 1,000 acres under fence on Race Track creek, of which 450 acres are desert land, and the balance R. R. land on which he has filed. On Race Track ranch he cultivates about 320 acres, on which he raises wheat, oats and barley. Oats average about 35 bushels per acre, wheat 25 bushels and barley 28 bushels. This is grown on bench land. On the Mill Creek ranch he cuts about 400 tons of hay, and has large pasture range. He has a saw mill that cuts about 3,000 feet per day, and near to his residence he has a small grist mill, the first one built in the county, erected in 1872, capacity 120 bushels per day, making 40 sacks of flour of 100 pounds each. In 1882 he sold his cattle herd, keeping about 100 head of improved stock. He has 100 head of horses, Morgan and Mambrino stallions; brood mares are half Morgan and half native. These mares crossed with Mambrino produce first-class horses for general use. He has about 2,000 sheep fed on the Race Track ranch, the feed being scattered on his summer fallow, which is one-half of his land, each year. He cultivates on his home ranch about 600 acres—or 300 acres each year. He finds his crops increase in average and his expenses decrease by this system of cultivation. Mr. Morgan Evans married in 1854 Miss Ann, daughter of Morgan and Sarah Ann Evans. They have ten children all living. While raising their family it was seldom necessary to call in a physician, and their total doctor bills will not exceed $100, a truly remarkable fact. The following is their family record: Gwenllian, born August 21, 1855; now Mrs. David Evans, resides in Beaver Head Co., has three children. Sarah Ann, born February 19, 1858; married John Nelson and lives on Lost creek and has one child. Margaret Evans, born February 17, 1860; unmarried. Ann Harriett, born May 5, 1862; married Benjamin Phillipps, has one child and resides in Judith Basin. Rachael, born October 12, 1864. Mary, born May 11, 1867. William Morgan, born April 30, 1869. Catharine, born May 19, 1871. David M., born November 6, 1874. John M., born December 3, 1875. Morgan Evans, although one of the pioneers of the Territory, never had any trouble with the Indians, except in 1877, during the Nez Perces war, when he was chosen captain of a company organized for the protection of the settlers against the Indians.

JAKE FIFER, Deer Lodge valley. This gentleman is a Virginian by birth. He was born October 28, 1812, in Augusta Co., and resided for 25 years in Stanton, ten miles from the county seat. He moved to Ohio, and after a short residence in that state, came to Missouri, engaging in farming in Scotland county. In 1850 he went to California, leaving his family in Missouri, and returned to them in 1853. In 1859 he was again seized with a desire to go West and started for Pike's Peak, but went on to California and remained until 1862, when he returned to his family in Missouri, and in 1865 started back to California, taking his family with him. After a few days' travel he decided to go to Deer Lodge valley, Montana. He arrived in the valley and drove down the river until he came to a place that was suited to his taste, and settled on his present ranch of 320 acres of fine land. He now has a good frame house, good outbuildings and six miles of fence. He has 200 acres of school-land fenced; has about 4 acres of timothy and about 30 acres of natural meadow, and cultivates about 130 acres. His principal crop is oats, and the average yield is about 35 bushels per acre. In 1882 he planted 100 acres in potatoes, and his yield was 3,800 bushels. He has raised 300 bushels of potatoes on half an acre. (The general average is 150 to 200 bushels per acre.) February 8, 1838, Mr. Fifer married Miss Zelda Jane Saphrona Philomela Meride Morton Anderson Smith, daughter of Lewis and Hannah Smith. The young lady was not as formidable as her name would indicate, and there seemed to be no reason why Fifer should not be added. To Mr. and Mrs. Fifer have been born twelve children, six of whom are living. The following is a partial record of the family: John Lewis Turner Jackson, born August 8, 1839; William M., born January 23, 1842; Merideth S., born January 12, 1844; Henrietta H., born January 26, 1846; Alvira Virginia, born June 22, 1848; Lavinia Jane, born May 26, 1859; Benjamin F., born December 14, 1860, and died November 30, 1875. All the other deaths occurred in infancy. Mr. Fifer's life has been one of toil and sometimes hardship, but he is now prepared to enjoy all the comforts of a good home.

JUDGE WILLIAM J. GALBRAITH, Deer Lodge City, of the second judicial district of Montana Territory, including the counties of Beaverhead, Silver Bow, Deer Lodge, and Missoula, was appointed judge of this district June 23, 1879, and reappointed June 29, 1883. The subject of this sketch was born in Freeport, Pa., February 18, 1837. He was educated at Dartmouth College, New Hampshire, and graduated in 1857. He studied law at Pittsburgh, Pa., and was admitted to the bar in 1861. He enlisted at the breaking out of the late war as a private of the 12th regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, in the three months' service. September 12, 1861, he was commissioned First Lieutenant of Company G, 78th Pa. Vols. In November of that year he was transferred to the U. S. Signal Corps, and served in that department till November, 1864. He was captured at Chattanooga and held a prisoner at Macon, Madison, Libby, Richmond, and other prisons, till exchanged. In 1865 he opened a law office at Oil City, Pa., and continued to practice at that place till 1872. He then removed to Nebraska, and pursued his practice in that state till 1874, when he went to Cherokee Co., Ia., where he was in practice till he was appointed to the judgeship of this district in June, 1879.

FREDERICK GARSEY, Pioneer, was born in 1826 in Westphalia, Prussia. He is the son of Henry and Sophia Garsey who emigrated to the United States in 1833, settling at Wheeling, Va., where they resided for six years, and removed to Des Moines Co., Ia. Frederick remained under the paternal roof until about 20 years of age, when he went to Burlington, Ia.; to learn the trade of wagon making. In 1850 he moved to California, and settled in Eldorado county, near Georgetown, engaging in mining in Placer county, also in the Southern mines, until 1864, when he went to Boise Basin, Idaho, and remained one year. In the spring of 1868 he moved to Montana, and located in Pioneer camp when it was entering its first stage of prosperity. Here he has remained to see its halcyon days gradually become a thing of the past. Mr. Garsey has been here in the employ of the Pioneer Mining Co. continuously, with the exception of one trip made to the British Possessions, starting in July, 1871, and returning the following spring.

E. GIRARD, P. O. Warm Springs, was born December 9, 1837, at Iberville, Quebec. He came to Deer Lodge in the spring of 1865, and has been twenty-seven years west of the Rocky Mountains. At the present writing (1884) his principal business is merchandising and stock raising, and he is also making preparation to open a hotel, having the building already erected. Mr. Girard, mother and sister, have 1000 acres of pasture and meadow land in one body, and all under good fence, and can cut about 200 tons of number one hay per annum. He has about 100 head of stock, which are allowed to increase, and he purchases from time to time, as opportunity affords. He was in the mercantile business with Belanger & Allen, at Silver Bow for five years, and has had the management of the post-office since 1866, first at Silver Bow and for the past twelve years at Warm Springs. This office is the separating office for the cable route. Together with his brother-in-law (Louis Belanger) and his sister, he formerly owned the Warm Springs property jointly. The Springs were first located by Louis Belanger in 1865, but he afterward abandoned them, and Henry Girard, a brother of E. Girard, re located them and made final proof under the pre-emption laws. Afterward E. Girard purchased the entire property, and Belanger returned, and in company with E. Girard erected a hotel and bath house. Belanger and family occupied the property for five years, when he again abandoned it after having expended about $16,000 in the improvements. The property becoming troublesome to E. Girard, because of having other business to attend to, he sold it to Messrs. Mitchell & Mussigbrod, the present owners, and it is now used for an insane asylum. Land in this vicinity under fence sells from $10 to $20 per acre, and land especially good for hay is held at $10 to $50 per acre. Pasture land sells at $2.60 to $5 per acre. E. Girard is unmarried.

J. L. GOODWIN, P. O. Warm Springs, Deer Lodge Co., M. T., came to Montana in 1864, first settling on the Ruby river. In 1865 he went to Deer Lodge valley, where he engaged in stock raising and the dairy business. In June, 1877, Mr. Goodwin located his present ranch of 480 acres in Deer Lodge valley, and is now busily engaged in stock raising and farming. He was born and educated in Morgan Co., Mo., and remained there until he came to Montana. He was married in 1859 to Miss Slocum, of Virginia. They have no children.

ELI GREGSON AND GEORGE GREGSON, P. O. Stuart, proprietors Upper Deer Lodge Hot Springs. These springs are situated in a picturesque location near the base of the mountains in the upper Deer Lodge valley, about 15 miles from Butte City and two miles from Smarts station on the Utah Northern railroad. The water issues in large quantities from a score of springs, covering a radius of about 100 feet. Some of these springs are so hot they will boil an egg hard in a few moments, while some are highly charged with iron, soda and sulphur, and have valuable medicinal qualities, proving very efficacious in rheumatic complaints and scrofula, and other skin diseases. The value of the water is very great and the capacity for bathing is inexhaustible. To the south about a quarter of a mile the mountains rise abruptly, and the deep cañons are filled with fine forests of spruce and pine, interspersed with various crystal streams which abound with beautiful speckled trout, and other members of the finny tribe. Higher up in the mountains deer, elk and sheep are found by the sportsman. Everything combines to make these springs the most delightful summer resort for health-seekers as well as pleasure-seekers. No other health resort in Montana can offer equal attractions. There is an absence of marshy ground surrounding the springs as they flow suddenly from the rock, and this helps to make them entirely unexceptionable for health and comfort. Added to all this is the magnificent view of the Deer Lodge valley, which extends, level and unbroken, for 30 miles, with the main range of the rockies in full view on the east and northeast for miles. To the eastward about 18 miles is what is known as the divide, or the pass over the main range, over which the Utah Northern railroad runs, and from here, sweeping around in a semi-circle to the south and west, the main range rears its lofty peaks thousands of feet above and enclosing the Upper Deer Lodge valley with an impassable wall over which the waters of ages have flowed uninterrupted. On an air line, Butte, the greatest of modern mining cities, is situated, to which an excellent roadway via Silver Bow leads from the springs, scarcely two hours' drive. The Upper Hot Springs are destined in the near future to become the resort for the wealth of Butte city, as well as for thousands of toiling miners—a place of rest and recreation. For tourists and families no place in the West offers so many attractions. The mountain forests, streams and cañons, with their cool waters and invigorating breezes, afford health and pleasure to the invalid and weary, while the higher hills and streams furnish game for the sportsman, and near by pleasure-seekers find such attractions as the Big Hole Battle Ground and mining gulches, etc. Eli Gregson and George W. Gregson came to Montana in 1864 and mined in Alder gulch until May, 1865, when they went to Nelson gulch, near Helena, and engaged in mining for one year, when they left the mines and went to Gallatin valley and engaged in farming, settling on the east Gallatin about 12 miles below Bozeman. The brothers ranched here three years, when they sold out and moved to their present location. They own 320 acres of land next to the springs and 160 acres on the opposite side of the Deer Lodge river, where they raise grain and hay. They cut about 30 tons of hay per annum, and raise about 2,000 bushels of grain. Eli Gregson was born November 22, 1836, near Gosport, Owen Co., Ind., and is a son of Eli and Margaret Gregson. He moved with his parents to Poweshiek Co., Ia., and resided there until 1864, when he came to Montana. He is unmarried. George W. Gregson was born August 22, 1841, near Stilesville, Ind., and resided with his parents until 1863. He was married December 25, 1863, to Miss Tabiatha, daughter of Thomas Ashing. Mrs. Gregson died June 25, 1877, leaving one child, Ida F., born August 10, 1864. The latter married George Adams, and resides in Upper Deer Lodge valley. George Gregson, with his brother, moved to Montana in 1864. He married his present wife January 1, 1882. She was formerly Miss Sarah Jane Evans, daughter of William and Ann Evans. They have one child, Adel, born October 19, 1882. The brothers, Eli and George Gregson, have been associated together in all business interests since boyhood, and still reside together. For the past 16 years they have been engaged in farming and stock-raising. They are now making extensive improvements at the springs, to be better able to accommodate their patrons.

PATRICK GRIFFIN, rancher and stock-grower, P. O. Pioneer, was born in Ireland, son of Michael and Ellen Griffin. At the age of 18 he came to the United States with his parents, who settled in New York city, he remaining there and in the neighboring towns until 1852, when he went to California and engaged in mining and general work for a number of years. He has also followed mining, etc., in Oregon, Nevada and Utah, and visited Montana first about the year 1867, but remained only a short time. His life generally having been spent in traveling until the year 1880, he at that time returned to the Territory upon the death of his brother, and has since remained near the mining camp of Pioneer, where he is living a life of quiet on the ranch formerly occupied by his brother, and is engaged in the business of ranching and stock-raising.

EIKO J. GROENEVELD, pastor of the Deer Lodge City Presbyterian Church.—The subject of this sketch was born in Bunderhee, Prussia, April 22, 1857. He attended the public schools of his native country till 13 years of age, and in May, 1870, he, in company with his parents, emigrated to America, and made his home in Ackerly, Ia. He was a student of the Dubuque High School two years, and next took a regular course at Lenox College, Hopkinton, Ia., and graduated in the class of 1879. He attended the Theological Presbyterian College of the North-west. In the fall of 1881 he went to Princeton, N. J., and took a post-graduate philosophical course at Princeton College. He graduated at the Theological Seminary in the class of 1882, then came west, and was ordained at Lake Forest, North Chicago, Ill., May 15, 1882. He came to Deer Lodge City, M. T., soon after his ordination, and accepted his present charge August 5, 1882. Mr. Groeneveld is qualified to preach in three different languages—English, Dutch and German. He is one of the three trustees of the Montana Collegiate Institute, and is one of its professors.

L. C. HANSEN, rancher and stock-grower, Deer Lodge City, was born in Denmark on the 22d day of May, 1832, and grew up on a farm. In 1856 he came to the United States, and, settling in Utah, engaged in farming for five years; thence removing to Soda Springs, Ida., he remained one year, and from there went to Alder Gulch, M. T., where he followed mining one year, after which he came into the Deer Lodge Valley in 1864 and took up a ranch. He has been engaged in farming occupations and the raising of horses and cattle until the present time. Mr. Hansen was married in Utah on the 13th day of January, 1861, to Miss Mary Jensen, who has borne him five children.

NIELS HANSEN, Deer Lodge City, was born in Denmark, June 16, 1851, and came to the United States with his parents at the age of eight years, the family settling in Utah. After remaining about one and one-half years they removed to Soda Springs, Idaho, and one year later to Alder Gulch, M. T., and from there to Jefferson Island. At the latter point Mr. Hansen was engaged in stock raising. Leaving there he went to Butte, where he followed mining several years, and in 1877 took up his present ranch in the Deer Lodge Valley, where he is very comfortably situated. Mr. Hansen was married on Willow Creek, Madison Co., on the 31st day of March, 1873, to Miss Mary Anderson, by whom he has three children.

C. K. HARDENBROOK, P. O. Deer Lodge City, was born in Knox Co., Ohio, on the 7th day of November, 1848. His parents removed to Monmouth, Ill., a few years later. He remained at Monmouth until he was twenty-one years old. Going to Montana he arrived at Deer Lodge in 1870, and in the summer of that year he went on the Cedar Creek stampede, subsequently making a trip to Oregon, and from there to Utah. In a short time he returned to Deer Lodge county and began mining. Two years later he went to Eureka, Nevada, and wintered there, but in the spring of 1872 returned to Deer Lodge county and mined until 1876. The Black Hills fever next attacked him, and after mining there six months he made a visit to the States. A few months later he returned again to Deer Lodge City, and was appointed principal of the public schools. A year later he was elected superintendent of County Instruction, and after serving a term went to Butte and engaged in a general trading business for a year and a half. He sold his interest and returned to Deer Lodge, purchased a ranch and engaged in agriculture, devoting his attention especially to grain raising. In 1878 he raised 15,000 bushels of oats and barley, the largest crop raised in the Rocky Mountains. He carries on an extensive trade with Butte in produce. In 1878 he married Miss Jennie Brier, of Iowa, who was at one time a teacher in the public schools at Corinne, Utah. Two children, Herbert and Abbie Myrtle, have been born to them.

PETER HAUCK, P. O. Deer Lodge, was born in Bavaria, Germany, January 31, 1842. He remained in his native country, engaged in coopering and brewing, until 25 years of age, when he emigrated to the United States, first settling at San Francisco, Cal., where he followed coopering four years. He then came to Montana and, first stopping at Deer Lodge City, engaged in the brewing business about three months, after which he went to Pioneer and opened a brewery for himself, and also became interested in placer mines at that place. He continued in business at Pioneer about four years, and in 1878 took up the ranch on which he is now nicely located, enjoying the fruits of success. Mr. Hauck was married in San Francisco to Miss Barbara Ackerman, by whom he has one child, now married. During the days of staging and freighting with teams, Mr. Hauck kept a stage station and public house, which he has now given up owing to the N. P. R. R. passing through the valley, thus doing away with the old-time way of traveling and freighting in this vicinity.

J. H. HELMS, Helmville, was born in the city of Bremen, Germany, in 1832, and came to America in 1848, landing at New Orleans. Going thence to Louisville, Ky., he was employed in a hotel until 1852, when he went to California and engaged in mining. That occupation he continued only until his means were exhausted, when he went to San Francisco and commenced hotel keeping, which business he made profitable. Continuing principally in this business until 1864, he came to Montana and soon after settled on his present ranch. He has a large number of horses, cattle and graded stock. He has at this place 988 acres of land, with 400 acres fenced, and is constantly making improvements on his place. Mr. Helms is one of the board of county commissioners of Deer Lodge.

JOHN T. HEMSTED, rancher and stock grower, P. O. Deer Lodge City, was born in St. Charles Co., Mo., March 18, 1847, and is a son of Francis and Elizabeth Hemsted. His earlier life was spent upon a farm with his parents, and in 1861 he went to Denver, Col., in the government employ, but soon returned to Fort Leavenworth, Kan., continuing in the employ of the government until 1863. In that year he engaged in freighting to Fort Union, New Mexico, but soon again hired as teamster with the government, remaining in that employ until 1865. In 1866 he freighted across the plains to Montana for H. Kirkendall, and, arriving at the Homestake mines, first engaged in mining. From there he went to Dry Gulch, and after spending a year in mining engaged in freighting during the two succeeding years for John Murphy, after which he spent two years with the surveying party of Walter W. Johnson, and subsequently for four years had charge of the Rock creek reservoir. In the fall of 1875 he bought a band of sheep, and also engaged in ranching and stock-raising. In 1888 he sold his sheep, but is still engaged in ranching and the breeding of horses and cattle, being finely located at the mouth of the Race Track creek in Deer Lodge county. Mr. Hemsted was married near Deer Lodge City on the 26th day of March, 1879, to Miss Mary O. Peterson, by whom he has two children. Being a gentleman of agreeable and genial disposition, he has many friends who rejoice at his success in life.

DR. W. W. HIGGINS, Deer Lodge City, commenced business in Deer Lodge in 1864, and in May, 1865, opened the first business house in Blackfoot, keeping a general supply store. In 1870 he returned to Deer Lodge City, and has been here in business since that time. The doctor is a graduate of Transylvania University in Kentucky, receiving his diploma in 1832, but has never been engaged in the practice of medicine because of his preference for mercantile or other pursuits. For the past eleven years Dr. Higgins has been associated with John T. Murphy and Samuel Neel, of Helena, under the firm name of Murphy, Higgins & Co. in Deer Lodge City, Murphy, Neel & Co. in Helena, and Murphy, Neel & Co. in Fort Benton,—in reality the senior partner in these business relations. This firm, in addition to their business of retail and general wholesale merchants, own and run an extensive transportation business, employing a large number of horses and mules. They do their own freighting, besides carrying on a large contract business in hauling ores, etc. When a young man, Dr. Higgins adopted for his motto the noble principles of honesty, industry and economy, and has been amply rewarded.

BENTON HOOVER, New Chicago, was born in Miami Co., Ind., April 24, 1840; he received his education in Iowa, and at the age of nineteen years emigrated to Nevada. During the time he remained in that territory he owned 300 feet of what has since become famous as the "Comstock lode," and sold it for $1,000. It afterward sold for $600 per foot. After a residence of seven years in Nevada Mr. Hoover sought better fortune among the mines of Montana, and prospered upon locating in Grizzly Gulch; he afterward became a citizen of Pioneer, where he remained two years, and made $3,000; he then located in the lower Deer Lodge valley. He is at present the owner of 680 acres of fine land; his occupation is that of farmer and stock-raiser.

PHILITUS HOYT, P. O. Race Track, was born October 18, 1826, in Onondaga, N. Y., and resided in that county until the fall of 1856, engaged in mercantile business. He moved to Illinois, remained one year, and then to Plattville, Grant Co., Wis., where he resided ten years, and was engaged in the same business, also keeping a public house. He was assessor three years. In 1866 he crossed the plains to the storied land—Montana, and settled in Helena, where he formed a partnership with his brother, E. M. Hoyt, who was a merchant in that city. For several years he was interested in a number of mines in the Red Mountain district. Some of them gave good promise, and in 1874 Messrs. Hoyt, with others, erected a mill on Ten Mile creek, known as a Chillie Crusher, of about three tons crushing capacity. The ore worked assayed an average of about $100 per ton, but being base, could not be saved by the process employed. Messrs. Hoyt continued to develop the mines and mill processes until they became financially embarrassed. Not being able to put up the necessary works to work the ore, they made an assignment of everything to their creditors. Philitus Hoyt then came to Deer Lodge City and clerked for Weimar & Co. for three years, then moved to Race Track creek and kept the Race Track Hotel for two years. He has now settled down at the Junction in a hotel and store of his own. He is an example of what industry and energy will accomplish.

R. G. HUMBER, P.O. Deer Lodge City, treasurer of Deer Lodge county, was born in Lincoln Co., Ky., March 25, 1841. He removed to Platte Co., Mo., with his parents, in childhood. In 1855 the family moved to Leavenworth Co., Kan. On the breaking out of the war he was visiting in his native place in Kentucky; being only 20 years of age, and his sympathies being already enlisted on the side of his old neighbors, he entered the Confederate army as a private, and served throughout the war. Soon after the close of the struggle he came to Deer Lodge, M. T., and engaged in the live stock business. In November, 1881, he was elected to the Twelfth Legislative Assembly, as a Democrat. In 1883 he was elected treasurer of Deer Lodge county, and entered upon the duties of the office March 1.

JOSEPH HUNGENBERG, barber, Anaconda, was born in Germany, April 30, 1850, and was reared on a farm; he served three and a half years in the army of his native country. In 1876 he came to the United States and first settled at Rock Springs, Wyoming, where he remained one year employed in the coal mines at that place. In 1878 he came to Montana and engaged in mining at Phillipsburg until 1880, when he opened a barber shop and continued in that business until 1882, then opened a shop at New Chicago. About one year afterward he came to the village of Anaconda and opened his present barber shop and bath house on Front street, where he is now nicely situated and doing a prosperous business.

HENRY IMKAMP, Phillipsburg, was born in Prussia, June 19, 1838. He received his education in the high schools of Bielefeld, and at 18 began clerking in a grocery store, at which occupation he was employed until 21 years old. He then came to America, locating in New York city, where he clerked in a grocery. He removed to St. Louis, thence to New Orleans, thence to Havana and San Francisco, Cal., and after remaining two years in the latter place engaged in mining in British Columbia. He was subsequently located in San Francisco, Virginia City, Nev., again in San Francisco, and Elk City, Idaho, where he located as a merchant. He removed to Boise Basin and engaged in the same business. In 1863 he brought a stock of goods to Virginia City, M. T., and sold it. Returning in 1864 to Boise Basin, he was there engaged for two years in mercantile pursuits, brewing, and operating a bakery. In 1866 he sold out his entire stock and returned to San Francisco, proceeding thence to New York and from there to St. Louis. In 1867 he returned to Montana, bringing with him a stock of goods which he disposed of in Helena, and in the fall moved to Phillipsburg, where he now resides, keeping a house on the corner of Stockton and Broadway. In 1878 he married Miss Caroline Doerge, daughter of Julius F. Doerge, a dry goods merchant, of St. Louis, Mo. They have one child, Lillie, born April 15, 1879.

ED. H. IRVIN, Deer Lodge City, was born in Madison Co., Ky., October 3, 1837. In 1849 his parents removed to Buchanan Co., Mo. Here he engaged in farming until 1854, and then went to Bethuel College to complete his education. After attending for three years he graduated in 1857, and returned to Missouri and engaged in farming until 1864. In the latter year he removed to Montana, where he engaged in mining, at Alder Gulch, in the summer of 1865. He came to Deer Lodge Valley and located a ranch (where the race track is now situated) and engaged in the stock business, raising horses and cattle. In 1866 he sold his cattle interests, and in 1868 projected with other parties what is known as the Rock Creek ditch, conveying water to what are known as the Pike's Peak and Gold Creek mines. Since then he has been superintendent of the mines. These are considered the richest and most productive mines in the Territory. He married Miss Annie E. Forbis, of Platt Co., Mo., in June, 1859, and has six children: Forbis, Ella, Aggie, May, Shelby, Eddy. Mr. Irvin, besides mining, is interested in several sheep ranches in the valley, also in real estate in this town and Butte. His present brick residence he built in July, 1882.

Col. William L. Irvine, deceased, was born in Madison Co., Ky., December 4, 1812. He had the advantages of a liberal common school education. On reaching his majority he engaged in farming and stock trading. In 1836 he was married to Miss Fannie I. Hart, by whom he had five children. In 1837 he joined the Christian church, to which he remained faithful and devoted until death. In 1849 he sold his farm in Kentucky and removed to Missouri, where he settled 15 miles south of St. Joseph. Here his intellectual endowments and high personal character brought him into prominence, and he took a leading part in the politics and material enterprises of the state, being one of the leading spirits in many of the internal improvements of northwest Missouri. Losing his first wife, he married, in 1860, her sister, Mrs. Lydia E. Williams, who survives him. Although opposing secession, the act accomplished, his sympathies were strongly with the south, and much of the fine estate he had accumulated, one of the best and most valuable in that section, was confiscated or swept away in the fierce ravages of the border. In 1865 he removed to Deer Lodge valley and remained until his death, which occurred in 1883. Those who knew Col. Irvine best respected and esteemed him most. Highly intelligent, with large experience in public affairs, self-reliant and studying earnestly all questions of public import, he was one of the few who arrive intelligently at well considered conclusions, and whether popular or not, avowed them. His opinions were convictions, and they were resolutely adhered to. His character as a Christian gentleman was absolutely above all reproach, and commanded the respect of all. He was a type and exemplar of the old school gentleman, hospitable, proud of his family, that grew up in honor about him, and in his later years renewed his life and love in intimate relations with them and their children.

William M. James, Willow Glen, was born in Monmouthshire, Wales, September 24, 1817, and is a miner. He emigrated to America in 1855, and settled in Utah with his chosen people, residing there eight years. In 1863 he went to Nevada, and was engaged in mining two and a half years, then came to Montana, and located 160 acres of land. He now farms 25 acres, mows about 60 acres, the balance being used as pasture. He cuts about 50 tons of native grasses. The marriage of Mr. James' daughter was the first on Warm Springs creek, and her son, Thomas Glover, was the first white child born on the creek. The first church service was that of the denomination of the Saints of the Most High, organized by Mr. James and held in the house of Darius James. Mr. James was married in 1841, and has two children, both living: William R., now 37 years old and at home with his parents, and Mary—now Mrs. Glover, residing on Warm Springs creek; she has seven children. Mr. James has been the acknowledged leader of his denomination. He is much respected as a neighbor and a citizen; is a hale and strong gentleman, and bids fair to live many years. He says he is only waiting to be called to enjoy the reward of the faithful.

Rufus Johnson, Blackfoot City, son of Smith and Zibby Johnson, was born in Chautauqua Co., N. Y., January 16, 1830. He left New York in 1833 for Michigan, and remained in the latter state until 1843, when he removed with his father to the state of Illinois. In 1853 he emigrated to Oregon, and engaged in the lumber business. In 1856 and 1857, Mr. Johnson was engaged in packing through the territories of Oregon, Idaho and Montana, coming to Montana in 1864, and continuing that business until 1867. Mr. Johnson has been engaged in mining on Snow Shoe creek since the year 1867, and has combined stock raising with this interest. These mines have paid and are still paying a handsome profit. Mr. Johnson relates that there was found on the head of this creek a nugget of gold weighing $3,800, or thirteen pounds. This was in Deadwood Gulch, on the head waters of Snow Shoe creek. This was the largest nugget ever found in the territory. Mr. Johnson's mines are paying $10 per day to the hand, but his richest ground has not yet been worked. He has a half mile of ground along the creek which has not been disturbed, and this is the richest part of his claim. It will yield $20 to $25 per day to the hand. Mr. Johnson has 60 acres of mining land for which he has applied for a patent. He also owns twenty head of cattle, all fine stock, and twenty-five horses.

J. W. Jones, Deer Lodge Valley.—The subject of this article was born near Burlington, Ia., September 28, 1843, being one of the first white children born in that state, then a territory. When an infant his parents moved to Monroe Co., where he resided until 21 years of age, working on the farm in summer and teaching school occasionally in winter. In 1864 he determined to cross the plains to Montana. After his arrival in the territory his first venture was to purchase an interest in the ranch where Laurin's bridge was built on the Big Hole river, on the road from Virginia City, Madison Co., to Silver Bow. In December, 1864, he sold his interest in the ranch and came to Deer Lodge valley and purchased a place at what is now known as Frenchman's Crossing of the Deer Lodge river, about twenty miles above Deer Lodge City, where he kept a public house and engaged in farming until 1867. He went to German Gulch with cows and operated a dairy during the summer and in the fall moved to his present ranch, which he located by pre-emption. In 1871 he made a homestead entry of 160 acres, and in April, 1874, made desert land entry No. 1 lot, being the first entry in Montana Territory after the passage of the Desert Act. He has now 400 acres patented, and has purchased 680 acres of railroad land. He raises principally oats and hay, with some wheat and vegetables, cultivating over 200 acres. In 1882, on 150 acres, he raised 4,200 bushels of oats. He cuts about 200 tons of hay annually from 200 acres of meadow land, and raises about twenty bushels of wheat per acre. Mr. Jones was married February 28, 1866, to Mrs. Hardie A. Roseborough, widow of James Roseborough. Mr. and Mrs. Jones have one child, Martha Ellen, born July 25, 1868. He has about seventy head of horses, and about the same number of cattle. Mr. Jones has been district clerk for fourteen years of school district No. 22. He enjoys the esteem and good will of all his neighbors, and is an enterprising citizen.

John W. Lowell Wagon Co., Deer Lodge City.—This firm was established at Salt Lake City in 1877, and was incorporated under the laws of Utah with a paid-up capital of $80,000. In 1884 the firm increased its capital to $125,000. Business is carried on under the firm name of John W. Lowell Wagon Co.—John W. Lowell, president; J. E. Morse, vice-president. The branch house at Deer Lodge City was established in August, 1882, C. D. Joslyn taking charge. The firm has also established branch houses at Ogden, Utah; Dillon, Missoula and Helena, M. T.

C. D. Joslyn, of the John W. Lowell Wagon Co., was born in Courtland, Ill., May 1, 1859. At 18 years of age he went to Puebla, Col., where his brother was interested in a flouring mill, also in the freighting business. He purchased an interest and began traveling for the house. He was located at Leadville for two years. Formed a partnership with John W. Lowell, and took charge of the store at Beaver Cañon, terminus of the Utah Northern Road. He still engaged in traveling, and also established a store at Silver Bow. A few months later he moved the house to Deer Lodge, in August, 1882. Forming a partnership with J. E. Morse, a general forwarding and commission business was established, and the interest of Sebree, Ferris & White was purchased, business being carried on under the firm name of Joslyn & Morse. Mr. Joslyn is at present general manager for the John W. Lowell Wagon Co. The above firm has always on hand a large stock of wagons and agricultural implements, and is able to supply at short notice anything required in its line.

M. KAISER, Phillipsburg, son of John Kaiser, who kept a hotel in Switzerland known as the "Golden Lion," was born at his father's house December 21, 1828. The schools of his native country afforded him an opportunity for acquiring an education, of which he took advantage. At the age of sixteen years he set out to learn the shoemaking trade, and two years afterward left his native mountain land and came to America, where his first location was at St. Louis, Mo , in 1846. After finding employment for some time at his trade, he started in business upon his own account. He became a victim to the California gold excitement in 1852, and after disposing of his business, he sought a home in the Golden State, engaging in the market business in San Francisco. In the same year he removed to Marysville, where he continued in the same business. In 1860 he located at Virginia City, and carried on a butcher-shop, grocery and supply store. Mr. Kaiser came to Montana March 12, 1866, and first located at Helena, near the Barnum restaurant, where he built the Planters' House. In 1867 he removed to Cable and erected the International Hotel, which he conducted until 1873, and in that year moved to Phillipsburg and bought the Wood House, to which he built an addition in 1881. In 1850 Mr. Kaiser married Miss Louisa Wagner, who has borne him two children—John, born August 8, 1858; Herman, born June 3, 1862. Mr. Kaiser owns a fine hotel at Phillipsburg, and is also considerably interested in stock-raising.

J. B. KEEFE, Alamo Hotel, P. O. Anaconda, was born in St. Louis December 31, 1839, and is a son of John and Kate Keefe. At the age of eleven years he went to work on a Mississippi river boat as cabin-boy, and continued in such capacity on the boats of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, also as cook and steward, until 1866, serving as steward on the Hannibal & St. Joe packet line for a period of eight years. After retiring from boating life he established the St. Nicholas Restaurant, now known as Barnes' Hotel, at Kansas City. After remaining in Kansas City one year he went to Fort Scott, Kan., where he opened a restaurant and continued in business there four years, after which he was engaged in the restaurant and hotel business in Sherman, Dennison and Dallas, Tex., Joplin, Mo., and Fort Worth, Kan.; also at several places on the line of railroad from Fort Scott to Chitopa, and at Dodge City, Kan. In August, 1878, and in 1879, he was proprietor of the Pacific Hotel at Leadville, and in November, 1881, came to Montana and soon after opened a restaurant at Butte City, where he continued in business until June, 1883, at which time he opened his present hotel, where he served the first meal given in the town either in a hotel or restaurant. Mr. Keefe was married in New Orleans on the 4th day of January, 1855 (being then only a few days over fifteen years of age), to Miss Mary A. F. Dunn, by whom he has three children. Mr. Keefe, being a man of much experience in the hotel business, bids fair to make a grand success in that line in the young but prosperous town of Anaconda.

H. M. KEENE, Keene, was born in New York. When he was eight years of age he found employment on the Delaware & Hudson Canal, and at the age of fifteen years he ran away from his mother and engaged as a sailor on board the "Ca'alpa," of New Bedford. He was out on this voyage forty-eight months, and sailed around the world. Upon his return he joined a circus, but twelve months afterward he left for the West and became a stage-driver, which occupation he followed for years. In 1859 and 1860 he was in Nevada Territory, and in the spring of 1860 was engaged in a hard fight with the Piute Indians. Of ninety-five men in his company, sixty-five were killed. He had many hard trials in this western country, but is now well-to-do and comfortably situated. His ranch lies along the Little Blackfoot river.

M. W. KELLY, Pioneer, was born at Portadown, Armagh Co., Ireland, in 1816. He emigrated to America in 1837, and resided in New Orleans until 1849, when he crossed the plains to California, and in 1853 sailed to Australia, returning to San Francisco in 1858 with $8 in his pocket. About two years afterward he went to Idaho, and engaged in mining in various places nearly five years, but did not fill his coffers with gold. He had been in close circumstances since the fire in San Francisco in 1851, which destroyed all his property, amounting to about $25,000, and he had not even a suit of clothes left. In 1866 he came to Montana, and clerked for Lee & O'Connell in Beartown. He remained with this firm two years, saving $1,800, and in 1868 came to Pioneer, built a little shanty, and opened a store of his own. He built a house costing $900, and commenced business upon a capital of $900. Pioneer grew rapidly and became large enough to cast 480 votes in one season. Mines were being discovered near by, some of which are worked yet with profit; everything was high priced, and Mr. Kelly was prosperous. From his little shanty a good store has grown, and his small beginning has developed into a good steady business. We find Mr. Kelly to-day in good circumstances, and as jolly and well able to relate the escapades of his younger days and perpetrate an occasional practical joke as he ever was.

R. S. KELLEY, Deer Lodge City, superintendent of mines and mine owner, was born in Virginia in the year 1831. He received a fair education, and at fourteen years of age began clerking in Missouri and continued four years. In 1852 he started a democratic paper, called the Democratic Platform, at Liberty, Mo. One year later he moved to Atchison, Kan., where he started the Squatter Sovereign, which he published two years. Selling out at that time, he engaged in mercantile business in Kansas City, and so continued until the breaking out of the great Civil War, when he entered the Confederate service as captain, and served until 1863. Resigning his commission, he came to Montana, and locating at Alder Gulch, remained about one year, removing thence to Helena, and he mined in the Grizzly Gulch for some time. In 1866 he went to Bear Gulch, Deer Lodge Co., where he remained a short time, and then located in Deer Lodge City and engaged in mercantile business in company with Mr. J. S. Pemberton, continuing in trade five years. He then sold out his mercantile interests and engaged in mining, which pursuit he still follows, taking up mining grounds at Pioneer City and buying claims at Squaw Gulch in 1872, also becoming interested in the Rock Creek Ditch Co. He is now working the Kelly, Hogan & Co. mine above Pioneer City, with good success, and is also opening quartz mines in the Boulder country. He is largely interested in other mines in the vicinity, and has erected several fine and substantial buildings in Deer Lodge City. Mr. Kelley married Miss Mary L. Foreman, of Kentucky, by whom he has seven most interesting and intelligent children, as follows:—Kate R., Nannie B., Robt. Lee, W. Warren, Georgia, Florence H. and Harwood. His son Warren is now bookkeeper and assistant cashier in the banking house of Clark & Larabie, at Deer Lodge City. Robert L. is at present attending college at Deer Lodge, and Miss Kate is married to Mr. Welling Napton, son of Judge Napton, of Missouri. The remainder of the children are residing with their parents. Among them is Miss Nannie, a young lady of remarkable personal beauty and grace, who is possessed of rare musical talent. Mr. Kelley is a gentleman of fine ability, and his enterprising and active spirit is always on the alert for the advancement of the people and their interests in the Territory in which he has located and devoted his labors during many years. In June, 1885, he was commissioned marshall for the Territory.

J. C. KEPPLER, Anaconda, was born in Germany, March 19, 1844, and came to this country at the age of fourteen years, settling at Galena, Ill., where he apprenticed himself to a jeweler. In 1862 he went to Colorado, thence to Montana in 1864, to Virginia city in 1866, to Bannack in 1868, and to Glendale in 1878, where he remained seven years. He was engaged in the jewelry business at each of the above places. In 1881, at Glendale, he received the appointment of postmaster, and won the commendations of the entire people of both parties. In 1885 he came to Anaconda and established himself in the jewelry business. He is very well known and much respected. Was married to Miss C. Kirkpatrick, November 19, 1869, and they have one child. Mr. Keppler is a member of and actively interested in the Masonic, Odd Fellows' and A. O. U. W. societies.

ALFRED KIMMERLY, Blackfoot, son of Andrew and Hannah Kimmerly, was born in Hastings Co., Canada, December 25, 1844; was educated and remained in that country until 1873. During this time he had learned a trade, that of boot and shoe making, and had been prosperous. He came to this territory in 1873, stopping first at Helena and remaining there two days. He then came to Ophir gulch, where he engaged in mining, working the first summer for wages and buying a claim in the fall. He sold very soon, and worked two seasons for wages, the last in 1874. He next went to Oregon for a band of sheep, 1,200 in number, which he brought to the Little Blackfoot. Mr. Kimmerly located his present ranch in July, 1880. This is a hay and sheep ranch with good improvements. He now has 320 acres of land, and owns 2,294 head of sheep, feeds his sheep two months in the winter season, and gets 11,000 pounds of wool from 2,200 sheep. Mr. Kimmerly was married to Miss S. E. Marshel, January 12, 1880. Mrs. Kimmerly was born in Canada in the year 1850, and was there educated. She is a member of the M. E. Church. Mr. and Mrs. Kimmerly are the parents of three children, two sons and one daughter.

J. F. KIRBY, Anaconda, was born at Smith's Mills, Mass., March 21, 1848, and is a son of Elihu and Hope J. Kirby. In 1857 he, with his parents, moved to Fall River, where he worked in a fancy goods house for six months, and was then employed in a wholesale and retail dry goods house for 16 months. He engaged in this occupation in Boston, New York, and neighboring towns until 1870, when he came to Montana, and first engaged in mining, saw-milling and mercantile business at Washington Bar, in Madison county, and afterward became interested in live stock. He failed in the latter business in 1872, and subsequently engaged in teaming and farming, until 1876, when he commenced freighting, which he continued until 1880, at that time taking charge of a hay train from the Sandy creek to Fort Assiniboine. He soon turned his attention to freighting again, which he continued until 1881, and in the fall of that year he was employed by the Butte Hardware Co., with which he has since continued, and is now in charge of their branch business at Anaconda.

CONRAD KOHRS, Deer Lodge City, was born in Holstein, Germany, now a province of Prussia, on the 3d day of August, 1835. Shipping as a sailor boy, he found himself at the end of his voyage in South America, in which country he remained for several years, visiting the various states along the coast. In 1852 he arrived in New York city, and in the year following located at Davenport, Ia. In 1857 he removed to California, thence, in 1862, to Montana. Upon his present farm is standing the first house built in Deer Lodge valley, it having been erected in 1859. Mr. Kohrs located in this valley in July, 1862, but in September following he removed to Bannack, where and in Virginia City he was engaged in butchering in 1862-63. He subsequently managed shops at Helena, Blackfoot, Pioneer and Deer Lodge, turning his attention to the business of buying, selling, butchering and raising cattle. He owns 840 acres adjoining Deer Lodge, and a stock range of 2,500 acres, of which two sections are government land, located under the Desert Land Act, and the balance purchased from the railroad company. He has also about 1,000 acres four miles above Deer Lodge, consisting of fine bottom land, upon which most of his stock is wintered. Mr. Kohrs raises high grade cattle, having about 300 head of Shorthorns, and from 5,000 to 10,000 on Sun river. He values his herd at an average of $28 to $30 per head. By having only thoroughbred bulls, he raises cattle that average about 200 lbs. more than native stock, and sell for $40 to $50 per head when three to four years old. He has five Hereford bulls, costing $2,800, but has no stock from them yet, having heretofore made a specialty of Shorthorns. In 1866 he bought his first herd for breeding purposes, at a cost of $19,000, the total purchases for the season footing up over $60,000. During the winter of 1866-67 he lost over $30,000 worth of stock, or 33 per cent of his herd. This left him in debt to the value of the remainder of his herd. In the fall of 1867 he associated with himself his half brother, John Bielenberg, and Joseph Peel, and this firm continued until 1869, when Peel sold his interest to Mr. Kohrs. In the winter of 1880-81 they lost nearly 50 per cent of their Sun River herd. Their purchases in 1882 amounted to $90,000, and their sales to $165,000, 2,400 head of cattle being sold at Chicago and 1,200 in the Territory, exclusive of grade bulls, of which they sell from 100 to 200 annually, at about $50 per head. They feed all their Shorthorns raised at Deer Lodge, when the snow is deep, and feed bulls and a few cows at Sun river, but none of their general stock. Mr. Kohrs has a few fine horses, including Percheron-Norman and English coach, and a few brood mares. Among them are Clyde of Brandt, Strasdaway Regent, Figaro, and Ella. He considers cattle a more profitable investment than horses, taking into account the capital employed and the profits. In company with Hoepfner he owns 2,600 sheep on Nevada creek. Mr. Kohrs was one of the company, consisting of Thos. H. Irvine, Wm. H. Irvine, J. C. C. Thornton and E. S. Newman, who in 1867 built the Rock Creek ditch, and he is still interested in it. This is the largest ditch ever constructed in the Territory for mining purposes, costing $150,000, and the mines operated thereby are still paying a good interest on the investment. In 1869 Mr. Kohrs was elected county commissioner on an independent ticket, and held the office three years. When he took his seat the county scrip was worth only 20 to 25 cents on the dollar, and at the end of his term it had increased to 70 cents The county was heavily in debt, owing to reckless extravagance and corruption. Becoming alarmed at this state of affairs, the people organized an independent movement. The best men were selected for the offices to be filled, and triumphantly elected. The results jus tified their action. Mr. Kohrs married Miss Augusta Kruse, February 22, 1868, and to them have been born three children,—Annie, December 18, 1868; Katy, March 3, 1870; William K., November 1, 1879.

CHARLES KROGER, P. O. Phillipsburg, was born in Holstein, Germany, November 5, 1832. At the age of sixteen he was braking on the Kiel Railroad, which position he held four years In 1862 he came to America, and located in California, working in the salt ponds for two years. He then moved to Boise Basin and engaged in mining. In 1865 moved to Baker City, Ore., thence to Portland, thence to Big Bend, British Columbia, thence to Walla Walla, and next to Montana. He first located on Elk creek, where he made considerable money out of the mines, and then moved to Bear Town and became a brewer. In 1875 he moved to Phillipsburg, where he also followed the brewing business. Mr. Kroger married Miss Annie Rush; they have four children—Dora, born September 11, 1871; Walter W., July 11, 1873; Henry, October 25, 1875; Frederic, December 22, 1878.

PETER LANSING, Deer Lodge City, was born in Denmark in 1841. At sixteen years of age he became engaged as clerk in a boot and shoe store at Faaborg, where he continued over five years, after which he traveled through various parts of Denmark as journeyman boot and shoe maker, and so continued several years. He then came to the United States, and locating at Brooklyn, N. Y., remained there two years. Removing to Massachusetts he remained five months, and then went to Cheyenne, Wy. T. During his stay of six months at that place he was interested in the organization of the Big Horn and Black Hills expedition, but on account of the government raising objections he did not join them, going instead to Clark's Fork and the Stinking Water country of Montana on a prospecting tour, reached the Crow reservation in the latter part of September, 1870, making the whole journey from Cheyenne on foot. He stopped a couple of weeks in Bozeman, and thence went to Helena, where he worked three weeks, after which he made his way to Deer Lodge City and commenced to work at his trade on the 28th of October, 1870, in the employ of William Manning; so continuing until January 1, 1871. During that winter he drove a bull train about a month, and then went to the mountains, where he worked in a stone quarry two months. Returning to Deer Lodge he worked at his trade a couple of months, and then in company with J. Currier bought out Mr. Manning's boot and shoe business. Three months later he bought out Mr. Currier's interest and has since been alone in business, enlarging from time to time, at present is dealing extensively in a general line of gents' furnishing goods in connection with his former business of custom boot and shoe shop. In 1879 he located 600 acres of land in the vicinity of Warm Springs, Deer Lodge valley, on which he has made numerous improvements. Mr. Lansing has erected several business and resident buildings and three business houses in the city of Butte. He is the organizer of the Odd Fellows' encampment at Deer Lodge, and organized the first Odd Fellows' Grand Lodge in the territory. He is also a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

S. E. LARABIE, Deer Lodge, was born June 16, 1845, in Cattaraugus Co., N. Y. moved to Wisconsin in 1850, and attended the public school until fourteen years of age. He commenced his business career as clerk in a mercantile establishment, which position he held until 1864, when he came to Montana to better his fortune. In the winter of 1864–65 he was engaged in mining at Alder gulch. Mr. Larabie purchased a claim, with other parties, but a freshet in the spring of 1865 filled their drain ditch and rendered their claim valueless unless a large expenditure of money was made in putting it into working shape again. He sold out for a trifle and then left the mines; he went to Blackfoot, purchased a stock of goods on credit, and opened a small grocery store, and soon after started a branch store in Washington Gulch. This was a prosperous season and he was enabled in the fall to sell his business and pay up all his indebtedness, leaving nothing in his coffers, but with a clear conscience and an independent spirit, he went to McClellan Gulch, in Deer Lodge county, and worked for some time in the mines, later in the winter he went to Helena and worked at very low wages, but made the best of the situation until spring, when he was employed by Davis & Lowry to take a stock of goods to Blackfoot and sell them. As he could not agree with the firm altogether, he only remained in their employ three months; but soon made an engagement with the firm of Tutt & Donnell, wholesale and retail grocers, of Helena, to take charge of their business at Deer Lodge. This was the beginning of Mr. Larabie's prosperity. In the fall of 1866 Mr. Donnell bought Mr. Tutt's interest in the business, and Mr. Larabie was placed in full charge. The business relations were mutually satisfactory, and Mr. Donnell offered to give Mr. Larabie an interest in the business and guarantee him $1,200 per year. This offer he declined, for the reason that his former financial reverses had made him more cautious about incurring any liabilities, and he needed his whole salary of $150 per month, above expenses, for the support of his widowed mother. Mr. Donnell voluntarily raised his salary to $250 per month, and in the fall of 1869 Mr. Larabie purchased an interest in the business and it was conducted under the firm name of R. W. Donnell & Co. Sometime after this the firm was changed to Donnell, Clark & Larabie, and continued until 1870, when they sold their entire grocery business and engaged in banking, both in Deer Lodge and Butte. For four years after this firm commenced business, they bought an average of one million dollars' worth of gold dust per year. The firm had the confidence of the community, and grew and prospered until the present time. The banking house of Donnell, Clark & Larabie is the principal house in Butte City. In 1875 Mr. Larabie went to Kentucky and married Miss Julia, daughter of Dr. L. B. and E. O. Woolfolk, of Lexington, and on that trip made his first purchase of blooded horses, shipping them to Montana. He has been engaged in the stock business up to the present time, importing largely, and he now has on his ranch, near Deer Lodge, the finest band of thoroughbred and blooded horses and brood mares in the West, and of the most fashionable strains and unrivaled excellence. He has won more premiums and more purses than any other breeding dealer in the Territory. Mr. Larabie has three children—Donnell, born in December, 1878, and named for his old friend and partner, R. W. Donnell, as a mark of esteem; and Mary Ann, born in January, 1882, and named for Mr. Larabie's mother. In 1885 Messrs. Larabie & Clark purchased Mr. Donnell's banking interest in Montana.

SIMON LEONARD, P. O. New Chicago, born in Ireland in March, 1846, is a son of Martin and Kate Leonard, who were farmers in Sligo county, where he remained until 1866, and came to the United States in that year. He landed at New York city, where he remained about six months, and then went to Fond du Lac, Wis., where he worked on a farm six months, and then returned to New York city, remaining three or four years engaged in general work. Removing west to Cincinnati, O., he was employed in the iron works some time, and thence he went to Boston, where he remained until 1873, when he came to Montana. After working a couple of months in the Deer Lodge valley, he spent a short time mining at Butte, and eight years following in the same business at Phillipsburgh, after which he moved upon his present ranch. Mr. Leonard was married in Boston in August, 1874, to Miss Bridget Brennan, to whom were born three children.

B. LYNCH, Deer Lodge City, born in the State of Kentucky, October 27, 1845, is a son of William and Margaret Lynch. His parents moving to Missouri when he was a mere child, he remained there with them engaged upon the farm until twenty three years of age, and then located in Cherokee Co,, Kan., where he engaged in farming five years. At the expiration of that time he moved to Colorado, where he followed teaming two years and then went to Wyoming Territory and engaged in teaming and the dairy business. In 1877 he came to Montana, and settling at Butte again followed teaming until 1878, when he moved upon a ranch at the head of Deer Lodge Valley, remaining there one year. Taking up a ranch in the same vicinity, he remained upon it three years, and sold out and bought his present ranch. He is very pleasantly located, engaged in ranching, dairying and stockraising. Mr. Lynch was married at Marysville on the 30th day of June, 1867, to Miss Margaret Mercer, a lady of much intelligence and refinement.

J. P. MCANDREWS, of J. P. McAndrews & Co., P. O. Anaconda, was for twelve years a resident of St. Paul, Minn., where he had been in the employ of the C., M. & St. P. R. R. Co., as foreman of the yards in that city. In April, 1882, he came into Montana, and at Myers Station, on the N. P. R. R., was foreman on track work and also kept the section house until August, 1883, when he came to Anaconda. Here, in partnership with his brother, he engaged in the liquor business, which is still continued. Mr. McAndrews was married at St. Paul, January 7, 1879, to Miss Margaret Connell, by whom he has two children, Frank and William, the latter being the first child born in the village of Anaconda.

J. S. MCANDREWS, of J. P. McAndrews & Co., P.O. Anaconda, came to the Territory in 1866, and immediately engaged in mining at Helena. In 1867 he went to Emmetsburg, Deer Lodge county, and there followed the occupation of mining five years, after which he went to Phillipsburgh, where he was also interested in mining. While in the latter place he was twice elected assessor of the Northern District of Deer Lodge county, and was serving his second term when he was elected Sheriff of the same county. He then moved to Deer Lodge City, where he remained and served as Sheriff five years, and was afterward elected County Clerk and Recorder, which office he filled two years. In 1883 he located at Anaconda and engaged in the liquor business in partnership with his brother, under the firm name of J. P. McAndrews & Co., where he is now engaged. He was married at Faribault, Minn., in 1865, to Miss Katie C. Shea, to whom were born six children.

D. H. MCFARLAND, Deer Lodge City, was born in Waterville, Me., in 1824, and resided there until 1851, when he went to California. He engaged in mining and subsequently in the butchering business, continuing to reside in California till 1864, when he removed to Walla Walla, Washington Territory. In 1867 he went to "Head of Deep Gulch," Montana, and mined one year; thence to Pike's Peak, Montana, where he engaged in hotel-keeping till 1875, when he located at Deer Lodge and purchased the McBurney House in company with W. N. Aylesworth. In 1878 these gentlemen leased the St. Nicholas Hotel, at Butte, and more recently have leased the Mt. Vernon, of the same city. These two houses, like the McBurney, have acquired a most excellent reputation. Mr. McFarland is one of the old pioneers of the Pacific Slope, and is widely and favorably known as one of the best hotel men in the Territory.

PHIL. MCGOVERN, Deer Lodge City, was born at Keysville, Clinton Co., N. Y., September 4, 1839, and moved with his parents to Iowa Co., Wis., in 1846. At 16 years of age he began working in lead mines, at which occupation he was engaged until 1860, when he joined in the rush to Pike's Peak to seek for gold. He also mined for three years in California Gulch, where Leadville is now situated. He went to Montana in 1863, and after arriving at Bannack left on the Alder Gulch stampede and mined three years. In 1864 he located at Last Chance, and in the fall of 1865 at Deer Lodge. Returning to Alder Gulch he went to Ophir Gulch and mined one summer, investing $5,000, and losing everything. The summer and winter of 1866 he spent at Bear Gulch, and he also mined at Deep Gulch sixteen months. In the fall of 1867 he was elected sheriff of Deer Lodge Co., being the second appointed in the county. When his term of office expired he was appointed deputy U. S. marshal, under Marshal Wheeler, but resigned that office and went on stampede to Moose Creek, where he mined one year and subsequently went to Cariboo and mined one season. He finally returned to Deer Lodge and engaged in the liquor business, with John Gerber, for five years, and at present has charge of the saloon of John Todd. He married Miss Mary O'Grady in 1869. They are the parents of four children.

JAMES B. MCMASTER, Sheriff of Deer Lodge, Deer Lodge City, was born in Waterloo, Mass., in July, 1839; removed with his parents in 1853 to Kalamazoo, Mich., and from there to Madison Co., M. T., in March, 1864. He was engaged in mining and merchandising in Madison county till 1866, when he removed to Deer Lodge county, and for two years continued his former business. In the fall of 1868 he began mining on the Maginnis gulch, and from 1870 to 1873 mined on the Tradewater Bar of this county. In the fall of 1873 he went to Cherokee, and thence to Jefferson river. In January, 1875, he resumed mining and continued it till 1880, when he was elected assessor of Deer Lodge county, served two years, and in the fall of 1882 was elected sheriff, entering upon the discharge of his duties in December, 1882, and re-elected in 1884. Mr. McMaster has made an efficient officer and has won the entire confidence of his fellow citizens. From 1878 to 1882 he made his home in New Chicago, and since his election to the sheriff's office has resided at Deer Lodge.

V. B MCQUESTON, Deer Lodge City, is one of the early pioneers of the Pacific slope. He was born in New Hampshire in 1829. When nine years of age he moved with his parents to Galena, Ill., and subsequently to Plattville, Wis. In 1851 he crossed the plains to California, and has made his home on the Pacific slope since that time, now thirty-four years, without once returning to the States He spent about six years in California at placer mining, excepting a short time devoted to traveling in Oregon and Washington Territories. He visited Portland, Ore., first in 1851 and again in 1856; returned to California and remained till 1857, when he removed to Portland. Later he went to Puget Sound and British Columbia. In 1868 he left British Columbia, which at that time was a wilderness occupied by hostile Indians. During his explorations in that region he had more than one hand-to-hand fight for his life with the natives. He was engaged some years as master of a schooner on the Sound. In 1866 he came to Deer Lodge Co., and made his home at Bear Gulch, where he engaged in mining. He continued to reside at Bear Gulch, where he still has extensive mining interests, until he was elected assessor of Deer Lodge county in the fall of 1882 for the years 1883 and 1884 Mr. McQueston is a fair specimen of the better class of western pioneers, possessed of cool, clear judgment and plenty of nerve, without which he would hardly have passed safely through the rough and trying experience of thirty-four years in the wildest region of America.

H. T. MAHAN, Anaconda, was born in the State of Missouri, in the year 1856, and is a son of David S. and C. S. Mahan. At the age of fourteen years he was employed as a drug clerk in his native town, which occupation he followed until twenty-one years of age, when he came to Montana, and was immediately employed by Kinna & Jack, in the hardware trade at Butte, where he had charge of their business from 1877 to 1878. During the following year he served as bookkeeper for the firm at Helena. He then went into business for himself at Glendale, and continued two and a half years. Returning to Butte he was employed by the same firm, which afterward dissolved partnership, he remaining with Wm. M. Jack, of whose branch store he now has charge at the new and prosperous town of Anaconda.

FLORENCE MAHONY, proprietor of a hotel on Front street, Anaconda, was born in Ireland, and came to the United States in 1863 with his parents, who settled in Chicago when he was yet a child. After growing up to man's estate, he was for a short time engaged in the grocery business in Chicago, and for a period of five years was employed in bridge building in the states of Wisconsin, Missouri, Indiana and Iowa. He came to Montana in 1880, and first settled at Belmont, where he was engaged in mining some nine months; then going to Butte City he continued in the same business until August, 1883, at which time he came to Anaconda and established his present business. Mr. Mahony was married in Belmont, M. T., in December, 1881, to Miss Bridget O'Brien. He is a gentleman of pleasing address and manner, is well situated, and bids fair to become one of the leading business men of the town.

ED. MASON, Blackfoot City, son of John and Mary Mason, was born in Prince Edward Co., Canada, March 1, 1843. He was educated in Canada and learned the trade of a cooper. In 1863 he removed to Little York, Pa., and there worked at his trade, remaining one year. From there he went to Cincinnati, O., remaining but a short time, and working at various occupations. He located at St. Louis in 1864, but soon entered the employ of the Government, laying pontoon bridges. Late in the fall of 1864 he left for the plains, where he commenced freighting from Omaha to different points west. This business he continued till late in the fall of 1865, when he went to Leavenworth, Kan., and in the spring of 1866 started for Montana, reaching Helena on the 19th of August. He commenced mining on Last Chance Gulch, but in 1868 he went to California overland, on horseback, and remained there until 1869, when he returned to Helena and resumed mining in Last Chance. In the fall of 1871 he sold out at Helena and removed to Blackfoot City and bought mines in Ophir Gulch. In the fall of 1874 he made his way back to the States and Canada, and remained until 1876, when he returned to Blackfoot City, and again engaged in mining on the Bars, Ophir Gulch. Those mines are at this time yielding from $8 to $10 per day to the hand. Mr. Mason owns an interest in 250 acres of good mining ground. His mines are being worked by hydraulic power, and have two telegraphs and one bedrock flume. Mr. Mason has recently purchased a ranch and will begin fencing it soon. He has commenced raising stock. If the necessary capital is only invested here in the mining business, the returns will undoubtedly be large.

FRANK MASON, rancher and stock-grower, Deer Lodge City, was born on the island of Cuba in the year 1837, and came to the United States when about eleven years of age, landing at Key West, Fla., where he remained about one year. From there he went to New Orleans, La., where he remained until 1855, at that time going to St. Louis, where for several years he followed the occupation of caulker and ship carpenter. For a number of years, also, he worked in that capacity at Lake Pepin, Grafton, Lewiston, and various other places on the Mississippi river. During 1861 and 1862 he was employed in the Government Navy Yard at Cairo, Ill., and was employed by the American Fur Co., at Fort Pierre, on the Missouri river, from the fall of 1862 until September, 1863, at which time he came into Montana and at once settled where he now resides, being the first person to take up a ranch in the vicinity. During the summer seasons, for several years after coming to the territory, he followed mining at Alder gulch, Pioneer, Phillipsburg and Boulder. Mr. Mason is now nicely situated in the Deer Lodge valley, where he is engaged in ranching and stock raising.

A. M. MATTOON, professor of mathematics and English, of the Montana Collegiate Institute, Deer Lodge City, was born in Delaware Co., O., September 12, 1855. He was educated at Marietta College, Marietta, O., and graduated in the class of 1880, with the degrees of A.B. and A.M. He spent one and a half years as a teacher in the public schools of Ohio, then three years as a teacher of mathematics and Latin in the Albany Collegiate Institute. In August, 1883, he came to Deer Lodge City to accept the position he now holds in the Montana Collegiate Institute. Prof. Mattoon is a young man of fine natural ability, and a thorough student. At present he is in charge of the management of the Institute.

J. H. MEYERS, principal of the Deer Lodge City schools since September, 1880, was born in Southern Kentucky, March 21, 1852. He was educated at the Kentucky Institute at Lexington, and graduated in the class of 1872; he was engaged in farming in his native state till 1878, when he moved to Missouri; he taught in the schools of that state during two years, and in September, 1880, came to Deer Lodge City, to accept the position of principal of the city schools, in which capacity he has served for the past three years. The city schools are divided into six departments, having an aggregate enrollment of about 300 scholars. There are five assistant teachers employed Mr. Meyers was married September 9, 1875, to Miss Florence, daughter of R. Cobb. Mrs. Meyers was born in Kentucky. They have one child, a daughter, six years of age.

CAPT. JAMES H. MILLS, the genial proprietor and editor of the New North-West, Deer Lodge City, was one of the pioneers of journalism in this Territory, is an estimable citizen, and deserves more than a passing notice. He was born at New Lisbon, O., December 21, 1837; his parents were George S. and Susan Mills, nee Davis, who were natives of Pennsylvania, and the direct descendants of the early settlers of Virginia and Maryland. From them he inherited the sterling qualities which characterize the true man, and fit him for the arduous duties and battles of life—an inheritance worth more than titles or gold. In 1842 his family moved to Pittsburgh, and enabled him to receive a common school, practical, and commercial education. In 1858 his father, who was a manufacturer, sold out his business and retired to farm life, honored and respected. His son engaged in the lumber or pine timber business in Elk and Jefferson counties, which offered profitable inducements up to the breaking out of the civil war in 1861. He then retired, and for a short period taught school in Armstrong county. In April, 1861, the firing on Fort Sumter, and the proclamation of President Abraham Lincoln called him to duty; he responded promptly, as did "one hundred thousand" more of his comrades to swell the chorus of the grand old song, "We're Coming, Father Abraham," seeking no honors or emoluments, or thinking of aught but "national honor." First came the preparatory incidents of military life; mustering into local companies, reforming into regiments, and receiving their proper niche in history, whether for weal or woe. Private Mills was a member of the "Apollo Blues," reformed into Company G of the 11th Regt. of Penn. Vols., Col. Thos. F. Gallagher commanding. In May the regiment was brigaded at Camp Curtin, and shortly after the Bull Run disaster was ordered to follow the footsteps of the famous 6th Mass. Regt. through Baltimore to Washington, and then to active campaigning. The intelligence and bearing of Private Mills made him 1st lieutenant early in 1863, captain of company G in 1863, and for honorable and gallant services he was soon thereafter breveted major and lieutenant-colonel. Mustering out followed. Full of honors he turned to peaceful pursuits, but not to a life of ease and comfort; his capital was his intelligence and manly independence. His thoughts turned westward, and after a short business period at Pittsburgh he started overland to Montana, then a far-off and little known territory, accompanied by Capt. D. W. Buck, Messrs. Ballard, Kanouse, Cagwin, Phillips, and 25 others, going first to Omaha, and then traversing the Tongue river and Bozeman route to Helena. From Helena he proceeded to Emigrant gulch on the Yellowstone, and was actively engaged in mining through the balance of the year 1866. He then sought Virginia City, to become the editor of the Montana Post, the first paper published in the territory. In 1868 the office was removed to Helena, and under the management of A. H Beattie existed till May, 1869. In June of the same year Capt. Mills located in Deer Lodge and established the New North-West, a weekly publication which has brought its owner a reputation that is to be envied. He received the appointment of secretary of Montana from President Hayes, and declined a reappointment at the expiration of his commission. His labors in connection with the Indian troubles are referred to in the military chapter of this work. Altogether Captain Mills has had a very stirring and eventful life, and deserves to be remembered by his country and neighbors as an example of manliness and integrity; he is highly esteemed by the citizens of Deer Lodge valley, and referred to as the man who can be relied on. He married Miss Ella M. Hammond, of Deer Lodge, September 6, 1875; she was born in Wisconsin September 4, 1857. They have three children: Mary Edith, born June 9, 1876; Nellie Gertrude, born September 10, 1880, and James Hamilton, jr., born December 25, 1883. During the month of February, 1884, the Press Association of Montana was formed, and Capt. Mills was elected its first president (vide Press Association reports).

A. H. MITCHELL, M. D., Deer Lodge City, is a pioneer physician and surgeon, of Deer Lodge county, his practice in this valley dating back to 1865. He He was born in Jefferson Co., Ky., in 1831; received his literary education at the University of Virginia; studied medicine at the University of New York, and took the degree of M D. in 1852. The following year he went to California and entered upon the practice of his profession. He continued in practice in that state till 1859, when he removed to Nevada, locating first at Aurora, and subsequently at Austin. In each of these places he established an extensive practice. In 1864 he went to British Columbia, where he spent one year, and in 1865 he came to Deer Lodge. Dr. Mitchell has been in practice in Montana some eighteen years, and has won a foremost place at the head of his profession in the Territory. He entered the political field in Montana as the Democratic candidate for the Territorial legislature of 1868, was elected, and re-elected in 1869–70–71–72–76–77–78–79–80–81–82–83. He was twice chosen president of the council. In 1869 he was appointed by the president to construct the Territorial penitentiary, and was in charge of the work till its completion in 1871. He also served several years as physician and surgeon of the prison, resigning that position in December, 1882. He was also physician of Deer Lodge county thirteen years. In 1877 he was appointed by the governor contractor and superintendent of the Territorial insane asylum, situated at Warm Springs, Deer Lodge county. While a resident of California he served two terms in the legislature of that state. In he fall of 1883 he was elected on the Democratic ticket as a member of the Territorial convention.

COL. G. W. MORSE, P.O., New Chicago, was born in the State of Maine, December 2, 1838, and is the son of Captain Daniel Morse, captain of the "Billy Gray." Our subject received his education in the common schools of Maine. At the age of nineteen he went to Minnesota and began labor for himself. He remained in that state five years, and during the entire time was engaged in the lumber business. In 1857 he went to Louisiana, thence to Texas, where he remained two years engaged in the lumber business. His next move was to Colorado, where he remained and followed mining until he came to Montana. In the spring of 1862 he started for this Territory, and his party discovered gold where Bannack now stands, but M. Morse's provisions were scant, and he was obliged to go to Florence, Idaho. In October he went to Boise Basin, followed mining and traveled with a pack train. In 1865 he moved to Blackfoot, M. T. He then began to follow the life of a prospector. The party he was with discovered the Indian creek mines, and in March, 1866, Mr. Morse discovered Bilk gulch, where he and four other men took out $350,000. In 1872 Mr. Morse sold his mines and engaged in the stock business, which he still follows. He also has a store at Yreka, a butcher shop at Bear Town, and a large farm at New Chicago. In February, 1877, he married Miss Nettie Milliken. They have two children: George A., born June 13, 1879, and Abril P., born January 6, 1882.

WILLIAM NORTON, Stuart, located at Bear Gulch, M. T., in 1866. In the spring of 1868 he went to Cable City, where he engaged in mining and mercantile business until the spring of 1869, when he moved to Silverbow. In the latter place he busied himself at placer mining. In 1871 he returned to Cable and there again engaged in mining, prospecting and mercantile business. In the fall of 1873 he went to Washington Territory and, in company with his partner, Isaac Dean, purchased twelve hundred head of sheep, which he drove through in the spring of 1874 to Deer Lodge valley. This was the second band of sheep ever driven through to this territory. In 1874 Mr. Norton bought a ranch in Deer Lodge valley, where he has since lived, and is now farming the same in partnership with Mr. Dean, being principally engaged in stock-raising. Mr. Norton was born in Whitby, Upper Canada, in 1836; was raised and educated in the Dominion, and there followed mercantile business until his removal to California in 1862. He was married to Miss M. A. Thomas, in 1876, and has four children.

O. B. O'BANNON, Deer Lodge City, was born at Falmouth, Ky., and attended school there until 17 years old. He then went to Lexington, Ky., where he attended college, graduating from the Law School February 29, 1856. He removed to Iowa, and practiced several years at Keokuk and Burlington, in that state. He went to Nevada and California, and engaged in mining. In 1866 he entered the employ of the Central Pacific exploring expedition and remained in their service one year. In April, 1867, he was appointed register of the land office for Montana, which position he held until July 4, 1869, having his office at Helena. Removing to Deer Lodge, he was appointed clerk of the district court for the second district, and held this position for ten years. In connection with this office he also acted as land attorney. In 1875 he was elected judge of the probate court, and served three years in that office. In July, 1869, he was appointed United States Commissioner for Montana. This position he holds at the present time. Mr. O'Bannon married Miss Fannie, daughter of Col. Wm. L. Irvin, of Deer Lodge, in 1873, and has 3 children —Ida B., Annie and Mary. Judge O'Bannon is interested in real estate in town, Butte and Blackfoot.

JOHN O'NEIL, hardware, Deer Lodge City, was born in Airdrie, Scotland, in August, 1841. He came to the United States in 1850, and located at Mineral Point, Wis. A year later he removed to Chicago, and learned the trade of machinist, at which he worked three years. He held a position as carrier for the Chicago Times for two years; worked as a carpenter for three years, and during the celebrated Know-nothing movement held a position as carrier for the Natural Citizen. After working six months he went to Dearborn, where he attended school one year. Pushing westward to Salt Lake and Fort Bridger, he worked one year and was employed in the quartermaster's department of the U. S. army. He went with Colonel Cook's command to Fort Leavenworth, and here he joined General Curtis' command and went to Springfield, Mo., where he was located during General Zollicoffer's raid in 1861. From there he went to Fort Union, New Mexico, but returned in a short time to Leavenworth. In 1864 he enlisted in the 16th Kansas Cavalry, with which he served to the close of the war, when he came to Deer Lodge City and purchased a saw-mill from Robert Wells. After carrying on business for six months, he sold his interest and opened a furniture store. This he managed for six years. In 1877 he established a hardware house, and is engaged in that line of trade at the present time. He married Miss Barbara Solledor, of Leavenworth, Kan., in August, 1864, and has three children—William, Minnie and John.

DR. JOHN H. OWINGS, physician and surgeon, Deer Lodge City was born in Maryland, October 19, 1841. He took a regular course at the University of Maryland and graduated in 1861 with the degree of M. D., when not quite twenty years of age. He pursued the study of medicine with his father, Dr. John H. Owings, a prominent physician of Howard Co., Md. He began practice in his native state, which was continued till 1864, since which time he has traveled and practiced his profession in several states and territories—Pennsylvania, Colorado, Black Hills, Dakota and Montana. He came to Deer Lodge in November, 1881, and has acquired an extensive practice.

JAMES K. PARDEE, P.O. Phillipsburg, son of Ebenezer Pardee, a banker in Wooster, O., was born February 21, 1843, and at the age of eighteen graduated from the Western Reserve college, and enlistedin the Nineteenth Ohio Infantry. At the close of the war he went home, and in 1870 emigrated to Utah and followed the vocation of a miner. He erected the first smelter that was built on Little Cottonwood. In the fall of 1874 he emigrated to Montana and located in Phillipsburg. He opened the Speckled Trout lead and built the Northwest Mill for the Northwest Co. He also developed the Salmon and Algonquin mines, and in 1879 built the Algonquin mill. He is now superintendent for the Algonquin Co. Mr. Pardee married Miss Mary Lukuns, daughter of John Lukuns, a merchant in Rochester, Pa. Their union is blessed with one child, Joseph T., born May 31, 1871.

JAMES R. PERDEE, of Deer Lodge valley, is a native of Johnson Co., Mo., where he was born May 10, 1837. He is the son of Capt. James R. and Mary Perdee. Our subject lived in his native place until 1864. He served in the Confederate Army about one year and was honorably discharged. Came to Montana in the fall of 1864, and purchased an interest in a mining claim in Alder gulch, where he remained about two months, but finding the labor of mining too severe for him, went to Deer Lodge valley and spent the winter in hunting. In the spring he went to Fort Benton and engaged in teaming for John B. Taylor. During that season, 1865, he were greatly troubled by the Indians. Twice they drove his teams off, and at one time drove them into a secluded place and left them there, while they made a raid on some men at the mouth of Marias river killing twelve of them. Mr. Perdee found his teams and made all possible haste to get away, but was followed closely, and while crossing the Missouri at Fort Benton on a flat-boat several shots were fired at him. The Indians remained at Fort Benton all night and the entire population gathered in Carl & Steel's warehouse for protection. The Indians skirmished around, but did not make an attack. Mr. Perdee continued freighting until the last of September, 1865, and then returned to Deer Lodge valley to winter. In 1866 he went to Bear gulch and worked at mining until the haying season, when he returned to the valley and cut some hay. In 1867 he went to Butte city and engaged in mining on Silver Bow creek. In the following winter he moved upon his present ranch in company with F. M. Goddard. This partnership existed for eight years, when Mr. Perdee purchased Mr. Goddard's interests, and has since carried on ranching and stock raising alone. He has title to 320 acres of land, all in hay and pasture. He cuts about 200 tons of hay per annum, the general average being one ton per acre. He has 120 head of cattle and 20 head of horses. He has completed a good residence at a cost of $4,000.

PETER PETERS, P. O. Warm Springs, arrived in Virginia M. T., in 1868, where for six months he engaged in mining, removing thence to Bannack, M. T., where he worked at the same business until the spring of 1872, when he returned to Virginia, bought a ranch and remained in that vicinity two and a half years. In the Spring of 1875 he located the farm of 240 acres in Deer Lodge valley, on which he now lives. Mr. Peters was married to Miss Lizzie Henaults in 1877, and has two children.

HARRY PETERSON, merchant and postmaster at Helmville, was born in Germany, on the 24th of March, 1832, and while very young engaged as a sailor, making many voyages to different points, with good success. In the year 1874 his vessel touched the American coast at Pensacola, Fla., where he came ashore. From this point he proceeded to Nashville, Tenn., and some time afterward to Columbus, Ind., where he engaged as clerk in a dry goods house, and remained until 1880. During his residence in Columbus he married. In 1880 he removed to Indianapolis, Ind., and one year later came to Montana Territory, locating at Deer Lodge City. In 1882 he came to his present place of business. His prospects are good, and with the assistance of his estimable family he will very soon mount to the top of the ladder of fortune.

BENJAMIN J. PHILLIPS, Deer Lodge Valley, was born in Caermarthenshire, Wales, in 1830, and emigrated to America in 1842, returning to Wales in about one year. He came back to America in 1849 and located in Council Bluffs, Ia., where he resided about two years, taking up his subsequent residence in Utah, and remaining until 1859, when he went to Carson Valley, Nev., with a herd of cattle. After selling them he returned to Utah, and in 1861 moved to San Jose, California, where he resided until the fall of 1864, then returned to Utah. At a place on Humboldt river, called Rocky Point, he was ambushed by Indians, and but for the timely arrival of a large train Mr. Phillips and family would doubtless have been massacred, as they were traveling alone. In 1865 he removed to Montana and located on his present ranch in Deer Lodge Valley. He has 640 acres of land and a large, fine dwelling house which is an ornament to the valley and a credit to his taste. He only farms 75 acres, his principal crop being hay, of which he cuts about 300 tons annually, and markets it at $15 per ton on the ranch. Mr. Phillips married, January 3, 1852, Miss Sarah Davis. They have had two children: Benjamin D. Phillips, (born May 9, 1857; married a daughter of Morgan Evans, and has one child); Sarah Ann Phillips, (born September 17, 1860; died August 22, 1869). Father and son, together, own about 1,500 head of cattle and horses, including thoroughbred Durhams—bulls and cows; thoroughbred horses, Percheron-Norman stallions, also thoroughbred brood mares and mares crossed with native stock. They own 640 acres on Willow creek, which is their homestead, and 320 acres on Wolf creek, in Judith basin, where they keep their stock. Benjamin D. Phillips has been reared entirely in the West, living on the homestead since eight years of age. He has had only the meagre advantages of the frontier schools, but has enjoyed the schooling that contact with the every day exigencies of life bring, and this has developed a strong sturdy manhood, and a knowledge of business pertaining to stock and ranch, opportunities that place him at the head of the young men of the Territory. He was married March 1, 1881, to Ann H. Evans, daughter of Morgan and Ann Evans. Mrs. Phillips was also raised in Montana. They have one child, Benjamin Morgan Phillips. They reside on the homestead, and Mr. Phillips is connected with his father in all business matters pertainingto the ranch or stock.

James P. Preston, Deer Lodge valley, is a native of Ohio, born February 22, 1835, at Fort Defiance, and is a son of Captain William Preston, an officer of 1812, being the youngest of a family of ten children. When he was seventeen years old he left his parents, went to California and immediately engaged in mining in Nevada county, and later in Yuba county. He owned an eighth interest in the Blue Gravel Mining Company and worked in this mine for five years. He sold his interests and in 1862 went to Florence, Idaho, and mined until he lost over $20,000. He purchased a claim and opened it, but it failed to pay, as labor was worth $20 per day and board $15 per day, picks, $45 each, shovels, $45 each, and gum boots, $45 per pair. The claim required eight feet of stripping by hand and all supplies were brought in eighteen miles on snowshoes. The claim was rich, but would not pay such a tremendous outlay. After this loss he went to Boise basin $500 in debt, located a claim, and the ensuing year paid his debt of $500 and cleared $20,000. In 1863 he ran a bed-rock cut from Granite creek; flumed the lumber, costing $8,000 per thousand; used 100 inches of water at $100 per inch, and bought out his partner except a 1-6 interest. The mine did not yield as much as was expected. At this time the mining excitement in Montana was at its height, and in October, 1865, Mr. Preston went to that territory. After visiting various parts he was not pleased with the country, and made preparations to return to Idaho. In the meantime his partner had sold their claim in Idaho, having been given the power of attorney to sell the claim—by Mr. Preston—if he decided to remain in Montana. The claim was sold for $8,000 and partner and money both disappeared, Mr. Preston again suffering a loss of about $12,000. In 1866 he mined on Elk Creek, but was unsuccessful. He had located his present ranch near Deer Lodge in 1865, and thither he turned his footsteps, resolved to abandon the ups and downs of a miner's life. In the summer of 1867 he was employed as superintendent of construction of the Rock creek ditch, thirteen miles long, capacity 1,500 inches of water. It was seven feet wide on top, five feet on the bottom and three feet deep. This ditch has proved a good paying investment. Mr. Preston, in company with John Coffey, had started a livery stable in Deer Lodge City, and during 1868 gave his personal attention to the business. In 1869 he left his partner to attend to affairs and went to Pioneer, purchased a mining claim, which he worked about one month; owning half of the claim. He left his partner in charge of the claim and again took the superintendency of the Rock creek ditch. He sold his Pioneer claim in the fall, clearing some money on it, and bought a claim and ditch in company with Colonel Thornton. In 1870 he lost all he had in mining interests and returned to his livery business in Deer Lodge City. In the fall of 1870 he returned to the states and on March 21, 1871, married Miss Ellen M., daughter of Jacob and Rebecca Miller, of Williams Co., Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Preston have four children: Ernest G., born February 20, 1872; Henry L., born July 14, 1873; Jake Miller, born October 15, 1874; Ellen Rebecca, born April 1, 1880. Our subject returned to Montana and continued in the livery business during the summer, and in the fall of 1871 moved on his present ranch. His livery burned in 1872 and he closed up the business and invested in cattle. He owns 200 acres of land, of which he cultivates about seventy acres, and mows nearly all of the balance, cutting about eighty tons of hay per annum. He has about thirty head of horses, all well bred, mostly of Mambrino and Morgan stock, besides about fifty head of cattle. The record of this man's life has been one of toil and hardship, whose conquests are not the result of favorable circumstances but of untiring energy and industry.

J. R. Quigly, merchant in Blackfoot city, was born April 19, 1834, and was educated in Wisconsin. He was engaged in farming until 1855, when he became a schoolmaster, and continued teaching for five years. He was then chosen under-sheriff of his county, holding this office until 1864, in which year he removed to Montana territory, stopping first at Virginia city. From this point he moved to Nevada city, where he remained during the winter of 1864–5 engaged in the grocery business. From here he went to Helena, thence to Blackfoot city, where he is at this time engaged as a grocer. He has made several visits to the states, and during the last one was married, bringing his wife to Blackfoot. July 3, 1882, his business house and stock of goods were destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of $10,000. Mr. Quigly has large mining interests, and is industrious and worthy of success.

Clatan Ramsdell, Deer Lodge City, rancher and stock-grower, was born near Quincy, Ill., on the 20th day of June, 1855, and in 1860 his parents emigrated to Denver, Col., where he remained until 1863, at that time coming to Montana and settling at Alder gulch. In 1865 they removed to the head of Deer Lodge valley and engaged in ranching until 1866, when they moved to the city of Butte and commenced mining. In 1870 Clatan Ramsdell moved upon the ranch, where he has since remained occupied in ranching and horse raising, his father being interested with him in the enterprise. Mr. Ramsdell is a young man full of energy and tact, and having one of the finest ranches in this part of the territory has every assurance of a prosperous future, surrounded by friends won and retained by his genial, pleasant and agreeable manner.

E. M. Ratcliffe, proprietor Continental Hotel and feed and sale stable, P. O. Anaconda, was born in the state of Tennessee on the 7th day of April, 1849, and for several years he was employed as dry goods clerk. In 1869 he went to New York city, where he was again engaged in the dry goods business, after which he removed to Kansas and spent one year in tilling the soil. He then went to Colorado, where he followed carpentering and ranching three years, and in 1876 was for about four months in the Black Hills, being the first man to carry the mail into the hills. He was employed by the people as a private mail-carrier, and was also interested in the grocery business in the hills. Leaving the Black Hills he was employed by the Utah Northern Railroad Company on bridge work for several months, after which he went into business at Blackfoot, M. T., in 1878, as dealer in gents' furnishing goods. He was afterward thus engaged in Dillon and Silver Bow, and at the latter place he also conducted a hotel. In June, 1883, he closed out his business at Silver Bow, and after renting his hotel building moved into Anaconda and opened the Continental Hotel, where he still remains, having one of the best and most complete hotels in the village.

H. S. REED, cashier of banking house of Clark & Larabie, Deer Lodge City, was born in Maine in 1848, and received a fair common school education. For a period of five years he taught in the schools of that State, removing thence to Iowa, where he taught school about three years. He subsequently came to Deer Lodge City, M. T., where he taught two years. In March, 1875, he accepted a position as book-keeper in the banking house of Donnell, Clark & Larabie, at Deer Lodge City, which position he occupied one year, and then became assistant cashier in the First National Bank of Deer Lodge City, they at that time having changed to a National Bank. In 1879 a change was again made, and the bank was then conducted by Donnell, Clark & Larabie as a private banking house, and Mr. Reed has remained as cashier to this date. In January, 1872, Mr. Reed was married to Miss Delia L. Carson, of the State of Iowa, by whom he has three interesting children. Mrs. Reed is a prominent member of the Presbyterian Church and the Good Templars' organization.

R. K. RICHARDS, P. O. Washington Gulch, was born in Cornwall, England, in 1828, and left in 1843 for America. He was educated in Wisconsin, and removed from that State to California in 1852, landing at San Francisco in August of that year. This gentleman has traveled extensively in the West. He has been a hard worker and encountered many dangers and hardships. He has often visited the wild Indian in his mountain home while in search of gold, and with his gun and pack has fought his way with comrades to the gold fields of the British possessions. After many years of toil and hardships, he came in 1864 to this Territory, and soon after his arrival settled on his present homestead, where he is at this time comfortably situated. He has a mining interest here that pays very well, and it is the wish of his friends that he may live long to enjoy the fruits of his labors.

JOHN W. ROBBINS, New Chicago, was born near Knoxville, Tenn., March 13, 1856, son of Calloway and Susan Robbins. At the age of seventeen years he removed to Missouri, where he was engaged for four years in farming. In 1883 he came to Montana, and at once engaged in ranching near New Chicago, where he still resides. Mr. Robbins was married in the State of Missouri on the 16th day of September, 1879, to Miss Fannie Manes, by whom he has two fine children. He being still a young man of energy and good habits, we may look forward to his becoming one of Montana's best and most worthy citizens.

J. C. ROBINSON, attorney at law, Deer Lodge City, was born in Marion Co., Mo., March 9, 1834. He was educated in Marion College and graduated in the class of 1853. The same year he crossed the plains with an ox team to California. He read law in Sonora in that State, and was admitted to the bar in 1860. He entered upon the practice of his profession and continued in California till 1866, when he removed to Montana and opened a law office at Deer Lodge City. In 1871 he was elected district attorney for the second judicial district, and served two years. He was elected in 1876, on the democratic ticket, to the tenth legislative assembly, reelected in 1878, and served in the eleventh also. He has borne his part in local matters, and has served five years as a member of the school board.

CHARLES ROULEAU, City Hotel, Deer Lodge City, was born at Barcay, Canada, October 20, 1832. He left Canada when 13 years old and went to the State of New York. There he worked on a farm in summer and attended school in winter for two years, and began learning the trade of machinist with a Mr. Brown in a factory. Mr. Brown dying, he left New York and went to Hartford, Conn., finding employment on a boat in the Connecticut river. This occupation he followed for three years, meanwhile attending school in winter. He returned to Canada on a visit, and in a short time left for California. He commenced mining at Donnevette; then prospected at American Point two months; went to Forest City, where he opened a saloon and mined for one and one half years; left that place to mine in French Hollow, remaining one year, and in the fall of 1857 returned to Donnevette and commenced mining. In June, 1858, he joined the Frazer River expedition to the British possessions, but after one year returned to California and located at Fremont. In 1862 he established a saloon at Boise City, Nev., which, in connection with mining, he carried on until the fall of 1863. The Salmon river excitement occurring, he went to that point and wintered. He handled a pack train from Lewiston, which he had charge of fifteen months. Going to Courtney with provisions, he sold out the entire train and engaged in packing to Salmon river. September 12, 1865, he came to Deer Lodge City and kept a stable and saloon for some months. He mined at Bear Gulch one summer, returning to Deer Lodge in the winter. Engaging with Peter Valiton in a brewery, he continued in that business for seven years and eight months, finally leaving that position to take charge of a stable. This he sold in six months and engaged in teaming, with two teams, between Deer Lodge City and Corinne two years. A third team he kept for private use. He opened a hotel at Yam Hill in 1874, but after running it a few months closed it up, then hauled wood for three years. He bought the City Hotel in April, 1876, and has managed it to the present time. He married Miss Amelia Michael in 1875. Mr. Rouleau is also interested in ranches, real estate and stock-raising.

S. SCOTT, hotel, Deer Lodge City, came to Montana in 1864, and located in Virginia City, where he engaged in mining. In the spring of 1865 he removed to Blackfoot and there engaged in the restaurant and saloon business. In the spring of 1868 Mr. Scott bought the Western Hotel, in Deer Lodge City, since known as the Scott House, and located at that point. He is now one of the most prominent citizens of Deer Lodge City, and is doing a most extensive business, owning a beautiful hotel, the largest in the city. Mr. Scott also has owned and still has some of the finest and most valuable trotting stock in Montana. He owned and trained the celebrated trotting horses Billy Grant, Saint Thomas, and Black Joe, and is now owner of the famous trotter Ranchero, which won second money in the free for-all stallion race in Helena, September 3, 1883, and also the free-for-all trotting race in Butte City, for a citizen's purse of five hundred dollars, taking the last three heats; time, 2:34¼, 2:36½, 2:34½, beating the well known trotters Black Diamond, Ben Lomond and Pat Hunt. This horse Ranchero is six years old and was bred and raised in the Territory; sired by Clerk Chief, Jr.; dammed by Mary Eagle, she by American Clay. Mr. Scott was born in Venango Co., Pa.; was there educated, and in the year 1855 removed to Illinois and engaged in farming. In 1861 he enlisted in the 7th Illinois Cavalry, in Mendota, La Salle county; served in the war two years and seven months. Mr. Scott is a most enterprising and successful man of business.

D. SIMMONS, Phillipsburg, is son of Enos Simmons, an Ohio farmer. He was born July 17, 1843, and was educated in the common schools of Ohio. In 1863 he emigrated to California, where he followed farming. In 1866 he came to Montana, first locating at Butte, and engaging in mining. He moved to Phillipsburg in 1874, and opened a butcher's shop, which he managed until 1876. He then sold out, and accepted a position as postmaster, which he still holds. In 1879 he married Miss Crawford.

ADDISON SMITH, of the firm of Kleinschmidt & Co., merchants, Deer Lodge City, was born in Mercer Co., Pa., in 1833. In 1852 he joined a party of 75 men bound for California, across the plains. When near the headwaters of the Klamath and Pitt rivers, California, nine of the party became separated from the main body, and were all killed by the Modoc Indians. The main party was attacked by a large body of Indians the following morning. The attacking party numbered between three and four thousand, but were repulsed without loss on the part of the whites. Having arrived in California, Mr. Smith engaged in mining, and subsequently in mercantile and lumber business. He remained in California until 1865, then came to Montana and spent two years in placer mining. In 1867 he was elected treasurer of Deer Lodge county; served two years; was a candidate for re-election, and defeated by seven votes. He made the first garden in Deer Lodge, and raised the first apples grown in the valley. He was elected superintendent of schools of Deer Lodge county, and served seven years. In the spring of 1870 he bought an interest in the Deer Lodge City Independent, a weekly newspaper, and conducted the business until 1874, when the paper was sold and removed to Helena and called the Helena Independent. He spent two years as traveling correspondent for the Helena Independent and the New North-West. In the spring of 1880 he bought a half interest in the mercantile business of Kleinschmidt & Bro., at Deer Lodge City. He is largely interested in mining, and owns considerable city property.

MRS. C. SMITH, proprietor of the Windsor Hotel, Anaconda, is a lady of remarkable energy and tact. In 1879 she left her native home in Massachusetts, and, coming to Montana, settled at Helena, but after a short time went to Bozeman, which place she left in the fall of 1880, and going to Butte City, opened a restaurant, which business she continued, giving universal satisfaction to her numerous patrons, until the summer of 1883. Closing out her business at the city of Butte and repairing to the new and prosperous village of Anaconda, she opened the Windsor Hotel and is now doing a fine business, meeting with the approbation of the public by her affable and courteous manner and her kind regard for the comfort of her many guests.

EDWARD SMITH, Helmville, ranchman and stock-raiser, originally from Rhode Island, removed to California in an early day. He has met with many hardships in his travels, and has seen much of the West. Much of his early life, from 1849 to 1864, was spent in and around the gold fields of California, where his fortunes were varied with successes and losses. The latter part of his stay in California and Oregon was spent in packing, in which business he had forty-six mules, and for six months received two dollars a head each day. In 1866 he settled at Blackfoot City, M. T., bringing with him a stock of goods and going into business at that place. He soon after sold out and came to his present home. He owns a very fine ranch, well stocked, and is a prosperous citizen.

GEORGE B. SMYTH, JR., general passenger and freight agent, Deer Lodge City, was born at Keokuk, Ia., September 5, 1854. In 1874 he engaged in merchandise brokerage business, and with many others passed through the experiences of the great panic. After carrying on business two years, he went to Omaha and engaged in railroading. In a short time he left to take charge at Ogden, Utah, and there was appointed assistant cashier, part of the time acting as cashier. In the fall of 1882 he came to Deer Lodge City, and November 10 was appointed general passenger and freight agent for the U. P. R. R. This position he holds at the present time. He married Miss Nettie Douglass, of Ogden, Utah, December 25, 1882.

EDWARD S. STACKPOLE, postmaster and agent of the Pacific Express Company, Deer Lodge City, was born in Kennebec Co., Maine, October 27, 1834. He was brought up in his native state, and emigrated to California. He remained in that state four years, and then removed to Idaho. In 1866 he came to Deer Lodge City and engaged in the drug business, which he carried on till November 1, 1882. He was appointed postmaster at Deer Lodge City in 1869, was reappointed, and has held the office continuously to this date.

SAM. D. STUART, Deer Lodge City, miner, is interested in the Cariboo and Flint Creek mines. He was born in Bureau Co., Ill., August 10, 1836. The following year he removed with his parents to Muscatine Co., Ia., near Iowa city. He was brought up in Iowa, and on the breaking out of the late war he enlisted in April, 1861, as a private in the First Iowa Volunteers, three months' men. At the expiration of the three months' term he re-enlisted in Company F, Second Iowa Cavalry. He was commissioned First Lieutenant of the One hundred and Twenty third Colored Infantry, and subsequently transferred to the One Hundred and Nineteenth regiment (colored), was commissioned Quartermaster, with the rank of First Lieutenant, and served till the close of the war. He came to Montana in 1866 and located at Deer Lodge City, where he has been engaged in mining, mercantile business and building. At this writing (1883) he is largely interested in the Cariboo and Flint creek mines, which he is engaged in developing. Mr. Stuart was married in Iowa in September, 1861, to Miss Amanda J. Swem, daughter of Ezra Swem. Mrs. Stuart was born in Indiana. They have six children, four daughters and two sons. Mr. Stuart's brother, Granville, was the discoverer of the first mineral diggings in the territory.

THOMAS STUART, Deer Lodge City, one of the earliest of the pioneer miners of Montana, was born in Muscatine Co., Ia., April 13, 1839. In March, 1860, he went to Colorado, where he engaged in mining till the spring of 1863. He then located at Boise city, Idaho. In April, 1864, he came to Montana and engaged in mining at Virginia city. Two years previously, while mining in the mountains of Colorado, he had received a letter from his brother, Granville, who had just discovered the rich diggings of "Alder gulch," asking him to join him in Montana. The letter was addressed only "Thomas Stuart, Colorado," and strangely enough reached him while among the mountains. This letter was shown to many of his mining friends, and was the means of directing a large emigration from Colorado to the new diggings in Montana. As for himself, he undertook to make the journey, was intercepted by hostile Indians, but finally reached Boise city, Idaho, where he remained till April, 1864, when he came through to Virginia city, M. T. Mr. Stuart was married at Deer Lodge City in November, 1865, to Miss Ellen Armell, daughter of the agent at the Big Thunder Agency. Mrs. Stuart was born in Dakota, near Yankton. They have two sons and five daughters. Mr. Stuart is widely and favorably known throughout the territory as an experienced miner, a brave and true comrade, and is acknowledged as one of the best posted mining men in the mountains. His present home is in the northern suburbs of Deer Lodge city.

DR. LOUIS TERRY was born in Louisiana April 4, 1833. At 17 years of age left for California, and engaged in practicing medicine in Siskyou Co. In 1859 he was appointed, by President Lincoln, physician and surgeon for Ft. Lapway, Washington Ter. This was before the organization of Montana. After serving eight years, the doctor left on the White Pine mining excitement, and located at Elka. Here he practiced for eight years; came to Deer Lodge City; practiced one year; was then appointed by the Government, under Commissioner Price, physician for the Flat Head agency. In 1883 he came to Missoula, where he practiced medicine for some time.

MRS. MARGARET W. THOMAS, Stuart, first came to Bannack, M. T., with Mr. Thomas, in 1863, where they remained a few weeks, after which they removed to Virginia City, M. T., where Mr. Thomas was prospecting. Until the 1st of December, 1863, Mr. Thomas was also working a claim in Bevin's Gulch, after which they went to Brigham City, Utah. In the spring of 1864 they moved to Malad City, Idaho. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas were the first settlers of that town. On the 1st of May, 1868, they went to Salmon river, thence to Horse Prairie, M. T., on their way to Deer Lodge, M. T., arriving in Deer Lodge valley, October 1, 1868. In 1870 Mr. Thomas located a ranch of 160 acres in Deer Lodge valley, and afterward increased his property until he accumulated 480 acres. September 5, 1879, Mr. Thomas died, leaving the property without a will. Mrs. Thomas is now living on this property, letting her farm to be worked on shares. She also owns six or seven hundred head of cattle, which one of her sons is taking care of for her near Fort Benton. Mrs. Thomas, formerly Miss Margaret Evans, was married first to Wm. Harris, July 4, 1848, and has two sons living by this marriage. By her subsequent marriage to Mr. Thomas she has also two sons.

WILLIAM PRICE THOMAS, P. O. Willowglen, Warm Spring Creek, is one of the many who came to Montana with his family in an early day to make a home. In 1863 he arrived in Alder Gulch, before any houses had been erected, and with his family of six children and wife, was among the first settlers of that famous camp. Mr. Thomas brought with him fourteen cows and immediately started a small dairy, selling butter from $2 to $2.50 per pound. He remained in Alder Gulch until the winter of 1864-65, when he moved to Deer Lodge Valley and settled on his present ranch. Here he found three or four Frenchmen living with Indian squaws, and his was the first white family in this part of the valley. Mr. Thomas was born in Caermarthenshire, South Wales, May 8, 1813. He emigrated to America in 1850, going first to St. Louis. In 1851 he moved to Utah with ox teams, and resided there until 1863. Renouncing the Mormon faith, he with a large number of others started for Montana. The party was escorted by Gen. Connor as far as Snake River, to protect them from the wrath of the Mormon leaders. Mr. Thomas was married September 30, 1842, to Miss Margaret Evans, and they have had born to them eleven children, six of whom are still living: John P. Thomas, born September 19, 1843, resides in Judith Basin; is married and has one child. Evan P. Thomas, born March 23, 1845, resides on Lost Creek; is married and has three living children. Daniel P. Thomas, born July 7, 1853, resides in Judith Basin; is married and has one child; Mary Ann Thomas, born August 28, 1855; married Henry Showers, has two children and resides in Phillipsburgh. Margaret S. Thomas, born July 24, 1859; married William Woodward, has two children and resides in Butte. Joseph Henry Thomas, born April 6, 1863; unmarried and resides at home.

JAMES TOMPKINS, an old pioneer of Montana, was born in the State of New York, January 21, 1834. At the age of twenty-one he moved to Michigan, and one year later to Illinois, remaining in that State six years. He came to Montana in 1862, first stopping in Bannack. He prospered in mining operations, and in 1863 went to Alder Gulch. He owned ground on Elk Horn bar. In 1867 he moved to Pioneer, which has been his place of residence. He is still engaged in mining.

WILLIAM H. TRIPPET, attorney at law, Deer Lodge City, was born in Gibson Co., Ind., in 1847; was educated at the university of Indiana at Bloomington, and graduated in the literary class of 1869 and in the law class of 1872. He was admitted to the bar and practiced law in Gibson Co., Ind., from 1872 to 1882, during which period he served four years as prosecuting attorney of the eleventh judicial circuit of Indiana. In July, 1882, he came to Deer Lodge City, and entered upon the practice of his profession. Mr. Trippet is a well read and capable attorney, and one who is bound to win his way to the front ranks of the profession.

H. H. ZENOR, of the firm of Kennon & Zenor, hardware merchants, Deer Lodge City, was born in January, 1843, in Bowling Green, Ind., where he was educated and grew to maturity. At the breaking out of the rebellion, he early espoused the cause of the Union, enlisting in the 14th Indiana regiment and serving until discharged on account of a wound. Soon after his return he was appointed clerk in the auditor's office of his native county, which position he filled with efficiency for two years. In 1867 he came to Deer Lodge City, and was subsequently appointed clerk in the county recorder's office, where his worth became so apparent within a year that he was delegated deputy treasurer of Deer Lodge county, officiating in said capacity for a year. He was then chosen by the citizens to the office of county clerk and recorder. After a two years' successful term, he withdrew for a time from official cares and duties, much honored for his integrity and the assiduity with which he attended to public affairs. After a career of mining in the vicinity of Deer Lodge City, he, in 1873, formed a partnership with R. T. Kennon to operate a general hardware business, to which he has given his personal attention since. In 1878 the voters of his county elected him as one of the county commissioners of which board he was chairman for four years. Aside from his mercantile interests he is dealing in real estate and mines. Mr. Zenor was married in February, 1873, to Helen Witter, of Vermont, and one son, Howard M., has been born to them.

PETER VALITON, Deer Lodge City, was born in December, 1832, in the Department of Doubs, France. In 1852 he began learning the baker's trade. This he followed for four years; then emigrated to the United States and located near Dubuque, Ia., where he farmed during two years; he was for a short time in St. Louis, going thence to St. Joseph, Mo., where he opened a saloon, which he kept for three years. This he sold out, then removed to Marysville, Kan., and took charge of Gen. Marshall's general merchandise outfit, farm, freighting, etc., holding the position three years; locating next at Denver, Col., he acted as agent for Marshall & White. In the spring he established a general store at Blue river, and in 1862 moved to Nevada, leaving his brother in charge of the store. He opened a restaurant at Virginia City, which he kept for two years, returning to Denver in the fall of 1864 and remaining through the winter. Coming to Montana, he acted as wagon-master for Joe Merrian's mule train; went to Confederate Gulch and put up the second business house in the town; he formed a partnership with John Keeling, and engaged in the general merchandise business, which was carried on for one year; he sold out and became a miner, but sold out his claim after six months, and went to Denver to bring back to Montana his mother and sister. After wintering at St. Joe, he came up the Missouri river to Fort Benton, and arrived at Deer Lodge City in August, 1867; he bought a stock of goods and engaged in general merchandise business, but in the next winter closed his stock out in job lots, and bought John Grant's brewery in April, 1868, carrying on the business until 1878. He formed a partnership with Mr. Marchesseau in 1876 and established a grocery at Butte, carrying business on under the firm name of Marchesseau & Valiton. This firm continued business until 1883, when they sold out. In 1881 Mr. Valiton engaged in the sheep business, which he closed out in 1883. He has ranches near Deer Lodge City, which he devotes principally to agriculture. He married Miss Catharine Epplevon, of Michigan, in 1875. She died in 1877.

J. E. VAN GUNDY, Deer Lodge City. The Western Brewery of Deer Lodge City was established in February, 1874, by J. E. Van Gundy. It consumes about 150,000 lbs. of barley per year, of which the average price is $2.75 per 100 lbs. The brewery produces 1,500 barrels of beer annually. The building first cost $5,000, being built on a small scale, the capacity being only 125 barrels per annum. Recent additions have brought it to its present capacity, at a cost of $25,000. The building is mostly brick, with all modern improvements, and made to meet the demands of the business, while the beer produced is of a superior quality and stands at the head of the market. The business done by this brewery in one year is about $40,000 Mr. Van Gundy is a native of Ohio, born October 9, 1834, in Cincinnati; he removed to California in 1854, and mined in Sierra Co., remaining there until 1862, when he went to Nevada. In 1865 he came to Montana, and mined first in Blackfoot, but after a short time went to Beartown and mined in all the tributaries of Bear creek, with, however, poor success. He owned a half interest in a mine in Phelan Gulch, which proved to be a good-paying mine in 1875, and it was the first successful mining venture in this section. The mine is worked every season with some success. Mr Van Gundy, like most of the miners in those days, worked hard and long, but finally becoming tired of this sort of life, abandoned the mines with scarcely anything to show for his labor. He married Mrs. Cornelia Lyons December 2, 1879, relict of Henry H. Lyons. They have two children: Elmer Jacob, born November 10, 1880; Katie Alveretta, born March 11, 1882.

W. D. VESTAL, Upper Deer Lodge Valley, P. O. Stuart, came to Montana in 1881. He first lived and worked in Butte in a spring and bed factory. In 1882 he went to Deer Lodge valley, where he was engaged in teaching school for a time, after which he followed the same business in Silver Bow until the spring of 1883, when he rented a farm in Upper Deer Lodge valley which he has been operating since that time. Mr. Vestal was born in North Carolina in 1858, but spent most of his life in Iowa. He graduated at Grinnell, also from the State University law department. He was married to Miss Lizzie Hughes in 1882, and has one child.

THOMAS F. WARD, Deer Lodge City, clerk and recorder of Deer Lodge county, was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., December 29, 1855. When two years of age his parents brought him to Kansas City, Mo. He was educated at St. Mary's College, Kan. He came to Montana in 1878, and engaged with the mercantile house of Caplice & Smith, at Butte, and subsequently went to Phillipsburg in the employ of the same parties as bookkeeper. He was elected to the offices he now holds in the fall of 1882, and entered upon the discharge of his duties on the 18th of December of the same year. Mr. Ward has proven a competent and popular officer.

E. B. WATERBURY, notary public and conveyancer, Anaconda, was born May 11, 1825, in Connecticut; was raised in New York city; in 1849-50, passed eighteen months in Central America; re-entered the wholesale liquor trade in New York city on returning to the States. In 1852 he was appointed manager of a theatrical troupe and visited every city of importance throughout the country until 1856. In 1859 he took a stock of goods to Denver, Colo., and established the store still known as the "Elephant Corral." In November, 1861, he started for California, and was caught in the terrible storm of that year on the summit of the Sierra Nevada range, but arrived safely at his destination. He was engaged to take charge of a steamer on the Snake and Colorado rivers; was given charge of the Steam Navigation Co's liquor store, which position he held for eighteen months, then went to Lewiston, Idaho, as agent for Wells, Fargo & Co. In 1863-64 he was a member of the Idaho Legislature. In 1865 he came to Montana and established an auctioneer's office at Helena, visited the Elk Creek Country a year after, returned to Helena, re-established his auctioneer's office and was elected a member of the legislature. In the spring of 1867 he went to Phillipsburg, where he served as Recorder and Notary, and was largely interested in mines in that vicinity for thirteen years. He visited Clear Creek and expended whatever money he had in the development of mines. He next visited Butte, where, with C. E. Irvin, he went into the conveyancing business, and so continued until 1883, when he opened a conveyancing and notary's office at Anaconda. Mr. Waterbury is married. Politically, he is a Democrat.

WM. WEINSTEIN, a merchant, Phillipsburg, was born in Russian Poland, March 15, 1843. He came to America in August, 1864, and first located in New York, where he remained six months. He then moved to Leavenworth, Kan., and opened a clothing store. In 1866 he came to Montana with his stock of goods and opened a store in Helena in partnership with his brother. In August, 1867, he moved to Phillipsburg and opened a store filled with general merchandise. In 1874 he married Miss Fessy Silverman, daughter of Nathan Silverman. They have three children: Harrie, born September 22, 1875; Alice, born February 10, 1877; Abraham, born December 17, 1878. Besides his mercantile business at Phillipsburg, Mr. Weinstein owns 1,200 feet of the Granite Mountain lead.

ANDREW WHITESIDE, P. O. Bear's Mouth, was born in Ireland, February 27, 1841, and educated in the common schools. In 1855 he came to America and settled in Nevada, engaging in mining. He moved thence to Boise, thence to British Columbia, and thence to Montana, locating in Bear Gulch, where he mined one season. He then ran a pack train until 1868, when he bought his present home from Chas. Errick. Mr. Whiteside owns 320 acres of farming and meadow land, located on Harvey Creek, and is engaged in stock raising and farming. He is one of the largest vegetable producers in the Territory. In 1868 he married Mary Errick, daughter of Charles Errick. They have two daughters: Julia C., born July 1, 1870; Lizzy J., born February 28, 1872.

A. A. WHITTIER, Blackfoot City, was born in Vermont, in October, 1835; educated in that state, and remained working on a farm until he was 21 years of age, at which time he sailed for California, landing at San Francisco, and leaving at once for Yreka, Siskiyou county, where he engaged in a bakery, and also in the fruit growing business, five miles from town Our subject and his brother planted on this farm 12,000 fruit trees of various kinds. At the same time Mr. Whittier owned a ½ interest in a toll road from Yreka and Scott's Valley. He remained at this point until 1862, when he sold out his interests and removed to the Florence diggings, in Idaho, where he conducted a bakery for a year. Locating next at Idaho City, he followed his former business till 1864, and from this point went to Portland, Ore., and remained until 1865. He then located in the Cœur d'Alene mountains, and remained two months, engaged in prospecting, but without success. He finally came to Blackfoot City, and commenced work on Carpenter's Bar, buying a claim, for which he paid $900. After working this one year he sold out for $800, and left for San Francisco, where he spent the winter, returning in the spring of 1867 to Blackfoot City. Mr. Whittier owns at this time all of Carpenter's Bar and Gulch, save 1,000 feet of the Bar; also a large water ditch, with a capacity of 500 inches. There are in this gulch two flumes, the first 32 inches in width and 1 mile in length, running through unworked ground, and the other 24 inches wide, ¼ mile in length, and 12 feet in bed rock, which will answer the purpose of working 800 feet of the gulch and bar. They have six telegraphs for hydraulic purposes. Mr. Whittier estimates this gulch as yielding, since discovered, $5,000,000. Our subject was married, January 7, 1877, to Miss Flavilla Slaper. Mrs. Whittier was born in Shasta, Shasta Co., Cal., on February 3, 1854. She was educated in that town and at Cincinnati, O., where she completed her education. She came to Montana in 1869 and settled first 11 miles west of Helena. In 1872 she came to Deer Lodge, where she remained one year, then moved to Blackfoot City, where she was married to Mr. Whittier. By the exercise of those capacities which bring upon men honorable reputations, Mr. Whittier has acquired sufficient wealth to enable himself and family to live at ease, and those who know him can testify that he is deserving of all comforts which may be granted him.

JOHN B. WILLIAMS, Blackfoot City, son of Barnet and Elizabeth Williams, was born in Pembrokeshire South Wales, December 3, 1839. In April, 1841, his parents brought him to America, locating first at Buffalo, N. Y., then in Cleveland, O., where they settled. In 1845 his father went to the lead mines at Dodgeville, Wis., and engaged in selling goods and dealing in lumber. Mr. Williams was educated at Dodgeville, and remained there until 1863, continuing the business of his father from 1859 until that year, when he sold out and removed to Montana. Mr. Williams was very young when his parents sailed from Wales, but they told him how the ship on which they made the voyage was lost in the fog and drifted off her course, landing on the coast of Newfoundland, when a fresh start was taken. When Mr. Williams came to the northwest it was all Idaho. He first stopped at Boise City, remaining three years, engaging in freighting from Umatilla landing, in Oregon. He continued this business until 1866, when he came to Blackfoot City, which he has made his home since that time, engaging in mining and prospecting. He is now working on Carpenter's Bar, and prospering. His mines yield from $8 to $10 per day to the hand, clear of all expenses. Mr Williams is a very hard worker, and deserves success.

J. H. WILLIAMS, P. O. Deer Lodge, is a native of Richmond, Ky., born February 16, 1842. He resided in Kentucky with his parents until he was seven years old, when he moved with his mother to Missouri, having lost his father by death in 1848. He is a son of John A., and Lydia E. Williams, and the eldest of their four children. In 1865 he crossed the plains to Montana, and located in Deer Lodge valley, on Race Track Creek, about eight miles from Deer Lodge City, and engaged in stock raising and farming. He has resided in the valley ever since, except three years spent in Colorado, Dakota, and in the Black Hills, but kept his Race Track ranch and residence. He now owns 160 acres of his Race Track ranch, and about three miles above Deer Lodge he has 320 acres, besides a 160-acre homestead, and 160 acres under the desert land act, making in all 480 acres of good and valuable land. He has 60 horses and owns a quarter interest in a band of 3,800 sheep. Mr. Williams was married in 1877, in Colorado, to Martha Butcher. To them have been born two children: Harry H. and Clifton. Mr. Williams is a member of the Christian Church, and was a Granger in the time of the Grange movement.

WILLIAM WILLIAMS, sheep grower, Deer Lodge, has, in partnership with his brother, two ranches, near Race Track Creek, situated about eight miles south of Deer Lodge, where they have a stock of 5,000 sheep. Mr. Williams is one of the pioneers of Montana of 1864. He was born in Kentucky in 1843, removed with his parents to Missouri in childhood, and came to Montana in 1864, and located in Deer Lodge valley. Since 1869 he has been engaged in stock growing, at which business he has been quite successful. He recently built the fine brick residence now his home in Deer Lodge.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

GALLATIN COUNTY.

JARVIS AKIN, Bozeman, is of New England birth, as were his ancestors for several generations. His father was of English origin. Three Akin brothers came to America long ere the Revolution; two of them served in the war, his great grandfather having been one of the two. Jarvis' father was a shoe manufacturer, in Conn. In the autumn of 1852 Mr. Akin moved to Wisconsin, five miles west of Racine, and engaged in farming until April, 1864, when he determined to cross the plains to Montana. Carrying out his purpose, he arrived in Virginia City the same summer, and from here went to Gallatin City, where he engaged in farming for two years, then returned to the East and spent one year, and again, in 1867, crossed the plains via the northern route to Fort Benton, thence to Helena and on to Gallatin City, where he located upon a farm again. In February, 1869, he moved into his hotel in Gallatin City, the first regular hotel in the place. As soon as the land was surveyed Mr. Akin had a town site platted, and recorded under the name Gallatin City, where he kept a hotel until 1880. He then came to Bozeman and purchased his present home. Mr. Akin was married in 1858, and by this union there were three children. The first child died in infancy; Nellie and Frank, the other two, are yet living. Mr. Akin lost his wife, and was, after some time, married to Miss Alethe Fuller, a native of Brighton, Livingston Co., Mich. Mr. Akin has a beautiful home near Bozeman. His farm is provided with all buildings necessary for the care of stock, grain and farming utensils.

WILLIAM W. ALDERSON, Bozeman, was born in Arkendale, North Riding of Yorkshire, England, February 28, 1831, being the eighth of a family of twelve children. Here he attended the parish school about five years, receiving the rudiments of an English education; but as soon as he was able he was compelled to do his share toward supporting the large family, and at the age of thirteen he went to work in the lead mines. Here he remained until seventeen years old, when he emigrated to America with his parents in 1848. They settled in the lead mining districts of Illinois, near Galena, and until 1854 William was in the employ of his oldest brother, S. Alderson, who was extensively engaged in merchandising and smelting at and in the vicinity of Council Hill, Jo Daviess Co., Ill. In 1854 he married Frances, daughter of Edward W. Weatherly, a prosperous miner of Shullsburg, La Fayette Co., Wis., where he located, and engaged in merchandising on his own account In 1858 he moved to Winona Co., Minn., remaining about eighteen months, when he returned to Illinois and again took charge of his brother's business at Council Hill. Later he engaged in farming until the spring of 1864, when, with his younger brother John, he started across the plains for what is now Montana, then Idaho. Heretofore all immigration into Montana had been through South Pass and across the Snake River plains; but this year two much shorter roads were opened by Bridger and Bozeman by way of the Yellowstone. Mr. Alderson came over the Bridger road via Wind River, Grey Bull, Clarke's Fork, and the Yellowstone, into the Gallatin valley, arriving early in July, 1864, on the present site of Bozeman. He settled down at once on a claim one mile south of that town and engaged in farming. That year the first grain was raised in Gallatin valley, and farming was a paying business. In 1865 a small patch of winter wheat, the first in Montana, was grown near Bozeman and sold at twenty-five dollars per bushel. But it required capital to get a start. Mr. A. sent a team to Cache valley, Utah, to get seed wheat, oats, etc., which cost him on his ranch twenty cents per pound. His plow, transported by team from Galena, Ill., was bought at Virginia City for $150; harrow teeth, forged from old wagon tires, cost forty cents per pound; seed potatoes thirty-five cents per pound, flour fifty cents to $1 per pound, etc., so that the outlay was great before even a small crop could be raised. In 1865 he made a trip to Fort Benton and Cow Island to receive a Wood's self-raking harvester which had been shipped up the Missouri river at a cost of twelve and one-half cents to $1 per pound, the wagon haul costing an equal amount. This was the first machine of the kind used in Gallatin valley, if not indeed in Montana. He combined the dairy business with farming, and took the first premiums for butter and cheese at the first territorial fair in 1868. That year his family, consisting of his wife and four children, joined him on his ranch via Missouri river. Although Mr. Alderson had never had the advantage of any schooling, except the few years in the old English parish school, he had by constant study qualified himself to take a leading part in the young community with which he had cast his lot. Bozeman was gradually growing into a thrifty town; but most of her citizens were too busy with money-getting to spare time for anything else. Mr. Alderson saw farther than most of them and realized that this settlement was not a temporary affair, but was destined to grow into a prosperous, permanent community, in which it was high time that moral and religious interests were looked after. He gave, therefore, much valuable time to school and church interests, and if Bozeman is to-day noted for its excellent schools and live, prosperous churches, much of it is due to the early labors of Mr. Alderson. He held the first religious services in the valley, organized the first Sunday-school in Bozeman, and built there in 1868 the first church edifice, which was also the first frame building. He was at that time connected with the Methodist Episcopal church, and even then his public discourses and religious efforts were characterized by liberal views. Of late years his views have assumed such a free-thinking tone as to be incompatible with the tenets held by all orthodox churches, and he is not now identified with any religious society. He was twelve years a member of the public school board. In 1873 he was appointed United States Indian Agent of the Milk River Agency, comprising the Yanctonnais Sioux, and the Canoe band of the Assiniboins. While he occupied this post no serious difficulties occurred, except the shooting of the government interpreter, Benoit, by a number of Sitting Bull's band. They were difficult and treacherous Indians to manage; but in spite of all difficulties his efforts to induce them to become dwellers in houses and tillers of the soil were successful to a degree. In 1876 he resigned, and returning to Bozeman gave his attention to his large real estate interests there. His original location, also subsequent purchases of land adjoining, had proved very fortunate, and a good part of the present flourishing city of Bozeman stands on his additions to the town. Looking for a wider field of usefulness, he bought in 1877 a moribund local paper, the Bozeman Avant Courier, of which he has since been proprietor and editor. Although without any journalistic or literary training he made at once great improvements in his paper, and succeeded soon in putting it abreast of the very best Montana journals, which means a good deal, as the territory has always been noted for the remarkable excellence of its newspapers. As an editor he was naturally drawn into politics, and has been an active and influential member of the Republican party. He has been a delegate to nearly every county convention, and to a large majority of the territorial conventions. When Bozeman received a city organization in 1883, his fellow citizens showed their appreciation of him as a public spirited citizen, by electing him alderman of his ward, and re-electing him in 1884 for two years. In 1885 he was the Republican candidate for mayor. His family consists of nine children: Matt W., business manager of the Avant Courier, married to Martha Rice, of Pittsfield, Mass., resides in Bozeman; Edward C., postmaster at Bozeman, married to Carrie Lafferty, of Bozeman; E. Lina, married to Shaff Housten, and resides in Bozeman; Mary F., married to Milton M. Russell, resides at Thompson's Falls, M. T.; Annie G., Margaret H., Charles R., Willis B., and George F., all born at Bozeman, and now residing there with their parents.

MATT. W. ALDERSON, of Bozeman, business manager of the Avant Courier, was born in Shullsburg, Wis., April 15, 1855. His early schooling was obtained in that place. He left Wisconsin in company with his mother, brother, and two sisters, in April, 1866, to join his father in Bozeman. The trip was made by rail to St. Louis, by boat to Fort Benton, and from the latter place by wagon. Bozeman was reached July 3, the journey having occupied over two-and-one-half months. Mr. Alderson worked on the farm of his father, attending the schools of Bozeman in the winter months, until 1873, when he removed to Fort Peck to accept the position of Post Commissary, which he held for two years, making in the meantime several trips on horseback and otherwise to neighboring posts. On one of these trips, in company with Gustavus Tyler, he was lost for nearly six days on "Lonesome Prairie," between Forts Benton and Assiniboine, without anything to eat. In the fall of 1875 he went to New York city to attend the American Institute of Phrenology. Completing the course he returned westward to Dubuque, Ia., where he attended Baylies' Commercial College. Early in 1876 he formed a partnership with Carl L. Stanley, and engaged in sheep raising in Colorado. Leaving his interests in charge of his partner, he visited the Centennial in September and October, and passed the winter of 1876–77 in lecturing on Phrenology in southern Minnesota. Early in the spring of 1877 he returned to Colorado, but at the earnest solicitation of his father, left that state for Montana to take charge of the Avant Courier. The Indians had just been driven out of the Yellowstone valley, and being curious to see that country, he left Bismarck on a steamboat bound for Miles City, from which place to Bozeman he traveled on horseback, making the trip, 360 miles, in seven days. He arrived in Bozeman August 16, 1877, and took charge of the paper the next day. Without the experience of having written even one column of matter for publication, he conducted the paper for two-and-a-half years, and was the first to make a financial success of the venture. His first knowledge of the printing business was obtained in rather a peculiar way. While working on his father's dairy farm in 1872, after completing his day's work, he would walk to town and watch the printers. He soon had a stick in his hand and was busy learning the case. At the same time he was not slighting his other work, as is proven by the fact that his cheese took red ribbon and diploma at the Territorial fair that year. In September, 1877, he acquired a half interest in the Courier, which he retained until October, 1880. Having lost heavily in sheep in the summer of 1880, Mr. Alderson went to Colorado, and in September of that year disposed of his property there to his partner. To meet his obligations he disposed of his interest in the Courier, and with $500 left attended lectures in New York city till the end of November. Leaving that city he spent four months lecturing on Phrenology in southern Ohio. In May, 1881, he returned to Bozeman and assumed the position of business manager of the Avant Courier, which he now occupies. Mr. Alderson was married in Pittsfield, Mass., June 22, 1882, to Miss Martha E. Rice, daughter of Amasa Rice of that place. Mrs. Alderson was born May 21, 1861, and is a lineal descendant, on her mother's side, of the distinguished Coffin family of Nantucket Island.

GEORGE J. ALLEN, P. O., Livingston, was born January 19, 1844, in Henry Co., Mo. His parents were George J. and Esther M. Allen, from East Tennessee. Our subject came to Montana in 1863, mined in Alder Gulch six months, then mined in Last Chance for nine months, when he returned to Missouri. In 1874 he married Miss Bettie J. Fisher, daughter of Jacob and Jane E. Fisher, of Howard Co., Mo. He resided in Henry Co., Mo., until 1880, when he returned to Montana and located on the Upper Yellowstone, eight miles south of the present town of Livingston, known as Richland, where in February, 1882, he was appointed Postmaster. He retained the position until the last of December, 1882, when a town was built at Livingston and the office was moved there. He is now engaged in farming and stock-raising. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Allen's political sentiments are Democratic.

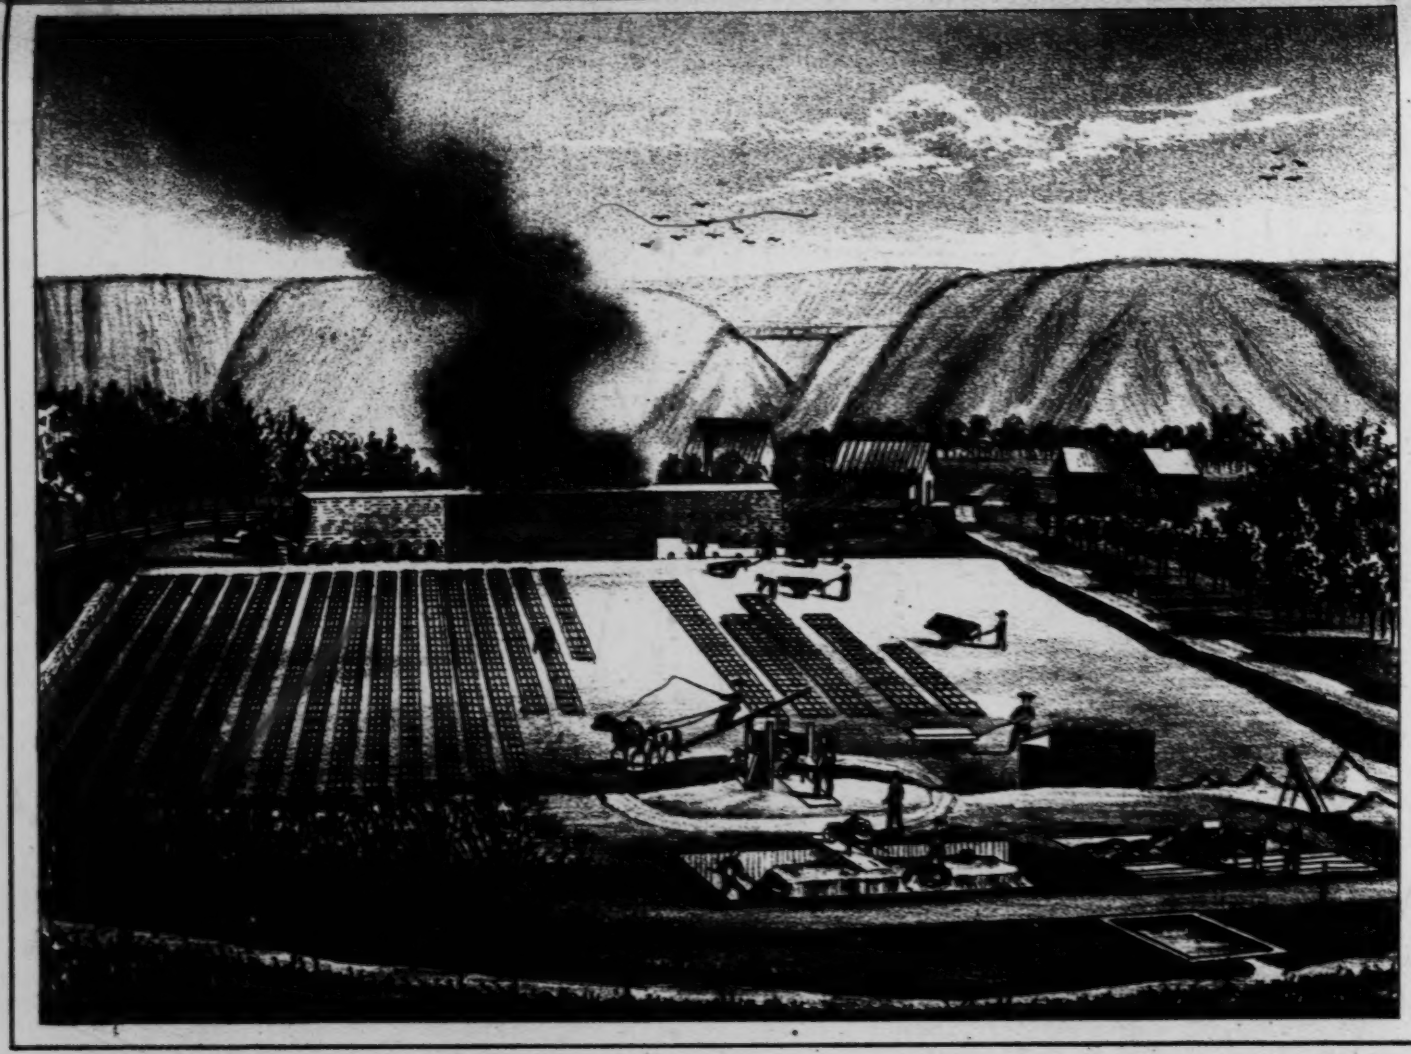
DREW B. ALLEN, P. O. Livingston, of the real estate firm of "Allen Brothers," was born in New York city in 1860. When 12 years of age he accompanied his parents to Europe, attended school two years in Dresden, Germany, and one year in Paris; spent a short time in London and returned to New York. There he took a regular course and graduated from a leading business college. He came to Miles City, M. T., in 1880, going from there to Lisbon, Dak., where he was in the real estate and banking business. The firm still transacts a real estate business at Lisbon, under the management of the elder brother, Frank, and also has an office at Chicory, M. T. The Allen Brothers are wide-awake young men, well-adapted to the business in which they are engaged. They opened one of the first offices at Livingston in their line, and have worked up a fine business.

EDWIN D. ALSTON, Bozeman, of the Gallatin valley, is the son of John J. and Emily Alston, and was born in Jo Daviess Co., Ill., in 1842, where he lived until March, 1863, when he went to Colorado, and engaged in quartz mining. From there he came to Virginia City, M. T., which place he reached on October 1, 1863. Here he worked in the placer mines until February, 1865, when he came to Last Chance mines, or what is now Helena. Securing a claim he worked it until 1867, when he sold out and left for Fort Benton, and returned by steamer to the states. In March, 1870, he came back to Montana and worked in the Summit mines in 1870 and 1871. Since that time he has been in the Gallatin valley farming; has a homestead of 120 acres, besides 320 acres of railroad land. Was married December 11, 1860, to Julia A. Lethlean, of Jo Daviess Co., Ill., and there are eight children: Wm. Edwin, Alice May, Zetta Amelia, Adelia, Joseph Centennial, Charles, Leonora and Emily Elizabeth, aged respectively, (in 1883), 15, 14, 11, 9, 8, 7, 5 and 1 years.

ROBERT ALTON, M.D., Livingston, physician and surgeon to the Northern Pacific Railway, was born in Carbondale, Pa., February 9, 1860, and is the son of Davis Alton, a prominent manufacturer of iron of the Lehigh valley. He was educated at the schools of Burlington, N. J. In 1878 he entered the medical department of the Wooster College of Cleveland, O., and graduated in the class of 1881. He was appointed house surgeon of Charity Hospital, and demonstrator of anatomy at the Wooster College. In the summer of 1882 he went to Colorado, and in March, 1883, came to Livingston, and entered upon the practice of his profession. Dr. Alton is a rising young physician, whose practice is rapidly extending.

LARS ANDERSON, Bozeman, contractor and carpenter, is a native of Sweden, and was born September 27, 1836. In the spring of 1869 he came to America, and lived in Omaha, Neb., three years. In 1872 he came to Montana, and settled at Bozeman, where he worked two years in a brickyard, afterward turning his attention to carpenter work. He assisted in tearing down the old Bozeman cabin on the corner of Main and Bozeman streets, and erected the new building now standing there. For the past five years he has been engaged in contracting and building. Mr. Anderson was married July 11, 1862, to Miss Johanna Johnson. In September, 1877, they left Bozeman for a visit to their native country, returning in June, 1878.

CHAS. ANGUS, baker, P. O. Livingston, was born in Essex county, England, in 1844. At the age of 15 he emigrated to Canada, where he learned the harness makers' trade. In 1862 he returned to England, but in 1864 again emigrated, this time to the United States. Upon his arrival he enlisted in the 1st Delaware Regiment, and at the close of war enlisted in the 2d Cavalry. He was sent west, and stationed in Kansas, under Gen. Pope, from 1866 to 1867, when he was transferred to Gen. Crook's command at Fort Laramie, afterward under Gen. Augur. In 1868 he resigned, went to Colorado and engaged in mining at Central City. In 1873 he re-enlisted in Company A, 2nd Cavalry, Capt. Dewees, and was under Gen. Crook in the Department of the Platte in 1876–77. He participated in the battle of the Rosebud, and served afterward under Gens. Davidson and Hatch. In March, 1882, he applied for a discharge, and obtained it. He then worked for the Diamond R. Co. at Miles City for two and one-half months; then accepted a position with Smith & Hagy at Huntley. This firm afterward removed to Livingston.



BRICK KILN OF CAREY & LEWIS - 1 MILE SOUTH OF MAIN ST. - BOZEMAN - MONT.

In April, 1883, Mr. Angus resigned his position with the firm, and engaged in the bakery business with E. Holmes. October 26, 1883, he bought Mr. Holmes' interest, and since then has been conducting the business alone.

HORACE ANNIS, blacksmith, Bozeman, was born in Orange Co., Va., June 13, 1816. He settled in Illinois in the fall of 1837; moved to Colorado in 1859, and to Montana in 1863 — landing at Bannack June 1, that year, and establishing a blacksmith shop. In the spring of 1864, he was one of a company of five prospectors, who visited the head waters of the Columbia in Canadian territory; returned to Three Forks in December, and the following spring made another trip up the Columbia. He sold his land claims near Gallatin City, and went to Helena, where he mined and carried on a blacksmith shop until March, 1866, when he joined in the Big Blackfoot stampede; thence to Hell-gate, where he established a ferry at Bob Dempsey's ranch. Returning to Gallatin county, and remaining a short time at Gallatin City and Hamilton, he settled finally at Bozeman, where, with S. W. Cook, he established the first blacksmith shop. This he sold to T. C. Powers in 1877. In 1874, he with nine others constructed the Norwegian Ditch at Pony. He is still interested in mines on Clarke's Fork. He was married at Prophetstown, Ill., December 30, 1839, to Miss Portia Nichols, a native of Essex Co., Vt. He was elected county probate judge in 1860, in Boulder Co., Colo.

F. K. ARMSTRONG, Bozeman, was born at Rockford, on the Yadkin river, Surry Co., N. C., on the 6th day of March, 1849. When quite young his parents came west and located at St. Joseph, Mo., where they remained for about one year, and then located in Doniphan Co., Kan. The subject of this sketch received his literary education at Highland University; afterward read law with Gen. W. W. Guthrie at Atchison Kan., and in the fall of 1874 entered the senior class of the law department of the State University of Missouri, graduating with the class of 1875. In the same year he located at Troy, Kan., the seat of justice for Doniphan county, and began the practice of law. He was elected prosecuting attorney in the fall of 1876 for that county; served two years, and at the close of his term of office came to Montana, located at Bozeman, Gallatin Co., and has continuously since practiced his profession there. In the fall of 1880 he was elected prosecuting attorney for the first judicial district of the territory, and in the spring of 1882 formed a copartnership with L. A. Luce, his present partner. Mr. Armstrong was married to Miss Lora Lamme, daughter of Dr. A. Lamme, December 27, 1881, and has two children, both daughters. He was recently elected a member of the 14th legislative council, and was chosen president of that body.

WILLIAM H. ARNOLD, Bozeman, is a farmer by occupation and was born in Warren Co., Ky., in August, 1842, in which state he acquired an education. Becoming a victim of the Montana fever in 1864, he removed to that territory and found employment. He located a farm in 1866, but did not take up his present homestead until two years later. He now owns 560 acres of good wheat land, and is also engaged in horse and cattle raising. May 24, 1871, Mr. Arnold married Ellen Flannery, who has borne him eight children, as follows: William, Mary, Ella, Lewis, Anna, James W., Ella D. and Alice.

GEO. ASH, Bozeman, deputy-sheriff Gallatin Co., was born in the State of New York on the 16th day of August, 1848, and when a mere lad his parents moved to Illinois and engaged in farming and stock-raising for four successive years, obtaining premiums for fine horses at the fairs held in Henry Co., Ill. In 1872 he came to Montana, and forming a partnership with Mr. E. Fridley in the livery business at Bozeman so continued for a period of three and a half years. He then bought out the livery business of Geo. Wakefield and continued in the business several years, after which he sold out. In 1882 he served as deputy sheriff under W. S. McKenzie, and in February, 1883, was appointed undersheriff of Gallatin Co., under C. P. Blakely, which position he still occupies.

J. H. AYLSWORTH, Bozeman, manufacturer of lumber, etc., is a native of Rhode Island, and was born December 2, 1821. His parents were Hazard D. and Anna (Haven) Aylsworth, of revolutionary parentage, his mother's mother having been a spy in the continental army during the revolutionary war. When the subject of this sketch was three years old his parents removed to western New York, where he remained until eighteen years of age. In the spring of 1840 he removed to Illinois and lived in Du Page Co. two years, then went to Mount Morris, where he entered school in the old Sand Stone College, completing his education there. He afterward engaged in teaching for three years at White Oak Springs and at Sterling, Ill.; then went to Iowa and taught near Charles city and at Mason city for three years. Mr. Aylsworth and H. G. Parker, of Mason city, present member of the Iowa state senate, established the Cerro Gordo Republican in 1860. Upon the breaking out of the rebellion Mr. Aylsworth with his family removed to Joliet, Ill., and remained there until 1866, when he came to Montana, settling at Virginia city and engaging in building, and for two winters in teaching in the public schools. He then became interested in mining operations. In 1871 he went to Gallatin Co. and taught for three years at the agency of the Crow Indians. While there he became familiar with the Indian language and studied the nature and character of the Indians. He then came to Bozeman, remaining until 1876, when he engaged in mercantile business at Emigrant gulch, and remained until the spring of 1880. Returning to Bozeman, he bought his present mill and engaged in the lumber business and the manufacture of sash, doors and blinds. Since then he has carried on the business here with his son-in-law, A. J. Edsall. Mr. Aylsworth was united in marriage June 14, 1848, to Miss Caroline Gilbert, a native of Cattaraugus Co., N. Y. They have one daughter, Ella, now Mrs. A. J. Edsall, of Bozeman. The Aylsworth and Edsall planing mill and sash door and blind factory, near Main and Babcock streets, Bozeman, was built by Foster & Page (then of Bozeman) in 1872 at a cost of $5,700, as a planing mill. The original owners disposed of this property to F. D. Pease, who sold to an Eastern capitalist, who, in turn, sold to Martin & Myres, and they to C. Hoffman, from whom J. H. Aylsworth and A. J. Edsall purchased the buildings and machinery in January, 1880, for $3,000. Since 1880 new machinery has been introduced, so that now the entire interest of the firm in the mill may be valued at $10,000. The daily capacity for matching is 6,000 feet; surfacing 40,000 feet per day, together with sash, doors and blinds. The number of hands employed in this industry ranges from seven to ten. This was the first built at Bozeman.

WM. H. BABCOCK, Bozeman, of Babcock & Davis, was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., June 10, 1837, and is son of Godfrey I. and Princess Amelia Diffin Babcock. In 1844 his parents removed to Dodge Co., Wis., and engaged in farming. When twelve years old, Wm.'s father sent him to procure a switch, with which to receive a reprimand. For twenty years he was searching for that switch, or in other words returned not to his paternal home. In company with an older brother, he ran away from home and has since taken care of himself. He remained in Wisconsin until 1855, when he moved to Winona Co., Minn., and made a homestead entry, also worked at carpentering. After about one year, he returned to Wisconsin and followed his trade. The winter of 1858 he spent in Chelsea, Mich., and in the spring of 1859 left that state and fitted out in Wisconsin, to cross the plains to Pike's Peak. Hearing unfavorable news en route, he continued on his journey to Walla Walla, Washington Ty. In the winter of 1860–61 he visited San Francisco, Cal., and from there went to Orofino, Idaho, where he spent the summer of 1861. In the autumn of the same year he returned to Walla Walla and spent the winter, then went to Florence and fitted out on a general prospecting tour, arriving in Fort Benton in August, 1862. Above Fort Benton he got good color on a bar; then went to Prickly Pear valley and prospected the ground where Helena now stands, making gratifying discoveries. Capt. Fisk was at the head of this company, but he could not prevail on the Co. to remain, and not being in a condition to operate, he went on to the Gold creek, thence to Bannack with a load of whiskey for Granville Stewart. While in that town he worked at his trade till Christmas, 1862, when he came to the Gallatin valley with an ox team, and spent the winter at a camp near Hamilton. In March, 1863, he returned to Bannack, and in the summer Alder Gulch was found, and Mr. Babcock engaged in building. He spent the winter of 1863 in the Bitter Root valley, and in the spring of 1864 came to Bozeman, settling about two and a half miles north on what is now the How farm. Afterward he located the Churn creek ranch, or Meridith ranch. He sold that in 1867 or '68 and moved into Bozeman, where he has since made his home. He homesteaded the one-quarter section south of Bozeman, on a part of which Mr. Alderson's residence now stands. In 1880 Mr. Babcock, with Will F. Davis, erected the palatial residence on Church street called the Castle, a view of which can be seen on another page of this work. It is one of the most showy and costly residences in town. Mr. Babcock has done as much as any other citizen to build up Bozeman, by giving away large bodies of land, both in acre property and in lots. He donated eleven lots in Babcock's addition to Bozeman. In 1870 he visited the east, and again in 1871, when he was married to Miss Sarah D. Macy, of Blue Earth, Minn. Mr. Babcock, who was poor in purse when he came to Montana, has since accumulated a handsome property. The entire time spent by him in a school-room was but three months. He is emphatically a self-made man. He discovered the benefits of triangulation in measuring the width of the Snake river at its mouth, near old Walla Walla. Had he been an educated man, he would have been a scientist.

Babcock & Miles, hardware, P. O. Livingston. The above named firm was organized at Billings in the spring of 1882, and in October following established a house at Livingston. They also established a branch at Gardner, in the National Park. The firm carry the largest stock of hardware, tinware, farming implements, mining outfits and giant powder in the city. Their stock, selected from the best quality of material, enables them to give perfect satisfaction and supply all demands of the market. A. W. Miles was born at Westminster, Worcester Co., Mass., June 20, 1859. At the age of 19 he came west as paymaster's clerk in the army; served three years, and was stationed at Santa Fe, N. M., besides marching with the army during the numerous Indian campaigns with General Miles. In 1879 he was stationed at Fort Kehoe as paymaster, and held the position for two years. He then engaged in the hardware business at Billings, taking in Mr. Babcock as partner.

Geo. E. Barnaby, Bozeman, of the firm of Locky Bros., was born in Maine, in 1850. After completing his education he went to Nova Scotia and worked on a farm until 18 years old; then removed to Boston, Mass., and worked in a packing house for two years. From 1870 to 1875 he was in Texas; returning to Boston and coming to Bozeman, M. T., in the same year. Since coming to this territory he has been engaged in trading, prospecting and other business, and was with General Terry's command at the time Reno was rescued. In 1880 Mr. Barnaby took a position with Kleinschmidt & Bro., remaining two years, being then employed by the firm he is now with. Mr. Barnaby married Mrs. Henriette Castner, of Peru, in 1878. He owns his present home and various lots in the town.

E. A. Barton, Hamilton, the son of Ammi Barton, was born in New York, Septembre 14, 1831. At the age of 16 he began to earn his own living. At 23 he learned the carpenter trade. He went to Colorado in 1860 and remained till June, 1863, when he started for Montana. He arrived in Bannack in August, 1863; worked at his trade two weeks, then moved to Alder Gulch, where he worked at his trade and operated a stock ranch till October, 1864, when he moved to the Gallatin valley and located a farm upon which he lived till 1868. In 1878 he located 80 acres of land and commenced to build the Barton bridge, which he now owns; he also raises fine horses.

W. J. Beall, Bozeman, architect, contractor and builder, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., May 19, 1834, and was reared and educated in that state. In 1856 he went to Kansas, and there remained during a greater part of the Border troubles, going thence to Fort Laramie with a train for the Overland Express Co., returning shortly afterward to Kansas, and remaining until 1862, when he went to Denver, Colo. In March, 1863, he came to Montana, and engaged in mining in Virginia City. In the following October he went to Salt Lake City, and late in December following returned to Virginia City. In January, 1864, he located in the Gallatin valley and engaged in farming, being one of the earliest settlers in that vicinity. A part of his time he devoted to architectural work and contracting, building, etc., which occupation he has continued for many years. His original land claim cornered where the Laclede Hotel now stands, and extended half a mile west on Main street and half a mile north on Bozeman street in the present city of Bozeman. On said tract of land were laid out Beall's first and second additions to the town site of Bozeman. Himself and Mr. Rouse commenced building about the same time, and erected the first houses on the present town site. Mr. Beall was married on the 15th day of November, 1868, to Miss Rosa Viola Barker, daughter of Jas. Barker. She was born in Collinsville, Lewis Co., N. Y., and passed her youth in Herkimer Co., same state. She came to the Territory of Montana with her father, and was the first lady to come here with the intention of making it her permanent residence. Mr. Beall still owns 90 acres of his original tract of land adjoining Bozeman, and enjoys through just and honorable dealings the confidence and respect of the many citizens of that place.

Wm. A. Beam, member of the firm of Highsmith, Scully & Co., was born at Palestine, Ill., November 20, 1859. He was reared in the agricultural profession, working on the farm in summer and learning his trade by working in the shop in winter, continuing in Palestine until 1879. He then went to Carlisle, Ind., and worked six months, then back to Palestine a short time, after which he took the trail leading westward and came to Bozeman, M. T., where he has since remained.

Dr. A. A. Bearup, P.O. Livingston, surgeon dentist, located in Livingston November 1, 1883. He was born in Jefferson Co., New York, May 26, 1854, and educated at the State Normal School at Utica. In 1868 he went to Toronto, Canada, took a regular course at the Royal College of Dental Surgeons of Ontario, and graduated in 1875. He began practice at Groton, N. Y., and continued there till March, 1883, when he came to Billings, M. T., where he pursued the practice of dentistry till November 1, 1883, when he removed to Livingston, and opened the first dental office in that place. Dr. Bearup is master of his business and has a good outfit for work. He enjoys a good practice.

FRANK L. BENEPE, Bozeman, dealer in agricultural implements, machinery, etc., is a native of Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, and was born January 3, 1851 He was reared in Illinois, received his education in that State, and afterward engaged in teaching. He spent two years in Louisiana and Georgia. In 1876, during the Black Hills gold excitement, he joined the emigration and the following year came to Montana and engaged in teaching. In January, 1879, he established his present extensive business, the firm being Benepe & Davidson. They continued in the trade until April, 1883, when Mr. Benepe bought out the interest of his partner; and since then has carried on the business alone. He has built up a large trade, and has the leading business in agricultural implements and all kinds of farm machinery. He deals largely in grain, of which he buys and sells more than any man in the Gallatin valley. Mr. Benepe was united in marriage October 19, 1883, to Miss Nettie Trent, a native of Kansas. They have one of the finest homes in Bozeman.

A. BENHART, P. O. Bozeman, who resides on a farm on the East Gallatin River, is a native of Sweden, and was born on the 8th day of October, 1850, being the son of Weest and Christiana Benhart. Leaving Sweden in 1867, he emigrated to Texas, where he followed farming about two and a half years and then hired out to drive cattle across the plains to California, continuing on the cattle trail for nearly six months. He next went to Utah and engaged in farming for one year. Leaving Utah, he came to what is now Hamilton, in the Gallatin Valley, and worked as laborer for about four years. Next he mined in Jefferson Cañon, but shortly after went to Reese Creek, and after renting for a year or two, bought a farm of 160 acres, but sold out to George Thomas, of Thomas' Mills, and bought another farm of 160 acres on the East Gallatin, where he now lives. Mr. Benhart is unmarried.

H. G. BICKETT, Bozeman, son of H. and Elizabeth Bickett, was born October 3, 1820, near Lebanon, Washington Co., Ky., and was educated in Marion county. He was a farmer for eighteen years, after which time he engaged in the boot and shoe business, and continued in that occupation till the year 1841; he then took up carpentering for a time. Mr. Bickett was married in his twenty-fourth year to Miss Mary Russell, in 1844. In 1846 he removed from Kentucky to the State of Missouri, and was sick there during the following winter. He returned to Kentucky in March, 1847, and was engaged again in farming until 1854, after which he returned to Missouri, and settled in Nodaway county. He there engaged in farming for ten years; held the office of school director for two years, and was a member of the I. O G. T. Mr. Bickett was married to Miss Eliza Wells, June 8, 1856. Mrs. Bickett, daughter of Jacob and Mary Wills, was born November 1, 1830, in Iowa, and was there educated by Miss Virginia Campbell, who subsequently removed to McMinnville, Tenn., and married Mr. French. Miss Wells removed with her father and family to the State of Missouri, in 1854 and settled in Nodaway county, where she was married to Mr. Bickett, they remaining in said county until 1864, when they emigrated to Montana Territory, traveling the entire distance with teams. It took them four months to make the distance, during which time they underwent many trials and dangers of various descriptions. Mr. Bickett first stopped with his family 7 miles from Virginia City, and established a hotel. In March, 1865, he removed to Helena, and there engaged in mining in Grizzly Gulch. When Mr. Bickett came to this country times were very hard, though money was plentiful. Flour, owing to the scarcity of that article, cost at times $150 per 100 lbs. At this time it was not thought that farming in Montana would ever be a success, but notwithstanding these opinions a few of the settlers began to experiment, and meeting with unexpected success, continued to increase their crops. Our subject remained in Helena until 1866, during which time he was chiefly engaged in mining and teaming. In April, 1866, he removed to Gallatin Valley and located the farm where he now lives. He owns 300 acres of land, seventy-five of which are in cultivation and 160 enclosed. The average yield of wheat is thirty bushels per acre; oats, seventy-five bushels; potatoes, 300 bushels; strawberries grow in abundance and of the finest quality. Mr. Bickett owns fifteen horses and eleven head of cattle. Hog-raising he thinks would be successful. Mr. and Mrs. Bickett have one child, now Mrs. Robinson, who was born in Nodaway Co., Mo., December 15, 1858, and removed to Montana Territory in 1873.

B. F. BISEL, Bozeman, was born January 18, 1836, in Richland Co., O., being the fourth child and second son in a family of eight sons and daughters of Emanuel and Elizabeth (Black) Bisel, who were native Pennsylvanians. In an early day they removed to Ohio and resided there until their deaths. Our subject's boyhood days were spent on the farm. In 1864 he crossed the plains with an ox-team on what was known as the Bridger route to Montana. A portion of the distance he journeyed with Bridger. Arriving in Alder gulch, he engaged in mining one year, then moved to a farm on Bozeman creek, about half a mile south of his present ranch. Mr. Bisel owns 800 acres of land in the Gallatin valley, 480 acres of it lying on Bozeman creek. He can raise upon it anything that can be grown in the territory of Montana. Mr. Bisel handled the first threshing machine ever brought into the valley, and in one season earned with it $5,000, getting 25 cents per bushel for threshing and $50 for setting machine. The machine belonged to Coover & McAdow. The night before Bozeman was killed Bisel and Coover were out hunting their horses on the Yellowstone. They had to surrender the whole band to the same Indians who killed Bozeman the next day. The horses were the only property that Mr. Bisel owned at that time. In 1879 Mr. Bisel went to Cheyenne with a band of cattle in which he was interested, and on March 4, 1880, was married to Miss Henrietta Kraltcer, of Missouri, who had lived in Montana since 1866. During the flour famine of 1864 he purchased at Virginia City 800 pounds at $28 per pound, and did not suffer with hunger. Mr. Bisel is a member of the I. O. O. F. at Bozeman; has filled all the offices of the order at different times. He arrived in Montan; with a fifth interest in three yoke of oxen and a wagons is now well provided with worldly comforts.

C. L. BISHOP, surgeon dentist, P. O. Bozeman, is a native of Clinton Co., N. Y., and was born September 20, 1847. During his early boyhood his parents removed to the State of Iowa, and he grew up and received his education in that State. When nineteen years of age he came to Montana (in 1866), locating at Virginia City and engaging in mining some four or five years. He also lived in Red Mountain City, Deer Lodge, Helena and Bannack, then returned to Virginia City and studied dentistry. His preceptor was Dr. D. F. Ogden. He afterward practiced his profession there and in Idaho. In January, 1879, he came to Bozeman and since then has successfully practiced his profession here, having built up a leading business. Dr. Bishop was united in marriage November 27, 1878, to Miss B. M. LeMay, of the city of Chicago. They have one daughter, Alzire M.

M. M. BLACK, Bozeman, was born in London, Ky., on January 1, 1855. In 1865 his parents moved to St. Joseph, Mo., where he remained until 1868. In that year he entered St. Paul's College at Palmyra, Mo., and continued his studies until 1871, when he made a trip to Montana. He soon after returned to the States, and entering the University at Lexington, Ky., remained until 1873, then coming to Bozeman and accepting a position as bookkeeper in the First National Bank of that place, his father at that time owning one-half interest in the institution. He continued in such capacity until 1875, since when he has been engaged in mining, ranching and the stock business. He has a fine ranch on the Yellowstone, and is interested quite largely in mines at Clarke's Fork, holding shares in the Black Warrior, Lulu and Yellow Jacket. In November, 1880, he was elected Clerk and Recorder of Gallatin county, for a period of two years, and reëlected in the fall of 1882 for the same length of time. Mr. Black was married August 31, 1875, to Miss Rosa G. Fridley, daughter of F. F. Fridley. She is a native of Iowa, and came to Montana with her parents when a mere child, the family being numbered among the first settlers of the Territory. Mr. Black's father, Col. Leander M. Black, was born in Laurel Co., Ky., in 1830; moved to Colorado and was State Senator in 1866–68. In 1869 he came to Bozeman and engaged in extensive business transactions. He is now deceased.

C. P. BLAKELEY, sheriff, Gallatin county, P. O. Bozeman, was born in the State of Missouri, June 6, 1834, and there resided with his parents until he was nineteen years of age. Then going to Fort Laramie he took up land in that locality before he became of age, afterward becoming a large dealer in Kansas lands. In 1861 he enlisted in the State troops for three months, but continued to serve until six months had passed; he then quit the army and returned to Missouri, soon after going to Iowa, and in 1863 to Denver, where he remained until March, 1864. In that month he started for Montana, reaching Virginia City on the 16th of May following. In October of that year he moved into the Gallatin Valley and was the first to take up land on the West Gallatin. During the years 1866 and 1867 he served in the Territorial Legislature, and in 1870 went to Deer Lodge and engaged in mining two years, opening up what was formerly known as the "Gold Hill Mine," and since designated as the "John Rogers' Mine." Having suffered a loss of some $5,000 in the enterprise he returned to the Gallatin Valley and was elected under John C. Guy as under sheriff for a period of two years. At the expiration of that time he received the nomination for sheriff but was defeated at the polls, and in the fall of 1875 he returned to his farm where he devoted his time to tilling the soil until 1878. He then went to Bozeman where he served in the capacity of under sheriff and deputy assessor for four years, when he was elected sheriff of Gallatin county. In 1880 Mr. Blakeley took the census of the Yellowstone portion of Gallatin Co., and there is probably no person more familiar with the county and its residents than he is. He is now nicely situated, having a fine residence in the city of Bozeman and two valuable farms in the valley of the Gallatin. Mr. Blakeley was united in marriage in 1856 with Miss Elizabeth Downing, a native of Wayne Co., Ill. When she was seven years of age, her parents moved to Missouri, remaining until 1855, then moving to Kansas, where, she married Mr. Blakeley. Since then she has constantly shared the destinies of her husband, participating in the privations of Western life; and the somewhat checkered career, as they have toiled on together for so many years, is fraught with vivid and interesting incidents and sorrowful and thrilling anecdotes, thus rendering their past life among the exciting scenes of the West well worthy of record and the commendation of the people.

FREDERICK BOTTLER, the pioneer ranchman of the Upper Yellowstone Valley, is a native of Summit Co., O., and was born near Cleveland in 1843. He is a son of Catharine and Ernest Bottler, of German descent. Leaving Ohio in 1846, he removed with his parents to Indiana, and about eight years later to Iowa. In 1865 he came to Gallatin Valley, M. T., removing after one year to Upper Yellowstone, where he located a ranch in December, 1867, and has since continued to reside upon it. This ranch consists of a quarter section, well improved and in a fair state of cultivation. At present he is engaged in the sheep business, having a large herd. For three years after coming to Montana, Mr. Bottler mined in Alder Gulch, and for eight years was engaged in hunting, having killed large quantities of game and had many adventures. He was in the Fire Hole Basin in the Park as early as 1866, and during the time of Prof. Hayden's explorations in that vicinity was guide and hunter for the party at a salary of $103 per month. He was married to Miss Josie Shoothill, a native of Pennsylvania, in 1881, and has one daughter, aged about two years. On the head of Sixteen-Mile Creek, Mr. Bottler had a fight with a bear, by which he came near losing his life. While hunting on the side of the mountain he saw a large bear coming toward him, and shot at the animal, hitting him in the neck. The bear rolled down the side of the mountain and then came scrambling after Mr. Bottler, getting so close that he could not use his gun to shoot with; so he placed the breech against the bear's head and endeavored to hold him back. His gun slipping, he fell down under the bear, when the bear seized him by the thigh, shook him and tore out the tendons of the leg, then threw him down for dead. Mr. Bottler recovered his senses after some time, and seeing the bear sitting above watching him, yelled at him with all his might, when the brute fled. He now made for the nearest neighbors, whom he reached the next day, mostly by crawling, suffering intensely all the time from wounds and loss of blood.

CHARLES H. BRADLEY, painter, P. O. Bozeman, is a native of Philadelphia, and was born September 6, 1840. During his childhood his parents moved to Trenton, N. J., where they remained several years, subsequently removing to Rhode Island, where he continued to reside until 1874, when he went to California and remained until 1877. He then came to Montana and assisted Col. Norris in cutting the Park trail. In the fall of 1877 he left Rawlins, on the Union Pacific railroad, for Montana, and was nine months in the mountains, subsisting for 19 days on a little bear or deer meat, without pepper, salt, or anything else with it, and never saw a white man until he struck Col. Norris' camp on the Henderson ranch, situated on the upper Yellowstone, 6 miles from the National Park. Returning to California, he remained until 1882, when he again came to Montana, and for a time engaged in prospecting, but is now working at his trade in the city of Bozeman. Mr. Bradley, during the rebellion, served three years in Co. B of the 155th N. Y. Infantry, and took part in many a hard fought battle.

W. R. BRAMBLE, merchant, Big Timber station, was born in Tennessee, in August, 1838. His parents were Robert and Amacy Bramble, native Americans, and farmers by occupation. In 1861 Mr. Bradley left Tennessee and removed to Nebraska, remaining there until the fall of 1867, when he went to Wyoming, being in that Territory when it was first organized. He came on to the Yellowstone in 1871, and for four or five years thereafter lived in Emigrant. In 1876 he took up a ranch on Sweet Grass, which he still owns. In 1883 he came to Big Timber station, where he has a hotel and restaurant. Mr. Bramble is unmarried.

J. N. BROOKS, Bozeman, is engaged in farming and stock growing. His first work on coming to the Territory was teaming. His mother kept the Davidson House at Virginia City, and received $17 a week per man, for board, $1 per meal, and $1 for a night's lodging. She paid for flour as high as $60 per sack. Mr. Brooks married Mrs. Gillespie, in 1866, after having kept her family of small children together in the south during the war, and removed to Montana, where they suffered the usual hardships. She crossed the plains with the Rea family, and first settled at Alder Gulch. In the spring of 1865 she moved to Gallatin City. She was a woman of great strength of will and body, and was determined to give her children an education, and she succeeded nobly. They all have a good practical education.

MILTON M. BROOKS, P. O. Central Park, a farmer and stock raiser, was born in Carroll Co., Mo., November 11, 1836, and is the son of Sanders Brooks, a farmer in Carroll Co. Milton came to Montana in the spring of 1870, with his aunt. He received his education in the public schools of Montana. At the age of 16 he entered the office of the Independent, at Deer Lodge City; next clerked in Lebenbough's store, and in 1872 moved to Gallatin Valley and worked for wages till 1874 as a farm hand. In 1879 he bought 100 head of horses in company with Cary B. Fly. He married Frances R Squires, the daughter of W. O. Squires, a farmer and stock-raiser in Carroll Co., Mo. He purchased his present home, consisting of 160 acres of farming and meadow land, in 1882.

JAMES WILLIAM BRUMFIELD, Bozeman, is the sixth child and third son of John and Mary Brumfield. His father was a native of Lawrence Co., O., and his mother of Indiana. J. W. was born April 24, 1840, in Allen Tp., Lawrence Co., O., and was reared on his father's farm, assisting in its management until 1851, when the family removed to Worth Co., Mo., and again farmed until the elder Brumfield lost his health, and the care of the family and farm fell to the lot of James. At the death of his father, in 1855, the property became his own. He remained there farming, and in 1860 was wedded to Miss Luthe-ia Patton, daughter of John and Sarah Patton, of Tenn. To Mr. and Mrs. Brumfield have been born ten children: Martha J., John A., William S., Solomon, Samuel M., Carrie, Charles H., Rena L., Cora O, and Sophia J. The last two named were born in Montana; the others in Missouri. Mr. Brumfield served two years in the civil war, in Co. H, First Mo. Cavalry, under Col. Gates. After his two years' service in the army he returned to his farm in Worth Co., Mo., and remained until 1880, when, because of ill-health, resulting from a wound received in the war, he came to Montana, and immediately commenced to improve in health and wealth. In 1881 he built his present residence, and settled on his ranch of 160 acres, which is well watered, and located about two miles from Bozeman. Mr. Brumfield arrived in Montana with limited means, and has since become a very successful man.

D. K. BUCHANAN, P. O. Livingston, Deputy-Sheriff of Gallatin county, was born and raised in Liverpool, Pa.; came west in 1867; spent several years in Kansas, California, Nevada and Idaho, and came to Montana in 1879. He located on the island in the Yellowstone, opposite where Livingston now stands, and spent some time on the river and island, till the starting of the town of Livingston, when he located here. He erected the first shingle-roofed building in the place. He has been engaged in contracting and building at this point. He was appointed Deputy-Sheriff of Gallatin county in August, 1883. Mr. Buchanan is now engaged in constructing two bridges across the Yellowstone and the bayou near the Point of Rocks. The bridge at the bayou will be a pile bridge, and the one across the main stream a truss supported on stone piers. The estimated cost will be $4,000. He is sole proprietor in the enterprise and will make the bridges toll-paying.

D. H. BUDLONG, P. O. Livingston, Justice of the Peace, was appointed by the Board of County Commissioners March 10, 1883. He was born in Jefferson Co., N. Y., where he spent the first eighteen years of his life. He then removed to Wisconsin, and settled near the lead region. He enlisted in Company I, 3d Wisconsin Volunteers, was commissioned First Lieutenant November 25, 1862, and assigned to the 33d Regiment. He was in Sherman's army and was promoted April 26, 1865, to Lieutenant Colonel, serving till November 18, 1865. He served on the Military Commission of Kentucky during the trial of the guerillas. After the war he located in Missouri, and was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue, which position he held from May 24, 1871, to July 31, 1882, with headquarters at Carthage. He came to Livingston November 6, 1882, when the town consisted only of a few "shacks" and several tents. He is one of the most popular justices of this region, as well as one of the most highly esteemed citizens of Livingston.

T. C. BURNS, manager Montana Lumber Company, near Big Timber, is a native of Iowa, and was born November 27, 1837. His father was a farmer and wheel-wright by occupation. In May, 1864, Mr. Burns left Iowa and came through to Emigrant Gulch, where he remained from August, 1864, until June, 1865, when he went to Helena, living in and about that place for three or four years. He then returned to the States, coming back to the territory the next spring. From the spring of 1872 until the fall of 1876, he lived in Bozeman. About the first of October, 1876, he went on Tongue River, returning to Bozeman, and moving his family down. He was the first party to carry mail between the two places. This was in the spring of 1877, and after staying at Tongue River until November, 1879, he moved to his present ranch on "White Tail Deer Creek," where he has since continued to reside. The ranch is well improved, in good condition, and is used for a hay, grain and stock farm. It contains 400 acres. Mr. Burns was married December 25, 1863, to Ellen Wright, a native of Iowa. He was a participant in the "Tongue River Expedition" from Bozeman in 1874.

CHARLES F. BUSHNELL, P. O. Bozeman, son of Seaman S. and Sabrina (Brown) Bushnell, was born at Holley, Orleans Co., N. Y., September 9, 1848. When he was six years old the family left New York and came to Illinois, where they remained for about 13 years. Mr. Bushnell then removed to Brooklyn, Ia., and after remaining there three years went to Nebraska. Here he resided five years, and then returned to Illinois for three years, subsequently going back to Nebraska, where he remained two years and a half, when he started for Montana, arriving in Bozeman April 27, 1881, where he is at present engaged in the grocery business, and also owns some good business and other property. Mr. Bushnell received a good common school education, and has chiefly been engaged in farming. On May 4, 1873, he was married to Miss Emma E. Shafer, of Seward Co., Neb., and has had three children, two of them having died. The name of the one living is Loretta Nanon.

L. H. CAREY, proprietor of brick-yard south of Bozeman, and son of Richard and Nancy Carey, was born and reared in Illinois, and is a relative of the well known Carey sisters. He lived in Rock Island Co., Ill., and for ten years was foreman of the Argillo works, manufacturers of fire-brick. He established a brick-yard near Bozeman about the 1st of June, 1881, employing five men where he now employs twenty-two. The first year he manufactured about 300 000 brick, the second year about 800,000, and the third year about 1,500,000, so rapid was the increase of the business. He makes common brick principally; worked by hand the first year, and has since added facilities to greatly lessen the labor. Mr. Carey was married to Miss Mary Ella McNeill, a native of Rock Island Co., Ill. They have three children: Mary, Carlton and Grace.

A. B. CAROW, dealer in boots and shoes, Bozeman, was born in Germany, November 25, 1850. Upon reaching manhood he emigrated to America in 1870; spent one year in Pittsburgh; then came west to Colorado; settled at Fairplay city and remained there three years; then went to Utah and spent one year at Little Cottonwood; from there went to Nevada and was engaged in business at Pioche and Eureka city five years; then came to Montana and located at Butte City, remaining there two years. In September, 1882, he located at Bozeman and established his present business, and has built up a good trade. In April, 1882, Mr. Carow married Miss Mary Miller, a native of Prussia.

DR. THOS. H. CARROLL, physician and surgeon, P.O. Bozeman, was born in the city of Boston, Mass., May 18, 1855, and is a son of Patrick and Catharine Carroll. He received his early education at Bryford, Pa., and there pursued the study of medicine with Dr. Freeman for some time. He afterward prosecuted his studies alone until 1880, at that time entering the Buffalo University, where he graduated at the head of his class in February, 1881, and was duly honored by his classmates electing him as their president. Returning to the place of his nativity he commenced the practice of medicine and continued until May, 1882, and in the following December located at Bozeman, where he still continues in the practice of his profession. He has been selected as surgeon of the Rocky Mountain division of the N. P. R. R., and is also vice president of the Gallatin County Medical Society and health officer of the county by appointment of the court. He is also somewhat interested in the products of the soil, having purchased a fine ranch on Middle creek in the vicinity of Bozeman. Dr. Carroll was united in marriage on the 26th of April, 1882, with Miss Belle Gould Lockport, of Buffalo, N. Y.

GEORGE H. CARVER, P. O. Livingston, of G. H. Carver & Co., dealers in general merchandise. Mr. Carver is the senior partner in this firm and the pioneer merchant of Livingston, he having erected his store tent and began business in August, 1882, when there was not a human habitation in sight, at the present site of Livingston. He continued the use of his tents up to the 10th of December, 1883, although he had the wooden store he now occupies erected in November, 1882. He was born in Rutland Co., Vt., in 1850, and came west in the spring of 1881. He began business as manager of H. A. Bruner's supply store at Miles City, M. T., on the line of the Northern Pacific railroad. He went from there to Risgville that fall in charge of a similar store for the same party, and in July, 1882, to what is now Livingston, as manager of Mr. Bruner's tent supply store. In August of that year he opened in business for himself, also in a tent. In November following he erected a good sized wooden building in what is now known as Old Town, which he stocked with general merchandise, still retaining the use of the tents. About this time he took D. P. Van Horne as a partner. In February, 1883, they opened a branch store at Emigrant Gulch, where they carry a stock of general merchandise of $5,000 value. That store is under the management of B. P. Van Horne. This firm carries an average stock in their city store of $75,000 value. They have built a fine two story brick block at the corner of Park and Marion streets. This building is 26x80 feet, 16 feet between joints. Mr. Carver is one of the directors of the National Park Improvement Co., and is well known as one of the live business men of this region.

H. T. CEPERLEY, P. O. Livingston, real estate and insurance agent, established his business at Livingston in March, 1883, being among the first in his line at this point. He represents the best companies, including the Home, Hartford, Phœnix, Liverpool and London and Globe, of England, Commercial, of California, and the New York Life, of New York. Mr. Ceperley is proprietor of the Riverside addition to Livingston, and does an extensive real estate business. He was born in Otsego Co., N. Y., in 1851; was educated at Whitestown seminary, went to Winona, Minn., and remained from 1873 to 1878, and then went to New Mexico, coming from there to his present location in March, 1883.

DR. C. M. CHAMBLISS, P. O. Bozeman, physician and surgeon, is a native of Mississippi, and was born September 3, 1852. He is a son of Rev. A. W. Chambliss, D. D., a distinguished Baptist minister, and Rebecca Ellerby Chambliss. Dr. Chambliss received his literary education in Kentucky, at Russellville; afterward studied medicine at Kansas City, Mo., and graduated there in 1876. After graduating he was resident physician of Kansas City Hospital three years, resigning that position and coming to this Territory in 1879, locating at Bozeman, where he engaged in the practice of medicine with Dr. Monroe. They remained together one year, and since then Dr. Chambliss has practiced his profession alone. He was physician for the construction corps of the N. P. R. R., and also for the Bozeman Pass Tunnel Co., and has held the office of county physician two years. During the fall and winter of 1882-3, he returned to Kansas City, took a review course in the Medical College, and during that time was resident physician of the Sisters' Hospital at that city. Dr. Chambliss was united in marriage October 25, 1881, with Miss Emma Amonett, of Memphis, Tenn.

JAMES D. CHESNUT, Bozeman, whose checkered life cannot have justice done it in a short sketch, drew his first breath early in March, 1834, at Chillicothe, O. Four years afterward his father moved to Lafayette, Ind., and entered upon the practice of medicine; which business he has followed in that place to this day. Our subject attended the district school till he was sixteen years of age, when he was sent to Wabash college at Crawfordsville, Ind.; remaining there until 1848, he became a clerk in a dry goods store. In 1852 he started for the gold-fields of California, overland from Omaha. On his way from St. Louis to that town the steamer he was on (the "Saluda") exploded her boiler. He escaped with a slight scald, while many others lost their lives. He was interested in stores at three different places in California, which afforded him considerable profits, but in the fall of 1853 he sold them and went with Walker on his filibustering expedition to the gulf of California and Central America as trader. He lost money in this venture, and in the spring of 1854 turned everthing to gold and took the steamer at Virgin bay for New York. On the way from the beach to the steamer, the launch, being overloaded, sank, and 38 of its passengers were drowned. Mr. Chesnut swam ashore, and the next morning, by the assistance of a diver, recovered his money, $7,000, from the sunken boat, then boarded the steamer and sailed to New York. From there he went to Kansas and laid out the town of Wyandotte. He was one of the original Republicans, and took part in the border troubles; was once arrested and held in jail for 20 days for high treason. In the spring of 1860 he sold out in Kansas and took a saw mill to near Central City, Col. When Fort Sumter was fired on he left everything and went back to Kansas. Here, by request of Gen. Lane, he enlisted 250 Delaware Indians as a corps of scouts for Fremont. Then he raised a company of white men and was given command; his regiment (12th Kansas Infantry) was for 4½ years in hard service. Capt. Chesnut had risen gradually till the close of the war, when he was mustered out as captain, and had commission as colonel. In the spring of 1867 the colonel came to Montana, and that fall located permanently at Bozeman. Late in the fall he discovered coal eight miles from Bozeman, in Rocky cañon, and his was the first vein of this mineral opened in this section of the country. The colonel operated a planing-mill and was also in the liquor business the next summer, continuing the latter business till 1882, when he sold out. He owns considerable real estate in Bozeman, and has retired from active business, being well satisfied to rest after his active and adventurous life.

HARMON CLEAVELAND, Bozeman, was born June 5, 1800, in Oneida Co., N. Y. At twelve years of age he removed to Lewis Co., N. Y., there remaining until twenty-one years of age. He was educated at district school. In 1851 he removed from New York to the State of Illinois, and settled in Whitesides county, on Rock River, near Prophetstown. There he remained twelve years, in which time he was married; removing from Illinois to California in 1863, residing in Sacramento county, and remaining in California ten years, engaged in dairy business. He was, while in Illinois, a collector of taxes, also constable. He removed from California in 1873 to Bozeman, Galla tin Co., M. T., and has remained here since that time. Mr Cleaveland was married in November, 1860, to Mary A. (Annis) Cleaveland, by A. J. Mattson, Justice of the Peace. Mrs. Cleaveland was born March 29, 1843, educated in Prophetstown, Ill., and has occupied the position of teacher in public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Cleaveland have five girls and one boy living (one child dead); eldest living child a daughter, second a son Mr. Cleaveland is in the dairy business, at which he has been engaged here several years. He is a member of the Masonic Order, and himself and wife are members of the Second Adventist Church. Their children are all attending school and making good progress. Mr. Cleaveland has thirty cows and makes on an average twenty pounds of butter per day.

V. E. CLINE, Bozeman, was born in Branch Co., Mich., November 12, 1848. He there spent his boyhood days, helping on the farm and attending the district school till he was fourteen years of age, then till he was sixteen was at a seminary at Colon, Mich. After graduating he made a trip to Niagara Falls and the eastern watering places, then joined a train that was going by way of North Platte, Laramie and Big Horn, and was in the third emigrant wagon that ever crossed the latter river. This party was overtaken here by Bozeman, and together they came to the Yellowstone. Then with his teams Mr. Cline went to Salt Lake and brought back produce, which he sold to good advantage in Virginia City, and wintered in the Gallatin valley. When the spring of 1865 opened he hunted for but could not find his teams, and he therefore went to Helena, where he worked in the mines for wages till fall, when he was taken sick and disabled till spring. He came out in the spring of 1866 with nothing but a pony and frying pan, but still hopeful, went to Cherry Creek, Madison Co., located a ranch, and put about 30 acres in crop. He was also interested in a mining company in Indian Creek, which proved a failure. His crop was good this season and the next year he seeded about 60 acres, but the grasshoppers came and ate up the crop, so selling the place for $500, Mr. Cline and his brother went to Bozeman and worked by the month. In 1869 he rented a farm on Middle Creek, Gallatin valley, and that season raised a crop which netted him $3,600. In 1870 he located a place, and in connection with his brother, B. F. Cline, who had the adjoining ranch, began farming. The frost killed the crops, but they made some money from their hay ground. From this time to 1875 he was quite successful in his farming operations, and in the fall of the latter year he went to Specimen Mountain in the National Park, and gathered nearly 3 tons of amethyst specimens. The next spring he shipped them to Chicago via the U. P. R. R., and having some time to spare, he stopped at Cheyenne, Wyoming, and went to the Black Hills, seeing nothing in the way of mines that suited him. He discovered, however, a good opportunity, and built a toll road, and in three months sold it out for $3,000; then, going to Chicago, he sold about half of his specimens at a good figure, took the balance to the Centennial at Philadelphia, and there disposed of them to good advantage. In February, 1877, he, after visiting nearly all of the eastern cities, returned to Montana. In the ensuing spring he loaded a boat with supplies and went down the Yellowstone to Fort Keogh, where he sold out to good advantage, and coming back became a successful speculator in stock and has prospered at farming. In 1882 he bought the adjoining farm from his brother, Frank Cline, for $6,000, and has now 480 acres, in a solid body, of the finest land in the Territory, from which, in 1883, he cut 400 tons of choice hay.

C. H. COBB, Bozeman National Bank, is a native of Illinois, born in Chicago on the 17th day of February, 1860. He is a son of Emory Cobb, an early settler of Chicago and one of the most success-ful men, well known through the West. Our subject attended school at Burlington, Vt., for three years. He then went to Champaign, Ill., where he continued his studies one year, after which he finished his education at Racine College, Wis. He then accepted a position in Minneapolis, Minn., as private secretary of the General Superintendent of the Northwestern Telegraph Co., and served in that capacity two years. He then went abroad, and made an extended tour in Europe Soon after his return his father and he organized the Bozeman National Bank of which he was elected vice president, November 6, 1882, and since then has had the management of the business. He is also interested in the coal mines adjacent to Bozeman. Mr. Cobb was married on the 9th of May, 1883, to Miss Dulcina Blain, of Kankakee, Ill., a lady of superior merit and rare accomplishments.

HON. VARD A. COCKRILL, P. O. Central Park, the subject of the following sketch, is an enterprising young man of whom Montana may well be proud. He is a son of J. V. Cockrill, a farmer in Missouri, and was born on the 11th of September, 1843. He finished his education in Plattsburg College, and at the age of nineteen came to Montana. He first followed mining in Alder gulch, and in December, 1863, went to Utah with Vivian and Dorison's ox train. While on the return trip, at Beaver cañon, he assisted Neal Howey and Billy North in arresting Dutch John, the noted road agent. The following day a terrible blizzard killed so many of their cattle they were obliged to remain in camp for the winter. Mr. Cockrill returned to Alder gulch in the spring, hired to parties on Black Tail Deer creek, to herd cattle. In the fall of 1864 he moved to the Gallatin valley and located his present home in December of that year. In 1865 he began to improve his farm, and raised his first crop. In 1870 he bought a few cows and mares and also the Central Park property, which he owned till 1880. In 1876 he married Thena Cowen, daughter of Captain John T. Smith, a banker in Kirksville, Mo. By her he has one child, Irvin, born at Central Park, Gallatin Co., M. T., November 10, 1878. Mr. Cockrill owns the Superior Stock Farm, consisting of 1,600 acres of land. He follows farming and stock-raising; owns 250 head of horses and 350 head of cattle. He was a member of the legislature in 1868.

REV. GEORGE COMFORT, Bozeman, born in the town of Harmony, Susquehanna Co., Pa., April 28, 1831, says: "I was the eldest child of a family of thirteen children, of young and healthy parents. I have always been blessed with a strong and vigorous constitution. My father, a lumberman, thought to make a business man of me, but, as I have always since believed, in this he was mistaken—the Lord had other work for me. I was converted to God at the age of twenty, and immediately began an active Christian life in the Christian church. Up to fifteen years of age I had attended the district school, and had made such progress that my father concluded I was fitted to do business, and so set me apart to the aid of his business, up to the time I began to be moved upon to the work of the Christian ministry. Already in business, with an ambition common to most young men, I had come to love it, but was moved by the Spirit to leave it all, and preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ. This fact caused a long, deep, hard struggle of feelings, till at last, with much faith and prayer, I was enabled to relinquish my cherished plans to become an humble Methodist preacher. I have never since doubted for a moment my duty in this respect. As the course of my future was thus fixed, I immediately began arrangements to pursue the studies necessary for an academic education, and thus started for school at one of our seminaries, where I spent nearly two years, when I was called out into the field of the active ministry. Having already married, we soon found ourselves settled in a pleasant parsonage home, in an old church, with many kind and dear friends as support. On this, as on the next two following charges, over a thousand persons were converted as the rightful trophies to our ministry. With a strong missionary spirit from early life, while at the session of my conference, held in the city of Binghamton, N. Y., the late Bishop Kingsley made the call for, and I was selected as missionary to Montana. That was in April, 1868. In two weeks I was en route for my new distant field, occupying six weeks' time to reach it. Upon my arrival in Montana, which is now over seventeen years ago, I found a great wild expanse of country with a comparatively small population, few towns or settlements, everything wild and rough, and yet I found an open field, many kind and dear friends, and withal a great need of Gospel work. I began work in the city of Helena, completed and dedicated the first Protestant church there, traveling, at times, over the then well settled portions of the Territory, until I had preached in some thirty different places, the first sermon among the people in them. In all my work through the long years which have followed, I have to record the fact that not a single insult, nor act of disrespect, nor violence, has been given me. I have always found and had friends. I have preached in most places in the Territory, and have lived in the city of Bozeman the past five years and over. The last six years I have been secretary of our mission here, and the last two years have been presiding elder, and am now appointed presiding elder for the third year; at present incumbent over the Helena district. For fifteen months of my stay in Montana I was the only traveling Methodist preacher in it, and now I have lived to see some twenty-nine preachers, and nearly all the settled portions of the country blessed with a living ministry. I am able still, after twenty-six years in the active work, to report my unbounded love for it, and to say of a truth, 'The best of all, God is with us.' With my extended knowledge of the country and acquaintance with the people, I feel as much, if not more, courage and zeal possessing me as at any time in my life. I feel myself more than ever, not only a minister of the Lord Jesus, but a sincere believer in his doctrines, a servant of the people to live and do them good, and withal one of the citizens of Montana, identified with all her material as well as spiritual interests, and to help to build a future commonwealth of peace, sobriety, prosperity and the Christian religion."—Autobiography.

CHRISTOPHER COOK, of Lower Willow Creek, was born in Greene Co., Tennessee, March 14, 1819. He is a son of Henry and Martha Cook; was a self educated lad, and at the age of eighteen years went to the gold mines in Georgia. Here he remained a short time, then joined General Nielson, and went to Florida to fight the Seminole Indians, and served until the close of the war, returning to Georgia in 1838. His next venture was in the year 1850, to California, where he mined until 1852, making about $2,000. He again returned to Georgia, where he engaged in farming until he became enthusiastic over the Western country, of which he read and heard so much. In 1860 he went to Colorado, where he again tried mining for three years. From Colorado he went to Montana, and mined in Alder Gulch until 1865, when having made about $1,500 he went to Last Chance Gulch, where he purchased two hundred feet of mining ground for a consideration of $2,000, from which he realized nothing. Mr. Cook, however, was of the mind "nothing ventured nothing gained," so went to Pipestone and again purchased mining property, which he worked for three years. As it did not pay expenses he began to think it time to abandon the mines. He then engaged in farming at South Boulder, and finding it a more lucrative business he bought a farm for $350 on Lower Willow Creek, in Gallatin county, moved upon it, and continued farming and stock-raising. In 1878 he formed a partnership with his son George, and they have been steadily increasing their business, until at the present time Cook & Son have a beautiful farm of 200 acres, consisting of both meadow and agricultural land, lying at the base of the foot hills, giving them access to an excellent stock range. They deal both in cattle and horses. Christopher Cook has been married twice; first to Miss Ellen Thomas, in 1838, the daughter of William Thomas, a boot and shoe maker in Georgia. Two children were born to them: Wm. Henry, born October 15, 1837, and Lucy, born December 17, 1839. On the first day of January, 1850, Mr. Cook married Miss [illegible] Harris, daughter of Clayton Harris, of Georgia. This union has been blessed with three children: George, born March 31, 1858; Andrew West, born October 15, 1870; Sarah Margaret, born August 5, 1872.

S. W. COOK, P. O. Bozeman, blacksmith, was born at Marshall, Calhoun Co., Mich., February 3, 1836, being the second white child born there. In 1854 he moved with his parents to Muscatine, Ia., and in June of that year settled with them at Winfield, where his father purchased a farm. In 1858 he learned the blacksmith's trade, which he has followed since that time. Mr. Cook resided in Michigan until May 12, 1866, when he left, en route to Montana, accompanied by his wife, arriving in the Territory September 8, 1866. He settled at Nelson's Crossing of the West Gallatin (Central Park) in April, 1868, moved up Meadow Creek, worked for the Brooklyn Golden Ore Co. that season; next, with three others, located a claim of 1,600 feet at Washington Bar, where he worked for two years, when they saw the flume, which was then about completed, swept away in a moment. Mr Cook then went to Sterling, where he worked at his trade until 1869, when he came to Bozeman, and in company with Horace Ennis, erected the building now occupied by T. C. Powers. In 1873-6 he was engaged at the Crow Agency. In 1875 he established a shop at Ft. Ellis, where he worked until August, 1878, when he settled permanently at Bozeman. Early in 1881 he erected his present building. Mr. Cook was married in Iowa to Miss Jennie Seeker, a native of Vermont, April 8, 1865. One of their children died April 16, 1878.

WALTER COOPER, Bozeman.—The subject of this historical sketch is a native of Cayuga Co., N. Y., where he was born July 4, 1843. He is the third son of Andrew H and Sarah E. Cooper, who were also natives of New York. When but six years old his parents moved to Shiawassee Co., Mich. His father was a farmer, and died in 1851. His mother returned to New York with her three younger sons, and Walter was left among relatives, whom, however, he soon left, and became a farm laborer. Becoming tired of farm life, Walter started West in October, 1858, at the early age of fifteen; arrived at Leavenworth, Kan., in December, and found employment as a teamster; remained there during the winter, and early in the spring of 1859 started with the great rush for Pike's Peak; in the summer of 1860 he was one of the number who went on the famous San Juan stampede, visiting the states of Chihuahua and Cinaloa, Mexico; returned to Colorado in 1861, and started for Alder Gulch, M. T. (then Idaho), in December, 1863, arriving in February, 1864. Engaged in mining for a time, and later in freighting from Fort Benton to Virginia City; passed the winter of 1864 in the Missouri valley near Round Grove, hunting and herding his stock; in the spring of 1865 he engaged in mining and prospecting which he continued with varying results until the fall of 1869, when he moved to Bozeman, M. T., and on April 19, 1870, married Marium D. Skeels, only daughter of Nelson Skeels, of Boulder valley, M. T. Mrs. Cooper is a native of Illinois, and came to Montana with her parents, up the Missouri river, in 1865. Mr. and Mrs. Cooper have had one son born to them, but he died in infancy. In the fall of 1869 Mr. Cooper established at Bozeman, his firearms and sporting goods house, which has grown to be the most extensive establishment of its kind in the West. He is justly entitled to much credit, and a grateful remembrance by lovers of sport, for his many important discoveries and inventions. His long experience in the mountains, and on the plains, thorough knowledge of the wants of sportsmen, familiarity with the character, customs and habits of the early trappers, hunters and mountain men, led to the invention and introduction of many important improvements in firearms and sportsmen's trappings, some of which were patented and became a source of profit, while others were given to the world, accepted and adopted, and have since passed into general use, being considered indispensable among sportsmen. He was also one of the first and most extensive fur dealers in eastern Montana, and for many years did an immense business along the Yellowstone river. He is quite largely interested in real estate; and a large owner in coal and other mines throughout the eastern portion of the Territory. He is president of the Eastern Montana Mining and Smelting Company, and president of the Bozeman Board of Trade. He is very widely known and highly esteemed, and is considered one of the most public spirited, energetic and enterprising business men of eastern Montana; in fact may be considered one of Montana's self-made men, having turned his face westward in early boyhood, without educational advantages, grown to manhood within the shadow of the Rocky mountains, he carved out his own fortune midst the wild and rough surroundings of early frontier life, has earned an honorable place in the foremost rank of living pioneers, who have done so much in the last quarter of a century to open the paths of the great Northwest, making it passible and safe for the vast tide of human life to press forward and people the great coming empire.

RES. OF WALTER COOPER, MAIN STREET, BOZEMAN, GALLATIN CO.

A. L. CORBLY, Spring Hill, was born November 15, 1842, in Virginia; is a son of Wm. L. Corbly and grandson of Rev. John Corbly, who was well known in Virginia and Pennsylvania in Revolutionary times. At 8 years of age Andrew moved to Linn Co., Ia., and lived there till 1864, with the exception of one year passed in Jones Co., Ia. In 1864 he moved to Montana, arriving in Virginia City in July; worked in the mines until October, then went prospecting, arriving in Silver Bow on what was known as representation day for that gulch. This day was so named from the custom in vogue of miners who discovered new diggings holding a meeting and making a record certifying that this ground was laid over until a set day. This day was called Representation Day, and upon it the original locators must appear in person or by proxy to work their claim or forfeit it. Andrew Corbly camped here four days on Silver Bow creek, where the city of Butte now stands, but did not think it worth while to take any of the forfeited claims, and passed on, leaving what has since proved to be untold wealth. This party of four went on to Missoula to get flour; found it all sold and the mill frozen up; managed to get eleven pounds to the man and started back to Gold Run. Here they found flour, and, procuring a supply, went twelve miles up Flint Creek and built the first cabin on that stream, above the old Fort Benton and Walla Walla road. Remaining here until March 22, and not finding good paying mines, Mr. Corbly returned to Virginia for a short time; then went to Helena in June and engaged in prospecting and mining, both placer and quartz, until October 8, 1869. In company with four others Mr. Corbly found good prospects on Oro Fino Creek, run a bed-rock drain to open this mine, and worked at it two and one half years, when he found gold did not lie on bed rock in quantities to pay. In October, 1869, he left the mines for good and moved to Gallatin Valley, settled at the mouth of Dry Creek, East Gallatin, and rented a farm. While raising his first crop he located his present ranch at the head of Reese Creek and began his improvements in 1870. Mr. Corbly married in 1867, December 4, Miss Rudolph, daughter of Philip and Clarissa Rudolph; this union has been blessed with six children: William A., born June 21, 1868; Clarissa I., born March 16, 1870, died December 16, 1880; Andrew L., born February 9, 1872, died December 21, 1880; Charles P., born January 16, 1874, died December 24, 1880; Alice E., born September 21, 1876; Louis M., born January 17, 1878. Mr. Corbly's wife died in June, 1880. He now owns 160 acres under fence, and has 80 acres under cultivation. From 14 acres of oats in 1882 he threshed 972 bushels and 486 bushels of wheat from 18 acres. Mr. Corbly was elected on the Democratic ticket to the Legislature. He is connected with the Good Templars and the Knights of Honor, and belonged at one time to the Grange. His life has been one of final success.

CORNWALL & LOCKE, saloon and billiard hall, Livingston, M. T. This establishment was located at Livingston, March 17, 1883, by Benson & Cornwall, Benson afterward disposing of his interest to J. H Locke, when the present firm came into existence. They have superior facilities for conducting their business. John H. Cornwall was born at Elmira, N. Y., in 1852; learned the butcher's trade in that city, worked at it three years and went to Texas and engaged in the stock business. Came to Montana in 1880, locating at Fort Custer, and in March, 1883, became a resident of Livingston. He married Miss Annie Sholberg, of Minnesota, February 10, 1881, at Fort Custer. J. H. Locke was born at Baltimore, Md., in 1849; started a saloon at Omaha, Neb., in 1865. Enlisted in the United States army August 26, 1867, and served until 1875, being stationed in Kansas the greater part of the time. In 1875 he was with Prof. Jenney's Black Hills surveying expedition; located in the Yellowstone country in Montana as a hunter and trapper in 1877, and in 1879 enlisted in troop C, Second United States Cavalry; was in the Milk River fight, July 17, 1879, and at O'Fallon Creek April 1, 1880. He was appointed Quartermaster Sergeant of his troop, and on the 23d of May, 1883, obtained his discharge through the influence of Congressman McGinnis. He then located at Livingston, M. T., where he at present resides. Mr. Locke married Miss Elizabeth M. Furney, of New York, at Fort Custer, May 13, 1881.

ANDY COWAN, P. O. Hillsdale, one of Gallatin county's successful farmers and stock-raisers, is a son of John W. Cowan, and was born in Pulaski county, March 17, 1834. He received a common school education in that county, and at the age of twenty moved to Missouri and engaged in farming. In 1861 he joined Price's army and was in the battles of Wilson, Lexington and Pea Ridge. In 1863 he came to Montana, having but $10 in currency. He stopped in Alder Gulch and worked for wages in the mines, at which he saved money enough to buy one yoke of cattle. In the fall of 1864 he came to the Gallatin Valley and located on a farm, and during the winter went to Utah and brought a load of wheat to Montana, selling the same for $10 per bushel. In 1865 he raised a crop consisting of wheat, oats and barley; sold 330 bushels of wheat at $10 per bushel; his barley and oats for fourteen cents per pound; 21,000 pounds of potatoes at ten and twelve cents per pound. From one pumpkin vine he made $40. He then followed farming and freighting and in 1867 he bought his present home in partnership with Louis Cowan. In 1874 Andrew and his brother divided their property, Andrew taking the fine horses and the farm. From a few years increase he sold $17,000 worth of cattle. He now owns a large band of fine horses and cattle. June 11, 1874, he married Rachel C. Tribble. Their union was blessed with four children; Jennie, born July 31, 1875; Fioney E., May 31, 1877; Mary L., July 6, 1880; Louis A., December 30, 1882.

D. F. COWAN, P. O. Hillsdale, is a son of James D. Cowan, a farmer and ex-sheriff of Palaski Co., Ky., where he was born August 12, 1843. He acquired a common school education in his native state, and in his eighteenth year joined the forces of the confederate General Morgan, with which he remained four years. He was captured by the federal troops and taken to the Camp Douglas military prison at Chicago, where he was confined nineteen months. At the close of the war he returned home, and in 1869 went to Georgia, coming the next year to Montana and engaging in farming in the Gallatin valley. In 1873 he turned his attention to stock-raising, and in 1877 married Nannie Hale, daughter of James W. Hale, a merchant of Somerset, Ky. They have four children—James W., born in Gallatin Co., November 29, 1877; Doctor F., May 6, 1879; Robert B., January 16, 1881; Lucy F., June 6, 1882. Mr. Cowan purchased his present home in 1877, and has devoted his attention to raising cattle and horses. He owns 160 acres of farming and meadow land.

REV. ROBERT M. CRAVEN, P. O. Hillsdale, was born in Charleston, N. C., November 7, 1842, and is a son of James E. Craven, a farmer. Robert was educated in Walterborough, S. C.; served an apprenticeship with a carpenter, and at 19 joined the confederate General Beauregard's army, remaining with him until the close of the rebellion. He came to Montana in 1868 and worked at his trade in Helena. In 1870 he married Mary E. Frazier, a daughter of George Frazier, a stonemason. They have follwing children—George W., born April 1, 1871; Lua E., August 22, 1872; Holler and Howen, December 22, 1873; Julian L., May 10, 1875; Walter S., October 22, 1878; Charles E. Hillsdale, November 29, 1880. In 1872 Mr. Craven was licensed a local preacher of the M. E. Church South; admitted in the Denver Conference in 1874, and in 1876 was set apart for the office of deacon. In 1882 he located his present home, consisting of 80 acres of farming land.

EBENEZER D. DAILEY, farmer of the upper Yellowstone, is a native of the western part of old Virginia, and was born in 1826. His parents were Charles and Hannah Dailey, and by occupation his father was a farmer. In 1834 the parents moved to Indiana, where they resided two years, when Ebenezer and his father came to Iowa, remaining until about 1852. The family then lived in Missouri until 1866, afterward removing to Virginia City, M. T. Two years later they departed for Oregon, spending four years in Umpqua valley. In 1872 Mr. Dailey located a ranch on the Upper Yellowstone, where he has since been engaged in farming and raising stock. Mr. Dailey was the first party who had stock in the valley. He first came to the Upper Yellowstone in 1866, remaining for two years, and locating Lake ranch, which lies about three miles south of his present place. He was married to Catharine Miller, in 1848.

JUDGE J. J. DAVIS, attorney, Bozeman, is a native of Albany, N. Y., and was born in the year 1828. In 1837 his parents moved to Indiana. Judge Davis was reared in agricultural business. He taught school three or four years, and then began the study of law. In the fall of 1856 he became clerk of the circuit court of Fulton county, Indiana, in which office he continued until the fall of 1861, after which he practiced law in Indiana until April, 1864, at which time he started to Montana, arriving on the Yellow Stone August 27, remaining until April, 1866, engaged in mining. He then came to Bozeman, and has since been engaged in the practice of law in connection with farming. He was elected judge of probate in 1867, which office he held one year, and resigned. In 1873 he was elected to the legislative council upon the independent ticket, representing the counties of Gallatin and Jefferson. He is at present city attorney and city clerk.

N. E DAVIS, wholesale whiskey, Bozeman, was born in Poland in 1845; came to the United States at the age of 15 years; landed at New York; remained there eighteen months; moved to San Francisco in 1863, and remained there a short time; then went to Portland, Oregon, and six months later to Washington Territory, where he was engaged two years in merchandising. He spent one year in Idaho; then came to Bozeman, Montana, and engaged in mercantile business, which he carries on to date. Mr. Davis has built and improved a number of houses in Bozeman At the time of the opening of the Yellow Stone he furnished supplies to enable parties to build Fort Pease; took government contracts to supply Fort Ellis and Fort Custer, also in transporting supplies and goods from Junction to Fort Custer. He married Miss Nettie Mendelsohn, of Boston, in February, 1881. Blanche, their only child, is now deceased. When Mr. Davis arrived in Bozeman it consisted of six lonesome-looking cabins.

WILLIAM A. DAVIS, residing opposite Emigrant Peak, Upper Yellowstone Valley, is the son of Alexander and Irene Davis, and was born in Nelson Co., Virginia, on the James River, his father being a manufacturer of iron and glass. Leaving his native state in 1854, he journeyed to California, and for four years engaged in mining in Calaveras county. Leaving California he went to Denver, Col., and thence to Lander Co., Nev., a year later to Bannack, then called Grasshopper Creek, and in the spring of 1864 to Alder Creek, or Virginia City, remaining there until June, 1865. He was subsequently at Last Chance until the spring of 1866; and at Elk Creek, Deer Lodge county, mining in Elk and Bear Gulches until the fall of 1867. He returned to Helena during the fall of 1867, and the following winter went north to the Saskatchewan River on a prospecting trip. Coming back to Helena in the spring of 1868, he visited the Boulder country, Jefferson county, remaining until the spring of 1870, when he "stampeded" to Clarke's Fork mines at the beginning of the mining excitement in that region. From Clarke's Fork Mines he went to Madison county, discovering Cherry Creek Silver Mines and stopping in that vicinity until the spring of 1873, after which he went to Jefferson cañon at the time of the mining excitement there, and in the fall of 1874 went to Bear Gulch on the Upper Yellowstone, and has been engaged in mining there and on Mill Creek and Emigrant Gulch ever since. Mr. Davis is an old experienced miner, having been engaged in mining since he was 12 years old. He was married August 27, 1879, to Minnie Price Ferrell, a native of Boone Co., Mo., and they have one child, Oscar W. Mr. Davis' ranch or farm on the Upper Yellowstone consists of 261 acres, improved and in good condition.

JOHN J. DAYTON, of Gallatin Valley, P. O. Bozeman, is son of Perry and Phebe (Brownell) Dayton, and was born at DeWittville, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., December 11, 1855. When he was quite young, the family came to Richland county, in the southwestern part of Wisconsin, where they continued to reside until 1872. In 1881 John J. went to Iowa, and from there to Minnesota, and finally to Boulder Co., Col., where he remained two years engaged in prospecting and mining. He was in the North Park a portion of that time. After leaving Colorado he came to the Gallatin Valley, where he now lives with his mother, who arrived here from Wisconsin in 1882. They are renters and live but a short distance from Grange Hall. Perry Dayton, his father, was an accomplished phrenologist, and lectured on phrenology and astronomy for twenty-two years, traveling through every state in the Union. He was a fine example of a self-made man, gaining his knowledge and information by his own efforts, starting out in life as a teacher. As a phrenologist, he is said to have examined no less than 50,000 persons. In religion he was a spiritualist. He died of consumption in Wisconsin in 1872, at the age of 52 years. At present the family consists of five children: Clara Ida, Charles, John, Stella and Dewver. Clara Ida is in Wisconsin, Charles in Missouri, Stella employed at the Gallatin County Infirmary, and Dewver, the youngest, is the messenger boy for the Western Union Telegraph Office in Bozeman.

E. R. DEAN & CO., P. O. Livingston, wholesale liquors, cigars and bar glassware. This firm was established at Livingston in June, 1883. They are a branch of the firm of Dean & Street, of Wickes, the original firm having opened at Wickes in 1875. The firm carry the largest stock of liquors, cigars, bar glassware and mirrors in the Territory. E. R. Dean came to Montana in 1864, and located in Alder Gulch; since then he has been extensively engaged in mining in the various camps of the Territory, both placer and quartz. In 1875 he engaged in the hotel business at Wickes; also formed a partnership with Mr. Street and engaged in the liquor business, which they carry on at the present date. B. J. Babson, manager for E. R. Dean & Co., was born at Brooksville, Me., April 19, 1856. After leaving school he engaged in mercantile business with his father. He traveled over Europe, the West Indies and the United States. In 1877 he came to Montana and located at Wickes, where he was general manager for the firm of Dean & Street for six years. In 1882 he assumed charge of the Livingston House.

R. DICKINSON, P. O. Livingston, of the Livingston Tribune, was born in Madison, Wis., July 31, 1851. He removed to Winona, Minn., when three years of age. When 19 years old he learned his trade in the office of the St. Charles Times; went to Fargo in 1881, and from there to Bismarck, Helena, Butte, Fort Benton and Livingston, working as a journeyman printer at the former places, and on coming to Livingston joined A. Carson in starting the Tribune, February 3, 1883, the first paper in the city.

MISS ELEANOR DOWDEN, P. O. Bozeman, was born in Maine in 1823, and is of Irish descent. She lost her mother at the age of five years; was reared on a farm and from fourteen until twenty-eight years of age kept house for her father. She spent nine months in a cotton factory, then went to Cincinnati, and from there to Kansas, where she was employed for two years in different houses. After spending eight months in Julesburg, she was for twenty-two months employed as cook in Denver, removing thence to Alder gulch, M. T., then to Summit, where she took in washing and ironing and baked for the miners. Visiting Boston, she remained nine months; returned to Alder gulch and remained three years; went to Bozeman in 1873, having in the meantime cooked for the officers at Fort Ellis four years. In 1881 she again went to Boston on account of ill health, but after five and one-half months returned to Bozeman. She is now engaged in attending to her garden and renting houses. Miss Dowden also owns a ranch of 160 acres which she purchased in 1874; she bought her present home in 1875.

R. B. DUNHAM, merchant, a citizen of Big Timber, and one of its most enterprising men, is a native of Missouri, where he was born October 18, 1838. His parents were Joseph P. and Margaret S. Dunham, both native Americans. His father was a farmer and for a time served as justice of the peace. In August, 1854, with his father and mother, Mr. Dunham emigrated to Kansas, where he lived for 12 years. In the spring of 1866 he returned to Missouri, but after one year relocated in Kansas, and in 1868 came to Laramie plains, Wyoming, where the Union Pacific Railroad was then being constructed. Leaving Wyoming after a stay of one year and a half, he went to Omaha, Neb., living at Council Bluffs for one year. From Nebraska he returned to Kansas (Montgomery Co., near Coffeyville), and after one year's residence, went to Arkansas. In six months he left that state and returned to Jasper Co., Mo., going thence in the spring of 1874 to Colorado by way of the Platte river, to Beaver creek. From Colorado he went to the Black Hills in 1876, and was in that vicinity for eighteen months. In July, 1877, he came to Montana on a prospecting expedition, settling on his present ranch on Big Timber in the fall of that year. His ranch consists of 240 acres, mostly under fence, and is finely situated, with abundance of good water, etc. Also has a store on the opposite side of Yellowstone at Big Timber station, and since coming to this vicinity has been successful and prosperous. Mr. Dunham was married to Mrs. Westfall, a native of Missouri, September 24, 1869, and they have one child, Wyoming. Mr. Dunham is postmaster at Big Timber station. While on a prospecting expedition in Wyoming, Mr. Dunham and two others were camped on a tributary of Wind river, beside a small stream in the valley. The next morning while eating breakfast they were fired on from the bluffs. Mr. Dunham was sitting with his back to them and a ball passed through the crown of his hat, while Mr. Stewart, who was sitting opposite and in range, was struck on the shoulder and his clothes were cut through with a bullet. Gathering up their guns they ran into a small grove of timber near by containing about half an acre, which was full of fallen timber and boulders. They were again fired on, but the shots had no effect as they were concealed behind the boulders. As yet they had not seen an Indian, but they soon began to show themselves, and were fired at whenever they were visible. The sun was very hot, and by noon the three men were very thirsty; being near a stream, they ran and threw themselves into the water for a drink and returned to their place of concealment. Two volleys were fired at them but no one was hit. They ate up what gruel they had, but did not dare kindle a fire, as they did not believe the Indians had gone. They lay there all night, and the next morning at sunrise were again fired upon, the rifle practice being continued until 8 or 9 o'clock, before any return shots were fired. They began to feel desperate from hunger and thirst, while the Indians grew more daring, and were frequently seen passing back and forth. While lying behind a log Mr. Dunham thought an Indian was shooting at him, and shifted to a rock. The Indian raised his head, and as he did so Mr. D. shot him in the head and killed him. Soon after Mr. Stewart, who was a very fine shot, killed another as he was passing from one boulder to another, the Indian falling forward on his face. The Indians left soon after, and after going to the bluffs and finding them gone, the party left and went to South Pass. Mr. Dunham built the first house in the town of Cooke, Black Hills, and while there was frequently annoyed by the Indians.

COLONEL GEORGE O. EATON, of Cooke, is a native of the State of Maine. He received his preparatory education in that state. During the rebellion he enlisted in the army and served in the volunteer service, and after the war was appointed a cadet at West Point at the age of twenty, graduated in 1873, and attended the school of mines at Columbia college, New York. He entered the cavalry service of the regular army, and in that capacity was over the whole western country, serving as member of Gen. Sheridan's staff; his name was twice proposed to the Senate of the United States, by the President, for gallant services against the savages. Having become interested in mining and in stock raising, he resigned his commission in the army and gave his attention to those interests. In 1881 he came to Montana, having made large investments at Cooke the year previous. He owns personally some of the most valuable mining property at that place; he is president of the Republic Mining Co., which includes the "Great Republic," the "Greeley," the "Houstin" and the "New World" mines; is also president of a large placer company located in Bear gulch, a tributary of the upper Yellowstone. He has disposed of his interest in stock-raising and devotes his attention to mineral interests. Col. Eaton was elected a delegate to the first constitutional convention of Montana and served as a member of that body.

W. S. EBERMAN, P. O. Livingston, editor and business manager, has been connected with the Tribune since May, 1883. He was born in Monroe Co., Ill., in 1846; went to Minnesota in boyhood, and when sixteen years old enlisted in the late war, August 14, 1862, as a member of Company E, —— Regiment Minnesota Volunteers. He served under Generals Thomas and Schofield until the close of the war. He spent two years in Jacksonville, Minn., thence removed to Dakota and engaged in the drug business at Fargo till he came to Livingston in the spring of 1883, and became connected with the Tribune. In June he became a partner in the business, with position of editor and business manager.

T. R. EDWARDS, Bozeman, District Attorney, is a native of Jefferson City, Mo., and was born in 1845. His early life was mainly spent in school. He read law in 1863-4-5, and was admitted to the bar in Jefferson City in 1866, after which he came to Virginia City, M. T., and began the practice of his profession in June, remaining until February, 1868, and then removing to Bozeman, where he has since been engaged in the practice of law. He was a member of the legislature in 1868-9; was elected district attorney of the first judicial district of the Territory in 1882. He assisted in building up the first paper in the town of Bozeman. He is a member of Gallatin Lodge, No. 6, F. & A. M.

JOHN H. ELDER, P. O. Livingston, junior partner of the firm of Savage & Elder, attorneys at law, was born in Red Wing, Minn., in 1858; was educated at Carlton College, Northfield, Minn., and graduated in 1880. He began the study of law and was admitted to the bar in 1881. He then came west with an engineering party of the Northern Pacific railway, crossing the uninhabited site of Livingston in April, 1882. One year later, in April, 1883, he located at this place, and engaged in the practice of his profession, and in the real estate and insurance business. He was appointed land agent of the Northern Pacific railroad September 22, 1883, and the same month formed the existing partnership with J. A. Savage.

WM. H. ELLIS, Bozeman, son of Thomas B. and Edith Ellis, was born January 26, 1841, at Weston, Platt Co., Mo. His father died when William was but 14 months old, and he was cared for by an uncle, who, having a large family, could give him but very limited advantages. He worked on the farm in summer and attended school some in winter. He worked a plow when only 10 years old. He continued to make his home with this uncle until 19 years of age, then went to live with another uncle who had promised to give him a good education; but the war broke out, the school was abandoned, and William entered the army as a private in Company A, 1st Missouri Cavalry, under Colonel Gates. He was in twenty-seven pitched battles; was at the siege of Vicksburg, where mule-meat was considered good, and was 104 days on the campaign from Dauphin to Atlanta. On the return trip from Atlanta he was wounded at Altoona station, which disabled him five months. He was mustered out at the close of the war, September 9, 1865. He returned to his uncle's and superintended getting out wood for the Denver & Rio Grande railroad; then he spent three years on a farm, and afterward emigrated to Montana. He was interested in the first steam sawmill in the territory. In the spring of 1876 he ran a freight team to Stillwater, on the Yellowstone, for Murphy & Co., of Helena, but the steamer failed to come, so he returned with nine yoke of cattle. His brother Thomas wrote him they had a good crop, and he returned to Gallatin to assist in harvesting. In the spring of 1877 the brothers decided they had not land enough for use, and rents being $6.50 per acre, William Ellis thought best to and did purchase from B. F. Cline the 160 acres west of their other property. For this they paid $1,000 in cash, and sowed 35 acres of it in oats, for which they realized an even $1,000. They commenced improving it at once, and in 1879 had it all under fence. January 26, 1882, Wm. H. Ellis married Miss Juan Daugharty, a native of Monticello, Ky. Mrs. Ellis is a sister of Franklin Sloan, who is treasurer of Gallatin Co. The Ellis brothers have done well, and enjoy the esteem and good will of all of their neighbors. They have 240 acres each, all under fence. In 1882 Mr. William H. Ellis erected his present improvements.

JAS. ENNIS, meat market, P. O. Livingston, was born at Perth, Canada, April 13, 1843; came to the United States in 1868; engaged in lumbering; was foreman in a mill at Fall River for 6 years; removed to Dakota Co., Minn., and was engaged in farming three years; sold farm and in 1872 went to Texas; hired from 6 to 8 men for a period of 3 years, hunting buffalo; during that time he killed 18,000 of those animals; shipped the meat to Louisville, Ky., and the hides to Logansport, Ind. July 29, 1878, Mr. Ennis came to Montana and settled on section 24, on the Yellowstone river; built a house and engaged in farming; erected a sawmill on Pear Creek, 10 miles from Livingston, to fill a contract with the Northern Pacific R. R., which called for 3,000,000 feet of timber, to be used for the road between Livingston and Bozeman. In the fall of of 1883 Mr. Ennis purchased the interest of Wright & Holliday, and engaged in the butcher business, and in connection with this acts as agent for Nelson Story, handling his brands of flour and feed. Below Duck Creek Mr. Ennis purchased a ranch of 400 acres, on which he keeps his cattle. His herd is estimated at 1,000 head. Mr. Ennis married Miss Isabelle Ward, of Perth, Canada, in 1861, and they have two children, George A. and James Ward. Mr. Ennis owned section 24, being the first land located where Livingston now stands. In 1881 he sold this to Livingston, from whom the town derives its name.

FRANK ESLER, Bozeman, was born at Copenhagen, Lewis Co., N.Y., August 1, 1843. He lived with his parents until he was 15 years of age, they meanwhile having moved to Denmark, same county. He attended the district school from his 8th year till he was of this age, when he was apprenticed to a saddler in Booneville, N.Y. At 18 he was once more a free person, and this year (1861) he married Miss Mary E. Jackson, of Booneville. He worked at his trade in this place till the summer of 1862, when he enlisted in the 7th N. Y. Cavalry as battalion saddler. The regiment was mustered out after lying seven months in Washington, and Mr. Esler tried a position in the commissary department at Alexandria. Not liking it, he went to work at his trade at Washington. In the fall of 1863 he contracted with the government to furnish cavalry accoutrements, and moving to New York, he worked at these contracts till the close of the war. In 1866, accompanied by his wife, he came to Argenta, Beaverhead Co., M. T., with a stock of groceries, and opened a store in that place, being also interested in mining. In 1869 he moved to Jefferson City, and invested his all in a smelter for silver ores. A few months afterward the furnace caught fire and destroyed everything. In 1870 he established a miners' supply store in the pipestone mines, Jefferson county, and came out of the business in 1872 with nothing. He walked to Emigrant gulch and remained till fall, then went to the Crow agency, where he cooked for nearly two years; then getting a little stock, started a saddlery and harness shop in Bozeman, and has been always successful from that day. He now has a fine saddlery business; is a stockholder and director in the First National Bank of Bozeman; is a stockholder in the Bozeman Coal Co.; is the main owner in the Young America mine at Clarke's Fork, and has property at Bozeman that brings him a rental of $400 per month.

C. ETHERINGTON, P. O. Salesville, was born June 25, 1831, near Sunderland, Durham county, England. Remaining there until twenty years of age, he sailed to America, arriving at the end of his voyage in New York city; from thence he moved to Pittsburgh, Pa., and for four years was employed in the coal mines. In 1853 he proceeded to Douglas Co., Kan., and until 1858 was engaged in farming. For the next three years he traveled through the principal mining districts tributary to Denver, Col., returning in 1861 to Kansas and engaging in freighting. He relocated in Colorado in 1862, and worked as a coal miner for one year, removing thence to Montana and arriving in the latter Territory May 12, 1863. He engaged in placer mining for two years at Bannack and Alder Gulch, making $30 to $50 per day. In the fall of 1874 he came to Gallatin county and settled on the east bank of the Gallatin river, where he still resides on 320 acres of deeded land, of which 125 acres are under cultivation. His farm yields abundantly of grain, wheat averaging 30 bushels per acre, oats, 40; barley, 40; and potatoes, 150; although of the latter he has grown as high as 300 bushels per acre. Mr. Etherington is one of the oldest settlers in the Gallatin valley. He has no family.

M. J. EUKES, P. O. Bozeman, was born in New York, August 20, 1856, and was educated in that state. At the age of 15 he removed to Iowa, and worked on the railroad. He afterward engaged in the lumber business in Michigan and came to Montana in 1869. He worked for wages for two years; then located a farm, but sold it and bought 70 head of cattle, to which he devoted his attention until 1878, when he purchased his present home. Mr. Eukes owns 120 acres of farming and meadow land; also raises horses and cattle. In 1881 he married Lizzie Green, daughter of James Green, a farmer on Lower Willow creek, Gallatin Co., M. T.

C. N. FERGUSON, P. O. Bozeman, was born February 17, 1852, and is a son of William and Aramantha (Lewis) Ferguson. He moved with his parents to Missouri in 1857, where his father died in 1859, and in the spring of 1865 the rest of the family came to Helena, M. T., where Charles N. worked in the mines about three months and then went to the Missouri valley, remaining until March, 1866, when he came to the East Gallatin river, settling on the farm where he still lives. Mr. Ferguson is unmarried. His mother resides with him, also his two brothers and a sister. The farm consists of 160 acres.

JOHN Y. FERGUSON, Spring Hill, was born December 16, 1844, at Buena Vista, Ky.; moved to Livingston Co., Mo., in 1850; attended school there; moved to Montana with his mother, in 1865, having lost his father in 1858; lived in Helena until March, 1866, then moved to the East Gallatin Valley, to what was termed Gallatin Fort, bought a land claim of A. Lamme, and engaged in farming and freighting for Cults and then for Miles for seven years; then moved on a farm near Thomas' Mill, purchased of Jeff Gowan, sold out and bought his present farm of 260 acres at Spring Hill in 1881; 140 acres of oats raised in 1882 averaged 50 bushels to the acre; 30 acres of winter wheat averaged 50 bushels to the acre. He had in all 120 acres of winter wheat, but a portion was winter killed; nevertheless the 120 acres averaged 20 bushels to the acre. Mr. Ferguson married, February 2, 1871, Miss Clara M. Ward, daughter of William and Mary N. Ward, now living in Los Angelos, Cal. To this couple have been born five children, Mary Ellen, born November 22, 1871; Henry, born December 13, 1873; Charles, born February 16, 1876; Edgar L., born June 9, 1879, died February 8, 1880; Marcus W., born November 28, 1880. After years of reverses, Mr. Ferguson has come out victorious. He owns a pleasant home and is esteemed by all his neighbors.

EDWARD F. FERRIS, of the firm of Sebree, Ferris & White, bankers and dealers in hardware and agricultural implements, was born in northern New York in 1835. He removed to Wisconsin in 1853, and engaged as clerk in a general store at Fond du Lac, continuing several years. He afterward turned his steps westward, and for some time was engaged in prospecting in Colorado and Kansas. He returned to Wisconsin in 1860, and in 1861 enlisted as a private in the Fourteenth Wisconsin Infantry, of which command he was Lieutenant-Colonel at the date of his muster-out in 1865. Removing to Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1871, he was engaged in business one year, locating subsequently at Corinne, and remaining five years. He came to Montana with the advent of the Utah & Northern railroad, following its extension from station to station in the general forwarding and transportation business, under the firm name of Sebree, Ferris & White. He arrived at Dillon in 1880, and in 1882 established the present business at Bozeman. Mr. Ferris was married in 1874 to Miss Margaret Eastman, of Michigan, and they are the parents of three children, Eleanor L., Catherine E. and Margaret M. Politically, Mr. Ferris is a republican. He represented Gallatin county at the constitutional convention of 1884.

MARION FLAHARTY, P. O. Bozeman, farmer and stock-raiser, son of Josephus and Rachel (Kenton) Flaharty, was born in Ashland Co., O., May 22, 1844. In 1860 the family moved to Belleville, Richland Co., where Marion enlisted in the 16th O. V. I., served a full term, re-enlisted in the 102d O. V. I. and served until discharged for disability at Clarksville, Tenn. Early in 1864 he started on his journey westward; joined James Bridger's party on the Big Horn, and arrived with that party at Alder Gulch, July 8. He earned $6 per day for some months; but suffered from mountain fever during the winter, an illness which cost him his time as well as the money he had saved. On April 1, 1865, he engaged with Prof. T. D. Motley to open quartz lodes, and during the summer took up several claims for himself. Later he was employed on Phil Thorp's ranch. The following winter he constructed a power shingle cutting mill near Bozeman, continuing there until the spring of 1877, when the Indians destroyed his property. Again he had to seek employment. He was hired by Coover and McAdow to get out logs for building their residence near their flouring mill. After a few months he went on the Coover & McCoy farm, where he labored two years. He next settled a piece of land, with Henry Connor as partner. He had poor luck in this enterprise; sold the land to Coleman & Bisel for a small consideration, and joined the stampede to the Crow creek mines; prospected for some time afterward, and returning to Bozeman entered Fridley's employ. He invested subsequently in cheap town-lots and built a few log houses. He worked for W. W. Aldesson and others until the spring of 1882, when by homestead and pre-emption he acquired 320 acres of fine land, to which he has since added 320 acres, making his present farm and stock ranch comprise a whole section. In 1876 he erected a frame house, and in March, 1877, was married to Miss Martha Githens, who came to Montana with her parents, John M. and Rebecca (Cooper) Githens in 1865. He is the possessor of many fine horses, a large herd of cattle, including Duchess and Rose of Sharon short-horns; a drove of hogs, including some Berkshires; a large flock of improved poultry; a full line of agricultural implements and machinery; and commodious premises beautifully situated in the Gallatin valley.

J. D. Fly, P. O. Central Park, a farmer, was born in Andrew Co., Mo., October 13, 1860, and is the son of William Fly, proprietor of the Central Park hotel. When but four years old his mother died, and he was placed in the care of his grandmother, who kept him until he was twelve years old. He then came to Montana and lived with his father. He was educated in the public schools of Gallatin county, and at the age of eighteen began to work for himself, buying cattle with his wages. In 1882 he bought from his father, William Fly, 160 acres of farming land, lying on the East Gallatin. December 24, 1882, he married Jennie Curtis, daughter of Robert Curtis, a farmer of Gallatin Co., M. T.

William Fly, the owner of the Central Park property, was born in Howard Co., Mo., September 15, 1830. He is the son of John Fly, a farmer of that state. William acquired an education in the common schools of his native state. In the year 1852 he went to California to seek his fortune in the gold mines, and there labored for five years, accumulating some wealth. He then returned to Missouri, but remained only a short time, during which he married Miss Gore, the daughter of James Gore, a farmer in Andrew Co., Mo. Their union was blessed with the birth of three boys: Cary B., born in Kansas, December 14, 1858; John D., born in Kansas, October 12, 1860; James M., born in Missouri, April 21, 1863. The first year of his marriage he moved to Kansas and improved a farm, upon which he lived three years. Becoming wearied with farm life he sold his home and went to Colorado and followed the vocation of a miner. In 1865 he returned to Missouri, and while on the road, at Plum Creek, his wife died, in June, 1865. Mr. Fly came to Montana in 1866, first locating in Deer Lodge county, and engaging in mining, which he followed for four years. In 1870 he directed his attention to stock-raising, and chose the Gallatin valley for his range. On the 23d day of May, 1872, he married Susan C. Brooks, of Deer Lodge City. In 1882 he bought the Central Park property, consisting of a large hotel, toll bridge, and 160 acres of land. He is now the proprietor of the hotel, and also follows farming and stock-raising. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity and is a leader in the Democratic party.

C. Francisco, P. O. Central Park, son of Andrew Francisco, a merchant in Woodford Co., Ky., was born December 2, 1839. He was educated in Chapel Hill college, and at the age of eighteen began speculating in stock and shipping cattle and hogs. He followed that business successfully for four years. In 1862 he joined Price's Confederate command and remained in the army one year; was at the battles of Lexington and Wilson Creek. Upon returning home he followed the stock business till 1864, when he came to Montana and engaged in mercantile business, stock raising and freighting. Mr. Francisco married Marie D. Dixon, daughter of Josiah Dixon, in 1866, and they have four children: David, born May 12, 1868; George, October 12, 1869; Charles, February 3, 1872; Adelia Bell, December 16, 1881. Mr. Francisco closed his business in Montana in 1869, and returned to Missouri, where he speculated in grain and stock, and was engaged in mercantile business. In 1875 he lost $12,000 in one week in grain. He returned to Montana in 1882, and now follows farming and stock raising, owning 440 acres of land.

Henry Frank, merchant tailor, P. O. Livingston, one of the pioneers of Montana in his line, in 1867, was born in Prussia, and learned the tailor's trade in his native country, serving a regular apprenticeship thereat. He emigrated to America in 1864, and worked as a journeyman tailor in various cities till 1867, when he came to Montana and located at Fort Benton, where he was in business one year. In 1868 he removed to Helena, where he opened a custom tailor shop. He extended his business as the place grew, and soon had a fine merchant tailoring establishment, with a large business, and became well off. In 1881 he went East to the States, and on his return to Helena in 1882 was attracted to Livingston by its brilliant prospects. He therefore purchased lots and erected a fine two-story brick business building on Park street, 25x50 feet, in the summer of 1883. He carries a well assorted stock of the value of $15,000, employs three hands and does a large amount of custom work.

George Washington A. Frazier, deceased, was born July 16, 1830, in Gallatin Co., Ill. After leaving school he was engaged in the stock business until twenty-three years of age, when he added farming, and was afterward in mercantile trade for five years. He sold out in Illinois, and came to Virginia City, M. T., in September, 1865. In April, 1866, he went to Bozeman and engaged in farming. In the fall of the same year he opened the first hotel in Bozeman, called the City Hotel, located on Main street, and was its proprietor until 1869. In that year he opened and improved a ranch of 160 acres, of which he had charge at the time of his death, which occurred February 27, 1873. Mr. Frazier bought and improved a house in town, also assisted in building school and churches. He married Miss Elmira Heord, of Illinois, by whom he had six children: James A., Wm. A., Joseph A., Emma E. and Irena H. Mrs. Frazier has taken charge of the estate, improved the farm, and carrying on a dairy for four years with the assistance of her sons.

William H. Freye, P. O. Livingston, of the firm of Freye & LeRoy, attorneys at law. Mr. Freye is the youngest member of the Montana Bar, and the oldest resident attorney at Livingston. He located here November 7, 1882, when there was no other attorney between Billings and Bozeman on the line of the Northern Pacific Road. He was born in Cincinnati, O., December 9, 1858; was educated at Princeton College, and graduated in 1876; went to Iowa in July, 1879, and entered the law office of Lea & Beaman, of Keosauqua, as a student. He was admitted to the bar August 14, 1878, in Judge Knapp's court, and to the supreme and federal courts in October, 1879. He began practice at Davenport, Iowa, in 1879, and continued there till the summer of 1880. He then went to Butte, M. T., and "roughed it" for his health in the mountains till November, 1882, when he came here and began practice, forming the existing partnership with Samuel M. LeRoy.

E. L. FRIDLEY, livery stables, Bozeman, was born in Scott Co., In., August 27, 1854, and came to Montana with his parents in 1864, settling in the immediate vicinity of the present city of Bozeman, in which district they were among the first settlers. Mr. Fridley has always made his home in that vicinity, and after reaching man's estate engaged in freighting several years. Since the age of 13 years he has constantly handled horses, and is noted throughout the country for his superior horsemanship. He has for several years been engaged in the livery business at Bozeman, and now has the only stable of any importance in that city. He owns mining interests in Clarke's Forks and an equal interest with nine other gentlemen in the Bozeman fair grounds. Mr. Fridley was married in April, 1879, to Miss Almira Champaigne, a native of Plattsburg, N. Y.

F. F. FRIDLEY, proprietor of Fridley's ranch, on the Upper Yellowstone, son of Nancy and Jacob Fridley, is a native of Augusta Co., Va., and was born on October 22, 1824. In 1828 his parents emigrated to Ohio, and in the fall of 1843 to Iowa, where they both died, leaving Mr. Fridley alone in the world, dependent upon his own resources. In 1849 he emigrated across the plains to California, during the gold excitement. There were then but three forts on the route, and no houses. He arrived in Sacramento on August 22, 1849, there being at that time but one wooden building in the place. From Sacramento he went to the mines on Jackson Forks, remaining during one winter, and meeting with very good success. On December 15, 1850, he left the mines to return to his home in Iowa, boarding an old sailing vessel named "Hercules," at San Francisco, and going by way of Central America. He was 53 days on the Pacific, and did not reach Muscatine, Ia., until the 15th of April following. After reaching Muscatine he bought a farm and engaged in agricultural pursuits, continuing until 1864, when he started for Montana, arriving in Emigrant Gulch on August 28, in charge of a train of 44 wagons. Leaving most of the party at Emigrant, he left for the Gallatin valley, and pitched the first tent where Bozeman now stands, about the 15th of September in the same year. There were then but two houses there. The next month Mr. Fridley built a house, putting in a floor, the first one ever put in a house in Gallatin Valley. Here he lived until 1876, when he made a trip back to the States, staying one winter, and after returning moved to the ranch which he now occupies, and which is located opposite Emigrant peak and gulch, 23 miles above Livingston, on the National Park branch of the Northern Pacific road. The farm contains 200 acres, is in good state of cultivation, surrounded by fine mountain scenery, and is principally used for raising stock, though it will grow excellent vegetables, etc., and can generally be irrigated. Potatoes will average about 200 bushels to the acre here, wheat 40, and oats from 60 to 70. Besides the farm, Mr. Fridley is interested in mining stock in Emigrant, and other property in Bozeman. In 1852 he was married to America Mounts, a native of Illinois, and is the father of three children, all of whom are living,—two sons and one daughter, the latter, Rosa, being now the wife of M. M. Black, recorder of Gallatin Co., M. T. The two sons, Ed. S. and F., both reside in Bozeman, the former being a well-known business man at that point. Mr. Fridley has been one of the hardiest, bravest and best of Montana's pioneers, and has greatly aided by his own personal efforts in assisting the onward progress and development of the portion of the Territory in which he has resided.

H. N. GAGE was born near Isherwood's Corners, August 18, 1825, and lived in Cambridge township until 1854, at which time he accompanied his brother, Walter R., and his brother-in-law, Daniel Smith, who were then emigrating with their families to Wisconsin. Here he became acquainted with Miss Eliza Blood, a native of Pennsylvania, daughter of John Blood, of Corn-planter, Venango Co., Pa., to whom he was married in the fall of 1855. Two years later the three families again took an overland route, and pitched their tents in the then "bleeding Kansas." After having lived in Kansas a few years, in the spring of 1860 Mr. Gage again moved with his family, and located near Denver, Col., there engaging in stock business for some years. He thought it was getting too thickly settled in Colorado, and rounding up his herd he started for the Yellowstone country, locating in that valley in 1874. At that time it was a wild country. Mr. Gage feared encounters with the Indians, and to protect his family he built his houses so he could go under the ground in four different places where he had port holes at the top of the ground some distance from the house. For twelve months they never saw a white woman, and very seldom saw a white man. The next fall old Fort Pease was established, and there was a little travel with hunters and trappers, and mail was carried once a week by soldiers. Gage's Station was the first home station from Fort Ellis. The soldiers of Ellis tried to induce Mr. Gage to move back to the settlements, but he replied that he came there to stay and make it his home, and he went to improving his ranch when he had to keep a man on guard on the hill back of their house while he was at work. Men were killed on both sides of him, and he had horses stolen and cattle killed immediately in front of him, but Mr. Gage being a very cool man staid upon his ranch and kept on improving it. In 1875 the mail was carried by the government (P. P. Clark being contractor) by pony express three times a week, Gage's Station being home station from Bozeman. The country from that time began to open up. Mr. Gage died in 1878, of ulceration of the lungs, leaving a widow and seven children to mourn his loss. Mrs. Gage still stays at their old location, Gage's Station, where she is engaged in raising stock and farming. She lost a son, Stephen Gage, by drowning, in the Yellowstone river in 1879. Two daughters, Clara and Edena, are at St. Vincent's Academy, Helena.

J. H. GALLOP, P. O. Bozeman, was born in New York February 10, 1834, and is a son of James Gallop, a farmer in that state. In 1840 the family moved to and settled in Ionia Co., Mich., where James was reared and educated. At the age of 16 he became dependent upon his own efforts for support. In 1858 he engaged at the coopering trade in Illinois, but soon returned to Michigan and prepared to go west. Proceeding to New York, he boarded a steamer and sailed for Portland, Ore., subsequently locating in Florence, Idaho, where he followed mining. He was engaged in various capacities until March, 1866, when he bought a herd of cattle and brought them to Montana, locating in Horse Shoe Bend August 1, 1866, where he remained until 1878. During his residence there he had much difficulty with the Indians. In 1873 Mr. Gallop married Mrs. Rachel C. Hutchinson, daughter of Nathan and Huldah Chidester. She was educated in Calhoun Co., Mich., and married Lewis Hutchinson January 1, 1864, and they had two children—Nathan F., born in Michigan July 1, 1866; Helena E., born September 10, 1868, died May 10, 1872. Mr. Hutchinson died March 6, 1872. Mr. Gallop located his present home in Flathead Pass in 1875, and in 1878 moved his family on it. Mrs. Gallop was the first white woman in that section.

E. M. GARDNER, P. O. Bozeman, was born in Wayne Co., Mich., in 1842; is a son of Abraham Anderson and Cyntha Jenette (Russell) Gardner, of Scotch descent, who emigrated to Wayne Co., Mich., from Vermont in 1837. His parents were both college graduates, his father being a practicing physician. Mr. Gardner resided with his parents in Wayne Co., where he received a good common school education until his 17th year, when they moved to Kansas, living in that state three years, and from thence returned to Michigan. Mr. Gardner did not return with his parents, but engaged in speculating between Kansas and Denver for several years, afterward settling in Missouri to engage in farming and the breeding of fine stock, which occupation he followed 12 years, buying and shipping cattle to Chicago. In the spring of 1879 he left Missouri and came to Bozeman, where he is now engaged in stock-raising. Mr. Gardner occupies the position of district clerk, which office he has held since 1881, and is also the leading insurance agent of Bozeman. Mr. Gardner has been a life-long Republican, and is a man of constant business activity. He has been a member of the Presbyterian church since he was 21 years of age, and aided liberally in building the church at Bozeman. He is also a member of the order of Odd Fellows. Was census enumerator in Gallatin valley in 1880. In 1870 Mr. Gardner was married to Mrs. Flora Baker, whose parents lived in Pennsylvania, and by her he has had four children—Archie, Mary, Mattie and Carrie.

B. F. GIBSON, P. O. Central Park, was born in Pulaski Co., Kentucky, December 24, 1848, and is son of Andrew Gibson, a farmer. He attended the common schools, receiving such education as they could impart. When 21 years of age he engaged in farming on his own account, continuing one year. In 1872 he removed to Montana, and for seven years was engaged in freighting. During that time he and his brother accumulated money enough to buy 150 cows, and from that beginning they have increased their property to a large herd of cattle and a ranch containing 640 acres of land.

ROBERT GILLESPIE, Middle Creek, was born in Down county Ireland, in 1820, emigrated to the United States in 1853 and landed at Philadelphia, Pa.; went direct to Kansas and located at Council Grove. In the spring of 1864 he came from Colorado to Montana, having been in Colorado two years previous to 1864. He remained at Alder Gulch one month, then came to the valley and settled on Middle creek, and in company with John Chambers and Wm. Harris located 480 acres of land, Gillespie being middle man. Harris has returned to Kansas; Chambers died in August, 1881, and Gillespie bids fair to live many years, and is prosperous.

MRS. REBECKA GITTHINS, P. O. Salesville, daughter of Charles and Tabitha Cooper, was born August 8, 1822, near Burlington, Lawrence Co., Ohio. Her father removed from Ohio in 1830 to Greenup Co., Ky. He was a farmer. Mrs. Gitthins was educated principally in Kentucky, and was married September 18, 1836. Soon after her marriage she with her husband united with the M. E. Church, and remained with that denomination until 1846, when they united with the M. E. Church South. Mrs. Gitthins removed with her husband from Kentucky, 1841, to Daviess Co., Mo.; settled near Gallatin and remained for five years engaged in farming. They came in 1846 to Livingston Co., near Chillicothe, where Mr. Gitthins commenced boating on the Grand river, and followed this business for two years. He then moved to Utica, where he kept hotel for three years, during which time he was deputy sheriff of Livingston Co. They afterward bought a farm of 160 acres three miles north of Utica, in 1851, and remained upon it until April, 1865, when they moved to Montana Territory, stopping first at Alder Gulch, reaching said point in September, 1865. They were engaged in the hotel business until 1869, when they removed to Gallatin valley and settled where Mrs. Gitthins now lives. Here they were engaged in farming and the dairy business until 1878, when Mr. Gitthins died. After that time the widow remained on the farm, and kept her children with her. They are all moved now. Mrs. Gitthins has six children living and six deceased, including the eldest four. Those living are in Gallatin valley, except one, who lives on Meadow creek, Madison Co., M. T. Mrs. Gitthins has 160 acres, 50 acres in cultivation; oats yield 60 bushels per acre; wheat 30 bushels; barley 80; potatoes, with extra care, 500; have grown rutabagas on this land weighing 17 pounds. She has at present 5 head of milch cows, 5 head of horses and 5 head of hogs. John M. Gitthin's father, Rev. John Gitthins, was a member of the M. E. Church, also a member of the Holston Conference, and remained with said conference doing good and faithful work until the year 1830, when he removed to and settled in Daviess Co., Mo. He afterward became a local minister, leading a pious life until his death, which occurred in September, 1837. John M. Gitthins was a successful business man, never halting at difficulties. He died suddenly in October, 1878, of inflammation.

AUGUST GOTTSCHALCK, farmer, Bozeman, was born in November, 1850, at Thuringen, Germany. He lived at home and attended a public school till 14 years old, then went to a commercial college at Leipsic, where he remained two years, and at the completion of his course took a position in a commercial house as bookkeeper. After a year's service in this position he, in September, 1868, came to New York and engaged as clerk in a wholesale toy house. In the spring of 1870, going to Cheyenne, Wy., he joined the Big Horn expedition and came through to Bozeman, M. T., where he hunted, trapped, scouted for the government, and "ran wild" with the Crow Indians till the summer of 1875, when, becoming tired of this life, he returned to Germany. A year afterward he came again to the United States, and after visiting the Centennial he went to California, rode on horseback over nearly the whole state, and in the fall came through Oregon and Idaho to Bozeman, M. T., and located a ranch on Bridger Creek, near that town. In 1878 he went again to Germany, married Miss Louise Boutgen, of Solingen near the Rhine; returned to Montana and has lived on his place ever since. He has bought and added land until he now owns 560 acres, and is in high repute as a farmer. Since the foregoing was written, Mr. Gottschalck has sold his land and opened the Montana Armory, at Bozeman, where he carries on a good business.

E. GOUGHNOUR, of Livingston, M. T., was born near Johnstown, Pa., on the 28th day of April, 1831; moved to Iowa with his parents in 1844; at the age of 17 went to California (in 1849), remained there; engaged in mining for six years; was married in 1858 to Miss Margaret Dilts, of Iowa, who died in February, 1854; in 1855 he returned to Iowa, and in 1856 was married to Miss Jane S. Sens, who was born in Ohio and came to Iowa with her parents in 1835. He followed farming for a year and then engaged in sawmilling and the lumber business, which he has since followed. He was at one time engaged in railroad building in Iowa. He moved to Deadwood, in the Black Hills, in 1877, and came to the Yellowstone country in 1882; located his mills in the Belt range of mountains in December 1882, and established himself in the general lumber business in Livingston about May 1, 1883, where he still remains, having an extensive trade reaching to all points on the Yellowstone and tributary streams from the National Park to Glendive. The subject of this sketch is one of the self-made men of the West, who at times has been in affluent circumstances and at others on "Bed Rock." In a word it has been "Root, Hog, or Die" with him from boyhood up; but all in all he says the world has used him well. He has raised a family of seven children, three sons and four daughters, three of whom are married. He has a fine home in Livingston, and sounds endless praises for the future of the great Territory of Montana, where he expects to remain the rest of his days.

ARCH GRAHAM, farmer, P. O., Bozeman, is the sixth son and seventh child of Isaac H. and Rachel Graham, who were natives of Virginia, coming to Kentucky when quite young. They settled in Washington county, fifteen miles from Harrodsburg, the first settlement made after Boones. Here in the old homestead Arch Graham was born September 5, 1833. He lived under the parental roof until about eighteen years of age, when he started out to carve a future for himself, going first to Nodaway Co., Mo., and engaging in a position in the county clerk's office with a brother for eight years. He then acted as deputy sheriff for two years, and during the summer of 1860 as deputy U. S. marshal, when he took the census of the county. At the breaking out of the war he enlisted with Captain Cooper's company in Slayback's cavalry, under Col. Slayback, who was killed in St. Louis recently. He served during the entire war, and at its close went to St. Joseph and worked at carpentering in summer and taught school in winter until 1867, when he came via Fort Benton to Montana. While coming up the river they were attacked by Indians and one man was wounded, dying before morning. Mr. Graham's first work in Montana was in a blacksmith shop during the summer at Helena, and teaching school in the winter. The next summer he opened a livery stable at Ophir Gulch. In 1869 he sold out and returned to Helena. Fire having devastated the town, he engaged in carpentering until fall, when he came to Bozeman and took charge of the agency store, for Messrs. Black and Story, at the Crow Agency. In the summer of 1870 he went into the mountains on a prospecting tour, and on his return pre-empted some land and went to farming at the foot hills. The following year he was elected county clerk and recorder of Gallatin county, served his term and was re-elected in 1873. After his second term expired in 1875 he returned to farming again, and in 1877 homesteaded his present place and began improving it at once. Mr. Graham was married to Miss Sarah A. Wiseman, November 30, 1853. She was a native of Lawrence Co., Ohio. Five children have been born to them, viz: Dora, now Mrs. Frank Harper; Guy G.; Frank Lee; Charlie and Mary; (Charlie died in 1879). When twenty-one Mr. Graham united with the I. O. O. F. at Maryville, Mo., and has been a member of the order ever since. He assisted in organizing Western Star Lodge at Bozeman, was also secretary of the Grand Lodge of Montana Territory, and after settling down upon his farm, took a withdrawal card, as he could not be in constant attendance.

F. R. GRIFFITH, blacksmith, P. O. Livingston, was born in Lanark Co., Canada, November 18, 1836. After leaving school he learned the blacksmithing trade. He came to the United States in 1857 and located at Bay City, Mich. Here he was engaged in lumbering until 1865, when he left with a government freight train bound for Salt Lake. Shortly afterward he came to Montana and entered upon a mining life, spending one year at Reynolds City and one year at Bear Gulch. He then went to Nevada, mining in Lincoln county, at Pahranagat, Belmont, and Hot Creek, two years. The winter of 1868 he passed at San Francisco, Cal. The following spring he went to Auburn, and after mining in that locality one year, returned to Canada, again engaging at his trade. In 1879 he moved to Minnesota, worked at his trade two years and on August 24, 1882, came to Livingston, M. T., erected a log cabin and soon had plenty of work at his trade. In April, 1883, he purchased land and erected his present large frame blacksmith and wagon shop. In the same month he purchased a ranch on Section 6 and built a house. He married Miss Mary Greer, of Canada, May 12, 1873.

D. F. GROGAN, P. O. Bozeman, a farmer of Gallatin county, was born in Rockingham Co., N. C., April 28, 1845. He was educated in the common schools of North Carolina and the New Garden College, and at the age of sixteen years became self-dependent. In 1866 he came to Montana, formed a partnership with his brother, A. P. Grogan, and engaged in freighting. In 1870 he located his first farm. Grogan Brothers own 710 acres of land in one body and have 400 in cultivation. D. F. Grogan is a member of the I. O. O. F.

W. O. HAGY was born December 24, 1853, at Pella, Ia. His parents moved to Sioux City, Ia., three years later. Shortly after leaving school Mr. Hagy entered the employ of a grocery firm, and afterwards traveled for a boot and shoe house. In the spring of 1878 he went to Cheyenne Agency as clerk for an Indian trader, remaining one year. He then obtained a position as clerk at Fort Custer, and after one year formed a partnership with G. W. Smith and located at Hunt Bay, starting a general store. Three years later he removed to Livingston and established a dry goods and grocery store there. Mr. Higgins married Miss Nora Lambert, of Sioux City, Ia., in August, 1882.

GEORGE E. HALE, P. O. Hillsdale, was born in W. Va., December 16, 1838. He was educated in the common schools of Missouri. When 21 years old he engaged in farming. In 1859 he married Cynthia M. Nave, to whom were born seven children: Laura, born September 19, 1860; Lucy, September 23, 1862; James, April 13, 1865; Wilks, April 19, 1867; George, July 18, 1869; Nellie, June 14, 1874; Lounie, December 24, 1879. In 1862 he moved to Colorado, following mining until 1864, and came to Montana. He first located a farm on Willow Creek, where he remained four years. He spent his time at farming and mining until March, 1883, when he bought the farm of 240 acres which he now occupies.

J. A. HALL, Upper Yellowstone, was born at Vergennes, Addison Co., Vt., in 1846. At the age of 15 he enlisted in the 129th Ohio Regiment, serving in the army of the Cumberland, and afterward joined the 94th N. Y. Infantry. He was slightly wounded at White Oaks in 1865. After the war he went to Omaha, thence to Cheyenne, and finally to Salt Lake City. At the latter place he engaged in teaming. On arriving in Montana he quit teaming, and after returning to Ogden, Utah, traveled through several territories. He was baggagemaster for a time on the C. & P. railroad, and next went to San Francisco, where he remained for four years. From San Francisco, he went to San Antonio, Tex., and after stopping there for two years came to Bismarck, and has since been on the headwaters of the Upper Missouri. He came to Upper Yellowstone in 1882, where he is now engaged in the saloon business four miles north of Riverside, on Trail Creek.

MISS ADELINE HAMILTON, Hillsdale, daughter of Archibald and Rachel Hamilton, was born April 18, 1856, at Bath, Me.; educated at Mount Forest, Canada, and at Toronto; commenced teaching school at Mount Forest at the age of 15 years, and continued two years, removing thence to Neustadt, German Bridge, Ont., taught German, and finished a course of studies in that language. She then attended school in Toronto for two years, afterward teaching at Brighton, near Lake Ontario, six months. Leaving there in 1880, she taught for one year on the peninsula between lakes Erie and Ontario, finally leaving for Montana to visit her brother, who had been in that Territory since boyhood, and had been lost sight of until that time. After her arrival in Montana, Miss Hamilton secured a position as teacher in the Hillsdale school.

BENJ. S. HAMILTON, P.O. Spring Hill, son of Richard Hamilton, a stock-raiser of Gallatin Valley, was born in Hardin Co., O., February 7, 1845, and educated in Iowa and Montana. He traveled west, at the age of 19 (in 1865), and came to Montana, his first employment being in the mines for wages. He made enough money to buy a team, and then followed freighting. In 1869 he located a farm. In August, 1881, he sold his teams, and has since devoted his attention to farming. He owns 200 acres of fine farming land. Mr. Hamilton married Lucy E. Young on February 6, 1881, and has one child, born November 27, 1881.

THOMAS C. HAMILTON, P. O. Bozeman, son of Richard and Elizabeth (Uhlin) Hamilton, was born in Hardin Co., O., March 2, 1848. His father was a farmer and one of the pioneers of Hardin county, and he is a grandson of the Uhlin who made the celebrated leap from the top of a high rock, about 100 yards from the Ohio river above Cincinnati, and swam to the opposite shore, escaping from some Indians who were in close pursuit—a feat which is recorded in the early history of that section. In 1853, the family moved to Lucas Co., Ia., and thence went to Big Blue, Neb., where Thomas C. left the family, and commenced to drive cattle. Leaving Big Blue he freighted to Salt Lake City, and went on to Virginia City. He came to Bozeman in September, 1865, when there was but one house in the place. From Bozeman he went down into the lower part of the Gallatin valley, and was employed by Joe Berry, James Beatty and Joe Lindsey to dig potatoes, and was with these parties about two months, wintering with Joe Lindsey. In the spring our subject and his father began farming on the East Gallatin, but the grasshoppers came and ate up all the crop, and Thomas wintered on 16-Mile Creek. In the spring of 1867 he returned to Virginia City and engaged in freighting. From that place he made a trip by way of Deer Lodge to Fort Benton. Returning to Virginia City, he turned out his cattle in the Madison valley and started for Salt Lake, returning to Montana, and wintering on the East Gallatin at the same place where he had lived before. In the spring of 1868 he went back to Virginia City, buying up all the potatoes in the Madison valley and hauling them to that place, where he sold them. He next went into the Highland mines with flour, and thence to Blackfoot City. Coming again to Virginia City he loaded up merchandise and went to Cache valley, Salt Lake, and traded with the Mormons that fall, returning to Montana with flour, eggs and onions. While in Cache valley a plan was laid to rob and murder him, but being informed of the fact by a friendly Mormon, he took his outfit across the river into Idaho and came to Virginia City, where he sold his produce, and returned to the Gallatin valley, wintering his cattle, and attending school in the old log school house, which still stands on the corner of his ranch. In the summer of 1870 he made a trip to Gold Creek, thence to the Gallatin, where he loaded with produce, and went to Butte, Silver Bow and Deer Lodge, then returned to Gallatin, where he sold his outfit. The next winter he attended school in the school house previously spoken of, and the following autumn his brother Benjamin, his partner, went to Oregon, and returned with some horses, when they engaged in farming on Reese Creek until 1872. In 1873 or '74 Mr. Hamilton bought the ranch he now owns. In May, 1876, he went to the Black Hills, in charge of a train going through, being elected wagonmaster. Reaching Deadwood he remained through the summer of 1876, and in the fall returned to the Gallatin valley, the next summer farming on his lower ranch and in the fall making a trip to Salt Lake. In the summer of 1878 he worked on a wood contract with Dan. Maxey, at Ft. Ellis, attended school in the fall, and the next winter and the following summer freighted on the Ft. Benton road to Helena and Ft. Benton. At the approach of winter he left his outfit on the Marias river and wintered in the Gallatin valley. In the spring he went to Fort Benton, came around through Judith Basin and by way of White Sulphur Springs to his home ranch, being the first one to bring a train across the mountains by that route. While near the head waters of the Muscleshell on this trip, a party who attempted to steal the cattle of the outfit was captured by Hamilton and brought into camp. The next trip was made to Butte with produce, and from Butte to Red Rock, then the terminus of the Utah & Northern R. R., and from Red Rock returned to Bozeman. The next spring he made two trips to Butte, returned to the Gallatin and thence to Ft. Benton, in the summer, freighting between the latter place and Helena, and in the fall loaded at Helena and went to Fort McLeod, returning to headwaters on the Marias River, and there leaving his outfit he came to the Gallatin. In the following spring he came to Helena, where he loaded again for Fort McLeod, and returned by way of Fort Benton. During this trip he was compelled to swim the whole outfit across the Marias River, and several of the wagons were upset. The balance of that summer he freighted from Benton to the Big Bow River, and after returning went on a visit to the states of Iowa, Illinois and Ohio, his birthplace. Returning to Montana, after three-and-a-half months, he made one trip to Helena and two trips to Butte, retired from the freighting business, and commenced farming and stock raising. At present Mr. Hamilton's farm consists of 322 acres of improved land, all under fence and cultivation, with frame dwelling house, barns and out buildings. Mr. Hamilton's father lives near Spring Hill, and there are three brothers and two sisters—Benjamin S., Richard D., Andrew, and Hannah and Elizabeth. All are married except Thomas C. and a brother.

WM. HANKINSON, Lower Willow creek. James and Ann Hankinson raised a family of eight children, of which William is the fourth, born March 7, 1834, in the village of Disberry, six miles from Manchester, England. In boyhood he worked in a cotton factory 12 hours daily. When 11 years old he learned the spinner's trade. His parents died when he was 16 years old, leaving him without means, and with two orphan sisters to support. In 1855 he emigrated to the United States, bringing with him his two sisters. As he had been taught the Mormon doctrine, he sought the city of the Saints and came to Utah, settling near Willard, and although for 14 years he labored under the oppressive yoke of Mormonism, he is thankful to the doctrine for bringing him to the United States, as he would ,perhaps have groveled in poverty all his life in his mother country. In 1868 he left the Mormon country and went to Mound Springs, Idaho, where he kept hotel for two years and made some money. In 1871 he came to Montana, bringing with him 50 head of stock cattle, eight horses and two wagons, the profits of scarcely three years' labor at Mound Springs. He located 145 acres of land at the confluence of Willow creek and the Jefferson river, and began to be prosperous. He married Sarah Phillips June 25, 1857, and 12 children have been born to them, viz: Edward, born in South Utah, June 25, 1858; Wm. H., born in Lost valley, Utah, December 29, 1859; Jane, born in Lost valley, Utah, February 9, 1862; Elizabeth, born in Box Elder Co., Utah, February 12, 1864; Joseph, born in Box Elder Co., Utah, June 26, 1866; Hiram, born in Box Elder Co., Utah, July 6, 1868; Sarah, born in Mound Springs, Idaho, August 12, 1870; George A., born in Gallatin Co., M. T., November 4, 1872; Albert G., born in Gallatin Co., M. T., January 20, 1874; Charles R., born in Gallatin Co., M. T., March 9, 1876; Francis F., born in Gallatin Co., M. T., July 13, 1878; Mary H., born in Gallatin Co., M. T., February 10, 1882. Mr. Hankinson has been the pioneer in building and improving the neighborhood. He left England an uneducated, penniless orphan youth; has been a close observer and a very successful business manager, and now has 480 acres of land, 100 head of cattle and a large band of horses.

MICHAEL HANLEY, Three Forks, was born in Limerick, Ireland, May 25, 1839. When he was but three months old his parents emigrated to the United States and settled in Maine, where he resided until eleven or twelve years old. The family then removed to Waukesha county, near White Springs, Wis., and resided on a farm until 1855; went to Eau Claire county and remained until 1860, when Michael thought a country farther west better suited to his tastes. He therefore journeyed to Colorado and spent one year in speculations of various kinds, and in March, 1861, returned to the woods of Wisconsin, logged and lumbered with a camp of thirty-five to fifty men, and continued that business until 1867, when he came up the Missouri to Montana, located on Willow Creek and engaged in farming. Here he was Notary Public, Justice of the Peace, Assessor, etc. In 1878 Mr. Hanley, in company with A. W. Paul, bought the Shield or Shed's Bridge property, and opened it as a hotel and store, which they resided in until December 19, 1881, when it was consumed by fire. The present imposing building was erected subsequently at a cost of about $12,000. In 1880 Mr. Hanley served his country in the legislature. He sold patent rights two years; is one of the owners of the franchise known as Shed's bridges, built by David Humphrey under a charter, since changed to a license. There are about a dozen bridges. Mr. Hanley was married in February, 1875, and lost his wife December 7, 1877; she is interred in Willow Creek Cemetery. He lost his only son, Charles Edward, when only six years old. Mrs. Hanley was formerly Margaret Calahan, a lady of refinement and education, a graduate of Vincennes Academy. In the practice of law Mr. Hanley has ever been successful, and has acted as a Justice of the Peace since coming to the Territory. He has made land office business a specialty, and acts as deputy clerk of the courts. In short he is one of Gallatin county's most energetic and wealthy men.

J. F. HARNEY, P. O. Bozeman, was born at Plattsburgh, N. Y., June 14, 1848. He remained in that State until 18 years of age, when he went to Leavenworth, Kan. After one year he crossed the plains in the government employ to Camp Supply, Indian Ter., and was in the employ of the government several years. Returning to the East, he learned the trade of bricklaying and plastering. In 1878 he came to Montana and assisted in the building of Fort Assiniboine, after which he went to Helena, where he worked a short time; thence to Bozeman, where he at once engaged in contracting and building, having erected some of the finest buildings in the city. In the spring of 1883 he also engaged in the furniture and undertaking business in company with J. B. Sennett. They do all kinds of upholstering, and carry as fine a stock in their line as can be found in the Territory.

JOHN HARPER, Bozeman, was born in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., November 23, 1845. He went into Canada, where he remained seven years, and there learned the blacksmith trade. In 1870 he came to Montana, and settling in Bozeman continued to work at his trade until the summer of 1883, when he was employed as salesman in the hardware store of Sebree, Ferris & White. Mr. Harper is also interested in cattle in the Shields River country. He was married, July 26, 1882, to Miss Martha E. Hollenbaugh, formerly of Illinois.

THOMAS HARRIS, Reese creek, was born November 6, 1816, in Monmouthshire, South Wales; emigrated to the United States in December, 1854, landing in New Orleans early in February, 1855. In March he sailed up the Mississippi river as far as St. Louis; thence went to Brenner and engaged work in the rolling mills. After the mill burned in December, he went up the river as far as Chippewa Falls, and took a lumber raft down to St. Louis. In the following spring (1855) Mr. Harris moved to Nebraska, and engaged in teaming until 1863, when he crossed the plains to Salt Lake to settle among the Mormons and live in their faith. Not finding things to his mind he remained two weeks, hitched up his team and started for Montana, arriving in Alder Gulch the last of October. He followed mining from that time until 1871. Not finding the miner's fortune, he abandoned the mines, moved to Willow creek and commenced the cultivation of the soil. In 1875 he located his present home of 160 acres of land on Reese creek. He has three living children, and to-day is a hale, hearty old gentleman.

D. R. HARRIS, Reese creek, son of Thomas and Ann Harris, was born in Monmouthshire, South Wales, May 5, 1853; emigrated to the United States and lived with his father, traveling over different parts of the country until 1863. Leaving home he resided in Salt Lake City until July 6, 1874; moved to Willow creek, M. T., and one year later located some land in company with his father at Reese creek, a homestead of 160 acres. Together they have eighty acres under cultivation. In 1882 they had thirty acres of oats, which yielded 1,100 bushels, and twenty-eight acres of wheat that yielded 800 bushels. Mr. Harris is clerk of the Gallatin branch of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and is a wide-awake, energetic citizen. He was united in marriage March 15, 1882, with Miss Jannette Fife, daughter of Alexander and Jessie Fife.

W. A. HARRISON, a prosperous farmer of Sweet Grass valley, is a native of Canada, born on September 27, 1836. His father was a mechanic and millwright by trade. In 1856 Mr. Harrison left Canada for Minnesota, returning to Canada in three years. He located in Minnesota a second time, and remained six years longer. In 1866 he crossed the plains by way of Forts Abercrombie, Union and Benton, to Helena; thence going down on the Benton road, he kept a stage station in a locality dangerous on account of Indians, in 1867-8. He went to Utah and took his wife home over the Union Pacific railroad, being snow-bound for 28 days while on the way. Leaving Mrs Harrison in Minnesota, he returned to White Pine, Nev., and helped to erect some of the best quartz mills at that place. In the fall he returned to the states, and in the spring went to Nebraska and took charge of a pile-driver, on the Omaha and Southwestern railroad. In three months he returned to Montana (summer of 1870), locating in Jefferson county. After buying some stock he engaged in the dairy business for nine years, when he came to Sweet Grass and located a ranch with his brother, but did not take up his residence here until two years afterward. His ranch consists of 320 acres, nearly all fenced and in good state of cultivation, with good buildings and other conveniences. He has a dairy connected with his farm, but uses it principally as a hay farm; he raises considerable stock. Mr. Harrison is postmaster at Sweet Grass. He was married in 1865 to Sarah E. Davis, of New York, and has three children,—Leland, Adelbert and Cæsar.

CHARLES S. HARTMAN, Bozeman, was born at Monticello, Ind., in 1861; educated in Wabash college, Crawfordsville; taught school in Indiana; came to Montana in 1882, and was employed in Nelson Story's bank for one year. He began practicing law in 1883, having read in Monticello; was also engaged in real estate in connection with law practice. In December, 1884, he was elected probate judge of Gallatin county, by the republicans. Judge Hartman was married December 2, 1884, to Miss Flora Imes, of Monticello, Ind.

WM. ORMAN PARK HAYES, P. O. Bozeman, is a native of Tennessee, and was born January 28, 1828. In 1838 the family moved to Arkansas, and resided there until 1858, when our subject joined the Butterfield Expedition to look out a route for the first overland mail across the continent, and the party went through Texas to Arizona, where he remained until 1860. Thence he went to California and to Fort Yumas, going into Colorado the same year, where he mined until 1863, when he came to Bannack City and to Alder Gulch in December, 1863, afterward coming into the Gallatin Valley, being one of the five earliest settlers here; the others of the party being the two Rouses, Jake Green and W. J. Beall. Here Mr. Hayes began farming, which he has continued since. He was once elected County Commissioner, but, after holding that position for six months, resigned. He was also elected as a member of the Territorial Council and Legislature for five regular terms and one extra session, being first elected in August, 1874, May 22, 1878, he was married to Miss Mary E. Parsons, of Iowa, and has two children, a son and a daughter, named respectively, Park and Maud.

C. S. HEFFERLIN, Livingston, was born at Wyandotte, Kan., February 5, 1856. He was in charge of the Wyandotte Post-office from 1873 to '76; was next clerk in the Kansas Pacific Railway office at Armstrong, Kan., from 1876 to 1878; was master mechanic's clerk at Ellis, Kan., until 1879, and held a similar position at Denver, Col., from 1879 to 1882. He was next cashier at Billing's Station, N. P. R. R., from August, 1882, to March 15, 1883, and was then assigned to Custer Station, March 16, 1883, as agent. He was transferred to Livingston, in the same capacity, November 14, 1883. Mr. Hefferlin has full charge of the ticket and freight business at this station, and is much respected as a competent and worthy officer.

J. E. HENDRY, P. O. Livingston, editor and business manager of the Daily Enterprise and National Park Pioneer, and junior partner in the business, was born in New Brunswick, Canada, March 21, 1859. He grew up in his native country, and removed in 1880 to Herman, Grant Co., Minn., where he was connected with journalism until 1882. He then came to Montana, remained at Billings until May, 1883, when he came to Livingston and formed the existing partnership with George H. Wright, in the Enterprise and Pioneer.

FRANK HENRY, P. O. Livingston, attorney at law, established practice at Livingston in October, 1883. He was born at Dayton, O., in 1854; received a common school education and removed to Chillicothe, Mo., where he began the study of law in the office of Luther T. Collier in 1875; he was admitted to the bar in 1876, and entered upon the practice of his profession at Chillicothe. In October, 1883, he came to Montana and located at Livingston.

JOHN E. HIGGINS, Livingston, was born in Marathon Co., Wis., October 21, 1857. When old enough Mr. Higgins assisted his parents in farming, and followed farming in that state until 1876. He then removed to Illinois and took charge of a farm for a party named Fox. After holding the position for two and one-half years he resigned and went to Stillwater, Minn. Was employed for two and one-half years in lumbering and milling for C. W. Nelson & Co. September 24, 1882, Mr. Higgins came to Livingston and formed partnership with P. F. Hanley, and engaged in the saloon business. December 15, 1882, he purchased Mr. Hanley's interest and removed to Park St., near the depot, September 2, 1882, where he rebuilt the saloon and added an additional story.

GEORGE W. HIGHSMITH, of Highsmith, Scully & Co., blacksmiths and wagon manufacturers, Bozeman, was born at Palestine, Crawford Co., Ill., August 22, 1851, and spent his early life on a farm. At the age of sixteen he engaged to learn the blacksmith trade, remaining six years in the shops at Palestine. He then went to Vincennes, Ind., where he remained about two years, after which he located at Allison, Lawrence Co., Ill., where he remained until October, 1879. He then began looking for better fields, and discovering fertile Montana in the far west, hied him to its hills. Arriving in Bozeman he engaged his services to Frank Harper, and continued in his employ until November, 1882, when, in company with his present partners, he bought Harper out, and they have since continued the business. Mr. Highsmith was married to Miss Selina Plymell at Palestine, Ill., November 24, 1875.

J. V. HINCHMAN, Bozeman, was born January 14, 1846, in Rush Co., Ind. When but five years old his parents moved to Hancock Co., same state. From this time till he was 17 years of age he was a constant attendant at school; then, against the wishes of his parents, he enlisted in the 9th Indiana cavalry, which formed a part of the army of the Tennessee. After but a few months he was appointed orderly-sergeant. Soon after he was appointed Second-Lieutenant, but before the commission reached him, Fort Sulphur, Trestle, Ala., where he was stationed, was captured by General Forrest, and he was held as a prisoner at Cahaba, Ala., until March 16 1865, when he was put in parole camp at Vicksburg. April 30 he was exchanged and given thirty days' furlough; before that time had expired he received his discharge. For four years after this he was a clerk in a dry goods store at Greenfield, Ind., then entered a drug store at Mound City, Mo., in which business and place he remained till 1877, when he came to Virginia City, and engaged in the same business. In 1883 he came to Bozeman, and is now the senior partner in the drug firm of Hinchman & Alward, of that place.

R. C. HITE, P. O. Bozeman, was born in Virginia, September 24, 1823. He grew to manhood in Ohio and Indiana, and lived there until 1852, then started to California with only two companions and one team, and without fire arms of any kind, they reached the Pacific coast in safety. In 1854 he went to Oregon to build a flouring mill, and soon after returned to California. In 1863 during the mining excitement, he with others invested $20,000 in mines in Mexico. Judge Sherwood represented the company and took men and machinery for the erection of works. Very soon after Mr. Hite took a flouring mill to Mexico, and put up the first improved American flouring mill in the State of Sonora, going 600 miles through the country to do so. He remained in Mexico three years, then returned to California and was engaged in building, dairying, mining and speculating until 1876, when he went to Texas and conducted a ranch three years, going to Kansas and engaging in livery business one year. In 1880 he came to Montana and since then has been engaged in mining, building, and improving his property at Bozeman. He is also interested in mines at Clarke's Fork.

CHARLES HOLMES, Bozeman, was born in Sweden, May 16, 1836, and accompanied by his brother came to America in 1848 and first worked in Knox Co., Ill., two years. He then went to Minnesota and remained the greater part of the time until 1866. In 1858 he went into Dakota with the Dakota Land Company, but after remaining there one year they were driven out by the Indians. He then settled in Brown Co., Minn., in the vicinity of the agency, and remained until the great massacre of 1862, at which time he was taken prisoner by the chief, Cut Nose. He soon escaped, and going by night to Fort Ridgely found the Indians fighting there. He passed on and arrived at St. Peter, where he enlisted in volunteers against the Indians and served until the prisoners were recovered, being about sixty days after his enlistment. He then enlisted in the Minnesota Mounted Rangers for one year, under Gen. Sibley, and after serving his time reënlisted in the Second Minnesota Cavalry for a period of three years or during the war, remaining under Gen. Sibley on the frontier. He was discharged in 1866 and soon after came to Montana. In 1867 he arrived at Bozeman, assisted in the building of Fort Ellis and worked on the first house built at that place, soon after taking a contract to furnish wood for the fort, in which occupation he continued two years. He then went into the mountains and was engaged in getting out timber and poles until 1872, when he bought his present ranch of 160 acres and has since been engaged principally in farming and stock-raising. He also contracts for the supplying of the fort with coal, wood, etc. Mr. Holmes was married in the fall of 1875, to Miss Mary J. Banks, a native of Illinois, by whom he has four children.

J. J. HOPPER, P. O. Chico, ranchman between Livingston and Bozeman, is a native of New York, born at Peekskill in 1843. He left New York in 1875, coming to the Crow agency on the Yellowstone, and remained there for nine months; he then bought a ranch of 160 acres, ten miles west of Livingston, now known as "Hopper's ranch," where he yet resides. This was the first ranch entered on the Yellowstone road in Bozeman Pass, being taken up the year before the N. P. R R. survey was made, in 1865. The ranch is well improved and in good condition, and was formerly a stage station. Besides owning the ranch, Mr. Hopper has interests in mines in Emigrant gulch. He was married to Emma Taylor, a native of Little Falls, N. Y., in March, 1865.

JACOB OSBORN HOPPING, P. O. Three Forks, is the youngest of the family of five children of Buckley C. and Eliza Hopping. He was born at Sag Harbor, Long Island, N. Y., June 28, 1839; was educated in the public schools of Burlington, Ia., and the Clinton Academy, N. Y. At the age of eighteen he commenced to learn the moulders' trade at the foundry of Renze & Bradley at Burlington, Ia., but owing to the failure of that firm, did not finish the trade. In the spring of 1860 he went to Pike's Peak, and with Douty & Son and Samuel Sprague started a saw mill at the mouth of the South Boulder cañon, and engaged in the lumber business for about one year; then sold out his interest to Douty, after which he went to the Gregory mines and stayed there until the fall of 1862, when he returned to Iowa. In April, 1863, he crossed the plains to Montana—at that time called the Nez Perces country—arriving at Bannack on August 5 following. He had $100 in greenbacks which were of no real value here at that time. He offered a hotel keeper $2 for a dinner which he promptly refused. He agreed with D. H. Andrews to go to Bivins and he to Alder, located some claims in Bivins, and after paying the ridiculously high prices of the times for pick, shovel and sluice boxes, found that the ground would not pay, traded it for a shoulder of bacon and went to Alder, where he found that Andrews had located claims above the mouth of Granite creek, opposite what was afterward Junction City. The miners had organized a district named Junction, and Hopping, Niddrie, Stone, Cameron, Andrews and Huntington bored the first prospect hole on Dixie bar. They found bed rock at the depth of fifteen feet, and a fair prospect of fine gold. The next enterprise was an arduous one. Alder at that place is very flat, and a survey informed the party that the drain ditch would have to be cut through two thousand feet of ground, some of which was covered with a dense growth of alders and willows. Again, winter was near at hand. Neither Andrews, Huntington or Hopping had any money, so Huntington and Hopping left Andrews to represent the mine while they rustled for a grub stake. The winter was a fine one, wages good, and by building cabins by contract, putting on mud roofs in Virginia city, digging cellars, they soon accumulated enough money to carry them through the winter. They finished the drain ditch on the first of June, 1864. The mine was not a rich one for those times, wages $6 and $8 per day. So they sold it after working two years, taking about $75,000 out of it, and after paying all debts, found themselves with $5,000 each. After Mr. Hopping sold his interest in this mine he moved to Three Forks, where he invested in fifty-three yearlings at $44 each, and has continued buying and selling stock down to the present time. His ranch consists of 500 acres. He was married October 3, 1866, to Miss Mary Allen.

ANDREW JACKSON HUNTER, M. D., Hunter's Hot Springs, is the youngest son in the family of seventeen children of John and Sallie (Price) Hunter, and first cousin to Gen. Sterling Price. His father was a Virginian and a lineal descendant of Pocahontas, having been born in 1760 and his wife in 1766. Our subject was born in Prince Edward Co., Va., March 18, 1815, soon after the battle of New Orleans, hence was named Andrew Jackson. His parents moved to Kentucky when he was a mere child—in 1818—and settled on the Kentucky river, near the home of Cassius M. Clay, who proved a warm friend of the doctor's in after years. Andrew J. worked on his father's farm till about 17 years old; he entered school, and at the early age of 19 years yielded to the desire of his father and commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Wm. Price in Boonesboro, Ky. After completing his studies he went to Louisiana and began practice near Alexandria on the Bayou Rapids and made his home with J. Madison Wells. After two years he went to St. Martinsville and practiced medicine 6 years; then returned to Kentucky and was united in wedlock to Miss Philpott. In 1856 he was engaged as surgeon for the Illinois Central R. R. In 1857 he moved to Benton Co., Mo., and followed his profession. Having previously lost his wife, he married Miss Susan C. Murray. Having lost his health, he went south on a trip, and on his return settled at Georgetown, Ill., again returning to Missouri one year later and located in Callaway, Shamrock Co., where he enjoyed a lucrative practice until the breaking out of the rebellion in 1861. Dr. Hunter was a Union man, but being in the South, entered the army as a surgeon, and was at the battle of Pea Ridge. After that he was assisted by the Federals to Illinois, and getting away with a little money, he sold goods in that state. April 2, 1864, the doctor left Mexico, Mo., for Idaho, soon Montana Ty. Crossing the plains with his wife and three children, and coming via Yellowstone and Bridger's pass, he arrived at Bozeman as they were laying the foundation stone for the first building; he passed on to Virginia City, practiced medicine there till the spring, and in March, 1865, went to Helena, an embryo town of 6 to 8 houses, where he was prominently connected with the vigilance committee. In the fall of the same year he went to Diamond City, in Confederate gulch; then to N. Y. gulch, in 1866, and was appointed delegate to the constitutional convention; was the only Democrat in the convention that voted against the adoption of the same. The doctor was probate judge of Meagher county, and after one year resigned and moved to the Canyon House and practiced medicine till November, 1869. In the first days of December, 1869, he settled in Bozeman, and was probate judge, county physician of Gallatin county, and contract surgeon at Fort Ellis to fill the vacancy of Dr. Davis. In February, 1870, he erected a house on his present location, a rude log edifice, and the same year cultivated 15 acres of land; this has been the doctor's home ever since. In 1874 he was attacked by the Indians when on the farm irrigating—with his son 14 years old and a little Indian 15 years old. They had no way to conceal themselves from the Indians, so resorted to their guns, which they had with them in the field, and drove off the 21 Indians. All was peace the balance of the year. In July, 1875, he was again attacked from the bush by a band of about 60 Indians, while the doctor and his boys were on the prairie; notwithstanding their numbers they again cleared them out, but as the redskins ran away they killed his cattle. Shortly after the fight Lieut. Jerome was sent out with a few soldiers. When they started on their return to Bozeman, the doctor sent his little son 11 years old with them, and he was drowned at Benson's ferry. In 1877 the doctor was appointed physician to Crow agency, and served one year. The U. S. survey was made during the year, and he came to Bozeman June 9 and filed on Sec. 9. In April, 1878, the R. R. commenced an ejectment suit, which terminated in Dr. Hunter's favor, January 24, 1882, and he received his patent, and the property is entailed to his heirs and their heirs. To the doctor have been born 6 children by his present marriage and one son by his first marriage—Samuel J. Hunter, attorney at law in Sulphur Springs, Tex., and a daughter—Ardell—now at New Albany, Ind. By his second wife the children are Mary Lee, now Mrs. Lieut. G. C. Doan, U. S. A.; Davis Beaureguard, at home, married; Lizzie K., now Mrs. Franklin W. Rich; Thomas Stonewall, who was drowned; Sallie Price, the youngest, and Emma Sidney Johnson, deceased. Dr. Hunter has been justice of the peace for 6 years and sent in but one bill of expenses, incurred on the murder trial of G. Schrauty, killed at Springdale station in November, 1882. Dr. Hunter's little daughter was the first person buried in the valley, and Mrs. Hunter was the first white woman in the valley. The doctor is now surrounded with plenty, and is still one of the energetic, enterprising business men of the great Yellowstone valley.

WILLIAM A. IMES, attorney, Bozeman, was born in Francesville, Pulaski Co., Ind., August 29, 1856, and is the son of William and Melinda (Faris) Imes, now living at Monticello, White Co., Ind. The parents were of German-Irish descent. Mr. Imes emigrated from Pennsylvania in 1842, settling near Crawfordsville, while the parents of Mrs. Imes settled within the present town site of Indianapolis, Mr. Faris making the brick with which the old state house was built. At the age of ten years our subject left home and herded cattle for five years, and for three seasons thereafter was employed in a brick-yard at the nominal sum of $20 per month. In the spring of 1874 he entered the Indiana (Asbury) University,, and continued as a student two years, but was compelled to leave on account of not having sufficient means. He taught school, and commenced the study of law with Hon. Joseph H. Mattock, at Monticello, in 1879, and was admitted to practice in the 39th judicial district, by the circuit court of White Co., and practiced in that county until August 22, 1882, when he departed for Montana, August 29, his 26th birthday, arriving at Bozeman where he has since been engaged in practicing law, and also in the real estate and insurance business.

T. J. IRWIN, P. O. Livingston, was born at Watertown, N. Y., and when a few years old removed with his parents to Janesville, Wis. Here Mr. Irwin learned carriage painting, working at that trade until 23 years of age. He then began running on the Northwestern Railroad, between Janesville and Chicago, and was employed as fireman and brakeman for four years. That position he relinquished to accept another on the Omaha route, as fireman and engineer. After serving three years, he obtained a position as engineer on the Manitoba Railroad, which he held for four years. In 1881 he was appointed engineer on the Northern Pacific Railroad, and at times has been running as conductor. At present Mr. Irwin has charge, as engineer, of the route between Bozeman and Helena. He married, March 17, 1880, Miss Mary Davy, of St. Paul, ARTHUR JARRED, P. O. Bozeman, son of Arthur and Delilah (Nugent) Jarred, was born in Fountain Co., Ind., and is of German-French descent. His parents died when he was about eleven years old, and three years afterward he was bound to a man to manufacture harness and saddles, and worked at that trade for about three years, when he ran away and went into Park county, being employed on a farm for about two years, and from there went to Illinois, remaining in the latter state for thirteen years. While in Illinois he was married to Miss Sarah Jane Wallace, in December, 1859. Leaving Illinois in June, 1865, he went to Franklin Co., Kan., and was there from July until the following March. He next went to Ringgold Co., Iowa, but in three months moved to Barton Co., Mo., but after living there about four years, started for Montana, stopping about six months in Utah, and reaching the Gallatin valley in the fall of 1871. Here he is now engaged in farming, his farm being about three and a half miles from Bozeman and near the east Gallatin river, where he also has a cozy home and pleasant surroundings. Of six children born to Mr. and Mrs. Jarred, four are now dead. The living are named Capitola and Henry McClellan.

E. D. JOHNSON, P. O. Bozeman, son of Jesse and Martha Johnson, was born near Burlington, Ia., December 11, 1848, being the seventh son and seventh child in the family of nine children born to Jesse and Martha Johnson, who were farmers by occupation. In 1852, after the death of his mother, he was placed in charge of his uncle at Oskaloosa, Ia., and later of another uncle at Council Bluffs. In July, 1863, he drove a team for E. K. Sweet, (who nicknamed the lad "Jimmy,") to a point within nine miles of Denver, where he was severely injured by falling under the wheels of the heavily laden freight wagon, which passed over his body. After five days his employer passed that way on his return to the Missouri river, and took the injured boy to Atchison, Kan., where he soon recovered and resumed work. During the following winter, while herding the cattle on Grand Island, he was snowed in at Adobe Town on the South Platte, and narrowly escaped death from freezing. In July, 1864, he pushed forward to Salt Lake City, and witnessed the murder of eleven men by the Indians (among whom was Tom Flaherty, owner of the train, and Shadrach Street) and the plunder of the train. The party crossed the Platte at Julesburg, and taking the Pole creek route across the Black Hills, and in a devisting course to Emigrant cañon, arrived at Salt Lake City about October 20, and a few days later pushed for Government Springs, Skull valley, eighty-five miles west of Salt Lake City, to herd the cattle for the winter. In March, 1865, Mr. Johnson freighted from Salt Lake to Virginia City, and on one of those trips saw the coach plundered by road agents in Port Neuf cañon, and four of its passengers lying dead. In September, 1865, he accompanied Colonel Brown to Cottonwood creek, Gallatin Co. In December, he with nine others went to the Yellowstone valley, where they built the Double Cabins. In March, 1866, he returned to Bozeman. A year later he rented a ranch from J. M. Bozeman, but owing to early frosts his crops proved a failure. The crops of 1867, however, netted him a sufficient sum to purchase 160 acres, to which he has since added 320 acres. During the summer of 1877 he freighted from Terry's Landing to Fort Custer, during the time Colonel Buel commanded there. In January, 1878, he freighted to Fort Lemhi and to the Horse Prairie Cantonment during the summer of that year, Since 1878 he has given his sole attention to his ranch, where he has a steam thresher and all other farm implements en regle.

NEWMAN JOHNSON, Bozeman, was born in Oneida Co., N. Y., April 6, 1836. In 1840 he removed with his parents to Canada, where his father was engaged in the stock business seven years. In the spring of 1847 he came to Decatur, Ill., and there attended school until he was seventeen years of age. He then engaged in the grocery business in 1853, continuing until 1860. In that year he made a trip to Colorado, then a Territory, and engaged in teaming and mining. He returned to Illinois in 1861, but started again for the West in 1862, intending to stop at the Florence mines, but hearing discouraging reports of that district when he had gone as far as Fort Lemhi, on the Salmon river, the party decided to separate and go on prospecting tours. Mr. Johnson and party came through the Beaverhead country, and arrived at Birch Creek, when one of the party, Mr. Boswick, came into camp with the report that they had struck diggings paying twenty-five cents to the pan, on what was known as Grasshopper Creek, now the Bannack camp. Mr. Johnson reached Bannack camp in August, 1862, then went to Bevins' gulch, and engaged in the mining business until the winter of 1863. Returning to Bannack that winter he remained, engaged in mining until 1865. In the spring of that year he went to Alder gulch and engaged in quartz mining, remaining until he came to Gallatin valley in 1874. For two years while in Nevada City he was engaged in the grocery business. He has since then been engaged in farming in the Gallatin valley, but has now sold his farm of 160 acres in the Elk Grove settlement. The whole farm is enclosed, and its average yield per acre is: wheat, forty bushels; oats, fifty bushels; which have also averaged forty pounds to the bushel. Mr. Johnson has raised but little barley—it yielded from sixty to ninety bushels to the acre. Mr. Johnson was married to Miss Emmie F. Cooper, June 10, 1867, in Nevada City, Alder gulch. This lady is a daughter of Captain Charles and Emma Cooper, was born in Livingston Co., Mo., November 7, 1852, and was educated in the district schools in Missouri and Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have six children. The eldest, Charles N., was born in Madison Co., M. T., July 19, 1870, and Emma Rena, the youngest, was born April 14, 1882, in Gallatin Co., M. T. While at Bannack City in 1862, lumber being very scarce, Mr. Johnson and party had to cut up their wagon boxes to make sluice boxes. On the arrival of the St. Louis Prospecting Company they bought a whip saw (being the only timber saw in camp) and sawed lumber for which the miners paid $1.50 per foot. They also paid $1.50 per pound for nails. About that time there were 1,500 miners in Bannack City, and only four or five ladies.

HORACE T. KELLY, Bozeman, was born September 22, 1848, in Delaware Co., Ia., and remained there 19 years. He was educated at Manchester, Ia., in the district school. In November, 1876, he removed to Montana, and has remained in the territory since that time. Mr. Kay has been a Sabbath school superintendent, also clerk of school board, road supervisor, etc. He owns 400 acres of choice land, 325 of which are inclosed. Average yield per acre: oats, 40 bushels; barley, 50 bushels; wheat, 30 bushels; potatoes, 250 bushels. Mr. Kelly has 15 head of horses and 30 head of cattle. He is by occupation a school teacher, but at present is engaged in farming and stock-raising. He was married to Miss M. J. Phillips June 14, 1873, at Fairview, Mo. Mrs. K. was educated at Fairview graded school, has been teacher in Sabbath school, and is a member of the Methodist Church. Mr. and Mrs. Kelly have four children.

JOHN KICHER, Livingston, was born in Wurtemburg, Germany, in 1839. At the age of 16 he emigrated to the United States and located at Harrisburg, P., where he learned the butcher's trade, and was employed in that capacity for nine years. He then removed to Tirkenton, Pa., where he butchered for ten years; he then formed a partnership with Benjamin Buffingman, and started a butcher shop in Chicago, purchasing Mr. Buffingman's interest after carrying on business for four years. In 1882 he left Chicago, working on a construction train for the Northern Pacific R. R., and in September of that year came to Livingston and laid all the side tracks at that point. December 23, 1882, he engaged in the saloon business in the old town, and September 2, 1883, moved to his present location. Since then Mr. Kicher has improved his building by adding club rooms. His saloon is known as the Milwaukee Beer Hall.

CARL KLEINSCHMIDT, JR., Bozeman, was born August 14, 1862, at Magdeburg, Prussia. His parents brought him to America when he was but two years of age. They lived at Lawrence, Kan., for three years; then moved to Pleasant Hill, Mo., where he attended the public school for six years. In 1873 the family removed and came to Helena, where the boy attended closely to his studies until 1878, then went to Booneville, Mo., and completed his student life by a three-years course of study at Kemper College. In June, 1881, he returned to Helena and entered his father's office as assistant book-keeper. He was found to be efficient and steady, and in March, 1882, his father gave him charge of a branch grocery in Bozeman, which had in that year, cash sales of $120,000.

PETER KOCH, Bozeman, was born in Denmark October 8, 1844, where his father was a Lutheran clergyman. Mr. Koch was educated in and graduated from the "Latin schools"; entered the university of Copenhagen at 18 years of age; remained until spring of 1865, when he emigrated to the United States, being of too restless a disposition to remain at home. Landed in New York in May, 1865, penniless and unaccustomed to work of any kind—a stranger in a strange land. It may be imagined that his first experiences were anything but pleasant. Working at anything that offered—as draughtsman in a printwork in New Jersey, as clerk in a store and a farm-hand in the same state, as laborer on a railroad in Virginia and Missouri, he finally found his way to an uncle in southern Mississippi, where he remained until the spring of 1869, when he started for the Northwest without any definite idea of his objective point. Walking along the levee at St. Louis, a sign on the steamboat "Tacony" settled this. It read: "Ho! for Ft. Benton and the gold mines," and the next day found him on board of this boat on a weary journey up the "Big Muddy." The river was unusually low, and the boat unfit for the voyage. After spending 99 days on the river and changing boats several times, he found himself on a sandbar in the river, still several hundred miles below Ft. Benton. Disgusted, he left the boat, embarked on a raft, made by tying a few cottonwood logs together with willows, and started back down the river to a little trading settlement at the mouth of the Muscleshell, engaged in wood-chopping, working and hunting through the winter. The Indians burned all his wood in the spring, leaving him again without a dollar, and in debt for his winter's supplies. He remained in charge of Clendenin's trading post through the summer, working out of debt. Life on the Missouri river was rough and not without danger. Indians were constantly around looking for stray scalps. Hardly a fortnight passed without a skirmish with the Sioux. The whites had to be constantly on the alert. Rifle and revolver were never out of reach. Chopping wood, the rifle stood leaning against the nearest stump, and by turns one of the party was always on guard, walking around the choppers and scanning the woods for lurking Indians. Narrow escapes were of frequent occurrence, but while he was at Musselshell the Indians never got any advantage, while losing several scalps themselves. Shortly after he left, four white men were killed. In December, 1870, he left for the Montana settlements. Traveled on horseback to Fort Benton during intensely cold weather; was lost and nearly frozen in a snowstorm. Went from

Ft. Benton through Helena to Fort Ellis, where he was employed in the sutler store. Went on a government survey during the summer of 1871, returned to Ft. Ellis, served as foragemaster in the quartermaster's office during the winter of 1871-2, and was employed by Willson & Rich, at Bozeman, as a book-keeper, from the spring of 1872 to 1873, when he went again as compassman on a survey in Deer Lodge Co. Returning he took charge of a trading expedition to the Judith basin, where he built the first permanent house in that valley. Here he had much such an experience as at Musselshell. The Sioux killed several men in the immediate vicinity, and stole repeatedly the horses of the whites and friendly Indians belonging at the fort. Returning to Bozeman in the spring, he had that summer a surveying contract from the government in the Gallatin and Yellowstone valleys. This completed, he made a rapid trip in the fall of 1874 to Mississippi, and was married, returning again to Bozeman in November and going to work for his old employers, Willson & Rich. In the fall of 1875 he went as trader to the Crow Indian agency, and spent the winter there; returned to Bozeman in 1876 and went again to work for Willson as book-keeper, taking charge also of the agricultural implement store of T. C. Power & Co. When the bank of Story & Willson was established in the fall of 1878, he kept in addition their books, and when Willson retired in August, 1879, he became cashier of the bank of N. Story, which position he now holds, having never been absent a day from his post, except once for a short trip of nine days up the West Gallatin river on a reconnoisance for a practical railroad route into the Geyser basin. Being a man of varied tastes and some knowledge of geology, botany and kindred sciences, he has always taken a delight in studying the natural features and resources of the territory of Montana, and is considered something of an authority on this subject. He has contributed a number of articles on subjects of that character to the territorial and St. Paul papers, and also several sketches to European magazines.

SAMUEL B. KRATTCER, P. O. Bozeman, was born in Livingston Co., Mo., February 27, 1857. In April, 1866, he left that state for Montana, and has remained in the Territory since that time. He was educated at Hamilton, on lower West Gallatin, and Fairview, on Upper West Gallatin. His present occupation is farming. He was married to Miss Rachel Mulligan, who was born in Henderson county, Ill., near Carmon Station, and was educated in the same county and state. They have one child: Benjamin F. Mr. Krattcer is a member of the "Liberal League."

CHARLES KRUG, Bozeman, of the firm of Spieth & Krug, was born in Germany in 1840. His early life was spent, after schooling, on a farm. He emigrated to the United States in 1856, landing at New York; went to Missouri, where he farmed until 1864. He then left for Virginia City, M. T., where he remained prospecting in the mountains until 1867, when he left for Bozeman, and with Mr. Spieth engaged in the brewing business. In 1864 he and Mr. Spieth bought an interest in a coal mine in Bridge Cañon, and have since operated it. In the winter of 1882-83, four men engaged in the mine were killed by a snowslide. Messrs. Spieth & Krug labored hard and earnestly to recover their bodies, and were successful in finding and giving a decent burial to three of the unfortunate victims. Mr. Spieth was the first on the scene of the disaster, and the bodies, when recovered, were drawn four miles before reaching a team and conveyance.

LOUIS A. E. KRUGER, Bozeman, is a native of Germany, and was born August 23, 1841. He remained in his native country until nineteen years of age, having prior to that time learned the trade of bricklayer and mason. Coming to the United States in 1860, he resided in the state of Pennsylvania about six years, and in 1866 came to Montana and worked in the Diamond Mines six months, after which he spent two months at Radersburg, and from there went to Bozeman, where he spent a couple of months, then making a trip up the Yellowstone, prospecting which occupied about six months. He at length went to work at his trade, in the employ of the Government, at Fort Ellis and Camp Baker, and so continued until 1872. On the 9th day of January, 1873, he was married to Miss Amelia Ketterer, a native of Germany, and settled permanently in Bozeman. He superintended the building of the Crow agency on the Yellowstone, and first opened the Laclede Hotel at Bozeman, which he continued to run about fourteen months, since when he has followed the occupation of contractor and builder in the city of Bozeman. He has erected some of the best buildings in the city, and is now superintending the building of the public school. He still owns the Laclede Hotel property.

S. W. LANGHORNE, Bozeman was born in Buckingham Co., Va., January 19, 1836. His parents, Dr. J. W. and Mary (Branch) Langhorne, were natives of Virginia of English and Scotch descent. The family moved in 1842 to Missouri, where S. W. was educated. In 1852 the family moved to California where Dr. Langhorne practiced his profession, while the subject of this sketch carried on the drug business. He resided in California until 1863, when he moved to Nevada Territory, making a stay of two years and removing to Montana in June, 1865, making a settlement at Helena. Five years later he moved to Bozeman, where he started the first village drug store the same year. He started the Bozeman Chronicle in 1885, and issued the first number of that paper January 27, it being the fourth paper published in the village. The Chronicle is a nine-column folio, printed on fine paper in the office at Bozeman, with a list of about 600. It is thoroughly Democratic in politics, liberal in social and religious matters and newsy. Mr. Langhorne married Miss Alice Leonard, of Saint Lawrence Co., N. Y., October 24, 1873. They are the parents of four children—Alice, Maurice, Helen and Samuel. He was elected Probate Judge of Gallatin in 1871; in 1876 he was elected member of the Legislature and chosen speaker of the Assembly the same year; in 1878 he was elected Clerk and Recorder of Gallatin county. He was also a member of the constitutional convention of 1884, is Mayor of Bozeman, and has filled other offices credited in the general history.

THOMAS LEWIS, of the firm of Willson & Lewis, Bozeman, was born in Ohio August 31, 1843. In 1844 his parents moved to Missouri. In 1859 he went to Pike's Peak, but soon returned to Missouri, where he remained until 1863, then coming to Virginia City, M. T., where he remained until the fall of 1864, when he went to Helena and spent the winter. In April, 1865, he came to Bozeman, and was engaged in running a sawmill during the summer and a thrashing machine in the fall, for three years. In 1869 he bought a ranch, which he worked that season, and in 1870 engaged in mining at Cedar Creek. In 1872 he took charge of Rich & Willson's freighting train, and during the winter worked in their store, continuing in their employ until 1877, when, he in company with Frank Rich, bought out the freighting train and handled it that season. In January, 1878, Mr. Lewis sold his interest to Charles Rich, went to work for Willson, and soon after bought an interest in the store, which he sold to Mr. Willson again in 1879, and in company with Maj. Pease engaged in trading with the Indians. The latter interest he sold out in the spring of 1880, and during the following fall went east, but returned in about six weeks, and in 1881, in company with Harvey Mills, took beef cattle to Chicago. In 1882 he engaged in the brick business, turning out some 19,000 per day. He is now a director of the Bozeman National Bank. Mr. Lewis was married on the 13th day of July, 1882, to Miss Kate Martin, formerly of San Jose, Cal.

S. W. LEWIS, P. O. Bozeman, is a native of the West Indies, born on the 19th day of May, 1833. When a child his parents moved to the United States and located at Newark, N. J. His mother died in 1844 and his father in 1847, and leaving Newark he traveled during the intervening years until 1853. In the spring of that year he went to California, and locating in San Francisco opened a barber shop on Commercial street, continuing in business there two years. He then removed to Sierra Co., Cal., opened a barber shop, and was also engaged in mining until 1862 with very good success. His health becoming much impaired at that time, he spent two years in traveling, and visited Europe and the West India Islands, returning in 1864 to San Francisco. Finding business very dull there, he went to Portland, Ore., and from there to Idaho City, where he engaged in business, and in 1865 lost two fine buildings by fire. He rebuilt in 1866, and during that year came to Montana, visiting Virginia City and Helena, and finally locating on Elk Creek, where he bought a lot and erected a building. In the latter part of 1866 he changed his residence to Helena, where he remained until late in the season of 1867, then opening a shop at Radersburg, also visiting the various camps in the vicinity plying his trade. In the fall of 1868 he came to Bozeman and established his present business. In 1870 he built the shop he now occupies on Main street, and since then he has constantly followed his vocation, not having been three miles from the city of Bozeman for the past seven years. He has erected several fine business buildings and residences in Bozeman. Mr. Lewis, after the death of his parents and prior to his going to California provided a home for his sister with Capt. S. R. Mills, paying her board and also her tuition while in attendance at day school, afterward sending her to the schools at McGrawville, N. Y., and thence to Oberlin, where she graduated. He continuing to pay her expenses sent her to Boston, where she took instructions under Mr. Brackett, the sculptor. Under the advice of Harriet Hosmer, the sculptress, Mr. Lewis sent her to Florence, Italy, having, through the courtesy of the Hon. Wm. H. Seward, then secretary of state, been provided with letters of introduction to the American consul at Paris and Florence, from whom she received every possible courtesy, attention and kindness, and arduously pursuing her studies as a sculptress succeeded in thoroughly mastering the art, and secured for herself a position in the profession.

C. LEVERICH, Bozeman, was born in Tipton, Cedar Co., Ia., August 4, 1846, and is a son of Ira and Jane Morgan Leverich. His father was a native of New York state, and his mother of Virginia, near Wheeling. His parents are both living and recently paid their son a visit in Montana. Ira Leverich was a farmer, and our subject worked on the farm uutil he was twenty years old. On the 20th day of May, 1866, he started to cross the plains for Montana, and was sixteen weeks en route, coming via Omaha, North Platte, and the Bozeman route. His time was spent for two or three years in work by the month and visiting the different mining camps. In 1872 he located on his present place of 240 acres at the mouth of Leverich cañon. He took out the first timber that was ever cut. The location is a picturesque one at the foot of a beautiful mountain range. There is an abundance of water and Mr. Leverich is always sure of a crop. In 1882 his crop averaged 41 bushels of wheat to the acre and 74 bushels of oats to the acre. April 27, 1875, he married Miss Kate Shney, who was born in Wisconsin, to which state Mr. Leverich returned after her. Both paid a visit to the states in 1881–82. They have one child, Fred Shney, born at the present home, November 16, 1878. Mr. Leverich came to Montana poor, but by industry combined with temperance he has accumulated sufficient to enjoy life. He experienced the usual ups and downs in the early days of the settlement in the territory.

J. LIBBY, Northern Pacific Hotel, Bozeman, was born in Maine, and attended day school until 14 years old, when he began labor to sustain himself, attending school at night. He engaged in a grocery and meat market in Milford, Mass., in 1872, and two years later was interested in a large co-operative store in Michigan, of which he was secretary and treasurer. In 1873 he was engaged in the boot and shoe business in Michigan, but closed that out in 1877, afterward going to Minnesota, Dakota and Massachusetts, and finally to Montana. After spending about three years hunting, boating and fishing, he opened a first-class restaurant, which he operated until 1883, when he became proprietor of the Northern Pacific hotel, and he now conducts one of the best houses in the Territory, being especially adapted to the business. He was married to Miss Belle Blackett, of Roseville, Mich. Three children were born to them: Stella (now deceased), Grace and Belle B. In 1876, subsequent to the death of his wife, he was married to Miss Catharine McArthur, by whom he has one child.

JOHN W. LOCKEY, of Lockey Bros., Bozeman, was born in Dubuque, Iowa, October 19, 1850, and commenced mining and farming early in life. At the age of twenty-one he was lead mining in Iowa. In 1871 he came to Helena, M. T., and clerked in a general store until 1876. He then returned east to visit his parents, also to attend Baylies' commercial college at Dubuque, Iowa, remaining two years; he then returned to Montana, clerking till 1880 in Helena, and until 1881 in Butte City. In company with his brother, G. W. Lockey, he bought an interest in the present business, and in June, 1882, took $1,000 stock in the Wisconsin and Montana Cattle Co., being then organized. He built a residence in 1882, having on the first of February in that year married Miss Winnie Anderson. Mr. Lockey at one time owned considerable real estate in Helena, which he sold in the spring of 1884.

A. L. LOVE, P. O. Livingston, was born in Iowa City, Ia., in August, 1853. He was educated in the State University of Iowa; learned the tinner's trade, and engaged as merchant's clerk. He next traveled two years as salesman for Pitkin & Brooks, of Chicago, afterward spending one summer on the plains for his health, and finally bringing up at Deadwood, Dak., where he engaged in the lumber business. He came to Billings in August, 1882, and entered the banking house of Stebbins, Mund & Co., as collecting clerk. In April, 1883, he was sent to Livingston to organize the bank of which he is cashier and manager.

TIMOTHY L. LUCE, P. O. Bozeman, was born in Vermont, on the 21st day of November, 1826. He is a son of Joshua and Rebecca (Boxter) Luce, and remained at Montpelier, his birthplace, until he was 21 years old, when he traveled to Grand Rapids, Mich., and after working for a time at his trade, which was that of baker, he went to Milwaukee, Wis., about 1840, remaining there about one year, when he went to Sault Ste. Marie, Lake Superior, staying there through one summer, next going to Boston and Lowell, Mass., also to Keene, N. H., his stay in those places occupying a period of about three years. Returning to Montpelier for a short time, from that city he went to Fort Atkinson, Wis., staying there some four or five years, or until the stampede to Colorado took place in 1858-9, when he with other parties started for that section. The other parties gave up the trip, and he was obliged to abandon it until the next year, when he went on alone. Arriving at Denver he proceeded to the mountains, staying there for a year or more and thence going to the San Juan mines in New Mexico. Returning to Colorado he went to Buffalo Flats, staying there a year or more engaged in the bakery business, after which he went to Denver and started up what is known as the old "Mechanical Bakery" in Denver, the first cracker bakery in that city. He remained in Denver until March, 1863, at which time he came to Bannack and Virginia City, M. T., building the first house in the latter place, the old "Mechanical Bakery." Leaving Virginia City in the fall of 1865 or 1866 he went to Silver Bow Co., and stayed in that vicinity until 1867, when he came to the Gallatin Valley, and has resided here ever since, engaged in farming. He has 370 acres of land. Mr. Luce was married to Miss Porter, of St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., who died in 1855; was married again in the fall of 1868 to Miss Minerva Thorpe, of Virginia City, and has two sons, Orlando J. Porter and George Edward.

L. A. LUCE, senior member of the law firm of Luce & Armstrong, Bozeman, is a son of Atsett and Abigail (Rowell) Luce, and was born in the State of Maine, November 11, 1837. Mr. Luce received most of his education in his native state, and began the study of law there in 1862, but afterward went to New York and from that state to West Virginia, where he practiced as an attorney for five or six years. In 1872 he located at Washington, D. C., where he continued practicing in the general law courts for nine years and became a member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States. At the solicitation of the Assistant Attorney General, he was made one of the legal advisers of the Secretary of the Interior, and served in that capacity for two or three years, deciding some of the most important land and mining cases in the country, on appeal from the Commissioner of the General Land Office. In March, 1882, he came to Bozeman, and has since been engaged in the practice of his profession here with Frank K. Armstrong. As an attorney he ranks among the leaders in the profession, and is engaged as counsel for the most important mining interests in his section of the territory. In 1863 Mr. Luce was married to Miss Lucretia Ward Jones, of Saratoga Co., N. Y., by whom he has had three children: John Atsett, Lena Augusta and Gertrude Rowell.

P. W. MCADOW, Bozeman, was born July 28, 1838, in Maysville, Mason Co., Ky., is the third son and fifth child of the family of nine children born to Samuel and Julia (Bean) McAdow. He is of Scotch ancestry, his great-grandfather having been born in Scotland. The name was originally McBlackburn. Of the three brothers who emigrated from Scotland to America, one settled in Ohio, one in Tennessee and one in Kentucky. Our subject's parents were native Kentuckians, his father originally from the Joseph Johnson family of the eastern shore of Maryland. In 1839 they moved to Platt Purchase, Mo., where the elder McAdow engaged in farming and in the practice of medicine. Perry W. worked on the farm and when eleven years of age, in 1850, emigrated with his father to California, when the latter, after practicing medicine a short time, was taken sick and on his return trip died, and was buried on the Isthmus of Darien, in January, 1851, Perry W. and an uncle on his mother's side being with him. Our subject returned home and entered the Masonic college. In 1857 he went to Fort Bridge and in the spring of 1858 accompanied Johnson's expedition to Salt Lake City. Here he remained in the employ of Gilbert & Gervish as a salesman until the summer of 1860, when he returned to his home in the States. In the following spring he started up the Missouri river to Fort Benton. At the mouth of Poplar river the steamer caught fire and exploded. In this explosion he lost all his worldly effects, and was obliged to foot it to Fort Benton, a distance of 350 miles. From Fort Benton he went to Fort Owens in Bitter Root valley, and spent the winter. In the spring of 1862 he went to Gold Creek and there discovered Pioneer Gulch, taking out during the spring and summer one thousand dollars. This caused the first excitement in Montana gold mines. A. S Blake was his partner in this transaction. In the autumn, hearing that Bannack showed signs of success, they abandoned Pioneer Gulch and went to Bannack, leaving what has since proved to be one of the finest diggings in the Territory. He and Blake owned what was the Bratton bar, where immensely rich ore has been taken out. He spent the winter of 1862–63 in Bannack, and in the spring of 1863 McAdow and Blake, in company with others, started down the Yellowstone to the Big Horn. Here they had a fight with Indians; two were killed and several wounded. They had to fight their way back to their friends again. The remaining party had started to overtake them, but met the Crows and were forced back. On their retreat they camped on Alder Gulch, and Wm. Finnely accidentally discovered gold while carelessly picking rocks with his butcher knife. They reported at Bannack, and three hundred people returned with them, and from this find the news spread all over the world. Mr. McAdow went in with the rush, selected a site and built a saw mill. His partner mined. In 1864 he sold the mill to Harrison & Spencer, and located his present ranch in the Gallatin valley. The next year he erected his grist mill, the first one in the Territory. There had been twenty acres of wheat grown in the valley previous to their coming. That year Mr. McAdow raised ninety acres and several others raised a like amount. Flour selling at $25 per hundred brought a handsome income. Since that time the old machinery has been removed and new put in its place, new additions made to the building, and it now turns out 130 sacks of flour every 24 hours, with a market for all its products. In 1868 a brother of our subject bought out the partner, and since then the firm has been known as P. W. McAdow & Brother. In the year 1867 Mr. McAdow went on to the Yellowstone and located a ranch and saw mill where the town of Billings now stands. Since 1877 he has been in merchandising, farming, milling and stock growing at Billings, and is a partner of his brother in Bozeman. He owns the Northern Pacific railroad addition to Bozeman of 560 acres, about 3,500 lots. The depot is built on the center of the tract. Mr. McAdow came to Montana on foot, but can now ride out behind the iron horse. He is temperate in habits; has had ups and downs in his career, and has labored hard, and is deserving of the success that has crowned his latter years. He has been, and is now, one of Montana's most active, enterprising and successful citizens. In politics, he is a democrat; in religion, a Protestant.

W. B. MCADOW, Bozeman, was born in Missouri in 1840. He passed his time on a farm until fifteen years of age, and was subsequently for one year at Fort Kearney, going to Denver, Col., in 1860. After a short time spent in mining he left for Missouri, where he worked on a farm until 1863. In that year he started for Sweetwater with a train on the way to California, but leaving the train with a friend to carry his pack he went to Bannack, arriving June 15, 1863. He spent a short time afterward at Virginia City, then went to Fort Charles on the Missouri River for freight. In the middle of November he went to Stinking Water and spent the winter there, remaining a few months at his brother's saw mill. He then joined a party in search of gold on the Stinking River; went to Virginia City in a short time, remaining until September; then came to the Gallatin Valley and located on his present home of 440 acres, engaged in general farming until the spring of 1880, when he pooled his land with the railroad company, and it has since been laid out into town lots. Mr. McAdow bought an interest in a mill in 1867, and since then has made many improvements upon it. He has erected two residences and other houses on the farm. In 1869 he was elected assessor for Gallatin county; is at present a member of the city council. He married Miss Florence B. Lammie, by whom he has two children, Perry T. and Louis H.

J. D. McCAMMAN, Bozeman, was born in Mercer Co., Penn., in 1832, a son of John and Sarah Wagner McCamman, who were both Pennsylvanians, and who reared a family of nine children, five boys and four girls. Seven of the nine grew to maturity. The subject of our sketch was the fifth child, and his early years were spent on his father's farm. At the age of 17 years, J.D. McCammon went to learn the tailor trade in Ashland, Ohio, his parents having moved there in 1836. He followed his trade in Ashland until the spring of 1845; then removing to Michigan and continuing in the same employment. In 1847–8 he was County Clerk. In 1849 he visited his friends east, and in 1850 crossed the plains, spending some time at Coleman, on the American River, and next farmed near Sutler's Fort, moving thence to the Mokelumm River, near Slapte's ranch, and engaging in farming. In November, 1852, he returned to the states via Panama. In 1853 he was interested in a band of stock that crossed the plains, also in a business in Michigan, which he held until 1864. He then came to Montana, passing the winter of 1864–5 in Alder Gulch. In the spring he went to Grizzly Gulch, returned to Alder Gulch in the fall, and in October, 1866, located on the Upper West Gallatin, on what is known in the United States survey as McCamman Creek (generally called Bear Creek). Mr. McCamman was the first settler here. He raised stock and farmed till June, 1875, when he removed to Bozeman, having been appointed County Treasurer to fill vacancy of Bowen, and in September of the same fall was elected County Clerk, and re elected in November 1878,—first term three years, second term two years. His administration of the affairs of that office was highly satisfactory. He is now largely interested in sheep growing, and for the last few years has been engaged in money loaning. In the summer of 1880 Mr. McCamman erected his present home on West Main street, in Bozeman, one of the most comfortable homes of this beautiful city. He was an active member of the Grange during its short life in Montana. It can be well said of Mr. McCamman that he has been an exceedingly successful business man, and one of Bozeman's influential citizens.

W. F. McDONALD, P. O. Bozeman, was born near Montezuma, Ia., and the family moved to Montana, reaching Alder Gulch August 10, 1864, where they remained until March, 1865, when they moved to Last Chance Gulch, and from there to the Gallatin Valley in 1866, locating on the East Gallatin. When 16 years old Mr. McDonald sought independent employment and worked for wages until about 1880, when he came into possession of the famous running mare "Black Bird," which had made a quarter of a mile in 22 seconds as given from the stand,—the fastest time ever recorded for that distance, though in private trials she had done better. Finding this not profitable he turned his attention to other pursuits. He is now serving his second term as Road Supervisor of the district in which he resides. On May 9, 1872, he was married to Miss Flora Johnson, of Spring Hill, since which time he has resided on his present ranch at Reese Creek. He has one son, named Harley.

McDONALD & HARVAT, Livingston. This firm engaged in the butchering business April 10, 1882. Their first shop was erected on Second street April 10, 1882. In September, 1883, they erected a slaughter-house below the railroad bridge, and a barn and sheds on Second street; also moved their retail shop from Second to Main street, where they now carry on business. The firm have a ranch on Boulder, where their stock is kept, besides a herd which is feeding on Crow Agency. T. B. McDonald was born in Gallatin Co., Mo., in 1856. When old enough to take charge of cattle, he assisted his father in the stock business, continuing until 1878. He then left for Montana, and had charge of Nelson Story's herd of cattle for three years. In 1882 he came to Livingston, formed a partnership with J. C. Harvat, and engaged in the market business. Mr. McDonald assumes charge of the stock, to which his whole time and attention are given. J. C. Harvat was born at Iowa City, Iowa, February 9, 1861, and at the age of 17 went to Colorado and located at Georgetown. Shortly afterward he removed to Denver, where he learned the butcher's trade. In the fall of 1881 he came to Montana, and entered the service of the firm of Tate & Smith, butchers, at Bozeman. After working two years he located at Livingston, and engaged in the butcher business with T. B. McDonald.

JOHN McDONNELL, Bozeman, was born in County Tipperary, Ireland, and is son of John and Judith (McCormack) McDonnell. He followed farming and attended school until he emigrated to the United States in 1851, sailing to Quebec and then to Cape May, remaining two years. He then went to Polk Co., Iowa, and lived in Des Moines till 1864, when he crossed the plains to Bozeman, M. T.; then on to Virginia City, and after a short time there onward again to Gallatin City, locating on the Madison, four miles from town. After remaining fourteen years on this ranch he removed his stock to the Yellowstone, and in 1879 he moved upon and commenced improving 320 acres one mile from town, a good location for grain. Here he raises stock. Mr. McDonnell was married in the spring of 1864 to Miss Harriet Stuff, born in Eastern Maryland, daughter of Jeremiah and Annie Newcomer Stuff, who were early settlers in Illinois. To them have been born four children: William L., Edward J., Robert E., and Annie L., who was born in Madison Valley, May 1, 1865, died November 12, 1879. Until 1866 Mr. McDonnell had no floor in his house. The Indians often pilfered articles from the premises and frightened the family greatly, but never offered violence. Sometimes in their fright the occupants contemplated abandoning their home. The little daughter Annie L. was very attractive to the Indians, and they would have stolen her if she had not been closely guarded. At one time a Nez Perces Indian was visiting her, and she showed him a prayer book with a gilt cross on the cover. After that he was very friendly and gave her a pony. Mrs. McDonnell visited Illinois in 1869, with two children. She traveled to Ogden alone in a coach, the trip occupying thirty days' time. Edward was born July 23, 1871, the day an Indian raid was made and Nixon and Shepherd were killed at Canyon house while standing in the doorway. About the time of their first coming to the Territory, Mr. McDonnell had $100 in greenbacks, worth just $50, and he loaned it to a friend to take the stage to Bannack. The friend returned him two cows in place of the money. During the winter Mrs. McDonnell made twenty pounds of butter, and a freighter named Smith took it to Virginia City for her and brought her $40. She keeps the box it was sent in as a memento of the early days in Montana. Such prices will probably never again be realized in the Territory. In the spring of 1865 a flour famine occurred, and Mr. McDonnell's family, like many others, were without a grain of that necessary article in the house. As soon, however, as the weather permitted boats to ascend the river, the supply was renewed. Mr. McDonnell is now in comfortable circumstances.

J. A. McELROY, P. O. Bozeman, is the youngest of a family of nine children born to Abraham and Elizabeth McElroy, the former a native of Virginia, the latter of Pennsylvania. Both came to Ohio in early days, and settled in Richland county, where they were married, and our subject was born November 19, 1840, in Mansfield. When but six years old he was deprived of a father's care, but went with his mother upon a farm and remained with her until he was sixteen years old, then returned to Mansfield and learned the chair-making trade, at which he worked until the summer of 1861. In that eventful year, heeding the call "to arms," he enlisted in the Second Ohio Cavalry. His regiment was in ninety-seven engagements; in 1862, went through Indian Territory, and in 1864 to Annapolis, Md., participating in all engagements until Lee's surrender. He was mustered out as Captain in St. Louis, Mo., September 19, 1865. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. After the war Mr. McElroy returned to Mansfield, and again engaged at his trade. February 15, 1871, he was united in marriage with Miss Clara Johnson, daughter of Charles W. and Sarah (Church) Johnson. To this couple have been born three children: Harry Sheridan, Sadie Elizabeth, and Hugh Coleman. In 1876 Mr. McElroy was foreman in a planing mill at Portsmouth, O., and in the spring of the same year he crossed the plains to Corinne, Utah, proceeding from there in a wagon with E. D. Johnson direct to Gallatin valley, where he located on the Sour Dough, or Bozeman Creek, on a ranch now owned by Rev. Robinson. He remained here some months, then went on to Mr. Coleman's ranch, and in December, 1879, moved to his present ranch of 320 acres of as fine and as can be found in the valley. It is irrigated through a ditch—brought from Middle Creek. The residence is beautifully located on a commanding point, from which the fine Gallatin valley and city of Bozeman can be seen. Here are ever-living springs that furnish water for the house. Mr. McElroy came to Montana poor and in debt, but by exercising economy, industry and tact, he and his wife have surrounded themselves with a competence, and a good home.

GEORGE E. MCKINSEY, P. O. Bozeman, was born on August 22, 1822, near Crawfordsville, Montgomery Co., Ind. When he first left the parental roof, he secured a piece of land, cleared it, and began farming. He married Sarah A. Wilson, of Clinton Co., Ind., January 1, 1850, and to them have been born six children, viz., Jane, deceased; Mahala C.; Sarah E., deceased; Henry C.; George W., deceased; and Ida A. In 1854 Mr. McKinsey moved to Omaha, where he spent one year, as one of the first settlers of that city, going from there to a farm five miles from Omaha. After remaining nine years in Nebraska, he crossed the plains to Montana, arriving in the vicinity of Bannack late in September, 1863. He engaged in mining at Virginia City, and remained until 1866, when he moved to the Madison, and ran a ferry-boat on that river for one year. From here he returned to Sterling, where he again engaged in mining. In 1869, believing he could do better at farming, he moved to Middle creek, Gallatin valley, where he raised his first Montana crop. His second crop was grown on the West Gallatin, on the place now owned by Hugh Leonard. The following year he moved upon his present ranch of 160 acres, which is all under fence and in a good state of cultivation, located three miles from Bozeman. During the grasshopper plague of 1873 4, he went to Helena and worked at the carpenter trade, which he had learned at Omaha. When Mr. McKinsey began farming he was without means, but has been a very successful man. He belongs to a long-lived family. In politics he is a republican; in religion a Christian.

W. S. MCKINZIE, Bozeman, is a son of John and Jane McKinzie, and was born in Jackson Co., Ga., November 27, 1827. At the age of 20 he went to Arkansas, and thence to Texas, spending several years in these two states. In 1863 he came to Montana and engaged in mining at Virginia City for several years, then in freighting, and afterward was a contractor for the government in the Indian country. In 1864 he settled in Bozeman, and in 1877 was elected sheriff, which office he held for four years. Mr. McKinzie has been actively identified with the interests of Bozeman and the Territory, and is one of the oldest residents.

FREDERICK J. MCLIN, Bozeman, was born in Johnson Co., Mo., on November 10, 1836. When four years of age his father died and his mother moved to Platte county in the same State. He had but eight months' schooling, during all his life having to work hard to support his mother. When sixteen years of age himself and mother moved to Sullivan county, and, renting a farm, worked upon it till 1865, when, his mother dying, he left home and drove teams across the plains for two years. He was snowed in for four months during the winter of 1866, about half-way between Fort Laramie and Cooper, and was troubled by hostile Indians during all of the time. In 1867 he had tie and wood contracts ahead of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and succeeded well. Going to the Sweetwater mines in 1868, he was engaged in getting out timber for mines until 1870, when he came to Montana via Wind River. He spent two months at Emigrant Gulch and then went to Bozeman, where he cut wood on government contracts till 1878, when he bought teams and freighted from Fort Benton to all parts of the Territory. In 1880 he sold his team and from that time until now has been engaged in getting out saw logs and cord wood at or near Bozeman.

A. D. MCPHERSON, P. O. Bozeman, is a native of the Province of Quebec, Canada, born September 8, 1845. He was reared a mechanic and worked at the trade in Canada until 1862. He came to the United States in 1866 and spent one year in New York; was next in Ohio for a short time, then in Missouri four years, and came to Montana in 1869 working in the mines two years. He located at Bozeman in 1872, and worked at the carpenter's trade two years. Then, on account of getting crippled, he was out of business until 1875, but in that year was elected Probate Judge, serving three successive terms, or seven years altogether. Judge McPherson is a member of the order of Odd Fellows and is a F. & A. M.

J. W. MARDIS, Bozeman, is the son of John S. and Margaret Mardis, both natives of Pennsylvania. Our subject was born April 17, 1841, in Hollidaysburg, Blair Co., Pa. He was the eldest of nine children; worked on the farm and attended the district school in the winter until he was 21 years of age. He enlisted in the 35th Iowa Regiment during the rebellion, but after one year's service he was honorably discharged and returned to Cedar Co., Ia., which had been his home several years previous to entering the army. In April, 1864, the rich gold mines of Montana attracted his attention, and he crossed the plains to Virginia City, arriving there August 26, and followed mining until March 17, 1866. Having lost all the money he brought to the territory, he determined to change his vocation, and to this end he moved to Gallatin Valley, and for a time lived in Bozeman. He farmed rented land through the years of 1867–68, and in 1869 purchased his present home of 320 acres, beautifully located on Bozeman Creek, and now under a good state of cultivation. On the 14th day of January, 1864, he was united in matrimony with Miss Harriett Adelaide Noe, who was born in Morrow Co., Ohio, February 15, 1845, a daughter of James H. and Caroline S. Noe. In 1854 she with her parents moved from Ohio to Cedar Co., Ia., and here she formed the acquaintance of, and married, Mr. Mardis. They have had born to them five children, viz.: John Henry, born in Virginia City November 1, 1864; Abbie Ellen, born in Virginia City January 18, 1866; Mary May Montana, so named by her grandmother Noe, born in Cedar Co., Ia., October 29, 1867; Harriett Adelaide, born on Bozeman Creek, April 29, 1871; James Edward, born on Bozeman Creek, January 7, 1873. Mr. Mardis is a member of I. O. O. F. of Bozeman. He brought about $4,000 with him to the territory and lost it nearly all in mining enterprises at Virginia City. With the small portion left he bought a home near the present site of Fort Ellis, and while at Fort Benton seeing his wife off to the states, the United States authorities took possession of his place for the reservation, and he was left penniless and homeless. The first building was erected on his present ranch in 1867, and since then he has been adding improvements until he now has a comfortable and commodious home.

JUDGE J. P. MARTIN, Bozeman, was born in Kentucky January 4, 1825. He was reared in mercantile business and at the age of 21 began teaching school, at which he continued three years. In 1849 he went to California, where he was engaged in teaching until 1853, after which he farmed three years. He next engaged in the drug business, in which he continued until 1870. He was Justice of the Peace and Police Judge in Gilroy, Cal., five years. He was for two years engaged in the drug trade at San Jose, Cal., and came to Bozeman, M. T., in 1879, entering a drug store as clerk, and remaining two and a half years, after which he was elected Probate Judge. He is a member of the order of Freemasons. In 1856 Judge Martin was married to Miss Mary C. Longhorne, of Virginia, by whom he has six children: Kate N., John P., Emily B., Louis P., Maude and Alice.

JEREMIAH MATHEWS, Hot Springs, P. O. Bozeman, was born May 2, 1834, in Hart Co., Ky., and is the eldest son and child of John and Harriett Mathews. When only a few weeks old, his parents took up their residence in Lexington, Fayette county, where Jeremiah was reared. In 1852 they moved to Owen county, and remained until 1857, when they emigrated to Independence, Mo, from there to Weston, Mo., and thence to Plattsburgh, Mo. All this time Jeremiah was engaged at his trade as carpenter and joiner, millwright, etc. In 1860 he went to Central City, Col., and engaged in building quartz mills for a Chicago firm. In 1861 he returned to Plattsburgh, Mo., and enlisted in the army during the Rebellion, in Hughes' Regiment. He served one year and returned to private life, engaging in farming and stock dealing for several years. Jeremiah was married, December 16, 1858, to Miss Mary E. Moore at Plattsburgh, Mo., a native of Montgomery Co., Ky. To them have been born ten children, viz.: Harriett E. (deceased), Edward L. (deceased), Emma C., Albert L., George C. (deceased), Lawson, Claude B., Thomas F., Alma C. and Owen J. The last four were born in Montana. In 1865 Mr. Mathews moved to Nebraska City, and for two years operated a wagon and carriage factory. He then decided to go to Granby Lead Mines, Mo., and in February, 1867, to Waverly; but in 1869 he returned to Plattsburgh and established a carriage and wagon factory. Once more catching the fever of emigration, he decided to go to Montana, the great eldorado of the United States, and seek his health and fortune among the mountains and valleys and health giving springs of this famous clime. In 1872 he arrived in Corinne, Utah, and from there went to Helena, thence to Radersburgh, in which town he made his home until in the fall, when he moved to Bozeman and engaged in all branches of his trade. In 1873 Mr. Mathews returned to the States for his family, bringing them with him to Bozeman, where he continued at his trade. In 1879 he purchased his present home, known as Mathews' Warm Springs, seven miles west of Bozeman. He has 670 acres of good tillable land, well watered and with good buildings. The water from the springs is of rare quality, and of a temperature of 120 degrees in the summer. There is a house erected on the springs containing five bath rooms, two dressing rooms, and a plunge bath 14x18. He has a fine two-story residence. These springs are destined to become very valuable in the near future, and popular as a health resort. Mr. Mathews is an architect and mechanic—in short, could command first-class wages in seven different trades. He made the first buggy manufactured in Bozeman; it was shipped to California.

MATHEW J. MEEHAN, P. O. Livingston, senior partner of the firm of Meehan, Dickinson & Eberman, publishers and proprietors of the Livingston Tribune, was born in Toronto, Canada, June 14, 1857; learned the printer's trade in that city, and emigrated to the United States in November, 1880. He worked at his trade in Minneapolis, Minn., and went thence to Fargo, Dak., in 1881. He came to Livingston, M. T., in January, 1883, and, in company with Chas. A. Carson, established the Tribune February 3 of that year.

JOHN S. MENDENHALL, Bozeman, was born in Vevay, Switzerland Co., Ind., October 18, 1835, to Ira and Elizabeth (Lowry) Mendenhall, natives, the former of North Carolina, and the latter of Kentucky, who were married at Vevay. In the early part of life the father was a hatter, but subsequently was county auditor for a number of years; he died in 1848; was a prominent member of the I. O. O. F. The mother died in 1851 or 1852. Our subject attended the public schools of Vevay until thirteen years of age, when he entered a drug store. In 1849 he began labor on a farm with his uncle, Wm. Lowry, with whom he remained until 1855, when he went to Leavenworth, Kan., and there loaded freight for Gilbert & Gerrist, and went with the train to Salt Lake City. He worked at their store in that city until 1857, selling the Arkansas party, the victims of the horrible Mountain Meadow Massacre, their entire outfit. About one month after this terrible crime was committed, Mr. Mendenhall crossed over the ever memorable site, on his way to California, and was much terrified to observe the many skeletons yet on the surface. He was accompanied by fifteen men, on his journey, and they were prevented from being murdered by the Indians by a few Mormon interpreters who were detailed for that special purpose by the Mormon authorities. He returned by steamer to New York, and then came to Atchison and soon after went in an ambulance to Salt Lake with the Livingston & Bell Co., and worked for them until 1862, when he, with 25 others, went to Fort Lemhi, Idaho. Being unable to get farther with wagons, the party split up, sixteen of them, including Mr. Mendenhall, journeying toward Deer Lodge valley, losing their way, and finally being guided through by John Eneos, a half-breed Indian. In the winter of 1862–3 Mr. Mendenhall brought some goods from Salt Lake City to Bannack and sold them at good profit. He prospected during the summer of 1863 around Virginia City. In the spring of 1864 he went to the Kootanie mines in British Columbia, where he worked until 1864. Coming thence to Bozeman, in the following spring he began a successful period of farming in Gallatin county, which he closed in 1868, and in company with A. Lamme opened up a general store in Bozeman, on a small scale, which business has steadily increased until they have one of the finest wholesale and retail general stores in the territory. He was elected commissioner for Gallatin county and served with credit from 1873 to 1876. He is a worthy member of the A. F. & A. M., and has been P. M. and Dep. G. P. M. of the same. He was married in 1870 to Mrs. M. S. Smith and has one son, Samuel A.

G. W. METCALF & CO., P. O. Livingston, consisting of G. W. Metcalf and S. A. Oliver, formed a partnership in August, 1882, and engaged in the livery and feed business; built their first stable in what is known as the "Old Town" in September, 1883, moved to their present location, corner of Clark and Main streets, and erected an entire new building. They carry a first-class stock of livery, special attention being given to fitting out tourists for the National Park. G. W. Metcalf was born at Allegany, N. Y., in 1843. At the age of 19 he removed to Crown Point, Ind , and engaged in farming. In June, 1861, he enlisted in the 20th Indiana, under Col. W. L. Brown, with whom he served three years. In 1865 he removed to Nebraska, formed a partnership with his brother, M. E. Metcalf, and built a supply and stage station on the Little Blue River; sold out in a few months and went to Denver, Col., and engaged in freighting between that city and New Mexico for one and a half years. In 1867 he went to Cheyenne, purchased ground and built a hotel; carried this on for one and a half years, his brother taking charge. Mr. Metcalf was one of the first policemen appointed in that city. After selling his hotel he located at South Pass and engaged in the grocery business, but discontinued it after an unsuccessful experience of six months. At Benton Crossing, on the North Platte, he established a livery and feed stable, carrying on the business for one year. During this time he discovered the first coal bank west of Rawlins. Taking a stock of merchandise he engaged in business at Wahsatch, but a short time sold out and removed to Corinne, Utah. From 1869 to 1876 he was engaged in mining in Montana, being located successively at most of the camps in the Territory. In 1876 he went to the Black Hills and engaged with S. W. Oliver in the grocery business. In 1880 he sold out and turned his attention to buffalo hunting. In 1882 he located at Livingston and established himself in the livery business. In September, 1882, Mr. Metcalf was appointed deputy-sheriff, and in March, 1883, was also appointed deputy-treasurer and collector. S. W. Oliver was born in New Jersey, December 25, 1848. January 1, 1873, he came to Montana and located at Glendale, Beaverhead Co., where he kept books for Dollar, Armstrong & Co., two years. He afterward went to Bowlder and engaged in ranching one winter, and in the spring obtained a position at Deadwood, as clerk, for B. Morton. In 1877 he entered the grocery business, at Rocksville, with G. W. Metcalf, the firm being known as S. W. Oliver & Co. Three years later he took what remained of the stock, went on the buffalo range and disposed of it, besides dealing in stock and hunting. In 1882 he came to Livingston and engaged in the livery business with G. W. Metcalf.

BILL MILES, Livingston, was born in Freestone Co., Texas, in 1853. At an early age he assisted his father in taking care of stock, afterward devoting himself to that alone, not only herding cattle but driving them through Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, etc. He followed this life until 1881, when, giving up the business, he left for the Black Hills. Remaining a short time in the Hills, he came to Montana and located at Livingston in the spring of 1882, erected a stable and corral, and is engaged in the livery and sale business at the present date, "Bill Miles'" feed and sale stable being well known to the citizens of the Yellowstone Valley.

MRS. ANNIE MILLER, P. O. Hillsdale, was born October 1, 1847, at Savannah, Andrew Co., Mo., and is the daughter of Solomon and Mary Yates. When leaving Missouri for Montana she was sixteen years of age. Her father died before leaving Missouri, and the family left for Montana September 7, 1864, arriving at Virginia City in the same year, and moving into Jefferson county (after buying a farm there) seven months later. Our subject was married at Virginia City, November 13, 1864, to Solomon Miller, of Greene Co., Ill.; lived in Jefferson Valley three years, and two years at South Boulder, Madison Co., engaged in farming, subsequently returning to Missouri, but becoming dissatisfied with the country after trying it one year, came back in 1870 and settled at Radersburgh, M. T., remaining two years. Moved thence to North Boulder and engaged in farming and stock-raising two years; thence to Keatingville, Jefferson Co., where Mr. Miller worked in the mines two years; thence to Gallatin Valley in 1875, bought a ranch, improved it and purchased some stock. Mr. Miller came by his death from injuries received from a horse while crossing a creek, February 18, 1880, in the Judith Basin, while looking after cattle. The party with him started to Fort Benton with him for medical assistance, but he died on the journey, February 20, 1880, and was buried at Fort Benton. The family still resides on the ranch located in 1875. The children by this marriage are: George Lee, born October 24, 1865; Jacob F., April 28, 1867; Mary E., May 8, 1869; Samuel, October 8, 1872; Nacariat T., November 21, 1874; Emma, March 4, 1876; Lemuel, June 18, 1879.

JOHN MITCHELL, P. O. Bozeman, was born in Scotland, June 23, 1844, and in 1846 emigrated to Canada with his parents, where he lived until 1859. He then settled in Illinois, and remained until 1865, when he went to Denver, Colo. In 1866 he went to Wyoming and from there to Nebraska, and spent the winter of 1869–70 in Omaha. In 1870 he came to Montana with a band of horses for the Government, consigned to Fort Ellis, and soon after settled in Bozeman, where he has since remained with the exception of one year spent in the States. He now owns a fine ranch of 320 acres near Bozeman, and also has large mining interests.

CHAS. A. MOGER, Bozeman, of the firm of Moger & Co., was born in Rockford, Ill., on August 19, 1847. In his early days he went to Iowa, when he enlisted and served in the Federal army during the rebellion. In 1866 he left Iowa and went to Colorado, where he remained one year, then going to Wyoming Territory, thence to Utah and Nevada, and in 1870 came to Montana and engaged in contracting in the wood and logging business at Fort Ellis. In 1882 and until the spring of 1883 he was engaged as clerk in the hardware store of George Nichols, of Bozeman, and during the summer of 1883 the present partnership was formed and the hardware and crockery business established. The firm carried a fine stock of hardware, stoves, tinware, crockery, etc. In July, 1884, the hardward store was closed out to G. R. Nichols, and the firm engaged in general fruit and vegetable business, butter and eggs, etc.

MONTANA LUMBER CO. This firm was established at Livingston in January, 1883. The main house is located at Billings, and was established in August, 1882, under the management of Winston, Carter & Fields. February 10 the firm was reorganized, forming a stock company known as the Montana Lumber Co: W. C. Stewart, of St. Paul, president; J. R. Hathaway, vice-president and manager; C. A. Winston, secretary and manager, at Billings; F. L. Mintie, manager at Livingston. The company have a paid up capital of $55,000, the stock at both towns being valued at $125,000. In connection with their lumber yard the firm have their own saw and planing mill at Billings, and two saw mills at Big Timber on the Boulder. F. L. Mintie, manager, was born at Thompsonville, Conn., in 1839. After leaving school he enlisted in 1861 in the 1st Conn. Infantry; after serving three months was transferred to the 10th New York, with which he served through the war. He then removed to Darlington, Wis., and engaged in the hardware business, the firm being known as E. J. Russell & Co. After carrying on business for five years he sold his interest and went to Smithton, Mo., where he engaged in general mercantile trade. He was elected chief clerk and afterward enrolling clerk to the Missouri legislature for five successive seasons. At length he closed out his business and located at Hutchinson, Kan. After farming two years he was appointed manager for the Kansas Lumber Co., with which he served three years, leaving that position to accept one as manager for the Montana Lumber Co. at Livingston. In September, 1882, Mr. Mintie formed a partnership with Messrs Hutchinson & Winston, and erected the first roller skating rink at Livingston. This was opened November 1. It is also used for entertainments. Mr. Mintie was married to Miss Helena R. Russell, of Wisconsin, in 1865.

MATTHIAS MOUNTS, P. O. Bozeman. This gentleman, who is better known as Cy Mounts, was born December 2, 1846, in Scott Co., Ia. He helped his father on the farm, going to school winters, till he was 17 years of age. He then launched out in the world for himself, and going to Leavenworth, Kan., hired out to drive a mule team to Fort Scott, Kan. While back from this trip, he went home; and hearing of the gold discoveries in Montana, he with his brother-in-law, F. F. Fridley, started for that territory, entering it on Bozeman's trail, just behind his first train. When they came to the Yellowstone, they turned up that stream to Emigrant Gulch, where Cy took a claim, but soon left and came to Gallatin valley. He with his brother built one of the first houses in Bozeman. For three years, Mr. Mounts, with Michael Boyer and the Keshaws, traded with the Crow Indians, and had some very narrow escapes from hostile Indians. During the winter of 1866–'67, these traders took two wagon loads of vegetables and provisions to Fort C. F. Smith (Big Horn). Its garrison had been beleaguered by snow and Indians, and was nearly starved, so hailed the arrival of the vegetables (though frozen) with delight. On the return trip, the stock gave out, and, leaving them and the wagons, the party walked to Bozeman, one of the number freezing to death on the road. Mr. Mounts went again to Fort Smith in the spring—was there during the heavy fighting of the next summer, and when returning to Bozeman, in the fall, had a sharp fight with the Sioux, but escaped. Soon afterward he went down the Yellowstone with a large party, by boat, to the States. When near the mouth of the Big Horn, he, by his knowledge of Indians, saved the party from being massacred, running it through several hundred Cheyennes and Arrapahoes, with the loss of but one man. He was engaged in mining coal in Iowa till 1870, when he married, and soon afterward came back to Bozeman. In 1871 he contracted to carry the mail from the latter place to the Crow Agency, and continued at this till the fall of 1872, when the Sioux became so troublesome on the Yellowstone that he gave up the business and moved his family back to Bozeman. Then, till 1875, he spent his summers prospecting, and found and now owns some good mines in the Clarke's Fork district. He was engaged in 1876–'77, in running provisions down the Yellowstone, by boat, to Gens. Terry's and Miles' troops, and had the field sutlership of Gen. Brisbin's command. In the latter part of 1877 he leased a building in Bozeman, and kept a liquor saloon until 1879, when he sold out and went to the Judith basin, prospecting; he was unsuccessful in his quest, and the next spring returned to Bozeman, and tended bar for Pourford & Sanborn till fall, when he bought an interest. He was successful, and now owns the whole business. Mr. Mounts has a pleasant residence in Bozeman, and lives in comfort with his wife and four children.

J. C. MUNRO, P. O. Livingston, master mechanic of the Montana division of the N. P. R. R., was born at Sydney, Nova Scotia, in 1844. He learned the machinist's trade in his native town, and emigrated to the United States in 1863, locating in New York city, where he worked at his trade. He came west and was employed by the St. Paul road as master mechanic for a number of years; was subsequently similarly employed on the M., K. & T. railway, and also on the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba railway. He was also master mechanic of the Chicago & Alton road. Next he went to Mexico, where he was employed as master mechanic of the National road, with headquarters at the city of Mexico. He came to Montana in July, 1883, and was appointed to his present position, with headquarters at Livingston. Mr. Munro is a thorough and experienced mechanic, and is held in high esteem by the management of the road.

MRS. MARY C. MURPHY, Livingston, proprietress of the Brunswick House, opened this hotel in October, 1883, she having previously carried on the same business on Main street from the 15th of May, of the same year. The Brunswick House is the most conveniently situated, being near the depot of the N. P. R. R. Mrs. Murphy at this writing is erecting an extensive addition to her house, which, when completed, will contain thirty-six sleeping rooms, sample rooms, bath rooms, etc. She also has a detached lodging house, containing seventeen rooms, adjacent to the hotel. The Brunswick is conducted, so far as its business management is concerned, by Mr. C. C. Murphy, brother of the proprietress. Under the efficient management of this gentleman the house has become generally popular.

C. P. MURRAY, P. O. Livingston, is a native of Missouri, the son of John and Elizabeth Murray. His father was a carpenter by trade. Leaving Missouri in 1864, he came to Montana, arriving here in the latter part of August. For two weeks he camped on the present townsite of Livingston; went to Alder Gulch and worked in mines there for three months; thence to Grizzly Gulch, and three months later to Diamond. After remaining at Diamond a short time, he tried his fortune in New York Gulch. Then, after traveling over various parts of the Territory, he returned to Missouri, by way of Fort Benton. Remaining in Missouri from 1866 to 1876, he came to Hunter's Hot Springs, and was there for two years with Dr. Hunter, who is a brother-in-law. Leaving Hunter's Hot Springs, he took up his present ranch of 160 acres in the Yellowstone valley, two miles west of Livingston, where he now resides. His farm is in a fair state of cultivation, with good buildings. Mr. Murray was married to Elizabeth Ridgeway, a native of Missouri, and they have three children. When he first came to this vicinity, the nearest trading point was Bozeman, twenty-five miles away and on the other side of the mountains.

PATRICK MURTHA, Dry Creek, was born in Monaghan Co., Ireland, in March, 1832; sailed to Coquimbo, Chili, South America, in December, 1850, following a seafaring life until February, 1854. He taught school in the mines in Chili, under the Catholic church, for two years; thence came to New York, and worked on a pilot boat with an uncle for six months; went to New Orleans as a sailor, and married an Italian lady by the name of Eliza Beatrice. On the lady's death, in 1855, he moved to Cincinnati, O., and bought a canal boat on the Miami canal, and boated rock for the first courthouse in Cincinnati, from Dayton quarry; married a second time, Miss Alice Gorman, of Hamilton, Butler Co., O., in 1855; moved to Memphis, Tenn.; worked in the gas works until the breaking out of the war; volunteered with the sappers and miners in the Confederate army; mounted the first gun on Randolph, on the Mississippi, under the command of Captain Winters, and the first guns on Fort Pillow under the same commander; moved to Island No. 10; mounted Ruckard's Battery; moved back to Fort Pillow; after the Union gunboats passed Island No. 10, worked under Capt. Lynch until the evacuation of Fort Pillow; got pass from Gen. Vllepeck to Memphis; moved from there to Cincinnati; worked as night-watchman for Ross & Patterson five years; then moved out west in 1868, on the U. P. R. R., and worked for that company until 1870, when he came to Montana and settled in the Sun River country, where he farmed eighty acres of land for three years; lost all by grasshoppers, and moved to Gallatin valley, his present place of residence.

JOHN W. NELSON, P. O. Bozeman, was born in North Carolina, April 15, 1835, and was educated in the common schools of Iowa. In 1853 he commenced the life of a farmer, which he followed until 1862, when he enlisted and joined Steele's Division. He was discharged in 1863, returned home, remained one season, and came to Montana in 1864. Mr. Nelson married Levina A. Clark, January 10, 1858. They have ten children: Marshal, born November 7, 1853; George, March 23, 1856; John, January 30, 1858; Monroe, February 1, 1861; William, July 27, 1864; Franklin, January 11, 1867; Allie, December 8, 1870; Lewis A., December 8, 1873; Andrew, December 30, 1876; Lester, August 19, 1879. When Mr. Nelson first came to Montana, he worked for wages and freighted with one team. He also located and improved a farm. In 1871 he started a freight train, and in 1872 bought his present home. He owns 260 acres of land, and runs two steam threshers and a saw mill.

MATT NIEBEL, P. O. Bozeman, son of Jacob and Barbara Niebel, was born in Burgstadt, Germany, January 14, 1855. Left Germany in 1872, and arrived in New York, where he remained eight years engaged in farming. He was educated in Germany at a district school. Came to Montana in the spring of 1880, and first stopped at Radersburgh for three months engaged in herding sheep for Messrs. Huntly & Clerk. He bought his present home and farm of 520 acres in 1881 and has resided thereon, employed in improving and working his land. Of his 520 acres, 180 are in cultivation and the entire tract under fence. Yield per acre: wheat 50 bushels, oats 60 bushels and potatoes 250 bushels. Mr. Niebel has twenty head of cattle and five horses. His farm is situated on the west side of West Gallatin River, nine miles from Bozeman. Mr. Neibel is one of the Gallatin Valley's most successful farmers; has splendid improvements and a very fine meadow of thirty-five acres.

C. NIELSEN, Spring Hill, was born in Denmark August 27, 1828; was drafted into the army in 1850; served nearly two years; returned to his native place, and married in 1853. In 1857 he emigrated to the United States, and settled at Rockford, Neb. In 1858 moved to Salt Lake; went as far as Ft. Bridger herding goat stock; at Ft. Bridger was discharged and joined his family in a Mormon train, coming out as Mormons. Arrived in Salt Lake and there resided, as a Mormon, until 1861; was not considered a good Mormon, as he would not come under the church government. Before leaving the old country, Mr. Neilsen was induced to sell his property for the consideration of $4,000, and loan the proceeds to the church, with the assurance that it would be refunded on his arrival in Salt Lake, and himself and family blessed by the Lord. In the end he received $20, with an order to "shut his mouth and go, as there had been as good men as himself made to lick the dust." He went first to South Weber and united with the Mormon offshoots known as Morrisites, believing it to be necessary to do so for safety. At the end of one year, on June 13, 1862, a force of several hundred Mormons attacked the Morrisites while at worship, firing a cannon ball in their midst and killing two persons. The worshipers defended themselves three days, but at last surrendered. Mr. Neilsen being in charge of a company of Morrisites, was tried by a Mormon court, and sentenced to twelve years in the penitentiary, but was pardoned by Gov. Hardus at the end of three days. He worked for the Government two months, then started to Idaho, and lived at Soda Springs until 1863, when he came to Montana on foot, leaving his family in Soda Springs. Arrived in Bannack in July, but did not tarry long, pushing on to Alder Gulch. In November he returned to Soda Springs, and in 1865 moved with his family to Montana; mined a short time in Virginia City; then moved to Gallatin valley, and in 1870 made another move to his present ranch at Spring Hill, where he has since resided. Mr. Nielsen and his wife have two children:—Christine, married; and Peter C., grown to manhood. Mr. Nielsen pays considerable attention to horticulture and fruit growing. This fruit is grown on Spring Hill, at least 600 feet above the Gallatin valley.

T. J. NOBLE, Livingston, was born at Milwaukee, Wis., on May 27, 1851. At an early age he came west and engaged in mining, and since then has traveled through the different territories, mining at the principal camps. July 21, 1882, he started a saloon where Livingston now stands, in what is known as the old town. He was one of a party of ten who laid out the town. He carried on his saloon only ten days before another was opened, and after running four months sold out and went prospecting. He discovered a coal claim six miles below town. December 1, 1883, he purchased the interest of Draper in a saloon on Main street, of which he is the present proprietor.

JOHN P. NOLAN, Livingston, was born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1852. At the age of 14 he emigrated to the United States, and located at Boston, Mass. When the Northern Pacific railroad was being built, Mr. Nolan engaged in the saloon business, following the road as it progressed. He engaged in business with a man named Taylor, at Glendive, and ran the Star saloon for two years. August 30, 1882, he came to Livingston and opened a restaurant in a tent in the old town. On November 9, 1882, he began the erection of a 14-room building, which became known as the Livingston House, completing it in the latter part of December. Mr. Nolan was the first to move and build out of the old town. He was elected justice of the peace November 5, 1882, but finding the hotel business required his entire attention, he resigned in March, 1883. He was married at Glendale, on August 1, 1882, to Sophia Wergin, of Minnesota.

THEO. NORMAN, Spring Hill, was born in Clark Co., Mo., February 15, 1841; worked on the farm and attended public school until 16 years old, and in 1857 crossed the plains to California and settled in Red Bluff, Tehama Co., where he pursued farm labor till 1866; moved to Los Angeles and remained a few months, then after a brief visit to his old Missouri home moved to Montana and settled on Cedar creek in 1870, during the excitement over the mines in this section. He mined here one year and lost all he had. On leaving the Cedar creek mines he went to Helena and called for his two valises of clothing that he had left in care of a merchant when he passed through to Cedar creek. The merchant asked him one dollar storage on them and refused to let him have them until he received the money. Mr. Norman went out and pawned the last article of clothing of value he had about him, which was a collar button, to get the dollar to get his clothing. This shows how much mining profited Mr. Norman. He now hired as a teamster for several months and in this capacity came to Gallatin valley, rented a portion of Robinson ranch and in 1871 cleared $1,200. He purchased a ranch on Middle creek, teams, farming implements, etc., which took his entire capital and left him in debt besides. The following year proved a poor year for grain farming, and it not only took all his grain, but his teams, to pay his hired help and debts; utterly discouraged, he abandoned this ranch, and decided to go to Washington Territory. W. O. P. Hayes, a resident neighbor, persuaded Mr. Norman to give up the idea of the Washington Territory trip and rent his farm. This was his third venture, and from the first year's crop on Mr. Hayes' ranch he cleared $1,000. With this he bought an interest in his present ranch on Reese creek. He now owns 320 acres clear title, 200 acres under cultivation, and 20 acres of fine meadow. In January, 1882, he had 112 acres of oats, which yielded 6,610 bushels; he had also 453 bushels wheat from 12 acres. He now has 24 head of horses, 16 head of cattle. Mr. Norman married Miss Josephine Gee, February 22, 1877, daughter of Noah and Mary Ann Gee. They have had three children: Marion, born January 26, 1878, died February 25, 1880; Margaret Alice, born March 27, 1879; Charles Whitney, born March 27, 1881. Mr. Norman is a member of Gallatin Lodge, No. 6, F. and A. M., at Bozeman. He is a living example of what industry, energy and tact will accomplish.

I. ORSCHEL & BRO., P. O. Livingston, wholesale and retail dealers in general merchandise, began business at this place in November, 1882, being among the very first merchants of Livingston. They own their store building, which is of solid brick, twenty-five feet front by seventy feet deep, two stories and basement, and carry an average stock of $30,000. The firm is composed of Isaac and Henry Orschel. These gentlemen have a similar store at Miles City, M. T., and were formerly in business at St. Paul.

S. H. OSBORN, M. D., one of the pioneers of Montana, and a successful business man of Bozeman, came to the Territory, then Idaho, June 13, 1863, from Colorado. He is a native of Warren Co., O., received a fair education in that vicinity, and taught school in various places in southwestern Ohio. He learned the drug business with Wm. S. Merrill, of Cincinnati, O.; studied medicine in that city and afterward practiced this profession for two years in Louisiana. After this, several years were spent without any definite plans in view, sometimes in the drug business, sometimes teaching, and for two years publishing a newspaper; none of which occupations were very remunerative. In the fall of 1856 he went west to Springfield, Ill., and thence in the spring of 1859 to Pike's Peak, where for three years he was engaged in practicing medicine and mining. In the spring of 1863 we find him among the pioneers of the Eldorado of the Northwest, called Idaho, but soon to be known as Montana. After several years of indifferent success at mining and practicing medicine, he in 1871 settled in Bozeman, and engaged in his old business, that of druggist. Since then he has met with marked and deserved success.

E. J. OWENHOUSE, manufacturer of saddles and harness, Bozeman, was born in Iowa City, Ia., April 10, 1859. He remained in the city of his birth until 1878, having learned and worked at his trade there. In that year he went to Cheyenne, where he worked at his trade two and a half years, next locating at Rawlins and shortly after at Virginia City, that being in the spring of 1881. He worked at the latter place some six weeks, after which he removed to Bozeman and established his present business.

J. L. PATTERSON, P.O., Bozeman, is the ninth child and fifth son in the family of thirteen children of Lewis and Mary Patterson, who were residents of Hamilton Co., Tenn., where J. L. was born March 24, 1843. He worked on his father's farm until 17 years of age. When the late war broke out our subject enlisted in the 1st Tennessee Regiment and served during the war. The last 14 months he was a prisoner of war confined in the barracks at Rock Island, Ill. After the close of the war he returned to Chattanooga and engaged in merchandising until 1872, when, his health failing, he decided to take a trip to the dry, healthy climate of Montana. He became so infatuated with the country, where his health improved so wonderfully, that he determined to cast his lot among the Montanians. He located first at Bozeman and in a short time purchased his present ranch of 400 acres three miles from town, on which he now resides. January 29, 1868, Mr. Patterson was married to Miss Eleanor Wadsworth, of Rome, Ga. They have four children: Arthur W., Lucy W., Mariam G. and Mary E., the first two born in Tennessee, the other two in Montana. Mr. Patterson's education was obtained in the high school of his native place. His land is of a black loamy soil and, he raises from 50 to 75 bushels of oats to the acre. He has 160 acres that do not require irrigating. Has also a good orchard, and on three acres of land has raised 1,200 bushels of potatoes, which find a ready market at 75c. to 90c. per bushel.

ASHER WARE PAUL, P. O. Three Forks, was born in the State of New York April 14, 1839. When 10 years old he moved to Delavan, Walworth Co., Wis., with his parents and was reared on a farm. In 1861 he removed to Eau Claire and engaged in farming for a few years, and was united in wedlock to Miss Mary C. Hanley January 17, 1864. They have not been blessed with children of their own, but have adopted and raised three. One is married, and one boy is now in California. In 1866 Mr. Paul crossed the plains to Montana with an ox team; was five months on the way; located on Willow Creek in Madison county, and for ten years farmed the same ranch. He then tried his fortune in the mines for two years, living at Pony, keeping a stable and hauling quartz. June 3, 1878, he bought his present place in company with Mr. Hanley, and opened a public house in the old log cabin that now stands in the yard. Mr. Paul is also engaged in farming and dealing in fine horses. The ranch consists of 320 acres of land. Mr. Paul was a member of the Grange at Willow Creek, and belongs to the Knights of Honor.

J. A. PEASE, Bozeman, is a native of Monroe Co., N. Y., and a son of Joseph and Cyntha Pease, who went from that county to St. Joseph, Mich., when our subject was only 18 months old. Here they engaged in farming. When J. A. was 11 years old he lost his mother. His father and himself continued on the farm until he was 13 years of age, when they removed to Wisconsin and settled in Marquette county. There he attended the district school in winter and followed the plow in summer. After about 14 years' residence in this place they removed to Eau Claire, in the same state, where his father still resides. In the fall of 1862 Mr. Pease crossed the plains for Bitter Root valley. In 1863 he wintered in Gallatin City, having visited Bannack previously. He remained in Gallatin City until tired of living alone, and in 1869 returned to the east to take unto himself a helpmate and companion in Miss Orvilla Kimster, of Eau Claire. Returning to Montana with his bride, he lived in Gallatin City until the autumn of 1881, when he moved upon his present home-ranch of 200 acres, where he has erected a good residence and will turn his attention to grain-growing and stock-raising. He now has 125 fine mares. One crop on a rented place paid for his own ranch. Mr. and Mrs. Pease have a family of five children, three sons and two daughters, all born in Montana.

MAJ. F. D. PEASE, Livingston, general manager of the Livingston Coal Co., director of the Bozeman Coal Co., and president of the Wills Smelting and Mining Co., of Cook City, is one of the pioneers of 1863, and one of the first business men of Livingston. Major Pease was born in Tioga Co., Pa., in 1835. When ten years of age he removed with his parents to Steuben Co., N. Y., residing in that locality until eighteen years old, when he came to Wisconsin, and engaged in trade with the Chippewa Indians on Black River. In 1854 he joined the Government engineers and assisted in the survey of the boundary line between Wisconsin and Minnesota. In 1855 he engaged with Wm. D. Gray, an old Indian trader of the Watonwan, Minn. He left Minnesota in the fall of 1856 to join what was known as the "Sully Expedition," under Col Abercrombie. He was ordered west to join Gen. Harney, but met him at Pierre, Dak He then embarked in the Indian trade on the Missouri River (1856). In 1861 he entered the Yellowstone country, and was one of the organizers of the fur-trading company known as the "Little Opposition." They united with the Northwest Fur Company in 1863, and soon after bought out the American Fur Company, which was merged into the Northwest Fur Company. He left the company in 1868 to accept the position of special Indian agent under General Sully in the Blackfoot country, Montana. In 1870 he was appointed agent of the Crow Indian Agency, on the east side of the Yellowstone, near the present site of Livingston. He was superseded in 1874 by Mr. Wright, at the Agency, but retained in the department for a year for the purpose of locating a new agency in Judith Basin. On account of the failure of Congressional appropriations, the agency was never established. In 1875 he, in company with Paul McCormick and C. H. Daniels, organized and fitted out what was known as the "Fort Pease Expedition." They built their flat boats near Benton's landing on the Yellowstone, and with a force of 33 men proceeded to the mouth of the Big Horn River, and established Pease Fort. After a year's struggle with the Indians, in which they faced many dangers, they were obliged to evacuate and abandon the Fort. Mr. Pease then devoted his attention to developing the Clarke's Fork mines, in which he is interested. He also became interested in the Bozeman Coal Co., of which he is one of the directors. On the laying out of Livingston he established himself here, and engaged in the coal business, as manager of the Livingston Coal Company. In the spring of 1883 he, in company with Mr. Meyers, began the manufacture of lime, three miles up the Park Branch R. R. from Livingston, under the firm name of Meyers & Co. Their's were the first lime-kilns on the line of the N. P. R. R. west of Duluth. Major Pease is also interested in the manufacture of brick, under the firm name of Decker & Co., with yards within a mile of Livingston. In 1861 he was a member of the first territorial legislature of Dakota, and was elected in November, 1883, a member of the Constitutional Convention of Montana.

H. A. Pease, Bozeman, was born at Granville, Licking Co., O., June 3, 1838. His parents moved to St. Louis in 1839, and thence, during his early childhood, to Iowa, where they remained until 1854. They returned to Missouri, where Mr. Pease continued to reside until 1864. In that year he came to Montana, and locating at Virginia City, engaged in the jewelry business for a time. Turning his attention to mining he continued in that pursuit about one year; then resumed the jewelry trade and for eighteen years carried on the business at Virginia City, having one of the oldest established business houses in that place, and becoming familiar with all the business interests of the city. He served as a member of the City Council for a period of eight years, during four years of which time he officiated as Chairman of the Finance Committee. He also officiated as Sealer of Weights and Measures of Madison county, for four years, and received the nomination for the Territorial Legislature, but was defeated in the election by a small majority. In October, 1882, Mr. Pease went to Bozeman and established his present business, which is now the most important in his line in the city. Although a man of middle age, Mr. Pease is one of the earliest settlers of the country, and experienced many of the privations common to the first settlers. He has paid as high as $1 per pound for potatoes, and $125 per hundred for flour, and during the flour riot, upon going with his men to get their apportioned allowance of ten pounds, upon finding women and children crying for bread he left his allotted share for those who were suffering from the pangs of starvation. On March 1, 1855, Mr. Pease was united in marriage with Miss Sally Chittin, a native of North Carolina, she joining her husband at Virginia City two years after his arrival in the Territory. They have one daughter, Ida, now Mrs Steffens, of Bozeman.

W. C. Pendleton, Bozeman, was born at Elgin, Ill., February 3, 1849. His father was a contracting mason and did not stay long at one place until 1855, when he settled down at Galena, Ill. Our subject attended steadily at the district school until fourteen years of age, then had a two years' course at Racine College. In 1865 his parents moved to Iowa City, at which place our subject attended the State University for two years more. He was then sent to Munson's Institute, Mass., where he took a graduating course of one year, after which he started a fruit and confectionery business in Chicago, remaining two years. Then going to California he dealt in mining stocks for over a year; returned to Iowa and engaged in the fruit business, and in 1876 owned and operated a fruit and nursery farm at Iowa City. During the fall of 1878 he married Miss Annie Walleck, of Solon, Ia., and soon after this event went to Lincoln, Neb., where they started a candy manufactory and continued in the business until 1881. In that year Mr. Pendleton came to Billings and engaged in the same business. In March, 1883, with his wife and their three children, he came to Bozeman, and established his present business. He also has a branch house at Gardiner City. In 1863 while duck hunting at Galena, Ill., a comrade accidentally fired a charge of shot into Mr. Pendleton's arm, which had to be amputated near the shoulder.

M. W. Penwell, P. O. Bozeman, was born in Fayette Co., Ind., September 24, 1840, and educated in the common schools of that state. He came to Montana in 1863 and located ground in Alder gulch; also operated a bakery and restaurant, from which he made $8,000. In 1864 he came to the Gallatin valley and located his present home. In 1865 he put in his first crop, about 75 acres, and in the fall of 1866 commenced building the Union mills in company with two brothers, and managed them until 1868. Mr. Penwell married Mary A. Biggs, the daughter of R. H. Biggs, and they have had six children: Florence, born February 19, 1868; Wm. Parker, March 21, 1869; Robert Guy, September 19, 1872; Martha Grace, March 3, 1876; Della May, May 5, 1877; Carrie C., October 1, 1882. In 1868 Mr. Penwell sold his mill and bought his brother's interest in the farm. He now owns 480 acres of the best land in Gallatin county, adapted to fall wheat and oats. He also raises horses and cattle, and follows freighting.

Geo. Prohl, Upper Yellowstone, is a native of Alsace, Germany, came to the United States in 1847, settled at Cincinnati, and remained in Ohio from 14 until he was 21 years of age, when he left for Missouri, stopping in the latter state for about six years. In 1859 he went to Pike's Peak, and was in Denver when that city consisted of but one log cabin. During the fall of 1859 he returned to the States, going again to Colorado in 1860, and in 1861 to San Juan, Kit Carson acting as guide to the party. He visited various mining camps: Canyon City, California, Washington gulch, Lick creek, and Cache creek, and in the spring of 1863 arrived at Bannack City. From Bannack he went to Alder gulch, remaining there until 1878. While in Alder he saw the first man killed there, Dillingham, who was killed by three road agents. He mined in Bevin's gulch from the fall of 1863 to 1868, and took out about $100,000. From Bevin's gulch he proceeded respectively to South Boulder and Emigrant, and was at Emigrant about two years, mining and farming. In 1879 he took up a ranch on the Upper Yellowstone, which consists of 160 acres, 40 or 50 of which are in a good state of cultivation. He was married in 1858 to Mary Maggie Slusser, a native of Cincinnati, O., and they have ten children living, two having died. Mr. Pfohl did some of the first mining in Alder gulch, where he was one of the pioneers.

JOHN POTTER, Hamilton sixth son of Capt. Joseph Potter, was born at Athens, Somerset Co., Me., February 17, 1834. During the Harrison campaign Capt. Potter was president of the Veteran Whig Club of Athens, while young Potter was captain of the Boys' Whig Company, being present at the log cabin celebration of Harrison's inauguration, on which occasion his father entertained 1,000 persons at dinner. Mr. Potter attended the common schools of Athens until 1850, when he entered the Somerset academy, of which institution his father was a trustee. After passing eight terms at the academy, Prof. Palmer issued to him a certificate of scholarship, when he was employed as teacher in the county schools. At the age of 16 years he entered in the State militia as fifer, with his younger brother as drummer; was promoted 1st lieutenant, and offered the captaincy of his company. In 1854 he was recommended to make a trip to Minnesota, with the object of obtaining relief from an affection of the lungs. In 1857 he took an active part in the political life of that territory, and was nominated for the council by a convention representing three large counties, and elected. He was defrauded out of his position by his opponent, the law then offering very few chances for obtaining justice in such matters. He was delegate to the congressional convention at St. Paul, walking 150 miles to attend, and was a prominent supporter of Cyrus Aldrich for Congress. Through his energy and advocacy the country between the Red river and Mississippi was opened to travel. He was appointed postmaster in 1859, which position he held until 1861, when he enlisted a company of thirty men, who elected him captain; but owing to some summary action by the state military board, the whole party withdrew. During the years 1856-7-8 he was harassed by the Sioux and Ojibways, who on one occasion robbed him of all supplies. A portion of this time, he, with one companion, lived in a log cabin 75 miles distant from a white settlement. He, with J. P. Wilson, C. C. Willis, and Wm. Ramsey, were the founders of the town of Osakis. In 1862 he aided in organizing the Gold Hunters, and with 52 men left St. Cloud for the Rocky mountains, via Fort Benton and Mullan road. The party arrived at Deer Lodge on August 20, 1862, where John Bozeman's party soon after arrived. They entered on mining at Gold creek and Pike's Peak gulch, and in October, 1862, pushed on to Bannack. He was associated with others in many of the early enterprises at Alder Gulch, Blackfoot, etc., and also took a full part in ridding the Territory of the bands of ruffians who infested it. He voted the Union ticket at Virginia in 1864, in the face of every opposition, and was a charter member of the Union League at Virginia, Bannack and Helena, at the latter place being first president. In 1864 Governor Lyon, of Idaho, appointed him justice of the peace. In 1863 he was put forward by the Union League for the postmastership at Virginia City, but for reasons never explained did not get that office. On August 29, 1865, he was commissioned postmaster at Helena, and re-appointed March 2, 1867. He was appointed commissioner of Madison county, by Governor Edgerton, in June, 1864; was admitted to the bar in August, 1872, and in August, 1873, was appointed U. S. Court Commissioner. Mr. Potter was for several terms a member of the republican central committee. In 1870 he removed to Hamilton, Gallatin county. He served as chairman of the republican county committee for a number of years, and was nominated by his party to contest the membership of the legislature against the nominees of the powerful democratic party of Gallatin. In 1876 he reduced the democratic majority of 800 to 240 votes. He was the founder of Morning Star Lodge, No. 5, A. F. & A. M., and has passed all degrees from the Blue lodge to the Commandery. Mr. Potter opened a general store at Hamilton over 13 years ago, where, by fair dealing, he has built up a very large trade. Here also he owns 640 acres of farming land. On a field of 100 acres his tenants raised 3,800 bushels of choice grain in 1882. His interests in promising coal lands are extensive.

WILLIAM REA, Bozeman, was born in Henry Co., Virginia, October 23, 1822, and is a son of Joseph Rea, who moved to Missouri in 1833, and settled at Boonville. His brothers, John and Nicholas, served in the Black Hawk war, and were present at the capture of Black Hawk. After a short time he engaged in the tobacco trade at Booneville. Mr. Rea engaged in farming in Carroll Co., Mo., until 1864, when with his wife and four small children he set out on a trip across the plains to Montana, starting from Carroll Co., May 4, and occupying three weeks going to Council Bluffs. The 4th of July was spent at Laramie, August 3 at South Pass, and September 4 witnessed their arrival at Virginia City, M. T. At Alder gulch Mr. Rea opened the first hotel, known as the Missouri House. After about one year he moved to the lower Gallatin valley, and erected a log house about one and a half miles from Gallatin City, on the main road from Virginia City to Confederate gulch. This he kept as a hotel, and the postoffice and express office. Mr. Rea and William Wright employed Charles Smith to carry the mail for Gallatin county. It was first brought in his coat pocket, then in a flour sack, and more recently in a vehicle drawn by two horses. At this time there was a large travel, mostly on horseback. Stage passengers paid $1.25 per meal; other travelers $1, and fifty cents for a bed; for each horse $1. Mr. Rea married February 22, 1844, Miss Sarah A. Hudson, of Patrick Co., Va., a daughter of Daniel Hudson, a relative of Wade Hampton. Their children number seven: Mary K., born November 9, 1846; Annie R., born January 18, 1851; Harry B., born December 10, 1852; Dora R., born March 10, 1854; William, born May 25, 1857; James A., born August 1, 1860. Annie R., Dora R. and Harry B. are deceased. All were born in Carroll Co., Mo. At one time Mr. Rea gave one yoke of good cattle for five bushels of potatoes, and found fifteen pounds of rocks in them. He planted the potatoes, and from them sold 1,250 bushels, besides what they used. Mr. Rea is a member of the Masonic order in Missouri. He has seen some hardships, like all pioneer men, but is now in a condition to thoroughly enjoy life.

HENRY C. REDING, P. O. Hillsdale, was born in Randolph Co., N. C., July 12, 1838, and is the son of John Reding, a farmer. Our subject was self-educated, and between 1857 and 1861 learned the miller's trade. He went to Indiana and remained till 1864, when he came to Montana, and located the farm now the home of D. F. Cowan. In 1866 he raised his first crop, and bought his present home in 1868. In 1870 he married Mrs. Miller, by whom he has three children,—Daisy, born February 27, 1873; John, June 26, 1875; Sallie, October 12, 1878. Mr. Reding owns 280 acres of land, and is also engaged in stock raising.

BRIGHAM REED, P. O., Salesville, was born in Middlesex Co., Mass., on the 6th of April, 1835, and is a son of Luke and Martha Reed, natives of New England. Four generations they were born on the same place. The fifth generation back was John Reed, who came from England and settled the place. Brigham Reed was the fourth child and third son. He left New England in November, 1844, and located with his parents in Susquehanna Co., Penn. About the first of November, 1858, he went to New York city in charge of the packing and shipping in a large watch factory employing about six hundred workmen. In October, 1859, he went to Texas and engaged in the sheep trade, remaining till April, 1861, when the war broke out and he was obliged to leave that country. He traveled through the States to Iowa, and located in Burlington; engaged as traveling salesman for three years, after which he was in mercantile business for himself for two years, in Muscatine Co., Iowa. He was married on the 6th of December, 1865, to Angelina Leverich, daughter of Ira and Jane Leverich. May 10, 1866, they started with an ox team to cross the plains to Montana via Old Bozeman river. They termed this their wedding trip, and a very romantic one it proved to be. They experienced some trouble with the Indians, eight men being killed in one day. They journeyed on till September 2 of the same year, when they arrived in Bozeman and located a dairy ranch two miles south of town. His was the first exclusive dairy business in the Territory. For about nine years he was engaged in dairying, farming and raising Shorthorn cattle and Hambletonian horses. In 1869 he removed from Bozeman to his present ranch of 240 acres on West Gallatin. It is one of the best hay ranches in the valley He has a race-course two thirds of a mile long, on which he trains his stock, breaks colts, etc. Has also a hennery forty feet long, and keeps about 100 hens. From June till the middle of October he sold $200 worth of eggs. He brought six chickens across the plains when they were selling for $2.50 each. Mr. and Mrs. Reed have one daughter, Edna L., born on the present home December 6, 1874. Attended Hartford Academy, Susquehanna Co., Penn., for a short time, also the common schools. Mr. Reed was an active Granger. In 1875 he was elected to the legislature on the Independent ticket, and was the only one on that ticket elected, having a larger majority than any one on the other ticket. He spent the winters of 1872 and 1873 with his wife, visiting friends in Iowa and Missouri.

G. W. Reese, one of the pioneers of the Upper Yellowstone, was born in the State of Ohio, and when ten years of age, or in 1836, came to Illinois. From Illinois he went to Kansas, and in 1859 to Pike's Peak. In 1861 he joined the volunteers, and served in the army for three years and two months, participating in eleven battles. After being mustered out in 1865, he crossed the plains and came to Helena, M. T. During the war with the Nez Perces Indians he was guide to Gen. Howard, and has been in numerous Indian fights. He has also hunted extensively, and had some thrilling adventures with bears Mr. Reese has traveled through all the territories and other portions of the country, having crossed the plains fifteen times. Since 1874 he has resided on the Upper Yellowstone, a short distance below what is now known as Cinnabar City.

John J. Reese, P. O. Bozeman, was born in Wales October 22, 1841. He is a son of John E. Reese, a farmer, now residing in Gallatin county. John J. is self educated; came to America with his folks in 1856, and in 1863 came to Montana, locating in Bannack, and working at mining. In the fall of 1863 he went to Alder Gulch, and followed mining until 1866, when he moved to the Gallatin valley and located his present home. In the year 1867 he raised his first crop. In 1868 he married Polly Ann Andres, the daughter of Seth Andres, a basket maker in Missouri. Their union was blessed with three children—John D., born November 9, 1869; Mary, August 29, 1872; Emma J., February 20, 1875. Mr. Reese owns 240 acres of farming land. He belongs to the Vigilantes, Knights of Honor and Knights of Pythias, and was a Granger.

Gomer Reese, P. O. Bozeman, was born in Pennsylvania, February 18, 1855. He is a son of John E. Reese, a farmer. Gomer came to Montana with his father in 1863, and was educated in the public schools of Gallatin valley. In 1875 he married Miss C. M. Moor, daughter of A. B. Moor, a stock raiser in Gallatin valley. Their children are: Mary, Evan, Autie, Ambro and Zitte. Mr. Reese follows stock-raising and farming.

Thomas Reese, Reese Creek, was born September 11, 1843, in South Wales. He commenced the battle of life as a miner when about 8 years of age, doing such work as falls to boys in large collieries until able to perform regular mine work. In 1856 he emigrated to America with his father, and, after stopping for a time in the mines in Pennsylvania, crossed the plains for Montana in the spring of 1863, and worked in the mines in Bannack, Alder Gulch and Silver Bow until 1865. He abandoned the mines "flat broke," came to the Reese Creek settlement, and during the summer of 1866 worked on his father's farm. In 1867 he located his present farm and cultivated 15 acres; the second year cultivated 38 acres and began to prosper. In 1872 his cultivation had increased to 105 acres. In 1870 Mr. Reese was united in matrimony with Miss Mary Jane Green, daughter of James and Margaret Green. They have four children living, as follows: Oliver Lee, born December 3, 1871; Melissa, born April 26, 1873—died June 13, 1873; Joseph Alma, born June 25, 1874; Arthur, born July 17, 1877; Thomas Lester, born August 28, 1882. Mr. Reese in 1882 harvested 4,050 bushels of oats from 95 acres. He has a fine growth of currants, gooseberries and kindred fruits, about 20 apple and cherry trees; has 20 head of good mares and about the same number of cattle, mostly dairy cows. His land is now (1883) worth $30 per acre.

Alonzo Reynolds, P. O. Hillsdale, was born in Genuga Co., O., October 14, 1826; was educated in the common schools of Ohio, and at the age of 21 began labor for himself. In 1849 he went to California and made $4,000 in one season. In 1850 he returned home and invested his means in farming and stock-raising. In 1856 he built the Pleasantville mills, managed them until 1860, then sold and moved to Colorado, where he engaged in freighting. In 1866 he came to Montana with freight for Helena, and after delivering it located his present home in Gallatin Valley, consisting of 160 acres of land. He also raises horses and cattle. August 8, 1881, he married Angeline Amos, daughter of D. B. Amos, proprietor of the Garden Grove Hotel in Iowa.

Charles V. Rich, Bozeman, of the firm of Rich & Co., was born at Canton, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., in 1832, and resided with his parents Jacob, and Sallie (Willson) Rich, until 1849; in 1850 moved to McHenry Co., Ill., and engaged in getting out timber and railroad ties throughout Illinois until 1853, when he made the overland journey to California. He was engaged in hotel-keeping and operating a sawmill at Shasta, Cal., for five years; returned to New York in 1857 and resided there until 1861, when he revisited California. A second time he returned to his native state, moved to McHenry Co., Ill., and in 1866 moved thence to Montana. He may be termed the pioneer merchant. When he came to Bozeman there were only six log cabins; a flouring mill was just opening and two sawmills were in operation. Mr. Rich's grandfather served seven years in the war of the revolution. His father was a pioneer of St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., settling there in 1828. In 1868 he was elected a member of the Legislature and served one term, when his business interests urged him to resign. He was the founder of the Story & Willson Bank, established after the failure of the First National, of which he was appointed Receiver. For a time he transacted the business of the new bank alone, Mr. Story giving his attention to other enterprises. Subsequently he retired from banking business to give his sole attention to his extensive mercantile affairs. His marriage with Miss Emma D. Weeks, a native of Vermont, was solemnized at her parents' present home at Albany, N. Y., March 2, 1869. The Willson family of early days came to New England from Leeds, England, which city, they claimed, is built on their lands. In this country they opposed the loyalist factions, as proven in Mr. Willson's grandfather's seven years' service in the war of the revolution.

RICH & Co., Bozeman. In 1866 a Frenchman named Brunette or Burnette came from Canada to Bozeman, and in August of that year opened a general stock of merchandise on the spot where Sam. Lewis' barbershop now stands. In September following Messrs. Teller and Rich arrived, and in October opened a store in the old log house (known as the Masonic building), northwest corner of Main and Bozeman streets. In October, 1867, Messrs. Willson and Rich purchased Teller's interest, and in the spring of 1872 Mr. Bogart entered partnership, holding an interest until 1874, when he sold to his partners. In the spring of 1877 General Willson became sole proprietor of the business, and is now sole owner of the drygoods department. In 1880 he formed a partnership with Chas. Rich in the grocery department, Mr. Rich in the meantime holding his interest in the agricultural implement trade. During the term of their partnership they conducted a general freighting business between Corinne, Utah, and important points in Montana, in which 85 mules of first quality were employed. The business was conducted in the old log house until October, 1868, when they erected a frame building on the corner of Main and Bozeman streets, wherein they placed a stock of goods valued at $80,000. September 27, 1882, Mr. Willson moved into his present palatial store—one of the most complete establishments in the Northwest, where he carries the largest stock and transacts one of the heaviest trades in his line in eastern Montana.

F. L. RICHMOND, P. O. Livingston, first assistant superintendent of the Montana division of the Northern Pacific railroad, which includes the National Park and the Helena and Jefferson branches, was born at Woodstock, Vt., in 1852, and was brought up and educated in the East. In 1871 he went to Kansas, where he was engaged as operator on the Kansas Pacific railway, remaining with that company seven years. He was employed on the Denver & Rio Grande railway, and was clerking one year in the superintendent's office at Denver and Pueblo, Colo. He was next employed on the Cincinnati Northern railway one year as train dispatcher; was also general freight and passenger agent. In June, 1882, he came to Glendive, as clerk in the superintendent's office of the Northern Pacific railway, and in August, 1883, was appointed to his present position.

DAVID J. RIFFLE, of Big Timber, is a native of Fayette Co., Pa., born November 24, 1847. His parents were Joseph and Martha Riffle, his father being a farmer by occupation. Leaving Pennsylvania in 1863 our subject went to Nashville, Tenn., and thence came to Montana by way of Salt Lake City, Utah, stopping at the latter place for one year. Coming to Helena he remained for six years, and then went to Sun River, being the first party to locate a ranch on that stream. From Sun River he returned to Helena, and visited various portions of the Territory, spending one year on the Yellowstone and Clarke's Fork district. He has followed freighting a great portion of his time; was the first settler on Big Timber, and his ranch now consists of 400 acres. When he first settled on Big Timber it was fifteen miles to the nearest neighbor, and six months before any other settlers came.

A. J. RINGLESBY, Upper Yellowstone, was born in Lawrence Co., Ky., in 1827, and went with his parents to Iowa, in 1837, making the latter state his home until 1865, when he came to Bozeman. There were then but five cabins in Bozeman. Our subject lived in Gallatin Valley until 1869, when he went to Emigrant Gulch and stayed one year; returned to Gallatin Valley, remaining until 1874, when he again entered the Emigrant mines and continued there until 1882. In the latter year he bought the ranch of 240 acres he now owns, about eight miles below Fridley's, where he is engaged in farming and stock-raising. In 1859 Mr. Ringlesby was married to Melissa Mounts, a native of Illinois, and is the father of one child, Frank L., born July 23, 1860.

JOHN MARION ROBINSON, Middle Creek, was born May 6, 1843, in Rhea Co., Tenn., the fourth child and son in a family of seven children born to John and Hannah Earnest Robinson, both of Tennessee. His father was considered one of the most systematic farmers in the state, and was one of its earliest settlers. John M. worked on the farm till the age of 17 years. The war of the Rebellion breaking out, he entered the Confederate service, and was on detail duty in the Quartermaster's Department most of the time. He was present at the siege of Vicksburg, where his rations consisted of mule meat. It was his disposition to fight, and while at Vicksburg he took up his gun and volunteered to go to the front, but was ordered back. His father's family was opposed to secession, but was forced by circumstances to participate. Young Robinson was paroled at Vicksburg, and returned to his home. He attended school in Edinburgh, Ind., one year, and in 1865 crossed the plains with an ox-team to Alder Gulch, M. T., arriving in August, having left home April 4. After a short time spent in the mines, he came to Middle Creek and commenced farming on his present ranch. The same fall they settled on Middle Creek; the three brothers were interested in mining in Emigrant Gulch, where after spending $4,000 they took out $54. They decided to drop the mining business and continue farming. In 1866 they raised sixteen bushels of wheat to the acre, and on the same land in 1881 they raised forty bushels to the acre. In 1882 they raised on a small tract of land sixty-five bushels of wheat to the acre. In 1868 they tried mining again at Radersburgh, with better success. In 1873 Mr. Robinson was married to Miss Florence Bickett, daughter of Henry G. and Eliza Bickett, of West Gallatin. To John M. and Florence Robinson have been born three children: Nora, Edna and Lester E., all born in the present home. In 1876 Mr Robinson erected his present residence, a good commodious dwelling. He was elected County Commissioner in 1878, and served on the Board when the court house in Bozeman was erected. He now owns 680 acres of fine land and a beautiful home, where will be found an abundance of all kinds of small fruits. He is extensively engaged in breeding blooded stock. At Mr. Robinson's place were picked beautiful pansies from under the snow December 16, 1882. Mr. Robinson came to the Territory poor, but is now one of the wealthy, enterprising citizens of Bozeman.

M. ROTH & Co., Livingston, wholesale dealers in liquors, cigars, etc., established their business at Livingston in November, 1882. The house was opened in the old town by Schreiner & Co., who moved the store to Main street in June, 1883, where the business is at present carried on. September 2, 1883, Don. L. Williard purchased Schreiner's interest, but sold in turn to Mr. Roth, November 10, 1883, and the latter has continued the business. M. Roth was born in Hungary, Austria, in 1856. A few years later his parents removed to the United States, and located at Chicago. After leaving school he was employed as bookkeeper by different business firms for seven years, and was subsequently engaged with Summer & Co., wholesale grocers, four and a half years, and with Comhauser & Co., wholesale dealers in liquors, three and a half years, during which time he was constantly on the road selling goods. In November, 1883, he came to Livingston, and on the 10th of that month purchased the interest of Don. L. Williard in the liquor business. Since then Mr. Roth has not only increased the stock, but, by his close attention to the trade has made a rapid increase in business.

P. S. ROUNTREE, P. O. Bozeman, son of John H. and Mrs. Lydia (Southwork) Rountree, was born at Platteville, Wis., in 1848. His father was one of the pioneers of Wisconsin, and long a member of the Legislature of that State. Our subject was a cadet at the U. S. Military Academy at West Point, attending that institution in 1864–5. He also attended Eastman Business College at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Racine College, and the First Normal School, of Wisconsin. He is a newspaper man by profession, and has held responsible positions on the staff of several dailies at Milwaukee, St. Paul and other places. He came to Bozeman in the early part of the year 1883, and engaged in the real estate business with Thos. B. Quaw, under the firm name of "Rountree & Quaw." In 1881 Mr. Rountree was married to Miss Emily Ludington, of Carmel, N. Y., niece of Ex-Governor Ludington, of Wisconsin.

DANIEL E. ROUSE, Bozeman, was born September 30, 1834, in Washtenaw Co., Mich. His early life was spent on a farm with his parents. In 1850 he went to New York and worked for seven months; returned to Michigan and rented a farm. In that way he provided a home for his brothers and sisters. In the spring of 1852 he left the farm and went to Minnesota with his party and settled in Lake Pepin valley, taking up a claim of 160 acres; then went to Red Wing on the Mississippi and bought thirty town lots, remaining there until February, 1855, when he went to New York to receive a legacy left by his uncle. Returning by way of Michigan, and taking with him three of his younger brothers and one sister, he built a house on his claim in Pepin valley, Minn., and remained until the fall of 1856. He then went to Wisconsin, and from there to Franklin, Iowa, in 1857, remaining until 1859, speculating in farms. Locating in Sac Co., Iowa, he engaged in the milling business until 1861, then started with a party named Vetter, who had a large amount of stock, for California. At Council Bluffs the train was put under Mr. Rouse's charge. Here he engaged five men to assist, giving them board and furnishing riding horses. At Fort Laramie, Vetter broke the contract he had made, so left him. When within a few miles of Fort Laramie, Mr. Rouse and party camped near a Missourian's outfit of forty wagons. The next day two horses were missing from their camp. Learning that they were some miles ahead, they hitched up teams and followed them. Not finding them, the Missourians arrested two young men by the name of Huston, accused them of stealing the horses, and threatened to shoot them if they did not produce them. They started out but were unable to find them. In the meantime an Indian and a Mexican were sent out on the same errand. They returned the next afternoon, bringing the horses. When they came within a few hundred yards of the camp, two men shot at them. The Mexican was shot twice through the body before arriving at the camp. Here Mr. Rouse endeavored to shield him, but the desperadoes threatened him and he went away. They then killed the Mexican, also an old blind Mexican. In the meantime the Indian boy had run and jumped into the river. They shot him in the elbow, but he finally escaped. They then attempted to murder the Huston boys, but Mr. Rouse prevented them. This train was commanded by Captain Robinson. The parties were arrested and tried, but released and continued with the train. From here Mr. Rouse proceeded to Denver, and remained there until 1862. Loading a team, he went to Horse Station, sold the outfit and worked at that place until April, 1862. In June he started for California with a party of emigrants. Leaving them at Fort Hall, on the Snake river, he started for Bitter Root, Idaho; met a party of miners on the way and went with them to the diggings, where Bannack now stands. From there he proceeded to Deer Lodge. Pike's Peak was just discovered and he took up a claim, but soon left it for the Bitter Root country; rented a farm, worked it a short time and again engaged in mining at Bannack. From there he went to Three Forks of the Missoula, when with others he laid out a town, returning to Deer Lodge soon after; from there he started for Hell Gate; reached Dempsey Ranch, and there found five men, all road agents. These men pretended they were horse hunting. One of them accompanied Mr. Rouse with the intention of killing him. Mr. Rouse escaped and returned to Hell Gate. In April he started for Gallatin city with seeds and feed; put in crops there in 1863, left party in charge and went to Fort Benton with three teams to get freight for Bannack; met Boats, received freight and returned to Virginia city; went to Gallatin city, found he had no crop, and came back to Virginia city and freighted goods between that point and Salt Lake. On the road back he had considerable trouble with road agents. He bought $18 worth of salt in Salt Lake and sold it for $900 in Virginia city. Abandoning this business he went to upper Gallatin valley and took up a claim at a place known as Reese creek. July 7, 1864, he staked off the town and left, intending to meet some emigrants to direct that way. Failing to do so, he went to Virginia city; met Bozeman there and told him what he had done and said he had staked off a plat for himself. He then gave Bozeman and Bell some of the land to induce them to come. One hundred and sixty acres of Mr. Rouse's land are in the town site and forty acres of his homestead lie within the corporation. In the fall of 1864 he put up a log house, the first dwelling in Bozeman. He then induced parties to build a grist mill. Mr. Rouse assisted as far as lay in his power in building up the town, giving away the principal part of his main street property to men who would build. In the fall of 1867 he built the first business house adjoining the Laclede Hotel. In 1870 he built a log house on his homestead and laid out the first addition to the town of forty acres. In 1882 he laid out the fifth addition of forty acres, lying south of his first addition, and afterward laid out a small addition of fifteen acres. He built his present home in 1881. Mr. Rouse was elected alderman in 1883. In the spring of 1877 he went to Yellowstone, ten miles above where Billings now stands, and laid out a town known as Rouse's Point. He experienced much trouble with the Indians at first, they stealing his horses and burning the houses. In 1855 Mr. Rouse was married to his first wife, and had three children: Wallace, Ida and Edward. In 1871 he married his present wife, Susan E., daughter of John and Eliza Hitchcock, of New York. Mr. Rouse, during the long term of years spent in an uncivilized country, has encountered many dangers, and has had numerous hair-breadth escapes from the hands of the merciless savages.

J. A. SAVAGE, Livingston, of the firm of Savage & Elder, attorneys at law, was born in Jefferson Co., N. Y., and educated at the Carthage Academy, Governeur Institute, and Liberal Literary Institute, of Antwerp, N. Y. He began the study of law in 1863, with James F. Starbuck, of Watertown, N. Y., and was admitted to the bar before the Supreme Court at Syracuse, in October, 1865. He began practice at Carthage as a law partner of N. Whiting. In April, 1866, he went to Philadelphia and New York, where he pursued his profession until April, 1867; he then came to Montana, remained a short time at Fort Benton, went soon afterward to Helena, where he was interested in mining, and established himself in practice at Radersburg. In August, 1868, he went to Nevada, and while in that region was employed in railway construction as contractor on the Central Pacific, also practicing his profession. He was elected and served two terms in the Nevada Legislature. During his stay in Nevada he visited California. In 1879 he went to Bonanza City, Idaho, and thence to Butte, where he spent one year in practice. On October 1, 1882, he came to Livingston, pursued the practice of law, and September 25, 1883, formed a partnership with John H. Elder.

FRANK SCOTT, P. O. Bozeman, was born at Rockford, Ill., September 15, 1855, and in 1857 his parents moved to Wisconsin, where they lived eleven years, prior to moving to Iowa. Mr. Scott remained in that state, having learned and worked at the carpenter trade until 1878. He at that time came to Bozeman, where he has since been engaged in building, contracting, etc. November 21, 1880, Mr. Scott was married to Miss Ellen Millett, of Franklin Co., Ia., by whom he has three children: Jessie, Eddie and May. Mr. Scott, through remarkable energy and enterprise, has succeeded, during the past few years, in building for himself a splendid trade.

JOHN SCULLY, a member of the firm of Highsmith, Scully & Co., of Bozeman, is a native of Fredericton, New Brunswick, and was born December 29, 1855. In 1879 he came to Helena; removed to Bozeman in the fall of 1880, and engaged his services to Frank Harper, for whom he worked until he formed his present co-partnership. Mr. Scully passed his time at school until sixteen years of age, when he began learning his trade (that of wheelwright). Thinking the West afforded better chances for success, he directed his footsteps in that direction, going to Helena by way of Fort Benton, making the journey in one month and four days. After looking around and experiencing some delay, he engaged to Messrs. Paynter, Brown & Wiesnoborn. He afterward worked for Gilmore & Salisbury.

HENRY SEEVERTS, P. O. Bozeman, was born in Germany March 5, 1839; came to America in October, 1859; went to California in 1860, and locating at Downieville engaged in the bakery business, afterward prospected and mined for about seven years. He subsequently established a bakery at Dutch Flat, where he continued in business some thirteen months. In 1869–70 he was located at White Pine, going to Nevada in 1870 and passing the time until 1876 in Pioche and Eureka. He then returned to California and settled at Sacramento, remaining until 1878, when he again visited Nevada and started in business, but unfortunately was burned out twice during a period of nine months. He then went to Idaho during the Wood river excitement, thence in 1882 to Butte City, and thence to Bozeman, where he soon after established his present business.

NEWTON SEWARD, P. O. Livingston, one of the pioneers of Montana, was born in Maysville, Mason Co., Ky., August 28, 1822. When seven years of age he removed with his parents to Green Co., Ohio, where he grew to manhood. He then went to Indiana and enlisted in the volunteer service in the Mexican war as a private in Company I, Fourth Indiana Volunteers, under Col. Willis A. Gorman. He served fourteen months and was promoted to second sergeant. After the close of the war he returned to La Porte, Ind., and in the fall of 1835 located in Iowa. He owned a steam saw-mill at Osage, which he operated till the spring of 1860. He then removed to Colorado, made his headquarters at Denver, and was engaged in mining on the South Boulder and Georgia Gulch. In the fall of 1863 he returned east. The following year he came to Montana, arriving in East Bannack July 15, 1864. From there he went to Virginia City, where he joined a party of nineteen in a prospecting tour. They struck into the Geyser country, where their camp was disturbed by a series of eruptions. As none of the party had learned of the existence of the Geysers, they thought they were on volcanic ground that might be dangerous; so, catching up blankets and clothes, they broke for their horses near the creek and were soon out of sight of the Geysers. They then prospected through to Gallatin Valley. Mr. Seward built the sixth cabin in Bozeman, in the fall of 1868. He wintered there and then went to Virginia City, M. T., and in March of the same year to Helena. He placer mined in Grizzly Gulch till the autumn, when he sold out on account of failing health and went to Emigrant Gulch, where he passed the winter. In the spring of 1866 he returned to Helena, where he ran the Belcher ground, till the water gave out, then to Elk Creek. In that fall he returned to Helena and operated a saw-mill till the following June. His next venture was in the restaurant business at the Vandebury warm springs. This proved a failure. In the fall of 1867 he joined a party of five and went to the Big Horn mountains; returned to Bridger's Creek, with a party of twenty; struck pay dirt, but the Indians attacked them, and all but himself and two others departed hastily for safer quarters, and they only remained till the next train came along, when they returned to Helena. In 1868 Mr. Seward bought a steam saw-mill and went to Lincoln Gulch with it; was thirty-six days going thirty-five miles over the mountains through the snow; lost all he had in that venture and returned to Helena, as all did when "dead broke." In 1872 he went to Clarke's Fork—was one of the discoverers of those mines; worked there till he again found himself destitute, then struck out and discovered the Boulder mine. He gave that up and joined the army under Col. Chestnut, near the mouth of Rosebud, went as far as Powder River with the expedition, and returned with Buckhart on the "Far West." Gen. Custer left them about three days before the massacre. Mr. Seward wintered at Fort Keogh, made hay till spring, returned to Clarke's Fork, ran a smelter there till spring, then built and ran down to Miles City. He entered government employ and operated a government steam saw-mill three years. In 1880 he returned to the States, but made only a short visit, and came to Livingston in the starting of this town (spring of 1882), establishing a lumber yard, which he sold out in the spring of 1883. He was elected one of the first two justices of this place in the fall of 1882. When the line of the N. P. R. R. was run he was guide from Helena to Baker's Battle ground, and saved the company thirty miles of road over the former route.

JAMES SMART, stock-grower, a native of South Wales, was born August 3, 1833; is the first son of William and Ellen Smart. He was educated in the common schools of Wales, and at the age of seventeen years was apprenticed to a boiler maker. After serving out his time he emigrated to the United States at the age of twenty-two and located in Schuylkill Co., Penn., where he followed mining for one year. In 1856 he moved to Mason City, and continued mining for six years. In 1857 he married Margaret Davis, the eldest daughter of Evan Davis, who had a family of thirteen children. James and Margaret Smart had but one child, who only lived sixteen months. In 1862 Mr. Smart moved to Vermillion Co., Ill., still occupied in mining, and in 1863 to Ogden, Utah, near which place he bought a farm on which his wife resided two years. In 1864 Mr. Smart once more emigrated, and this time located at Alder Gulch, M. T., where he worked in the mines and received $8 per day for two years. In 1866 he returned to Utah, sold his farm and moved with his family to Oneida Co., Idaho. Here he carried on a general ranch business and stock-raising for two years. In 1868 he sold his ranch and moved to Montana, bringing his cattle with him; located in Deer Lodge county, and in 1869 located his present home of 720 acres of fine land on the Madison and Jefferson Rivers in Gallatin county, where he has fine stock and a substantial home. His residence was erected in 1874 and has seven rooms.

GEORGE SMITH, Reese Creek, was born April 7, 1838, in Gloucestershire, at Welford, England. When George was four weeks old his parents removed to Stratford-on-Avon, where he engaged in carpet-weaving. Machinery had taken that business from his hands, so at the age of 12 years went to Stratfordshire to learn the trade of puddling and rolling. His parents remained and died there. In 1863 George Smith left his mother country and crossed the great waters to the United States, reached Utah, and engaged in mining at the famous Emma mine and other places. Mr. Smith worked on the Union Pacific railway, and when it was completed returned to Omaha for nine months. In 1870 he located at Spring Hill, Montana, but in the autumn of the same year returned to the mines of Utah. After nine years of mining life in various parts of Utah, he returned to Montana penniless, and located on a quarter section of land on Reese creek. He has it partly under cultivation. It is upland and produces fine crops, ranging from 40 to 50 bushels to the acre. Mr Smith was married February 10, 1864, to Miss Alice Mills. They have had three children: George Henry, Elizabeth and Hiram (deceased). George Henry is at home with his father, and was born April 4, 1866. Mr. Smith has had the experience of many of the pioneer settlers of the territory, and has emerged well provided with the goods of this world.

GEO. N. SMITH, P. O. Livingston, of Smith & Hagy, Livingston, was born at Norwalk, O., July 9, 1847 After receiving a common school education he obtained a position as clerk in the post-office, which he held three years, resigning it to accept another as clerk in the Government Pay Department. He was stationed for several years in the South, principally in Texas, Florida and Georgia. Being transferred north, he was stationed at Sioux City, Ia. In the spring of 1873 he left the government service and entered the First National Bank in that city, acting in the capacity of correspondent, bookkeeper, teller and cashier for a period of four years In the spring of 1877 he came to Montana as first clerk in the Quartermaster's Department, being stationed at Fort Custer, and serving three years. In the spring of 1880 he formed a partnership with W. O. Hagy and opened a general store at Huntley, at the head of navigation on the Yellowstone river, where his business was principally trading with the Indians. After carrying on business for three years he removed his stock of general merchandise to Livingston in December, 1882. Mr. Smith was married to Miss Tillie F. Hagy, of Sioux City, Ia., September 9, 1874. The firm was established at Livingston in December, 1882. It was located originally on Clark street, in what is known as the old town. Several months later the firm moved to Park street, opposite the depot. Finding that locality a poor one, they removed to their present place of business on Main street.

JAMES A. SMITH, P. O. Livingston, attorney-at-law, was the third lawyer to locate at Livingston. He settled in what is known as Old Town, in December, 1882. Mr. Smith is the son of Captain John T. Smith, of Gallatin Valley, and was born in Adair Co., Mo. When 16 years of age he accompanied his father to Montana, via the Bozeman route, arriving at Bozeman July 22. Their train was in advance of Colonel Carrington's command, and encamped on the site of the cantonment of Phil Kearney, where the massacre of the whites by the Indians occurred the following year. James A. spent some time at his father's stock ranch on the Gallatin, and in 1869 started for the White Pine diggings of Nevada, as a miner. Not being pleased with the prospects in that region, he went to California in 1874, via Old Mexico and the Gulf of California. From San Francisco he sailed to the Sandwich Islands the same year. Returning to California he made a trip to British Columbia in the fall of that year, and after a few months returned to California. In the summer of 1876 he returned to Virginia City, Nev., going thence to the Gallatin Valley. He was clerking at Pony City in 1877, and in 1878 was engaged in mining. In 1879 he went to Fort Benton, and thence to Poplar River Agency, where he joined Stanley Huntley in his expedition to confer with Sitting Bull and Long Dog, the Sioux chiefs. They met the Indians at Wood Mountain, in the Canadian Northwest, and after completing their business, returned to Poplar River Agency. In 1880 he went to the States and studied law with Lee L. Griggs, of Kirkville, Mo. He also read with his brother, and with James F. Drennan, of the Black Hills. He next came to Miles City and read with Andrew F. Burleigh. He was admitted to the bar in 1881 and to practice in the Supreme Courts in August, 1883. He began practice at Miles City; moved to Billings July 4, 1882, and December 25, of that year, came to Livingston.

CAPT. J. T. SMITH, Central Park, was born in Knoxville, Tenn., February 25, 1813. He is the fourth son of Josiah Smith, a farmer in Tennessee. John T. Smith moved to Missouri in 1830, where he received his education in the common schools, and at the age of 21 began labor for himself. In 1843 he engaged in the mercantile business in Kirksville, Mo. In 1844 he married Sarrah A. Good, the daughter of Wm. Good, a farmer in Missouri, and a leader in politics. Their union was blessed with eight children: Moncil Wm., born March 22, 1845; Robert C., born August 14, 1846; James Alfred, April 29, 1848; John T., July 17, 1851; Martha, October 27, 1852; Mary Posy, November 13, 1854; Wilmot E., April 8, 1856; Thena H., September 10, 1858. In 1852 and 1853 Capt. Smith was in the Missouri Legislature. In 1854 he engaged in banking at Kirksville, and was president and cashier of the St. Louis Branch Bank. In 1864 he brought an ox team to Montana. During this trip he assisted Bozeman in laying out what is known as the Bozeman Route. In 1866 he brought fine cattle to Montana, and followed farming and stock-raising. He located a farm on Dry Creek, Gallatin Co., and gave the creek its name. In 1869 he sold his property in Montana and returned to Missouri, where he followed farming until 1879, when he moved to Montana to make it his home.

LEWIS SPERLING Bozeman, was born in Russian Poland, January 1, 1836. He lived in his native country for twenty-one years, seven of which he spent at school. When the Crimean war broke out the Russian government commenced impressing men for the army. Mr. Sperling left to escape this, and landed in New York in 1857. He commenced peddling at once, and traveled over the State of New York for six years. In 1863 he went to California with a stock of goods. He sold out in 1864, and going to Utah started a store near Brigham City. In the summer of 1866 he sold out here, and going to Montana, and being favorably impressed with the Gallatin Valley, he built a house at Gallatin City, purchased a stock of goods and opened a store at that place. In the fall of 1867 he saw that Bozeman was to be the chief town in the valley, and moved his stock to that place, where he bought furs and outfitted Indian traders, gradually acquiring a good trade. In 1871 he married Miss Jeanette Strasburger, and at present has a family of five children.

JACOB F. SPIETH, of Spieth & Krug, Bozeman, was born in Germany in 1833. His early life was spent on a farm and at school. Emigrating to the United States in 1854, he engaged in farming, one year in Ohio and three years in Illinois. He next turned his attention to mining, and was for three and a half years in the Pike's Peak diggings. He pushed on to Montana in 1863, and mined two years in Alder Gulch, two years in Cen-federate Gulch, and for a year or less each in several other localities. He finally located at Bozeman, and, in company with Mr. Krug, built a brewery. It required the labor of three men for three days and nights to grind enough grain to work sixty gallons of beer. This was continued for three months, when the malt was taken to Spring Hill to be ground. The various buildings connected with the brewery were erected from time to time, and in 1882 Mr. Spieth built the house he now occupies. He is also engaged in the stock business and is interested in mines in Bear Gulch. In 1871 Mr Spieth married Miss Barbara Shock, of Germany, and they have two children, Frederick William and Edward H. (See sketch of Charles Krug.)

RES. AND FARM OF THOMAS B. ELLIS, 2½ MILES FROM BOZEMAN, GALLATIN CO.

ASA KIMBAL STANTON, Gallatin City, is a native of Wayne Co., Penn., and the son of Charles and Ruth (Smith) Stanton. His father was a farmer and lumberman. At the age of 16 he accepted a position as brakeman on the Delaware and Hudson gravity railroad, on which he served for five years. At the expiration of this time he served an apprenticeship of three years, learning the trade of carpenter and joiner, then started west, stopping in Michigan for one month; then going to Minnesota, next to Wisconsin, back to Little Falls, Minn., and again to Wisconsin, where he remained from 1858 until 1862, when he started for the Salmon River mines. While the party was camped on Wood River, some Bannack Indians brought the information that "white man's mining camp can be reached in four sleeps." Enthusiastic over this news they cut up their wagons, made pack saddles out of them, packed their horses, hired an Indian for guide, and thus equipped started for the supposed mines. After traveling four days the Indian deserted the party, leaving them on the headwaters of the Salmon River, and no mines nor any signs of a white man could be seen. The party wandered about a few days until they encamped on the Big Hole River, and while Mr. Stanton was hunting game he met two white men and learned from them that gold had been found two days previously in Grasshopper Creek (now Bannack). Mr. Stanton conveyed the news to the party and they all started in haste for Bannack. Messrs. Stanton & Davis formed a partnership, but remained in Bannack only a few days and moved to the head of the Missouri River, or the Three Forks. Here Messrs. Stanton & Davis took a contract to lay off the Gallatin City town sites for Burton, Burnace, Bouton and Mr. Lewis, for the consideration of four sacks of flour worth $30 per sack of 100 lbs., and a number of town lots. Upon one of these lots Stanton & Davis built the first house erected in Gallatin City. It was constructed of logs, the roof covered with dirt, and had no floor but the natural earth. In March Mr. Davis went to Bannack and sold their mining ground for $1,600; got drunk and spent it all in one day and night. The firm was broken up, and Mr. Stanton's flour all gone but one pint; on this and wild game he subsisted for three weeks until parties came from Bannack with supplies. In the following spring (1863) Mr. Stanton put in a crop on what was known as the Joe Wilson Place; bought 600 lbs. potatoes at 60c. per lb and one plow for $200 in gold dust, and had the misfortune to lose all his crop but 40 bushels of potatoes. The following winter he made his living by hunting and selling game. In the spring of 1864 he put in a crop on his own place in partnership with Mr. Pease; from this crop they raised 600 bushels of potatoes and 340 bushels of wheat. For the portion of the crop they sold, they realized 12c. per lb for potatoes and $10 per bushel for wheat. With the proceeds of this crop they purchased a few cows. In 1865 they again raised a crop and in the fall bought 36 cows, paying $80 per head, and in the spring of 1866 sold their stock for $80 per head. In the spring of 1867 they bought 32 cows and heifers and 22 calves, and the next spring purchased 18 head of two-year-old heifers and continued in the stock business until 1878, when they sold for $20,000, reserving all the graded stock. In the fall of 1878 Mr. Stanton bought J. A. Pease's interests in the stock and farm, and now owns 400 acres of land, 50 head of thoroughbred cattle, 40 head of horses and 2,000 sheep. On the 19th of October, 1881, Mr. Stanton married Mrs. Jeannette S. Everson, daughter of William R. Coleman, a farmer of Pennsylvania. This union has been blest with one child, Ruth, born December 1, 1882.

JOHN F. STOCKER, manager for Schreiner & Son, Bozeman, wholesale whisky merchants, was born in Metz, Lorraine, France, June 9, 1856; attended school until fourteen years old; came to the United States in 1866 and located at St. Louis, Mo., where he started in the whisky business and carried it on until 1877; then went to Montana, located at Benton and engaged in the grocery business; after one year he went to Bozeman and opened a house for Kieinschmidt & Bro., remained with them until 1882, and at that time took his present position. He has also taken a ranch of 320 acres, improved it and managed it as a hay farm. In 1881 he, with two others, took a claim of 400 acres of land. In 1877-78 he was in the Bear Paw mining district, and is now interested in the Clarke's Fork mines. Mr. Stocker married Miss Hattie Keaton, of Missouri Valley, M. T., in 1882.

HIRAM H. STONE, Bozeman P. O. was born at Bridport, Addison Co., Vt., in 1819. In 1844 went to Chicago, Ill., and engaged in grain business. In 1849 went to California, crossing the plains; engaged in mining. In 1850 returned to Chicago, engaged as land examiner for Illinois Central R. R. Co. In 1862 came to Montana by the first steamer to reach Fort Benton, 32 days from St. Louis. Resided in Montana since. Mr. Stone was one of the first to settle upon the Yellowstone, which he did in the spring of 1877. He was there, near Rouse's Point, at the point where the Nez Perces Indians, fleeing from Gen. Howard, crossed. The battle of Cañon Creek took place upon the ground where he was settled, driving him, his family and other settlers off in the night, with the loss of almost everything—house, hay, etc., being burned. He had settled in Bozeman in 1871, to which he returned after said Yellowstone disaster, and where he yet resides, engaged in mining, farming, stock business, etc. In 1872 he visited the geyser region of the Yellowstone National Park, being with his family among the first to visit it after its practical discovery, Mrs. Stone being the first white woman to make the visit.

NELSON STORY, banker, P. O. Bozeman, is a native of Ohio, and was born in Meigs Co. in 1838. His father, Ira Story, was of Scotch descent, and was born eight miles west of Shaker Village, N. H. His mother, whose maiden name was Hannah Gile, was of English parentage, and was married to Ira Story in 1832, coming to Meigs county in 1835. She died in 1854, and her husband died in the spring of 1857. Nelson Story spent his early life in school and in agricultural pursuits. He received a collegiate education, but was prevented from graduating by the death of his father. In the winter of 1857 he taught school in Ohio, and in 1858 went to Illinois, thence, in a short time, to Nebraska City, where he was temporarily employed in the mercantile business. Removing to Leavenworth, Kan., he started from that point with a government train for Salt Lake City. He was taken sick at Fort Laramie, and remained three weeks; returned to Leavenworth and was there employed until the spring of 1859. Entering the employ of Jones & Co., he went through with the first train ever passing by the "Smoky Hill" route to Denver, Col., arriving there June 5, 1859. Later in the same month, he, in company with three other young men, went to the Gregory mines

(now Central City), there purchased of Dr. Long three placer mining claims at the mouth of Nevada gulch for $800, and mined there during the summer of 1859, with poor success, owing to inexperience. On October 1, he left, with Asher Martin, for Leavenworth City, Kan., where he engaged in getting out timber on Little Stranger Creek, making at that business about $800 during the winter. About the first of May, 1860, he started for Colorado with five yoke of cattle, and wagons loaded with goods; went up the Platte river by way of Denver, South Park and Tarry All, to Breckenridge (this was the first wagon that was ever taken to Blue River), and arrived about the first of July, 1860. He sold goods until September 1, moved to Georgia gulch on its discovery, and sold goods until late in the fall of 1860, when he returned to Leavenworth county. While on the Republican the Otoe Indians drove off all the cattle but one steer, and this party hauled a wagon twenty miles with one sore-footed steer and a horse hitched by rope around the horn of a saddle. He was engaged in breaking prairie during the summer of 1861, and in the winter of that year hauled bridge timber from the Missouri to Little Stranger. May 1, 1862, he loaded two ox teams with groceries and went to Denver; disposed of the goods, returned to Leavenworth in July, and about August 1 he reloaded and went back to Denver, arriving there late in the fall. He sold goods there until March, 1863. On March 17 he started for East Bannack, with three yoke of cattle and wagons loaded with goods, together with fourteen Mexican Jacks as packers, and two men in his employ; traveled via South Pass, Bitter Creek and Fort Bridger, lying at the latter place two weeks, with seven other ox teams. Afterward traveled with mule teams to Bannack, arriving there June 4, 1863. On June 3, 1863, the discoverers of Alder gulch arrived, and three days later returned to the gulch. The next day, Mr. Story, with two hired men, took fourteen pack animals and followed the trail to where Virginia City now stands. On the lower part of its present site Mr. Story staked a claim of 100 feet on either side of the gulch, and remained there one week, when he returned for his wife, wagon and cattle, bringing them to his tent at the mouth of the Alder, where he remained a short time. On the last of June, representation day came by performing a day's labor upon the claim he held under the mining laws of the gulch. On returning in the evening from his work he found that a man by the name of Dillingham had been murdered, the first crime of the kind committed in Montana. The names of the murderers were Hayes, Lyon, Buck Stinson and Chas. Forbes. They were arrested the following day and tried by a jury resulting in the acquittal of Forbes and the conviction of Lyon and Stinson, with a sentence to be hanged the following day. By ten o'clock several hundred people had assembled, a scaffold was built and ropes provided, and the prisoners were brought on a wagon to the place of execution, when they asked to have a letter read which was prepared the previous night for their mothers. This privilege was granted and the letters read by J. H. P. Smith, an attorney. Their contents excited some sympathy among a portion of the crowd, who procured a vote on the propriety of carrying out the sentence. Two tellers were appointed, and while a vote was being taken, a horse was brought on which the desperadoes mounted, armed with revolvers, and rode away at full speed. In July, 1863, the upper part of Alder Gulch was discovered, and Mr. Story taking his effects went to the Summit, where he remained till the spring of 1864, merchandising and purchasing mining grounds in Pine Grove district and Summit, for $13,000. In the summer of 1864, he let contracts, having ground opened, and worked fifty men night and day during 1865, in his mines, netting him about $50,000. In the fall of 1863 a man by the name of Clark, having some mules on a ranch, sent a German to bring them to the Summit. The man failing to return in reasonable time, Clark went to see what was the cause. About this time the German was found by some hunter and brought to Virginia City, wounded by a gun shot in the right eye. Clark and others went to Stinking Water valley and arrested Geo. Ives, Long John and Bob Dempsey, and brought them to the lower town, two miles west of Virginia City. Ives was tried by a miners' court of twenty-four jurymen and found guilty. Col. Sanders announced the verdict and advised hanging without delay. Robt. Hereford, the sheriff, led the prisoner between two buildings to where a log extended from one to the other. The prisoner was placed upon the box, and Hereford adjusted the rope round his neck, guarded by some two hundred men. The tops of the buildings were covered with roughs, one of whom said he would shoot the rope from the prisoner's neck. At this moment the sheriff vacated his position and inquired what should be done next Instantly Mr Story and Ben Ezekiel stepped forward and jerked the box from under the prisoner, and as he fell, the guards leveled their guns on the crowd, but fortunately no shot was fired, as a terrible slaughter would have followed. The next day the other men were tried and acquitted. The law-abiding citizens from this time on took the law in their own hands, and hanged some 20 men before spring. In the spring of 1864 Mr. Story left Virginia city for the States, taking the Ben. Halliday coach via Salt Lake, Denver and Atchison, Kan., traveling day and night for a month with $40,000 worth of gold dust which he shipped from Atchison to New York city. He then visited his old home in Meigs Co., O., where his two brothers still lived, and in a short time went to New York city and sold his gold dust at 127¼, after which he visited several eastern cities, and returned to Leavenworth, Kan. He then attended several government sales in different parts of the country, visited the battle grounds in front of Nashville, Tenn., and returning to Leavenworth bought some government stock, hired two men, took wagons and went to Dallas, Tex., and there purchased 600 head of cattle; drove them through the Indian nation, up the Neosho, where he was intercepted by the people of Kansas, who objected to Texan cattle being brought through their country. He then went to the Santa Fe road, thence to Topeka and crossed the river on pontoon bridges into the Delaware nation and drove them within 20 miles of Leavenworth city, after which he bought 15 wagons in Leavenworth, loaded them with merchandise, attached 150 head of cattle and started for Montana July 10, 1866, driving the balance of the cattle loose with 15 head of riding stock and 22 men. They went by way of Big Blue and Kearney, on the Platte, to Julesburg, where they crossed the Platte river to the north side, and at Fort Laramie crossed the North Platte; went by Fort Reno to Powder river, then to Bellfourche river. Here 75 hostile Indians appeared with a flag of truce. Mr. Story met them, took them by the hand and led them to the corral; kept all the other Indians out and corralled the stock. The Indians remained until near night and left without hostile demonstrations. The second morning the party were attacked by some 20 Indians at Dry Fork, on the Powder river, at or near the Barrel Springs. Mr. Story was riding at the head of the train when they heard the cry of "Indians" in the rear. He rode back through the timber and found the loose cattle and a half dozen teams running through the woods, surrounded by Indians, firing rapidly. He emptied two revolvers at them, causing a retreat. Wm. Petty was wounded by a bullet, George Overholt by two arrows, and a half dozen cattle were killed. The train was moved a half mile to camping grounds. After pitching camp they took the wounded men from the wagons, fearing Petty would die, and the arrows were drawn from Overholt's back by pincers. In the afternoon they traveled within 10 miles of Fort Reno. That night Thos. A. Thompson, one of the party, volunteered to go to Fort Reno after an ambulance to carry the wounded men to that place. He returned at one o'clock that night and the men were taken to the fort. During the night a Dutchman subject to fits died from the effects of the scare. Arriving at the fort the following day they opened a camp about quarter of a mile distant, and located the cattle a half mile from where they camped. About ten A. M. one of the herders announced that the other was killed and the cattle driven away. Upon hearing this Mr. Story immediately mounted a horse bare-back, strapped on two revolvers, and rode across Powder River and down near the cattle on the river side. He came across two men who joined him in the pursuit. As they went through the skirt of timber they saw three Indians who ran up to the main band, that was driving thirty to forty head of cattle. Mr. Story and the men pursued to within 200 yards, when they began to form so as to trap the pursuers. The latter wheeled and ran toward camp the Indians after them. After having gone about 200 yards, Mr. Story observed that the Indians were close to one of the men, and realized that he must protect him. While thus acting, he discovered the Indians had nearly surrounded him, but was relieved by the remainder of his company on foot. He then mounted twenty men and followed the Indians about fifteen miles. After a continuous fight of three or four hours, they returned to camp about midnight with all the cattle except three or four. He then moved to Fort C. F. Smith, on the Big Horn, where the cattle were stampeded about midnight, but were recovered the next day. Taking the old Bozeman road, crossed the Yellowstone and came to Gallatin Valley December 3, and camped where is now the site of Fort Ellis. A day later they moved to a cabin near Bozeman, and unloaded the goods. Mr. Story set his men at work building a house, while he went to Alder Gulch for his family. He merchandized during the winter of 1866–7 in Bozeman, and in the spring of 1867 removed his goods to Virginia City, where he sold nails at a dollar a pound, candles at 75 cents a pound, bacon at 50 cents a pound, and other things in proportion. On the last day of April, 1867, John M. Bozeman and Thos. Coover started from Bozeman for Fort C. F. Smith, and at the end of the first day arrived at Mr. Story's camp on the Yellowstone and stopped for the night. Coover fed his two horses while Bozeman allowed his to graze with others, and on going for them was driven back to camp by five Indians, who took the horses down the river. Boyer and another man mounted Coover's two horses and overtook the Indians some distance below where they had left the animals and went into the brush, taking only a pony with a lariat. The men brought the rest back to camp. The next morning Coover and Bozeman started on their journey across to the east side of the river, and, after having gone about twelve miles, picketed their horses near their camp, beside a small stream that came from the bluff, where Bozeman was killed, as related in the general history. They had built a fire and cooked dinner, when they saw five Blackfeet Indians coming up with the pony they had taken the night before. On manifesting a friendly disposition they upon invitation took dinner with the two men. While eating, Coover left his gun with Bozeman and went to the horses, about two rods away, and while there the Indians shot Bozeman through the breast, and fired at him, the ball grazing his shoulder. The Indians then retreated toward the river, while Coover hid in a bunch of cherry bushes until they returned, mounted the horses and rode away. Coover lost his weapons and horses, and on going to where Bozeman fell, found him dead, turned him over, took his watch, and left for Mr. Story's camp The next day he came to Bozeman and reported the facts as stated above. W. S. McKenzie, John Richards, Nelson Story and others went to where Bozeman fell, and buried him. In 1870 Capt. Camp removed the remains of Bozeman to the cemetery near Bozeman, where they now rest. In 1867 Mr. Story took a contract from the government to supply the Crow agency with 110,000 pounds of vegetables, to be delivered that fall at ten cents per pound, just after arriving at Bozeman from a trip to the Yellowstone in the fall of 1867. The following day he went to Hamilton and purchased 125 head of oxen, and the next day went to Virginia City and purchased fifteen wagons and fifty oxen. Returning the next day to Bozeman, he purchased 100,000 pounds of potatoes and 10,000 pounds of turnips, loaded them into wagons and delivered them at Fort C. F. Smith in just twenty-nine days after he had left there. In the spring of 1868 Mr. Story bought at Fort C. F. Smith about $100,000 worth of government goods for $10,000, ferried the Big Horn about June 1, and started for Bozeman, arriving there about July 4; then taking his wife he went in a buggy to Helena, arriving the 8th of July; renting a store he unloaded the train of goods. McKenzie & Richards having some forty wagons at Laramie, he ordered them up to Fort Smith, where they arrived about July 1, loaded the balance of the goods, and moved across the river the same day the "Military" evacuated the post. Shortly after the celebrated chief Red Cloud came in with his warriors and burned the post, crossed the Big Horn with some fifty of his warriors and followed up McKenzie & Richards' train, but did no further damage than stealing two mules which were tied to a wagon wheel. Red Cloud caused them to be returned. The train then moved on to Helena without any further accident, and unloaded the goods in the warehouse which Mr. Story was using as a store. Mr. Richards disposed of his entire interest in the goods, cattle and wagons, and returned to Fort Laramie, which was the last Mr. Story saw of him, as he was killed in a Sioux camp soon after. Mr. Story and McKenzie continued to sell goods until the spring of 1869, when a fire occurred in the assay office, by which time they had sold $35,000 worth. The remainder was destroyed by fire, aggregating a loss of about $40,000. Mr. Story then returned to Bozeman and built the dwelling in which he now resides. In December, 1869, he formed a partnership with L. M. Black, and merchandized on contracts with the government, furnishing supplies to the Crow Indians along the Yellowstone. They also had a trading post at the Crow agency and another in Bozeman. Mr. Story withdrew in about nine months, retaining only the real estate which he had invested in the firm, receiving interest on the same at four per cent per month until July, 1870, netting him $50,000. In March, 1871, he went to California, taking with him Thomas A. Thompson, going by way of Sacramento, Stockton and San Francisco, and finally stopping at Los Angeles for thirty days, visiting some of the old missions, where he purchased between 800 and 900 head of horses and started them for Montana in care of ten men. After traveling some fifty miles with the party toward Nevada, he left them in charge of Thompson, with instructions to travel by way of Lone Pine, Austin, Nev., Humboldt Wells, and raft Idaho river, up Snake river and up Pleasant Valley to Bozeman, while himself returned to Los Angeles, there taking coach for Santa Barbara, Cal., steamboat to San Francisco, rail to Cheyenne and coach to Bozeman. He had been home about two weeks when he received a telegram from Thompson announcing that the authorities of Nevada had retaxed the horses, notwithstanding receipts shown for charges paid at Los Angeles. At two o'clock in the night following receipt of telegram Mr.

Story left for Virginia City, in a buggy, arriving there at 5 P. M. next day; soon after took a coach, and in three days reached a train at Corinne, which carried him to Battle Mountain, Nev., where he took a coach early in the morning, and about noon that day found his herd at Austin. A portion of the horses were retained for about $400 taxes, which Mr Story was unprepared to pay in full. He came with his horses to Humboldt Wells and returned home via the same route he had gone. Thompson brought the horses to Bozeman. November 1, 1872, Mr Story purchased the Crow agency store of L. M. Black for $32,000, Black agreeing not to interfere with said trade until a term of eight months had expired, binding himself in a sum of $10,000. Story conducted the business until 1874, when he sold to his brother Elias. In 1875 the new Crow agency was built, for which Mr. Story furnished teams by the day. The same spring the Crow agency was moved to Stillwater, Mr. Story furnishing the teams to do the hauling, also building the new agency. In July, 1875, while traveling down the Stillwater with five teams, he was attacked by five Indians, but without serious results, and upon his arrival learned that the Indians had attacked the agency and driven off the cattle. On July 5, some 50 head of stock were taken from the corral by the Indians, during the night, eighteen of which number belonged to Mr. Story, who the next day, with a dozen other men, followed the Indian trail about 20 miles and recovered a portion of the cattle. At this time Mr. Story's team was at the mountains for lumber, so far away they were compelled to camp over night. In the early morning the night herders were attacked and Jas. Hilderbrandt was killed, after which the train returned. This death created a scare among the employes, and no one would venture outside. Work was suspended in consequence, so far as procuring material was concerned. During this time Mr. Story had returned to Bozeman, and after hearing of the trouble and fear manifested, he returned and took charge of his own train, hauled timber for two weeks, and completed the agency in the fall of 1875, without further trouble. On April 3, 1876, he started east with his family, consisting of wife and two children, to visit the Centennial and eastern cities; went by coach to Logan, Utah; thence by narrow gauge to Ogden, and U. P. R. R. to Omaha; thence via Chicago to New York, stopping at the Gilsey house for a few weeks. They then went to Washington, stopping at Willard's hotel; thence to Philadelphia on July 3, where they stopped only a few days, owing to hot weather. They went to West Virginia, where they remained most of the summer, and in the fall returned to Washington, kept house in the Pierce place until March 1877, returning to Bozeman April 12. Mr. Story's brothers came from Meigs Co., O., in the spring of 1877, on a prospecting tour, and in company with Chas. Rich and brothers he visited the National Park, having John Work for a guide. They went first to the Mammoth Hot Springs; thence to Clark's Fork mines, where a smelter was being erected, in which Mr. Story was interested, remained three days examining the mines; then returned to the park, visiting the falls at Yellowstone lake; then to Lower Fire Hole Basin; the following day went to the Upper Geyser Basin; stayed one day there, then started back for Bozeman by way of Mammoth Springs down the Yellowstone. As they passed through the lower basin between 10 and 11 A. M., they were informed the Nez Perces Indians, who had a fight on the Big Hole with Gen. Gibbons, were there in camp some three miles below on the stream, and passing through that basin a party of them took two horses belonging to an old man whom they captured late in the day, and used him as a guide through the mountains. Story and his party passed on through the basin without stopping, and camped some 20 miles toward the Mammoth Springs that night. This same day Indians came into the lower basin and captured a party consisting of Mr. Cowan, his wife and her sister and about a dozen others. Cowan was shot and left for dead, some others were wounded, and a few escaped in the thick brush. The two women were held as captives. The Indians being closely pursued by Gen. Howard, moved forward as rapidly as possible. They went to Yellowstone Falls and captured a party, killing one and wounding several others. One man who was wounded, a Mr. Kenck, stopped at the Springs, was followed and killed three days afterward, because of his aversion to traveling with a Negro. On the approach of the Indians, the Negro climbed a tree, and was not discovered by them. The Nez Perces went on by the Clark's Fork mines, crossed the Yellowstone, went up the Cañon creek through Judith Basin, crossed the Missouri river, and were captured near Bear Paw mountains by Gen. Miles, who took them through Kansas to the Indian Nation. Their leader was Chief Joseph. Mr. Story and party arrived at Bozeman without any further casualties, having experienced one of the narrowest escapes. On November 18, 1878, he opened his present bank in Bozeman in company with L. S. Willson, and continued the firm until 1880, since which time he has carried on the business in his own name with a capital of $150,000. The net profits of the bank to Mr. Story for the year 1882 were $26,000. From the time of Mr. Story's arrival in Bozeman in 1866, with a herd of cattle, he has been engaged in raising cattle, owning at the present time 10,000 head. The stock was kept in the Yellowstone district in charge of Thos A. Thompson until the time of his death, July 18, 1879. He was drowned while attempting to cross the Yellowstone with a band of cattle, near the mouth of the Sweet Grass, in company with one Gage, who was also drowned. Thompson's body was found by Mr. A. Harrison and brought to Bozeman. He was buried by Mr. Story in his own burying ground, and a handsome monument with the following inscription marks the spot:—

"I wish some worthier pen than mine had writ this song, that is due to worth ruthlessly torn and robbed from the earth, but,

"As on the air no note is heard
But the lowing kine in the restless herd,
What can I do, dear friend, but sing
This song of woe with its wailing ring?
Thou shalt not go to the realms of day
Without receiving a parting lay.
Brave heart, safe across the waters wild,
Again did return for the widow's child,
Fanning anew the turbulent wave,
With a voice to cheer and a hand to save;
In thy endeavor to save a friend
Thy useful life came to an end.
If thou hadst been in Zulu land
And menaced with death by a savage band,
The youthful Prince had not died alone
For thou wouldst never from friend have flown.
March on, brave soul, so good and true,
To the blessed hills with crystal dew,
For he who has done his duty here
On the Golden Shore hath naught to fear."

Thompson had been employed in gathering beef steers, there being a few head on the opposite side. He had crossed to drive them over, and in returning lost his life as above stated. He had been in Mr. Story's employ 13 years, and was a man in whom that gentleman had the greatest confidence, both for integrity and bravery. Mr. Story owns about 1,200 acres of land in and around Bozeman, his real estate in town renting for about $1,000 per month. He has erected many buildings—residences and business blocks—and in 1872 he built a flouring mill, the capacity of which is 150 bbls. a day. On September 28, 1862, he was married to Miss Helen Trent, of Platte Co., Mo. She was born in Leavenworth Co., Kan., and has borne him six children, of whom three are living. Mrs. Story's parents came from Kentucky to Kansas at an early day, and in the latter state she received her education. Mr. Story is a true specimen of a self-made man. By his industry and executive ability he has amassed a handsome fortune, and by kindness and generosity has endeared himself to the community in which he lives.

I. STRASBURGER, Bozeman, was born in Russian Poland, in 1839. He lived at his native place, at school constantly after he was six years of age, until he was 15, when he left his home and went to Strasburg, Prussia, where he was clerk in a dry goods house for three years. In 1857 he came to the United States, and for two years peddled notions from New York to Cincinnati and St. Louis. In 1859 he went to Denver, Col., clerked for a year, and then opened a store of his own. Until 1863 he was located at this place and Central City, Col., in the dry goods business. In 1863, when Alder gulch was discovered, he went to Virginia City with a stock, and started a store in a tent. He remained in business at this place till 1882, then moved to Bozeman. In 1867 he married Miss Rachel Cohen, of Virginia City, and all of the "old timers" in that section partook of the celebration. Mr. Strasburger is a Freemason; he has a residence in Bozeman, where his wife and five children reside.

BENJAMIN STRICKLAND, Livingston, son of David and Betsy Strickland, was born in New York, April 5, 1832. Leaving that state in 1852 he located at Stevens Point, Wisconsin, where he resided four years. He subsequently enlisted in the 1st Minnesota Mounted Rangers, and was placed in the Northwestern Division under Gen. Pope, to operate against the Sioux Indians in 1863. He was made Sergeant in Company H, commanded by Captain Reuben. After the close of the campaign he accompanied Stafford's train to Montana, arriving in Emigrant gulch August 25, 1864. For seven or eight years succeeding his arrival in the Territory he was engaged at mining in different localities, making Emigrant his headquarters. In 1873 he purchased and settled upon his present ranch on the west side of the Yellowstone, then the only one occupied along this portion of that river. The farm now comprises 500 acres of land, in good condition and well improved, and the owner has 600 cattle on the range. In 1868 Mr Strickland was married to Miss N. J. Dailey, daughter of Ebenezer D. Dailey, of the Upper Yellowstone. They have six children: Catharine, John, Franklin, Millie, Ebb, and Samuel, ranging from fifteen years of age to infancy. The first school house in this portion of the Yellowstone valley was built on Mr. Strickland's place, in 1878, and Joseph Ballinger taught the first school in it during the following winter. Religious meetings have since been occasionally held at the same place, the first sermon delivered here having been preached in the fall of 1881, by Rev. Mr. Comfort. Rev. E. J Stanley, in 1873, preached the first sermon heard on this river. For two or three years after Mr. Strickland settled on this ranch the Indians were very troublesome, and people were killed all around him. Settlers did not dare to venture out without their guns.

A. W. TANNER, Bozeman, was born near LeRoy, N. Y., in 1837. At the age of seven he moved with his parents to Paw Paw, Mich. About four years later he entered the cash store of H. L. Dickinson at Three Rivers, Mich., thence returned to Paw Paw, clerked for C. M. Morrill, W. R. Hawkins, O. P. Gorton and J. M. Longwell & Co., then for the firm of E. Smith & Co., another cash store, remaining with Smith over five years. Then with the assistance of his employer and E. O. Briggs he started in the wholesale Yankee notion business and traveled in Michigan and Indiana; made money fast, but owing to the war sold out and came to Montana in the spring of 1864, joined Capt. Stafford's train and came the Bridger route to Emigrant Gulch, and there located a placer mining claim August 24, 1864. From Gray Bull to Emigrant he used an ox for a saddle animal. The following October he located a ranch just above the present townsite of Bozeman; left this and moved down the valley to west Gallatin in January on account of snow; stayed there until 1869; then sold all but his land, bought 160 acres more and moved back to Paw Paw and took a position as assistant cashier in the First National Bank. The next spring (1870) he moved back, satisfied there was no place like Montana; located and got title to 160 acres more land, making the total of 480 acres which he now owns. He then bought out the stock of goods belonging to C. W. Hoffman and started a strictly cash store; made money, and in 1872 sold out to Willson & Rich, agreeing not to go into business for five years. From 1872 to 1880 he loaned money and invested in mines. With his wife he now owns 174 75-100 acres, which is over five miles in length and is a splendid investment. They invested in this mine a little over $20,000. Mrs. Tanner was Miss Cynthia E. Stanley, born near Kalamazoo, Mich. Mr. Tanner married her in 1858, and drew a prize of great value, as time has proved. In 1880 he again started a cash store in Bozeman, and in 1882 sold out to D. A. Kughen, and since that time has loaned money, and looked after the mines, ranches, etc. While in the Yankee notion business he represented the firms of C. H. Biggs & Co., 119 Lake street, Chicago, dealers in cutlery; Tucker & Brown, 137 Clark street, Chicago, cigars and tobaccos. In 1884 Mr. and Mrs. Tanner again opened a cash store, to which they give their personal attention. Their business is conducted on a most complete plan. Mr. Tanner is a member of the Masonic Order.

J. H. TAYOR, P. O. Bozeman, the son of James and Lorena Taylor, was born in the town of Madrid, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., November 20, 1834. He received a good common school education; engaged in farming in that county, and was also a teacher of music, until 1866, when he came to Montana and settled in Bozeman, being first employed as clerk with the firm of Chas. Rich & Co. In 1879 he was appointed census enumerator, doing that work, and as assistant United States marshal, during a period of six months, and was also deputy revenue collector under Mr. Watkins of this district. Was appointed postmaster at Bozeman in the fall of 1879, which office he held until April 15, 1883. He is now engaged in selling books, stationery and fancy goods. Mr. Taylor has been a member of the Prysbyterian church since about 1864, and is also a member of the Order of United Workmen at Bozeman. He was married to Agnes G. Gage November 3, 1876. One child was born, which was named James Gardner, but died on the 7th day of May, 1882. His wife also died March 28, 1881. Mr. Taylor was married to Miss Nettie Ray, his present wife, on the 21st day of June, 1882. During a trip back to the states in the fall of 1867, while descending the Yellowstone in boats, the party of which Mr. Taylor was a member, was fiercely attacked by the Indians, but succeeded in repelling their assailants, with the loss of but one man.

GEORGE D. THOMAS, Thomasville, son of Col. John and Isabella (Kinney) Thomas, early settlers of St. Clair Co., Ill., was born in St. Clair county, July 26, 1834; attended school there, and in 1855 married Miss Lucy A., sixth daughter of William and Sarah Alexander, of Shiloh, Ill. In 1856 he settled on a farm near Shiloh, and afterward purchased the Alexander homestead farm from the heirs. In 1861 he organized the 1st Home Guards of Shiloh, of which command he was elected captain. Owing, however, to the quota of Illinois being full, the command was not accepted. In August, 1861, he enlisted in Company A of the Fremont Guards, with which he served until December of that year. Early in 1862 he was appointed Lieutenant in the United States special service for the protection of emigrants, and in May reported to Captain Madorem at Omaha, Neb.; was appointed to take charge of the camp there, organized the mounted guards, and escorted the emigrants in safety to Walla Walla, W. T. There the expedition ended, the men were paid off, and Mr. Thomas set forward on his return trip via Panama, landing in New York city December 27, 1862, and at his home in Illinois early in January, 1863. In the spring of 1864 he equipped six ox teams, which he loaded with provisions, proceeded to Omaha, and on June 1, set forth with his family—his wife and two boys—on the journey across the plains, arrived in Montana in October, and on the 10th of that month settled one and one half mile north of the present village of Hamilton. He resided at that point until October, 1871, when he moved to Gallatin City to take charge of the Madison Mills, which he purchased. In 1872 he introduced new machinery, and manufactured a new grade of flour, which won for itself $1 per 100 lbs. over any flour then manufactured in the territory. In 1874 he introduced the first purifier into Montana; a year later he introduced the first Emery Buhr dresser, and in 1878 erected a new mill building on Ross Creek (eleven miles north of Bozeman, now known as the Empire Mills), which was opened February 10, 1879. Here the brands known as the Belle of Montana and the White Rose are manufactured,—the same flour which drove out imported flour in 1881. Mr. Thomas' family comprises his wife and six children,—the eldest daughter, Annie Julia, having died in Illinois in 1863. Samuel Homer and George Edgar were born in Illinois; Lillian, Eugenia, James F., Rosa A. and Sarah I., born in Montana, are residents of the territory. Homer Thomas has 160 acres devoted to agriculture, while George E., now aged 21, is engaged in stock-raising. William K. Thomas, his son, Charles K. and one employe, while en route to join his brother, G. D. Thomas, in 1866, were killed by Indians at the Bozeman Road crossing of the Yellowstone August 25 that year. Their bodies were found by Mr. Langworthy, and interred in one grave.

HOMER THOMAS, of Homer, Thomas & Co., P. O. Livingston, was born at Belleville, Ill., July 23, 1857. In 1864 he came to Montana with his parents and located in Gallatin valley, below Hamilton. He assisted his father herding cattle on the ranch for eight years. In 1878 he located a ranch near Spring Hill. His father built flouring mills at Madison and Spring Hill, and Mr. Thomas had charge of the Madison Mill as manager for a period of seven years. October 7, 1883, he removed to Livingston and engaged in the flour and feed business. Most of this is sold by bulk in job lots, wholesaling being a specialty. Since starting his store, Mr. Thomas has had a marked increase in trade, all owing to his close attention to business.

RUFUS THOMPSON, P. O. Bozeman, was born in Cheshire Co., New Hampshire, January 16, 1830, and remained there until 1859, when he went to Colorado, during the time of the Pike's Peak stampede, remaining until 1862, when he came to Montana. While in Colorado he followed mining, buying a claim for $50, and realizing from the same sixty pounds of clean dust within three months. July 9, 1862, he arrived at Bannack, M. T., bringing Col. Wood's family with him. Hearing of Alder Gulch, he went there and mined two seasons, with varying success, coming to the Gallatin valley and locating on his present ranch in December, 1863. This place he has always considered his home. In 1864 he sold his claim at Alder Gulch, and intended wintering on his ranch; but the "Last Chance Stampede" broke out, and he went there and secured a claim called Grizzly Gulch, and worked it during the season of 1868. While mining at that place, he made the acquaintance of a Mr. McDonald, and married one of his daughters, moving to his ranch in the Gallatin valley, where he has since resided, and is now engaged in farming and stock raising. In April, 1869, he took his family on a summer's trip to Puget's Sound; but not liking that country, returned in the fall to the Gallatin, where he has since remained. Mr. Thompson was elected justice of the peace in 1873, and served four years. His home ranch consists of 320 acres of fine oats and hay ground, and there is also 160 acres of wheat land on Ross creek. Mr. Thompson's wife's name was Mary McDonald, and they were married November 7, 1865, at "Last Chance," or what is now the city of Helena. They have thirteen children, named Franklin, Dora, Clara, Edward, Floy, May, Walter, Warren, Burton, Frederic, Otis, Charles and Rufus.

JOHN J. TOMLINSON, Salesville, son of Jesse and Hannah Tomlinson, was born March 1, 1812, one mile from Fort Cumberland, Allegheny Co., Md. He was there educated at district school; he studied surveying and civil engineering also at a select school for eight months. While with his father he was engaged in farming and mill operating. He built himself a mill in 1833, near his house, and ran it one year, after which he sold out and removed to Knox Co., O. There he worked as millwright for Joseph McKenny for about one month, and thence in 1835 went to Fort Wayne, Ind. From there he continued to travel northwest until he arrived in Michigan, journeying on horseback to Michigan City, thence by the lakeshore to Chicago. Passing through Chicago via Joliet, he pushed onward to Lafayette, Tippecanoe Co., Ind., thence to Indianapolis, thence he returned to his home at Fort Cumberland, where he remained during the winter of 1836. In 1838 he engaged in the foundry and machine business in Indianapolis, Ind., but leaving that place for Iowa, he made a trip in the first boat of the season up the Mississippi. The following week he was elected County Surveyor in Cedar Co., Ia. While thus engaged he laid out the town of Tipton (county seat of Cedar county), also the town of Rochester. In the meantime built himself two mills and repaired several, also built a wool-carding mill, with sawmill attached. In the spring of 1844 he sold out and went to Jackson county, on the Maquoketa river, where he secured a location and laid out the town of Canton. He built at that place a flouring mill with two run of buhrs, and in the summer of 1844 also laid in a stock of about $4,000 worth of dry goods, groceries, etc. He started the first wool-carding mill at Canton and ran it successfully one season. He continued the woolen mill business, increasing it from time to time, and also at the same time built a lumber manufacturing establishment, which furnished employment for about thirty men. Both the woolen and flouring mills were burned in 1860, but Mr. Tomlinson rebuilt the flouring mill that same year, and operated it until the fall of 1864. In the meantime he lost money by disposing of goods on credit to the amount of $20,000. He at one time owned 1,700 acres of land around Canton, from which place he removed to Emigrant Gulch, M. T., in 1864. There he built a lumber mill, hence the name of the creek that runs through there, "Mill creek." He also built boats for transporting emigrants down the Yellowstone river, the first that ever passed down that stream (in spring of 1865). He paid $60 a keg for nails to build them with. He continued to run the mill until the fall of 1867, and thence went to Bozeman on account of the hostility of the Indians, during the time of the Indian war. In the winter of 1867 he worked for Coover & McAdow as millwright, repairing their mills. In the following March Mr. Tomlinson came to Salesville, then only known as the "Upper West Gallatin." He bought a right of occupation from J. W. Sales for $500, and built a lath and shingle mill, which he operated until July, 1871, when he sold it to McKenzie for 250,000 feet of lumber. After this he built the valley flouring mill, purchasing the machinery in Chicago and paying for it in advance; but unfortunately the boat in which it was shipped was wrecked and he lost it. He then borrowed $2,000, bought more machinery, and soon had the mill running, keeping it in operation until 1879. He was taken sick two years previously and afterward sold out to Nelson Story. He then devoted himself to farming and the general interests of the neighborhood. Among other things he has made the plans of Salesville, one of which he recorded July 13, 1883. Mr. Tomlinson was married July 2, 1863, to Margaret E. House, daughter of Peter and Nancy House. Mrs. Tomlinson was born August 12, 1834, at Theresa, Jefferson Co., N. Y. At the age of 17 years she went to Rockford, Ill., and there served an apprenticeship at tailoring and dressmaking until 1854. She afterward removed to Canton, Ia., where she remained with a married sister nine years, until her marriage in 1863. She attended a select school in 1860–62 in Iowa, and previous to that a district school in New York. Mrs. Tomlinson was the first lady who arrived at Emigrant Gulch (in 1864). Mr. and Mrs. Tomlinson have a family of four children: Philo H., Harry Comly, John J., Amy Annie. Philo, the eldest, was born April 6, 1865, and Annie, the youngest, April 6, 1872.

E. S. TOPPING, Bozeman, author of the Chronicles of the Yellowstone, was born in Long Island, N. Y., May 15, 1844. He received his education in the schools of the district until 1856, when he went to sea in the ocean merchant service, and in 1867 sailed the upper lakes. In 1868 he contracted to get out ties for the Utah Division of the Union Pacific; succeeded in the enterprise, and in the winter of 1868 took an interest in the quartz and placer mines round Atlantic City, Wy. During the three succeeding years he was engaged in all those stirring skirmishes with the Arrapahoes, of Wyoming, coming out unscathed. In the spring of 1871 he arrived at the Clarke's Fork mines, then claiming the attention of miners, but remained there only a short time. In 1872 he discovered the Norris Geyser Basin, and made a general exploration of the Yellowstone Park. In 1874 he placed an 8-ton yacht on the lake, the vessel being made from sugar pine, which he got out and sawed with a whip-saw. This was the first boat on the lake. He left the park with specimens of minerals, petrifactions, fosails, etc., in the fall of 1875, en route to the Exposition. He reached Fort Pease, Mont., in November of that year, found the weather too severe to push forward; left his boat there and proceeded with a small company of men up the Big Horn and had a severe battle with the Uncpapa Sioux, three miles above the mouth of the river, December 16, 1875, and escaped to Fort Pease during the night. In March, 1876, the refugees at the fort, including Mr. Topping, were accompanied by part of the Second U. S. Cavalry, under General Gibbons, to the Yellowstone settlements, came to Bozeman, and thence proceeded to the Black Hills. In the winter of 1876 he was on service with General Crook, and aided in the capture of the Dull Knife band of Cheyennes, in December, 1876. Subsequently he was engaged in mining transactions and sheep trading in the Black Hills, continuing there until April, 1880, when he went to Mandan, purchased lands, and had a wood contract on the Northern Pacific railroad. In the spring of 1882 he returned to Bozeman, had the position of foreman in the park during the summer of that year, began work on the Chronicles of the Yellowstone, the first notes of which were burned-up in a camp near the Mammoth Hot Springs. He resumed work in March, 1883, and has contributed a series of interesting articles to the Bozeman Chronicle, which were printed in book form.

E. M. TOWER, P. O. Livingston, one of the pioneers of 1835, was born in Sandusky, O., in 1833. He was brought up at Cleveland; went to Colorado in 1863; made headquarters at Denver, where he was engaged in various speculations till 1865; then came to Montana and spent several months in prospecting; removed to Utah and was contracting on the Union Pacific railway. In 1869 he joined Prof. Hayden's party engaged in a geological survey of Wyoming, Montana and the National Park, and was with it four months, visiting the most interesting points in this region. He had a commission house at Ogden and was back and forth between Ogden and Helena, shipping into this territory. In 1874–5 he was connected with the Red Cloud Indian Agency. In the latter year he conducted a delegation of sixtepn Ogallalla and Brule Sioux Indians to Washington, D. C., and in the following year went to the Black Hills, where he was engaged in mining till 1880. He then came to Miles City, and thence to Livingston, in October, 1882.

W. H. TRACY, wholesale dealer in liquors, grain and feed, agricultural implements, etc., Bozeman.—The pioneers of Montana, almost without exception, passed a life similar in many respects to that of their hardy ancestors in the mountains of Virginia, Pennsylvania and other eastern and southeastern states. The desire to rapidly accumulate wealth led most of them into the mines of this region, and in connection with their experience as miners they met with hardships and danger from many sources. William H. Tracy, of whom this sketch is written, is a representative pioneer of the region now his home. He was born in Tompkins Co., New York, May 3, 1838, and is the son of Daniel Tracy, an early settler of that county, where he raised a family of one son and two daughters. Daniel Tracy was by occupation a harness and saddle maker. William, at the age of eighteen years, located at Elmira, N. Y., and acquired the machinist's trade. Removing to Rockford, Ill., he resided there until 1860. The stories related of the wonderful success of gold-seekers in the far west induced him to turn his footsteps toward the land of the occident, and for two years he sought fickle fortune in the mines of Colorado. Thinking to meet with better success in other fields, he joined a party going to Montana, and arriving in the since famed Gallatin valley, established a town. This he soon abandoned, and took up land, a portion of which is now included in the city of Bozeman. Upon this property he began farming in 1865, and since then his time has been actively occupied in grain dealing, merchandising, freighting, etc. In the days of freighting, before the puff of the locomotive and the rumble of heavy trains of cars echoed through the mountain passes, he transported goods into the Territory from Corinne and other shipping points. Bozeman has been his place of residence since 1864. At Gallatin City, in the spring of 1863, Mr. Tracy suffered an attack from the Indians, who carried off all his effects; but while the savages were holding council, he escaped under cover of the timber. At another time he lost his entire possessions while mining at Bevins Gulch. He has since greatly prospered, however, and is the present possessor of a large amount of real estate in Bozeman, besides a 360-acre ranch a mile and a half below town, on which he burns brick. The product of his kilns in 1882 was three hundred and fifty thousand, and a round million in 1883. He also owns a 150-acre ranch above the city. Mr. Tracy has seen Bozeman emerge, in by no means slow degrees, from a savage wilderness to its present condition of prominence, influence and beauty, and his original log cabin has been replaced by the elegant residence, built in 1882, which he now occupies, at the corner of Mendenhall and Tracy streets. He has ever taken an active interest in the city's advancement, and has erected many good buildings, besides making other substantial improvements. In April, 1868, Mr. Tracy married Miss Sarah Besseg, a native of Illinois, and they have two living children—Albert C. and Frank S.—both born at Bozeman.

R. P. VIVION, Bozeman, member from Gallatin county of the constitutional convention of 1884, was born in Howard Co., Mo.; removed at an early age to Texas, and thence to Mexico, where he remained until 1860. He came to Montana in 1864; was a member of the two legislative assemblies of 1872 and 1877; was four years district attorney for the second judicial district; is a lawyer, and one of the best-known pioneers of the Territory. (Vide Gen. History.)

J. M. WATERS, physician and surgeon, Bozeman, is a son of John M. and Margaret S. Waters, and was born in Keokuk Co., Ia., October 11, 1842. His parents removed to Illinois in 1844 and settled in Menard county. He attended school there and received his education in that state; afterward studied medicine and graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1868. He practiced medicine at Gibson, Ford Co., Ill., but on account of his health came west to the mountains. In April, 1882, he settled in Bozeman and since then has successfully practiced his profession here. Dr. Waters has been connected with medical societies, and has served as examining physician for different corporations and organizations. He was united in marriage May 7, 1878, with Miss Emma J. Bierce, of Nevada, Berlin Co., Mo. They have three children: Herman B., Foley L. and Mary.

A. D. WEAVER, P. O. Central Park, was born in the State of Virginia March 1, 1841; was educated in the common schools of Kentucky, and at the age of 19 learned the carpenter's trade. He joined the Confederate General Morgan's forces in 1863 and remained with him one year. He came to Montana in 1864, and after arriving bought more teams and followed freighting, locating his present home in November, 1864. Mr. Weaver was engaged in freighting quite extensively until 1868, when he sold his teams and directed his attention to farming and stock-raising. January 5, 1871, he married Miss Eliza Stateler, daughter of Rev. L. B. Stateler, of Montana. Their children are: Rosetta Virginia, born October 14, 1872; L. B. Weaver, July 5, 1874; Nettie Alice, July 22, 1876. Mr. Weaver owns 500 acres of farming and meadow land, and raises horses and cattle.

JACOB B. WEAVER, P. O. Central Park, was born July 30, 1847, at Bonsacks, Botetourt Co., Va.; son of John and Eliza Weaver, farmers of same place. He emigrated to Montana July 2, 1866, and settled between East and West Gallatin, in a locality known as the swamp. He worked the first year for his brother; bought the present ranch as a squatter's right, and improved and fenced the same. Mr. Weaver was married March 19, 1874, to Missouri McDonald, of Iowa, the daughter of John E. and Lucy McDonald. They have four children, born on the present ranch, named: Jessie May, born April 14, 1879; Mary Bell, born June 6, 1880; Charles Edward, born November 22, 1881; Baby, born January 27, 1883. Upon his arrival in the territory Mr. Weaver had a pony and five dollars in money, and he now has a ranch, well fenced, consisting of 720 acres, 80 acres under cultivation for grain, and 250 of hay land, the balance under the timber cultivation. He also has 31 head of horses, and about 60 head of cattle, two sulky plows, self-binding reaper and mowers, and rakes sufficient to farm in a first class manner.

M. B. WETZSTEIN, father of M. and A. Wetzstein, was born in Germany; came to America in September, 1849; passed nine months in Cincinnati, O., and then located at Carrollton, Mo. He resided in Missouri until 1861, when he returned to Cincinnati. He came to Livingston in October, 1883. Mentor Wetzstein was born in Carrollton, Mo., and was educated in Cincinnati, O. He was the first of his family to locate at Livingston, and is one of the most enterprising citizens of this busy little city. Adolph Wetzstein, born at Cincinnati, came to Livingston with his father, and is now among the mine-owners in the Clarke's Fork district. Their wholesale and retail liquor and cigar store was opened in July, 1883, by Mentor Wetzstein, and was among the very first business houses of this place. He carries an average stock of from $5,000 to $10,000 value. This was the first store occupied on Park street below Main. He has invested large means to construct one of the finest business rooms in Montana.

C. F. WHITE, P. O. Livingston, was born at Oswego, N. Y., December 9, 1852. He went to California in 1869, engaged in mining; kept saloon there and in Nevada and Arizona, following this for an occupation until 1877. He then came to Montana, worked a ranch near Miles city, and engaged in the stock business. In September, 1882, Mr. White removed to Livingston and built a cabin in the old town, which was among the first in the place. He formed a partnership with one Gaird, and opened a saloon, of which he became sole proprietor in March, 1883. In October following he removed to his present location on Main street. Besides running a saloon he is also the originator of the first ice company established at Livingston, which supplied the town. Mr. White was married May 20, 1881, to Miss Celia Wright, of Kansas.

ISAAC WILLIAMS, P. O. Salesville, son of Elias and Mary Williams, was born April 11, 1843, in Sangamon Co., Ill. Remaining there until the fall of 1859, he removed to Bourbon Co., Kan., and was engaged in farming both in Illinois and Kansas. He was educated in Sangamon county schools. He was in the government employ at Fort Scott, teaming in 1862-63, and was taken prisoner by Livingston's men. Mr. Williams left Kansas in 1866 and settled in Jasper Co., S. W. Mo.; bought land in Barton county and there engaged in farming and cutting shingles until 1876, when he removed to Pony, Madison county. Removed to Gallatin Valley in 1877, and settled on the present homestead. He has 600 acres of land, partly under fence. This is the highest farm in the valley, and produces on the average, of oats, 50 bushels per acre; wheat, about 30 bushels. Mr. Williams raised 27½ bushels of wheat to the acre without irrigation; with irrigation, 50 bushels. He says barley will do well here. He raises an average of 200 bushels of potatoes to the acre. Owns seven head of horses. His parents are living with him at present. His father was born in 1802 and his mother is about 73 years of age. Mr. Williams is a member of the Masonic society.

ROBERT WILLS, P. O. Bozeman, was born in Green Co., Penn., December 12, 1821. At the age of 24 he established a tan-yard in Green Co., Ill., which he operated until he emigrated to California in the year 1850. While in California he followed the vocation of a miner for seven years. In 1857 he returned to Illinois and worked at the harness-maker's trade. In 1861 he enlisted in the 3d Missouri volunteers and was made lieutenant. His health failed and he was honorably discharged. He returned to Illinois and in 1864 came to Montana, located in Gallatin Valley and followed farming for a number of years. He is now a stock grower.

DAVIS WILLSON, Bozeman, was born in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., in 1841. Attended school and worked on a farm until 16 years old; then entered a printing office in St. Lawrence county for one year, and was also a member of a brass band. On account of sickness he was compelled to relinquish work for a year and was for the same length of time employed in the post office at St. Lawrence. Being still ailing, he went to California in 1859 to recover his health, and remained eighteen months, part of the time with his uncle and in a hotel. Returning home in June, 1861, he attended the St. Lawrence university for three years, and one year at Oberlin, O. After leaving Oberlin he went to Cleveland and was employed on the Cleveland Blade, but not earning enough to pay his board he went to Ashtabula, O., remaining two and a half months and struggling hard to keep ahead, setting type on the Telegraph. Here his father sent him a check enabling him to go back to Oberlin and attend school. Soon afterward his brother, Gen. Willson, procured him a position as clerk in the commissariat department at Washington, which he filled until the winter of 1864. He then went into the army and remained until the surrender at Appomattox. Returning home he was employed in a dry goods store for seven months, and in 1866 removed to Montana, arriving in Bozeman September 2, where he was the first school teacher, and engaging as bookkeeper for Rich & Willson, general merchandise. During winters he taught school until 1869, and was then appointed receiver of goods for Wilcox & Doty, afterward with Nelson Story. He was then appointed deputy collector of internal revenue, and served in that capacity until the fall of 1871, when he engaged in business with Rich & Willson in a general store, and continued for seven years. In the meantime he went home on account of his father's death, and remained two years. In 1876 he was appointed register of the land office, which position he holds at present. In 1877 he closed his business with Rich & Willson. He acted as agent for Gillmore & Saulbury's stage and express lines, also agent for the Northern Pacific railroad. He has been interested in various stock ranches. Mr. Willson married Miss Martha A. Van Allen, of Canton, and they have one child, Frank G. Willson.

P. P. WORSHAM, Bozeman, was born at Troy, Lincoln Co., Mo., October 15, 1837. He lived with his parents and attended the district school until 15 years of age; then attended Jones college for two years; after which he was a clerk in different dry goods stores until 1861, when he entered in Gen. Price's army. In the fall of 1862 he was captured by the federals, but was paroled four months afterward, and was again a clerk till 1865, at which time he came to Montana and worked in the Alder gulch mines. Next spring he bought ox teams and freighted to the three forks of the Missouri. Late in the next fall he went on the Sun river stampede, and suffered greatly from cold and exposure, several of the party freezing to death. The next year was spent in prospecting in different parts of the territory. His experience was rough, indeed, having been set afoot once by the Blackfeet Indians, and at another time lived six days on fish. The next year he went to Salmon river diggings, but not liking the country went again on the search for new gold fields. In the spring of 1868 he went to Emigrant gulch, on the Yellowstone, and built the first flume ever used in that gulch. Thirty days after the ground was opened he and his comrades took out $6,000 in gold; then the pay "playing out" they abandoned the claim. During the next spring and summer Mr. Worsham hunted for Fort Ellis, and in the fall joined the Cedar Creek stampede, which was a failure. He continued to prospect till the fall of 1872, when he started in the liquor business at Bozeman. In 1874 he sold out and went to Colorado, but came back to Bozeman the ensuing year. Soon after his return he married Mrs. Butler, of the latter place, and entered again into the liquor business, at which place and occupation he has since remained.

F. W. WRIGHT, Livingston, was born at Buffalo, N. Y., March 4, 1844. Leaving school at the age of seventeen, he enlisted in 1861 in the Twenty-first New York Infantry. After serving two years he re enlisted in the Sixteenth New York Cavalry, with which command he served until the close of the war. Obtaining his discharge at Washington City, he went to the oil regions of Pennsylvania, and carried on a general contracting business for three years. He then removed to Sioux Station, Iowa, where he was employed as engineer in a saw mill for two years. Receiving an appointment as superintendent of the farm at Cheyenne river, he left for that point in 1870 and remained seven years. During that time he was instructing the Indians in farming. Resigning his position in 1877, he engaged in the drug business with Dr. Clark, at Northfield, Minn. One year later Dr. Clark sold out, and Mr. Wright carried on the business alone for two years. August 25, 1882, he came to Montana looking for a suitable location, and selecting Livingston, he returned east, purchased a stock of drugs and general merchandise, and located at what is known as the Old Town. In the spring of 1883 he formed a partnership with H. S. Bartlett, and removed the store to Main street. In December, 1883, Mr. Wright sold his interest in business to Dr. Campbell, having on the 13th of November, 1882, been appointed Postmaster of Livingston. He built the postoffice in the rear of the store, and opened it December 29, 1882. Mr. Wright was married to Miss Frances M. Bartlett, of Buffalo, in 1875.

GEORGE H. WRIGHT, Livingston, of the firm of Wright & Hendry, publishers and proprietors of the Daily Enterprise and National Park Pioneer, of Livingston, was born in Walworth Co., Wis., June 10, 1858. He learned the printers' trade in New Hampton, Ia., on the Tribune, beginning in 1871 and continuing in that office ten years. He next worked in the office of the Minnesota Tribune at Minneapolis till the summer of 1882, when he came to Montana, and July 20, of that year, purchased an interest in the Billings Herald, which he sold in May, 1883, came to Livingston, and formed the existing partnership with Mr. Hendry in the Enterprise and Pioneer.

H. J. WRIGHT, P. O. Livingston, stock-grower, ranch on Shields river fifteen miles north of Livingston, has a large stock of cattle. Mr. Wright was one of the pioneers of Montana and is the present representative of his district in the lower branch of the Territorial Legislature. He was born in Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., July 22, 1838. In 1857 he moved to Rice Co., Minn., where he was engaged in farming till 1859. In the spring of that year he went to California and one year later to Carson City, Nev., where he was engaged three years in mining. He came to Montana in October, 1863, and located in the Gallatin Valley, where he was engaged in farming and stock growing. He also did considerable freighting. His home was at Hamilton, where he resided about ten years. In 1873 he opened a cattle ranch on Shields river, about fifteen miles north of where Livingston is now located. In the early days he had more or less trouble with the Indians. His first herder in the summer of 1874 was drawn into an ambush of Sioux while hunting stray horses, and was shot full of arrows. His name was Hardy O'Dare, of Illinois; he was a young man possessed of many good qualities and was much respected by his employers and acquaintances. The Indians got away with four horses on that occasion. They would commit occasional depredations by shooting a few cattle. Mr. Wright avoided much trouble by keeping his cattle in the valley of the Upper Yellowstone during the summers, where the Indians seldom went, and wintering them on the ranch at Shields river Sitting Bull and his Sioux were the only troublesome Indians in this region. Mr. Wright was elected, on the Republican ticket, to the lower house of the Montana Legislature. (Vide Hist.) He is a director of the First National Bank of Livingston, and one of its principal stockholders.

JOSEPH WRIGHT (deceased), born in Knox Co., Ky. August 9, 1840, learned the printer's trade in John P. Bruce's office of the Somerset Gazette, edited a Democratic paper at Stanford, Ky., in 1861, and the same year enlisted in the Kentucky contingent of the Confederate army. In 1854 he was made prisoner near Rome, Ga., but through the influence of Gen. Rosseau was released, when he went to Missouri and engaged in the printing trade. He was married to Miss Sarah White, at St. Louis, Mo.; came to Montana in 1867 and connected himself with the Virginia City Democrat. After the paper changed hands he started the Montanian, and in 1871 established the Avant Courier at Bozeman. His death took place here December 29, 1876.

RICHARD WRIGHT was born in New York March 8, 1831. He was the son of Richard Wright, Sr. He was educated in the common schools of New York, and at the age of 18 engaged in the lumber business. In 1860 he married Lizzie Parker, by whom he had three children: Alvah Bill, born in New York November 25, 1861; M. H., May 28, 1868; Richard H., born in Kansas January 20, 1871. In 1868 he moved to Kansas and improved a farm, upon which he lived till 1879, when he came to Montana. He had no means when he arrived in the territory, but now owns 800 acres of land, and also is engaged in horse and cattle growing.

W. M. WRIGHT, P. O. Livingston, stockgrower, one of the pioneers of Montana, was born in Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., town of Humphrey, and started west on the 6th of June, 1855, while only a boy. Arriving in Minnesota, he spent two years; then went to Colorado, and operated in mining till 1863, without success. In the spring of that year he came to Montana, arriving at Bannack City June 6, where he gave the last half dollar he possessed for a drink of milk. Making only a short stay at Bannack, he proceeded to the newly-discovered gold diggings of Alder Gulch (Virginia City), and spent two years at this point in mining, quite successfully. Tiring of mining he went to Gallatin City and engaged in farming and stock-growing. February 10, 1865, he was appointed Clerk and Recorder of Gallatin county by Governor Sidney Edgerton. He was the first officer qualified in the new county and proceeded to swear at the county commissioners and other officers. The Board of Commissioners consisted of Phil Thorp, A. F. Nichols and Dr. Ketchum; sheriff, A. F. Loutzenhiser; probate judge, James Gallagher; treasurer, James B. Campbell. Mr. Wright was reappointed by the county commissioners November 11, 1865, and served till November, 1866. He located a ranch on Shields River at an early day, where he contested the range for his cattle with the hostile Sioux. In 1874 he lost his trusty companion and herder, Hardy O'Dare, who was shot full of arrows by the Indians within sight of the cabin while in search of his horses.

W. W. WYLIE, cashier of the banking house of Sebree, Ferris & White, Bozeman, is a native of Concord, O., where he was born June 8, 1848. His parents removed to Iowa during his early childhood and settled at Washington. He was educated in that state, taking a collegiate course at Hopkinton, Ia., and graduated in 1873, after which he engaged in teaching, and accepted the position of principal in the schools of Delhi, Delaware Co., Ia., where he remained two years. He was afterward, for one year, principal of the public schools at Hinsdale, Ill., and for three years superintendent of instruction at Lyons, Ia. He at length came to Montana, and settling in Bozeman, accepted the position of principal of the schools of that city, which he held for about three years. He then prepared articles bearing upon Montana, its resources, wonders, etc., and returning to the States, delivered a course of lectures on the territory at large. He has given much attention to the study of geology, and is well versed in its different departments, it having been his favorite study. Mr. Wylie was married on the 2d day of April, 1874, to Miss Mary A. Wilson, a native of Independence, Ia.

A. K. YERKES, editor of the Chronicle, is a native tive of Pennsylvania, in which State he entered the office of the Public Spirit, at Hatboro, Montgomery county, in 1874. In 1876 he entered the office of the Glencoe (Minn.) Register, and the same year took a position on the Alexandria Post. In 1879 he entered the News office of which he was local editor. In 1880 he moved to Miles City where he was local editor of the Yellowstone Journal. In January, 1882, he established the Coulson Post, which, after the place was named Billings, he changed to the Billings Post. This paper he published until July, 1882, when he moved to Bozeman to engage in the real estate business. In January, 1883, he started the Chronicle for Mr. Langhorne, and for fifteen months held the position of local editor. In March he went to Olympia, W. T., and assumed the managing editorship of the Puget Sound Courier. On account of poor health he was obliged to return to Montana in September of the same year, and December 1st purchased the Bozeman Chronicle, of which journal he is now editor. Mr. Yerkes is a member of the Press association.

WM. A. ZIETZKI, P. O. Bozeman, was born in Poland May 9, 1832. During the year 1861 he came to the United States, and locating at Cincinnati, O., remained there about one year and a half; he then removed to St. Joseph, Mo., where he remained until 1865, coming in that year to Montana and locating at Helena, where he engaged in prospecting; soon after turned his attention to the carpenter business. In 1868 he went to Bozeman and earned his first dollar in that place by building a log house for Gen. Willson, and was soon after engaged as a carpenter on McAdow's flouring mill. Since then he has been engaged in contracting and building in Bozeman and vicinity, and is one of the oldest engaged in such business in the city; he has invariably met with success. Mr. Zietzki was married on the 23d day of February, 1883, to Miss Amelia Priebe, also a native of Poland.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

JEFFERSON COUNTY.

FERD. BERENDES, Jefferson City, was born at Niles, Mich., November 17, 1861, and is a son of Frank and Nettie (Dell) Berendes. His earlier days were spent in attendance at school and assisting a cousin in a grocery store. In April, 1879, he came to Jefferson City, M. T., and worked in a butcher shop eighteen months. He then engaged as clerk in a general store for J. G. Sanders, and afterward for Mr. Wickes, at Wicke's mining camp, until September, 1881, when he bought an interest in the store with Mr. Ellis, with whom he is still a partner in business.

E. G. BROOKE, farmer and stock-grower, Whitehall, was born in 1819. He came to Montana among the pioneers, and took a full part in all the enterprises which marked the beginnings of American settlement in the territory. Incidents of his life from 1865, when he made the journey from Butte City to Fort Benton in charge of an ox team, to the present day, have been carefully noted by him; but, as the greater number of such incidents are referred to in the pages of the general and county histories, they are not incorporated in this sketch. In March, 1866, he started down the Yellowstone; but was forced to retreat by the Sioux. His experiences of the previous year, for he was then captured by the northern Indians, led him to the conclusion that it was much wiser to retreat than to fall into the hands of the Sioux.

MILES W. BROWN, Radersburg, son of John P. and Sarah Brown, was born in Laporte Co., Ind. His parents were of Scotch-Irish descent, his father being by occupation a merchant. In 1854 Mr. Brown moved to Nebraska City, Neb., and was engaged in mercantile business there until 1857. In 1860 he went to Colorado and mined in Georgia and California gulches for over two years, soon after returning to Nebraska. He came to Bannack City July 10, 1863, and a few days afterward went to Virginia City, where he opened the first hotel in the place, July 25, 1863. In 1865 he left Virginia City and went to Grizzly and Last Chance gulches, mining at those places from 1865 to '68. In 1868 he moved to Spokane House, and thence to Radersburgh, where he has since been, with the exception of three and a half years, beginning with 1876. For two years after coming to Radersburg he kept hotel, but sold out and has been engaged in different kinds of business since. Mr. Brown was married to Sarah Ann Norris, of Indiana, January 9, 1845, and his family consists of two sons and one daughter. While in Nebraska Mr. Brown was probate judge of Otoe county for two years. He was also one of the pioneers of Iowa, coming to that territory in the winter of 1842–3.

MRS. OLLIE J. BARNES, P. O. Pipestone, daughter of Benjamin and Mary Barnes, was born at Freeport, Ill., May 17, 1847. In 1851 she removed with her parents to Springfield, Mo., remaining there for three years. Here her father died June 20, 1854, and the following October she returned to Cedarville, Ill. When eleven years old she was taken to Kansas, and thence to Colorado in September, 1860, stopping at Ft. Bosques, 30 miles from Denver, on the Platte river. She was educated principally at a ladies' seminary in Denver city, and remained in Colorado until May 6, 1870. In the meantime she was married to S. P. Ashcraft, March 28, 1865, and has since been legally divorced, retaining her maiden name. In 1870 she removed to Montana, and in 1875 purchased her present property and named it Pipestone Hot Springs, a place now famed as a health resort. Mrs. Barnes has a beautiful property, well improved, on which are a good hotel, bath houses, etc., for the accommodation of the public. The baths are spacious and properly kept. This water cures rheumatism in all its different stages and types, also neuralgia and all skin diseases, as well as paralysis. One gentleman, Mr. Harry Berriman, from Butte City, severely afflicted with rheumatism, who was unable to get out of his bed, and had consequently to be daily carried to his bath, was brought to these springs, and in a few days was comparatively well and able to walk about. Another instance is of a gentleman named Smith, from Butte City, who was afflicted with paralysis, but who, after a treatment of five weeks, became sound. Numerous other cases are on record where other diseases in their worst forms have been cured through the medicinal properties of these springs. Care is at all times taken with patients, and different diseases treated in different baths. The present owner contemplates adding more and still better improvements, among which will be a swimming bath and a boating lake. At present there are swings, a croquet ground and other amusements. Among the component parts of this water are sulphur, magnesia, soda, alum and a small per cent. of arsenic. The proportions of these differ with the different springs, but the most prevalent properties are iron and sulphur. The water rises from a temperature of 100 to 136 degrees. Mrs. Barnes says she only knew of one case that had to return a second time to the springs to effect a cure. In a short time a physician will be located at these springs, which are 33 miles east of Butte City, 7 miles southwest of Whitehall, and 38 miles south of Helena, to all of which places good roads lead.

P. B. CLARK, of the firm of Huntley & Clark, Radersburg, came to Virginia City in 1865, but passed on to Helena, mining in Trinity Gulch four or five months; also at Elk Creek the same year, and the year following, and afterward engaging in the stage business, running the first stage from Helena to Bozeman. After being in the stage business for several years in company with Mr. Huntley, he purchased the stock farm of Huntley and Clark, a few miles below Radersburgh, on the Missouri river, commenced raising thoroughbred horses and fine sheep, and so far has met with the most encouraging success. The farm consists of 3,000 acres, is well provided with all the comforts and conveniences for the purpose for which it is intended, and is certainly a great credit to the enterprise of its owners. Mr. Clark is a native of New York, and was born in that State July 4, 1842. He is the son of Gates and Luseina (Sage) Clark, his parents being native Americans. At the age of thirteen years Mr. Clark went to Pennsylvania, and after six months to Illinois, remaining about the same length of time. He then crossed the plains by way of Salt Lake City to California, and mined to some extent, though he was principally interested in coaches and stage lines. Leaving California in 1863, he went to Nevada, and from there to Idaho, finally coming to Montana. In March, 1869, he was married to Miss Tootie Brown, a native of Indiana, and resides in Radersburg. They have two daughters, Rettie and Rena.

IRVIN COLLIER, P. O. Beaver Creek, is a native of Clay Co., Ky., where he was born August 28, 1830. His father was a farmer and speculator by occupation. Mr. Collier left Kentucky in 1843 or '44, and traveled through Illinois to Iowa, remaining in the latter State about eighteen months, working on a farm not far from Winterset. From there he went to Nebraska, and on to Missouri and Kansas, only stopping for a short time in these States. From Kansas he went to Memphis, Tenn., returning again to Nebraska, and from there going to Indiana. In Indiana he fitted out and went to Denver, Col., in 1859, and was there most of the time until 1864, working in the mines, prospecting and freighting. In 1863 he started back to the States, but was pressed into service by the Union forces and taken to Vicksburg. He returned to Denver in the spring of 1864, and thence came to Alder Gulch, which he reached on the 28th of August of that year. He was at Alder Gulch a portion of two winters, freighting during the summer and working about the mines, hauling timber, etc. From Alder Gulch went to Last Chance Gulch in 1866, where he mined awhile, and has been about Helena more or less since. In 1862 he took up 160 acres of land on the Missouri river, upon which he now resides. Mr. Collier was married to Miss Alice Mills, a native of Utah, March 7, 1871, and is the father of seven children: David, Andrew Irvin, James Edwards, John, Warren Word, Thomas Franklin and Charles.

HIRAM COOK, Boulder City, son of Aaron and Lydia Cook, was born in Norwich, Chenango Co., N. Y., May 7, 1817. In 1831 he moved to Monroe county, thence to Medina Co., Ohio. He was educated in the public schools of New York and Ohio, and lived on a farm with his father until seventeen years of age, when he bought his time of his father and learned the carpenter's and joiner's trade in Huron Co., Ohio. He worked at this seventeen years, when he removed to Kalamazoo Co., Mich., and bought a farm, but continued to work at his trade chiefly until his sons were old enough to work the farm. Mr. C. was formerly a member of the Baptist Church and is a strict temperance man. He was County Commissioner in Kalamazoo Co., Mich., also Justice of the Peace for seven years and Town Treasurer. He enlisted in 1862 in the Twenty-fifth Michigan Infantry, and was Captain of Company "H"; was taken sick in Tennessee in 1863, and received his discharge from the service March 27, 1864, when he returned to his home in Michigan. Sold out there in the spring of 1864, removed to Montgomery Co., Mo., and engaged in farming and mechanical pursuits. He left Missouri in 1867 (held the office of register in Montgomery county), returned in a "Mackinaw" in the fall, and in the spring of 1868 removed his family to Helena, M. T. In September, 1868, he removed to Little Boulder, and there kept a hotel and stage station. In 1870 he was appointed Deputy United States Marshal and took the census of Jefferson county. In that year he was appointed postmaster at Little Boulder, and held that office twelve years. Mr. C. owns a spacious hotel in Boulder City, which he built and is about to enlarge. He also owns an interest in two quartz mines, one-half interest in the Martin Maginness and a third interest in the Venus, distant from Boulder City about three miles. He also has one-third interest in sixty acres of placer ground, three miles south of Boulder City. Mr. Cook is a thoroughly active man in business, pushing forward the interests of this fast improving town of Boulder City. He was married to Miss Mary E. Vining, October 30, 1838. Miss M. E. Vining, daughter of Rev. R. W. and Lydia Vining, was born May 29, 1817, in Genesee Co., Mich.; was educated in Ellicottville, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., and is a member of the Methodist Church. Mrs. C. was also a teacher in common schools seven years previous to her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Cook have raised a family of eight children, all of whom are married and living (three sons and five daughters). The eldest two sons served in the army, one as Orderly Sergeant, in the Teuth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and the other as Second Lieutenant in the Twenty-fifth Michigan Infantry. All of their children are citizens of Montana except the eldest son, who is now in Bloomington, Ill.

WILLIAM L. COPELAND, P. O. Radersburgh, was born in 1827, in Spartanburg, S. C. His parents were Charles and Elizabeth (Chapman) Copeland. William received a common school education; went to California in 1852, via the isthmus; was in California and Nevada fourteen years, most of the time engaged in mining. After leaving California, he came to Helena, M. T., and worked at "Uncle Ben's Gulch" and Silver Bow for five months. He spent the winter of 1866-7 at Gallatin City, going from there to the Salmon River mines; next to Silver Bow, thence to Montana City on the Prickly Pear river, and finally, in the spring of 1868, to Radersburg, where he remained until the summer of 1873, and then bought a ranch here of 320 acres, which is well improved and under cultivation; has good fences, etc. Mr. Copeland owns twenty head of horses. His land will average in its yield of grain and potatoes with any in the Territory. Mining has been his principal occupation. Owing to the busy character of his life in the mountains, he is still unmarried.

GEORGE F. COWAN, P. O. Radersburg, was born at Worthington, O., February 10, 1842, and removed with his parents to Wisconsin, settling first at Watertown, then at Berlin (in 1852), and finally at Ripon, where he finished his education at Ripon College. For some time in 1861 he served in the "Ripon Rifles." He was married August 24, 1875, his wife having been born February 10, 1842. In the spring of 1865 Mr. Cowan came to Montana, and was located nearly a year at Helena. In May of the next year he went to Uncle Ben's Gulch. Having read law, he drew up the by-laws of the gulch, and engaged in mining at that place until the first of September. His mining venture not proving successful, he returned to Helena, starting a short time afterward for Virginia City, but stopping at Prickly Pear, then called the "county site of Montana." Remaining until the following spring, and practicing law a little during the time, he again returned to Helena, was appointed assessor of internal revenue, and served until August of the same year. He finished his law course while serving as clerk of the district court at Radersburg, was admitted to the bar at that place in May, 1872, and has since been engaged in practice. August 6, 1877, Mr. Cowan started for the Yellowstone Park, reaching it on the 14th, and, after a visit of ten days among its wonders, was ready to return. About daybreak, while yet sleeping, the party was surprised by a band of Nez Perce Indians, and all its members were captured, including Mr. and Mrs. Cowan, the latter's sister Ida and brother, Frank Carpenter, Albert Oldham (shot through the face), A. J. Arnold, William Dingee, Charles Mann and William Myers (an employe). Mrs. Cowan first heard the Indians, and awakened her husband, who speedily dressed, went out, and found them talking with some of their party who were trying to light a fire. The Indians informed them they would be safe if they came with them. After traveling some distance toward home, the Indians suddenly formed in line immediately in front of them, and called a halt. Mr. Cowan demanded the reason, and was told the chief, Looking Glass, wanted to see and talk with him. After some parley, the whites were told they were prisoners and must move on. During the parley, at a sign from the chief, the Indians lowered their guns. Mr Cowan rode his saddle horse beside the carriage. They soon came to heavy timber, and were ordered to leave the vehicles and mount the horses Mrs. Cowan was allowed to retain her saddle horse. At noon they camped, and then ensued a parley in which Chief Poker Joe promised liberty to the party of whites if they would give up their guns, ammunition and horses, receiving in turn old worn-out horses to make their homeward journey upon. Resistance, meant death to the whole party. Mr. Cowan had a needle gun and five rounds of ammunition, while his brother in-law was the possessor of a shot gun and three rounds only; therefore they acceeded to the terms, after the Indians had partaken of dinner—of which the captives had none. The Indians resumed their march and the little party turned their faces on the back trail. After they had gone half a mile, about 75 bucks came rushing back and told them they must return. They were taken back between two files of Indians, two of the savages going ahead out of sight over the hill. About one and a half miles from the scene of the last capture these two Indians suddenly appeared and rushed down the hill toward the captives as fast as their horses could run. When about fifteen paces away they suddenly pulled their horses upon their haunches, one of them leveled his gun at Mr. Cowan, who was ahead, and shot him through the right leg. Then shots were heard on every hand. Another Indian pointed his gun at Mr. Cowan, who dodged and rolled from his horse. His wife went to his assistance, when another Indian came up and asked him if he was shot through the breast, to which he replied no. The savage then drew a pistol and tried to shoot him in the head. Mrs. Cowan clung to her husband and tried to protect him, and while the Indian was trying to drag her away another drew a revolver and shot the prostrate man in the head, then throwing ragged stones at his head and cutting him badly. He was finally left for dead and his wife was carried away. This occurred about two o'clock in the afternoon on Friday, just two years from the day of the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Cowan, and a sad anniversary it was to them. Mr. Cowan regained consciousness as the sun was going down behind the tree tops. After being shot he had rolled down a slight de-clivity against a fallen tree, and on recovering found himself on the opposite side of the same tree. After several vain attempts to arise he finally, in a dazed condition, drew himself to his feet by the aid of a limb. Hearing a noise, he looked around and saw an Indian on horseback in the act of drawing his gun. The fiend jumped from his horse and came toward Mr. Cowan firing, shooting him through the hip, the ball passing through the hip bone and coming out in front. Mr. Cowan fell upon his face, without losing consciousness, and lay so until dark, when he crawled into the bushes for shelter. Being consumed by thirst, he dragged himself for hours on his hands and knees in search of water. He came suddenly upon some sleeping Indians, but being in the shade of a tree, crawled carefully back about 100 yards, brushing the twigs aside, then about 100 yards at right angles, resuming his painful journey on hands and knees and continuing until midnight, when he crawled between two logs and lay there until morning. In this manner he toiled on, without food, for five days, or until the next Wednesday about eleven o'clock in the forenoon, when he was found by two of General Howard's scouts, who cared for him, gave him food, and left him where Howard would find him the next night. He had no water until the next day after he was shot, and the endurance of the man was marvelous. General Howard did not come until Thursday noon, but then took him down the Yellowstone and sent him with an escort toward Bozeman. He gave out when only a part of the journey was accomplished, and was not taken to Bozeman until he had rested for six days. When found by the scouts he learned that they had also found two of his party safe, Oldham and Myers, and when General Howard reached him he was overjoyed at the intelligence that his wife was also safe. The evening before their capture the whole party had joined in singing, "Home, Sweet Home," little knowing that a band of merciless Nez Perces was surrounding them, listening to their music, and preparing for the deed of violence of the day following. Mr. Cowan's experience was certainly remarkable, and very few would have survived a similar one.

THOMAS CRAHAN, P. O. Bedford, son of Martin and Bridget Crahan, of Faxan, Sibley Co., Minn., was born at Faxan November 26, 1859; received his education in the common schools there; commenced supporting himself at the age of 15 years; and went into the ferry business on the Missouri river in Dakota, at the age of 18 years, in which he continued one year, sold out and then made a few trips to the Black Hills, freighting to Fort Meade. He came to Montana in August, 1878; settled at Canton, Gallatin county, and went into the saw mill and lumber business with his brother; followed that life three years, sold out his interest to his brother and located in Bedford, Jefferson Co., Mont. Built himself a dwelling house and also a house of business in the town of Bedford. He married Miss Viola Welken, daughter of W. L. and H. Welken, of Radersburgh, November 18, 1881. They have one child, named May, born October 18, 1882.

WILLIAM DAVIES, P. O. Radersburg, was born in South Wales, near Cardiff, Glenmorganshire, in 1816, and was raised a coal-miner from the age of 12 years. In 1851 he reached the United States, landing at New Orleans, and going north to a point seven miles south of St. Louis, he continued to follow his occupation there for four years. He next went to Muscatine, Ia., remaining for eight years; then went to Salt Lake City, Utah, and afterward to Austin, Nev., staying at the latter place for nine months. From Austin he made a trip to Mahlad Valley, Idaho, and thence to Radersburg, locating about seven miles below the town on Crow Creek valley, where he has since been engaged in farming. At present his farm consists of 160 acres of pre-empted land, with a homestead of 80 acres adjoining. He was married to Miss Jane Morgan, in Wales, in February, 1843, and is the father of seven children, of whom only three are now living.

J. E. DOUGHERTY, Radersburg, is a native of Canada; was born at Perth, Lanark Co., Ontario, in 1841, and came to the United States when about 14 years of age. He returned to Canada, and after receiving a good common school education he taught near Ottawa for four years, and was also engaged in the grocery business for a time. In 1870 he came to Montana, and after remaining here for one year, located on Crow Creek, near Radersburg, where he has since enjoyed a large trade. Mr. Dougherty was married to Miss Eliza Jane Clark, a native of Wisconsin, February 7, 1875, and has two children: John and Mary. Edward and Maria (Kane) Dougherty, his parents, emigrated to America in 1812, but are now both deceased, having died in Canada about four years ago. By occupation the father was a saddle and harness maker. Mr. Dougherty has been fortunate in business since coming to the Territory, having accumulated considerable property, though beginning with very limited capital. At present his possessions chiefly consist of a dry goods store near Radersburg; also a farm of 580 acres, fairly improved, with good house and outbuildings.

ALLEN M. EASTERLY, P. O. Radersburg, ex-assessor of Jefferson county, is a native of Jackson Co., Mich.; moved to Minnesota in 1856, and for ten years was engaged in farming in that state. He then emigrated to Last Chance Gulch in Montana, removing a few months later to Jefferson county, where he has since continued to reside. After coming to Jefferson he mined at Indian Creek until 1877, since which time he has mostly been engaged in politics. In 1877 he was appointed sheriff of the county for one and a half years, has since been elected for two terms, and during the fall of 1882 was elected assessor. Mr. Easterly has always been a staunch democrat, and was elected to his present position by a very large majority. While acting in the capacity of sheriff of the county, Mr. Easterly executed the first man who suffered the extreme penalty of the law in Jefferson, the execution taking place on the first day of March, 1868. The name of the party executed was Micaja McAndrews, who murdered George Mavor under the following circumstances: the two men had been traveling together from the Black Hills, and when twelve miles above Boulder City on the Boulder river, McAndrews shot his companion through the head while he lay sleeping at midnight. McAndrews was arrested in Pioneer City, and after being brought back to Radersburg and having a trial was hanged. Mr. Easterly was married to Miss Nancy Boyle, of Ohio, July 9, 1860, and they now have four children: George Burton, Allen, Ida Luemma and Charles. Mr. Easterly retired from the assessor's office in 1884.

F. W. ELLIS, Jefferson City, is a son of Wm. B. and Mary Ellis, and was born at Watab, Minn., October 18, 1859. When eight years of age his mother died and he passed the next four years at Watertown, Minn. Removing to Minneapolis, he engaged as packer in a shingle mill for the three succeeding years. He was then given charge of an engine in a saw mill for one year, and in 1876 came to Clancy, M. T., and worked in a quartz mill. He also bought, in company with his father, a band of horses, and in 1880 they were traded for one third interest in the Deer Lodge mine, near Clancy, which they sold in 1882 to Capt. H. Guyer. Mr. Ellis was a clerk for two years in Jefferson City for J. G. Sanders. Mr. Sanders sold out to J. Vatters in 1881, and on May 6 in that year Mr. Ellis commenced business for himself. He was soon after appointed postmaster, which office he still retains.

D. B. FILSON, P. O. Beaver Head, son of George M. Filson, was born in Buchanan Co., Mo., in 1843, and in 1856 went to Doniphan Co., Kan., where he lived about six years. He was in Price's and Beauregard's army for one year and then went to Denver, Col., thence to Virginia City in 1864, and afterward to Last Chance Gulch and Blackfoot, in all of which places he worked at mining. He finally took up land in the Missouri valley, and now resides upon it. He married in 1877 Miss Catharine Hammonds, a native of Colorado, and has three children: Mary Seville, Daniel Boone, and Fannie Fern. Since coming to the Missouri valley Mr. Filson had an adventure with a bear by which he nearly lost his life. One day while Mr. Filson was cutting hay on his ranch he heard his dogs barking fiercely near by, and finally giving chase to some animal which he supposed to be an elk. Seizing their guns, himself and brother-in-law, Carpenter, hastened to the spot where they found the dogs baying at a large bear in a clump of bushes on high ground near the bank of the river. Mr. Filson went up close in order to get a shot at the bear, but before he could do so the bear rushed upon him and threw him down the bank burying him in a sand-bar and falling upon him. He was badly bitten in the thigh and his leg lacerated to the bone. As the bear came toward him Mr. Filson had discharged his gun and Mr. Carpenter had also fired at him with heavy shot, but in such haste that most of them struck Mr. Filson, producing severe wounds on different parts of his person. Mr. Filson relates that when he recovered he was lying on his back with his body completely buried in the sand except a small portion of his face around his eyes, and that the bear was standing over him. In a moment more Mr. Carpenter shot the bear again, and in his efforts to make a charge, the brute fell dead. Mr. Filson was taken home and well cared for, but it was several months before he was able to be around and has never fully recovered.

VAN H. FISK, P. O. Bedford, son of James Lee and Jerusha Fisk, of Royalton, N. Y., was born in Ohio, December 19, 1840; educated in common schools; commenced supporting himself at the age of 14 years; moved to Pennsylvania, thence to Indiana, and after one year, on account of ill health, to Minnesota. He joined an expedition in the spring of 1856 for Sioux Falls, D. T.; remained there until 1861; enlisted in the First Minnesota Volunteers, served two years and was discharged for disability; returned to Minnesota and was in the invalid corps two years; then started across the plains to Montana in 1866. He engaged in mining at American Bar and other points for three years, being unsuccessful. Obtained a position on the staff of the Helena Herald, published by the Fisk Bros., in 1870, and held it one year. Then engaged in stock-raising in the Missouri valley, at a place called Clover Dale, where he is located at the present time. He improved the Clover Dale property with fencing, barns, stabling, etc., at the cost of $4,000, and the property has increased in value to about $12,000. Mr. Fisk married Miss Ellie Reed, of Ten Mile, Lewis and Clarke county, M. T., February 15, 1875. They have two children: Charles James, born February 9, 1877; Effie May, born July 9, 1879.

T. H. FUHRKEN, P. O. Elkhorn, was born August 28, 1858, at Bremen, Germany. After leaving school was employed in a banking house at London, England, four years. Came to the United States and was located three years in business at New York city, one and a half years at Salida, Col., and in March, 1883, removed to Fort Benton, Mont., to take charge of the branch house of Kleinschmidt & Bro., groceries and liquors. His present address is Elkhorn, Jefferson Co.

WILLIAM R. GIBBINGS, Basin City, is a son of Thomas and Catherine (Dugan) Gibbings, and was born in the City of Cork, Ireland. He came to San Francisco in 1854, then went to Trinity, where he followed the occupation of mining until 1863. He then joined Capt. Connor's command and was one of his chief scouts until 1866. At this time he came into the Territory of Montana and has since worked in Alder Gulch, Idaho and Salmon City mines. In 1881 he came to Basin, where he is now interested in the Kit Carson mine and superintendent of the works, also having prospects of his own. He has twice been wounded by shots from the Indians. In the charge at Humboldt Springs his horse stumbled, and falling upon him dislocated his wrist and broke his collar bone.

JOHN J. HALL, Jefferson City, son of Thomas J. and Julia M. (Harris) Hall, was born at Dover, Windham Co., Vt., March 4, 1830, where he remained on a farm with his parents until 1856, at which time he went to La Crosse, Wis., and was there engaged until 1857 as engineer in a saw mill. He then went to Mankato, Minn., and took charge of a stationary engine until 1858, when he made a trip to Washington Territory and was driven out by the Indians. He then located at Walla Walla, going from there to Colville, where he remained until the spring of 1861; then went to Hell's Gate on the Missouri River; thence to Bitter Root valley, where he passed the winter, and in the spring of 1862 to Deer Lodge, Mont., prospecting through the country to Big Hole diggings, where he heard of the Bannack mines, and immediately went there and passed the winter. With the first stampede he moved into Alder Gulch, where he remained until the winter of 1863–64, and then engaged in freighting in Utah. In 1865 he came to the Pipestone and took up a ranch, and in 1866 took up another near Jefferson City. In 1869 he bought stock in Utah and brought it to his ranch on the Pipestone, where he remained until 1877, when he again came upon his ranch at Jefferson City. Mr. Hall was married at Montana City on the 27th of August, 1865, to Miss Nancy Harter. He was appointed assessor of the first district of Jefferson county during 1874 and 1875, and has been one of the school trustees in his district for several years.

MRS. FRANCES E. HARVEY, Clancy, widow of the late Silas S. Harvey, was born in Warren Co., N. J., on March 20, 1840, and was married to Mr. Harvey at Hackettstown, N. J., in 1856. Mr. Harvey was a gentleman of undoubted ability, and before coming to the territory was engaged in New Jersey as a merchant, dealing in coal and lumber and brewing. He was also general freight agent for the Morris Canal Company for a period of twelve years. He came to the Territory in 1867 and took charge of the Diamond City Mining Company's Works, they disbanding in 1870. He with a partner then purchased a mill and opened a mine of their own, at which they worked until Mr. Harvey's death, which occurred May 7, 1879. Mr. Harvey was also engaged in stock-raising, ranching, etc. Mrs. Harvey lost about 500 head of cattle during the winter of 1880–81. She still has a fine herd, however, and about 100 head of horses, among which is the noted horse Black Diamond, and a number of valuable trotting mares.

H. M. HILL, Clancy, was born at Westport, Fairfield Co., Conn., August 31, 1833. His parents were Nathaniel L. and Mariah (Wakefield) Hill. He first left home in 1849, going to Fond du Lac, Wis., where he soon became a successful contractor and builder and was engaged in such business until 1859, when he made a visit to his parents in Connecticut. He soon returned to Wisconsin and went into the produce and commission business, at which he remained until 1861, when he enlisted for three months, and served as Sergeant in Company A, First Wisconsin Volunteers. After being discharged he with a friend bought the Northwestern Type Foundry at Milwaukee, at which business he remained until April, 1864, when the western fever having asserted its power over him, he migrated to the then noted Montana City, where he engaged in mining and dealing in merchandise until 1872, when he moved his business to Clancy. The post office was also moved to the latter place, and as he had been postmaster at Montana City and performed the duties of the office in a satisfactory manner, he was again appointed postmaster at Clancy. Mr. Hill being of an active and mechanical turn of mind, has connected with his store a workshop and assay office, where he passes many pleasant hours in the production of such articles as his taste and wants dictate. Mr. Hill is also a Notary Public, having filled that office since the Territory was first organized. He also made the first assessment in the county and acted as first Sheriff. Mr. Hill has twice been married, first to Miss Lucia Scribner, at Rosindale, Fond du Lac Co., Wis., in 1852, she dying in 1858 and leaving two children. He married Miss Julia M. Cross at Woodbury, Ohio, November 3, 1860, and they have one daughter, Miss Ida May.

JOHN A. KEATING, P. O. Beaver Creek, the discoverer of the mines at Radersburgh in 1866, is a native of England, where he was born in 1836. He came to New York in 1850. His father was a blacksmith and lived in Lancashire. Mr. Keating was a coppersmith, and after remaining in New York for seven years came to Chicago, going in 1858 to St. Louis and on to Utah, but returning as far as Nebraska City in 1859. In 1860 he went to Pike's Peak, and was engaged in mining at Tarryall and Georgia Gulch until the spring of 1863, when he started for Montana, first arriving at East Bannack, and soon after at Alder Gulch. He staid at Alder Gulch from the spring of 1863 until the fall of 1864, then went to the States. In the spring of 1865 he outfitted in St. Joseph, Mo., and came to Confederate Gulch, where he engaged in the mercantile business until the summer of 1866. From Confederate Gulch he went to Indian Creek, and from there to Cedar Plains mining district, near where Radersburgh now stands, where he discovered the first mines, and now owns the "Leviathan" and "Keating," the "Ohio" and the "Congress" mines in that locality. From Radersburg he moved to Helena, and thence to Beaver Creek, where he now resides and is engaged in the stock business. He has two farms, one of 160 acres on the Bozeman and Helena road, upon which he now lives, and another of 320 acres on the Missouri river, both in good condition. In 1873 he was married to Miss Jennie Clark, a native of the Island of Jersey, and they have two children, John Blaine and Lilly Alma.

E. A. KIMPTON, P. O. Radersburgh, son of George and Sarah (Rollins) Kimpton, was born in Janesville, Wis., December 28, 1852. His father was a farmer, but held several town offices, among them town clerk of Wheaton. May 5, 1873, Mr. Kimpton came to Fort Benton by way of the Missouri river, and thence journeyed to Crow River Valley, where he took up a ranch of 160 acres in 1875, and is now engaged in farming and raising stock. He has a pleasant home and surroundings. Was married in 1879 to Miss Carrie Kaiser, a native of California, of German descent. They have one child, Amy Edna.

JOHN KNOCHE, P. O. Clancy, is a son of Henry and Kate Knoche, and was born in Prussia on the 28th day of June, 1840. He came to the United States in 1866, and was married in Cincinnati, Ohio, to Margaret Choltz, in 1868. He is an inventor, and has been granted patents on several very useful and important articles. He came to Montana in September, 1882, and has since been engaged in mining, having a five stamp mill at his mines.

LOUIS G. LAWRENCE, Woodville, was born in Canada, in the vicinity of Montreal, where he learned the blacksmith trade with his father. In 1870 he came to the United States, worked in Chicago one year and a half in a grocery store; during 1871 visited Canada, and returning to the United States worked in various capacities in the states of Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island. In 1880 he came to Montana and worked at his trade one year in the city of Butte, one year at Boulder; returned to Butte, and then moved to Woodville, where, in company with another gentleman, he opened a blacksmith shop, but soon returned to Butte remaining until September, 1883, and established his present blacksmith and wood shop at Woodville. Mr. Lawrence was married at Manchester, N. H., on the 17th of January, 1875, to Miss Leda Michelin, and has three children.

CHARLES LEFLER, P. O. Beaver Creek, is a native of Pennsylvania, where he was born in 1844. When quite young his parents moved to Wisconsin, and after remaining there until Charles was fifteen years of age, settled in Minnesota. In January, 1871, Charles Lefler came to Montana, first locating at Helena, and afterward, in 1868, taking up a ranch in the Missouri valley, which consists of 160 acres, well improved, and is used principally as a hay farm.

W. H. LOCKHART, P. O. Woodville, was born in Virginia, May 26, 1844, and is a son of Josiah and Eliza Lockhart, his father having served in the war of 1812, where he won the title of General. Mr. Lockhart was reared upon a farm, and received a moderate education. At the time of the breaking out of the civil war he had just entered a medical college. He served under Stonewall Jackson during the war as hospital steward; remained in Virginia until 1875, principally engaged in farming, and in that year went to Nebraska, and taking up a farm remained upon it about five years. He then came to Montana and settled in Elk Park in 1880, where he has since been engaged in cutting and delivering and speculating in wood contracts, also keeping a boarding house.

A. MACOMBER, P. O. Radersburg, was born at Gibsonville, Livingston Co., N. Y., December 1, 1837. His father was a farmer, and at present resides in Michigan. He was fifteen years of age when he came with his parents to Michigan, and after receiving a common school education went to Pike's Peak in 1859. He was engaged in mining three years at Pike's Peak, six months in New Mexico on the Baker stampede, and again in California gulch, leaving there in the spring of 1862, for the Florence diggings on the Salmon river, but getting no farther than Fort Lemhi, which was then the end of the wagon road. He remained there a month, sending out exploring parties to find the mines, but they returned without discovering them; then went to Elk City and engaged in prospecting awhile, and thence to Big Hole basin, striking the first mines within the limits of Montana. He then went back to Fort Lemhi, and obtaining horses, returned to the mines, remaining until October, 1862, when he took a trip to Salt Lake City for the purpose of wintering there, but six weeks afterward left for southern California, stopping in the latter section until April 10, 1863. After trading off teams and buying some horses he came to Alder gulch, but in the fall went back to Salt Lake and exchanged the horses for cattle; then returned to Alder with produce. In the spring he bought an interest in some mines with another party, who worked them while Mr. Macomber continued in the freighting business until 1865. That year he went to White's gulch, thirty-five miles east of Helena, where he engaged in general merchandising. In September, 1866, he returned to Fort Lemhi on a prospecting expedition, and was there and at Leesburg until July, when he came to Crow Creek valley and with Chancey F. Hamlin as partner, sold goods until September, 1870, since which time he has been engaged in hotel-keeping and farming. Mr. Macomber was married to Mrs. Martha Kennon in September, 1870.

JNO. G. MCCAULEY, Clancy, son of Patrick and Elizabeth (Engell) McCauley, was born at Carlisle, Cumberland Co., Pa., January 29, 1826. He remained with his parents until 23 years of age, and in February, 1849, started for California via New Orleans and Mexico. He engaged in mining in Mariposa Co., Cal., in Bull Cañon, in Eldorado county, in Volcano, Amador county, and Wood House, Calaveras county, where he worked in the first quartz mill erected in California; again at Eldorado, in Nevada county, and at Marysville, until May, 1866, when he came to Montana and engaged in mining at Helena. From 1868 to 1879 he worked in the mines at Basin, and in the latter year bought the ranch where he now lives. Having mines upon his ranch he devotes a part of his time to his old occupation.

JOHN MCDERMOTT, P. O. Radersburg, present sheriff of Jefferson county, was born in the North of Ireland, June 24, 1843; made a trip to America in 1848, remaining until 1852, when he returned to his native country. In 1855 he came to the United States, locating in Wisconsin and remaining until 1860, when he emigrated to Pike's Peak, thence to Bannack, arriving at the latter place June 14, 1863. In a few days he left for Alder, locating in Nevada and owning the "Discovery." There were two other parties interested with Mr. McDermott and together they were proprietors of seven claims. Some of these claims proved to be quite rich, the net proceeds of Mr. McDermott and one man's work being $60,000. This was in the summer of 1864. After remaining at Alder Gulch for two years Mr. McDermott engaged in mining at Blackfoot, Ophir and Deep and Bear Gulches, tributaries of Deer Lodge river, remaining at the latter place three years. He abandoned mining and after acting as deputy sheriff of Deer Lodge county for a time was elected to that office for one year. Leaving Deer Lodge, went on a stampede to southern California, coming back by way of Pioche, Nev., which had recently been struck. After a three weeks' stay at Pioche he returned to Deer Lodge and engaged in butchering in Deer Lodge City for fourteen months. He remained in that vicinity until 1881, when he became interested in the placer mines on the Big and Little Boulder, and coming to Jefferson county was elected sheriff in the fall of 1882. Mr. McDermott was an eye witness to the hanging of Collins, one of Slade's teamsters, at Virginia City, who was the first man hung within the limits of Montana.

CHAS. MAGUIRE. (See Silver Bow.)

ARCHE MCMILLAN, P.O. Clancy, ranch owner in the Missouri and Prickly Pear valleys, a native of Glengarry, Canada, where he was born December 23, 1848; came to Montana from Pennsylvania August 7, 1869. He moved from Canada to Pennsylvania in 1865; visited York State in 1867; re-visited Canada, Pennsylvania and Missouri in 1868-9; came to Benton via the river, and by coach to Helena. He located a ranch in the Prickly Pear valley and resided there until the fall of 1879, when he purchased his present ranch in the Missouri Valley, near Mitchell's Gulch. His ranches are fully stocked.

E. MCSORLEY, Radersburg, present Treasurer of Jefferson county, is the son of Hugh and Margaret McSorley, was born at Deerfield, State of New York, October 6, 1830. His parents were of Irish descent, and his father was a cooper by trade. Mr. McSorley moved to Dakota in 1867, and after two weeks' sojourn came by steamer to Fort Benton, thence to Helena, paying $10 for the privilege of walking beside a wagon in traveling between the two places. From Helena he went to Fish Creek, where he engaged in mining and keeping store. In 1878 he was elected Treasurer of Jefferson county and has since been re-elected. He was also Justice of the Peace in this county for five years beginning with 1873, and Superintendent of Schools from 1878 to 1882.

WILLIAM NOONAN, P. O. Woodville, was born in Prince Edward Island, Canada, February 24, 1857, and is a son of Thomas and Judith (Carroll) Noonan. He learned and worked at the blacksmith trade five years, and in 1881 came to the United States, working at his trade in New York city and Chicago. January 26, 1882, he came to Montana and settled at Butte, where he remained but a short time before locating at Woodville, his present residence and place of business, having established his business there in July, 1882. In November, 1882, he was elected Justice of the Peace for two years, which office he fills to the satisfaction of all. He has also been appointed deputy postmaster.

MARION POOL, Jefferson City, son of Daniel and Jane (Graham) Pool, was born near Portsmouth, O., June 19, 1858. At 20 years of age he engaged in teaching school, which pursuit he followed for four years, and was afterwards appointed Deputy Sheriff at Portsmouth. He arrived in Jefferson City, Mont., in May, 1881, and passed his time in teaching school and clerking in a store until about the first of August, 1883, when he took charge of the Jefferson City Hotel.

ISOM PREUITT postmaster at Bedford, was born in Illinois, August 29, 1837, and was educated in the common schools of that state. August 1, 1861, he joined the First Missouri Cavalry, and was commissioned First Lieutenant by Governor Fletcher. He was at the siege of Vicksburg, and the battles of Pea Ridge and Cold Spring, Miss. He came to Montana in 1865, bringing a stock of liquors, and first located at Diamond city, Meagher Co., ran a billiard hall and remained one year. He then moved to St. Louis gulch, Indian creek, and followed mining twelve years, during which time he served two terms as Justice of the Peace and taught two terms in the public school in district No. 16. He went to Bedford, May 2, 1882, and was appointed postmaster, May 9, 1882. He carries a stock of goods consisting of drugs and notions. Mr. Preuitt belongs to the I. O. O. F. and the A. O. U. W.

W. QUINN, P. O. Radersburg, was born at Ottawa, Can., in 1842; was educated there, and in 1858 joined his brother Thomas in establishing a grocery store at Lan, ark, Can., in which he was interested until September, 1864, when he came to Montana. He freighted for two years between Virginia city and Salt Lake city; early in 1867 he was engaged in mining, at what is now, called Bedford; in July of that year he was in the Crow creek mines, where he commenced the first ditch in the valley in partnership with S. B Howe, whose interest he purchased in the fall of 1868 Since that time he acquired by purchase two other ditches, and extended the water system six miles to his ranch in 1879, giving a water system of eighteen miles, with a legal first water-right of 2,000 inches, recorded for irrigating purposes. His ranch of 160 acres is five miles from Radersburg, and to it are to be added 1,280 acres.

C. C. RAY, P. O. Radersburg, came to Helena with Frank Cole, bringing a band of thoroughbred horses, and after disposing of them, was employed by Huntley & Clark, at there well-known Riverside stock farm on Crow creek, and at Horseshoe Bend, remaining in their employ for three and a half years, when he began business for himself at Radersburg, since, opening out a branch agricultural store at Townsend. Mr. Ray was born at Warsaw, Gallatin Co., Ky., May 1, 1846, and followed the business of training horses in that state until 1869, when he brought some fast stock to Nevada, going to Utah in 1876, and in 1878 coming to Montana. He was married to Miss Katie Veim at Radersburg, March 17, 1882, and has one boy, Charles Owen, born February 5, 1883.

HENRY RAYMOND, P. O. Bedford, son of Silas and Sarah Raymond, of Erie Co., Pa., was born July 25, 1836, educated in the common schools, resided with his parents until the age of nineteen, then moved to Keokuk, Ia., working for the Keokuk and St. Louis Packet Company until leaving for Montana in 1864. He settled in the Missouri valley in 1866, at a place called Springville, Jefferson Co.; started prospecting for gold, and was one of the first locators of the Idaho mining district. He mined successfully in that district, and during the time went into the stock business and farming, taking up 114 acres of hay land, also a timber claim on the Missouri bottoms. He married Mrs. Wilcox, daughter of James Ogden and Eliza Gates, of Canada, April 3, 1882. He has at the present time about 50 head of beef cattle, and 30 head of horses, the increase alone of two cows and one mare that he commenced with when first settling at Springville.

CLIFTON REYNOLDS, proprietor of the Beaver Creek House, was born at Pleasantville, Marion Co., Ia., September 3, 1852, and resided until ten years old with his parents, Alonzo and Melissa Reynolds. In 1862 he moved to Nebraska City, a thriving town in a thriving Territory. The mountain land toward which so many were going, and the charm of the wild life, offered too much to the lad of twelve summers, and he started up the Platte river, driving six yoke of cattle for a freighter. At Julesburg his contract expired, and he refused to go farther with the train because of the Indians being troublesome. Young Reynolds found the reality of frontier life was anything but romantic. A mere lad in a country that tried the hearts of the stoutest, he worked up and down the river about five years, and then, true to the feelings of a frontiersman, he turned his face mountainward, and in 1869 came to Montana. The beautiful valley of the Platte seemed transferred to the Gallatin, and here he settled down and became a farmer, though during certain seasons of the year he engaged in freighting, and in 1876 located his present ranch on Beaver creek. Since that time he has kept public house, and has had one of the best stations on the road. The near completion of the N. P. R. R. warned him that the palmy days of his business were numbered, and he accumulated a herd of fine cattle, with the view of engaging in stock-raising. Mr. Reynolds married, February 4, 1876, Mrs. Julia Peterson, daughter of Conrad and Elizabeth Hamb. One child of this marriage, Alice, born September 20, 1878, deceased April 28, 1880. There are two children by Mrs. Reynolds' first marriage.

REV. F. A. RIGGIN, A.M., P. O. Fish Creek, was born at Baltimore, Md., September 7, 1848; was educated at the public schools of the city and Baltimore City College; prepared for Dickinson College at Clinton Institute, and graduated at Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pa., in 1871. He was stationed at Harrisburg, Pa., then transferred to Minnesota, and spent one year; was stationed at Evanston, Wy. T., in 1872, and coming to Montana in 1873, was stationed as follows: Virginia City, three years; the circuit being divided, spent one year on the Beaver Head and Jefferson valley work, and Fish Creek and Butte, three years. He married Ida I. Jordan, the youngest daughter of Harrison Jordan, July 20, 1876; was appointed presiding elder in 1876, when 27 years old, and superintendent of missions in 1880, having been in charge of the work of the M. E. church, in Montana, solely or jointly, ever since Mrs. Ida I. Riggin, wife of Superintendent Riggin, was born in Iowa, November 19, 1860; crossed the plains with her parents to Colorado, Nevada, California and Montana, when two years old, and after those years of travel, arrived in Montana in 1864, being one among the first children in the Territory, and has remained in Montana ever since. Her parents, Harrison Jordan and wife, still live at Fish Creek, Jefferson Co., where also numerous relatives reside. Mr. and Mrs. Riggin have two boys: Harrison Van Orsdel and Guy Asbury, born in Montana; the eldest, September 26, 1877; the youngest, July 16, 1882.

DR. ALFRED F. RUDD, Jefferson City, son of John C. and Lucinda (Fowler) Rudd, was born at South Champion, Jefferson Co., N. Y., September 1, 1833. At 17 years of age he commenced the study of medicine with his brother at Mannsville, N. Y., where he remained three years. He then went to Cincinnati and attended a course of lectures, after which he continued his studies at Quincy, Ill., some eight months, and subsequently at Madison, Wis., with his brother, who had come west and located at this place. In the following spring he returned to Quincy and became a student and assistant with Dr. M. F. Bassett, but graduating at second term of lectures was soon accepted as a partner, and remained there in practice eight years. In 1862 Dr. Rudd went to Portland, Ore., practiced for a short time, then moved west to Boise City, and from there to Jerdan Creek, when he was elected recorder of that district in August, 1864. He soon after made a trip to the States, via Portland and the Isthmus. After a visit of three weeks he located at Council Bluffs, Ia., practicing his profession till the summer of 1865, when he again went to Madison, Wis., and in company with his brother was engaged in practice until May, 1866. Again crossing the plains he arrived in Helena September 20, and practiced a short time. Having bought a claim in Tucker Gulch, he removed there and engaged in mining until 1868. He then visited Wilson Gulch, where he mined a short time, and from there went to Council Bluffs via Boise City, White Pine and Salt Lake City, and was there engaged in practice until 1875, when he came to Jefferson City, where he enjoys a good practice. Dr. Rudd was married at Auburn, Ore., March 17, 1864, to Miss Elida E. McFadden.

J. W. SHERLOCK, deceased, was born in Cork Co., Ireland, being the second son in a numerous family. His father was a prominent lawyer of Cork Co., and solicitor also in Dublin and Cork cities. His name was Thomas Sherlock Mrs. Sherlock, the mother of John, was a remarkable woman and could speak seven different languages. Mr. Sherlock received his education at Trinity college, Dublin, studying for two professions, ministry and medicine, but chose a farmer's life. He left Ireland in 1858, and after four months' sailing by way of Cape Horn arrived in New Zealand. He then engaged in farming, also took a prominent part in politics. Was justice of the peace, and in the absence of a clergyman was Lay Reader. Leaving New Zealand in 1872 he came to California and settled in Big Valley, where he lived for about three years engaged in raising sheep. Losing his band of sheep by the cold winter, he bought a few more and went to Shasta Co., and in 1880 came to Crow Creek valley, Montana, where he sold the sheep and bought a ranch of 480 acres, upon which his family now resides. He was taken sick with pneumonia in the same year, and after about a week's illness died July 18, 1880. Mrs. Sherlock, wife of John W. Sherlock, was formerly Miss Ann Purcell, a distant connection of the late Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati. She was married to Mr. Sherlock at Lismore, Ireland, in 1856. The family consists of 10 children, Jonathan W., being the eldest.

DANIEL J. STANNARD, Grace P. O., was born in Berkshire Co., Mass., June 30, 1845, and is a son of Daniel and Phebe Stannard, farmers. In 1865 he went to Michigan, where he worked at the carpenter trade until 1866, when he came to Montana and settled in the Homestake mines, in Jefferson Co. He has since been principally engaged in mining throughout the various parts of the territory; has visited Salt Lake and vicinity, also Pike's Peak and the country adjacent. He is now in company with Messrs. Wallace, Burton & Lewis, engaged in opening and developing the Alta mine, situated in the southern part of Jefferson Co., and showing fine prospects. Mr. Stannard is also interested with J. T.

Lewis in the raising of horses, and ranching on the Little Pipestone creek.

WM. T. SWEET, Boulder City, son of J. N. and Mary Sweet, was born in Scioto Co., O., August 27, 1838, and remained in that section of country until 1866, when he removed to Montana. During his residence here he has engaged in merchandising and mining. For eight years he has sold goods in Boulder valley. Mr. Sweet is a thorough business man who overcomes all obstacles. He can relate many interesting incidents of early life in Montana of Indian troubles, bear hunts, etc. He is at this time proprietor of Boulder Hot Springs; has a large hotel and pays attention to the wants of his friends and the health seeking public. He has at this place a bath house containing six large baths and adjoining dressing-rooms; also a very spacious plunge bath for swimming purposes, 70x20 feet and five feet deep—a most delightful place for bathing. The curative properties of this water are wonderful. One gentleman who, when he came, was so ill with rheumatism that he had to be carried daily on a stretcher to the bath, became able to walk about and was comparatively well in two weeks' time. In a word, Boulder Hot Springs is one of the real health resorts of Montana. It is located two miles east of Boulder City.

J. M. D. TAYLOR, P. O. Radersburg, ranchman, was born in Franklin Co., Ky., December 27, 1832; moved with his parents to Clinton Co., Ill., in 1835; went to Kansas in 1855; returned to Illinois in 1857, where he resided until 1864, when he left en route to Montana. He arrived at Alder Gulch in August, 1864, mined there until 1865, when he moved to Grizzly Gulch, Last Chance, where he prospected. The following two years he prospected and mined in what is now Meagher county, and in the fall of 1867 came to the Boulder. From 1871 to the fall of 1880 he resided at Jefferson City. In November, 1880, he was elected Probate Judge and moved to Radersburg, where he acted as ex-officio Clerk and Recorder. He served two years as Superintendent of Schools, being elected in 1870, and was Justice of the Peace at Jefferson City for nine years. Mr. Taylor has 640 acres on White Tail Deer creek, inclosed as a horse-ranch. His range is also inclosed. J. A. Erhardt, his assistant, has large cattle interests also.

ANDREW T. THOMPSON, P. O. Beaver creek, was born in Rock Co., Wis., April 14, 1844; son of David and Caroline (Lewis) Thompson; lived with parents until 18 years of age, when he went to Minnesota, but the Indians becoming troublesome, he returned to his native State, and in 1861 joined the Union army, enlisting in Company D, Second Wisconsin Infantry. He was promoted to corporal, and when his time of enlistment had expired, he re-enlisted in the Second Wisconsin Cavalry, and was corporal in that regiment also. At the close of the war he returned to Wisconsin, and in the spring of 1866 came to Beaver Creek, Jefferson Co., took up a ranch and has since bought 160 acres more, and added thereto. Mr. Thompson was married to Cora B. Filson, December 11, 1880. They have one boy, named Alvin L., born March 21, 1880.

BENJAMIN TOWNSLEY, P. O. Radersburg, arrived at Deer Lodge, Mont., August 15, 1862. The years were spent in mining, prospecting, hauling provisions, etc., in various localities in the territory, until the spring of 1868, when he settled on his present ranch, which he purchased of A. J. Pease. Mr. Townsley was born in La Chine, Canada East, January 25, 1840, and spent his boyhood days at home until 18 years of age, when he engaged in railroading in Wisconsin and Missouri, and continued until his removal to Montana. He was married April 5, 1866, at Gallatin City, to Lovira Parker, of Gate City. Mr. and Mrs. Townsley are the parents of seven children: Ella, Emma, Hester Elizabeth, Walter Benjamin, Mattie, Joseph and Mabel. Mrs. Townsley was born in Van Buren Co., Ia., and in the fall of 1865 came to Gate City, Mont., where she remained until her marriage. The family own one of the best improved and finest farms in the Missouri valley.

S. F. TUTTLE, P. O. Fish Creek, son of David and Lucinda Tuttle, was born in Marion Co., Ia., July 21, 1848, and remained in said county and State until 1863, with parents. He removed to Colorado that year, and thence to California, where he remained six months. In 1864 he came to Montana and located at Alder Gulch, where he engaged in placer mining. In 1868 he removed to Fish Creek, where he settled with his father. In 1868 he went to Butte City, where he engaged in mining until 1870, when he returned to the old homestead, and remained there during the winters of 1871-72. Taking another trip to California he stayed six months, and again returned home to Fish Creek, where he remained until after his marriage in 1873. In 1874 he went to Little Pipestone, where he again engaged in mining, clearing on an average seven dollars per day; but was not long in this place before he had to remove his wife and family to a place of safety on account of the Indians, who were then raiding the country. He therefore returned to Fish Creek, but a year afterward he again went to Pipestone and worked there until the spring of 1877. The diggings were rich then at Pipestone. In 1877 he bought his father's homestead, where he has since remained, engaging in farming and stock-raising. Mr. T. owns 141 acres of deeded land, and 359 acres desert claim; is now gardening to a considerable extent. He grows cabbage, peas, beans, turnips, strawberries, gooseberries, currants, etc., in abundance. Mr. Tuttle, in company with two brothers, owns about 500 head of cattle and fifty head of horses. He believes stock-raising to be the most profitable business in this country. He says when he first came to this country in 1864 farming was not carried on, and people did not think they could make a success of it, but in 1865 many began to raise potatoes and other vegetables most successfully. This led to other branches of farming, which has proved to be one of the most successful industries in the Territory. Mr. S. F. Tuttle was married to Miss D. J. Butt, March 16, 1878. Mrs. Tuttle, daughter of Jones and Luana Butt, was born in Newton county, Mo., January 12, 1855; removed to Montana Territory in 1866, and was educated in Helena at the public schools. Mr. and Mrs. T. are both members of the M. E. Church. They have four children living, three boys and one girl.

W. J. WARD, P. O. Woodville, was born in Ireland, August 15, 1823. In his native country he followed mining until 39 years of age, when he came to the United States and worked in the mines at New Castle, Penn., Midland mines in Maryland and at Rock Springs, Wy. T., at which latter place he built and operated the Wyoming House, which cost about $10,000, and was consumed by fire in 1876. He then went to Green river, where he had a hotel called the Ward House; thence into the Sweetwater country and followed mining; then worked and mined at various places until 1879, when he came to Butte City and soon after struck the extension of the 4th of July mine, and it being situated near Woodville he moved there and engaged in the mercantile, liquor and hotel business, which he still continues, and also owns the Toreza, Monitor, Parnell, Orphan Boy, Enterprise and Silver Thread mines. Mr. Ward was married in Scotland in 1856 to Miss Toreza Jordan, by whom he has six children.

A. E. WELLS, Radersburg, is a native of Connecticut, and was born January 14, 1840. His parents were Rossetter and Emily B. Wells, farmers, residing at Weathersfield, where his father died. Mr. Wells received a good common school education, and when about 15 years of age engaged in the drug business, at which he continued for eleven years, at Hartford and New Haven, Conn. He went to Brooklyn, N. Y., and two years afterward came to what is known as Mountain City, a town seven miles from Helena. After operating some time in mines there, he came to Radersburg in 1869, where he invested in mining property, and has since been connected with the mines here in various ways. He has filled the office of Clerk of the District Court, Third Judicial District, a position of trust and importance, since 1878.

FRANK WELLS, merchant, Radersburg, born March 29, 1828, at Weathersfield, Conn.; passed his boyhood days on the farm; in 1844 commenced the blacksmith trade; proceeded to California in 1849, where he mined for six years, and engaged at his trade for four years. In 1859 he visited his native State, where he remained until 1864. He was married to Miss Maria S. Perry, May 18, 1861, at New Haven, Conn., of which State her parents were natives. In 1864 the family set forth on their trip to Montana. At Lake Pepin they joined an emigrant train of 100 wagons, crossed the Missouri at Fort Rice, thence along the Cannon Ball river to the Little Missouri, where they were attacked by 3,000 Sioux, who gave battle for three days, when they retired toward the Yellowstone country. To avoid a future meeting of this character, the train moved to the mouth of the Yellowstone, thence up the Missouri to Benton (Fort Union), en route to Last Chance, and arrived on the present site of Helena, September 22, 1864. Mr. Wells shortly after this moved to Jefferson City. In November, 1865, he was elected Clerk of Jefferson county and filled that office for four terms. He next engaged in the stock business for six years, and in the spring of 1878 established his present business, having an annual trade of over $40,000.

DAVID T. WILLIAMS, P. O. Radersburg, son of Thomas and Rachel Williams, was born eleven miles from Swansea, South Wales, Great Britain, in 1835. His father was a farmer by occupation. In 1856 Mr. Williams left Wales and came to Pennsylvania, where he staid for three months and thence went to Pomeroy, O., six months afterward moving to Mason City, W. Va., where he was employed in mining. In the spring of 1858 he moved to Surrey Co., Cal., and mined there until 1863, when he came to Reese River, remaining at that place for two years, mining most of the time. Here he bought a team and loaded for Salt Lake, and at the latter place married and settled down for about two years. From Salt Lake he went to the upper end of Muhlad valley, and began raising stock. Came to Crow Creek in 1870 and bought a ranch of 160 acres, where he lived five or six years and which he still owns. He entered his present ranch of 200 acres under the Desert Act. The latter ranch is nearly all fenced and under cultivation, and has good buildings and improvements. Mr. Williams was married to Miss Anna Davis in September, 1865, and has six children living: Emma, Rachel, Eddie, Nettie, David and Nellie. Two children are deceased.

WM. U. WILLIAMS, Radersburg, was born at Napierville, Canada, in 1832. He is the son of Winslow and Lucinda (Matthews) Williams and his father was a hop-grower by occupation. He received a common school education, remaining with his parents until 18 years of age, where he entered a store as clerk and continued in that employment for ten years. Learning the carpenter's trade he went to New York in 1848 and worked in that capacity for about two years, when he went to Aurora, Ill. After two or three years he moved to Chippewa City, Wis., afterward coming to Montana and finally settling near Radersburg. In 1869 he married Mrs. Pool, of Indiana. There are five children: Laura Pool, Winslow Williams, Bismarck Williams, Arthur Williams and Frank Leslie Williams.

THOMAS WRIGHT, P. O. Woodville, was born in Canada, June 21, 1827, and is a son of Thomas and Eliza Wright. He was reared on a farm and received a fair business education. He came to the United States and settled in California at an early day; followed mining in the various camps of that State, and from there went to British Columbia, where he mined during 1861-2, afterward engaging in the same business at Placerville, in the Boise Basin until 1866, at Oregon Gulch Cave and in the vicinity of Canyon Ferry and Belmont, Mont. In March, 1882, he settled at Woodville, Jefferson Co., Mont., and engaged in mercantile business, which he still continues. He is also postmaster at that place, having been appointed to that position in August, 1882. Mr. Wright has suffered many hardships during the years spent on the frontier, and has all the experiences of an Old Timer of the mountains.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

LEWIS AND CLARKE COUNTY.

JOHN W. ACKLEY, Cartersville, was born in Oxford Co., Me., September 16, 1835, where his parents, John and Vesta (Abbott) Ackley resided. He remained in Maine engaged in farming until 27 years of age, when he went to California, thence to Elk city, Idaho, where he followed mining a short time. He next went to Oregon, and in 1864 returned to Boise city, Idaho, where he spent six months in mining; returned to Oregon, and thence to the mines in the British possessions with a pack train of potatoes, for which he was offered $1 per pound before reaching camp. After remaining three months he went to Blackfoot city, where he engaged in mining, and he has since visited and worked in nearly all the mines of any importance in the West. He has also been engaged in trading with the Indians at various times and places, and oftentimes found himself in perilous positions.

ABNER ADAMS, Pear creek valley, was born in Otsego Co., N. Y., May 12, 1829. In 1847 he migrated to Wisconsin, and in 1857 moved to Iowa, remaining in that State until 1867, when he came to Montana. Here he first resided on Ten Mile, near Holter's sawmill, and in 1868 moved to Pear creek valley,—during the latter year taking up the ranch which now consists of 600 acres, all being fenced, and is used for a hay and stock farm. Mr. Adams was married in 1854 to Arabelle Wheeler, a native of Massachusetts. They are the parents of two children—Ella and Emma.

HENRY ADDONIS, Helena, was born in Clay Co., Mo., October 1, 1842. In 1855 his parents moved to Atchison, Kan., but he soon after returned to Missouri to finish his education; remained four years, and during the rebellion served in the Confederate service for a period of two years. In March, 1864, he went to Salt Lake City, and after spending a year in Utah, came to Montana, arriving in Helena April 11, 1865. He was engaged in mining for a time and in 1865 and 1866 was interested in the mercantile business in Deer Lodge county. Selling out his business, he returned to Helena and was employed by Benjamin Holliday as agent and also as messenger between Helena and Salt Lake. He afterward sold goods for some time and was then appointed clerk of the Probate Court, which position he held some three or four years, after which he engaged in business for himself and is now interested in real estate and stock, having formerly been largely interested in quartz mining.

ISAAC R. ALDEN, Helena, clerk of the Supreme Court of the Territory for the past thirteen years, was born in Chautauqua Co., N. Y., in 1832. His father removed to Cold Water, Mich., in 1836, where he was raised. He received a good common school education and finally, after attending the Albion academy five years, graduated with honor. After leaving school he was engaged in mercantile pursuits at Cold Water until 1853, when lured by the golden fields of California, he started on an overland trip thereto. On his arrival at Council Bluffs, Ia., he was induced to accept a position as book-keeper in the who'esale outfitting establishment of Stutesman & Donnell, which position he held until 1860. At the breaking out of the Pike's Peak gold excitement in 1860, he left Council Bluffs in charge of a train of merchandise belonging to Baldwin, Pegram & Co. In Colorado he engaged in mining, but not being as successful as he had anticipated, he left for the newly discovered gold fields of Montana in 1863, and settled at Virginia City. The first year he engaged in mining. In 1864 he was appointed by Governor Edgerton a justice of the peace for Alder Gulch. This position he held until 1866—his court during this period was a busy one. He succeeded in the administration of justice among the turbulent crowds of miners to the general satisfaction of the community. In January, 1870, the office of clerk of the Supreme Court becoming vacant, Judge Alden was appointed by the full bench of judges to be its clerk, and has for over thirteen years past held the position. Judge Alden is a lineal descendant of John Alden, a pilgrim who came over the sea in the Mayflower. His father, Dr. Hiram Alden, was a noted physician in his day and practiced his profession for over forty years in New York and Michigan. He was also the first representative of Branch Co., Mich., in the lower house of the State legislature, and died in Detroit while a member. Judge Alden's mother was a Miss Melita Huntley, born and married in Herkimer Co., N. Y., and was related to Mrs. Lydia Huntley Sigourney, the poetess, of Hartford, Conn. To this marriage were born four sons and five daughters, of whom one son and one daughter are deceased. A brother of the judge, Lyman P. Alden, has been for twelve years past, and now is, warden of the State penitentiary at Jackson, Mich., and another brother, Rev. Willis Alden, is a Baptist clergyman at Salem, Ore., to which place he went in 1850, among the first white settlers there. In 1867 Judge Alden was married at Virginia City to Miss Frances J. Lautheaume. They have two children, Alma and Daniel W.

WILLIAM H. ALLEN, Helena, son of Israel and Sarah (Pfeifer) Allen, was born near Mt Jackson, Shenandoah Co., Va., July 27, 1827. Mr. Allen remained on the farm with his father until 1846, at which time he went to Laporte, Ind., and engaged in the mercantile business and also engaged in farming during the succeeding thirteen years. In 1859 he disposed of his property at Laporte, went to Colorado, where he was engaged in mining at Gregory and Golden City until 1863, when he moved to Virginia City, M. T. There he carried on a grocery store until 1866, when he moved to Helena, where he at once established his feed and sale stable. Mr. Allen, although a man wishing to avoid such sights, has been a witness to several hangings of desperate characters both by officers of the law and vigilantes.

G. W. ALLERTON, Pear Creek Valley, son of Wm. Henry and Adaline (Shaw) Allerton, of English-Scotch descent, was born at Montreal, Canada. Mr. Allerton's father was a sea-captain on the Pacific ocean in the East India trade until the last twelve years, since which time he has been engaged in farming; he also has a brother who is at present captain on one of the steamers of the White Star line. He left Canada in 1875, came direct to Helena, traveling overland, and has been ranching in Prickly Pear valley most of the time since; he also owns a ranch of 160 acres in Madison valley.

LEWIS C. ANTHONY, resident partner at the Standard mill, 12 miles northeast of Helena, was born in Buchanan Co., Mo, and passed his youth at St. Joseph. He came to Montana in 1864, spent the winter in Gallatin valley, and April 2, 1865, located at Helena and engaged in farming. He learned the trade of milling in the States, and consequently was not familiar with farm work, and made poor success at it. However, he raised some grain and vegetables, and sold potatoes as high as 30 cents per pound. Mr. Anthony was married July 31, 1878, to Bettie Duff who was an infant when she crossed the plains to Montana. Mr. Anthony's father was born near Boonesboro, Tenn., and his mother in Platte Co., Mo. They were married at Sparta, Mo., and raised a family of nine children, six of whom are living. L. C. Anthony was educated in a select school. His father was a prominent politician; was county judge for many years, also mayor of St. Joseph, Mo., and died in Lewis and Clarke Co., Montana, in the fall of 1868. Sanford, Evans & Anthony are proprietors of the Standard mills, Pear Creek cañon. The mills were erected near the Missouri river in 1867 by Sandford, Evans & Hartwell, who at the same time provided water-power, with a head of nine feet. The mills are furnished with two run of stones—one on middlings, and one on feed, and machinery capable of manufacturing 80 to 90 sacks of flour per day. The brands of flour are much prized, and the product of the mills find a ready market.

W. H. ARMOR (deceased).—This gentleman was born at Hollidaysburg, Penn., on the 18th of August, 1844. He was taken to Clayton Co., Ia., and when but 10 years of age was moved again, this time to St. Joseph, Mo., at which place he resided until 1861. When the call came for volunteers in our civil war, Mr. Armor responded, and enlisting in the 1st Missouri Infantry, went to the seat of war. In a short time he was promoted to lieutenant, and did staff duty during the remainder of the war. In the latter part of his service he was the acting adjutant-general on the staff of Gen. Bonneville, known to all Montanaians as a great explorer in this section, in the time of the Northwestern Fur Co. From 1865 to 1868 he was in Pennsylvania, dealing in oil, and early in the spring of the latter year came by steamer to Montana. He for two years was the secretary of a ditch company at Eldorado Bar; then foreman in a wagon making establishment at Helena until 1879, when he received the appointment of deputy United States internal revenue collector. The following obituary notice was published in a Helena paper June 25, 1884: "He served, during the war, in the 1st Missouri regiment, re-enlisting as a veteran in the 51st Missouri. He rose from the ranks to the position of First Lieutenant, and for some time occupied the position of Ass't Adj't General, with the Division Headquarters then at St. Louis. After the war he came to Montana, and has been a resident of Helena ever since. For several years he has been Deputy U. S. Collector at Helena, filling that responsible position satisfactorily to the Government and to the people with whom he daily came in contact. He was a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, being a Past Master of Morning Star Lodge, No. 5, High Priest of Helena Royal Arch Chapter, No. 2; T. I. M., of Helena Council, No. 9, and Captain General of Helena Commandery, No. 2, K. T. He was also Adjutant of Wadsworth Post, No. 8, Grand Army of the Republic. He was a man of thorough integrity and untarnished honesty, and had many warm personal friends in this community that knew him so long and so well. An aged father and mother and devoted sister (Mrs. John Stedman) ministered to him constantly during his short illness."

WILLIAM R. ARMSTRONG, Helena, was born at Chicago, Ill., October 30, 1855. He is a son of John and Henrietta (Wil-on) Armstrong, of Scotch and Irish descent, who settled at Chicago in 1850, where they have ever since resided, Mr. Armstrong, Sr., being engaged in the grain business in that city. The grandfather was captain of the 6th British Fusileers and died in London, England, at an advanced age, from the effects of wounds received in South America. All the relatives on father's and mother's side have been either lawyers or soldiers. William was educated principally in the old Kinzie school at Chicago, and was also a student of Bryant & Stratton's Commercial College for several months. In the year 1870 he went to Arcola, Ill., and resided there on a farm until 1874, then went to Dakota, then returned to Chicago to engage in the wholesale hardware business with Edwin Hunt's Sons, remaining with them eight months. Leaving them he became a student of law under Robert Rae for four years, and was admitted to the bar February 7, 1879, by the appellate court sitting at Mt. Vernon, Ill. After practicing law for one year at Chicago, abandoned it on account of failing eyesight. Then returned to Arcola and engaged in mercantile work in company with his brother and continued in the business for two years, when he started for Montana, arriving at Bozeman, June 7, 1883, immediately forming a partnership, for the practice of law, with William A. Imes. Mr. Armstrong was married, January 6, 1880, to Miss Anamode Morgan, of Bloomington, Ill. In July, 1881, Mr. Armstrong organized a company of militia at Arcola and was elected captain, and on the 17th of May following was promoted to be major of the 8th regiment I. N. G., which position he resigned in the spring of 1883. He is also a member of Arcola Lodge, No. 366, of Arcola Chapter, No. 163, and of Melita Commandery.

SHIRLEY C. ASHBY, Helena, was born in Fauquier Co., Va., August 10, 1842. At the proper age he was sent to the public schools of the county, where he remained until 1862, when he joined the 6th Virginia cavalry and served through the war with General Lee. In August, 1865, he left his native State and went to St. Louis, where he entered a commercial college. After graduating he engaged as steamboat clerk until 1867, then came by steamer to Benton, M. T., and entered the employ of I. G. Baker & Bros. At the end of two years a man was wanted to take goods to the Blackfoot camp. It being considered dangerous, it was hard to find an appropriate person to go. Mr. Ashby volunteered, made a very succe-sful trip, and immediately was made a partner in the firm. In 1870 he sold out at Benton and went to Helena, where he was engaged in keeping books for different firms for three years. At the end of this time (in 1873) he was appointed by the governor as assessor, and at the next election was elected to that position and retained it till 1876. In 1875 he started an insurance agency, and was very successful in this business, to which he still attends. He was married in 1876 to Miss Emma Guy, of Huntsville, Mo., and has at present two children. He operated some in supplies and produce for the Canadian mounted police. In 1869 he became the agent for the Mitchell wagon, which business has grown under his hands to great proportions. Mr. Ashby is a large owner of real estate in this vicinity, and is an enterprising and upright man. To his mother and uncle, whom he brought to Helena in their old age, and to whom he attended carefully till their death, Mr. Ashby gives all the credit of what he is and may be, for they taught him truth, honesty and perseverance.

J. B. ATCHISON, M. D., Helena. Dr. Atchison lived at his home in Clay Co., Mo., where he was born on the 9th of April, 1843, until he was 11 years of age. At the age spoken of he went to Pleasant Ridge College, remaining two years, and was then sent to the William Jewel College, at Liberty, Mo., and was there until the breaking out of the Civil War. He joined General Price's army as a member of the First Missouri Regiment. Early in 1865 he was captured at Fort Blakely (near Mobile) and was for one month a prisoner at Ship Island, then was paroled and went home. Soon afterward he went to Canada, and at Woodstock entered the Literary Institute and was a year there. Returning to the United States, he entered the Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, and took a winter's course of study. He finally graduated from the Long Island Medical College, of Brooklyn, in 1867, then took a full course at Bellevue Hospital, New York, and the next winter hung out his shingle at St. Joseph, Mo., In 1875 he moved to St. Louis, and in 1880 to Helena, Mont. In 1875 he was married to Miss Jennie Toole, of St. Joseph, a daughter of Judge Toole, of this Territory. They have six children. Dr. Atchison belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and is also a member of the A. O. U. W.

E. BALLOU, Helena, was born at Zanesville, Ohio, July 9, 1829. He received his education in that state, attending the Ohio University and Hiram College, and during his attendance at the latter was a classmate with the late President Garfield, Mrs. Garfield and General Hazen. After leaving college he published a paper known as the Newsboy, at Malta, Ohio, for two years, after which he went to Illinois and engaged in teaching several years. Then returning to Ohio he enlisted in the Sixty-fifth Ohio Volunteers, and was given charge of the division mail service. Being sent back in charge of mail, he was captured by John Morgan and served one day in a forced march under him. Having considerable money given him by his comrades to take home for them, he fortunately saved it by putting it in his boot. After serving in the army between one and two years, he joined the Christian Commission under Geo. H. Stewart, and after the war engaged in teaching and farming, being also interested in the real estate business four years. In 1874 he came to Helena, Mont., going thence to Wyoming Territory, where he was given charge of the Indian schools of the Shoshone and Arrapahoe tribes, located at Fort Washakie. He remained in that position two years, then took several Indian children to Carlisle, Pa., and visiting Washington was appointed by President Garfield as Recorder of the Helena Land Office, which position he still occupies. Mr Ballow was married on the 25th day of March, 1856, to Miss Laura A. Clark, of Trumbull Co., Ohio, by whom he has three children: Louie, Mary and Jennie; the latter being now in attendance at the Woman's Medical College in Philadelphia.

ROBERT BARNES, Helena, was the third child of a family of eight children of C. C. and Sarah Barnes. Robert was born March 20, 1840. When about fourteen years old he went on the lakes as a sailor boy, continuing in that occupation until 1864 when the great excitement over the gold fields of Montana attracted his attention, and he determined to take the advice of the veteran journalist Greeley and "Go West." With an ox team outfit, and in company with about 300 teams, he crossed the plains to Virginia city, and on arrival, immediately commenced working in the mines at $6 per day in gold. In the fall of 1865 Mr. Barnes moved to Helena and freighted from that place to Diamond city, Virginia city, etc. He soon abandoned freighting, and in the summer of 1868 staked a claim and commenced placer mining at New York gulch. This venture did not prove successful, however, and he located on a piece of land adjoining his present home. In 1870 he sold out and returned to Ohio, but remained only three months, when his fondness for Montana persuaded him to return, and he purchased his present ranch of 220 acres, upon which he has since resided. In 1881 Mr. Barnes erected his present residence, a view of which can be seen on another page in this volume. The farm is under a good state of cultivation. In addition to his ranch he has an 80 acre tract of hay land. In 1877 he was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Carlin. To them have been born two children, Robert C. and James.

IRA BATEMAN, Helena, was born in Chenango Co., N. Y., April 30, 1811, where his parents, David and Margaret (Campbell) Bateman resided. He remained in York state, engaged in farming, until 1855, when he went to Illinois, remained there on a farm until 1860, at which time he went to Pine Island, Minn., and engaged in the grocery business. In January, 1862, he enlisted as private in the Fifth Minnesota Infantry and served one year, being discharged because of disability, but re-enlisted in 1864 in the Engineer Corps, and discharged at the close of the war in 1865. In May, 1866, he came to Helena, where he worked for a number of years at carpenter work. Mr. Bateman was married at Bainbridge, N. Y., in 1840, to Miss Eliza Hoffman. He is now serving his fourth term as Justice of the Peace of Helena, and although now in his seventy-third year is hale and hearty.

CHAS. L. BAYHA, Gloster, was born at St. Louis, Mo., on December 1, 1860, and is a son of Charles and Mary (McClure) Bayha. He was engaged as bookkeeper in a pork packing house at St. Louis until 1880; then came to Montana, and has since had charge of the branch store of Conrad Muth & Bach, at Gloster. He was also appointed postmaster January 1, 1883, and is interested in mining prospects.

E. BEACH, P. O. Florence, was born April 28, 1837, in Portage Co., Ohio, and is the son of David and Mary Beach, who were natives of Connecticut. When he was two years old his parents moved to Washington Co., Ia., then a territory. Being thrown upon his own resources early in life, Mr. Beach moved about seeking better fields for labor. First he went to Kansas in 1857, then to Missouri in 1858, to Colorado in the spring of 1860 and mined for a time, and in April, 1863, started for what was then called East Bannack, Idaho. He arrived at the latter place June 1, at the same time with the discoverers of Alder Gulch, and with them he returned and engaged in mining during the summer. In the fall he returned to Missouri with a party of sixteen, armed with double barreled shot-guns and revolvers as a means of defense and protection. They proceeded on horseback to Salt Lake, thence by stage to Missouri. On his first trip into Montana, Mr. Beach drove a mule team, and from the States to Colorado he drove oxen. April 17, 1864, Mr. Beach was united in marriage with Alice Gray Vivian, a native of Missouri and daughter of Martin and Susan Vivian. On the 23d of May following he started on the return trip to Montana with his bride, arrived September 5, and began farming and stock-raising in the Ruby Valley. In 1865 he made hay in the Prickly Pear Valley, to which he removed in 1866 and in which he has since resided. From 1867 to 1869 he engaged in mining off the McCune bar, and in the latter year purchased a livery and feed stable in Helena. This business not being suited to his tastes, he sold it and in September, 1870, visited Oregon and brought back a band of horses and sold them. Returning in 1871, he brought in another band, and in 1872, after a short visit in the East, disposed of a band of horses at Salt Lake City. He afterward visited the geysers in the Yellowstone National Park, and in 1880 went to California and purchased a band of sheep. In 1881 he purchased the first blooded sheep brought to Helena, and has since been engaged in the sheep trade, now owning several thousand head. Mr. Beach represented his district in the eleventh and twelfth sessions of the Legislature, and was elected County Commissioner in 1875, serving three years. He has two sons and one daughter by his first marriage. His second marriage occurred October 15, 1872, to Mrs. T. M. Vivian Chinn, sister of his first wife.

ALEX H. BEATTIE, deceased, was born at Rockford, Winnebago Co., Ill., March 23, 1843, received an education in the schools of his native State, and at the proper age entered the office of William Lathrop, since representing that district in Congress, to engage in the study of law. He was admitted to the bar in 1861, but instead of entering upon the practice of his profession he enlisted in the Seventy-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, served in the Army of the Cumberland, and was promoted through successive grades to Lieutenant Colonel of his regiment. He was a participant in all the battles of his department, and was wounded at Mission Ridge, Stone River, Kenesaw and Nashville. Upon his muster out of the service he returned to Rockford, going thence to Montana. He was admitted to practice in the courts of Montana, and held several offices besides those already mentioned. He in time acquired large interests in stock raising and other important enterprises throughout the territory. The following sketch was published in the Herald at Helena, December 20, 1884: "Coming to Montana first when but a young man, in 1865, he settled at Virginia City, and engaged with the firm of John S. Rockafellow as bookkeeper. In 1867-8, and until the transfer of the Montana Post to Helena, and to its subsequent suspension in 1869, he was its able local editor. After his removal to Helena he was twice elected to the Montana Legislature and Council, and served as a member of the House at Virginia City for two sessions. About 1868-70 he was appointed Deputy Clerk under B. S. Wade, who was Clerk of the Third Judicial District Court under Chief Justice Wade. In December, 1871, Col. Beattie was appointed Clerk of the Third Judicial District by Chief Justice Wade, a position he held and honorably filled for thirteen years, until his death, which took place at Helena, December 20, 1884. From an early day he commenced the loaning of money, which business extended to almost every county in the Territory. It is true of Colonel Beattie that while suffering, even unto death, from wounds received in defense of his country and his flag, for which ample provision was made by the general government to recognize by honorable pensions, he never made an application to be placed upon the pension rolls of the country, although thrice over entitled. It was only about ten months ago that the Colonel married, taking for his young bride one of Helena's most charming belles, Miss Maggie Carroll, whom he leaves with almost the bridal wreath upon her brow, a crushed and broken-hearted wife. He leaves father and mother and brothers in the State of Illinois, at or near Rockford, where he was born."

LOUIS BEAUPRE, Helena, was born in Canada East November 1, 1846, where his parents, Joseph and Josette (Deusere) Beaupre, resided. While in Canada he spent several years at the plumber's trade and clerking in dry goods store. In 1869 he came to Montana, and was engaged in a store with his brother one year at Pioneer city, and in the same occupation at Cedar creek about six months. He then took charge of the Western Hotel for one year at Frenchtown, after which he went to Missoula and engaged in the liquor business, and "went broke" in six months. He then engaged with government survey party for two years, after which he took charge of the furnace in a smelter near Helena, and in the spring of 1874 engaged with E. G. McLain & Co., remaining with them three years as herder and driver. From 1877 to August, 1878, he was employed in the Cave saloon at Helena, and at this time commenced business for himself, and still continues as liquor dealer and stock grower. Mr. Beaupre was married at Helena on the 3d day of October, 1880, to Miss Louisa Hebert.

NATHAN BELL, Helena, was born in New York city March 30, 1857, opposite West Point institute. When 11 years old he went to Marshall Co., Ill.; thence to Des Moines, Ia., and after a short time there came to Helena, M. T., where he commenced freighting between that point and Corinne, and also to Cow Island and Fort Peck. This he carried on for four years, when he took charge of herd of cattle for Elmer Clark, which position he held for three years. He freighted with his own team between Helena and the coal banks, and subsequently bought a ranch on the south fork of Sun river, which he devoted principally to raising wheat and oats. He sold the ranch in September, 1883, and then removed to Helena. He married Miss Susan Goss September 21, 1881. Mr. Bell was appointed deputy sheriff for Sun river district for 1881-2. He is at present engaged in freighting to all points in the territory.

STEPHEN BERUBE, P. O. Florence, was born in Canada October 8, 1844. In 1865 he moved to Michigan, where he was engaged in lumbering at Saginaw until 1868, at which time he came west and spent one year at Helena mining. He then went to Washington Territory, but returned to Cedar creek, Missoula Co., in 1870, where he engaged in mining, after which he spent three years on the Yellowstone engaged in prospecting, mining and hunting. He went thence to the Kootenai mines; but in 1874 returned and engaged in farming on the Sun river. Mr. Berube was married on the 30th day of December, 1879, to Miss Julia Tulolville, at Sun river.

MAJOR JOHN E. BLAINE, Helena, a brother of James G. Blaine, was born in Washington Co., Pa., April 26, 1840. He received an academic education in his native State, and in 1857 went to Leavenworth, Kan., and accepted the position of deputy clerk of the U. S. District Court of the First District of Kansas, afterward serving as clerk of the U. S. Courts for that District, and was also there engaged in the wholesale grocery business. In 1865 he went to New Orleans and remained until 1867, being at that time appointed captain in the quartermaster's department of the U. S. army, stationed at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and Fort Russell, Wy. T. Resigning his commission he located at Chicago and remained until 1871, being at that time appointed Surveyor-General of Montana Territory. This position he resigned in December, 1873, and received the appointment of First Superintendent of Construction of the U S. Assay office at Helena; but prior to any work being done he was tendered and accepted the position of Paymaster in the U. S. army, with headquarters at Helena, where he has since remained and continued in that position, his duties including the paying of troops stationed at Forts Shaw, Benton, Ellis, Maginnis, Assiniboine, Missoula and Logan, as also the summer camps from various posts that visit his district. Major Blaine was married in Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1863, to Miss Alice Fenton, an estimable lady and a native of Pittsburgh. Major and Mrs. Blaine are the parents of three children: James Fenton Blaine, Marie Louise and Eleanor Blaine.

L. W. BLISS, Helena, was born in New York city April 23, 1835. His parents were John S. and R. A. Bliss. He remained in his native city until 1856 engaged in mercantile business. At that time he went to Leavenworth, Kan., and was one of the pioneers of that State. While there he turned his attention to exchange and real estate. In 1858 he went to Colorado on the memorable Pike's Peak expedition, and in Colorado was one of the organizers of the Provisional Government, filling the office of Acting Governor for eight months. At the breaking out of the great civil war he raised a company of 146 men for the Confederate army, and entered the service with them, remaining in the ranks until the close of the war, and disbanding the command on the Rio Grande. In New York, after the war, he again engaged in mercantile business, and in 1877 returned to Colorado, where he joined the survey party in the interest of the Utah and Northern Railway. Arriving in Helena he engaged in mining pursuits, and has so continued to the present time. He is now interested with other parties in ditching Deep creek for the purpose of irrigating the vast tract adjacent to the Teton river.

H. D. BLOSSOM, Sun River Crossing, was born January 5, 1843. On the death of his parents in 1851, he went to St. Louis, Mo., where he resided with his uncle and attended school. After leaving school he began piloting on the Mississippi, running between St. Louis and Memphis in the packet trade, and was thus engaged until 1860. He then enlisted in company G, 2d Mississippi Light Artillery, Captain Walker commanding; served through the war, was engaged with Sherman on his march to the sea, and after his discharge returned to St. Louis. In 1867 he came to Sun River, where he worked at various occupations until 1870, when he opened a saloon, which he carried on for two years; worked in wagon shop one year, then engaged with Charles A. Bull, and conducted hotel with saloon and livery attached. After running it two years he sold out and returned to St. Louis, thence moved to Fort Benton and had charge of hotel for R. R. Mills for one year, returned to Sun River, conducted the hotel for Largent Bros. for two years and then purchased cows, with which he carried on the dairy business two years, when he sold out in 1881, and opened a saloon next to the Largent Hotel. His marriage took place February 12, 1879.

GEORGE BOOKER, Helena, was born in St. Louis in the year 1840, and received a fair business education. At thirteen years of age he went to Iowa and remained two years, returning to St. Louis, where he remained one year clerking and in like pursuits. From 1859 to 1864 he was employed in the various pursuits of a Western life at Denver, Blue River and Georgia gulches, and in the latter year came to Virginia City, M. T., where he turned his attention to freighting for two years. He then established a livery and feed stable at that point, but closed out eighteen months later, and removed to Helena, where he engaged in the same business, and so continued for two years. He afterward clerked in a grocery store for a short time. In 1868 he embarked in the auction and commission business, which he still continues, having formed the present partnership in 1872. Mr. Booker is married to Miss Mattie E. Walton, to whom two children were born. (Vide History of Societies.)

GEORGE E. BOOS, Helena, was born at Greenfield, Wis., on the 26th of March, 1852. When but two years old his mother died, and his father moved to Milwaukee, where the boy attended common school steadily for several years, and finished his education at Engleman's academy in 1872. He then went to Green Bay, Wis., and was for five years learning his present trade. He worked at this business at St. Louis and Louisville, Ky., for several years, and in 1876 at St. Louis, he married Miss Dora Bomsheim. Soon afterward he was given charge of the public printing for the state of Illinois until 1878. In 1879 he came to Helena and worked in the Herald office. He soon bought the bookbindery and has built up a large business.

ALEX. C. BOTKIN, Helena, was born at Madison, Wis., October 13, 1842. His father, Alexander Botkin, was a native of Kentucky, of Irish parentage while his mother, Jane Sinclair, was a native of Scotland. Mr. Botkin graduated from the State University of Wisconsin and subsequently from the law department of the University of Albany, N. Y. From 1867 to 1878 he was engaged in journalism upon the Chicago Times and the Milwaukee Sentinel. In 1878 he was appointed United States Marshal for Montana, and moved to the territory in the spring of that year; he was re-appointed in 1882. In the fall of that year he was the Republican candidate for delegate to Congress, but was defeated by Martin Maginnis, the nominee of the Democratic party. Mr. Botkin was married in 1872 to Miss Harriet E. Sherman, at Milwaukee, Wis. They are the parents of two children, a daughter born in 1873, and a son in 1875. Mr. Botkin has two brothers living, viz: Sinclair W., a lawyer at Minneapolis, and Col. Wm. Wallace Botkin, who was Lt. Col. of the 42d Wisconsin Infantry, and served during the war of the Rebellion, now residing at Deer Lodge, Mont., and is Deputy Superintendent of the U. S. penitentiary.

W. F. BOZAKIN, of Pear Creek Valley, was born Portland, Ore., in 1855 After living in Oregon for in seven years he went to Illinois, where he remained for three years, and then traveled in Kansas, Nevada and New Mexico on the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific as telegraph operator. Losing his hearing, he was compelled to quit telegraphy and came to Montana, where he has been engaged in raising stock and ranching. He has a ranch in the Judith basin, which he took up in 1881, and also has some livestock. He mined at Alder gulch in 1875–6, and also at French Bar, Washington gulch and Nevada creek mines. His father was editor of the Belleville Times, Ill., and his brother is editor of a paper at Boise City, Idaho. Mr. Bozakin is a newspaper man by profession, and has been correspondent for various papers since coming to the territory.

EDWARD W. BRECK, Helena, was born August 18, 1837, in Sullivan Co., N. H., and is the son of Henry and Sarah Breck. His father was a Bostonian and merchant. When Mr. Breck was ten or twelve years old, his father took him upon a farm, since which time he has made farming his main occupation. In 1859 E. W. made a visit to Polk Co., Ia., and returned home after six months. Three years later he again went to Iowa, spent two years, and in 1864 decided to go to Montana. He joined a train of 100 wagons, but nineteen wagons drew out before reaching their destination. Mr. Breck came direct to the Madison Valley, remained a few weeks, then went to Alder Gulch, thence to the Boulder to spend the winter. His next move was to Helena, where he found flour $100 to $110 per sack. He attempted to drive a team to Fort Benton, but the Indians killed ten men near where he camped and the owner of the team sold out. He then located in Helena for the summer and in the fall went to Virginia City to close up some unfinished business with his partner across the plains. In 1865 Mr. Breck located the ranch he now resides upon, of about 150 acres, well adapted to the growth of grain and vegetables common to Montana. In 1871 Mr. Breck visited his friends in the East, and July 27, 1873, married Eliza E. Ellis, daughter of William and Marcia Ellis, a native of New Hampshire.

G. M. BROWN, Pear Creek Valley, is a native of Kentucky, where he was born August 15, 1855. His parents were Lemuel S. and Margaret Brown, the former a mechanic by occupation. G. M. Brown went to Saline Co., Mo., where he remained eighteen months, and then returned to Kentucky. While in Missouri his father was killed and Mr. Brown returned to prosecute the party who murdered him. Leaving Kentucky a second time he came direct to Deer Lodge Valley, Mont., where he remained with his half brother until 1881, when he settled in Pear Creek Valley.

WILLIAM BROWN, Silver City, son of Andrew and Julia Brown, was born in Sweden, May 6, 1832. His father died in 1834. At ten years of age he went on board a ship and remained on the sea ten years. In 1852 he landed at New York city; proceeded thence to California, where he followed mining at Corna Camp and on Indian Creek and McCleland river. In 1858 he went to Oregon where he was occupied in mining and on boats on the Frazier river until 1861. The following year he spent at Elk City and Florence, Idaho, and the intervening time until 1863 he was engaged in Mining at Boise City. He then came to Alder Gulch and engaged in prospecting there until 1864 when he moved to Silver Creek, where he has since remained. In 1869 he bought his present ranch and in 1870 gave up mining and devoted his time to stock-raising and ranching with good success. Mr. Brown was married in 1872 to Miss Annie Tolset. They are the parents of five children.

CAPTAIN D. W. BUCK, Helena, is a native of New York State, and was born at Lancaster, Erie Co. His parents removed to Illinois during his early boyhood and he grew up on Fox River. In 1861, upon the breaking out of the war, he enlisted in the Eighth Illinois Cavalry, Co. E. He was promoted to First Lieutenant and afterward Captain of the same company. He served through the war, and there were few regiments which saw such constant active service. He was slightly wounded by a sabre cut. After the close of the war he returned to Illinois, and the following spring (1866) he started for Montana. There was a large train. Captain Mills, the veteran editor of Deer Lodge, was in the same train. They were not disturbed by Indians, and arrived on the Yellowstone in July of that year. Mr. Buck engaged in mining on the Yellowstone, and in the following year went to Lincoln Gulch. In 1870 he received the appointment of Deputy United States Marshal, and held that position seven years, most of the time having charge of all the Indian agencies from Fort Peck to the Blackfoot agency. He had charge of the trading post at Fort Assiniboine for one year, and since then has been engaged in stock raising. His ranch is on the Teton. Captain Buck is one of the old settlers of Montana, and is well and favorably known throughout the Territory.

MASSENA BULLARD, Helena, is the son of William L. and Annie F. Bullard, and was born in Missouri, October 7, 1850. In 1864 he came with his parents to Montana, arriving at Virginia City on the 10th of October. The winter of 1864–5 was passed in the Gallatin Valley, and in April, 1865, the family located in the Prickly Pear Valley, where they were among the very earliest settlers. Mr. Bullard attended the public and private schools of Helena, and afterward pursued the study of law in the office of Wolfolk & Toole. He was admitted to the bar in July, 1871, since which time he has been successfully engaged in practice, having filled the office of city attorney. He is a prominent Odd Fellow, having served as Grand Master of the order in the Territory; has also served for twelve years as Grand Worthy Chief Templar, in the order of Good Templars, and was for several years United States Commissioner. (Vide Chapter on Societies.)

O. C. BUNDY, photographer, Helena, was born in Saratoga Co., N. Y., August 21, 1827. His boyhood was spent in that State until 1844, when he came west to Wisconsin. He resided in Kenosha county until 1850, when he crossed the plains to California. There he was engaged in mining for some years, and was also engaged in photographing, continuing in the business until 1863, when he moved to Idaho. He was engaged in mining in the Boise Basin, and also in photography for three years. In the spring of 1866 he settled at Helena for a short time, then went over to Blackfoot, where he engaged in watchmaking and jewelry business, and there remained between two and three years, when he returned to Helena and engaged in jewelry business. In 1869 he made a visit to the Eastern States, and while there in June, 1869, was united in marriage with Miss Rhodina Train at Mauston, Wis. She is a native of New York State, her parents moving to Wisconsin in 1847, being among the early settlers of that state. Mr. and Mrs. Bundy returned to Helena and engaged in photographing and making portraits and views; after a short time removed to Virginia City and carried on the business there, spending a part of the time in the mountains making views of the most important points of interest. In 1871 he built a photograph car for his own business, the first one ever built and used in the Territory. In 1877 Mr. and Mrs. Bundy returned to Helena, and since that time he has followed his profession, doing only first-class work, and claiming the leading business of his profession in Montana.

A. E. BUNKER, Helena, was born at Littleton, New Hampshire, March 29, 1849. His parents moving to Minnesota in 1856, he received his education in that state. He accepted a position in the First National Bank of Northfield, Minn.; was there engaged at the time the bank was attacked by the James and Younger brothers, and was shot by them, the ball passing through his right shoulder, upon his refusing to tell where the money was. Freeing himself from them he started for the back door to give the alarm. After serving in the First National Bank 5 years he accepted a position in the Citizens' Bank of Northfield and served for a period of two years. He was next Manager of the Western Newspaper Union at St. Paul two years, and subsequently went to Dakota City and served in the Merchants' National Bank as exchange teller for one year. In April, 1882, he came to Helena, and upon the organization of the Second National Bank of the City of Helena, in July, 1882, was elected to the position of cashier, which he still holds. Mr. Bunker was married August 11, 1875, to Miss Nettie L. Smith, of Red Wing, Minn.

ALEX. F. BURNS, Helena, son of Jeremiah and Jane (Sampson) Burns, was born at Liberty, Mo., on December 7, 1832. His earlier days were spent on a farm near St. Joe, Mo.; went to California in 1852 and engaged in farming and mining near Volcano and Sacramento cities with moderate success. In 1855 he returned to Missouri and was engaged in mercantile business at Savannah until 1858, when he removed to Graham, Nodaway Co., Mo., where he was engaged in the mercantile business until 1861. He enlisted as a private in the 1st Missouri Cavalry of Confederate Volunteers under Col. Gates; was soon elected Captain of his company and remained as such during his service, which ended June 2, 1865. He was engaged in a number of battles at the following places: Blue Mills Landing and battle of Lexington, Mo.; Pea Ridge, Ark., Farmington, Iuka, Corinth, Grand Gulf and Vicksburg, Miss., also at Baker's Creek or Champion Hills, and numerous other skirmishes. He was also under Johnson opposing Sherman's march to the sea. He was twice wounded at Corinth and at Altona Mountains; was captured at Franklin, Tenn., November 30, 1864, imprisoned on Johnson's Island and well treated by the Federals. At the close of the war he went to Nebraska, where he remained until 1866, when he crossed the plains via Powder River, arriving at Helena October 4, 1866. He followed mining until 1867, when he commenced ranching, at which he is still engaged. Mr. Burns was married in Missouri October 4, 1857, to Miss Ann Kinnison. They are the parents of eight children. Mr. Burns joined the Oddfellows in 1857, and took an active part in the works of the Good Templars, served as Deputy P. M. in Graham, Mo., for several years. He has for some time acted as school trustee in the district where he now resides.

MICHAEL BURNS, P. O. Helena, was born September 29, 1840, in County Clare, Ireland, and when he was seven years of age his parents removed to the United States, landing at New Orleans and going thence to Davenport, Scott Co., Ia. He attended school four years. In 1852–3 he worked on the Chicago & Rock Island railroad, the first to cross the State. In 1856 he removed to the northwest corner of Scott county. In 1857 there was a general uprising against the horse thieves that infested the country, the vigilantes hanging several and driving the others away. Mr. Burns was engaged in farming in Scott, Cedar and Clinton counties until 1864, in which year he left with a party for Idaho. After crossing the Missouri river and arriving at the Platte, the latter stream was found so badly swollen as to render fording impossible. The wagons were lashed together to form a raft and the animals were made to swim over. Three men were drowned while crossing. This rise in the Platte was disastrous, sweeping away many buildings and causing serious loss of life by drowning. After crossing the Platte the party pushed on to Fort Laramie, then to the South Pass Station, where they camped with Lieut. Ellsworth, July 4, 1864. Mr. Burns states that ice formed that night in the water buckets to the depth of four inches. For ten days Mr. Burns was sick and under the care of Dr. Conger, afterward interested with Gen. Conger in the Rush Valley mines. The summer of 1864 was passed in the mines at Central City, and the winter in the feed and livery-stable business at Salt Lake. Early in 1865 Mr. Burns engaged in lumbering for an old Mormon named Wheeler, in Ogden Cañon, and continued until driven out by snow slides in February. The reports from the Last Chance and Grizzly Gulch mining districts in Montana next attracted his attention, and in company with four others he left for those points March 20, 1865. Forty miles north of Ogden they were forced to abandon their horses on account of the snow, and from there they proceeded on foot to Virginia City, a distance of over 400 miles, with the snow from two to fifty feet deep. Mr. Burns was snow blinded on the way, and followed another of the party by holding to his coat. They picked up three snow blind men a mile from the track and assisted them to Pochatella Station. Their provisions gave out in Stinking water valley, and with fifteen dollars—all the money to be had—Mr. Burns purchased ten pounds of flour. Upon arriving at Virginia City flour was found to be very scarce. The miners organized in force and compelled every one who had more than one sack to give it up, paying for it, however. With about 200 sacks thus secured, they supplied each man with from fifteen to twenty-five pounds, which lasted until a fresh supply arrived. Board was twenty-five dollars a week. In November, 1865, Mr. Burns went with four others to the Big Horn and Wind river country, and on the 5th of June following left there for Bozeman. He was soon after one of the stampeders to Sun river. Hiram Crane, one of the party, was nearly frozen to death in January, 1866, during the coldest weather they had experienced. The party crossed the Missouri at Three Forks, keeping on the north side until they arrived at the Bear Tooth Mountains, where they camped three days and nights, fires being kept up constantly to prevent them from freezing to death. In a short time they arrived at the three forks of the Sun river, and found thousands of deluded men whose provisions were giving out and who had not found the gold they expected. Numbers perished by freezing, others losing legs and arms from the same cause. Diamond City (Confederate Gulch) next claimed Mr. Burn's attention, and from there he went with Ben Toole to Eldorado Bar, where they made a discovery which caused the Diamond City people to attempt driving them off, claiming the mine themselves. The two men held their ground, but left it in April, 1866, to prevent further trouble. They went to White's Gulch, where Toole owned land and offered Burns half if he would assist in developing it. They packed lumber five miles over the mountains to make a sluice, but after working all summer and finding nothing to justify remaining longer, they left for Helena and Montana City. Mr. Burns worked at mining and prospecting at Montana City, along the Yellowstone, on the South Park lead, in Tucker Gulch, at Cedar Creek, Pilgrim Bar, etc., with varied success; was once sick with mountain fever at Helena, where he also worked at different times for the Old Water Company; handled a thrashing machine for Dan Flower; visited the Peace river country in the British Possessions; drove stage three years between Helena and Bozeman, also to Deer Lodge; tended bar in Helena; and has been in the saloon business individually and with numerous partners until the present time, having once suffered the loss of his building by fire. Mr. Burns was married at Helena, November 11, 1876.

H. C. Burson, Pear Creek valley, was born in Newport, Ind., October 20, 1846. His parents were Benjamin and Elizabeth Burson, the former of whom died in 1855, the latter still lives in Indiana. Mr. Burson left home in April, 1866, coming to Alder gulch in the same year. He went thence to Butte, where he remained one summer, and then came to Helena and resided there through the winter and spring, and then located in the Pear Creek valley. He was married to Miss Margaret Chaney, July 17, 1880.

J. H. Buttolph, Florence, was born in Vermont June 7, 1831. Leaving Vermont when fourteen years of age, he passed a number of years in various places throughout Massachusetts, Rhode Island and New Hampshire. During the rebellion enlisted in the Seventy-fourth Illinois Infantry, and served nearly three years, being discharged for disability, caused by being wounded in the right arm at Adairville, Ga. In 1866 he came to Montana, where he has since passed quite an eventful life in various parts of the territory. He is at present engaged in agriculture and horse-growing on the north fork of the Sun river.

C. L. Carey, P. O. Florence, was born in Oneida Co., N. Y., December 1, 1820, and is a son of John and Sarah (Grey) Carey. His father died when he was six years of age. He passed his earlier days on a farm, afterward working on the canal and learning the blacksmith trade. When twenty-eight years of age he removed to Illinois, where he spent three years blacksmithing and peddling, and in 1851 went to California. He was engaged at mining in California, Idaho and Montana for a number of years, arriving at Blackfoot City, in the latter territory, in 1865. He subsequently kept a butcher shop at Trinity for two years, and next went to Rock creek, where he spent two years on a ranch. He located on his present ranch in 1870, but passed the winter of 1870–71 in the British Possessions trading with the Indians. As Mr. Carey has spent the greater part of his active life in the mining districts and in uncivilized countries he has consequently borne many privations and hardships necessarily attendant upon such a life.

E. B. Carothers, Sun River crossing, was born October 29, 1854, at Montrose, Can. In 1861 removed to Phelps, Ontario Co., N. Y., where he attended school until 1868, when he went to Adrian, Wis. He worked at various occupations at Adrian until 1870. Then sailed on the lakes one season, next went to LaCrosse, and in 1876 came to Benton and followed staging between Benton and Helena for three and a half years. He was engaged in freighting between these points one year, previous to coming to Sun River crossing, where he opened livery stables. This livery establishment he carried on for one year, when he resumed freighting, and since then has freighted all over the territory. He married Miss Ellen Goss, of Illinois, in January, 1880.

B. P. Carpenter, late Governor of Montana, was born at Stanford, Dutchess Co., N. Y., May 14, 1837, moved from that town in 1852 with his parents. In 1857 he graduated from Union College, and in 1858 was admitted to the bar. In the same year he was elected District Attorney of Dutchess county. In 1864 he was appointed Assessor of Internal Revenue for the Twelfth (now 16th) Congressional District, and held the office until 1869. He was elected a member of the N. Y. S. Constitutional Con. In 1872 he was selected as temporary chairman of the Republican State Convention at Utica, and his speech on that occasion attracted attention throughout the State, having been published and circulated among the campaign documents of that year. In 1875 he was elected State Senator for the Eleventh District, and in 1877, having positively declined a re-election to the Senate, he was elected County Judge. Mr. Carpenter was commissioned Governor of Montana in 1884, succeeding Governor Crosby and preceding Governor Hauser.

M. Carroll, stock-grower and capitalist, Helena, is a native of Ireland. When 17 years of age he emigrated to New York City, and in the following year (1855) came to Fort Pierre, Dak., accepting a position as clerk in a sutler's store, in the employ of Generals Frost and Atchison. In those days it was regarded as only ordinary sport to pursue and kill the buffalo where the City of Yankton now stands. Mr. Carroll remained in this position until 1856, and at that time went to Fort Lookout, where he was given charge of the post-store. About one year afterward he went to Fort Randall, and two years later, June 15, 1859, by steamer to Fort Stewart, and from there started for Fort Benton on the 4th day of July, 1859, being in charge of a stock of supplies for the purpose of trade at Fort Benton and vicinity. The trip from Fort Stewart was made on a keel boat, propelled by the Cordelling motion, but finding it impossible to proceed farther than Fort Brule by water, they were obliged to make the balance of the journey to Fort Benton by land, arriving at the place of destination on the third day of September, 1859, that being the first season the Americans attempted the navigation of the Upper Missouri river. In the following year, 1860, the boats first succeeded in reaching Benton, the two steamers, "Chippewa" and "Key West No. 2" being the first to make the successful trips, reaching Fort Benton on the third day of July, having on board six companies of United States Infantry, under command of Colonel George H. Blake, en route to Walla Walla. These were met at Fort Benton by Lieutenant John Mullan, and comprised the first command or large expedition that passed over the Mullan road and Coeur d'Alene mountains. Mr. Carroll remained in the employ of the post-traders at Benton until May, 1864, when, in company with Mr. George Steele, he received a cargo of merchandise from the States and engaged in business under the firm name of Carroll & Steele, having in the meantime laid out the town site of the present city of Benton. In 1868 Mr. Carroll made a trip to Europe, returning in March, 1869. With Mr. Steele he continued in business until 1870, when he became associated with the firm of E. G. Maclay & Co., the firm consisting of E. G. Maclay, M. Carroll, Geo. Steele and C. A. Broadwater, engaged in freighting, contracting, etc., and doing an immense business, through bills of lading and otherwise, from all points. Mr Steele retired from the firm in 1872. Mr. Carroll continuing until 1878, when he also withdrew, and going to Oregon, bought a band of cattle, which he had driven to Montana, locating them in the vast grazing districts of the Teton and Marias rivers. He has now become one of the cattle kings of the Territory. He was a member of the Constitutional convention in 1884. For many years Mr. Carroll kept a daily journal, in which he recorded all events of importance that transpired in his section of the Territory. Said records were filed away in Benton and eventually lost, which is greatly to be regretted, as the facts therein recorded would prove invaluable in compiling the history of the Territory. Mr. Carroll participated in the Sioux expedition on the Yellowstone in 1876, and from May 16 to September 26 of that year never slept in a house. He afterward opened a store at Fort Keogh, and was one of the first parties to lay out the town of Miles City, opening the first store at that place in the spring of 1877. He was with Colonel Baker when attacked by Sitting Bull at Baker's Battle ground, now known as Huntley, at that time being engaged in furnishing transportation for the Government on the Northern Pacific railroad survey. Mr. Carroll is one of the oldest and most noted settlers in the Territory, and is now the oldest business man engaged in active business. During his many years in a wild and uncivilized country he has endured severe hardships and privations, camping and sleeping out in all kinds of weather and under very trying circumstances, and participating in many thrilling encounters and hair-breadth escapes. As a promoter of general good, he has few equals; as a business man, his great success is a sufficient proof of his ability, and as a gentleman of good and honorable principles, the respect, esteem and confidence in which he is held by the people of this Territory are positive guarantees that his life has been prompted to good and noble deeds.

A. P. CARTER, Helena, was born January 1, 1833, in Bourbon Co., Ky.; attended school at Carlisle until he was 17 years of age; attended military institutions at Blue Lick Springs and Franklin 3 years; was then appointed civil engineer for Kentucky, Arkansas and Texas. In 1857 he went to St. Joseph, Mo., where he engaged in the livery business with Mr. Fisk. He sold his interest to his partner in 1861 and went to Denver, Col., where he started with Jack Hughes and Dr. Hardy a wholesale and retail grocery business. After two years he sold out and in the spring of 1864 went to Greenhorn and Ophir Gulch where he remained one year. In 1865 he started with Dan Flowerree a saloon at the corner of Main and Wood streets, Helena, but sold out in 1876 and went to the Black Hills. He engaged in mining and saloon keeping at Deadwood, but in 1879 sold out and returned to Helena, purchasing an interest with Dan Flowerree in the same saloon. In 1882 Mr. Flowerree sold out to him and he has since carried on the business alone. He married Miss Armstrong, of Camden, Ark., in October, 1857. She died one month after marriage.

JAMES M. CAVANAUGH (deceased), whose name is closely identified with the political history of Montana, died at Leadville, Col., in October, 1879. He was well known by many old residents who may recall pleasant reminiscences of the genial Irishman. He was a born politician, possessing great personal magnetism, keen Irish wit, a tongue always ready with a retort, and considered one of the ablest stump speakers ever known in the territory. In early life he settled in Minnesota, and was the first representative of that state in congress (1857). He moved to Colorado, where he was a candidate for congress on an independent ticket. In 1865 he came to Montana and entered a law partnership with W. F. Chadwick. In 1867 he defeated Colonel Sanders, and again in 1869 defeated Gov. Tufts for Congress. In later years he made his home in New York, visiting Colorado in 1879, where his death took place.

W. F. CHADWICK, attorney at law, Helena, was born at Geneseo, Livingston Co., N. Y., October 14, 1836, and received his education in the Geneseo academy, preparatory to entering for the third term at the Freshman college. He read law in the office of Governor John Young, with General James Wood, and on the 7th day of September, 1857, was admitted to the bar in the city of Rochester, after which he engaged in practice at Geneseo about eighteen months. He then decided to go west, and after spending two and a half years in the Western states, went to the Pacific coast, arriving in Sacramento in December, 1861, during the great flood in that section, when he was obliged to go from the steamer to the hotel in a skiff and entered the building through a second story window. He soon after went to Portland and the Frazer river country, and in 1863 to San Francisco, thence to Williams' creek, Nevada, where he practiced law and acquired his first knowledge of quartz mining. He was engaged in conducting important mining suits at Williams' Creek, and went from there to Virginia City, Nev., where he practiced law from February, 1864, until April, 1866. He then went to Salt Lake City and from there to Montana, and in May, 1866, arrived in Helena, engaged in the practice of his profession, soon after becoming a member of the firm of Cavenaugh, Chadwick & Parott. In 1867 Mr. Cavenaugh was elected to congress, and Messrs. Chadwick & Parott continued in business until November, 1868, when the firm of Chumasero & Chadwick was formed. In 1877 Mr. Chadwick was elected to the territorial legislature and during the session served as chairman of the judiciary committee and with the chairman of the council of the judiciary committee revised the civil practice to conform to the practice of California, adopting an entirely new probate act. Mr. Chadwick is largely interested in mining in different parts of the territory, is now (1883) erecting extensive hoisting works at the "Albion," and has the machinery ready for the erection of a five stamp mill at that mine. He is also largely interested in city and other properties. He has one of the most complete libraries in the territory. Mr. Chadwick was married February 7, 1869, to Miss Norma D. Ewing, a native of Missouri and a daughter of General R. C. Ewing, whose father was at the head of the Cumberland charge.

WILLIAM CHUMASERO, Helena, is a native of England, where he was born in 1818. In 1829 his parents, Isaac and Francis (Chamberlain) Chumasero, came to the United States and located at Rochester, N. Y. There he received his literary education and pursued the study of law. Being admitted to the bar in 1839, he went to Illinois, and locating at Peru, La Salle Co., was one of the first to engage in the practice of law in that county, forming an intimate acquaintance in the courts with Lincoln, Douglass, Trumbull and other influential and noted gentlemen. In 1864 he made the trip from Atchison, Kan., to Salt Lake City by coach and thence to Virginia City in a spring wagon, and there officiated as District Attorney one year. In 1865 he went to Helena and engaged in the practice of law. Mr. Chumasero was married at Peru, Ill., in 1845, to Miss Mary E. Brown, to whom were born three children, two of whom are now married: Mrs. Pope and Mrs. C. A. Broadwater, both residing at Helena.

O. H. CHURCHHILL, Sun River Crossing, was born at Springfield, Ill., June 16, 1841. In 1850 he left with his parents for Oregon, engaged in stock-raising. Then left for British Columbia, during the mining excitement at that point and mined there for one year. Coming to Montana he began driving cattle from Washington Territory to Montana, afterward engaged in trading between Washington Territory and Montana until 1871. Then went to Texas, buying cattle and driving them to Montana. In 1873 he came to Sun river and located a ranch at the mouth of that river. Here he resided several years devoting his attention to stock-raising, then purchased a ranch on the Sun river near the crossing, and since that time has put fully $8,000 worth of improvements on the place. He is at present engaged in farming and stock-raising. Mr. Churchill was married to Miss Porter, of Lexington, Ky., April 18, 1882.

MALCOLM CLARK (deceased), a resident of the Upper Missouri country for thirty years, prior to his death at the hands of the Indians, August 23, 1869, and an old settler of Pear creek valley, was born at Fort Wayne, Ind., July 22, 1817, where his father, Lieutenant Nathan Clark, Fifth U. S. Infantry, was then stationed. In 1819 he was brought to Fort Snelling, Minn., and there the family resided until 1827. At the age of 17 years he entered West Point, but owing to the fact of his assault upon a fellow student, who lied, he was dismissed. He then went to Texas, returned to Cincinnati, and there secured a position in the American Fur Company's station on the Upper Missouri, when he was 24 years of age. He was known to the Indians as Neookem or the Four Bears, a name given him on killing four grizzly bears before breakfast one morning. Miss Nellie P. Clark, Superintendent of Schools for Lewis and Clarke county, is his daughter, and Mrs. Van Cleve, of St. Paul, Minn., his sister. (Vide hist. of Piegan War.)

JAMES S. CLARK, Pear Creek Valley, son of H. and E. R. Clark, of "Prickly Pear House," is a native of Iowa, and was born in that State in 1857. In June, 1867, he came to Pear Creek Valley, where he has resided down to the present time.

REV. R. S. CLARK, Pear creek valley, son of Isham James and Ellender Ann (Commander) Clark, is a native of Alabama, where he was born July 25, 1828. His father was a minister of the Methodist Protestant church, and thus Mr. Clark received the advantages of early religious training and discipline. In October, 1849, he went to Neshoba Co., Miss., remaining in that county but one year; afterward removing to Leeke and Holmes counties in same state, where he resided until 1871, when he came to Helena and settled in Pear creek valley the following March, where he has continued to reside ever since. He preached his first sermon in Montana the first Sabbath in February, 1872, and has been since engaged in the regular itinerant service. Mr. Clark was licensed to preach by the Mississippi Conference of the M. P. church, and preached his first sermon December, 1869, in Attala county. After the war closed, the Methodist Episcopal Church South admitted lay representation in their general conference, thereby removing the principal difference between the M. E. Church Protestant and the M. E. Church South, and Mr. Clark became a leading advocate of a union between the Mississippi conference of the Methodist Church Protestant and the Mississippi conference of the M. E. Church South, and was sent by the former conference, held at "Harmonia" church, Attala Co., in 1869, as an agent to consummate the union at Crystal Springs. The object of the conference being accomplished, Mr. Clark received a regular transfer as missionary to Montana in the interests of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and became the founder of a church which was built here in 1873, and of which he has been a regular pastor until within a short time. On November 15, 1849, he married Miss Rebecca Wyche (Commander), a native of Alabama. This lady died March 22, 1862. On the 21st of February, 1863, his marriage with Miss Elizabeth Adaline Smith took place. There are six children living, three by the first wife, and three by the last, namely, Sallathiel Thadro, Robert Augustus, Samuel, Wm. Sydney, Angus Taylor and Cassius Napier. Two of the family are dead; Epaminondas Clemina, born March 18, 1868, and died September 23, 1869, and Clara Antoinette, born January 8, 1860, died June 8, 1863.

A. G. CLARKE, Helena, was born at Terre Haute, Ind., April 7, 1822. He remained in that state until 19 years of age, when he settled at Savannah, Mo. Afterward he went to St. Joseph, Mo., and engaging in the mercantile business, so continued until May, 1864, when he, with 13 companions, came to Virginia City via the Lander's Cut-off, arriving in that camp in July, 1864. Mr. Clarke brought a stock of hardware to this camp and immediately engaged in business, in which he continued until February, 1865, when he came to Helena and established the present business under the firm name of Clarke & Conrad. In 1866 they were joined by Mr. Miller, and continued business under the firm name of Clarke, Conrad & Miller; but after a time Mr. Miller disposed of his interest in the business to Mr. Curtin, since which time they have done business under the firm name of Clarke, Conrad & Curtin, carrying a very large and well-selected stock of hardware and queensware, and commanding the leading business in that line in the city. Mr. Clarke is also interested in the prominent dry goods establishment of Raleigh & Clarke, and has also been largely interested in stock-raising. He was married to Miss Sarah C. Morgan, formerly of Kentucky, to whom were born four children, as follows: Medora, wife of Mr. Raleigh, of the firm of Raleigh & Clarke; Charles Clarke, of the firm of Raleigh & Clarke; Wm H. Clarke, now engaged in ranching and stock-raising; and A. G. Clarke, Jr.

CHARLES A. CLARKE, Helena, of the firm of Raleigh & Clarke, was born in Missouri in 1855. His earlier days were spent in attendance at school, where he received a good business education. At 18 years of age he entered a wholesale dry goods house at St. Joseph, Mo., as clerk, and remained three years. He then came to Helena, Mont., where he engaged in the dry goods business with his present partner. In 1881 he invested in the Nevada Creek mines, and is also interested in numerous other mining industries.

WILL H. CLARKE, South Fork of Sun River, born at Savannah, Mo., June 26, 1858, came to Montana at the age of 16 years, and assisted in taking charge of a cattle ranch on the Missouri. This he carried on for five years, when he went to Helena, where he was engaged in the boot and shoe business with Clarke, McRoberts & Co. one year. He was then appointed assistant clerk in the legislature. After resigning this position he took charge of a ranch on Willow Creek in April, 1883. Here he has been engaged in raising horses and in grain farming since that time. He married Miss Emma L. Ray, of Helena, August 30, 1881.

THOMAS CLARY, Sun River Crossing, was born December 5, 1842, at St Louis, Mo., and attended school there until 19 years of age, when he left for Virginia City, M. T. Began freighting between that point and Fort Benton, and carried on freighting for several years. He had charge of a freighting outfit at the time Col. Baker had the fight on the Yellowstone; was then appointed transportation master for the Diamond R. Co., which position he held for twelve years. At present he is engaged in horse and cattle growing on his Sun River ranch. Mr. Clary was married to Miss Mary Ford, of Sun River, October 8, 1874. They are the parents of three children.

G. W. CLEVELAND, P. O. Helena, was born in South Carolina September 23, 1832, and is a son of George C. and Nancy Cleveland. In 1848 he removed to Georgia, and until 1859 was principally engaged upon plantations. In the latter year he came to Colorado and mined at different places until 1862, when he went to Kansas, and in 1863 came to Montana, stopping for a time at Nevada City, then coming to Helena, where he has since remained, principally engaged in mining. Mr. Cleveland was interested in the Boulder Ditch and was manager of the same for some time. He has also been superintendent of Hale & Ray's mining and ditching interests for several years and is now in charge of operations preparing for the ditch from Deep Creek in Choteau county for the purpose of irrigating the lands adjacent to the Teton.

HUBERT CODY, Scott's Pass, P. O. Helena, was born near Montreal, Canada, in 1852. In 1875 he moved to Fall River, Mass., where he worked in a cotton factory until 1878, when he came to Montana and settled near the Scott's Pass, on the Main Divide between Lewis & Clarke and Deer Lodge counties. Here he was engaged in burning coal for the Helena market until the summer of 1883, when he rented the toll road and stage station, where he is now located. Mr. Cody was married at Montreal, Canada, in 1862. They are the parents of five children.

S R. COMMANDER, Helena, was born at Toronto, Canada, where he received a fair business education and at the age of 16 shipped on board a sailing vessel for one year. He was subsequently engaged in business at Indianapolis, Ind., in Kentucky, and at Nashville, Tenn., altogether a period of seven years and a half. He then returned to Canada, remaining at his old home two years, and was afterward in his former employment at Nashville for one year and a half and at San Francisco five years. He next visited San Jose, and then traveled through the territories of Washington and Colorado, and also through Oregon. He arrived in Helena, Mont., in 1878, and soon engaged with Sands Bros., with whom he has continued to the present time. Mr. Commander was married in 1882 to Miss Mary Pope, of Helena.

CHARLES E. COMSTOCK, of Comstock & Bro., Helena, son of D. G. and Harriet E. Comstock, was born at Dubuque, Ia., October 20, 1859. His father was a millwright, and his business required him to be almost continually on the move. At last they settled down at Lyons, Ia., and the lad attended the Lyons High School for three years, clerking in a drug store during the evenings for the purpose of learning the business. For two years he attended the Illinois Soldiers' College, at Fulton, Ill., graduated and became a registered druggist under the law of the State of Iowa. October 20, 1881, he married Miss Emma C. Griffin, of Lyons, Ia., and the following spring came to Montana, finally settling at Helena, where he has built up a fine trade.

H. R. COMLY, attorney at law, Helena, a native of Pennsylvania, was born at Philadelphia on the 12th day of March 1841. He was reared and educated in that city, and graduated at the Central High School, where he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and five years later took the degree of Master of Arts. He also pursued the study of law at that place, and after a course of three years was admitted to the bar in April, 1863. After two years of practice he came to Montana, and, locating at Helena, became interested in mining and other pursuits, which he continued several years. In 1870 he resumed his profession, since which time he has devoted to it the greater part of his attention. In 1867 he was elected to the Legislature, and was re elected to that body during its fifth, seventh and thirteenth sessions. During the seventh session he was elected Speaker of the House, and during the ninth, tenth, eleventh and twelfth sessions served as Chief Clerk of the Council. He was also elected commissioner to codify the general laws of Montana, which duty he performed with satisfaction to the people. Mr. Comly was married in the city of Helena, in 1882, to Mrs. B. J. Hornbuckle. He has been a prominent member of the Masonic order since 1867, has taken all the degrees of that organization, and served in the various offices of importance in the order.

JOS. D. CONRAD, of the firm of Conrad, Muth & Bach, Marysville, was born at Scipio, Ind., October 2, 1842. About 1849 his father moved to Nauvoo, Ill., where he was engaged in mercantile business for several years, moving, however, to Brockenridge, Mo., he engaged in contracting for some time with the Hannibal & St. Jo railroad, after which Mr. Conrad engaged in the mercantile business with his father at Doniphan and Atchison, Kan., until 1865. At this time he came to Virginia City, where he engaged in mining until the fall of 1874, when he opened a store at Cave Gulch, Mr. Muth joining him in 1870, and continued in trade there until 1879; then went into the mercantile business at Belmont, which store they still continue, having since opened a store at Marysville and ano her at Gloster. Mr. Bach joined the firm February 1, 1883. Mr. Conrad was married at Helena October 4, 1875, to Miss Catherine Miller.

M. D. COOPER, Helena, was born May 17, 1842, in Washington Co., Pa. At ten years of age he went to Lee Co., Ia., thence to Van Buren Co., where he resided for seven years; his parents then moving to Scotland Co., Mo., he accompanied them, remaining three years, when he left for Virginia City, arriving there September 4, 1864. The following spring he went to Emigrant gulch, from that point to Alder gulch, Blackfoot, Cave gulch, mining until 1871; owned mines in Boulder valley called Peru Bar, where he established a butcher shop and mined for three years; then located a stock ranch in Boulder valley and engaged in stock-raising and also in cutting hay. He carried this on for six years, when he moved to Jefferson City. Here he bought stables and was engaged in the livery business for two years, when he sold out and engaged in the sheep business with Mr. Lyons, formed a stock company, and herded sheep on the Teton. After carrying this on for three years Mr. Cooper sold out and engaged in teaming part of summer, then opened a saloon at Jefferson City, which he carried on for six months, when he began trading in horses—bought stock for Col. Black's stage line running between Helena and Butte. After remaining with him a short time came to Helena and bought out Eugene Myers, of the Elevator Parlor saloon, where he is engaged at present time. Mr. Cooper was a candidate on the Republican ticket for commissioner and representative in Boulder valley in 1873; was defeated by a few votes. He is also interested in stock-raising in Choteau county.

I. S. CORSON, stock-grower, Sun River Crossing, was born January 2, 1854, at Williamsport, Pa. His parents moved to Toledo, O., in his eighth year, where he attended school and farmed until seventeen years old. He then went to Erie, Pa., engaging with the Erie Transfer Company for three years, then to Ft. Wayne, Ind., where he worked for the company until leaving for Wakota, Mich. There he had an uncle with whom he resided, attending school at Lansing for one year. Returning to Ohio he was engaged in farming until 1880, when he came to Sun River Crossing and engaged with Mr. Harty in the stock business. Mr. Corson married Miss Nellie, daughter of James Gibb, of Sun River, in August, 1883.

S. M. CORSON, of Dyas & Corson, Sun River Crossing, was born in December, 1851, near Williamsport, Pa. In 1863 he left for Toledo, O. There he learned the trade of wagon-maker, working three and one half years. He then worked with W. H. Hollenbeck & Bro. one and one-half years; enlisted in the army in 1871, came to Montana, and was stationed at Buford. Was then transferred to Ft. Shaw, where he remained three years, then to Camp Baker, where, obtaining his discharge, he went to Helena, clerked one winter in Lehman & Lockey's store, and next went out on a surveying expedition. On July 8, 1877, he came to Sun River, rented shop and worked at trade eighteen months, when he located a ranch on the south fork of Sun River. Here he farmed four years, when he returned to Sun River Crossing and re-opened wagon and blacksmith shop, in which Mr. J. P. Dyas purchased a half-interest. Mr. Corson was married to Miss Jennie Doyle, of Helena, August 13, 1883.

CRAIK & ROBERTSON, P. O. Sun River. This firm is composed of Malcolm Craik and B. A. Robertson, natives of Missouri. An illustration in this work represents their billiard saloon and club-rooms, opened in 1883, and also the quarters of the "Sweet Bye and Bye Club." The position of the house is in the business center, and the saloon and rooms are by far the finest in town.

H. L. CRAM, ranchman, Pear creek valley, son of Otis and Harriet (Emery) Cram, is a native of Gorham, Me., where he was born in 1859. His father was a stone-mason by trade, though principally engaged in farming. In April, 1877, Mr. Cram came by way of Yankton, Dak., up the Missouri river to Fort Benton, and thence to Prickly Pear valley, where he now owns 120 acres of land well improved, and has recently taken up 160 acres more in the Teton country. On January 11, 1883, Mr. Cram was married to Miss Anna Jones, of this valley.

SILAS H. CROUNSE, Helena, a son of John C. and Nancy (Vandewalker) Crounse, was born at Albany, N. Y., April 25, 1840. In 1845 his parents moved to Milwaukee Co., Wis., where he attended public school until 15 years of age, when he was assigned duties in a hotel, and next in a newspaper office until 1861, at which time he became an assistant to his brother as war reporter for the New York World and Times. After serving in such capacity for nearly three years he came to Montana, arriving at Bannack late in the season of 1864. There he spent a short time in mining, and then went to Virginia city, where he was engaged as clerk in a general store for a few months prior to his being appointed assistant assessor of Madison Co., in which office he served nearly a year, when he came to Helena, and in 1865 accepted the position of deputy postmaster, in which capacity he served two years. He was then appointed assistant deputy internal revenue collector, and remained in that office until appointed postmaster at Helena in 1869, serving in that capacity under Presidents Grant and Hayes. Mr. Crounse for eight succeeding years was director of the Montana Agricultural, Mineral and Mechanical Association, and is now president of said association, having filled that position the past two years. He is also one of the directors of the Montana National Bank of Helena, and treasurer of the Northwestern Cattle Company. Mr. Crounse was married at Janesville, Wis., in March, 1868. His wife died in 1881, leaving four children, all girls. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias.

W. E. CULLEN, of the firm of Sanders & Cullen, Helena, was born at Mansfield, Ohio, on June 30, 1837. He resided in that city with his parents until he was sixteen years of age, and attended common schools until this age, when he was sent to an academy, where he studied for three years. He then moved to Minnesota and was appointed Superintendent of Instruction for the Winnebago Indians. For two years he held this position, during which time he read law constantly. On the expiration of his term of office, he read law with Judge Charles E. Flandreau for two years, and in June, 1862, was admitted to the Minnesota bar. During the Sioux outrages in that State, he entered the service as Second Lieutenant and served to the end of that season's campaign; then resigning, he opened a law office at St. Peter, Minn. In 1866 he came to Helena, and during that winter opened a law office in company with Judge Smith. In 1876 he became associated with Col. W. F. Sanders, in the law business, which connection he has kept until the present time. In 1867 he was elected a member of the Legislative Council, which honor has been conferred on him almost continuously down to the present, having been elected four times to the council and once to the lower house. He drafted and introduced more laws that have been approved than any man in the Territory. Mr. Cullen was married in 1867, to Miss Caroline V. Stokes, of St. Paul, Minn., and they have a family of five children, whose names are, in order of age: Violet, Ernest, Grace, Lillian and May. He is interested in land in the Gallatin Valley; is a member of the Argenta Mining Company, and is president of the Northwestern Cattle Company, which has a herd in eastern Montana. In the Masonic order he stands high, being the Master of Helena Lodge, No. 2, and is credited with being one of the soundest counsellors in the whole mountain region.

A. P. CURTIN, Helena, was born in 1848 in Washington Co., Mo. When quite young his parents moved to near St. Joseph in the same State, and into that town when he was nineteen years of age. In 1867 he came to Helena, but soon returned and attended a commercial college until 1869, when he returned to Helena and entered the hardware house of Clarke, Conrad & Curtin, as a clerk. After four years he engaged in a dry goods store and worked for two years. In 1875 Mr. Curtin bought an interest in a house furnishing business. In 1880 the firm removed to Butte, and in the fall of that year Mr. Curtin disposed of his Butte business, and opened a furniture and house furnishing store at Helena, where he has a very large business. In 1880 he was married to Miss Nellie J. Flynn, of St. Joseph, Mo.

C. D. CURTISS, a pioneer of the Territory and one of the most progressive citizens of Helena, has been closely identified with Montana since the days when the desperadoes of Alder Gulch called forth from the people all the powers of good citizenship. He organized the first fire department at Virginia City, and subsequently aided in the organization of the Helena Fire Department. During the Indian troubles he was among the first to offer substantial aid to the government, and so in all duties to the people he has been ever foremost and earnest. A reference to the chapters on Indian wars and societies, and in Madison, Lewis and Clarke counties, many references are made to Col. Curtiss.

D. W. CURTISS (deceased) was born in Huron Co., Ohio, September 5, 1835. He resided in Ohio until 1853, when he moved to Wisconsin, where he engaged in the fruit business at Clinton, Rock Co. In March, 1864, he started for Montana with an ox team, and was four months making the trip to Emigrant Gulch. Soon after he went to Virginia City, where he remained until February, 1865, and then went to Helena, where he followed the musical profession for eight years. In 1868 he started his present business and since 1873 gave it his undivided attention, shipping various varieties of small fruits of his own raising to Fort Benton, Bozeman, Deer Lodge and other towns in the vicinity, until his death in 1885. He erected the first house on Rodney street, owned nearly 100 lots in the city of Helena, and had a fine residence on the corner of Clarke and Curtiss streets, the latter being named after him. Mr. Curtiss was married February 7, 1876, to Miss Sarah E. Griggs, of New London, Huron Co., Ohio.

D. H. CUTHBERT, Helena, is a native of Portage Co., Ohio. His father, James Cuthbert, was born in Perthshire, on the river Tay, in 1800; came to this country when quite young and married Ann Graham, a native of New York. She died in 1848; her husband survived her until 1883. They had nine children, eight of whom are now living. The subject of this sketch was born May 2, 1836. When fourteen years of age he went to Dubuque, Ia., and entered a drug store, remaining there six or seven years. For the next four years he was engaged in a drug store at Galena, Ill. When the war broke out he went south on a trip. After his return he concluded to enter the service, reported to Colonel Smith, of the 45th Illinois Infantry, at Jackson, Tenn., and was connected with the 17th army corps until after Atlanta was taken; soon after he went to Washington and was mustered out. After the war he returned to Galena, but removed soon to St. Louis and engaged in the drug business. The following year, February 13, 1866, he married Miss Anna E. Newhall, daughter of Dr. H. Newhall, a prominent physician and an old settler of Galena, Ill. In the spring of 1867 Mr. Cuthbert bought a stock of drugs and started for Montana by river for Fort Benton. He was en route sixty days to that point, and came direct to Helena, where he engaged in the drug trade. He was burned out in the big fire of 1869, lost everything and had no insurance. He afterward entered the drug house of Parchen & Paynter and remained with that firm two years, and soon after entered the First National Bank, where he held a responsible position for nine years. In 1874 he established an insurance agency and since then has been interested in that business as senior member of the firm of Cuthbert & Atchison. He has served as clerk of the school board about ten years; was appointed auditor of the territory and held that office two years; was elected a member of the board of county commissioners; was chosen chairman of the board, and still holds that position. In November, 1883, he received the appointment of postmaster of Helena. He is a prominent member of the order of Odd Fellows, and was the first Grand Master of that order in this territory. He is also connected with the Masonic fraternity. Mr. and Mrs. Cuthbert have two daughters, Nettie and May.

MAJOR DAVENPORT, of Davenport, Ray & Co., Helena, was born in Bourbon Co., Ky., January 17, 1823. In 1825 his parents moved to Missouri, where he remained until the spring of 1849, when he went to California and engaged in mining. In 1850 he became interested in the mercantile trade in Sacramento, and in 1851 returned to Missouri, located in the town of Liberty, and engaged in merchandising for a number of years, when his health failing him he moved upon his farm and there remained until 1864, having lost his property by the depredations of both armies during the early part of the rebellion. In the spring of 1864 he crossed the plains to Montana, arriving in Virginia City in September following, where he again engaged in mercantile pursuits until March, 1865. At that time he went to Helena and became interested in placer mining in Grizzly Gulch, where he sunk what money he had and $3,000 besides. In September, 1866, he went to Diamond City, where he had charge of the stage and express office, and started in business with only $28. He paid every bill within thirty days and when he returned to Helena in 1871 had quite a stock. In 1867 or 1869 he received the appointment of county commissioner of Meagher county. The firm of Davenport, Ray & Co. was formed for the purpose of raising sheep, and after so continuing for a few years they invested their surplus capital in cattle, the business proving a success. Mr. Davenport was married in 1853 to Miss Rachel Malone, of Shelby Co., Ky., to whom three children were born.

A. J. DAVIDSON, Helena, was born in Franklin Co., Mo., August 15, 1843. He was given a good common school education, which he completed by a course at the State Normal School. At the age of 20 he went by ox-train to Denver, Col., and by the Soda-springs way to Idaho and Virginia City, M. T., arriving at the latter place in the fall of 1863. For two years he was mining and working in the timber at this place, then in Grizzly Gulch, near Helena, and soon afterward went to Ophir Gulch, near Blackfoot. During the winter of 1866 he was employed as clerk in a saddler's store in Helena, at which business he worked till 1876, when he went into business for himself. Together with his large store at Helena he carried on a branch house at Benton, M. T. In 1874 he was married to Miss Sallie Davenport, of Helena, by whom he has one child. Mr. Davidson stands high in the Masonic fraternity, being the Grand Master of Montana. He has been President of the Helena Board of Trade for many years.

JOHN R. DEAN, deceased, was born in 1816, came to Virginia City in 1864, where he conducted a public house until 1868, when he came to Helena with his family. Soon after he located his ranch in the Pear creek valley, and engaged in farming and stock-growing. Mr. Dean disposed of his lands, took up his home in the capital, invested to some extent in town property, built a number of business houses, and otherwise acted the full part of a citizen until his death in February, 1884. One of his sons is in business at Wickes, and another at Livingston

ROSS DEEGAN, Helena, born at Albany, N. Y., March 24, 1830, is a son of John and Elizabeth (Maloney) Deegan, old residents of Albany. A short time before the close of the Mexican war he ran away from home, enlisted for the service, and was at once sent to Governor's Island to prepare for active duty, but peace being declared very soon thereafter, he was discharged, and returned to his home at Albany, where he remained until 1847, when he (being of a roving disposition) again ran away from home and shipped on board the whaling vessel L. C. Richmond for a trip to the Pacific Ocean. After being at sea some six months he, with three companions, deserted from the ship at the Island of Juan Fernandez, at that time inhabited only by criminals sent there in banishment from Chili. After landing they immediately made for the interior of the island, where they remained for six days without food, except a couple of biscuits daily which they had brought from the ship when leaving; having expected to capture game upon the island, no provision was made for food upon which to subsist. Finding no game, they were finally forced to the seashore for the purpose of obtaining shell fish for food. In the meantime the captain had informed the inhabitants of their desertion and presence upon the island, and offered a reward of $25 for the capture and return of each of them to the ship. They had scarcely reached the shore ere the numerous dogs of the inhabitants apprised them of their presence, and they immediately started in pursuit armed with guns, and Mr. Deegan and companions being without arms were soon overpowered and captured. The vessel having lain just out of view was soon hailed, and coming into port took him and companions on board. He and a companion, however, refused to work and were put in irons for four days, after which they concluded to go to their respective duties, and were afterward well treated; the captain, however, promising to give us our discharge at the first port we reached. But as he had no authority to do so, told us to again desert as the ship was about to leave port and he would sail without us, but not before reporting our desertion. Mr. Deegan and companion did as advised by the captain, but were soon captured and imprisoned, but being so troublesome to the guards were given their freedom. This was on Otaheite, one of the Society islands. After remaining there three months he again shipped for Vera Cruz, and while on board first heard from a passing vessel of the gold excitement in California, and immediately changed our course for San Francisco. Arriving outside the harbor we discovered the ships were all dismantled, and fearing the sailors were in a state of mutiny, concluded not to land but returned, and off the coast of Peru we captured a whale, some 300 miles from land. Night coming on, Mr. Deegan, with five companions, lay by the whale in a small boat, the vessel being at anchor some six miles distant; a heavy wind came up and separated us entirely from the vessel, and in the morning realized that we were lost at sea, almost entirely destitute of provisions or water,

After 18 days we arrived at Robert's Island. When we reached land one of the party only was able to sit up, being completely exhausted from the want of food. Here they were found by a party of savages from the Sandwich Isles, and would have been devoured by them had it not been that one of the party had been a sailor on a British ship and succeeded in thwarting their fiendish designs by telling them that the English people would surely follow and kill them should they harm the sailors. Mr. Deegan and comrades were taken by them to one of the Marquise Islands, where they were well treated, and after remaining there three weeks were sent to Otahelte, where they shipped for San Francisco on a small schooner. This vessel was capsized by a heavy storm; the crew escaping on a raft, were picked up by fishing boats and taken back to Otahelte, where Mr. Deegan soon again shipped for San Francisco on board the John Howe, and arrived there in the spring of 1850, when he went to work in the Central Hotel as book-keeper. He speculated considerable in land on the outskirts of the city, but becoming dissatisfied, he sold out and went to Chili, and after spending $7,000 in pleasure seeking, shipped as navigator on the vessel Republic, and before doubling the cape the first and third mates, together with fully half on board, had died of yellow fever. This voyage took him to Germany, where he was presented with a fine gold watch by the owners of the vessel as proof of their appreciation of his ability as a seaman. He again shipped from London for New York city; arriving there, he went to Branford, Conn., and worked as locksmith, at which he became an expert. In 1857 he visited Chicago, where he engaged in the lake marine, and afterward worked in a machine shop at Chicago seven months. He opened a hotel at Grand Haven, Mich., but in a short time went to Quincy, Ill., and Kansas City, Mo., where he joined an expedition to New Mexico, thence to Los Angeles, Cal., thence to San Francisco, and back to Connecticut in 1860. In 1861 he enlisted in the Third New York Infantry. Arriving at Fortress Monroe, he went scouting on his own account the day after arrival, and after returning to camp, furnished the officer in command with a report of his expedition, and was at once detailed as scout. He was afterward sent to Albany to obtain recruits, and was appointed First Lieutenant of 162d New York Volunteers, and at Fortress Monroe was commissioned Captain. After serving in many hard fought battles, he was discharged at New Orleans in 1864. Returning to New York, he engaged in the general produce business at Albany, after which he went to St. Louis and fitted a steamer for the Upper Missouri, intending to take command, but a man coming from Montana bought a half interest and took charge. Then he returned to Albany, N. Y., and was married to Miss Rosamond Sweet in 1867, and came to Helena in 1868, where he engaged in the livery and feed business, at which he continued for twelve years. He also opened a stable at Butte City, but has since closed out the livery and feed stable and is engaged in stock raising. In 1883 he was elected marshal of Helena. Mr. and Mrs Deegan are the parents of three children; the eldest, Miss Winifred, being now in attendance at the musical conservatory at Boston, Mass. His son Ross is engaged in looking after the stock ranges.

COL. WALTER W. DE LACY, surveyor, Helena, was born at Norfolk, Va.; was educated at Mt. St. Mary's college in Maryland, and served as professor in the navy for a period of five years, after which he visited various parts of the United States, Mexico and California. During the year 1850 he assisted in the original hydrographic and geological surveys, also making explorations in Mexico and Texas. In 1854 he took part in the R. R. surveys under the supervision of A. B. Gray and Robert J. Walker. He passed one year in California, and thence went to Puget sound, where he remained some four or five years engaged in surveying that country and in fighting the Indians, having twice volunteered and served during the Indian wars in that country. Lieut. Mullan having been chief of the surveying party, Col. De Lacy accompanied him to Ft. Benton via the Mullan pass in 1859, and was with him during a period of 18 months, having joined his camp after making a survey of the Columbia and Lower Snake river countries, which Lieut. Mullan was then engaged. In 1862 Col. De Lacy went to Walla Walla and engaged soon after in prospecting on the Salmon river, after which he took a pack train into Bannack, and there engaged in surveying for a few months. Proceeding to Virginia City, he remained there until 1867, when he went to Helena, where he entered the Surveyor-General's office, in which capacity he served until 1869, his services at that time being secured by the N. P. R. R. Co. for the purpose of making barometrical surveys and exploring the various mountain passes for the purpose of settling the question as to the most feasible route. He was the first to suggest the building of the line through the Yellowstone Valley. In the following year, 1870, he contracted for the survey of public lands, and in 1871, with a party of 24 men, made a survey of a route down the Salmon river from Salmon city to the mouth of the river, passing through the seemingly impassable rapids of the stream without losing a man, Mr. Roberts, the chief engineer, pronouncing it the most remarkable survey ever made. Col. De Lacy soon after returned to Helena, where he continued in the contract surveying business until 1880. He has since engaged in mineral and private surveys, and is now officiating as city surveyor. (Vide history of exploration and other chapters.)

WM. A. DINGEE, Helena, was born in Highlands, Orange Co., N. Y., January 1, 1834. After leaving school he went to Brooklyn, N. Y., and at the age of 16 learned the carpenter's trade and worked at it until 1857. In 1860 he went to Central City, Col., and engaged in mining for 3 years; going from there to Montana, arriving at Bannack May 17, 1863. He was mining at the time Alder gulch was discovered at Bannack City. He came to Helena in 1865 and mined in the vicinity a short time; then seeking the comfort a ranch affords, he engaged in cattle-raising. In 1871 he opened a saloon on one of the principal thoroughfares of Helena and has carried on the business for 12 years. He owns several mines in the vicinity, and has several leads patented. (See Indian History, and sketch of George Cowan in chapter XXXVII.)

THOMAS DUNN, stockman, Sun River Crossing, was born August 6, 1845, in Ontario Province, Canada. When quite a child his parents moved to Racine Co., Wis., where they died. Mr. Dunn went to Pike's Peak in the spring of 1860, thence to Boulder valley, Col., where he worked on a ranch for two years; enlisted October, 1862, in the 3d Colorado Infantry, served three years, and after obtaining his discharge went to Colorado and wintered there. In 1866 he came to Montana and mined at Highland one winter, when he joined in the Salmon River stampede and mined one summer. Returned to Cheyenne, W. T., and began hauling ties for the U. P. R. R., thence to Colorado and farmed for one year, when he sold the farm and next herded cattle in Nevada. The following year he went to Denver, Col., and engaged in the cattle business for one year, when he brought the stock to Sun River, sold out, and made several more trips, bringing cattle each time. He located a ranch on Sun River, where he is engaged at the present time in raising cattle; was married to Miss Mattie Iliff, of Chicago, May 18, 1880.

E. M. DUNPHY, Helena, is a native of New Brunswick, and was born March 25, 1833. When 16 years of age he went to the town of Belfast, now known as Ludlow, Aroostook Co., Maine, but after one year returned to New Brunswick and engaged in lumbering. In 1852 he went to the territory of Minnesota, where in 1853 he engaged in lumbering, and successfully followed that business for ten years. June 17, 1862, he left Minnesota, and under the escort of James L. Fisk, came to Montana via the northern route. About thirty miles west of Devil's Lake they were attacked and followed by the Indians for a distance of fifty miles. Arriving at Last Chance Gulch September 20, 1862, Mr. Dunphy procured teams and went to Fort Benton for goods for the firm of King & Gillette, and also erected Fort Minnesota at Montana City, afterward having charge of moving the goods of King & Gillette to Deer Lodge City. He remained with them some time at that place, when in company with Joe Brown, who has since been killed by the Indians, he took a contract to transfer the goods of King & Gillette at Deer Lodge City to the Grasshopper Camp, now known as Bannack, reaching there December 9, 1862, with only 25 cents in his pocket, and with that he bought a drink. He soon after erected a store at that point for Gillette, and in the spring erected another for King & Gillette. In the latter part of July, 1863, he went to Alder Gulch, and during the fall built the second hotel there. In 1865 he engaged in mercantile business, and in the fall of 1865 went to Helena, and engaging in mercantile business there continued some eighteen months. He then bought an interest in a saw mill with D. A. Bentley and James Fisk, and taking it into the Blackfoot district turned out about two million feet of lumber. He then bought the interest held by Fisk and took the mill to Unionville, situated four miles above Helena, where he manufactured the principal part of the lumber used in rebuilding Helena after the fires of 1868, afterward moving the mill to Blue Cloud, where he continued the manufacture of lumber about eighteen months. During this time, however, Mr. Dunphy had been otherwise engaged. In the fall of 1866, placing his business interests in competent hands, he made a visit to his native country, and returning via St. Louis he there bought a stock of goods amounting to $49,800, which he brought to Helena, and was there engaged in mercantile business one year. Then moving the balance of his stock to the Gallatin valley, he erected a fine store, hotel and stables at Hamilton, and there continued in business until 1873. In 1870 he took a part of his stock to Pike's Peak Gulch, in Deer Lodge county, when that camp was first struck, and for a time was also in mercantile business at Hamilton. In the latter part of June he started for Colorado to meet his partner, David Bentley, who had purchased a large herd of cattle, which they took into the Yellowstone country. During the year 1873 he moved to Shed's Bridges, where he built two large bridges across the Madison and Jefferson rivers. In the spring of 1874 he sold out at that place and moved to Helena, continuing in the stock business on the Yellowstone until 1879, when he sold his interests in that section and in company with Jos. Ryan bought a band of 1,100 head of cattle in the Bitter Root valley. He soon after bought Ryan's interest, and taking them into the Yellowstone country, disposed of them in November, 1879, since which time he has given his attention to speculating in real estate and mining properties, having various valuable farming and city properties, also owning vast mining lands and interests. He owns nearly the whole of the "Nellie Grant" silver mine, and all of the "Gen. Grant," "Gen. Sherman" and "Good Friday" mines, producing gold and silver. July 25, 1858, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary A. Small, a native of Holton, Aroostook Co., Me. Mrs. Dunphy assisted in making the first flag that ever floated in Montana.

JNO. P. DYAS, of Dyas & Murray, merchants, Sun River, was born September 19, 1856, in Iowa. After attending school in Iowa he went to Galena, Ill., and completed his education at the normal school there, remaining four years. In 1874 he went to Salmon river, Idaho, mined for a short time, returned to Iowa and accepted a position in a general store, which he held for two years. In 1878 he came to Sun River Crossing and kept books for Geo. Steell five years. Then he formed partnership with D. W. Murray, opening a general store. He was married to Miss Charlotte, daughter of Col. W. F. Wheeler, of Helena. They are the parents of two children: Lucile and Steell. Mr. Dias is interested in the firm of Dyas & Corson, blacksmith and wagon-makers.

THOMAS ECKLES, M.D., Helena, came to this country from his native place in England, in 1849, when he was but two years of age. His parents came directly to Whiteside Co., Ill. Soon after their arrival his father died, and on his mother all of the children depended for support. The lad worked hard on a farm and went to school only at odd times. In 1865 he enlisted in the U. S. army for three months, re-enlisted and served until the war closed. When discharged he went to Mt. Vernon, Iowa, College, and stayed one year, after which he studied medicine at Sterling, Ill., with Dr. J. S. Leffingwell, for three years. He then attended the Hahnemann Medical College at Chicago for a year and in 1869 graduated. He practiced for a short time in Iowa, and then took his old preceptor's patients at Sterling, Ill., remaining there until 1881. Removing to Salt Lake City, he practiced for a year, and then located at Helena, where he has a good practice. October 6, 1874, he was married to Miss Julia A. Stanley, of Aurora, Ill., by whom he had two children. In 1877 both mother and children died, and in 1879 the Dr. was married to Mrs. Jean Smyser, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., who has borne him two children. The doctor is a Mason. He has served as examining surgeon for the Pension Bureau.

JOHN W. EDDY, Helena, was born in Orwell, Ashtabula Co., O., December 4, 1835. His father was a school teacher, a man of unquestioned integrity, and his mother was gifted and accomplished. The first eight years of his life were full of sunshine and under the careful training of his mother, there were laid the sure foundations of a useful life. After his mother died, he was largely thrown upon his own resources, and availed himself of the slight advantages at command to acquire an education. At the age of 16 years he began teaching school in his native town, where P. R. Spencer, author of the Spencerian system of penmanship, was a frequent visitor at his father's house, and during his boyhood he learned to love the kind-hearted man, and tried to emulate his writing, so that by the time he was qualified to teach common branches in day school he was equally well qualified to teach writing in the evening; yet with all his earnest efforts to earn money to meet college expenses, he was obliged to chop wood to pay his way during a part of his last term at Hiram College, O. He boarded in the family of Mr. Rudolph, and sat at the table presided over by Lucretia Rudolph, who afterward became the wife of Mr. Garfield. Leaving the school at the close of the fall term he walked back to Orwell, and again taught school during the winter, and this time within two miles of the spot where he was born. His success as a teacher was marked, and he had the honor of taking rank at the head of the teachers of that locality as having the "banner school," and at a decided increase of wages he taught a month longer than the usual term, at the close of which, when not yet twenty years old, and having never seen a train of cars, he started for Albany, N. Y., to find his sister, who had six years before been given a home and excellent advantages by a widowed aunt in that city. For several years he lived at the house of his uncle, James D. Wasson, who, with Daniel Butterfield, of Utica, N. Y., founded the American Express Co. He prosecuted his studies, and became quite proficient in chemistry and other branches. Always temperate in his habits, and having no time to waste in fashionable dissipation, he found time to cultivate his taste for poetry and belles-letters. When the Young Men's Association of Albany offered a gold medal for the best national song for the Fourth of July celebration of 1863, Mr. Eddy's song was awarded the prize, and since his residence in Montana many choice bits of his prose and poetry have been published in the territorial and eastern newspapers. In the spring of 1859 he removed to St. Louis and became bookkeeper in a large commission house. At the end of a year he was invited to take a position in the St. Louis Building and Savings Association—now the Bank of Commerce—with the idea of becoming its cashier. He was compelled to leave it within a few months, and his physicians forbade his return to a climate which was so trying to his system. During his short stay of less than two years in St. Louis he had started and superintended a mission Sunday-school, which has now become an established church on Beaumont street. One of his teachers in that mission became so interested in the work that he went to the church and offered to give up his profession of the law and take a divinity course. He was a bright scholar, a classmate of John G. Saxe, the poet, a good lawyer, and an exemplary christian, and of course the church endorsed him, and when he returned his first labor was in that mission school as pastor. That man is president of Shurtliff College, of Alton, Ill.,—Rev. Dr. A. A. Kendrick. During the year 1863 Mr. Eddy was employed as book-keeper in the house of Edson & Co., of Albany, the senior partner of which house was the mayor of New York city preceding Mayor Grace. In February, 1864, he went to New York city and became the cashier in Culver, Penn & Co's bank. Within one year after reaching Albany he identified himself with the Baptist society, and has since been actively engaged in Sunday-school and other work of the church. His first effort was in a mission school on Broadway, afterward the Albany Tabernacle. Then he took charge of the old Bowery Mission, which had become almost extinct, and with the aid of such men as Geo. Dawson, editor of the Albany Evening Journal, General John F. Rathbone, Geo. W. Sheldon, now of St. Paul, and other workers, it grew into the Washington Avenue Baptist Church. When the Albany Baptist Missionary Union was formed and four new missions established, Mr. Eddy was placed in charge of the one at Kenwood and remained its superintendent until his removal to New York, in February, 1864. The bank of Culver, Penn & Co. had been recently established on Nassau street, and on the recommendation of S S. Packard, of Bryant, Stratton & Packard, he was made cashier of that house. When in the fall of that year this firm established the Oil City Bank, in Pennsylvania, Mr. Eddy was made its cashier. While in Oil City he was the prime mover in the establishment of the Y. M. A., which provided this city with its first library and its first course of lectures, and finally its lecture hall. He was superintendent of the Presbyterian Sunday-school and President of their Board of Trustees, and as such saved the church from foreclosure on account of mortgage. In the spring of 1866 he returned to New York, but Culver, Penn & Co. suspended and he was out of employment and a heavy loser besides. Having long entertained favorable notions of mining, he took a special course in assaying at the Columbia School of mines, and then spent three months among the copper mines of Lake Superior. Before the season of 1866 had closed he was offered the position of secretary of the Western Insurance Co., of St. Louis, and went to work in that office. During the winter he became Superintendent of the Sunday-school of the Second Baptist Church, the session of which was held in the morning, and of the Third Baptist Church, the session of which was held in the afternoon. In the spring of 1867 he accepted charge of the office of his old friend Edson, of New York, and for two years he occupied this position, or until the firm dissolved, when he was offered an interest in the new firm of Franklin, Edson & Co., but declined it. He remained in New York until 1877, most of the time engaged in the business of broker, and during that time he paid considerable attention to music. Having a good voice, he was able to use it to good advantage in concerts given for various charities and at the same time make it contribute to his earnings from $500 to $800 a year, which he received as salary for singing in a church choir; he also performed a fair amount of literary work, being a frequent contributor to the newspapers and occasionally to the magazines of the day. He was a good elocutionist, and turned this talent to account also for the benefit of the poor. Gertrude Kellogg, Annie Phelps and Wm. Aytoun Lusk, with Mr. Eddy, were members of the Kellogg Comedy Co., which gave several hundred dollars to the South Brooklyn Employment Society, and also to the Fold of the Church of the Good Shepherd, St. John's Guild, and institutions of that class. On March 27, 1877, he reached Montana, having been sent out as the auditor of the Montana Company whose works were at the place afterward named Wickes. He came to Helena to reside in the following winter, and became one of its most active and useful citizens. He was married at Oxford, N J., June 12, 1879, to Miss Evelyn M. Harvey, and in the latter part of the summer returned and established himself as agent and correspondent of the Mining Record of New York, agent of the New York Life Insurance Co., and dealer in mines and mining properties. For several years Mr. Eddy has prepared the statistics of the production of gold and silver in Montana for the use of the Director of the Mint, and as correspondent for various eastern journals has done much to advertise the resources of Montana. He has rendered cheerful and valuable assistance to every enterprise that has tended to develop the vast capabilities of the Territory, and believes in a grand future for the region with which he has heartily identified himself. At the last city election Mr. Eddy was chosen police magistrate of Helena. He is secretary of the Brush Electric Light and Power Company, and also of the Helena Steam Power and Lighting Co. Is superintendent of the Sunday school of the Baptist Church, and Master Workman of Protection Lodge, No. 15, A. O. U. W. Mrs. Eddy has literary ability also, and has done work which has been well received by the reading public.

WILL B. EDGAR, Helena, of the firm of Hartwell & Edgar, lumber dealers, proprietors of planing mills and sash, door and blind factory, was born in Parma, Jackson Co., Mich., January 25, 1847. There he received a liberal education, and was engaged in business until 1875, when he came to Montana and entered the mercantile house of E. L. Bonner & Co. at Deer Lodge, as salesman. He continued in that position until August 1, 1883, when he formed the existing partnership with Mr. John W. Hartwell, as agents of the Montana Improvement Company at Helena. Mr. Edgar is a young man of fine business ability.

E. D. EDGERTON, Helena, attorney-at-law and president of the Second National Bank, is a native of Wayne Co., Pa., and was born December 9, 1852. His early days were spent in attendance at school. He pursued the study of the higher branches in Columbia College, New York. He also gave his attention to the study of law; was admitted to the bar May 17, 1877, and going to New York city engaged in the practice of his profession until 1881, when he came to Montana and located in Helena. He soon after returned east, but in February, 1882, again came to Montana, since which time he has practiced his profession in the city of Helena. Upon the organization of the Second National Bank, Mr. Edgerton was elected president of that corporation. He is also interested in real estate in the city and an active worker for the improvement of the country and the people. Mr. Edgerton was married September 9, 1879, to Miss Kate Durland. They have one son, Erastus Ralph Edgerton.

WILLIAM EICKE, Helena P. O., born in Prussia, in 1828; came to the United States in 1855, stopping in Richmond, Va., where he was employed as a baker until 1863, when he went to California and engaged in mining and afterward in farming at Auburn in that State. In 1866 he came to Montana and began mining in Dry Gulch, and mined one season at Helena. He then went to "French Bar," where he remained for three years, until he revisited California. After one year there he returned to Helena, where he worked at his trade until 1881, since which time he has been engaged in farming in this valley.

R. S. ELLS, Cartersville, came to Montana in 1863, leaving Fort Abercrombie July 7, 1862, with a train consisting of 60 wagons, 130 men and 11 women. The train was in charge of James Fisk and traveled through the heart of the Sioux nation but a short time prior to their breaking out in Minnesota. There was one marriage and one birth on the trip. He first settled at Deer Lodge, but soon went to Bannack and engaged in mining, seventy-five of the party with whom he came out going to Montana City immediately after the discovery of gold at that place. In 1864 he left Bannack and prospected in Wisconsin and California Gulches for a few months, thence to Virginia City, where he took charge of a saw mill. He afterward set up a saw mill at Blackfoot City, which mill he moved to the vicinity of Helena. A short time after this he went to Silver Bow prospecting; again ran the saw mill until 1866 at Helena, and at this time took it to Blue Cloud, where he remained until 1869, when he went to Gallatin valley, where he put up another mill and ran the first steam thresher in the territory. He then engaged in farming until 1872, since which time he has been engaged in the lumber business on the West Gallatin some time, and in the Little Pear Creek valley since 1875, where he has two mills, and is also interested in ranching and stock-growing.

HOMER ELY, Pear Creek valley, was born at Wilberham, Hampden Co., Mass., July 22, 1849, and is the son of Jonathan Dixon and Julia (Clarke) Ely. His father was a shoemaker by trade, but at different times had followed farming to some extent. In 1856 Mr. Ely left Massachusetts and came to Adams Co., Wis., where he remained until 1871 engaged in farming. From Wisconsin he came to Pear Creek valley and took up the farm of 160 acres upon which he now lives, and which is chiefly devoted to the raising of hay and grain. Mr. Ely received a good common school education and started out in life at the age of 18 years. He was married in 1881 to Miss Florence Brubaker, a native of Kansas. They are the parents of one child, Dixon Homer.

HARVEY ENGLISH, Helena, was born March 24, 1835, in Clay Co., Mo., seven miles north of Kansas City, and attended school in the country till he was fifteen. He then left, accompanied by two brothers, for McKissick's Grove, Ia., where they first settled, arriving April 18, 1840. He remained there until 1867, farming. In 1846 he volunteered in the First Missouri Mounted Volunteers, under Col. Donaphan, with whom he went through the entire Mexican war. In 1849 he went to California and engaged in both mining and stock-raising, locating what was afterward a celebrated ranch in the Ione valley. In 1850 he returned to Iowa, and was elected the first school commissioner of Fremont county, served two years, and was then elected state Senator from the seventh senatorial district, for a four years' term. In 1864 he came to Helena and laid out ranches in Prickly Pear valley, Rock and Wolf Creeks, being the first to locate at these points. In 1867 he was elected chairman of school directors for four years. While in office he submitted a resolution to the board to levy taxes to enable them to build a brick schoolhouse on Warren street, which was adopted. Mr. English was sheriff of this county for the years 1871-2-3. He has since been engaged in mining in the vicinity of Helena. Not being in good health he has lately served for three months as special nightwatchman, an appointment by the Mayor. He married Miss Mary Fletcher, of Missouri, November 7, 1851. After her death he married Miss Wheelock, of Springville, N. Y., January 21, 1858. They have had six children: Ianthe, Molly, Jefferson D., Charles Francis, Harvey Moore, and Bensley B. All except Molly and Bensley are now living. Mr. English is president of the Mexican Association of Montana.

C. G. EVANS, of the firm of Sandford & Evans, Helena, was born in Oneida Co., N. Y., December 25, 1840. He was brought up in New York, and resided in that state until 1864, when he crossed the plains with ox teams to Virginia City, M. T. Two weeks later he came to Helena, where he passed one year in mining, and then engaged in the lumber trade. Mr. Evans was married at Helena, March 28, 1880, to Miss Margaret Graham, who has resided in the territory since 1866.

W. H. EWING, a prominent farmer of Pear Creek valley, is a native of Butler Co., O., but was raised in Kentucky, living in the latter state for fifteen years. From Kentucky he went to Missouri, in which state he remained about ten or twelve years; in 1864 crossed the plains and came to Virginia City, stopping there from September until April, 1865; moving thence to Helena, where he remained until 1869. In that year he purchased the farm of 320 acres on which he now resides, about three miles north of Helena. This farm is mostly devoted to hay-farming. While living in Helena he was engaged in the livery business. Mrs. Ewing was formerly Miss Rebecca B. Taylor, and a native of Missouri.

BEN. EZEKIEL (deceased) was born of Jewish parents at Tiverton, England, May 15, 1826; came to America in 1841; mined in Alder gulch in 1863; was elected commissioner of Madison county in 1865, and served as a member of the Montana legislature at one of the sessions held in Virginia City, and served several times as chief clerk of each House. He was also deputy sheriff under Thomas Deyarmon, since proprietor of the Madisonian. In 1872-3 he was a clerk for Heidenheim & Marks, in Virginia City, and in 1876 came to Helena, going into the clothing store of Jake Feldberg, with whom he remained until 1882. He remained a citizen of Helena from the time of his arrival here until his death, April 29, 1885. Ben and Myer Harris, his nephews, who opened a store at Helena in the fall of 1885, are the only relatives he had in the territory.

B. W. FINNELL, Pear creek valley, son of Benjamin W. and Eliza Finnell, was born at Georgetown, Ky., December 28, 1845. His father was judge of Scott county in the same state for a number of years. Mr. Finnell came to Nevada, Idaho, in 1865, and followed mining there for some time; also freighted for a considerable period. Went to Bodie, Cal., where he remained three years, then returned to Idaho, stopping at Salmon City until 1870, when he came to Last Chance, and thence proceeded to Montana City. In 1876 he went to the San Juan mines in Colorado, remaining there until the Leadville excitement of 1878. He resided at Leadville until the spring of 1882, when he went to the Wood river country on the "stampede," but returned to Helena the same year. He was married to Miss Jennie Butler, of Omaha, Neb., in 1875. They are the parents of one daughter, Ann, now about 8 years old.

DANIEL W. FISK, one of the owners of the Herald, is one of the early settlers, having come to the territory in 1867. He was born in Conneaut, O., was educated at Wabash college, studied law, and was admitted to the bar at Lafayette, Ind., in 1862. Then went to New York and raised a company of volunteers near Buffalo, received his commission from Governor Morgan as captain in the 132d Regiment of N. Y. Vols., and commanded this company while serving at Suffolk, Va., and in the campaigns round Newbern and Fort Beaufort, N. C. Coming to Montana by way of the Missouri river, he reached Helena in the summer of 1867, and shortly after became city editor of the Herald, as well as owner with his two brothers, in which business he has continued ever since, the past few years occupying the position of business manager. He was married at Helena in 1878 to Miss Julia F. Walker, daughter of Major Robert C. Walker, U. S. A., and niece of Hon. James G. Blaine. Mr. Fisk traveled in Europe about a year, and his letters while abroad will be well remembered by the readers of the Herald as containing many facts of interest and information concerning places of note in the old world. He resides at Helena, owns considerable property in real estate and cattle, and is thoroughly identified with the interests and prosperity of the city and territory. (Vide Hist. of Press.)

A. F. FOOTE, Helena, was born at Washington, Orange Co., N. Y., November 24, 1853. His parents moved to Middleton, N. Y., when he was very young. He went to school at this latter place, and when quite young entered Dr. Royce's office to learn dentistry. After a few years he became that doctor's partner. During this time he took a course of lectures at the Philadelphia Dental College, and in 1878 he married Miss Mary Anna King, of Middleton, N. Y. In 1880 he went to New York city and there followed his profession until 1882, when coming to Helena, Mont., he formed a partnership with Dr. L. W. Frary. Early in 1883 Dr. Foote bought Dr. Frary's interest in the business, the latter retiring to live on a fruit farm which he owns in Lower California.

GEORGE B. FOOTE, Attorney at Law, Helena, was born in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., July 8, 1838. He received his education in that State and began the study of law. During the war he served as inspector of arms for the U. S. government, and in 1864 went to Helena, Mont., erected the seventh cabin in the camp, and engaging in mining so continued until 1867, at which time he accepted the office of U. S Deputy Surveyor, which he held for thirteen consecutive years. In 1881 he gave his attention to the practice of law, which he confines mostly to the profession of land attorney. During his residence in the Territory he has held the office of county surveyor several years. Mr. Foote was married in 1873 to Miss Effie Reed, of Erie, Pa., by whom he has two children.

J. P. FORD, of Ford Bros., Sun River Crossing, was born in Greene Co., Mo., April 3, 1859. His parents removed to Virginia City, M. T., in 1864. In 1868 he commenced as cowboy, taking charge of stock. Thus he was engaged until 1879, when he located a ranch at Sun river. At eighteen years of age he went to Springfield, Mo., and attended school for two years, returning to Montana in May, 1882. Then left in search after stolen horses to rough Dakota, and then to Canadian Northwest. Returning to Sun River Crossing he formed a partnership with his brother William in the general merchandise business. Mr. Ford also has a herd of cattle which occupies a portion of his time.

W. H. FORD, of Ford Bros., Sun River Crossing, was born at Springfield, Mo., April 5, 1860. In 1864 his parents moved to Virginia City, M. T., thence to Fish Creek, Jeff valley, engaging in farming and stock raising; next moved to Ft. Benton, where they remained during the years 1868, 1869, then located a ranch on Sun river and engaged in raising cattle. In 1872 his father died at Bozeman; his mother resides on the ranch at Sun river. In January, 1883, he formed a partnership with his brother, J. P. Ford, and opened a general store at Sun River Crossing. He was married to Miss Peek, of Michigan, in May, 1883. Mr. Ford is also interested in cattle and horse growing, together with attending to his store.

SAMUEL FORD, P. O. Florence, was born in Canada, June 29, 1834. When eighteen years of age he came to the United States and had been engaged in Minnesota, Missouri and Louisiana before coming to Montana. In the year 1861 he took passage on the Chippewa for Fort Benton. The boat blew up above Fort Union on the same trip, but fortunately no one was hurt. Arriving at Fort Benton, Mr. Ford engaged with the American Fur Co., and remained in that service three years, since which time he has been engaged at Silver City, in business near Cartersville, in ranching, and in 1872 took up his present ranch on the south fork of Sun river. Mr. Ford was married at St. Peter's Mission, in December, 1875, to Miss Clementine Lapere.

W. E. FREDERICK, manager W. U. Telegraph Co., Helena, was born in Canada, August 16, 1840. He was raised and educated in his native country until 1863, when he came west and passed the first winter at Colville, Wy. T. Turning his attention to packing, he spent two years running pack-trains into the Idaho mines and Boise Basin. He then spent several months in California, and thence went to the Kootenai mines in the Canadian Northwest, where he remained one summer, when he went to Jefferson Gulch. After devoting his time to mining for one year he moved to Utah, since which time he has given his attention to telegraphy, and in June, 1870, took charge of the office at Helena, which position he has since held, having charge also of the telephone lines to Deer Lodge City and the Jefferson and Wickes mines. He was elected clerk and recorder of Lewis & Clarke Co. in 1884. Mr. Frederick was married in 1876 to Miss Annie Ray, of Helena, daughter of Thomas Ray, one of the early settlers.

FRED R. FROST, P. O. Dearborn, son of Peter B. and Martha A. (Rice) Frost, was born at Portland, Me., September 21, 1845, and there was engaged with his father in dry goods and ready-made clothing until 1868. At this time he visited Colorado, where he was engaged four years in the cattle business, making two trips to Texas for stock during that period. In 1872 he came to Montana, and has since been engaged in stock-raising in Madison and Lewis and Clarke counties. Mr. Frost was married on the 29th day of January, 1882, to Miss Mary Thomas.

JAMES P. FRYATT, Pear Creek Valley, was born February 18, 1838, in Elizabethtown, Canada, the son of James and Sarah Fryatt. His father being a farmer, young James was taught the same occupation, and followed it until he came west. When about six months old his parents moved to New York State. In 1860, in company with his brother George, who now resides in Prickly Pear valley, James Fryatt came to Wisconsin and spent the winter. In 1861 he became filled with enthusiasm concerning the rich mines of the State of Nevada, and determined to cross the plains and try his luck in gaining a fortune at mining. This determination he forthwith put into execution in due time, arrived in Virginia city and went to work in the mines, remaining until 1865. Not finding his fortune here, he resolved to try Montana, believing that whole territory to be one vast gold mine. In the fall of the same year he arrived in Prickly Pear valley and determined to try farming instead of mining; consequently he located himself in a cabin in the valley near his present residence. After a short time he purchased a ranch, and paid for it in 90 days out of the proceeds of the cultivation of the same. Mr. Fryatt, after getting his home, began to grow weary of bachelorhood and decided to return to Minnesota and take one of its fair daughters for his life-partner. Accordingly on April 4, 1872, he married Miss Mary Y. Wilson, a native of St. Lawrence Co., N. Y. Their children are Mary E., Emma S., Orvis James and Rena M. Mr. Fryatt owns 320 acres under a good state of cultivation, well fenced and with good improvements; has apple trees, plums, cherries, pears, and all kinds of small fruits in abundance. When he arrived in Virginia city, Nev., he had $10; gave five of it to a friend, and on his arrival in Alder gulch, M. T., he possessed 40 cents. He called on Nelson Story and asked for work. Mr. Story told him he did not need a man, but had heard of his being out of money and gave him an ounce and a half of gold-dust. This was his start, and by strict economy and close attention to business he has gained a competence. He has never drank a glass of liquor, and never used tobacco. He was formerly a large dealer in hay, but has changed to general farming.

CAPT. THOMAS P. FULLER, Helena, was born at Schnectady, N. Y., October 23, 1838, being a son of William and Sarah (Peck) Fuller. He was educated in the schools of Columbia and Saratoga counties. In 1858 he went to St. Paul and engaged in bookkeeping for his father (who at that time had several stores in the Territories), and remained at St. Paul until April, 1860, when he accompanied his father to the Indian Territory, and locating a trading post in the Cherokee nation, remained there until the fall of 1860. He went east late in 1860, and was in Fairfax Co., Va., when the war broke out. Soon after, going to New York, he enlisted in Company D, of the Ninety-third New York Volunteers and was promoted to First Lieutenant, next to Captaincy and afterward to Quartermaster of the Second Brigade, Third Division of the Second Army Corps. He was wounded in the neck on the peninsular frontier near Watertown; was mustered out on July 12, 1865, and soon after went to St. Paul in the employ of James J. Hill, then president of the Manitoba Railroad, he remaining there until the spring of 1866, when he came to Montana with a wagon train belonging to Capt. J. S. Fisk. Soon after his arrival he engaged in the hotel business at Helena for a short time in company with Maj Cullen. Quitting the hotel business, he accepted a position with Wells, Fargo & Co., as agent at Virginia City and Helena, and in October, 1870, was appointed Assistant Internal Revenue Collector for the counties of Deer Lodge and Missoula, and from 1870 to 1883 served as agent for the Diamond R. Freight Company, at Deer Lodge and Missoula, and as Internal Revenue Collector until June 1, 1873. On the latter date he was appointed Collector for the district of Montana, which position he has held until 1883, when by an Executive order dated July 10, 1883, he was appointed Collector of the consolidated district of Montana, Idaho and Utah designated as the Montana district. He also acted in the capacity of disbursing agent for the United States Assay office during its construction. On March 15, 1871, Mr. Fuller was married to Miss Lillian Lippincott, a native of Minneapolis, Minn., to whom was born two children, named respectively Florence and Lillian L. On April 9, 1883, he was appointed as Adjutant General, ranking as Brigadier General of the Territory.

S. G. FULTON, Assistant General Freight Agent of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., Portland, Ore., was born September 7, 1851, in Massachusetts, and removed with his parents while quite young to New Hampshire, where he was educated. In 1872 he entered the service of the Northern Pacific railroad at the eastern terminus. In 1878 was assigned to the St. Paul general office, and placed in charge of the ticket department, where he remained two years, and was then promoted to the agency at Glyndon, Minn., serving for both the Northern Pacific and the St. P. M. & M. railroads. In July of the same year he was transferred to the Fargo station, on the Northern Pacific railroad, and in January, 1882, was appointed division freight agent of the Dakota division with headquarters at Fargo. His duties embraced general charge of freight on the main line and branches of the Northern Pacific railroad between Fargo and Bismarck. In January he was transferred to Montana, and appointed general agent at Helena. In June, 1885, he was appointed assistant general freight agent of the company, with headquarters at Portland. The appointment took effect July 1. Mr. Fulton succeeded A. D. Edgar, who recently resigned because of ill health. Mr. Edgar, who was formerly general agent at Chicago, was appointed assistant general freight agent only about a year ago. While a resident of Minnesota, in 1876, the Republicans, recognizing his worth, ability and integrity, elected him to the State Legislature from the Duluth district, and as an appreciation of his efforts and labors, they re-elected him the following term. He was prominent as a member of various committees, and served with credit to himself and his constituents. Although one of the two, if not the youngest member of this great body, he was recognized for his activity and earnestness coupled with honesty.

MICHAEL GANNON, Pear Creek Valley, a native of Ireland, and a miner by occupation, arrived in Montana in 1866, and is now located on a farm of 220 acres in this valley. The farm which Mr. Gannon owns is in good condition, contains good buildings and is principally devoted to the raising of hay, although he has considerable stock, among the latter being some fine Jerseys. He is married and has three children.

LOUIS GANS, New York city, the senior partner of the firm of Gans & Klein, is a native of Bohemia, Austria, where he was born in 1842. When eighteen years of age he came to America, and entered business at Mobile, Ala. He then went to California, engaged in mercantile business at San Francisco, and formed a partnership with Mr. Henry Klein, under the firm name of Gans & Klein. They continued business at San Francisco for some time, when they removed to Placerville, Idaho, and thence to Helena in 1866. In 1868 Mr. Gans went to New York and established the house in that city, since which time he has made his home there. He is a thorough business man, possessed of unlimited courage and enterprise.

HERMAN GANS, Helena, junior partner of the firm of Gans & Klein, merchants, was born in Bohemia in 1849, emigrated to America in 1866, spent four years in New Haven, Conn., and in 1870 came to Helena, where he entered the service of Gans & Klein. He continued in the position of book keeper until 1877, when he was admitted a member of the firm. He now has general supervision of the mercantile business of the firm in Montana.

GANS & KLEIN, manufacturers and wholesale and retail dealers in fine clothing and men's furnishing goods, Helena, Ft. Benton and Butte, found.d their business at San Francisco, Cal., and established their house at Helena in 1866. Louis Gans, superintendent of the factory in New York, established in 1868 on Thomas street, Herman Gans, superintendent of the mercantile houses in Montana, and Henry Klein, superintendent of the extensive agricultural and live stock interests, compose the firm. In 1877 the house at Butte was established, and in 1881 the branch at Ft. Benton was opened. The firm had houses at Deer Lodge and Diamond, which have been discontinued. A reference to the history of Helena points out the losses sustained by this firm through fires. The company's farm, situate in the Missouri valley, embraces 3,000 acres, a large acreage being under cultivation, irrigated from a ditch eight miles long. The stock of horses, cattle and sheep are numbered by the thousand, and the whole outfit constitutes one of the finest ranches in the country.

A. R. GATES, Helena, was born in Trumbull Co., Ohio, January 8, 1843; was raised in Ohio, and there engaged in business until 1877, when he came to Montana. Locating at Helena, he has since been engaged in the mercantile business and has built up a large and constantly increasing trade. Mr. Gates is also largely interested in stock raising and is a stockholder in the Montana National Bank, of Helena. In the year 1881 he was married to Miss Florence Kepner, of Trumbull Co., Ohio.

HUGH F. GAYLOR, P. O. Helena, was born in Tyrone Co., Ireland, March 13, 1828. Emigrating to New Brunswick, and from that province to the United States, he settled in Maine, and was engaged in lumbering from seven to ten years. He passed three years in California, a portion of the time in San Francisco, and was in the lumber trade and hotel business, the latter in Humboldt. From California he proceeded to the Puget Sound region and remained three years. He sold his business to Captain Crosby's son, and was subsequently located at Dalles City, Ore., for one year, removing from there to Boise City, Idaho, where he kept a hotel one year. He next located at Salmon City, and finally, coming to Montana, became a resident of Helena, which is now his home. He owns a homestead of 80 acres at Willow Springs, also a farm on Willow Creek, besides several farms near Helena, including one of 500 acres. Mr. Gaylor was married June 23, 1860, to Miss Matilda Glogly, of Bangor, Me. They have five living children, viz.: Frank, James, Albert, Nellie, and Margaret Matilda.

W. H. GEBAUER, of Gebauer & Yergy, Helena, was born at Cleveland, Ohio, March 24, 1848. He lived at this place with his parents and attended school every winter in Euclid township until 21 years of age. He assisted on the farm during the summers and was three years learning the trade of carpenter and joiner, at which he worked in Cleveland and vicinity for five years. In 1873 he came to Helena overland from Fort Benton, and, taking contracts, worked till 1882, then built a large planing mill in conjunction with other gentlemen. He married in 1872 Miss Melissa M. Jones, of Mayfield, Ohio, and they have now five children. Mr. Gebauer is a member of the Masonic fraternity. When he first came to Helena, he invested all his money, $400, in mines and lost it, he betook himself again to his trade and left mining alone. He is now interested in a planing mill and sash, door and blind factory. In 1885 he built the Grand Central Hotel at Helena under contract with the owners.

JOHN R. GILBERT, Helena, contractor, was born March 1, 1822, in Dutchess Co., N. Y. At an early age he learned the carpenter's trade of Silas Hotchkiss. He emigrated to California in 1849, engaged in mining near Sacramento, and was the third person to run a transfer team in that place. From 1859 to 1864 he was in the commission business at Golden City, Col., and was the first deputy Sheriff holding office there. He was elected probate judge in Jefferson City, Col., while at that point, and a short time afterward came to Helena. He was in the internal revenue service from March, 1865, to 1873; was appointed U. S. marshal for Helena, holding the office six months, and has since contracted for the erection of buildings of all kinds. Mr. Gilbert married Miss Russ, of Springfield, Mass., May 1, 1842. They have one daughter, Alice C., who married Dr. L. W. Frary, formerly of Helena, but now in California.

ROBERT GILBERT, Florence, was born at Brighton, Eng., October 19, 1856, and is a son of Robert and Frances (Bachelor) Gilbert. He came to the United States with his parents and located at Omaha, Neb. He has been on the frontier since 1868, and in 1875 enlisted as drummer in the U. S. army, serving nearly five years in the Seventh U. S. Infantry, a good part of the time being spent with Lieut. Belknap, Major Blaine and Col. Gibbon in their various trips through the Territory. Mr. Gilbert's ranch is nicely situate on the South Fork of Sun river.

W. C. GILLETTE, Dearborn P. O., was born in the State of New York, March 10, 1832, and is a son of Orimel and Julia F. Gillette. He came to Montana in 1862 by steamer up the Missouri river, and although booked for Fort Benton was landed at Fort Union, as, on account of low water, the boat was unable to proceed further. He, with his companions, having bought their own conveyance, left the boat and proceeded up the valley by land. Near Milk river they were met by a tribe of Indians, who wanted them to go back, but the chief was in favor of their pursuing their journey. They, wishing to avoid trouble and danger, had decided to go back after holding a conference among themselves, but the Indians, it seemed had also held a conference, and viewed them more favorably, and when they turned their wagons to retrace their steps, the Indians rode up and said they must go on, so they proceeded on their journey unmolested. Mr. Gillette first located at Montana City in September, 1862, but remained there only a short time, when he went via Cottonwood to Bannack and engaged in general merchandising, making three trips to Fort Benton in the spring of 1863 for goods, but instead of sending goods to Bannack had them taken direct to Virginia City, gold having just been discovered there. He continued in the merchandise business there until 1865, when he went to Helena and there engaged in the same business until 1871. He, however, remained at Helena until 1877, at which time he engaged in stock raising, and has continued in such business to the present time. About 1865 Mr. Gillette commenced work on the road through the Pear Creek Canyon, having secured a charter for a toll road for a period of ten years. After expending a vast amount of money and labor the road has been rendered quite an important thoroughfare.

D. T. GOODELL, Helena, was born in Oswego Co., N. Y., November 7, 1819, where his parents, Elijah and Philura (Canfield) Goodell, resided. He left home in the spring of 1844, going to Wisconsin, where he was engaged as farmer, cooper, and in saw mill until 1860. In 1861 he visited Florence, Ore., where he passed a year in mining and getting out timber. In 1863 he moved to Idaho City and engaged in mining and getting out building material until 1866, when he came to Helena, where he has since devoted his attention to gardening, farming and stock raising. He has on his ranch some fine Percheron horses and Jersey cattle. Mr. Goodell was married at Geneva, Wis., to Miss Catharine Chambers February 22, 1849. They are the parents of two children, both of whom are married and living in the eastern states.

D. M. GOODWIN, Pear Creek valley, is a native of Indiana, and was born in 1834. His father died when he was quite young. He lived with his mother, as he was the head of the family, until 1861, during this time moving twice, once to Marion Co., Ia., where they lived five years, and then to Nebraska City, where he bought a farm. His mother died here, and soon afterward he bought a farm at Leavenworth, Kan., and resided on it till 1863, at which time he sold out and going to St. Joseph ran the Lake House till 1870. He then came by steamer to Montana and rented a farm on Prickly Pear. The next year he bought a ranch near by, and has since added to it till he owns 280 acres of splendid land, which returns him a handsome yearly income. Mr. Goodwin was married in 1864 to Miss Mollie Hill, of St. Joseph, Mo., and they have two children: Claudia and Ella. Mr. Goodwin was debarred from an education while young and in consequence is giving his children every facility to acquire knowledge.

F. S. Goss, Florence, came to the territory in 1862, from Galena, Ill., and has since traveled over a vast portion of Montana. While engaged on Government buildings on Sun River, he was obliged to leave within two days to save his life from Plummer and companions, who were also engaged on the same work. Mr. Goss has had several encounters with the Indians, but always escaped unharmed, although many times being in very perilous places. He visited or worked in nearly all the mining camps of the territory up to the year 1870, at which time he settled on his present ranch.

WILLARD GRATTAN, Pear Creek valley, born in Oneida Co., N. Y., in 1817, whose parents were of Irish-English descent (the father being a farmer by occupation), left New York in 1851, resided in Pennsylvania for a short time and then moved to Portage Co., Wis., from which county he came to Gallatin valley, and settled five miles above Gallatin City, where he remained for three years. In 1869 he located in the Pear Creek valley, taking up 160 acres of land under the Homestead Act, of which about 60 acres is now under cultivation. Mr. Grattan was married to Miss Mary Wells. They are the parents of three children: Minerva, Hattie E and Stephen A. Minerva was married to Matthew Roberts, July 3, 1874.

NICHOLAS GREDEL, Silver city, son of Adam and Mary Gredel, was born in Germany November 21, 1842. At the age of seven years he arrived at New Orleans, with his parents, both of whom died of yellow fever about a week after arrival. He remained at New Orleans two years; then going to St. Louis, Mo., where he remained until 16 years, when he went to Quincy, Ill. There he was employed for one year as baker and confectioner, having learned the trade at St. Louis. In 1860 he moved to Denver, Col., where he was again engaged at his trade until the spring of 1863, at which time he came to Montana and worked one year at Bannack as baker, and the second year as miner and merchant. He next went to French gulch, where he remained until the fall of 1865 engaged in baking and mining business. Moving to Deer Lodge he continued the baking and mining until 1868, when he went to Canyon Creek and followed mining until 1870, at which time he came to Helena and engaged in the hotel and liquor business. In 1872 he returned to Canyon Creek, being interested there in mines. After spending a year there, he went to the head of Silver creek, where he remained until March, 1878, when he bought his present business property, consisting of hotel, feed stable and ranch in connection. He was appointed postmaster during the summer of 1878, which position he still holds. Mr. Gredel was married at Helena to Miss Mary Tierney in September, 1880.

I. GREENHOOD, of Greenhood & Bohm, Helena, was born at Regensburg, Bavaria, May 11, 1842. In 1858 he left his parents and came to the United States and lived, attended school and worked some in a store in Ohio until 1863, at which time he went to California, where he started a match factory, the first on the western slope. In 1866 he came on mule back to Helena, M. T., and had but $1.25 when he arrived. He worked as clerk in different stores till 1876, when he started a dry goods house. In 1879 he added liquors. The firm has another house in New York, and own about 4,000 acres of land on Nevada creek, besides some stock. In 1871 Mr. Greenhood was married to Miss Rosa Abrahams, of Newburgh, N. Y.; they have two children.

F. A. GREENLEAF, Helena, was born at Bath, Me., November 27, 1853. He received his education in his native State, and is a graduate of the Bath high school, which ranks among the best in the union, giving special attention to the teaching of chemistry, which was Mr. Greenleaf's chosen study. In 1875 he came to Montana and located in Helena, and in January, 1877, accepted his present position upon the first opening of the assay office, giving special attention to assaying and analytical chemistry and technical anilization. Mr. Greenleaf is a gentleman of superior talent and exceedingly fine taste, and as an amateur in the art of photography has made many fine views of interest and importance in Mont[illegible].

G. F. GRIESER, Silver City, was born in Germa[illegible] in 1840, and is a son of Joseph and Sophia Grieser. At 16 years of age he came to the United States, and in 1861 went to California; thence to Oregon, returning after a short time to California, where he was engaged in steamboating until 1863. He then went to Idaho, where he followed mining until 1865. From 1865 to the fall of 1866 he resided at Beartown, Deer Dodge county. Late in 1866 he went to Confederate gulch; where he was engaged in mining until 1871. He then went to the States, and in 1872 returned to Helena and was married during that season to Mrs. Sophia Miller, at Helena. He bought his present ranch in 1873.

CHAS. HAGEMANN, Helena, was born February 13, 1849, in Westphalia, Prussia; attended school until 14, then learned the butcher trade at Eberfelt, Prussia, where he remained three years. He traveled through Germany until he was drafted into the army at Hamburg. He was then 20 years old, and served with the 13th cavalry regiment, second company, three years and eight months through the Franco-Prussian war. He finally came to the United States, arriving at Baltimore and going through to Chicago, where he worked for two and a half years for different parties as butcher. He was subsequently in Omaha, Neb.; San Antonio, Texas, and again at Omaha. July 11, 1878, he came to Helena and opened a butcher shop on Rodney street, near Breckenridge, and later he formed a partnership with Henry Hill and R. A. Brose. Mr. Hagemann married Lena Swabutka in April, 1878, at Omaha. Has one child, Charles.

EARNEST HAHN, P. O. Helena, was born February 12, 1846, in Prussia. His parents emigrated to the United States when he was two years old, settling at Hazel Green, Grant Co., Wis., where he attended school until 14 years of age. He then went to Dubuque, Ia., and learned the trade of stone-mason with Mr. Shultz, working for him ten years. He returned to Grant county, where he owned a farm, and engaged in contracting, remaining about 8 years; sold his farm to Kearns and left for Montana; was 31 days coming up the Missouri river to Benton, having to stop to chop wood for the engine, besides being troubled by Indians. Arrived at Helena May 22, 1878; worked a short time for W. F. Myers, contractor; in 1879 worked for James Mason, contractor, for the year, and since then has done business for himself. He married Theresa Sall October 12, 1869, in Grant Co., Wis. They have two children, Valentine and John.

R. S. HALE, Helena, is a native of Kentucky, and was reared in Missouri, his parents having moved to that state while he was quite young. In 1864 he came to Montana with a train consisting of 150 wagons, and accompanied by 700 people under the guidance of Capt. Joe Knight, coming via the Bridger cut-off, and crossing the Yellowstone near where the N. P. R. R. now crosses it. The first sign of civilization discovered by them was in the Bozeman divide at the entrance of the Gallatin valley. Reaching Virginia City July 10, Mr. Hale bought the building in which the five road agents were hung, and forming a partnership with a Mr. Clayton, became interested in the drug business under the firm name of Clayton & Hale. In May, 1865, Mr. Hale went to Helena and established his present extensive business, but under the firm name of Clayton & Hale. In 1866 he bought Mr. Clayton's interest and controlled the business himself until 1872, having also in company with Mr. Clayton continued the business in Virginia City until 1868. In 1872 he admitted Mr. Rudnell as a partner in the business. Mr. Hale has also been largely engaged in jobbing and prominently in mining, also in water-ditches throughout the country. Mr. Hale's remarkable success in business can be attributed only to his own perseverance and energy. As a worker and promoter of public good he ranks among the foremost of the country.

JAS. H. HALFORD, P. O. Helena, was born November 21, 1832, in Murray Co., Tenn. His parents moved to Springfield, Ill., in 1836, remaining until 1844. Mr. Halford was employed for some time in a printing office by Abraham Lincoln. After living at St. Louis some years he went to California in 1852 and mined four years in Eldorado county. He returned to Missouri and joined the Confederate army. At St. Charles, Mo., Mr. Halford raised a company, which he commanded. The men all wore jean clothing, furnished by the ladies of the town. From this company Mr. Halford became notorious, and was known throughout the West as "Missouri Jim." After serving some time he returned to California and started a saloon and hotel at Upper Ranch. He sold out and went to Washington Territory, thence to Idaho, and in 1866 came to Montana and engaged in mining. Mr. Halford is interested in the Exchange on Main street, Helena, also has mines at Eldorado Bar, Basin gulch and Beaver, and ranches in Jefferson Co., at Lump gulch. He married Miss Ellen, daughter of Foster McKnight, of St. Charles, Mo., July 15, 1856, and has three children: James, Benjamin and Dodley.

JAMES HAMMOND, Helena, was born in Kildare Co., Ireland, November 29, 1845. While still in his infancy his parents moved to England, where he grew up to manhood and learned the trade of builder with his father. In 1862 he came to America and shortly after went to South America, and traveled through Brazil, Bolivia, Patagonia, Argentine Republic and Uruguay. He went to Paraguay with the American minister, and gazed in wonder on the site of the three greatest ruins of the world. He left Buenos Ayres on January 1, 1870, the yellow fever raging there at that time, and returning to the United States settled at Fall River, Mass., and was appointed Superintendent of Construction on the Providence reservoir, which was constructed at a cost of $11,000,000. After this his services were secured on the New York city postoffice building, and also on the Treasury building at Washington. In 1871 Mr. Hammond was married to Miss Mary Ellen Eagan, a native of Manchester, England. They are the parents of two children, namely, James and Mary. Mrs. Hammond's health becoming seriously impaired, he removed with his family to Leadville, Col. Came to Montana in 1877, and has since been engaged in contracting, building, stone-cutting, etc. He has erected some of the most substantial buildings in the Territory, and has given much attention to prospecting for fine building stone, of which he has a great practical knowledge. In May, 1885, Messrs. Hammond and Davies discovered a yellow-building stone in Confederate Gulch, and close to the quarry a bed of fire clay.

JOHN SPAFFORD HARRIS, of Helena, was born in Truxton, Courtland Co., N. Y., December 18, 1825. He was the second son in a family of seven children, and was brought up on a farm, receiving a common school education in his native town. His mother died when he was ten years of age. He emigrated with his father in the spring of 1846 to Du Page Co., Ill., and there remained until the following December, when he went to Milwaukee and engaged as a clerk in a store for three years. While there he employed all his spare time in the higher branches of education. At this time, 1849, he engaged in business for himself, and remained in active business as merchant, commission merchant, banker and dealer in real estate, until the fall of 1863. Leaving home at this time for a trip to Memphis, but on arriving there, finding the city strictly blockaded and no intercourse being allowed with the surrounding country, he resolved to return home via New Orleans and New York. An accident happening to the boat he was detained at Natchez, and while there was induced to lease one of the largest and best supplied cotton plantations in Louisiana, where he had various experiences as a planter, the Union forces not being able to afford the protection they had promised to lessees. At the close of the war he was one of the largest planters in the State. He took no part in the elections first held in Louisiana after the war, but upon the passage of the Reconstruction Acts by Congress, he was active in organizing the colored voters into clubs, and instructing them in their new rights of citizenship in his own and adjoining parishes. He was elected to the Constitutional Convention from his district, including Concordia and Avoyelles parishes, receiving nearly every vote cast. At the close of the convention he was chosen one of the committee of seven to conduct State affairs, until the Constitution should be adopted and the State officials installed. At the next election he was chosen State Senator without any opposition, and by this Legislature was chosen United States Senator, taking his seat July 17, 1868, succeeding Judah P. Benjamin, who had withdrawn from the Senate previous to the war. He participated in all the elections, taking an active part, being a continuous member of the State Executive Committee, including the presidential election of 1876, when the State went Republican for the last time. He was appointed by President Arthur, Surveyor-General for Montana, and took charge of his office November 21, 1881.

J. W. HARTWELL, Helena, the senior partner of the firm of Hartwell & Edgar, was born in Windom Co., Vt., May 3, 1834. In 1851 he came west, spent two years in and about Chicago, and then went to St. Paul, Minn., where he was engaged in contracting and building. Four years later he engaged in the manufacture of lumber, on the Minnesota river. Subsequently he turned his attention to brick-making. In 1864 he came to Helena, M. T. In the fall of that year he associated himself with J. B. Sandford, C. G. Evans and George Merrill and brothers in the construction of the so-called Ten Mile Ditch. Mr. Hartwell was one of the originators of the enterprise, and continued one of the most earnest believers in the ultimate success of the improvement. The above mentioned parties, after constructing the ditch to within a few miles of Helena, and after an expenditure of $26,000, were obliged to suspend work for the want of the necessary capital to complete it. The works were sold to other parties, and finally completed in the fall of 1867, proving a complete success. Mr. Hartwell then engaged in the manufacture of lumber in company with Messrs. J. B. Sanford and C. G. Evans. He induced his partners to join him in building a flouring mill at a point eleven miles down the valley from Helena, now called the Standard mills, and which was the pioneer mill of this valley. In 1875 he sold out his interest in both the lumber and milling business, and for several years has been engaged in quartz mining. In the fall of 1883 he formed the existing partnership with Mr. Edgar, and opened the extensive lumber yards and mills at Helena.

ROBERT V. HARVEY, P. O. Helena, was born August 27, 1844, in Rhode Island. His parents removed to Boston when he was eight years old, and he there attended the public school until he was sixteen. He then learned the carpenter's trade from Paul McNutt, remaining with him five years. He took contracts previous to the war of the Rebellion, then acted as stage machinist in theaters for several years. He traveled through the South erecting opera houses at Selma, Montgomery and Eufala, Ala., and Macon and Columbus, Ga., also the celebrated Toodles opera house at St. Joseph, Mo. The gold excitement brought him to Helena. He mined at White Sulphur springs for one year, returned to Helena and erected the Presbyterian church on Fifth avenue. Then went to Silver creek (now called the Drumlummon mine) and prospected for four years; sold out his interest in four mines and prospected in the Ten Mile district 3 years, still owning five mines there. In 1879 he returned to Helena and built Ming's opera house, afterward again engaging in mining until 1882; worked for the Gregory Company in Jefferson county until 1883; returned to Helena and has since been engaged in mining and contracting. He married Miss Kate S. Miller, in August, 1877, at Helena.

WM. S. HASKILL, Helena, was born in Canada March 24, 1824. His parents moving to Massachusetts while he was yet in his infancy, he was raised in the state of Massachusetts, and there learned the trade of millwright, after which he went to Wisconsin, and locating in the southern part of that state followed his occupation some thirteen years. He then went to Missouri, where he remained three years, and thence went to Kansas, where he served in the quartermaster's department at Leavenworth four years during the Rebellion. He left Leavenworth April 13, 1864, with a large wagon train, and arrived at Virginia City about the last of August, where he soon after engaged in mining, and traded his outfit for five claims in Bevin's gulch, and in November, 1864, joined the stampede to Emigrant gulch, where he remained until June, 1865. He then went to Last Chance gulch and followed mining three years, when he sold his claim and went prospecting and mining for a number of years. He also served as storekeeper and gauger of a distillery some eight years, and has had varied experience in frontier life. Mr. Haskill was married in 1855 to Miss Mary Jane Smith, of Chenango Co., N. Y., to whom was born one child, Nelson D. Haskill, who died in December, 1881.

E. D. HASTIE, Sun River Crossing, was born December, 1856, at Des Moines, Ia. After leaving school he engaged in farming and stock raising and remained in Iowa until 1881. He then came to Montana and locating at Sun River Crossing, engaged in the cattle business with I. S. Corson. He is also interested with Mr. Fellers in stock on the Teton, together with being the owner of one ranch and also of property at Sun river.

SAMUEL T. HAUSER, Governor of Montana, was born at Falmouth, Pendleton Co., Ky., January 10, 1833. He was reared and educated in his native State, until 1854, when he removed to Missouri and engaged in civil engineering in the employ of railroad companies, afterward serving as assistant engineer on the Missouri Pacific and the Northern Pacific, and chief engineer of the Lexington branch, from Lexington to Sedalia, which latter position he held until 1862. He at that time came up the Missouri river, arriving at Fort Benton in June, crossing the country from that point to the head waters of the Columbia, where he was engaged in prospecting for a short time. In the fall of 1862 he went to the Bannack mines and in the fall of 1863 followed Lewis and Clarke's route down the Yellowstone. In 1865, in company with Mr. Sanders, he opened a bank at Virginia City under the firm name of S. T. Hauser & Co. During that year they also organized a mining company, erected the first furnaces in the Territory on Rattlesnake creek, and in 1866 Mr. Hauser organized the First National Bank of Helena, also the St. Louis Mining company at Phillipsburg, which company is now known as the Hope Mining company. They erected at Phillipsburg the first silver mill in the Territory. Mr. Hauser also organized the First National Bank of Missoula, the First National Bank of Butte, and the First National Bank of Benton, and has for years devoted his attention principally to banking interests. When he first engaged in banking, he loaned money at 4 and 5 per cent. per month. He has also been largely interested in stock and mining interests, and was president of the first railroad organization in the Territory, having organized the first railroad company within the limits of the Territory, the Utah & Northern. Mr. Hauser is now president of a branch of the Northern Pacific known as the Helena & Jefferson railroad. He was married to Miss Farrar, a daughter of Dr. Farrar, of St. Louis. In 1884 he was elected a delegate to the Democratic National Convention, and was appointed a member of the Notification Committee by that body. Mr. Hauser, by the exercise of superior financial and executive ability, has been of the most material aid in promoting the general interests of the Territory. In July, 1885, he was commissioned Governor of Montana, being the first resident citizen on whom such an honor has ever been conferred. (Vide chapters of general and local history.)

J. J. HEALY, (vide general and local history.)

WILLIAM HEALY, Sun River, was born at Cork City, Ireland, in 1828. After leaving school he assisted his brothers in milling some eight years, then came to New York, where he resided for one year. In July, 1873, he came to Sun River, where he was engaged working on a ranch for shares for two years; then located a ranch on Sun river, where he is at present engaged in stock-growing and agriculture. He was married to Miss Mary Collins in 1858 at Cork, Ireland. They are the parents of five children, viz.: Michael, Annie, Molly, Thomas and John.

CORNELIUS HEDGES, Helena, was born at Westfield, Mass., October 28, 1831, of which town his parents Dennis and Alvena (Noble) Hedges, were residents. He received a preparatory education at the Westfield Academy, after which he entered Yale College and graduated in the class of 1853. He then pursued the study of law one year, at the expiration of which time he entered the Harvard Law School, and graduating in 1856, went to Iowa, locating at Independence. There he practiced law until 1861, when he went east and engaged in teaching in Connecticut for a time. Returning to Independence he published the Independent Civilian until 1864. During that year he came to Montana with a mule team, accompanied by Timothy Wilcox and Henry Clark. On his arrival in Virginia City he engaged in mining in Alder Gulch and passed the Christmas holidays with his friend Wilcox on the Jefferson. There he heard of the excitement at Last Chance Gulch and came to Helena, arriving in that camp on January 16, 1865, where he soon after engaged in the practice of law. In the fall of 1866 he returned to the states, and in the spring of 1867 brought his family to the territory on the first boat that made the trip up the Missouri River that season. Resuming his law practice at Helena he continued it some time, when he was appointed United States Attorney, which office he resigned, and in 1872 was appointed Superintendent of Public Instruction; serving in that capacity six years. He also discharged the duties of Probate Judge for a period of five years. On February 22, 1883, he was reappointed to the office of Superintendent of Public Instruction. He was also elected secretary of the Territorial Historical Society. In 1870 he was one of a party of ten that formed the expedition to the National Park, and to him belongs the first suggestion of setting the park aside for national purposes. Mr. Hedges was married in 1857 to Miss Edna L. Smith, a native of Southington, Conn.

They are the parents of three sons and two daughters. —(Vide Political and Press chapters and chapter on Societies.)

DE FOREST HEDGES, P. O. Canon Ferry, came to Montana in the latter part of November, 1863, and engaged in mining, clerking and hunting game, being located first at Alder Gulch and subsequently at Virginia City. In the fall of 1864, while on a hunting trip in company with several companions on the Missouri bottoms, one of the men, Mr. Gilkie, was shot through the body while endeavoring to get his gun out of the wagon to shoot an antelope. He was left in good care while the party went on and killed 75 deer, antelope and elk, which they took to Virginia City and sold for ten cents a pound. In the fall of 1865, after various experiences, Mr. Hedges located at Helena and worked several seasons as foreman of the night shift for Taylor, Thompson & Co. He was afterward at French Bar and Grizzly Gulch, but in 1882 gave up mining. He has at present a ranch of 320 acres, acquired by pre-emption and as a homestead.

ALBERT HENRY, Cartersville, was born at Philadelphia, Pa., in December, 1862, and with his parents came to Helena, Mont., in 1872. After a few months' residence he removed to Silver City, where his father kept the Silver City Hotel, after a short time going to Beavertown, there keeping a stage station for a period of two years. Returning to Silver Creek they remained one year, after which they opened a small ranch two miles from Silver City, near Three Mile Creek. They went to the Teton in 1878, returned to the Pear Creek valley in 1879, where they again opened a ranch, on which they reside at the present time.

L. H. HERSHFIELD, Helena, was born in Oneida Co., N. Y., August 21, 1836. In 1854 he went to St. Louis to accept a position in a wholesale notion house, and in 1859 removed to Leavenworth, Kan. He started for Pike's Peak at the time of the great gold excitement there. Driving ox teams across the plains he went into the mercantile business at Central City, where he remained until 1864, at which time he came to Montana with a fine train of twenty-six wagons, which he disposed of to Monroe Salisbury on time, this being the latter's first stepping stone toward his present position as the greatest contractor in the service. Mr. Hershfield reached Virginia City on July 3, 1864, his train being loaded with merchandise, which he soon disposed of for gold dust. He also gave his attention to the buying of gold dust, and in the last week of November, 1865, first established his present banking business at Helena, being also engaged in the same business at Virginia City under the firm name of L. H. Hershfield & Co. In August, 1868, he admitted his brother to the business in Helena, and continued thus to June 10, 1882, when they organized the Merchants' National Bank, with a capital stock of $150,000. In 1880 Mr. Hershfield established a bank at Benton, and in 1883 also established one at White Sulphur Springs, he being also largely interested in the springs property, and an important owner and dealer in real estate. Mr. Hershfield was married in 1874, to Miss Mary Grah, a native of Germany, by whom he has four children, Lilly, Henry, Ezra and Rennie. The family now reside in New York. Mr. Hershfield's business life has been quite a remarkable and active one. On August 12, 1868, their correspondents in New York suspended, owing them $107,000, from which they never realized a dollar; but notwithstanding the continuous withdrawal of business from the bank for thirty days, they paid every obligation at maturity and within their own resources.

HOMER D. W. HEWINS, P. O. Helena, was born January 14, 1842, in Lorraine Co., Ohio. His parents moved to Fond du Lac Co., Wis., while he was a child, his father dying there in 1857. Homer removed with his mother to Topeka, Kan., where he remained two years. He then went to the Pike's Peak country, and engaged in mining and the stock business, coming from there to Montana in 1862. Passing through the Bitter Root country to Grasshopper Creek (now Bannack), he mined some time, then left on the first stampede to Alder Gulch; here his mother died. After mining a short time he returned to Bannack, sold his mines in the fall of 1863, and engaged in freighting between there and Salt Lake. After one year he sold out and adopted music for a profession, playing on the violin. He gave lessons at Alder Gulch until 1865, then came to Helena. In the spring of 1868 he went on the Sweet Water stampede, then to the Green River, Union Pacific Railroad, and then to Corinne. Here he was appointed first marshal of Corinne city proper. He returned to Helena in 1875 and engaged in teaming around town until 1880, when he sold out and again turned his attention to music. He gives lessons at his home on Clark avenue; belongs to Prof. Yaeger's silver cornet band. Married Eliza V. Eckert at Helena, November 13, 1873. Was elected alderman in April, 1883.

RICHARD HOBACH, Helena, is a native of the state of Kentucky, where he was born on the 11th day of August, 1835. At the age of 11 years he went to Indiana, where he remained until 1852, when he went to Minnesota and served in the Indian department under the government. After the Indian massacre he enlisted and served three years in the first Mounted Rangers and 2d Minnesota cavalry, and while in the service was on duty in the Yellowstone country. In 1866 he went to Helena and engaging in prospecting and mining has so continued to the present time. In 1870 and 1872 he patented lands for mining purposes, which are now very valuable as city properties. These lands he is now engaged in improving and selling the same. Mr. Hobach was married at St. Anthony, Minn., on the 27th day of December, 1863, to Miss Mary Hayes, of Pennsylvania. They are the parents of two children, William and Josephine.

D. J. HOGAN, Florence, was born at Milwaukee, Wis., September 6, 1842, of which city his parents, Thaddeus and Margaret Hogan, were old residents. In 1856 Mr. Hogan visited Chicago where he remained a short time; visited Galena, Ill., returned to Chicago; proceeded thence to St. Louis, Mo., spending in these cities the principal part of his time until 1865, when he came to Montana and engaged in mining in Alder and Bear gulches. In 1867 he turned his attention to stock raising, and is still so engaged. In September, 1870, he settled upon his present ranch, now comprising about 820 acres, and has also an interest in some 8,000 head of cattle and 75 head of horses. He is at present vice president of the Stock Growers' Association of district No. 2 of Montana, said district being situate in Choteau, Meagher and Lewis and Clarke counties. Mr. Hogan was married at Helena to Miss Eugenia Totten, February 6, 1883.

ANTON M. HOLTER, Helena, is a native of Moss, a small farming and fishing village on the eastern shore of Christiania fiord, Norway, where he was born June 29, 1831, his father being a seafaring man, who sailed on his last voyage in 1839, of whom no tidings have been heard since that year. Anton was the third in a family of five, having two brothers older and a brother and sister younger. His mother being left with scant means of support, he went to live with a maternal uncle, a farmer, and remained with him until he was 17 years of age. He learned to read fairly well, and to make his letters and thus was qualified to be confirmed as a member of the Lutheran church at the age of 15. At this time his greatest ambition was to be a sailor, but the fate of his father brought all the family influence to bear to prevent such a career. He learned the butcher's trade; abandoned it for the trade of a carpenter in one year, and contracted to serve three years for $10 per annum and board. He relates that all the instruction he ever received in arithmetic was one hour for four successive evenings from his eldest brother. Many reasons induced him to come to America. It was the country to which his father was sailing when last heard from, and there lingered yet a hope that he might be living and found. Another motive was the fact that when he arrived at manhood he found that the carpenter's trade was generally regarded as inferior in the social scale to the business of the farmer. Bidding his friends adieu, he set out on April 8, 1854, in a sailing vessel loaded with emigrants, and arrived at Quebec, May 25. His party came direct to the United States, meeting a serious smash-up in his first ride on the cars, in which five of his company were killed. On arriving at Rock Island, his party was attacked by cholera, and refused admission to any public house. Here he broke away, with some violence, from those with whom he had thus far traveled, and, seizing his trunk, fighting off the quarantine officers, he rushed aboard a boat just ready to push off, not knowing whether it was going up or down stream. At this time he did not know a word of English, and there was no one on the boat whom he had ever seen. Before leaving home he had heard of an old acquaintance living at Freeport, Ia., and as well as he could he tried to find the place and his friend, succeeding wonderfully well. He met with a welcome among his countrymen in Winneshiek Co., Ia., finding employment at his trade immediately. He tells with what a struggle, under the tutoring of his friends who had been longer in the country, he mustered courage to fix a price for his services. While others in his trade who did poorer work and less of it were asking $1 per day, he assented at once to $20 per month, and by the following spring he had accumulated $300. It made him feel richer at that time than $100,000 would to-day. Times were then good in Iowa, and Mr. Holter prospered; he was full of life and energy, found friends plenty, and work in abundance, as well as opportunities to speculate in lands, town lots and houses. Within a few more months he could confidently count himself worth $3,000, and began to think of going back to Norway. Wishing to see more of the country, he went down to St. Louis and spent the winter of 1855–6 at work at his trade on the Missouri Pacific, then building to Jefferson city, and where his friend and business associate, the present governor of Montana, was then employed as engineer. Returning to southern Iowa in the spring of 1856, he spent the next four years in that section, making Osage his headquarters. He accumulated much property, but times changed and values disappeared. With other misfortunes he was sick for nearly the whole of 1857 with brain fever and malaria. In the spring of 1860, having cleared up his debts, and being partly recovered, he joined the rush of fortune-seekers to Pike's Peak, his brother Martin then having joined him. In Colorado the brothers engaged in mining and farming with fair success. In the winter of 1862–3 he returned to Iowa. In the spring of 1863 revisited Colorado, and in the following autumn, in company with Alec. Evanson, started with a sawmill for Alder gulch, leaving Denver September 16. After suffering untold perils, with severe cold and deep snow, and having to abandon much of their loading, they arrived in Alder gulch on the first of December, locating their mill at Ramshorn Gulch, eighteen miles from Virginia City. It was on his return from his second trip to Virginia City, December 11, 1863, that he came near being a victim of the road agents, who were then in the height of their career of violence. George Ives and some of his companions had met Mr. Holter and his party on the way, near the mouth of Big Hole, and had evidently kept him in mind, thinking that he had stuff to sell in Virginia, and that on his way back he would have money. Mr. Holter had marketed some surplus articles in Virginia, but fortunately did not draw the money for them. He was returning with his two yoke of cattle without a wagon, and at the point of the road where the trail over the hill strikes the gulch, just below Nevada, Ives and a companion passed him seeming to take particular notice of him. Mr. Holter remembers hearing his companion address him as George. They went on ahead and took the lower road by Lorraine's, but Mr. Holter with his team took the upper road. When near the crossing of Brown's Gulch creek, Ives and Erwin finding he had taken the upper road, rode across and met him. It was business in a minute. Ives drew and leveled his revolver on him at about four feet and ordered him to pass over his money. Holter told him he had none; but Ives said he knew better, and he made him turn all his pockets inside out. Holter passed up his empty purse, which Ives examined and threw away; he gave him also a pocket book, which, besides some papers, had a small amount of postal currency. Ives, evidently angered at not getting money as expected, ordered Holter to leave the road and follow their trail. Remarking that as they had the drop on him he supposed he would have to obey, he turned and spoke to his cattle. Turning instantly again to look at Ives, the latter was taking deliberate aim at his head, and discharged his pistol as Mr. Holter threw back his head. The ball entered Mr. Holter's hat just above the band, grazed his scalp, cutting the hair as smooth as with a razor. For a moment Mr. Holter was stunned, and would have fallen but for the fact that he was so near his team that he threw his arm over the neck of the ox and staggered against him. Recovering his senses a moment after, his first impulse was to raise an ax which he was carrying on his left arm, the handle not fastened to the head. Ives at this instant seeing that his first shot had not killed, raised and deliberately aimed again at Mr. Holter's heart. It snapped but there was no shot. Seeing a possibility of escape by jumping in front and getting to the other side of his cattle before Ives could fire again, it was the inspiration of the instant to do so. The off oxen making objections to turnishing such close cover, started up and pushed the near oxen on to the horsemen, diverting their attention and making them move back. Seeing this diversion, Mr. Holter bethought him of some beaver dams in the creek, a few yards away, and he broke for them. The outlaws, however, did not follow; seeing a team coming up the road, not more than half a mile distant, they rode leisurely away. Mr. Holter then made his way to a cabin on the lower road, where One Eyed Reilly and some companions lived, where he tried to borrow a rifle or get them to go back with him. From their answers and conduct Mr. Holter became satisfied that these men were confederates or silent partners with the road agents. As it was now growing dark, Mr. Holter went back to where he had left his cattle, and having unyoked them, recovered his hat. He went on up the gulch and stayed over night with Stuart, Malcom Morrow and Chas. Olsen, who were then mining there. It turned out that the reason Ives' pistol only snapped at the second attempt on Holter was that at Lorraine's on his way being already pretty full, and being refused any more liquor, Ives had amused himself by shooting at the decanters, and had but one shot left. After getting back to camp, thinking and talking over the matter, Mr. Holter had made up his mind deliberately that it was his duty, above all other things, to arm himself and hunt Ives until he had either killed him or should perish in the attempt. His partner having vainly urged him to dismiss the idea, at last said that he should go too. They had outfitted themselves and started out to hunt Ives, when at the very first place they stopped they learned that Ives had just been hanged. Instead of rejoicing, as one would suppose, Mr. Holter says the news made him most sick with anger and disappointment because he could not at least have been allowed to help hang him. It would be very interesting but too long a story to tell here how Mr. Holter and his partner during that first winter put up their saw-mill, having to make roads to haul in their machinery on hand sleds, the snow being too deep to use cattle; how they whipsawed all the lumber to build their mill and flume, how they made an anvil of a broad-ax, and bellows of a rubber overcoat, and having forgotten that part of their machinery to feed their saw, how they invented a rope feeding contrivance. Before the snows had gone in the spring so they could use their cattle at all, these two men, with only the help of one one man for a short time, had put up their mill and had sawed out between three and four thousand feet of lumber. They did good business during the season of 1864, but wanting more machinery, Evanson went to the States for it. Instead of buying as intended, the stories of the fabulous prices of flour, hardware and other supplies induced him to lay out his money for these things and start back. Most of this precious loading was lost on the way back in storms and by the loss of teams, and though the remnant was sold at high figures at Helena in the spring of 1865, flour for $100 a sack and nails for $150 a keg, they did not get out even. Mr. Holter had meanwhile established a mill on Ten Mile Creek, eight miles from Helena, and wishing to devote himself to the lumber business alone he bought out his partner and took in his brother Martin under the firm name of A. M. Holter & Bro., which has continued ever since. In the summer of 1865 Mr. Holter brought in the first planing mill ever set up in Montana, and run it in connection with his mill. During the spring and summer of 1865 there was another struggle with desperadoes at the more northern mines about Helena, Blackfoot and Confederate, similar to that at Virginia and Bannack the year before. At this time Mr. Holter had occasion to make a trip to the west side. On his return he became aware that he was being followed by one whom he was satisfied was a road agent. He tried to put him off the track by telling him that he was going to stop over night with a friend at Carpenter's Bar. The fellow did not believe him, and Mr. Holter, suspecting he was being followed, rode his best for several miles, and seeing a favorable spot, dismounted, hid his horse in the bushes and lay down where he could command the trail, with his saddle in front and his pistol ready. It was not thirty minutes afterward until his pursuer was seen coming at full speed, watching the track, and with his hand on his pistol. He halted when he could see no more of the tracks, and looked around, after having passed within thirty feet of where Mr. Holter lay. When he saw that Mr. Holter was armed and ready for him he darted off the trail and soon disappeared. In those days Mr. Holter was compelled to ride around the country a good deal looking up new places to put up his sawmills and has like many other pioneers been compelled to be out over nights without food or shelter, and on one such occasion in the fall of 1866, in company with J. M. Sweeney on a trip to Gallatin, when their horses gave out entirely and had to be abandoned, they were out two nights in a storm without blankets or shelter of any kind. In November, 1866, Mr. Holter went east for the purpose of buying machinery and a stock of general merchandise, as well as to get married. His journey was by stage by way of Salt Lake until he found the cars of the Union Pacific at Fort Kearney. Having passed a most delightful winter in Chicago, Mr. Holter was married April 6, 1867, to Miss Mary Pauline Loberg, a native of Christiania, Norway, whose mother died when she was young, and whose father had already been eight years settled in the United States, when she came at the age of 15 to join him. The wedding festivities were scarcely over when Mr. Holter was anxious to be back in Montana. He could not think of taking his wife on the perilous and fatiguing stage journey, so he placed her on the comfortable steamer Gallatin to come up the Missouri, while he took the Smoky Hill stage route to make a shorter trip. Starting from Salina, Kan., where the railroad then ended, with Judge Turnley as a fellow passenger, they came at the end of the second day to a station still burning, where the Indians had killed and driven away the stock; the station keeper and two soldiers had saved themselves by retreating by a covered way to a dugout. With the same worn-out team they drove on to the next station, taking a long day to make the twenty miles. Here the station was standing and some few provisions could be had, but there were no stock. The driver refused to go on, but the passengers got out the team and would have gone on without a driver, but at the last moment he relented. Fortunately at the next station they met the Denver coach, and were informed that the stations ahead were all safe. The rest of the way was not so full of perils as of fatigue. The stage was a dead ox wagon piled up with baggage, and the passengers had to tie themselves on and watch one another to avoid falling off when they fell asleep. The time by stage from Salina to Helena was twenty-four days. The time by steamboats was usually about three months. But the Gallatin with Mrs. Holter made a remarkably quick trip, and one afternoon when Mr. Holter had hardly been home three weeks, word was brought him that the Gallatin had arrived at Benton. Mr. Holter immediately started on horseback, reaching the Dearborn the next morning. In his eagerness he attempted to ford, but found it too deep. He then went to a cabin to get help and directions and there found his wife sleeping in the coach, which had arrived but a little while before. The meeting was as happy as unexpected on both sides. During the years that have passed since, Mr. and Mrs. Holter have had a busy and a happy life. They have been blessed with a numerous family, their elder children now verging toward manhood and womanhood. They have seen trials, too, sickness and the death of a precious child, and the aged mother of Mr. Holter, who followed her sons to America, but their blessings and good fortune have kept steadily advancing. They now have one of the most elegant houses in the mountains, and one of the happiest ones anywhere in the country. The firm of A. M. Holter & Bro. has been the most extensive manufacturers and dealers in lumber in the territory. They are still in the business, though not as extensively as in former years. They have besides been largely engaged in general merchandising, of late confining it exclusively to hardware. They own a large amount of real estate at Helena, on which they have built houses to rent. Of late years A. M. Holter has become largely interested in mines, both in Idaho and Montana, several of these mining ventures having proved fortunate and made him wealthy. He is a stockholder and director of the Parrot Silver and Copper Company, of the Maginnis Mining Company, of the First National Bank of Helena, the Rumley Mining Company, the Helena Mining and Reduction Company, the Boulder Valley Ditch Mining and Milling Company and the Elkhorn Mining Company, of the two last named companies he is President. He has frequently been called to fill public positions. He was the first republican ever elected to a public office in Helena, and has represented his county in the Legislative Council, and was President of the first City Council of Helena. No man in the community where he has so long resided is more universally known or respected. Though his constitution has probably been injured by the severe hardships through which he has passed, yet his health is fair and gives promise of years of usefulness and happiness which he has so well earned, by a life of more than ordinary energy, industry and tenacity of purpose. He has not in all these years forgotten his native land and childhood home, but five years ago made a visit to Norway and gave a grateful surprise to his relatives and early friends.

MARTIN M. HOLTER, Helena, was born in Norway in 1835. His earlier life was spent in attendance at school, where he received a good business education. After leaving school he engaged in mercantile business. In 1856 he came to the United States and located in Iowa, where he was engaged in a saw mill for two and a half years. In 1860 he went to Colorado, and four years afterward to Virginia City, where he was engaged in a saw mill until 1865. He then came to Helena, again engaged in the saw mill and grocery business, and subsequently added a distillery in 1867, in which he made about 700 barrels of liquor per year. In 1870 he built his present business block, and, retiring from the grocery and whisky business, opened a hardware store which he has since managed, together with his saw mill and a planing mill. In 1865 Mr. Holter erected the building in which the Independent office was located, and has since figured prominently as a builder in the city of Helena, having erected thirty-five business houses and residences, one of which, his present residence, is considered as ranking among the finest in the West. Since 1865 Mr. Holter has also been engaged in ranching, having at that time opened a ranch of 540 acres. He is also interested in the Rumley, Elk Horn, Sallie Belle and several other valuable mines. Mr. Holter was married in 1869 to Miss Emily Olsen, of Chicago. He has suffered severely from fires during his residence in Helena, but courageously battled with circumstances until he is the possessor of a fine fortune.

JOHN HORSKY, of the firm of Horsky & Kenck, Helena, was born May 16, 1855, in the Province of Bohemia, Austria; attended school until 16; parents emigrated to the United States and located on a farm near Iowa City. Here he farmed for three years; then fitted out for Pike's Peak, going via Bryant, Omaha and St. Joseph; at the latter place he stayed five months, changed his mind and returned to Iowa. In the next spring he went to Butte Co., Neb., and took up a homestead; farmed one year, removed to Council Bluffs, Ia., and engaged in the brewery business until 1864, then fitted out for West Bannack. Arriving at Virginia City, he mined until October, 1865; sold out and came to Helena, and engaged in the brewery business with George Belz, until 1871. Jacob Kenck then bought Belz out. Mr. Kenck was killed shortly after. The business is now carried on by Mr. Horsky and the estate of Mr Kenck. Mr. H. married Louise Sekorva, of Brooklyn, Ia., November 25, 1869. They have three children: Rudolph, Eddie and John.

JOSEPH HORSKY, Helena, son of Joseph and Barbara (Yeshena) Horsky, was born in Bohemia, Austria, October 1, 1843, came to the United States with his parents and settled near Iowa City, Ia., in 1855, and in 1859 removed with his parents to Decatur, Neb., where he remained until 1861, at which time he visited Colorado, where he passed about two years in mining and driving stage coach between Julesburg and Denver, and Denver and Golden City. In the fall of 1863 he attempted to come to Montana, but was snowed in at Cashley, which obliged him to return to Denver. He then went to Omaha, and on August 12, 1864, arrived, accompanied by his brother, at Virginia City, Mont., and at once engaged in mining, which he followed until the following December, after which he rambled among the different mining camps and landed at Helena in February, 1865. In 1866 he went to Bear Gulch on a mining expedition and sunk $3,000 and outfit, consisting of horse, saddle, guns, etc. Returning to Helena he joined the stampede to Sun river, where 3,000 people coagregated in mid winter without provisions or shelter. Many of them were frozen to death and not found until the following spring, snow falling to the depth of seven feet, which obliged them to shovel snow in order that the horses could get grass on which to subsist. He returned to Helena about the middle of March, 1867, after which he engaged in mining in American Shaft, where he narrowly escaped death by a tub of gravel being dropped thirty-three feet. This brushed his hat in its descent. In 1867 he took up 160 acres of land in Pear Creek valley, which led to his success. At the time of his going onto this piece of land he was refused a coffee pot and frying pan by a merchant of Helena, now deceased, because he had not money to pay for them, and he was obliged to work for his neighbors. He soon accumulated some money and invested it in stock and became prosperous. He bought an adjoining farm of 120 acres, and in 1875 moved into Helena, bought lots and erected a livery and feed stable, and is now running two stables, each well stocked. He has several fine houses in the city, a good stock ranch, and owns valuable lands in Idaho.

JOHN HOW, father of Col. J. F. How, of the Wabash railroad, E. W. How, of Houston, Tex., and of Mrs. Armstrong of Montana, died at San Francisco., Cal., January 4, 1885. He was favorably known throughout Montana, where he carried on extensive mining operations in different parts of the Territory in the early days, and through whose money and enterprise the first quartz mill was put into operation in Montana. Mr. How was a merchant of Helena for a number of years, and carried on a large wholesale trade in that city; and was the means of stocking many of the merchants who established themselves in the early mining camps.

EDWIN HOWE, Helena, was born at London, Eng., August 24, 1831, came to New York city in 1848, and resided there for eight years. He then returned to England and was engaged as courier by the banks of London and Paris for a period of eight years. He then came to Helena and was engaged in the grocery and hotel business until 1870, at which time he moved upon his present ranch, and has since devoted himself to farming and stock raising. Mr. Howe was married at Paris, France, in 1857, to Miss Catherine Denn. They are the parents of two children.

NEIL HOWEY, (vide General History.)

R. H. HOWEY, B. A., Helena, was born near Carrollton, Carroll Co., O., April 8, 1842, and is a son of Ebenezer and Julia A. (Shaw) Howey. His great grandfather, Nathan Shaw, having been an ensign under General Washington, served throughout the Revolutionary War and was honorably discharged, and his grandfather served in the war of 1812, under Harrison. Professor Howey received his education in his native State and graduated as Bachelor of Science and Bachelor of Arts at the Rural Seminary, since chartered and known as Harlem Springs College. He also graduated at the McNiely Normal School, at Hopedale, O., in 1862; then pursued a course of law studies in the office of Eckley E. McCoy, of Carrollton; was admitted to the bar of the District Court of Ohio, at Steubenville, in 1867, and then engaged in the practice of law; but not being pleased with the profession, accepted a position as professor of mathematics in the Harlem Springs College. In 1868 he was elected president of that institution. On March 14, 1870, he was united in marriage to Miss Laura E. Spencer, of Cadiz, O., he officiated as president of the college until 1871. In November of that year he entered the Western Theological Seminary, of Allegheny City, and graduated high in his class in April, 1874. While attending the seminary he was principal of the "Saltsburg Memorial Institute" of Pennsylvania. After graduating he was ordained by the Presbytery of Steubenville, in April, 1874, and was commissioned by the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions to take charge of an organization at Unionville, Mo., where he built a Presbyterian church and served as principal of public schools until February, 1879. He then came to Montana and in the following September accepted the position of superintendent of schools at Helena, and on February 2, 1881, was appointed superintendent of public instruction of Montana, by Governor Potts, and served in that capacity until February 21, 1883. He has devoted his time entirely to educational matters, and through his efforts the Compulsory Education Law was passed by the Legislature during the winter of 1882–3, as also the law permitting women to vote at school elections and hold the office of county superintendent of schools. He was instrumental in bringing about many other changes in the school law. In March, 1883, he was appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to select the University Lands under the act of Congress of 1881, setting apart 72 sections of land for university purposes in the Territory. In August, 1883, he organized the Territorial Teachers' Association. After having served as principal of the Helena public schools for five years he resigned the place in June, 1884, and accepted the position of business manager of the Independent Publishing Company.

E. M. HOYT, HELENA, son of Chauncey and Keturah Hoyt, resided at his birthplace, Tully, Onondaga Co., N. Y., until he was 27 years old. From the date of his birth, in August, 1828, to the time he engaged in business, he had received only a fair common school education. After being employed in business about three years—then aged 20—he bought his employer out and continued at the old stand for seven years. Then, having sold out, he went to Platteville, Wis., in 1855. The same year he became owner of a hotel, which interest he retained till 1864. During this period, or in the year 1861, he married Miss Deborah M. Russell, of Platteville. In the spring of 1864 he came to Virginia City and remained one year; then went to Helena and engaged in business, paying at the same time considerable attention to mining. In 1874 he interested himself in real estate, and has continued in that branch of business since. He has gained a competence, and has contributed to Helena's advancement architecturally and in point of wealth. He also has interests in quartz mining here.

WILLIAM HUDNALL, Helena, was born on the 17th of April, 1849, at Lynchburg, Va., and lived with his parents there until 1866. He attended the schools of the country until the war came, when all schools in that vicinity were closed. During 1866 he came by boat to Helena, Mont., near where he herded cattle all of that season. In April of the next year he was employed by a firm in Helena to manage a grocery for them at Highland Gulch. A portion of the next winter he was engaged as clerk in R. S. Hale's drug store, and in the spring clerked in a grocery; but soon went back to the drug store, at which place he worked till June, 1874, when he became a partner with Mr. Hale. He was married in October, 1882, to Miss Hattie Arnette, of Genesee, Ill. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias, also of the A. O. U. W.

COL. J. O. HUDNUTT, Helena, was born in Geneseo Co., N. Y., on the 30th day of June, 1824. He received a preparatory education in that county, afterward entered Temple Hill academy under Prof. H. N. Robinson, the celebrated mathematician, and subsequently became a teacher of mathematics in that school. He then entered Dartmouth college and was thoroughly examined through the whole course of mathematics, passed a satisfactory examination, was excused from that study, it being the only instance of that nature known in the history of the college, and graduated in July, 1848. He accepted a position as civil engineer on the Geneseo canal, having received the appointment before graduating, and continued in that position until 1849, when he obtained a position on the New York & Erie R. R., in which he continued until 1851, when his services were secured by the Memphis & Louisville R. R. Co., he making the preliminary survey of that route. After this he took a contract on the Wabash Valley R. R. In 1852 he moved to Iowa and the following year made the survey of the Iowa Central R. R., and ran the first line across the state of Iowa. He remained in that State following the occupation of civil engineer on various roads until 1857, and also engaged in farming, having a large farm there. In 1860 he was elected to the Iowa legislature; in the spring of 1861 assisted in the raising of the thirty-eighth Iowa regiment, was mustered into the service as Lieutenant-Colonel and was assigned the charge of the engineering department in front of Vicksburg during the siege. After the fall of Vicksburg he was promoted and commissioned Colonel of the regiment. He soon after went to Texas and built for the government the railroad from Brazos to Brownsville, across the Bocachico Pass—a very difficult work, it having been given up and reported as impossible by West Point officers, to whom the duty had formerly been assigned. In the fall of 1864 he resigned his commission and was shortly after elected professor of mathematics and the natural sciences, which position he filled some eighteen months. He was then given charge of the deepening of the Illinois and Michigan canal, for the drainage of Chicago. In February, 1866, he accepted a position with the U. P. R. R. Co., and had charge of the "Mountain Division," locating the road as far west as Towona Pass. In October, 1868, he was ordered with his corps of assistants to make explorations and mark out the route of the Oregon short line from Salt Lake to the Columbia river. After completing this work he was placed in charge of the locating survey of the St. Paul R. R. from Charles City, Ia., to the Missouri river, and was afterward located on the Mississippi river branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul R. R., between Red Wing and Winona. Then he accepted a position on the Northern Pacific R. R. for a short time and put two parties in the field to start survey, resigning this position to accept that of chief engineer on the Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R., which position he occupied two years, at which time the line was completed. He was then appointed chief engineer of the Southern Railway Security Co., controlling the lines from Richmond to Wilmington and from Richmond to Greensboro and on to Charlotte; he also built the Piedmont air line from Charlotte, N. C., to Atlanta, Ga., in which position he was occupied two years. He then assumed responsible positions under Colonel Scott, on the line from Richmond to Mobile and had 2,000 miles of this system consolidated under the Pennsylvania R. R. In 1875 he went to Big Rapids, Mich., and having timber lands in that district engaged in the lumber business, which he continued until 1876, when he left his interests in that vicinity in charge of his only son, Edward, and going to Leadville, became interested in mining, and remained three years, and then came to Montana, where he has been engaged in contracting for the survey of public lands, and also largely interested in stock raising, having a fine and well stocked sheep ranch on Flat Willow creek, and a cattle ranch on the lower Yellowstone. He also has a ranch on Elk creek and controls thousands of acres of fine pasture lands. The colonel is interested in the Koo-te-nai river mining district in northern Idaho, and engaged also in reclaiming lands in the Canadian possessions. Colonel Hudnutt was married in 1850 to Miss Marcia Webster, of Monroe Co., N. Y., who has for a number of years been a contributor to the columns of New York and Michigan publications. They have one son, Edward W., engaged in the lumber business at Big Rapids, Mich.

JOHN HUMMEL, Pear Creek valley, was born in Pennsylvania May 10,,1837. In the spring of 1856 he came to Illinois, where his father died. After two years' residence in Illinois he went to Pike's Peak, and was with the party of sixteen who made the discovery of "Gregory Ledge" From Gregory Ledge he went to Auburn, Ore., in the fall of 1862, when that camp was struck, and after remaining there for ten days went to Bannack, but being driven out by the Indians, and one of the party killed, he went to Walla Walla, where he remained until the next spring, when "Yankee Bar," on Lewis Creek, was discovered. He mined there from March until July, clearing $7,000, and then sold out and bought a pack train. After packing a year he went to Eagle Creek camp, Ore., and made a small stake there; was with the party who struck Owyhee, sold out pack train, and went into the mercantile business, keeping store for fourteen months, after which he went to Pioche, in Nevada, and next to the White mountains, continuing to prospect for eighteen months. Returning to Pioche, he remained there five or six years, and thence to the Black Hills; from the Black Hills stampeded to the Bear Paw mountains, and ultimately came to Pear Creek valley, where he now resides.

WILLIAM B. HUNDLEY, P. O. Helena, delegate at large from the third judicial district to the constitutional convention of 1884, was born in 1824 in Kentucky, educated in Kentucky and Illinois; served in both branches of the Illinois legislature; came to Montana in 1875; was elected a member of the council from Lewis and Clarke county to the twelfth legislative assembly. He is engaged in the breeding of thorough-bred horses, and has a half interest in the celebrated stud of noted racehorses belonging to Hundley & Preuitt, of Helena.

S. S. HUNTLEY, Helena, is a native of western New York, and was born in 1841. He received his education in that state, attending Springville Academy until the breaking out of the Rebellion, when he left school and entered the service, enlisting in the 37th Regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, and served as aid-de-camp on the staff of General Berry and General Phil. Kearney, being with both these distinguished officers when they were killed. Mr. Huntley was in all the early battles of the army of the Potomac, including the first and second battles of Bull Run, Williamsburg, the Seven Days' fight, and other engagements. He remained in the service two and a half years, when he resigned his commission. After the war he was connected with a commission house in New York. In 1867 he decided to come west, and started for Montana via Omaha and the Missouri river, and was sixty days en route to the territory. He organized the stage line between Helena and Fort Benton, from Helena to Diamond, and to Lincoln, Virginia City and Bannack; also organized lines from Helena to Fort Abercrombie, between Missoula and Walla Walla, between Virginia City and Bozeman, and from the latter point and Helena to Tongue River. They had control of all stage lines in this territory except the line from Helena to Salt Lake. The firm of Huntley & Co. operated a daily stage line from Salt Lake city, through Boise City to Walla Walla, and to the Dalles,—750 miles—at that time the longest stage line in the United States They organized every line in the territory. This firm carried the first mail between Helena and Tongue River. They afterward organized lines in Oregon and California, and were the largest stage proprietors in the country, carrying on the business until 1882, when their contracts expired. In 1878 Mr. Huntley engaged in stock-raising on the Missouri river, between Helena and Bozeman, first buying a band of sheep, but afterward stocking the ranch with horses. They have over one thousand head of horses, some of them being very fine stock; also over two hundred head of catalogued fine stock, the largest horse ranch in the territory, and also own from 15,000 to 20,000 sheep. Mr. Clark is interested with Mr. Huntley in the stock business. Mr. Huntley is well known throughout the West, from the Mississippi to the Pacific coast, and in transportation circles throughout the country. He was united in marriage to Miss Annie Dean, a native of Madison, Wisconsin.

J. C. ILER, Helena, was born at Worcester, Ohio, June 6, 1848. At two years of age he was taken by his parents to Tiffin, Ohio. Here he worked on a farm and attended school till he was seventeen years old, afterward spending two terms at Heidelberg College at Tiffin. In 1864 he enlisted in the Union army and was with Sherman on his march to the sea. Soon after the war closed he went to Omaha, Neb., and engaged as clerk in a wholesale liquor house, in which business he continued till 1882. He married, in 1874, Miss Lidie P. Bilman, of Ligonier, Ind. In 1882 he came to Helena, Mont., and at once opened a wholesale liquor store. He is a member of the A. O. U. W. Besides his place of business he owns a residence in the town, in which live his wife and two little girls.

P. B. INGALLS, Helena, was born at Bridgeton, Me., on March 21, 1840. Growing up on a farm, he was given but a farmer boy's education, three months' schooling in each winter, and two years of a finishing course at an academy. At nineteen he left home and went to Chillicothe, Ohio, and there engaged in railroading. He was for several years the purchasing agent and road master for the Cincinnati, Washington & Baltimore Railroad, and was employed occasionally by the Pan Handle road. In 1868 he opened a wholesale grocery house in Chillicothe, which he carried on for ten years. He then had railroad contracts, at which he worked till 1883, when he came to Helena, Mont., and engaged in his present business. In 1866 he was married to Miss Mary E. Ellison, of Chillicothe, Ohio, by whom he has had two children.

MICHAEL JAKOBI, Helena, was born in Prussia in the year 1838. He went to school till he was fourteen and then learned the carpenter trade. In 1867 he came to Wisconsin, U. S. A., where he worked at his trade for two years, and then bought a farm, on which he resided until 1877, when he came to Helena, Mont.; he worked at his trade in this place till 1881, and in that year established a brewery, which he still operates. In 1862 he married Miss Jennie Folsket, of Dessing, Prussia, and has now four children: August, Dora, Joseph and Peter, who are all living with him.

JAMES R. JOHNSON, Pear Creek Valley, is a native of Pennsylvania, and was born in that State June 2, 1831. He is the son of Robert and Jane (Moss) Johnson, his father having been a merchant by occupation the principal portion of his life. James was employed in his father's store until thirty years of age. In 1868 he came to Fort Benton on the Missouri river and thence to Pear Valley by way of Sioux City. After being here three months he sent for his family, and Mrs. Johnson was the first white woman who ever came by way of Green river on the Union Pacific Railroad. Mr. Johnson was one of Helena's horsemen and laid off the Territorial fair ground and made the track in 1870. Was in the livery business two years in the city, and after being burned out by the big fire in 1869, moved to his farm in Prickly Pear Valley on November 1, 1870, and has resided there ever since. When he first bought the farm it consisted of 160 acres and cost only $200, but since then 480 acres have been added, and the estate well improved. He was married in 1852 to Margaret McConnell, of Pennsylvania. They are the parents of four children, two of whom are dead. Robert died December 29, 1856, and Jane Eliza February 8, 1864. David A. and Charles M. Johnson are residents of Montana.

COL. J. A. JOHNSTON, Helena, was born in Brown Co., O., July 3, 1825; but was raised and educated in Highland county in that state. He studied law some 18 months and then entered a law school in Kentucky, where he was a class-mate of Judge Rogers, of Chicago. In 1846 he was admitted to the bar and practiced one year, when he moved to Iowa, and locating in Keokuk county, practiced law for some eight years. He moved thence to Ottumwa, Ia., where he followed his profession, and was elected from that district to a seat in the State Senate, which position he filled for a period of four years. In 1862 he came to Montana; first located at Elk City, thence in the spring of 1863 to Virginia City, where he remained until 1864, when he returned to the States. Accompanied by his family, he returned to Montana. Arriving at Helena in January, 1865, he immediately resumed the practice of law, which he has continued to the present time. In 1869 he was elected district attorney, and is now serving his third term in that capacity. He has also been largely interested in mining interests, in which he has been quite successful. Mr. Johnson was married in 1846 to Miss Frances M. McFerran, of Glasgow, Ky., to whom two children were born, Ophelia B. and Cathleen L., the former of whom is now married to a Mr. Esler.

JOHN JONES, father of J. H. Jones, of Helena, was born in Pennsylvania April 10, 1817, the son of Joshua and Lavinia Jones. When a young boy he removed with his parents to near Cincinnati, O. He was married the first time to Ann Eliza Allen, of Kentucky, August 15, 1839. To them were born five children, viz: Wm. B., deceased; John S., came to Bannack, Mont., in 1863; James G., now in Prickly Pear valley; Robert T., deceased; Francis E., deceased. Mrs. Jones died July 25, 1851, and Mr. Jones married, the second time, Rebecca F. Hardesty, of Kentucky, March 2, 1852. Their children were: Jacob Hardesty, now in Prickly Pear valley; Thomas B., deceased, in Colorado; Edward W., of Prickly Pear valley; Sarah F., Emma L. and one who died in infancy in Colorado, and Ina M., born in Prickly Pear valley, Mont., August 20, 1866—the only one of the family who is a native of Montana. In early life Mr. Jones was first judge of a miner court in Colorado. He served his people in the legislature in 1869–70; was a graduate of Hanover College; His business later was farming and stock-growing. Mr. Jones was engaged in mining 40 miles from Denver, where he was very successful; he did not amass much, however, in Montana; he made no enemies. In religion he was a Baptist, but for the last two years of his life belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Jacob Hardesty Jones, son of the former, and subject of our sketch, was born February 15, 1853, in Boone Co., Ky. When a small boy he accompanied his parents to Illinois, Missouri, Colorado, and thence to Montana, where they arrived in Virginia City in 1864, and in the following year removed to Prickly Pear valley, finally settling in 1870 on the present home ranch of 525 acres, which is all under cultivation and is provided with good buildings. The present residence was erected in 1872. On the death of his father, which occurred July 19, 1879, Mr. Jones was appointed administrator of the estate. Since then he has purchased all the shares except his mother's and younger sisters'. He visited the States in 1881, his first trip east since coming west. On his ranch are 25 apple trees, all thrifty, besides all kinds of small fruits. The residence is about one and a half miles from a school-house, and the same distance from a church. Edward W. Jones, brother of Jacob, born July 30, 1857, in Boone Co., Ky., crossed the plains with an ox-team, married in 1882, and follows farming in Prickly Pear valley. John S., another brother, is engaged in the stock business in the Judith valley. These brothers have all prospered since coming to Montana.

JOHN S. JONES, Pear Creek valley, was born in Missouri September, 1842; moved with his parents to Kentucky in 1843, where he lived until 1858, when he went to Colorado and was engaged in mining in the Nevada gulch until 1863. During that year he came to Alder gulch and assisted in opening the first veins in the latter place in 1863–4. In April, 1865, he left Alder gulch and came to Pear valley, purchasing a ranch, on which he resides down to the present time. He was married to Miss Mollie E. Brennell, a native of Kentucky, November 3, 1882. Mr. Jones sold his interests in the home ranch in 1883.

WILL R. JONES, Helena, was born January 4, 1856, at Cincinnati, Ohio. When but nine years of age, he, with his parents, moved to Columbus, Ohio. He received a common school education, which was rounded off at the Industrial Art School at Cincinnati, which he attended two years. In 1881 he started on his travels through the western states to study the different styles of architecture, and in May, 1883, in company with Daniel Marshall, started his present business in Helena and has as much work as he can attend to.

C. JUMP, Pear Creek valley, was born near Cayuga lake, N. Y., in the county of Cayuga, in 1825, of which district his parents, Horace and Catherine (Drake) Jump were old residents. In 1852 Mr. Jump went to California, where he engaged in mining, farming and stock raising, most of the time mining. In 1862 he went to Oregon, and in six months afterward went to Idaho City, thence to Virginia City, M. T., where after prospecting for a time, he repaired to "Last Chance Gulch" and worked in the mines there for about two years, when he located in Pear Creek valley on a ranch, three and a half miles from Helena. He, with his two partners, Schwab and Zimmerman, own about twelve hundred acres.

J. H. JURGENS, Marysville, son of Herman and Clara Jurgens, was born in Hanover, Germany, March 26, 1843; came to the United States with his parents in 1854, who settled at Long Lake, Minn. In 1864 he came to Montana with a train consisting of 129 wagons, under escort, to Old Fort Union, of 4,000 soldiers. The train had several engagements with Indians, and in the Bad Lands, on Missouri River, several men were killed in an attack. There were several men also drowned in crossing the rivers which they were obliged to ford or cross in wagon beds, of which they had three made for the purpose, of heavy matched lumber. Arriving in Helena, he immediately engaged in mercantile business in company with Philip Constance, under the firm name of Constance & Jurgens, and has continued in the mercantile business to the present time, and is now of the firm of Jurgens & Price, at Marysville and Belmont. He is also engaged in mining and lumbering, having a saw mill at Canyon Creek and interested in several valuable mines. Mr. Jurgens was married at Helena, in 1866, to Miss Carmelia Bateman, to whom were born three children. He was, while in Helena, chief of the fire department, and was appointed postmaster at Belmont in 1879, which position he filled with great satisfaction, and has lately been appointed postmaster at Marysville.

A. J. KELLY, Pear Creek Valley, born in Monroe Co., Va., in 1825, son of Henry and Catharine Kelly, came to northwestern Missouri with parents in 1843, and remained in Missouri until 1846, when he joined the U. S. Army and was in the war against Mexico under General Scott for nearly three years. After receiving his military discharge he returned to Missouri; went thence to California, and remained on the Pacific slope and in Oregon and Canadian Possessions for nearly twenty-two years, mining for eight years. From California went by way of Arizona to Texas. Leaving Texas traveled in Missouri and Nebraska, and finally in 1875 settled in Pear Creek valley, six miles from Helena, where he has a hay farm of 80 acres. He was married to Miss D. Ladia, a native of Oregon. Their children are: Virginia, Catharine, Robert Henry, Andrew J., Margaret Ann, Caroline and Samuel.

CHRISTIAN KENCK, P O. Helena, was born February 27, 1835, at Philippsburg, Baden, Germany; attended school until the age of 14; serving an apprenticeship of three years at the shoemaker's bench, and then left for the United States; landing at New York in the fall and working at his trade until the following spring. He worked at his trade two months in Pittsburg, four months in St. Louis and six months at Waterloo, Ill. He then returned to St. Louis, proceeded up the Missouri river to Leavenworth city, Kan., and worked at his trade for Mr. Buichtler. While there he had to leave the town for being a Freesoiler. He boarded a steamer bound for St. Louis, but was captured on the way and taken back to Leavenworth. After searching the boat and not finding parties wanted, all were set free. Mr. Kenck then returned to St. Louis, but Mr. Buichtler soon after came down and re engaged him to work at Leavenworth, where he remained all winter. In the spring, at Doniphan city, Kan., he engaged in business for himself, continuing four years. In 1862 he bought a team and started overland for California, but upon arriving at Virginia city, Nev., stopped and followed his trade for a short time. He then opened a coffee and lunch house, but closed it out a year and a half later and bought three teams, with one of which he started for Helena, M. T. The other two were ten-mule teams loaded with provisions intended for a general store. They were to come on later under charge of a teamster. They did not arrive in proper time, and Mr. Kenck not realizing what was expected, started a general store in Diamond city. Leaving a party in charge, he opened a restaurant at Helena, on Main street, and carried on both for two years. Then closing out, he went to Washington gulch, where he opened a boarding house, enjoying a successful business for one year. Returning to Helena, he bought a saloon, operated it until spring, sold to Peter Dileger, and returned to Washington gulch and purchased Dalton's ditch and mining property. He worked this for three years, then sold to John W. Stone. He then formed a partnership with Geo. Comfort in the butcher and stock business, selling his interest to Wm. Milrea after six months. He returned to Helena in 1872 and bought out Mr. Studeman, who kept the Magnolia hotel. After conducting it for 10 years, he rented the premises to Gottlelb Scheûrear, the present proprietor. Mr. Kenck owns four ranches, buys and sells stock, and also owns a stone quarry. He belongs to the Masonic order, Odd Fellows and the A. O. U. W. Was elected alderman for 1881-2, being the first elected from the 3d ward. He married Theresa Odenwald, of Philippsburg, Baden, Germany, March 10, 1859, at Doniphan, Kan. Their children are: Joseph N., Amelia C., Anna and Rosa. In 1876 Mr. Kenck and family visited the centennial, and in 1880, with his brother, he made a pleasure trip to California.

NICK KESSLER, Helena, was born in the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg; came to America in 1854, and located in Chicago just prior to the financial panic of 1857, when real estate was a drug and banks were everywhere unsound. Here he made his first start and met with success, not unmixed with hardships and unpleasant experiences. Honesty and pluck conquered and made him a comparatively rich man in his own estimation. But the breaking of banks undeceived him, leaving him not only poor, but in debt, and forced to work hard to pay an indebtedness to a worthy patron. After this effort the Pike's Peak fever overcame him and he in company started afoot for the New Eldorado. There were many pathetic and humorous incidents in his experience, enough to fill a volume if there were space. Suffice it to say they reached the haven, prospected and bought mines, and discovered others, were duped and sold out to parties who in turn sold for fabulous sums the very claims they sold for a song. In 1863 Mr. Kessler came to Virginia City and engaged in business two years. Then hearing of the Helena craze he departed thence and bought out the brewery of Mr. Beehrer. He has continued as owner of the property ever since. Aside from this he is engaged in the manufacture of brick, supplying over seventy-five per cent. of the amount used in the building up of Helena. His brewery is one of the necessities of the hour, and Mr. Kessler prides himself on being a thorough business man, never having been idle a single day for a quarter of a century. Mr. Kessler is a hale and hearty man, one of the best known in the city, a genial and pleasant gentleman, and one of the most public spirited citizens, having built a public school located about two miles from the city at his own expense.

J. P. KETCHUM, of the firm of Ketchum, Zastrom & Horton, Helena, was born in Yates Co., New York, May 15, 1854, and there was educated and taught his trade of builder. He was engaged in building in N. Y. until May, 1881, at which time he came to Montana and settling at Helena, engaged in contracting and building, forming the present partnership. The firm is now one of the most extensive contracting and building firms of the city. Mr. Ketchum is a member of the Masonic order, and during his few years in the Territory has won the confidence of the people.

JOHN KINNA, Helena, was born in New York. He received a common school education, and when about fifteen years of age was apprenticed to a tinsmith at Watertown, N. Y. Having served his apprenticeship, he worked at his trade for a short time and removed to Denver, Colo., where he opened a hardware store. In the summer of the next year (1864) he took a stock of goods to Virginia City, M. T., and at once established a hardware store. The next year he opened in the same business in Helena, at which place he has remained though having had several branch stores in other parts of the Territory. In 1872 Mr. Kinna was elected treasurer of Lewis and Clarke Co., and served acceptably. He was married in 1864 to Miss Mattie McGovern, of Ohio, and they have had six children, who are all living. Mr. Kinna is a member of the Helena board of trade and belongs also to the Masonic fraternity.

FRED. L. KING, Helena, whose parents were Lawrence and Catherine (Hoag) King, was born in the parish of St. Bernard, La., June 17, 1828. His father Lawrence was a native of Carlsruhe, Baden, and his mother Catherine (Hoag) Lawrence, of Marseilles, France. His earlier days were passed upon his father's plantation and he studied and finished his trade of painter in 1846 at New Orleans, La., where he followed his occupation until 1849, when he went to California. There he engaged in mining and stock raising until the breaking out of the Civil War, when he enlisted in the 1st California Cavalry as private, and after serving four years and three months was mustered out at Franklin, Tex., in 1865 The following winter he spent at Leavenworth, Kan. He came to Montana in 1866 with ten companions provided with wagons, mules and riding ponies. They had three skirmishes with Indians while en route, one of which occurred at Crazy Woman's Fork, one near Fort Phil Kearney and one near Fort C. F. Smith; but fortunately none were killed. They struck camp in the Blackfoot country and engaged in prospecting and went broke when he came to Helena.

During the winter of '66 and '67 he worked for his board in a hotel called the Crystal Palace, owned by one Jos. McGee. He brought Lawrence Kindall, formerly of Cedar Rapids, Ia., and brother-in-law of Senator Kendall, of Iowa, from the Blackfoot country in 1867 and taught him the trade of painting. Since 1868 Mr. King has been located on Main street, in the same shop now occupied by him. He was first married at 19 years of age in New Orleans to a Miss Charlotte Norton, a merchant's daughter of New York city. They were the parents of three children. Mr. King's first wife having died in New Orleans in 1858 he was again married at Helena in 1874 to a Miss Alice A. Town, a grand daughter of Major Town, of the Revolutionary War, to whom were born two children.

HENRY KLEIN, of the firm of Gans & Klein, Helena, is a native of Austria, having been born there August 20, 1842. In 1858 he came to the United States. Early in the sixties he migrated to California, entered mercantile business at San Francisco, and there was one of the founders of the firm of Gans & Klein. In the spring of 1866 he with Mr. Gans brought a stock of goods by packtrain to Helena, occupying sixty days in making the trip, and suffering many hardships. In the summer of 1866 he and Mr. Gans established a house at Helena, since extended their trade to other cities, and opened horse, stock and sheep ranches. A reference to the historical chapters point out the various enterprises in which Mr. Klein has been interested since coming to the territory. His marriage with Miss Annie Leon, of Chicago, Ill., was solemnized April 14, 1878.

T. H. KLEINSCHMIDT, Helena, was born in Prussia, August 2, 1839, and came to the United States in 1843 with his mother, having lost his father at Bremen the very day of their embarkation for America. He landed at New Orleans, and in the spring of 1844 went to St. Louis, Mo., where from 1856 to 1860 he assisted his stepfather in his store. In 1860 he was employed by a banking house of St. Louis and remained with them until 1862. He then went to Denver, Colo., where he engaged in mercantile business until the spring of 1864. He then came to Montana and located at Virginia City, having brought with him a stock of goods which he closed out in six months and then invested in placer mines, at which he worked until the spring of 1865, when he again engaged in the merchandise business in Deer Lodge Co., and with good success. Having a bachelor uncle in St. Louis, who desired him to take charge of his business while he made a visit to the old country, Mr. Kleinschmidt sold out his stock in less than thirty-six hours after receiving the message from his uncle, and after making a few collections, started on horse-back for Atchison, Kan., making the trip of about 2,400 miles in seventy-two days and with the same horse. He then went on to St. Louis, where he remained until the spring of 1866, when he returned to Montana in company with Samuel T. Hauser, who was connected with the First Natl. Bank. The return trip required twenty-four days by coach, which was so crowded the gentlemen could neither rest nor sleep and were obliged to travel day and night, the mud being so deep as to oblige him to walk nearly half the way before reaching Denver. He, in company with Mr. Hauser, succeeded in reaching Helena in June, 1866, and at once opened the bank in a grocery store. This was the First National Bank of Montana. It remained there until the completion of a banking house which they moved into some four or five months afterward, said building being consumed by fire in 1869. It was burned a second time, but was again built on the old site, where the bank now is. Mr. Kleinschmidt has been continually interested as cashier or assistant cashier from the first founding of the bank. He is also connected with the Helena Electric Light Co., of which he is treasurer, and is also treasurer of the Artesian Well Co., and one of the organizers of this adventure. Mr. Kleinschmidt is also one of the organizers of the N. W. Cattle Co., and was until July, 1883, directly interested in cattle business as well as having numerous mining interests throughout the mining districts of the Territory. He is also interested with the Sheep Co., and in April, 1883, was elected mayor of the City of Helena. Mr. Kleinschmidt is a most worthy member of the Free Masons—Blue Lodge, Chapter, Council and Commandery; also a member of the K. P., of which order he is Past Chancellor. In 1867 he organized the Union League, of which he was elected vice president. He also assisted in the organization of the Presbyterian church, and is now one of its trustees. He is a member and treasurer of the Helena Board of Trade, and is largely interested in city and country property, having nearly 1,000 acres of land, quite a portion of the same being under cultivation. In 1877 Mr. Kleinschmidt was married to Miss Mary M., daughter of Mr. Jacob Blattener, of St. Louis, Mo., by whom he has had five children: Theodore E., Arthur B., Marie L., Eugene F. and Paulina (deceased).

E. W. KNIGHT, Helena, was born in Madison Co., Ind., May 21, 1838. His parents moved to Louisville, Ky., during his early boyhood and there he received a good common school education. In 1856 he entered a bank at Madison, Ind., and the following year began reading law. He soon after returned to Kentucky and completed his law studies at Falmouth. After being admitted to the bar he engaged in practice of law at that place and continued in practice until 1873, when he came to Montana, located at Helena and was admitted to the Territorial bar. He afterward entered the First National bank as bookkeeper and filled that position for three years. In 1876 he was elected cashier and since then has held that position. Mr. Knight, while living in Kentucky, was elected mayor of Falmouth and held that office two terms. He was elected the second mayor of the city of Helena in April, 1882, and has served as a member of the Board of Education for many years. He is actively identified with the interests of the city; is safe and conservative in his views, always approachable, and is well known in financial circles throughout the Territory. In 1859 Mr. Knight was united in marriage with Miss Theodosia M. Hauser, of Falmouth, Ky., daughter of Hon. Samuel T. Hauser, a prominent attorney of that state. Mr. and Mrs. Knight have six children, four sons and two daughters.

WILLIAM KRANICH, Helena, was born in Germany, February 19, 1845; ten years later came to the United States; migrated to Virginia City, M. T., in 1866, and moved to Helena in 1867. In 1869 he visited Washington Territory, where he conducted a hotel for seven months and then returned to Montana, where he resided until 1876. During this year he went to the Black Hills and opened a hotel. After a stay of two years he went to Nevada, and in 1880 revisited Washington Territory, remaining some time at Walla Walla; thence went to Idaho, where he was engaged in mining and hotel keeping; there he still owns mining interests. In 1881 he revisited Helena; in 1882 went to his mines in the Saw-Tooth district, where he remained until June 1882, when he returned to Helena, opened the I. X. L. restaurant and next the Magnolia Hotel, being proprietor of both houses.

JOHN KROHN, Pear Creek Valley, son of George and Margaret Krohn, was born at St. Cloud, Minn., February 14, 1855. At 9 years of age he came to Montana City, eight miles from Helena, where he kept the Eight Mile House, until 1867, when he came to Helena and opened the Minnesota House, and lived at Helena until the summer of 1882, when he moved to Pear Valley. He was married to Franziska Scholtz, a native of Germany, July 3, 1881. They are the parents of one child, Maggie, born June 10, 1882.

ROMAN F. KUEHN, miner, Unionville P. O., was born in Prussia, March 22, 1839, and landed at Chicago, Ill., in 1863, where he worked six months, going thence to Tennessee, where he was appointed quartermaster's guard, which position he filled for a period of eighteen months. In 1865 he came to Montana and worked at mining in Confederate Gulch, Indian Creek and Diamond, and in 1866 settled at Park City, where he took up mining claims, and has since been occupied in working them. Mr. Kuehn was married at Helena, June 2, 1880, to Miss M. A. Kelsey. They are the parents of two children.

FELIX LANDRE, Helena, son of Joseph and Ester Landre, was born in Upper Canada, July 4, 1851; came to the United States when 17 years of age, and went to work in a quartz mill at Unionville, M. T. He was employed by the same company for a period of eleven years, until 1879, when he began freighting. He is now supplying wood for many of Helena's citizens and has a band of some forty horses grazing upon the ranges in the vicinity of the city.

N. P. LANGFORD, St. Paul, Minn., was born in Oneida Co., N. Y., August 9, 1832; was raised and educated in that state until 1854, when he went to St. Paul, Minn., and engaged in the banking business. He remained there until June, 1862, when, with a party numbering 130 persons, he started with ox teams, under command of Captain J. L. Fisk, on a government expedition, Mr. Langford accepting a position as one of the officers of the party. They selected the northern route round the Missouri river, were often threatened by the Indians, but escaped serious trouble. Reaching Gold Creek, Deer Lodge county, on the 26th day of September, 1862, they moved up to Grasshopper Creek (Bannack). Arriving at that point October 28, 1862, they encamped for the winter and erecting a saw mill engaged in building and mining and remained until the discovery of gold in Alder gulch in 1863. He then went to that camp and saw the first house erected there. In 1864, after the Territory was organized, he was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue, which position he held until 1868, when he was removed by President Johnson and reinstated by the United States Senate. He was again removed by Johnson and again reinstated by the Senate, after a hard fought contest. Resigning the office, he was appointed Governor of the Territory to succeed Green Clay Smith, who had resigned the Governorship; but the Senate having fought for Mr. Langford for Collector, did not confirm him as Governor. In 1870 he made a trip to the Yellowstone country. In 1872 he was appointed Bank Examiner for all the Territories and the Pacific States, which position he has since held. In 1876 he removed to St. Paul, where he still resides. Mr. Langford has given much attention to the early Yellowstone discoveries, and for five years was Superintendent of the Yellowstone Park, having made four explorations of the park during that time. During the troublous times of 1864–5 he was a prominent member of the Vigilance order, and many of the responsibilities were thrown upon him. He has for many years been preparing a history of the early settlement of the Territory and the lawless men who first came into the country, as also a history of the events which led to the organization of the Vigilance Committee. Mr. Langford is an old and honored member of the Masonic order and in 1870 was elected Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of the Territory. (Vide General History.)

JOHN LARGENT, Sun River Crossing, was born March 11, 1839, in Hampshire Co., W. Va. At 13 years of age he removed, with his parents, to Peoria, Ill., where he remained until May, 1862, assisting his father at farming. He then went to St. Louis and from that point came up the river to Benton and obtained employment with the American Fur Company. He was engaged in hunting for them until March, 1863, when he left for British Columbia and prospected there for three months. Then being robbed of his outfit by the Indians he returned to Benton. Here he was employed two years with Carrol & Steell. He next visited the states, returned and located a ranch on Sun river, and built the first store at the Crossing, also a hotel and wagon and blacksmith shop. In this he was assisted by Mr. Steell, who furnished outfit. In the winter of 1867–68, assisted by J. J. Healy, he built a bridge over the Sun river at Crossing. They afterward sold this bridge to Mr. Steell. In 1869 Mr. Largent laid out the town site, and since then sold out a portion of it to Mr. Steell. Was also engaged in stock raising until he disposed of his interest. He married Miss Sarah E. Hughes, of Illinois, in March, 1869. They are the parents of five children, Mary J., Sarah E., Eva (deceased), Ida B. and John H. Mr. Largent at present is engaged in attending to his real estate. Among his buildings are the Largent Hotel, Ford's store and numerous private residences. He has also 160 acres at the mouth of Sun river.

JOSEPH L. LARGENT, Sun River Crossing, was born August 9, 1842, in Hampshire Co., West Va. Some time after his parents with their six children moved to Peoria, Ill., where Joseph L. was engaged in farming until 1867. In this year his brother John and he came to Montana and located at Sun River Crossing, June 11, 1867, nine days after their arrival at Benton. Here his brother, in company with Carroll & Steell, started a general store. He assisted him at teaming and hauling until 1869, when he located a ranch on the Missouri river, fifteen miles from Sun River Crossing, which he devoted to agriculture and cattle and horse raising. Mr. Largent was married to Miss Melinda E. Hornback, of Jasper Co., Mo., December 8, 1881. During this year he sold out his interest in band of horses, and is interested with his brother in the hotel called the Largent House, besides owning considerable other property.

ARTHUR A. LAREAU, Helena, was born September 29, 1853, at Montreal, Canada. Here he attended school, then worked with his father, F. Lareau, in the provision business, remaining with him until 1871. He then left for Lowell, Mass., where he learned the trade of machinist and engineer, working for the Lowell Machine Shop Co. In 1876 he returned to Montreal and engaged in business with his brother, J. E. Lareau, in wholesale and retail country produce. In 1879 he came to Montana, arriving at Helena September 21. He has since been engineer for Gebauer & Yergy in the day time and the Electric Light Co. at night. He married M. L. Beaudien, of Montreal, October 25, 1876. They have one child, J. E. A. Lareau.

FREDERICK LEHMAN, Helena, was born in 1830 at Frankfort-on-the-Oder, Prussia, where he lived with his parents until 1849. He was then, according to the military code of Prussia, drawn into the government service at Berlin and served three years, attending the government school a portion of the time and learning the trade of marble cutter. At the expiration of service he came to the United States, engaging in farm work in the vicinity of New Haven, Conn., studying hard to master the English language, and remaining there some three months. He then went to Savannah and Columbus, working at his trade, and from there to Nashville, Tenn., to work on the state capitol building, closing his contract in 1856. He then went to St. Joseph, Mo., but after staying there three years he became enthusiastic over the adventures of early pioneers in the West and started for old Colorado Gulch (where the town of Leadville is now), taking with him a stock of goods with which he opened a grocery store. His team he put into freighting service between the Missouri river and the gulch, where his store was located. His business venture did not turn out as successfully as he wished. His brother met with poor luck, having been shot and robbed in South Park, and altogether he was not favorably impressed with Colorado. He then started for Virginia City, M. T., arriving there in the fall of 1863. Shortly afterward he engaged in mining in Alder Gulch, clearing the first year $10,000. The following two years he was not so successful, and after locating a store at Helena he sold his interests in Alder Gulch. Then, visiting the states, he bought a stock of goods and in 1867 opened a store with his brother and continued the same to 1875, when a dissolution occurred. He then took up quarters in upper Helena and remained in the grocery business there until 1883. Finding his business increasing he started a new line of groceries in lower Helena, which is an ornament as well as a necessity to the place. Mr. Lehman was married at St. Joseph, in 1867, to Miss Fredrika Ohsten, and now has four children living.

JAS. H. LEMON, Florence, was born at Dublin, Ireland, on July 13, 1844, and is a son of John and Maria (Hamilton) Lemon, the latter of whom came to this country with her son, late in the forties, immediately after the death of her husband. Mrs. Lemon came to Fort Union, M. T., in 1863; to Fort Benton in 1864, thence in 1865 to Last Chance Gulch, where he clerked in a store until 1867. He then went to Fort Ellis, where he was engaged as post trader until 1871, after which he was engaged with E. G. McLain & Co., one year in the stock business. He then clerked for Geo. Steell two years, and was afterward with Broadwater & Co. two years. He was subsequently engaged as quartermaster's agent at Government coal banks. He settled on his present ranch in April 1883, where he is now engaged in stock-raising. Mr. Lemon was married at Florence, on February 15, 1880, to Miss Sarah Hellen Lippincott.

MARCUS LISSNER, Helena, owner of the International Hotel, Helena, is a native of Poland, and was born in 1835, coming to the United States in 1851, and spending two years in Georgia. In 1853 he started for San Francisco, from there going into the mountain districts, where he engaged largely in mining, hydraulic and blasting work in the Indian hills of Sierra Co., Cal., from 1858 to 1862, meeting with success. In 1862 he went to Virginia City, Nev., during the excitement over the gold discoveries at that place. From there he went to Austin and the Reese river country prospecting, thence going with a wagon train to Salt Lake City. In 1864, during the Alder Gulch excitement, he came to Montana and devoted his time to mining at that place and Silver Bow. In January, 1865, he went on foot to Grizzly Gulch, and turned his attention to prospecting until June 11, when he opened the first restaurant in Helena, on the corner of Main and Bridge streets, continuing it two years. He then leased the Star Restaurant building and opened the "Western Hotel," going to Lincoln Gulch a year and a half later, where he opened a billiard hall and paid $2,500 for two billiard tables. At the expiration of one year he sold out, and returning to Helena opened another hotel, which he conducted until it was burned in 1869. He then built and opened the Lissner Hotel, also a large bakery, but was again burned out in 1874, his losses in the two fires amounting to about $40,000. He rebuilt during 1874, and leasing his hotel property opened a billiard hall, afterward engaging in mining by the new process, and going into the Boulder country started a leeching business for the extraction of silver by the chemical process. After six months he turned his attention to prospecting again, and going to Edmunds ferry, erected a dredge boat for placer mining, during the year 1879. He went from there to Butte and vicinity and to Eldorado Bar prospecting, after which he returned to Helena and opened the International Hotel, which he has since managed and of which he is owner. Through his unceasing efforts he has rendered it one of the finest houses of the city. Mr. Lissner was married in 1875, to Miss Janie Sabolsky, a native of Poland, by whom he has five children as follows: Jacob, Gerta, Lilla, Dora and Isadore.

EDWARD LIPPINCOTT, P. O. Florence, was born in Maine, October 31, 1824, and learned the blacksmith trade at Bangor, where he worked until 1849, when he went to Pennsylvania and there worked at his trade until 1851, when he moved to St. Anthony, Minn., where he followed his trade until 1871, when he came to Montana. Arriving in Deer Lodge county he engaged in mining until 1874. The two following years were spent in a government store house at Helena. In 1876 he went to Sun River Crossing and there worked at his trade until 1878, at which time he turned his attention to farming on the ranch where he still resides. Mr. Lippincott was married at Bangor, Me., to Miss Agnes A. Shepherd, September 7, 1848. During the years 1857 and 1858 Mr. L. served as Sheriff of Hennepin Co., Minn., and in 1880 was appointed postmaster at Florence, which position he still occupies.

RICHARD LOCKEY, Helena, was born in Yorkshire, England, June 11, 1845, and is a son of John and Mary Lockey, being the third of nine children, a brother and sister dying in infancy, and two brothers, George W. and Joseph, dying in Bozeman, Mont., in 1882. His eldest sister, Mrs. Jennie Bowman, and eldest brother, Barnard, now reside in northwestern Iowa, while his younger brothers, James T. and John, reside and are carrying on the mercantile business of Lockey Brothers in Bozeman. His aged mother, who removed to Montana after the death of his father in 1873, resides with his youngest sister, Mrs. S. E. Bunlo, in Helena. Mr. Lockey's parents came to the United States in 1846, and located in Dubuque, Ia. He attended the public schools of that city until 12 years of age, then for about three years was employed as clerk in a dry goods store, after which he worked in the lead mines until the breaking out of the rebellion. In November, 1862, he joined the Fremont Hussars at Patterson, Mo., and went on the expedition with Gen. Davidson through southeast Missouri and into Arkansas during the fall of that year. In 1863 he was with Gen. Asboth at Columbus, Ky., and Col. Waring's cavalry command in Kentucky and Tennessee. Early in 1864 he went to Vicksburg and was with the Sherman expedition into Alabama. Returning to Vicksburg he went on the Red River expedition under Gen. Banks, Mr. Lockey at that time having charge of the quartermaster and commissary departments of Gen. A. J. Smith's command. After said expedition and in the fall of 1864 he was taken dangerously sick at Memphis, and from there returned home. Recovering, he graduated from Bayliss Commercial College at Dubuque and spent the winter of 1865-66 in St. Louis, Mo., settling up the quartermaster's books and accounts of the Fourth Missouri Cavalry. After finishing that work he came to Montana in the spring of 1866 and located at Helena, where he was first employed in building the Truett and Plaisted ditch. He then accepted a position as clerk, which he held for a period of three years, subsequently reading law in the offices of Col. W. F. Sanders and Chumasero & Chadwick for one year and a half. In 1871 he engaged in mercantile business in Helena, and in 1876 opened a branch store in Bozeman, where he manufactured large quantities of hard bread for the military and Indian departments, on contracts. In 1881 he sold out the Bozeman store to his brothers, John and George W., who continued the business under the firm name of Lockey Brothers, and the Helena store to William H. Ulm. He turned his attention to real estate, insurance and abstracts, and is now doing the most successful and leading business in that line in Montana. He is largely interested in real estate, mines, stock and other enterprises. All his undertakings have been characterized by a knowledge of organization and such zeal and energy that success in business was assured. He is considered an authority in all real estate matters. Mr. Lockey is actively and prominently identified with the various Masonic orders, and has officiated in many of the higher offices in the same. He is also an active member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In 1868 he assisted in the organization of the Good Templars Order in Helena, having in that association also officiated in all the higher offices. Mr. Lockey is president of the Board of Education, a prominent member of the Board of Trade and as president of the "House of Lords" he has no equal. He has creditably filled the positions of Justice of the Peace, United States Commissioner and United States Gauger, and has held commissions as Notary Public for sixteen years. Mr. Lockey was married on the 5th day of June, 1870, to Miss Emily E. Jeffrey, of Leavenworth, Kan., by whom he has had five children, of whom Mary Isabella and Richard, Jr., two bright and intelligent children, survive. Mr. Lockey is a Republican in politics, and at present treasurer of the Republican County Central Committee. He is nevertheless an earnest Prohibitionist, with strong faith in the final success of that party.

BERNARD LOEB, senior partner of the firm of Loeb Bros., Helena, was born in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, in 1839; came to America in 1848; settled for some time at New Orleans, La.; went thence to California via the Isthmus in 1851, and engaged in business at Sacramento, where he was very successful until he lost his entire property by fire. In 1859 he went to Portland, Ore., where he was merchandising until 1862, when he was burned out, and lost heavily. He then went to Boise city, Idaho, with his brother, and passed four years in business in that territory. In the year 1866 he came to Helena, and in company with his brother established their present business. They were burned out in the great fire at Helena in 1874, and lost their entire stock, which was uninsured. In 1868 Bernhard Loeb visited Germany, and was married at Frankfort-on the-Main in April, 1869. Returning to Helena in the same year, he has made the city his home since that time.

JACOB LOEB, junior partner of the firm of Loeb Brothers, and treasurer of Helena city, was born in the Grand Duchy of Hesse Darmstadt in April, 1840. He came to America when 14 years of age, unaccompanied by friends or relatives, passed a short time in New York city, and then went to San Francisco, Cal. He joined his brothers at Sacramento, with whom he went to Portland, Ore Two years later he went to Carriboo, British Columbia, where he was in business until 1862. He then went to Boise city, Idaho, with his brother Bernard, and was engaged in mercantile business at that point until 1866, when they removed to Helena and established their present business. Mr. Loeb was elected city treasurer in 1882, and re elected in 1883. He has taken an active part in the affairs of the order of I. O. O. F., of Montana, of which he is past grand master.

WILLIAM LOREY, landscape and ornamental painter, Helena, son of William and Philipena (Gauch) Lorey, was born at Belleville, Ill., June 20, 1849. Mr. Lorey received a fair education in the public schools of Belleville, and in 1865 was sent by his father to attend the St. Louis University, Mo., but owing to disease breaking out in the city, the school was closed and he returned to his home and at once gave his attention to the art of painting, and at intervals assisted his father in his business as general hardware merchant until the spring of 1869, at which time his father died. After this he gave his sole attention to the business until the succeeding fall, at which time he closed out the stock; went to San Francisco, Cal., where he found the painters on a strike. He, however, worked two weeks at his trade before he joined the strikers; then began work in the Chicago hotel as cook. After remaining there two months, he went into the mines, where he remained until 1872, when he went to Detroit, Mich., thence to Chicago and Belleview, Ill., and was married at St. Louis, Mo., in February, 1872. He then sold property in Belleview, and with a partner started the Economy Shirt Factory at St. Louis, in which business he lost $3,000 in as many months. Visiting Memphis, Tenn., he worked at his trade a short time, and was also interested in a meat stand. In 1878 he came direct to Helena, and immediately opened a paint shop. Shortly after he took an interest in mines in Big Indian gulch, where he remained until the burning of Helena in 1874, when he returned to the city, opened his shop and resumed his trade of painter.

THOMAS J. LOWRY, attorney at law, Helena, was born on the 22d day of April, 1836, in Pennsylvania, and was raised and educated in that state. He began the study of law under his father, Thomas J. Lowry. At the age of twenty he went to Minnesota and entered the law office of Walter L. Breckenbridge, at Rochester, and in 1863 was admitted to the bar. In 1864 he came to Montana with General Sully via the northern route, and in company with Thomas Shober engaged in the practice of law. In 1866 he was elected to the territorial legislature, and has since been elected and re-elected to the same position, and filled the chair of the joint judiciary committee. For the past twenty years he has been interested in mining, and has been prominently identified with many of the large mining schemes. Mr. Lowry was married in September, 1881, to Miss Frances C. Simmons, of Iowa. They are the parents of one daughter, Bessie.

L. B. LYMAN, salesman for the Helena marble works, was born in Lewis Co., N. Y., September 6, 1828, to Enoch and Margaret (Crego) Lyman. A genealogy of the Lyman family has been published numbering over 4,000 in the United States and Canada, originating from Richard Lyman, who emigrated from Highonger, England, and settled in Northampton, Mass. Our subject attended the common and high schools of Turin, N. Y., besides attending to his duties on his father's farm. In 1847 he went to Wisconsin, and one year later began reading law with W. S. Hawkins, of Waukesha; was subsequently admitted to the bar and formed a partnership with his preceptor until 1864, when he emigrated to Montana with his wife, Mary E., a daughter of W. S. Hawkins, whom he had married in September, 1858. He made his settlement along the East Gallatin river, about three miles from Bozeman, then a village of only a few log cabins. Here a daughter was born to them April 28, 1865, whom they named Sylvia R. Mr. Lyman claims that she was the first white child born in the territory. This honor has been claimed by Mr. and Mrs. Bostwick, who live near Bozeman, but Mr. Lyman thinks their child was born in November, 1865. While occupying his farm he claims to have sown the first wheat in Montana, it being one-half bushel which he brought with him from Wisconsin. From the increase during the fall of 1865 he sold all he could spare at $25 per bushel, and the following season such as he had for sale at $9 per bushel. He raised as high as eighty-five bushels of spring and sixty of winter wheat per acre. The winter of 1864-5 was known as the "meat straight winter," owing to the fact that flour was $75 per hundred pounds, and could only be obtained at Virginia City. Mr. Lyman was well up in hunting wild game, and on one occasion he took his double-repeating rifle and went to the adjacent hills in search of wild meat. He soon discovered a single elk, and while preparing to approach the animal, a fine black-tail buck came across his trail. "Our hero" opened fire on him, and again on the elk, both shots taking deadly effect. While engaged in butchering the elk on the steep mountain side, three large grizzly bears suddenly appeared, coming at full speed toward where they smelled the fresh meat. There being no trees in the vicinity that he could climb, he realized that he must fight for his life, and sprang for his rifle, purposing to give the ferocious beasts the best reception in his power. They approached within a few rods before making any halt, when, watching his opportunity, Mr. L. made a deadly shot at one, when instantly one of the remaining charged upon him with mouth wide open, with all the ferocity natural to that animal, but with his usual steady nerve he meted out a similar dose to this one, and soon re-loading he also killed the third, so that within one-half hour he had slain an elk, deer, and three grizzly bears. In the autumn of 1868 he, with his wife and two children, visited his people in New York, and hers in Wisconsin. The citizens among his large acquaintance in Wisconsin, realizing his worth and honesty, earnestly indorsed him for an office of public trust, which resulted in his appointment by President Grant as Register of the United States Land Office for Montana, the territory then being embraced in only one district. He thus opened the first tract-book in Montana, took charge in 1869, and continued until June, 1875, retiring then, well and favorably known as a man of integrity, who had attended to his official business with assiduity. His associate, R. F. May, was also honored as Receiver. The office was located at Helena. Closing his official career, Mr. Lyman again visited California, whither he had been in 1849, and during the first two years of his latter trip he traveled through Oregon and Washington territory, returning at the end to San Francisco, where he engaged with Dupont and Hazzard, powder companies, to examine titles and lands held under Spanish grants around San Francisco bay, and to locate where perfect titles could be obtained to suitable locations for powder magazines, accessible to shipping. He made the purchase of a $10,000 tract for them, and superintended the erection of magazines and wharves for the above companies. During his residence there he contested titles for some lands. On his return to Montana, in 1883, he for a short time resided with his brother, near Helena, but now lives in Helena, where he is employed by the Helena Marble Works as a traveling salesman. He married his second wife, Frances A. Patterson, in 1871. His name is on the roll of attorneys of the supreme court of Montana.

C. J. LYSTER (deceased), born at Montreal, Canada, came to Montana in 1867, mined in St. Louis Gulch, was member of the banking firm of Fox & Lyster, who were joined by William Roe. This bank was merged into the People's National Bank of Helena, of which Mr. Lyster was cashier until his death, August 23, 1875.

W. R. MCCOMAS, of Platt & McComas, Helena, was born at New Richmond, Ind., January 5, 1845. He lived with his parents at this place till 1856, in which year they and he moved to Johnson Co., Ia., where he worked on the farm summers and attended school winters till he was 18. Joining a party that was westward bound, he came to Virginia City, Mont., and mined there during the summer of 1863. In the fall he located a ranch near that place, on which he stayed till 1867, when he went on the Salmon river stampede, and afterward to Salt Lake and California. In 1868 he brought a band of horses to Montana; these he sold out and then went to work in Travis Bros' livery stable at Helena. In 1872 he opened a livery stable at Salt Lake City; he sold this the same year and started a wholesale liquor house. In 1878 he sold his business and returned to the States, for the first time in 16 years. In 1879 he came west and sold liquor all along the line of the Utah Northern R. R., and in the fall of this year came to Helena again and opened a liquor saloon, which place he kept till 1882, when he bought in with Mr. Platt in the latter's livery stable, and is still in this business. Mr. McComas was married in October, 1876, to Miss Carrie Johnson, of American Fork, Utah. She has been with him in all of his wanderings since, and now, with their two children, resides in Helena.

CHAS. MCKELVY, of the firm of Schaffer & McKelvy, Ft. Shaw, was born in the vicinity of Huntingdon, Penn., September 8, 1859. At 17 years of age he went to Colorado, where he remained two years, engaged in the various pursuits of a border life. On coming to Montana he went into the freighting business through various parts of the territory until 1881, when he established the ranch now owned by himself and Mr. Schaffer, and engaged in sheep-raising.

C. F. MCKINNON, engineer fire department, Helena, was born at Sidney, Nova Scotia, August 18, 1838, where his parents, Hugh and Sarah (Campbell) McKinnon, resided. His earlier days were passed in attendance at school, and afterward as clerk until he joined the Canadian Mounted Police of the N. W., in which he served one year. He has been employed for some years past in the fire department of Helena.

ARCHIBALD MCMILLAN (vide Jefferson Co.)

P. F. MADDEN, M. D. (deceased), born in Canada about 48 years ago, studied medicine at Buffalo, N. Y., and came to Montana in 1874, first locating in Beaverhead county. He was afterward an acting assistant surgeon of the army, stationed at Fort Shaw. Subsequently he established himself in Helena, and for seven years prior to his death, May 9, 1884, was professionally engaged there.

MARTIN MAGINNIS, Helena, was born in Wayne Co., N. Y., October 27, 1840. While still a youth, his parents migrated to Minnesota, and there he received his education, passed through an academical course, and entered the Hamline University. He left college to take the management of a Democratic journal, and when the Rebellion burst over the country, he joined the defenders of the Union, enlisting as a private in the 1st Minn. Vol. Inf., April 18, 1861. After the affair at Bull Run he was commissioned 2d Lt.; in September, 1862, was promoted to a first lieutenancy, and in July, 1863, was commissioned captain, serving with his regiment in the Army of the Potomac in almost all its magnificent engagements until September, 1864, when he was commissioned major of the 11th Minn. Vol. Inf. and transferred to the Army of the Cumberland. He served under Gen. Thomas in this division of the Northern Army until July, 1865, when he was mustered out. Major Maginnis moved to Montana in 1866, where he at once engaged in mining. Some time later we find him editor and publisher of the Helena Daily Gazette, and next, entering the field of politics, carrying all obstacles before him, was elected to the 43d Congress, and re-elected, serving from the opening of the 43d Congress to April, 1885, when he was succeeded by Jos. K. Toole. In the several chapters of the General History, as well as in these devoted to County History and Reminiscences, his connection with the settlement and progress of the territory is pointed out definitely, and to these several parts of this work the reader is referred.

JOHN C. MAJOR, Helena, was born in Kentucky in August, 1831. His parents died when he was 9 years old. When 13 he went to Missouri to reside with an uncle, and attended school until he was 16; then went back to his native state. When 18 he entered the Kentucky Military Collegiate Institute, remaining until he was 20; he then went to Bartlett's Commercial College at Cincinnati, and graduated in 1854. Moving to Indiana, he was appointed deputy clerk of the court, and soon afterward clerk of Clay county. In 1861 he raised a company of volunteers, but upon application for enrollment some of the aspirants for commissions persuaded the men that he was not loyal, and in the election for officers they left him out. Mr. Major therefore went to Harper's Ferry with the intention of joining Lew Wallace's brigade, but they being ordered back, he went with them to Indiana, where he enlisted a company for the 43d Ind. Inf., and was elected captain. They went to the front, and in 8 months he was made a major, about a year afterward Lieut. Col., and in 1864 Col. of the 43d. On the 4th of July, 1863, during the battle of Helena, Ark., he captured Col. Bell and staff and the entire 1st Arkansas regiment. In 1866 he came to Helena by stage, and worked at carpentering till fall, when, building him a boat, he proceeded down the Missouri to St. Louis. The next spring he came back to Helena, and went down the river again by boat the next fall. He then took charge of a saw-mill in Indiana, which he ran till 1873, when he came to Montana again, engaged one year in surveying, and another year in mining in McClellan gulch. In 1876 he visited the Centennial Exposition, returning in 1877 by way of the Black Hills to Big Horn; thence to Helena, where he followed the carpenter business till 1882. In that year he was appointed Marshal of Helena, and Street Commissioner of the same city in the same year. He was married in 1857 to Miss Henrietta Pinkly, who died in 1859, leaving him one child, a girl, who is married and living in Indiana. Col. Major is a Freemason of long standing, and has taken 41 degrees, which means that he has risen very high in the order, for there is only one more degree. He is now a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

PHIL. A. MANIX, P. O. Augusta, son of John and Ellen Manix, was born in Hartford, Conn., July 1, 1844. In 1861 he entered the volunteer service in company K of the 4th Connecticut Infantry, resigning October 20, 1864, as second Lieutenant in the 1st Connecticut Artillery. July 19, 1866, he arrived in Montana, and until 1879 was in the employ of McKnight & Co., of Fort Shaw. During the next two years he contracted to furnish the government post at Fort Shaw with beef. Previous to this, however, he was for eight years interested in the cattle business with William Mulchay. In April, 1883, Mr. Manix came to Augusta, established a general merchandise store, and is now enjoying an extensive business in his line. Augusta, located on the head waters of the Sun River, has many advantages which promise to make it one of the important towns of the Territory. It has fine agricultural surroundings and extensive ranges for cattle grazing. July 26, 1883, Mr. Manix was married to a daughter of Hugh F. and Mabel Gilloghy, who was born in Bangor, Maine, May 16, 1864, and came to Montana in 1877.

J. H. MANLOVE, Pear Creek valley, son of Mark and Jane Manlove, was born in Highland Co., Ohio, in 1824. His father by occupation was a farmer, and moved from Ohio to Indiana in 1834. He went to California in 1849; previous to that time he had taught school and made a trip to the Ozark mountains in Arkansas. Going to California overland he remained there until 1852, mining, teaming and trading in stock. Leaving California he returned to Indiana, where he continued as a stock dealer until 1856, when he went to Fort Dodge, Ia., and bought some wild land, stopping there until the spring of 1860. In that year he went to Colorado, mined one season, and also traded across the plains from Missouri river to Denver and the mountains. In the winter of 1864–5 he hunted and trapped, and during the summer of the latter season arrived at "Last Chance." In the fall of same year he took up a ranch six miles east of Helena, where he has remained ever since. Has 160 acres of land in a good state of cultivation, and is engaged principally in farming and gardening. On May 26, 1862, he was married to Miss Elmira White, of Calhoun Co., Ia., and has eight children: Bayard Taylor, 19; Mark A., 15; Wilber, 14; Eva, 12; George, 8; Ilene, 6; Jasper, 2, and the youngest not named.

I. MARKS, Helena, was born in Germany in 1840, and came to the United States when a child, remaining in New York two years. He then went to California, and in 1859 established the first cigar factory in Sacramento. In October, 1859, he went to Virginia, Nev., to take charge of a general merchandise business, but soon turned his attention to mining, and was the first discoverer of the Humboldt mining district. He then went to the Salmon river mines and from there to Oregon, where for a period of four years he was engaged in merchandising. In 1866 he came to Helena, M. T., and opened his present business on Main street. He has since been burned out twice, losing thereby about $32,000. Mr. Marks was married in 1879 to Miss Jennie Arnson, of St. Louis, Mo.

T. MARQUIS, Dearborn, was born in Canada October 7, 1849. He remained in Canada engaged in farming and blacksmithing until 1874, when he went to Lake Superior and remained about six months. He then went to Manitoba, passed some five months there, after which he came to Sun River Crossing, where he remained 2½ years teaming. He then came to Dearborn, and has since been engaged in blacksmithing. In 1883 he opened a hotel and saloon at this place, and is doing a very fair business.

BENJAMIN F. MARSH, Deputy United States mineral surveyor, Helena, was born in Windsor Co., Vt., November 7, 1815, where his parents, Otis and Julia (Ransom) Marsh, resided—Mrs. Marsh, being a sister of Gen. Ransom, and a cousin of Gen. Ransom, who distinguished himself in the late war of the Rebellion. Prof. B. F. Marsh was educated at the Norwich University, after which he attended lectures and served as preceptor, and in 1845 was appointed to the chair of mathematics in the Norwich University, but was soon after induced to accept a position as civil engineer for railroad companies, which profession he has since adopted, having for many years served as chief engineer of various enterprises, constructing and building railroads in the east, south and west. In 1867 he came to Montana with Sol. Meredith, who was appointed surveyor-general of the territory. Mr. Marsh made the first government survey of the territory, and established the principal base and meridian lines, and for a period of nearly six years was employed in public surveys. He then opened an office at Helena, and has since been engaged by the government as Deputy United States mineral surveyor, and for years has also served in the capacity of county surveyor, being one of the most noted as also one of the oldest in the profession in the territory. Prof. Marsh was married August 22, 1845, to Miss Mary D. Blish, of Woodstock, Vt., to whom was born four children, named as follows: Geo. F., now residing at Butte; Emma J., now Mrs. Emma J. Woodman, residing at Helena; John M., residing at Fort Benton, and Flora A., now Mrs. Flora A. Davis, her husband being a real estate dealer at Helena.

DANIEL MARSHALL, firm of Marshall & Jones Helena, the son of Gen. Frank J. Marshall, of Colorado, was born in Marysville, Kan., January 9, 1860. When very young his parents moved to Denver, Col. In 1876 he was sent to Devaux College, at Niagara, N. Y., for two years, then to the Racine College at Racine, Wis., for one year, and then took a special course of a year in Harvard College. Returning home, he managed a hotel in Denver for a year, and in May, 1883, came to Helena and opened his present business. The firm are interested in considerable real estate and mining property.

COL. R. F. MAY, Helena, is a son of James and Jemima (Hugg) May, and was born near Middletown, New Castle Co., Del., January 10, 1824. When quite young his parents moved to Elkton, Thistle Co., Md., where he began a clerkship at the early age of 12 years, serving until 1847 in Elkton. He was also in the same business two years at Philadelphia, and two years at Indianapolis, Ind. Late in 1849 he started for California, and arrived in San Francisco February 22, 1850, and followed mining three months. He then engaged in the grocery business at Stockton, with fair success. In 1854 he sold out his business in Stockton, returning to Elkton, Md., and there engaged in mercantile business and farming. In 1862 he was appointed quartermaster of a drafted regiment of Federal troops, in which position he served until May, 1864, when he went to Indianapolis, Ind., and engaged in the retail boot and shoe business. In March, 1867, he went to St. Louis, Mo., and took passage on a steamer for Fort Benton, M. T., being 87 days on the trip. He arrived in Helena July 1, 1867, and opened a variety store, which he ran about seven years. In January, 1869, he was appointed receiver of the land office at Helena. In 1873 he was appointed agent for the Blackfeet, Bloods and Piegan Indians, and served as such until January, 1875, after which he engaged in mercantile business in Bozeman, and continued until April, 1883. He then came to Helena and opened his present business. In 1861 Col. May was married to Miss Clara E. Sullivan, of Indianapolis, Ind., by whom he has one son, Wm. S. Col. May is a member of Morning Star Lodge, No. 5, A. F. & A. M., of Helena.

WM. M. MELLON, P. O. Helena, was born in Worcester Co., Mass., September 9, 1871. He attended school in Westborough until fourteen years of age, then went to Warsaw, Hancock Co., Ill., where he lived with an elder brother, C. H. Mellon, and attended school for three years more. He then left for Atchison, Kan., remaining there one year, and was afterward employed by a sutler with the United States troops at Fort Bridger at the time of the Great Mormon raid. Remaining in the fort six months, he then left for Salt Lake City, and three months afterward for Green river, establishing a ferry at the old California crossing in Nebraska. He operated the ferry three months, but was driven away by Mormons, and returned to Salt Lake City. He finally came to Montana, arriving at Deer Lodge in August, 1860, where he passed the two succeeding winters, leaving then for the Yokoo agency, M. T. He was employed by the government to take charge of the pack train running between the agency and Walla Walla. After making one trip to Walla Walla he was placed in charge of the government post there, and remained two months. Mr. Mellon then went to Ora Fino, the first mine discovered in Washington territory. After mining in various places until the spring of 1862, he started with seven others on a prospecting trip. They lost their way, the provisions gave out, and they lived on the inside bark of trees for eight days, finally coming upon a mining camp called Museum Creek, where they remained until they had fully recovered. After subsequent mining operations at Elk City, Washington territory, and wintering at Deer Lodge, M. T., Mr. Mellon started in the spring with a party for a mountain trip. Arriving at Benton they waited six weeks for boats, from which they expected to get provisions, but not being able to procure any, returned to Deer Lodge. After obtaining provisions Mr. Mellon prospected in the vicinity of Helena and Little Blackfoot river for five months, but not being successful returned to Deer Lodge. He then went to Virginia City, or Alder Gulch, as it was then called, bought a claim and mined one year; then at Boulder Creek three months; returning to Deer Lodge, and from there going to Little Blackfoot. After prospecting one and one-half years he mined three years at Pioneer Gulch, or Gold Creek; sold his claim for $6,000 and started a saloon, which he carried on for ten years. In 1876 he opened a saloon at Phillipsburg, and after a year and a half started for the Black Hills. Being attacked with rheumatism he stopped at Helena, in June, 1877; was sick three months, and upon recovery established a saloon, with club rooms attached, in Dunphries block, lower Main street. He removed to the St. Louis block three years afterward, and continues in the same business.

THOMAS G. MERRILL, Helena, was born at Kalamazoo, Mich., June 9, 1839. He was a pupil in a preparatory school for several years, then attended and graduated from the Kalamazoo college in 1860. He served as principal in the Jefferson school at St. Paul, Minn., until the war broke out, when he went to the seat of war with the third Minnesota infantry as sutler. He was stricken with fever in the fall of 1862 and returned to St. Paul, but getting no better, came to Montana, where in Prickly Pear valley he located a ranch. He was soon after appointed recorder for Jefferson county, from which county six others have since been formed. The county seat was located at Montana City, which has now one house and is but eight miles from Helena. In company with James Gourley he built a ditch, carrying the water of Prickly Pear to some high bars, and mined these afterward with but moderate success. He spent the summer of 1865 in prospecting for both quartz and placer mines, found gold in Indian creek and some ores that have since proved valuable. In 1867 he was superintendent of the Monarch Mining Co. (now Hecla). In 1868 he went to St. Paul and was in the book and stationery business till 1872; then took from the government a number of surveying contracts and worked at these in the Red River country, Dakota, till the latter part of 1873. He then went to Lansing, Mich., where he was engaged for seven years in the real estate business, and in 1880 came again to Helena, Mont., and has since been engaged in his present business. He is manager of the Merrill Mining Co., and is interested in some of the most valuable mines in the territory. He was married in 1870 to Miss Annie E. Torbet, of St. Paul, and they have four children, who reside with their mother at that city. In 1863 times were very hard and provisions were scarce. Mr. Merrill had no money, but getting a sack of sugar on credit from Mr. Gillete, for which he paid $80, he would take a small sack of this to the Blackfoot and Piegan camps and trade sugar with them at the rate of a cup of sugar for a tanned skin of an elk or deer, which his partner (who was a tailor) would make into clothes, when Mr. Merrill would take them to Virginia City, 120 miles away, and trade for goods, which he would sell at a good profit to the residents of this valley.

DAVID MERRITT, of the firm of Merritt & Co., Helena, was born in Westmoreland Co. Pa., October 10, 1844. At 16 years of age he went to Pittsburg, where he was employed some time in a glass factory, after which he worked in the rolling mills until 1865, when he went south, and thence via Leavenworth to Virginia City, at which place he arrived on December 5, 1865. He was engaged in mining in Alder Gulch eighteen months, afterward working in the Highland, Cave and Grizzly Gulches, and became a member of the Grizzly and Ora Fino Mining Co., and also of the New Water Co. He was interested until 1883, when he bought an interest in the soda establishment of Helena, for the manufacture of all carbonated drinks, vinegars, syrups, etc. Mr. Merritt was married in 1880 to Miss Annie Williams, a native of Pennsylvania.

THEODORE B. MERRITT, Pear Creek Valley, was born March 1, 1831, near Honesdale, Pa., and moved to Marion, Ohio, in his sixth year, where his boyhood was spent in common school. When 14 years old he moved to Dubuque, Ia., and in 1864 to Montana, proceeding with an ox team via Bozeman cut-off. He was five months making the trip, and arrived in Virginia City in September, 1864, with his wife and three children. They lived in Virginia City two years, during which time he worked at his trade as cabinet maker. In 1866 he moved to Prickly Pear Valley, where he has since resided, and engaged in farming. He has 320 acres of land, 160 acres being fine meadow land. His family consists of seven children. Two daughters are married, one to Edward Payne, residing in Ruby Valley, and the other one to Samuel Cook, near Helena. One son grown to manhood, is associated with his father in business. These three came in an early day in the traditional ox express, and besides there are four girls, all born in Montana.

M. A. MEYENDORFF, Helena, is a native of Poland, Russia, and was born December 3, 1848. He attended the public schools of his native country until 1862, when with twenty-eight of his school-mates he was expelled for revolutionary movements. In 1863 the Revolution broke out and on the 17th of April he joined the Revolutionists and participated in two battles against the Russians. He was taken prisoner, and after eight months' imprisonment, during the principal part of which he was consigned to solitary confinement, he was banished for life and sent to Siberia. His eldest brother meanwhile was taken from his bed and shot without trial, another brother escaped after eleven months' imprisonment, and is now in California. Through the intercession of his half-brother, Colonel Julian Alliwski, of New York city, who was a personal friend of President Lincoln, a petition was sent from the United States government to the Emperor of Russia, requesting a change of banishment from Siberia to America, which request was granted, and he came to this country in 1866. After spending six months in Brooklyn he entered the Michigan University, graduated as civil engineer in 1870, and in the following year came to Montana on the survey of the Northern Pacific railroad. In 1873 he entered the Surveyor General's office in Helena, and the following year went to Deer Lodge and formed a partnership with Mr. O'Bannon for the survey of mineral lands, the firm also acting as attorneys for patents. He soon after had the misfortune to fracture his hip, and went east for medical treatment. Being informed that he would be crippled for life, he gave up his profession, and during the winter of 1874, while in Washington, he secured through the Hon. J. G. Blaine, a position in the Interior Department, and in the spring of 1875, when the assay office was to be built at Helena, he received through Mr. Blaine the appointment of superintendent of construction of said office. In 1876, through the influence of President Grant, he was appointed U. S. Melter and Refiner, which position he has since held, also holding the offices of Secretary of the Territorial Central Committee, Secretary of the County Central Committee, and being also prominently identified with the Helena Fire Co., and a prominent member of the Masonic order. In the fall of 1884, during the Presidential campaign, he delivered many addresses to his countrymen in various parts of the United States, urging them to support Mr. Blaine.

W. L. MILLEGAN, Pear Creek Valley, was born on the Hudson, N. Y., February 4, 1837. In 1847 he migrated to Wisconsin, and in 1859 went to Pike's Peak. Was in Denver when the first log houses were being put up there, and from Denver came to Bannack in 1863. Mined there in 1863, and in 1864 went to Iowa, where he was married to Miss Martha Ann Rockfellow, and brought Mrs. Millegan to the Territory the same year. He went to East Bannack, and thence to Blackfoot on a stampede in the spring of 1865. In the fall of 1865 he settled in Pear Creek valley, where he now has 320 acres of land, all in a good state of cultivation and well fenced. He also has about sixty-five head of horses and some other stock. Mr. Millegan was elected a member of the board of county commissioners of Lewis and Clarke county in 1879 for six years.

HENRY MILLER, P. O. Helena, came to Montana in the fall of 1863, from Colorado, and for years was engaged in mining and prospecting in various parts of the territory, paying visits in those capacities to Virginia City, Silver Bow, Helena, Confederate Gulch, Cement Gulch (discovered and named by Mr. Miller, who first supposed the ground to be frosty), Diamond Bar, etc. He built a boat at Helena about twenty feet long and four feet wide, and hauled it to the Missouri river with oxen. While mining in Cement Gulch Mr. Miller was very successful, also on Diamond Bar. He was one of the original proprietors of a brewery in Bozeman, but sold out in 1872 and bought the "Halfway House," which he kept as a hotel for eight years. He located his present ranch in 1877, and at the date these facts were secured owned fifty head of cattle and ten horses. Mr. Miller was at Virginia City during the vigilante excitement, and the methods of the men who took the law into their own hands were heartily approved by him, for he recognized the fact that summary dealings were the only means of protecting citizens from the operations of the cut-throat "road agents." Mr. Miller was married at Helena in 1872 to Miss Margaret Steiger.

ROBERT MILLER died at Helena, January 15, 1875. He was born in Virginia and was a nephew of President Tyler. He was the eldest son of Dr Miller, who was assistant Postmaster-General under Tyler and Van Buren. He served the country with honor as Indian agent in Colorado, Kansas and New Mexico under Pierce and Buchanan. He was in the insurance business at Helena.

H. A. MILOT, Dearborn, was born at Yamachiche, St. Maurice Co., Canada; came to Montana in 1861, first locating at Deer Lodge, where he and four companions erected the first cabin on the site which Deer Lodge now occupies. He remained there about fifteen years, and for some time before leaving was engaged in the hotel and merchandise business. In 1876 Mr. Milot came to Dearborn, where he was engaged in hotel and saloon business until 1878, since which time he has been engaged in the merchandise business, during 1879–80, at Sun River Crossing, and since that time at Dearborn, where he is also postmaster. Mr. Milot was married at Montreal, Canada, on August 2, 1871, to Miss Mary A. Lefleur. They are the parents of five bright and intelligent children.

JOHN MING, of Helena, was born in the vicinity of Lynchburg, Va., and early settled at St Louis, Mo., where he was reared and educated. In 1858 he went to Denver and opened the first store in that place. He succeeded in this enterprise and remained there several years. In 1863 he came to Montana and succeeded admirably in stock-raising, real estate and mining. He is now a director of the First National Bank, and is the owner of the opera house which bears his name, to say nothing of mining properties in different parts of the Territory.

MART MITCHELL, Mitchell's Station, was born in Dubuque Co., Ia., November 11, 1854, followed farming in Iowa until 1877, when he came to Montana and secured an interest in an extension of the Penobscot mine, which he sold in 1878, and soon after became interested in the now noted Gloster mine, being one of its discoverers. This interest he disposed of in May, 1880. He then bought his present ranch and business consisting of hotel, stage station and stock. Mr. Mitchell was married near Silver City on July 21, 1880, to Miss Eliza Murphy.

CONRAD MOCKEL, Helena, was born July 24, 1835, in Langenheim, Germany. He attended school until 14 years of age, engaged in farming until 1865; emigrated to San Francisco, Cal., where he followed a musical profession, playing the violin. In a short time he went to Idaho and mined and played four years. He returned to Germany in 1870, remaining until 1880, when he a second time left for the United States, coming direct to Helena, arriving in June. He opened with John Beckney a saloon on Main street, known as the Eldorado saloon and billiard hall. He bought Beckney's interest in one year, and has since carried on the business alone. Mr. Mockel married Mary Hoodh in 1861, in Germany. They have six children: Christopher, Lizzie, Henry, Philip, George, Anthony.

H. MONROE, Pear Creek Valley, son of Alfred and Emeline (Crawford), was born in Michigan, August 14, 1839, of which state his father was one of the earliest settlers. Henry left in 1854 for Minnesota. In 1864 he came to Alder gulch and embarked in the lumber business, remaining at that place four years. In 1868 he came to Pear Creek Valley and bought a ranch, where he has since been engaged in farming. The farm consists of 320 acres—well-fenced and in good condition. Since living in the valley he has been principally engaged in farming and stock-raising. Went to the Black Hills in 1876 and was there two years and a half. In 1863 he was married to Miss Amelia Fadden, a native of New York, who died in Pear Creek Valley in 1875, leaving three children: Henry, Mark and Burt.

REV. T. V. MOORE, Pastor Presbyterian church, Helena, son of Rev. T. V. Moore, D.D., was born at Richmond, Va., November 23, 1857. He received his preparatory and collegiate education in Tennessee; then entered Princeton College and pursued his theological studies there; then went abroad, studied at Edinburgh, Scotland, and Berlin, Germany. In April, 1883, he came to Montana, and was ordained here August 3, 1883, having come to the territory as stated supply for the church of which he has since been given an unanimous call as pastor. Mr. Moore was married August 29, 1882, to Miss M. J. Wilson, of Edinburgh, Scotland.

WM. S. MOON, Cartersville, ranch and stock-raiser, was born at Crab Orchard, Ky., November 23, 1844. Leaving Kentucky when 8 years of age for Illinois, he mined in that state until 1865, at which time he went to Iowa, but soon after moved to Montana and engaged in freighting between Salt Lake, Helena, Benton and various other points for 7 years. Mr. Moon was married at Helena June 29, 1872, to Miss Hattie D. Robbins, who is an aunt of John H. Weirham, who, with Augustus L. Cottle, was killed by Indians at the head of the Dearborn river about July 1, 1879.

MOSES MORRIS, P. O. Helena, was born in the duchy of Posen, Prussia, in 1845, and resided there sixteen years and attended the government school. He lost an eye by an accident when young. Leaving his mother and brother at home, he emigrated to the United States with a sister in the fall of 1858; landed at New York; peddled one year in St. Louis; went to Pike's Peak during the gold excitement; walked to Denver and opened a small dry goods and notion store; hard times, shooting, cutting tent ropes, etc., had a tendency to discourage him, and he tried the chances at Georgia Gulch, again at Denver and at other places in Colorado for a couple of years. He was finally burned out at Denver, and in 1865 (his mother and the rest of the family having joined him in 1863, and one brother having previously come), he located with his brothers in business at Virginia City. In 1868, having meanwhile established a store at Helena, he sold out at Virginia City, and the business at the former place is now conducted by the firm of Morris Bros., who handle glass, crockery, cigars and tobacco, etc., and claim to have the largest fruit trade in the Territory. Moses Morris married Miss Emma Amson, of St. Louis, in 1878, and they have one child. Mr. M. belongs to the Masonic fraternity, in which he holds high rank. He has seen exceedingly close times during his life in the West, but has persevered and weathered the storm.

WILLIAM MULCAHY, Sun River, was born at Fairport, Monroe Co., N. Y., March, 1847. When quite young assisted his father in farming. In 1863 enlisted in the One Hundred and Twenty-first New York Regiment, was afterward transferred to the Sixty-fifth New York City Regiment, and after obtaining discharge returned to Fairport, where he remained until 1866, when he went to Kansas. After a short time he went to Fort Benton, thence in 1867 to Dearborn, and thence to the Gallatin Valley, and commenced farming. In 1869 he came to Sun River and worked for Mrs. Ford, handling cattle for three years. In 1870 he purchased a few cattle and has since been engaged in stock-raising. In 1878 he located his ranch where he now raises cattle and horses, besides devoting some attention to agriculture. He married Miss Clara M. Bray, of Cartersville, M. T., in March, 1882. Mr. Mulcahy has a ranch at the mouth of Deep Creek. In 1881–82 he was a Deputy Sheriff in Lewis and Clarke county, under Seth Bullock, and in 1882 built his present home on Sun River.

J. J. MULLER, Helena, was born in Switzerland, October 18, 1824, where his parents, Adam and Elizabeth (Bolinger) Muller, resided. He came to Fremont Co., Ia., in 1854, where he opened a beer and lunch saloon at Sidney, remaining there until 1863. At this time he moved to Alder Gulch, where he was engaged in mining, butchering and bakery until 1865. He then went to Silver Bow, where he followed butchering six months, next prospecting in vicinity of Butte city about four months, and afterward opened a butcher shop at Butte, remaining there some five months, when he resumed prospecting in Deer Lodge county, but soon after opened a butcher shop at Cariboo Gulch, where, after spending about six months, he was taken sick and went to Deer Lodge, and after remaining about four months, again went prospecting, after which he came to Helena and worked some time in a brewery. He soon went prospecting again and visited Montana City for that purpose, since which time he has been engaged in hotels, breweries, etc., and is now employed by M. Jacobi at Helena.

JOHN MURPHY, P. O. Helena, was born December 25, 1835, in Ireland, and is a son of Thomas and Ellen Murphy. He attended school in his native country; emigrated to the United States, in 1849, and settled on a farm in the state of New York. (He still owns a farm on Wasco lake.) In the spring of 1859 he sailed for San Francisco via the Isthmus of Panama. He went to the northern part of California (Siskiyou Co.), and commenced mining on Jackson creek. He discovered what was afterward called Slide creek, a tributary of Fox creek. Remaining in Siskiyou till 1864, he joined Co. D, Fourth California Volunteers, and was stationed at Fort Yamhill, Oregon. In the fall of 1865 he was mustered out of service at San Francisco, Cal., and in December of the same year he went to Santa Clara valley, and lived on Hoag's ranch during the winter. From here he started on his long horseback trip of about 1,600 miles via Sacramento to the Willamette valley and the Dalles, White Bluffs on the Columbia river, Spokane Prairie, and Lake Pen d'Oreille. Here he met Marks and Penig, and together they journeyed to Hell-gate river. The trip was fraught with many hardships. He then went to McClellan Gulch, and engaged in mining with McClellan, the discoverer of the mine, and Stewart and Burns, all of California. In the month of August, 1866, he started with McClellan for a trip to New York via the Missouri river. Mr. Murphy has made thirteen trips to New York since first coming to Montana. August 24, 1869, he was married to Ellen Smith, of New York, having been previously married to Diantha Smith, who bore him one son, Smith Murphy, who was a graduate of Mt. Union college, Ohio, in the class of 1880, and who is now conducting a private school in New York. Mr. Murphy sold out rich mining interests to the First National Bank of East Saginaw, Mich., and in 1882 purchased his present home of 160 acres of fine land in Prickly Pear valley.

JOHN T. MURPHY, Helena, was born in February, 1842, in Platte Co., Mo.; lived at home and attended school, finishing his education at a private school. At seventeen years of age he went to Denver and was clerk in a store for a year and a half, then engaged in business for himself at the same place an equal length of time. He was with Ben Holliday in his overland express for a year, after which he bought teams and freighted from the Missouri to all parts of Colorado. In 1864 he came with a train load of goods to Virginia City. In the spring of 1865 he went to Helena and engaged in his present business, and was also interested in a large transportation business throughout the territory, besides investing some in quartz property. The firm, of which Mr. Murphy is principal, have branch houses at Fort Benton and Deer Lodge, with a good trade at each place, and in their line transact a business second to none in the territory. In 1871 he espoused Miss Elizabeth Morton, of Clay Co., Mo., and they have four children.

BARNARD W. MURRAY, Sun River Crossing, was born February 20, 1839, at Carthage, Jefferson Co., N. Y. Parents moved to Detroit, Mich.; from there to Niles, Mich., where Mr. Murray attended school until 19 years of age. He then learned the trade of wheelwright, which he worked at until 1860. Went to South Bend, Ind., and enlisted as a musician in the 35th Indiana Regimental Band. In 1863 left the army; came to Virginia city, in 1864; worked as carpenter for three months; left for Last Chance gulch; mined both there and at Trout creek for five years. Formed partnership with Mr. Burke, and laid foundation for the International Hotel in winter of 1864–5. Left for Sun River Crossing. Here he built shop; worked as wheelwright, having blacksmith shop in connection. Carried this on for six years; sold out, and located ranch on Sun river, where he remained until winter of 1882. Returned to Sun River Crossing, forming partnership with J. P. Dyas, and opened a general merchandise store. Married Miss Nellie Price, of Sun river, March, 1883. Mr. Murray was engaged in raising cattle until 1883, but now pays special attention to the raising of grain on his ranch.

WILLIAM MUTH, P. O. Helena, was born October 2, 1851, at Wheeling, W. Va. At 16 years of age he went to Leavenworth, Kan., and engaged as clerk in a saddlery hardware house for four years. In December, 1873, he arrived at Helena and opened and took charge of a store in the same line for W. B. Lobenstein of Leavenworth. This business was closed out in 1876 to William Davidson, and Mr. Muth returned to Leavenworth. In 1876 he engaged in mining and general merchandising at Belmont, Marysville and Gloster. He formed a partnership in 1879 with Mr. Conrad, and in 1883 Mr. Bach bought an interest. Mr. Muth is also proprietor of a stage line between Helena and Marysville, having purchased it from Negus & Whitehead. He married Miss Stella Hoyt in November, 1875, at Helena. Their children are Elizabeth, Roy and Herbert.

AUGUST NAGEL, was born in Hanover, Germany, June 13, 1843. Came to the United States in 1871, and four months after arrival enlisted at St. Louis in company A of 3d infantry, United States volunteers. At the expiration of his term of service he was discharged at New Orleans, La., where he re-enlisted and was discharged a second time at Fort Shaw, M. T. Mr. Nagel was married at Macon, Miss., on the 20th day of January, 1877, to Miss Geneveive Wedkind, to whom were born three children. In November, 1881, he bought his present ranch and engaged in farming and stock-raising at Eagle Rock stage station.

REV. E. D. NEILL, author of the history of Minnesota, is the father of Henry Neill, of Helena, who was born at St. Paul, Minn., April 15, 1855. When eight years of age Henry, with his parents, moved to Philadelphia. He was an attendant at district school, and one term at a Quaker school. When he was 12 years old the family moved to Washington, D. C., where he attended a private school until 1870. He was then sent to Dublin, Ireland, and there attended the Rathmines school until 1872, when he came home. He worked at various occupations for a year and a half, then came out with the boundary commission as naturalist. When the commission disbanded (fall of 1874), he located at Helena. At the end of a year, during which time he taught school and was also on a township survey, he was appointed warden of the territorial penitentiary, filling the position nearly three years. He then bought a quarter interest in a sawmill on Dutchman creek, gradually bought the other interests, and now owns it all and operates a lumberyard in Helena. On the 30th of August, 1880, he was married to Miss Florence A. Eddy, and has now two children. With his family he lives at his residence in Helena. Mr. Neill owns considerable placer mining ground on Ten Mile creek. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and of the A. O. U. W.

W. S. NEGUS, P. O., Canon Creek, was born January 31, 1837, at Dexter, Mich., spent his earlier days on a farm and afterward in the butcher business. He came to Helena in June, 1866; but soon after went to Langdos Fork via Blackfoot and Nevada Cities. Returning to Helena he bought a restaurant, which he managed for some eight months, after which he became interested in stage lines from Helena to various points in the territory, being at the present time so interested. In 1874 he took up his present ranch and has since continued to make it his home. He was married at Unionville, Mich., to Miss Ann McConnell in 1857.

A. J. NELSON, Helena, son of John and Mary Ann Nelson, was born at Lexington, Mo., January 8, 1842. He served about four years in the 1st Missouri Cavalry of the Confederate Army, and was in a number of battles, notably Pea Ridge, Wilson Creek, Lexington, Prairie Grove, Cane Hill, Jenk's Ferry, Mark's Hill, Westport, Iron Mountain, Springfield, Little Rock, and many others. In 1870 he came to Montana and drove coach between Bozeman and Virginia City two years. He then went to Spokane Falls and engaged in ranching and stock raising until 1874. He has since been engaged in the wood supply trade of the city.

ABEL NEWBURY, a farmer of Pear Creek Valley, was born at Galena, Ill., November 12, 1846. When about one year old his parents moved to Ohio, where he lived until 1867, with the exception of two years. He was a soldier in the army, being a member of the 79th Ohio Regiment, 20th corps, and served under Sherman in the Atlanta campaign. After being discharged he returned to Ohio, where he remained for about eighteen months, after which he came up the Missouri River from St. Louis and located in the Pear Creek Valley, on what is known as the Miley Ranch, in 1867. This he sold out in 1870, and went to Cedar Creek mines, and there engaged in mining, farming and speculating in town property. He returned to Pear Creek and in 1877 took up a ranch of 160 acres, which is now fenced and under cultivation, about 20 acres of which Mr. Newbury devotes to gardening.

J. B. NEWMAN, M. D., Sun River Crossing, was born at Orange, N. Y., February 4, 1846. After completing his education he went to Baltimore and Maryland and graduated from the University of Maryland. In 1873 he moved to Richmond, Va., where he practiced three years; was then appointed surgeon in the United States army, and on coming to Montana was stationed at Fort Shaw in April, 1876. After remaining five years he was transferred to Fort Logan. Here he occupied the position of surgeon until August, 1883, where he resigned the position, came to Sun River Crossing and opened an office. He was married to Miss Fannie T. Gordon, of Fredericksburg, Va., January 1, 1870.

JOHN W. NIXON, livery stable, Sun River Crossing, was born September 17, 1859, at Chester, England. In 1871 he came to Port Huron, Mich. There he learned the trade of carpenter, working two years. In 1873 he went to the Northwest Territory and assisted in building Fort McLeod, then came to Sun River, passed through to Walla Walla and engaged in bringing horses and cattle to Sun River. This he carried on for one year, when he built stables and engaged in the livery business.

JEROME NORRIS, Helena, son of Jacob and Mary (Brown) Norris, was born at Chelsea, Orange Co., Vt., April 26, 1832. In 1852 he went to Boston, Mass., where he remained until 1857, when he went to San Juan, Cal., and opened a butcher shop across the bay, which he continued for four years, when he went to San Francisco, where he was engaged in the same business for the two succeeding years. He then went to Idaho and mined until 1866. In that year he came to Helena, where he again engaged in butchering and also in mining. Mr. Norris was married at Charleston, Mass., in 1854, to Miss Marcia Corwin. He has held the position of notary public over six years, and is one of the first members of the A. O. U. W. in the territory.

JAMES E. NORRIS, of W. E. Norris Bros., Cash Valley, was born in Utah. From August 14, 1863, to 1869, he was a resident of Alder Gulch. In the latter year he came to Helena and made the city his home up to the present time. Mr. Norris is engaged in the manufacture of confectionery, succeeding Webster & Koontz in this branch of local industry.

ALEXANDER PAMBRUN, P. O. Fort Shaw, was born in British Columbia, April 30, 1829. His father removed to Washington Territory in the same year, and was one of the Hudson Bay Company's chief traders, being located at Walla Walla. He was thrown from a horse and killed in 1841. After his father's death young Pambrun went to Fort Vancouver, spending a portion of his time there, and also visiting Oregon and California, until 1862, when he came to Montana, and has since been a resident of this territory. He is a successful farmer and a good business man, and has a family in which he takes great pride.

HENRY M. PARCHEN, Helena, was born in the province of Heiligenstadt, Prussia, on the 13th of June, 1839. When but nine years of age his parents came to New York state and settled in Lancaster, Erie county. Until 1853 the lad worked on farms and in saw mills, getting some schooling meanwhile, then went to Buffalo, N. Y., and clerked in a general merchandise store for two years. He attended the Clarence academy and afterward Bryant & Stratton's commercial college. During the winter of 1856 he went to Lycurgus, Ind., as book-keeper for an oil refining company, and a year later to Cincinnati, receiving a position as clerk of the Madison House, and remaining until the breaking out of the war. He was then engaged in several occupations, but settled at none, and in the spring of 1862 he went with an ox train to Pike's Peak, then to Denver, where he was clerk in the Planters' House. In the fall of 1862 he leased the Massasoit House at Central City, Col., which he kept for a year, then leaving on account of ill health. After a few trips across the plains his health was restored, and going to Virginia in July, 1864, he entered the house of Erfort & Birch as book-keeper. A year afterward, at Helena, in company with two others he opened a drug store, and six months later he bought his partners out. Soon afterward he took Mr. Poynter as a partner, but in 1874 again became sole proprietor, and has since worked up a splendid business. Mr. Parchen is a Mason and is a member of the board of trade, of which he was the first president. He was married in February, 1872, to Miss Emma D'Acheul, of Deer Lodge. They have four children, and wife and children are living with him at Helena.

CHRISTOPHER L. PAYNE, Helena, son of Wm. M. and Eliza (Hamilton) Payne, was born near Danville, Vermilion Co., Ill., July 31, 1834. In 1857 he went to Kansas and purchased land at the sale of Indian Trust Lands; then returned to Danville, and together with his father, Benjamin Crane and John Woods, established the pork packing house of Crane, Payne & Co., remaining in the business the greater portion of two seasons. He returned to Kansas and disposed of a portion of his lands, and in the fall of 1860 started for Colorado with two teams loaded with flour. On the trip the cattle became affected with black tongue, and he was compelled to feed a great portion of his flour to them, and it was only by this means he saved about one-half of them. He arrived in Denver on the 1st day of January, 1861, in a very poor condition to make a start in the country, but as soon as spring opened he went to freighting across the plains between Denver and Omaha, and also between Denver and the mines, and in the spring of 1862 took the Government magazine to Fort Union, New Mexico, in company with the 1st Colorado Volunteers. Taking his pay in what was then known as Galpin Drafts, he realized about 60 cents on the Dollar. He, on the 11th day of June, in company with Mr. Salsbury, then of Fort Leavenworth, had a small boat built, launched it at the foot of F street in Denver, and started for the States. He found it a very good trip to Fort Kearney, then took the stage for the Missouri river. At Omaha he took the boat Shrevesport, Capt. Labarge, for Fort Benton, falling in with W. C. Gilette and James King. After passing Sioux City the wood had to be cut for the boat, which could not run at night. She anchored in midstream to avoid Indian attacks. Was attacked by Indians 10 miles below the mouth of Milk river, but sustained no injury. The river at that point being too shallow for the boat to proceed further, the cargo was stored in old Fort Doniphant, and 10 of the passengers volunteered to go by land to Fort Benton, 260 miles away, the balance of the passengers returning with the boat to St. Louis. The parties who volunteered were W. C. Gilette, James King, George Detwiler, Wm. Morrison, Charles Cory, Wm. Pecott, C. L. Payne and three or four others whose names cannot be recalled. At the mouth of the Porcupine the Indians gave so much trouble that the little party concluded to turn back and fortify at old Fort Doniphant for the winter, but when the Indians saw them turn back they went ahead of the horses, pointed their guns at them, and made them go on their road, much to their satisfaction. They arrived in due time at Fort Benton, then only an Indian trading post. The next morning the Indians surrounded the fort, and no one dare leave it during the day. The following day Colonel Dawson, in command of the trading post, made a treaty with the Indians by giving them hard tack and coffee, and the party started for Prickly Pear valley, arriving at Warren Witcher's and James Gourly's camp, at a place called Montana City, about 8 miles east of Helena, about the 1st of November, 1862. They remained at that place about two months, during which time Mr. Payne, in company with George Detwiler, built a cabin and prospected some, but with little success. "Gold Tom," who Mr. Payne believes is entitled to the credit of making the first discovery of gold in the territory, was stopping with Warren Witcher and James Gourley. About the 20th of December Mr. Payne's party was increased to about 25 or 30 in number. When Bannack was struck most of the party, consisting of C. L.

Payne, W. C. Gilette, James King and a party from Minnesota, consisting of E. M. Dunphy, Mr. Castner and family, Mr. Forbis and family, and many others, went to that place and remained during the winter. In the spring Mr. Payne went by Oliver's express to Salt Lake, and thence to San Francisco to recuperate his health. He then started back to Montana via the Columbia river, but arriving at Umatilla, on the Columbia, he remained at Umatilla the greater portion of 1863 and 1864, during which time he opened a stable and ranch business there, but seeing the town was on the decline, he sold his property and started for the new mines in the Big Bend of the Columbia. Winter overtaking him, he remained on the Palver, thence to Big Bend; and after prospecting all summer, he came down the river on the last trip of the boat "49", Capt. White, commander (Mr. Briggs first mate). He (Payne) wintered on the Spokane, at the ferry known as the Walla Walla and Spokane Crossing. In the spring of 1867 he came to Montana and established the place now known as Payne's hotel in Helena, and has remained in the the business ever since. He was married in 1880 to Mrs. Celia A. Travis, born and reared at Bristol, England. She is the daughter of Mr. E. Trenery.

HIRAM PEERY, Mitchell Gulch, is a native of Virginia, but grew to manhood in Missouri, removing afterward to Kansas, in 1861 to California and in the spring of 1864 to Montana. He engaged in mining at Virginia City, Ophir Gulch, Grizzly Gulch (Helena), Mitchell Gulch, Trinity Gulch, and in 1877-8 in the Black Hills, returning to Mitchell, which has since been his home.

OTTO PETERSON, Helena P. O., was born in Holstein, Germany, and at 16 years old went to sea. This he followed for some years, traveling almost around the world. After leaving the vessel he went to Australia, and was engaged in mining four years. Then hearing of the gold excitement in California, came to the United States and went on the Frazer river stampede, returned to San Francisco in a short time, began prospecting and mining, which he carried on from 1859 to 1863 in California, when he went to Boise City, Idaho, and mined there six months. Joining the Snake river stampede, he mined there for a short time, wintered at Salt Lake, thence proceeded to Alder Gulch, and six months later left for the Canadian Northwest, where he wintered. In the spring he came to Montana, prospected in Jefferson county, then mined at Diamond Bar and vicinity for two years, when he went to Helena and began clerking for Lehman & Bro. He has been salesman for Messrs Lehman & Bro., and also for each individually for twelve years. In 1875 he bought a ranch near Helena; resigned his position with Chas. Lehman in 1881, and engaged in raising horses and farming.

GEORGE H. PIATT, Helena, was born at Columbus, Ohio., July 25, 1845. At eleven years of age he moved with his parents to Shelby Co., Ill. Here he attended the district schools till he was eighteen years old, then went to Chicago and enlisted in the Ninth Illinois Cavalry, doing duty in the army of the Tennessee till the close of the war. He then settled in Chicago, opened a boot and shoe house, and continued in business until 1869, at which time he went to White Pine, Nevada, removing a year afterward to Helena, Mont. For three years he was clerk in the Postoffice at Helena, and in 1873 started in the livery business, at which he still continues. He was married to Sarah Sendell, of Chicago, Ill. They have three children, and are all living at Helena. Mr. Piatt has some gold quartz in Lewis and Clarke county. He is a Freemason and stands high in the lodge.

FRANCIS POPE, Helena, was born March 1, 1843, at London, Canada. He lived at home, and from nine years of age to sixteen attended the London grammar school; then was for three years in a drug store in Simcoe, Canada, and afterward for two years in Toronto at the same business. In 1865 he took passage on the steamer Golden Rule for California via the Isthmus. When in the Caribbean Sea the vessel ran on a coral reef and was wrecked. The passengers lived on the reef for two weeks, when they were taken off by a U. S. frigate and carried to Panama. Mr. Pope worked in a drug store at San Francisco for a year, and then came with Mr. Wier to Helena. He was married in 1868 to Miss Hannah Copp, of Clinton, Canada, and they now have six children, the family living together at Helena. Mr. Pope is a Knight of Pythias, a member of the A. O. U. W., and secretary of the Montana Agricultural, Mineral and Mechanical Association.

JAMES P. PORTER, of Porter & Foote, Helena, was born in Monroe Co., Mo., in November, 1850; attended common school until sixteen years old, when his parents came to Randolph in the same state, and the lad was sent to Mt. Pleasant college, where he remained three years. He was afterward engaged in the insurance business in various parts of the state until 1875, when he came to a farm near Helena, M. T., resided thereon until the fall of that year, and taught school the ensuing winter. In the spring he was appointed collector for the Helena Water Works Company, which position he held until 1877, when he returned to the states and again engaged in the insurance business in Missouri. In July, 1878, he came back to Helena and opened a feed and sale stable, which he conducted for two years, then engaged in his present business. In October, 1872, he married Miss Clara B Gilman, of Huntsville, Mo. Mr. Porter is a member of the Knights of Pythias and of the Helena Light Guards. He owns land in Prickly Pear valley, also a small band of horses, and is one of the owners of the Banner Mine, an extension of the Gregory.

T. C. POWER, Helena, was born at Dubuque, Ia., May 22, 1839, and was reared on a farm five miles from Dubuque. He received his preparatory education in that State, afterward attending the Sinsinawa Mound college in Wisconsin for three years, studying engineering and taking a scientific course, but without graduating. During the winters intervening between 1858 and 1862 he was engaged in teaching, having during the summer of 1860 started with a surveying party at $20 per month and walked across the State of Iowa, spending four months in Dakota with the party. He then returned home, and the following spring prepared and again started for Dakota, on the very day Fort Sumter was fired upon. Arriving in Dakota he engaged in surveying town sites and pre-emption localities, also doing some field work, and for a time worked at the carpenter trade, receiving $1.50 per day and paying $9 per week for board, returning again to his native State in the fall. The following year he took out a surveying party somewhat larger than the one he had formerly accompanied, which he kept increasing and working up the river, enlarging his business again after that season and engaging also in trade, buying and selling land warrants, stocks, etc., also making a pre-emption claim, but found that altogether too slow for his active and enterprising spirit. He continued working up the river, and in 1866 began sending merchandise from Omaha to Montana, having been within the borders of the Territory since 1864. In 1867 he became a permanent resident here, locating at Fort Benton, where he engaged in the merchandise and forwarding trade, handling anything and everything. I. G. Baker and Carroll & Steell offered him all the aid in their power, although doing business in direct opposition to them. In 1868 he put freighting teams on the road, and branching out, engaged in trading with the Indians, and on account of monopolies and the extreme high rates of freight to Benton built during the winter of 1874 the steamer Benton, being joined in the enterprise by I.

G. Baker and other business men of Benton. Loading her at Pittsburg in 1875, for two years she made the most successful trips to and from the states of any boat on the route. In 1876 they built the steamer Helena, which has proved the most successful boat that has ever turned a wheel on the Upper Missouri. In 1878 they built the steamer Butte, which also proved a success, and owned and operated it four years. This boat was burned July 31, 1888. In 1879 Mr. Power bought the steamer Black Hills. He introduced the first reapers and mowers brought to Fort Benton in a mercantile way. He has also a business house in Bozeman, and in 1878 established a stage line from Helena to Benton, which he continued to operate for four years. Mr. Power has also been prominent as a stock-raiser, which business he has continued with unparalleled success. February 13, 1867, he was united in marriage with Miss Mary G. Flanagan, of Dubuque, Ia., and in 1868 brought his wife to the Territory. Mr. and Mrs. Power have one son, Charles Benton Power, now attending school in the East. In the fall of 1888 Mr. Power was elected delegate at large to the constitutional convention of Montana. He became a resident of Helena in 1876.

J. M. Powers, P. O. Canton, Meagher Co., was born at Pittsfield, Somerset Co., Me., January 8, 1842, and remained in that state until 1865, when he came to Montana, reaching Virginia on the 17th day of September. His first winter in the territory was spent in teaming at Diamond City. In the spring of 1866 he commenced freighting between Diamond City, Fort Benton, Helena and Virginia City, after which, in company with his brother, he bought and worked a mining claim in Grizzly Gulch during the winter of 1866–7, but during the summer following resumed freighting, which he continued until the fall of 1869. At that time he went to Walla Walla, and purchasing a band of horses there has since devoted his attention to farming, raising cattle and horses and dealing in them in the vicinity of Townsend, in company with his brother. In May, 1882, he, in company with Gans & Klein, bought the Helena and Benton stage line, having secured the mail contract between those points; commenced running stages in July of that year, and is now devoting his attention principally to that business.

Frank Powers, who is interested with J. M. Powers, in his various pursuits, was born in Pittsfield, Somerset Co., Me., in February, 1844; came to the territory in 1864, and during the winter of 1864–5 engaged in the manufacture of lumber with a whip saw in the Silver Bow district. During the summer of 1865 he followed mining in that vicinity, and in the fall of 1865 went to Diamond, and in company with his brother bought a mining claim. Soon after going to Lincoln Gulch he followed mining until 1871, when he joined his brother in horse and stock growing and ranching, in which business he has continued to the present time.

Patrick Powers, Pear Creek Valley, was born in Waterford County, Ireland, April 19, 1839; emigrated to America when but 15 years old, and shortly after located in the copper mines of Lake Superior. In 1860 he crossed the plains to California, spent five years in the mines on the Pacific coast, and in 1866 came to the famous mines of Montana. After remaining a short time in Virginia City, he came to Helena, in which place and vicinity he has made his home since. No man has been more closely identified with mining interests and developments, aside from extensive operations in mines of his own or those that he was interested in. He has had charge of many enterprises and has a reputation second to none as a skillful and competent mine manager. In 1871 Mr. Powers was elected sheriff of Lewis and Clarke county, serving two years with the same ability that characterized his mining operations. During the past few years he has turned his attention to ranching as a more congenial pursuit. His ranch of 320 acres of fine land is located in the famous Prickly Pear Valley. The systematic method employed in his development of mines shows in his management of his ranch. Mr. Powers was married November 7, 1873, and has four children, three girls and one boy.

W. G. Preuitt, Helena, was born in Madison county, Ill., March 31, 1843. He had but a common-school education, and at the age of twenty established a small business at Dorsey, Ill., dealing in hay and grain. In 1865 he came to Montana. His first work in the Territory was driving oxen on a ranch, but he soon went to Helena, and was employed as clerk in a wholesale liquor house for three years. He then bought an interest, and continued in the firm till 1872, when he went to work with Monsfield & Stickney, with whom he remained until 1879. Then, in company with his father-in-law, he bought them out. He married, in 1870, Miss Millie Hundley, of Taylorville, Ill., and they have had four children, who are all living in Helena at his residence on Rodney street. Beside the Helena property, the firm owns 2,000 head of cattle and a large number of thoroughbred horses; they are also interested in some quartz property. Mr. Preuitt is a member of the Associated Order of United Workmen, and is a man of liberality and energy.

Frank Preuss, Helena, son of Gottlieb and Gertrude (Selger) Preuss, was born in French Pallodine, Germany, June 23, 1825. Having spent five years in London, Eng., where he learned his trade, he came to the United States in 1847, and remained in New York city until 1861, when he went to San Francisco. He was engaged there by the largest house as cutter, and subsequently as traveling salesman and solicitor. In 1863 he went to Virginia City, Nev., where he was engaged as foreman in a clothing house until the panic of 1864, when he visited Omaha, St. Louis, Memphis and Vicksburg. In this year he was prostrated by yellow fever; on recovering he returned to California, and in 1866 opened a tailor's shop at Carson City, Nev., where he sold out in 1871, and removed to Austin, Nev. There he again opened a shop, and being a man of undoubted ability and tact in his line, was soon doing a prosperous business; but owing to losses by fire he moved in the spring of 1883 to Helena, leaving a fine property, for which there was no sale owing to the falling-off of all business and hard times at Austin. He is now established in Helena, M. T., and doing a fair amount of business.

Martin Prosser, Pear Creek Valley, was born at Dresden, N. Y., December 5, 1856. His parents were David and Margaret Prosser, the former a farmer of that district. Mr. Prosser left New York in November, 1879, and came to Michigan, where he remained about three months, thence to Chicago, remaining in that city about six weeks. He came to Helena May 13 1880. Immediately after arriving at Helena he settled in Pear Creek Valley, and has since been engaged in farming and gardening. Mr. Prosser was married November 13, 1882, to Miss Mary Birmingham, of Wisconsin.

John C. Rainsford, Pear Creek Valley, was born at Dublin, Ireland, May 26, 1837. Leaving Ireland in 1844, he came to New York, then went to South Amboy, N. J., where he resided for four years. In 1849 he went to New Orleans, La., remaining there until the spring of 1852, when he started for California, arriving there April 2. In 1858, immediately after the Rogue River war in Oregon, he went to that section and engaged in mining for three years, when he traveled overland to Idaho. Two years afterward he came to Montana and mined in Bear Gulch for three years, and next engaged as clerk and bookkeeper for Davis & Wallace, of Helena, until October, 1882. In the fall of 1880 he purchased a ranch of about 200 acres, on which he has since continued to reside, and is engaged in farming and stock growing. Mr. R. was married to Miss Mary E. Welch, January 18, 1879. Their children are Joseph and William Rainsford.

W. B. RALEIGH, of the firm of Raleigh & Clarke, at Helena, was born in Tennessee, October 27, 1846. In 1866 he went to St. Joseph, Mo., and was there engaged in the wholesale dry goods trade for a period of ten years. In 1878 he came to Montana, locating at Helena, and establishing the present firm of Raleigh & Clarke, since which time they have carried on the business here, being also interested in the leading dry goods house of Bozeman, under the firm name of Raleigh, Lamme & Co., and in the boot, shoe and clothing house of D. D. Smith & Co., at Helena. Mr. Raleigh was married in 1871, to Miss Medora Clarke. Their children are three in number, Susie, Albert and Maggie.

HARMON RANNEY, Mitchell Gulch, was born in Stockbridge, Oneida Co., N. Y., in 1824, and was reared a farmer. About 1848 he removed to Green Co., Wis., and engaged in farming, stock-raising and lumbering. In 1866 he joined Capt. Zigler and Peter Murray in crossing the plains to Montana, arriving at Virginia City July 27. He was engaged as a miner and ranchman in different localities, for several years, and finally took up a ranch of 320 acres in Mitchell Gulch, under the desert act. Mr. Ranney was married July 3, 1850, to Lucy Ann Smith, of Brooklyn, Wis., and they have had seven children: Louisa Jane, Sarah Janette, Flora Ann, Mary Evelyn (now deceased), Charles Franklin, George Frederick and Ida Rosette. Mr. Ranney has long held the office of school trustee, and is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

JAMES L. RAY, P. O. Helena, was born in Bardstown, Ky., in 1822. After he was eighteen years of age he spent three years learning the gunsmith's trade He opened a shop at Bardstown, and carried on business two years, then removed to Savannah, Mo., in 1840, and engaged in the same business there for two years. He was next located three years at Marysville, and at the end of that time changed his business to merchandising, continuing until 1849. In that year he joined in the California stampede, and was engaged in mining among its principal camps for fifteen years, sometimes washing out as much as $50 or $75 to the pan. He and his brother took up a ranch on Indian Creek, and on one occasion an Indian climbed upon the roof and came down the chimney. This made it plain where a number of articles had gone to, and he entertained the savage so well that he went up the chimney much faster than he had come down. Mr. Ray was in an expedition at one time against the noted California desperadoes, Joaquin and Three Fingered Jack, who were finally captured after a hard fight and one escape. December 23, 1868, Mr. Ray married Susan Smith, of Helena. They have had ten children, of whom seven are now living: Russell T., Edward M., William G., James L., Robert S. and Thomas A. and Susan, twins. Mr. Ray was a Justice of the Peace in Missouri, and postmaster at San Andreas, Cal. He is a member of the I. O. O. F.

THOMAS RAY, of Davenport, Ray & Co., P.O. Helena, was born in Kentucky March 27, 1829. When 16 years of age his parents moved to Missouri, and when 21 years of age he went to California, where he remained four years. He then returned to Missouri and in 1854 was married to Miss Sophia Byers, a native of Illinois. Mr. Ray remained in Missouri until 1863, when he started to Montana with an ox team, arriving in Virginia City in August, 1864. He bought cattle that winter and in 1865 went to Helena, where he engaged in mining and stock raising, and has since continued in that business, being a member of the firm of Davenport, Ray & Co., in the cattle and sheep business, and still holding important mining claims. Mr. Ray is regarded as a man of business ability and energy. He has a family of nine children.

CHARLES REAHM, Helena, born in Germany March 23, 1834, lost his parents when four years of age; came to Philadelphia, Pa., when 11 years of age and learned the trade of cigar maker, at which he worked until 1855, when he went to San Francisco, Cal., where he worked as baker until 1856, when he went to Yreka and followed the baker's trade until 1860. In this year he went to Scotch Bar, on Scott River, and opened a gambling house and saloon. In 1863 he went to Austin, Nev., and started the Central Restaurant, in which enterprise he lost his money within eighteen months. He then came to Montana with two silver half dollars in his pocket, which he soon after gave to an Indian for a pair of moccasins. Arriving at Virginia City, he remained until 1865, when he went to Helena, then to Diamond City and Bismarck, and returned to Helena in 1877, where he has since remained, devoting his attention to the saloon business.

G. W. REED, Helena, contractor, was born May 29, 1832, in Middlesex Co., N. J. He attended school until 16 years of age, then served an apprenticeship as stone mason, plasterer and brick mason with Mr. Charles Reeder. He went to San Francisco in March, 1852, and for nine years was engaged at his trade and in the mines in various portions of the West. In 1861 he established a soap and candle factory at Carson City, Nevada, the first in the place. In 1864 he left for the East with 500 head of horses, but the Indians captured them all. In 1869, after a varied experience, he came to Helena, and at once began contracting for residences and business houses. He married Miss Agnes E. Cutcliff, at Salt Lake, December 23, 1864. They have five children: Agnes, James, Maurice, Elizabeth, Arthur. Mr. Reed was until 1880 engaged in the cattle business. Among the buildings in Helena erected by him are the Presbyterian Church, Gans & Klein, Sands & Brother, Herrick's Block and Dr. Frary's building, these being the most prominent.

MRS. H. REED (nee Miss Minnie Gallagher), Helena, daughter of Thomas and Mary Ann Gallagher, of Woodstock, Ill., was born May 10, 1859, came with her parents to Montana in August, 1866, when they settled on their ranch in Madison county. Mrs. Reed was educated at St. Vincent's academy, Helena. In September, 1880, the lady purchased a store building at Bedford, Jefferson county, and established a good trade, which she conducted until her marriage with Mr. H. Reed and subsequent removal to Helena.

WILLIAM R. REED, proprietor Grand Central Hotel, Helena, was born December 29, 1829, in Oswego Co., N. Y., to Jonathan and Polly Reed, natives, the former of Vermont, and the latter of New York. His father during life devoted his time to rural pursuits. Our subject, with his wife, crossed the plains from Illinois to Montana in 1865. They first visited Virginia City, proceeding thence to French Gulch, Deer Lodge, Blackfoot, and finally settled in the Pear Creek Valley, where they began the struggle of life in this new country, with willing hearts and strong hands. Mrs. Reed was among the first white women in that valley. They must have felt disheartened to have to begin life anew, with flour at $27 per sack and butter $2 per pound, with other necessary articles in proportion; but energy, perseverance and will power are hard to subdue, and in 1866 they purchased their first farm of Buffalo Bill, to which they gradually added until they now own 800 acres of arable land. Mrs. Reed is a native of Yorkshire, England, and daughter of John Lung. Mr. Reed comes from a long lived family, his father having lived to be 100 years old, and his mother 90 years. Their children are George, born January 9, 1866; Mary E., born September 6, 1869, and Charles H., born October 10, 1873. He bought and for many years operated the first traction steam engine and threshing machine in Pear Creek Valley.

BIDDLE REEVES, Helena, was born in Salem Co., N. J., February 5, 1831, and is the youngest son of Joshua and Mary Groff Reeves, who reared a family of two sons and two daughters. In his youth he followed farming, and in 1864 crossed the plains to Salt Lake, coming in August of the same year to Montana, and engaged in mining in Holmes' Gulch. In a few months he removed to Indian creek and engaged in the butchering business and in mining until August, 1867, when he settled opposite where he now resides, on Prickly Pear creek, on a farm located by Mr. Merrill, who was the first recorder of Lewis and Clarke county. This is said to be the first ranch recorded in 1864. Mr. Reeves now owns 1,000 acres patented to him and 360 to which he is entitled. It is one of the best farms in all the valley, the soil being sufficiently impregnated with lime to make it suitable for growing excellent wheat. The water supply is inexhaustible, being received from the Prickly Pear and McClellan creeks. The grain raised on this farm has received favorable mention at the world's exhibition in London. There is nearly two miles of good mining land, seven and a half miles of fence and a fine mill site. The improvements cost about $40,000. It is eight miles from Helena, the seat of government for the Territory. Mr. Reeves is a Quaker by birth, and a republican in politics.

EDWARD REHBERG, Silver City, was born in Prussia, May 1, 1835; served four years in the army of his native country and the intervening time, until he reached the age of 30 years; was overseer of a large farm in Prussia. In 1865 he came to the United States and first settled at Jacksonville, Ill., where he was engaged in farming until 1872, when he came to Montana and took up a ranch of 160 acres on Little Pear creek valley, near where it enters the first Canyon. Mr. Rehberg was married in Germany in 1866 to Miss Amelia Greiser, to whom were born seven children. Mrs. R. is deceased.

KARL REIN, Helena, was born at Tirol, Austria, December 31, 1843. He learned the brewers' and coopers' trade in Austria; came to the United States when 21 years of age, and first worked for Kleiner & Brothers at Cincinnati for eight months. He then enlisted December 22, 1863, in the 81st Ohio cavalry, and was discharged May 26, 1865. Resumed work for Kleiner & Brothers, and after quitting them went to St. Louis, where he worked in a brewery till 1868. At that time he went to Colorado and Idaho, and into the Black Hills in 1871, where he remained mining until 1876. Mr. Rein had a brother killed by the Indians near Julesburg, and was himself wounded in the side by an arrow, and in the leg by a ball; he at that time being with Sam Nelson's train consisting of some 350 wagons, and at the time of attack about 300 men were killed within a distance of three miles. He has been engaged in mining in various parts of the territory, and has had several adventures with the Indians.

EDWARD REINICKE, ranchman, stage station, Sun River, was born August 20, 1844, at Summerfield, Prussia. After leaving school in 1858, he learned the trade of weaver, at which he worked until 26 years old. In 1871 he came to the United States and located at Rockville, Conn. There he worked in woolen and cotton mills for five years, when he came west to Helena, where he worked for Nick Kessler in brickyard, but after a short time left for Sun river and located his horse and cattle ranch. In 1877 he bought stage station, known as the "Leavings," where he is located at the present time. He was married to Miss Ida Wilkopf, of Germany, in 1869. One child, Ida.

MICHAEL REINIG, Helena, was born in Bavaria March 31, 1835; came to the United States in 1853, and clerked in a store at Lawrenceburg, Ind., until 1858, when he went to California and there engaged in mining. After a short time went to Oregon and opened a fruit and tobacco stand in The Dalles, Wasco Co. In 1866 he sold out his business and, came to Helena; started a bakery and boarding house, and is now an important dealer in hardware, groceries, liquors, etc. Mr. Reinig was married in 1869 to Miss Matilda Anderson. They are the parents of three children; one boy and one girl are living, while one is deceased.

O. C. RINKER, Pear Creek Valley, son of Jonathan and Elizabeth Rinker, was born in Indiana, October 10, 1834, where his father was a farmer and an old resident. In 1856 Mr. Rinker entered business for himself. In the fall of 1876 he left Iowa and came to Pear Creek Valley, where he has since been engaged in dairying. He has a farm of 240 acres in good condition, with plenty of water and about 200 head of stock. His marriage with Miss Plarina Weir took place in 1857.

JNO. ROBERTS, foreman of Maskelyne Mine, Marysville, was born in Devonshire, England, July 13, 1839, and was employed in copper mines in his native country for several years before coming to the United States. He was married at Devonshire when about 18 years of age, came to the United States in 1859 and has since been engaged in mining in various places in the West as foreman or superintendent in the following mines, viz: Princeton, Pine Tree, Emma, Ouida, Mt. Jefferson, Bandrota and P. P. Mast & Co's mine above Codyville, Truala & Co's mine, also at Mariposa, Cal., and Virginia City, and Maskelyne Mine and Tunnel.

J. S. ROBERTS, Helena, was born in Missouri December 15, 1856, and came to Montana with his parents while still a child. When only 14 years of age he had his first encounter with the Indians. He with his aunt, accompanied by three men, started for Carroll, 240 miles down the Missouri, and after reaching Judith Gap were followed by the Indians for four days; but by being always on their guard they were not attacked. In coming back three months later, Mr. Roberts' horse was stolen and he was obliged to walk 240 miles and drive thirteen cows. He mingled with the Indians more or less until 1877, but was never harmed. For a number of years he has served in the clerk's and recorder's office, and has also officiated as deputy county treasurer. In 1882 he was appointed deputy sheriff of Lewis and Clarke county. In company with W. Steele he captured the three road agents who robbed the Deer Lodge coach in August, 1883.

W. K. ROBERTS, Helena, is a native of Louisville, Ky., and was born November 13, 1830, being a son of Joseph T. and Mary Ann Roberts. In 1850 he went to Savannah, Mo., and there engaged in mercantile business one year. Then, entering the office of his uncle as clerk of the courts, he continued to write for him about five years, and in 1856 was elected sheriff of Andrew Co., Mo., being re-elected prior to the expiration of his term of office. He afterward engaged in the real estate and collection business in company with a young attorney named Geo. L. Hays, and so continued until 1863. Coming then to Montana he engaged in mining in Alder Gulch, and on December 14, 1863, in company with several other parties, left Virginia City for Denver with a wagon train and on the trip were attacked by road agents. During the encounter one of the robbers was wounded, which caused them to retire. Two of the band were afterward captured by the vigilantes and hanged, one of them being found in the mountains. The officers camped with him over night and in the morning made themselves known and arrested him. He denied his identity and objected to their treatment, strongly protesting against being carried off in that summary manner. July 23, 1864, Mr. Roberts again arrived in Virginia City, accompanied by his family. He engaged in mining until 1865, when he went to Helena, and during that fall was elected the first sheriff of Lewis and Clarke county, being re-elected the following term and serving in that capacity four years. He was then interested in the auction business with Mr. Geo. Booker for three years, after which he was engaged in the livery and feed stable business for five years. He was then elected county treasurer, since which time he has been twice re-elected. Mr. Roberts was married on November 16, 1854, to Miss Mary J. Rohrer, of Owen Co., Ky. Their children are four in number viz: Joseph S., Benjamin R., Ann M. and Sallie B.

JOHN ROHNER, Ft. Shaw, was born in Switzerland, November 1, 1835. His earlier days were spent on a farm in the old country. He came to the United States in 1867, and settled at Lockville, Pa., where he kept a store for eleven years. Leaving there he came to Montana, and located at Sun River Crossing, where he started in the brewing business, and so continued about twenty months, after which he established his present ranch on Sun River. Mr. Rohner was married in Switzerland to Miss Maria Stucki, October 26, 1861. He has a fine ranch, nicely arranged, beautifully located, and well stocked.

JOHN J. ROHRBAUGH, Helena, son of Daniel and Catharine (Emig) Rohrbaugh, was born near the town of York, in eastern Pennsylvania, April 6, 1841. In 1862 he joined the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, under Colonel Spear. In 1863 he was assigned to duty in the Adjutant General's office, where he remained until September, 1865, when he was discharged, and returned to his home on a visit. Subsequently he enlisted in the Second United States Cavalry, with which he served five years, and was honorably discharged. He then came to Jefferson Co., M. T., where he filled the important position of county superintendent of schools for a period of four years. Mr. Rohrbaugh was married in Walla Walla, Oregon, in 1874, and again married in March, 1883, at Hanover, Penn., to Miss Jennie Alleman. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M., K. P., and United Workmen. In 1885 he withdrew from the stage and express business and went into the employ of Reed & Rinda, proprietors of the Grand Central Hotel, at Helena.

L. I. ROSENCRANS, Pear Creek Valley, son of John and Mary (Johnson) Rosencrans, was born in Wisconsin April 21, 1847, where his father was a merchant. Went to Iowa in the spring of 1864, where he resided three years. He then came to Helena, and has been in that vicinity up to the present time. He held the position of clerk, and was also in the stationery and notion business for six years. Was married December 16, 1880, to Miss Ida F. Wilson. They are the parents of two children.

JAS. ROSS, Dearborn, was born in the village of Eaton, Province of Quebec, February 28, 1846, and there he spent the intervening time until 1861, attending school and clerking in a general store. Since leaving home he has been engaged in mining in British Columbia and the various mining districts in the territories—since 1864 spending the principal part of his time in Montana, being interested in mines in Silver Bow and Lewis and Clarke counties.

C. T. ROWLES & BROS., Sun River. The firm of C. T. Rowles & Bros. consists of C. T. Rowles, P. H. Rowles and H. F. Rowles. These brothers rank among the oldest and most prominent settlers of Sun River, and are now extensively engaged there in the livery, feed and sale business. They are also breeders of fine stock, owning 200 head of thoroughbred horses. An engraving in this work represents their business quarters in the thriving town of Sun River. Besides this they own three other large ranches, well located in Sun River Valley. Through industry, sobriety and sound business management, these brothers have attained the honorable position they now hold.

COLONEL WILBUR F. SANDERS, of the law firm of Sanders & Cullen, Helena, is one of the pioneers of eastern Idaho, and one whose name has been connected with citizen and civil law from 1863 to the present time. He was born in Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., in the town of Leon, May 2, 1834; received his education in that State and then taught school for a year or two. In 1854, before reaching his majority, he went to Akron, Ohio, where he engaged in teaching school, and where he also began the study of law with his uncle, ex-Governor Sidney Edgerton. He was admitted to the bar in 1856, and soon after he associated with Governor Edgerton in the practice of law. Two years later, October 27, 1858, he was united in marriage with Miss Harriet P. Fenn, of Talmadge, Ohio. Upon the breaking out of the Rebellion he entered the service of the Union, recruited a battery of artillery, of which he was commissioned Lieutenant. He also raised a company of infantry, to which branch he was transferred, and commissioned Adjutant of the Sixty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, under command of Jas. W. Forsythe, subsequently, when the latter commanded a brigade, Colonel Sanders acted as Assistant Adjutant-General. This brigade was afterward commanded by General Garfield. Colonel Sanders participated in the battle of Shiloh and was slightly wounded. He also participated in other engagements, and in the affairs attendant on the march down the Memphis & Charleston railroad to Huntsville in General Thos. J. Wood's division. In the summer of 1863 he resigned his commission, owing to ill health, and returned to Ohio. His former partner having been appointed Chief Justice of Idaho, Colonel Sanders was persuaded to start for that Territory, and moved with Judge Edgerton to Omaha, and thence by ox teams via South Pass and Snake River. Of the four teams at their disposal, the Colonel had two and his uncle two. There were about fifteen persons in the party with families. The Indians were exceedingly hostile, and their outrages were manifested to the party by many new-made graves. One of their teams was captured, but the party being well armed, recaptured their property, Colonel Sanders seizing the Indian driver, took the whip from the savage without ceremony. After reaching the north bank of Snake River, east of Fort Hall, and before crossing that river, they were advised by a party of strangers whom they met, to locate in that part of Idaho which is now Montana. Some of the party desiring to go forward to their original destination in western Idaho, the matter was decided by standing up a stick, and whichever way it fell was to determine the direction the party would take. Colonel Sanders was chosen for this delicate task, but as he was in favor of going to western Idaho, he was cautioned not to let the stick fall in that direction. He said he would do his duty fairly and impartially, and as an evidence of this, the stick fell toward Montana, and without a word they came here, no one ever questioning the stick's decision in the matter. The party reached Bannack in September, 1863. It was a thrifty camp, even then, though the famous Alder Gulch had been discovered about four months previously. He engaged in the practice of law there, as stated in the general history, took part in all those stirring scenes which marked the period of the mining days of Bannack and Alder Gulch. When the territory of Idaho was formed in March, 1863, it included the major parts of the territories now known as Idaho, Montana and Wyoming; but in the whole tract there were no law statutes, and as far as known no officer to try a lawsuit or acknowledge a deed. The settlers were a law unto themselves; they elected miners to the positions of judges, sheriffs and recorders in regular form without the sanction of law. The tribunals thus formed gave judgment in all controversies, which judgment could be appealed to a congregation of miners, the succeeding Sunday, whose decision was final. This miner's court was legal in fact. In October, 1863, a meeting was held in Bannack to consider the question of establishing a new territory out of eastern part of Idaho. A committee was appointed, consisting of Colonel W. F. Sanders, L. C. Miller, now of Deadwood and A. J. Smith, now dead; to proceed to Alder Gulch and secure the co-operation of the citizens of that camp. Colonel Sanders left the subject before Sam T. Hauser, and both went through the camp to select a delegate who would visit Washington and present the wishes of the people to government. Judge Edgerton, whose congressional term had just expired, was selected, although Henry Plummer and H. P. A. Smith, both notorious, brought forward the name of Major Graham, claiming that Edgerton would be guided solely by political interests. The latter visited Washington in 1864, secured the passage of the organic bill, and the act was approved May, 26, 1864. Apropos of this period in Montana's history, it was learned from letters, found on Plummer after he was hanged that he, Smith and others were interested in a scheme to have Graham espouse their cause at Washington, and thus secure for the heavy villian the United States marshalship and for the light villian the chief justiceship. After Colonel Sanders had completed his mission to Alder Gulch in October, 1863, he returned to Bannack for his family, and during that winter removed to Virginia City, where he attended to legal duties and operated a lumber mill. In December, 1863, he was identified with the Vigilantes, and on December 19, 1863, the people began the trial of George Ives at Nevada City, two miles below Virginia City in Alder Gulch, which led to the execution of that murderer December 21, 1863. During this trial 1,300 men stood upon the streets for three days; of this number 1,000 were armed, and even then many did not know whom to trust. Excitement ran very high, for the party of order was as determined to carry their standard to victory as that of murder and rapine was to fustrate justice. Colonel Sanders led the prosecution, was challenged to fight a duel before he had been ten minutes engaged in the case, and during the trial he heard the clicks of 500 revolvers aimed at him by desperate men, who held human life as cheap as the tiger does his prey. His friends stood by him resolutely, and his and their intrepidity carried the cause of justice forward and launched Ives into eternity. After the execution of Ives six members of the great court of miners adjourned to a hardware store, considered the necessities of the times, and organized a vigilance committee, the oath being administered by Colonel Sanders. He was then deputed by the new society to proceed at once to Bannack and organize the good citizens of that camp under the rules of the Vigilantes as a subordinate lodge. While there he received orders for the Bannack lodge to arrest, try and hang Sheriff Plummer whose connivance with, and actual direction of the band of road agents and murderers were even then notoriously public. Colonel Sanders was selected as leader of this enterprise; a motion was made to hang two deputy sheriffs of Plummer with him, and as a result Plummer was tried and executed. Next day a Mexican desperado was similarly treated, and on the following day a German confederate followed him to the gallows. Then Colonel Sanders returned to Virginia City, and a day or two later five friends of Plummer were hanged in one guilty batch. This form of conduct practically broke down the gang of agents; but the work of citizen justice was carried on for some time longer until the desperadoes of the mountains disappeared or merged into good citizens. After the death or banishment of the leading road agents Colonel Sanders resumed the practice of law at Virginia City and continued to practice there until 1868. A Mr. Smith and a Mr. Thurmond (killed at Dallas, Texas, in the winter of 1882–3), alleged lawyers, became notorious during the trial of the road agents, and were banished in 1863–4; so that to Colonel Sanders must be accredited the honor of being the pioneer lawyer of the once great mining town of Virginia City. During the winter of 1865–66 he visited Washington to represent the claims of the miners, who were taxed or licensed. In October, 1868, he removed to Helena; in 1872 was elected a member of the legislature and also in 1874, 1876 and 1878, and nominated for congressional delegate in 1864, 1867 and 1880. In 1869 he was elected a commissioner to take such action as was necessary toward holding a constitutional convention to frame a state constitution. Five years prior to this (1864) he was one of a committee of three appointed to codify the laws of the first legislature of Montana; was delegate to the territorial republican conventions of 1868, 1872, 1876 and 1884; was appointed United States district attorney by General Grant in 1872; but declined the office owing to the fact that his own practice occupied all his business hours. On May 2, 1884, he was elected one of the delegates to the republican national convention held at Chicago, Ill. Arriving in the territory in September, 1863 he has been so actively identified with its political, social and even commercial life, that his name finds frequent mention in the chapters of the general history and in the history of the counties. (Vide political ch. history of Vigilantes, Courts and Bar, etc.)

JOHN B. SANFORD, Helena, was a farmer boy until 16 years old, attending school during the winters, in his native town of Somerset, Me., where he was born in July, 1835. At 16 he went to a high school, where he remained until 1855, when he removed to Wisconsin, and worked as a farm laborer until 1864, most of the time at La Crosse. In the latter year he came with an ox team of his own, to Virginia City, Mont., via Omaha and Landers' Cut-off. The train with which he came was attacked by Indians several times on the trip, and had one man killed and several horses stolen. He left Virginia City and went with the stampeders to Last Chance, and soon after located the Hot Springs, on Ten Mile Creek. During the winter of 1864–65, he, in company with others, surveyed the big ditch from Ten Mile to Last Chance, and in the spring, went to work on it. Their money gave out before it was completed, and they sold out at great loss. In the summer of 1865 Mr. Sanford built a small ditch at Nelson Creek. This brought him some money, which he afterward sank in mining schemes. Then, borrowing more, he put up a shingle mill, on Ten Mile, and soon afterward a sawmill, which he successfully operated until 1871. In the spring of 1868 he started in operation the first flouring mill in this section of the country, and the third in the Territory, which he yet owns, having also at the present time three saw-mills in operation, which supply his three lumber yards in Helena. Mr. Sanford is the owner of several quartz lodes in the Territory, and has real estate in Helena, as well as a small herd of stock in Meagher county. In 1876 he was married to Miss Eva A. Nash, of Helena, and has one child. He was elected to the first city council, and was a director of the fair association, in 1881–82. He is also a director of the First National Bank of Helena, and has one of the finest residences in town.

J. R. SANFORD, Helena, was born at Philadelphia, Penn., in January, 1835, and attended public school from 6 to 11 years of age. He was then for two years with a brother in Kentucky, and coming home, attended school again till 1852. He then went West, and worked at the business of paper hanging, from New Orleans to Minnesota, until 1859. The Frazer River gold excitement lured him to that region, via the Red River and Manitoba. He succeeded quite well in mining, for a year, then, locating at Victoria, started a paper hanging establishment, which prospered. In 1862 he bought and loaded a pack train and went to the Caribou mines, where he traded and mined till 1863; then sold out and prospected through the Boise and Kootenai countries, till 1864; came to Last Chance and mined two years; and then opened a paper hanging and upholstering establishment. In 1867 he opened a furniture store; being burned out, in 1869, he rebuilt in the same place. In 1874 he was again burned out, rebuilding on Broadway. In two months he was a third time burned out, but kept his courage up, and now is in good circumstances, and has a fine business. In 1871 he was married to Miss Harriet Weston, of Helena, and has two children. Mr. Sanford belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and is also an Odd Fellow.

M. SANDS, of the firm of Sands Brothers, Helena, and resident member and manager of the business, is a native of Poland; came to this country in his youth and for a time resided in N. Y. city, where he became interested in business with his brothers. Their present business at Helena was first established in Bannack in the year 1866 and there continued until 1837, at which time they moved to Helena, being now the oldest exclusive dry goods house now doing business in the territory. They carry an immense stock of dry goods, carpets, ladies' suits, and everything, in fact, pertaining to their department. Having a member of the firm resident in New York city, they are enabled at all times to place before their patrons the newest goods in the best market. The firm is also largely interested in live stock throughout the territory. A. Sands, of the above firm, resides at Denver, Col., and is president of the Denver Brewing Co.'s Association. J. Sands is the purchasing partner, and a resident of New York city.

JOHN M. SCHMIDT, P. O. Fort Shaw, was born in Baden, Germany, December 30, 1826. While in Germany he worked in woolen and velvet factories for eight years, and also served in the German army. He came to the United States in 1853 and was engaged in repairing looms in the woolen factories at Rochville, Conn. until 1863, when he enlisted in the 15th Connecticut Infantry and served 22 months, being discharged for disability caused by a wound received at the battle of Kingston, N. C. After leaving the army he resumed work in the factories, but was obliged to quit, as his being wounded in the wrist disabled him to such a degree as to render working in the factory almost impossible. He then came to Montana and worked on a stock farm for wages eighteen months, after which he bought his present ranch on the Sun River consisting of 320 acres of well improved land, which he now has well stocked. Mr. Schmidt was married at Rockville, Conn., in July, 1852, to Miss Elizabeth Heiser.

SAMUEL SCHWAB, Helena, a native of Bavaria, was born August 28, 1836. At 16 years of age he came to the United States, and for a time lived in New York city. From there he went to New Orleans and some time later to Mississippi, thence returning to Rochester, N. Y., from which point he went to Wisconsin, and engaging in business at Watertown remained several years. He removed thence successively to Kansas and Missouri and engaged in mercantile business, and was also engaged during one season in freighting from Kansas to Colorado. He was on the coach to Bannack which Plummer and his gang had intended to attack. He spent a couple of years in Colorado and in 1863 went to Montana, being a passenger on the first stage from Salt Lake City to Bannack. He first located in Virginia City and was one of the first merchants in that camp. In 1864 he sold out with the intention of returning to Europe, but was taken sick on the road and passed the winter in Denver. Starting in the spring of 1865 with a wagon train loaded with merchandise for Virginia City, he again engaged in business at that place and remaining until 1866, when he went to Helena and soon after opened stores at Beartown and Elk Creek, which he closed out in the fall and going to Helena engaged in the dry goods and clothing business from 1867 to 1869. In the latter year he engaged with Mr. Zimmerman in the restaurant business, and the following year bought the Cosmopolitan Hotel, which was burned January 9, 1874. They rebuilt immediately and continued to run it successfully until August, 1883, when they rented the business to other parties. Mr. Schwab is also interested in farming and dairying in the Prickly Pear valley, also having valuable mining interests in the vicinity of the Gloster mine, which is now being worked.

T. M. SHAW, ranchman, Helena, a son of Chas. and Susan (Watson) Shaw, was born February 7, 1836, at the town of Exeter in the State of Maine. Mr. Shaw's earlier days were spent in attendance at school and afterwards as a farmer. He was married at Steadson, Me., in 1860 to Miss Louatha Cobin, who died in 1864. Mr. Shaw emigrated to Montana in 1866 and located in Pear Creek valley. He followed mining until 1869, at which time he took up a ranch, now occupied by him, and is engaged in the pursuit of farming and stock-raising. Mr. Shaw was married November 2, 1873, to his present wife.

HERBERT SHERMAN, P. O. Florence, was born at Dundee, Ill., on April 15, 1856, and came to the Territory when ten years of age. When crossing the plains the Indians were very troublesome. Following in the footsteps, you might say, of the general frontiersman of the past, he has visited the numerous mines throughout the mining districts of the Territory and engaged in the various pursuits of the people. In 1882 he settled on his present ranch on Willow creek—a fork of the Sun river.

J. H. SHOBER, attorney-at-law, Helena, is a native of Virginia, where he was born on January 5, 1832. While in his infancy his parents removed to Ohio, and when he had attained the age of five years they moved to Illinois, where they remained eight years and then moved to Iowa where Mr. Shober received his primary education in the schools of Jacksonville. Afterward he attended a law school at Cincinnati, Ohio, and was admitted to the bar in 1853. In 1854 he went to Minnesota and was elected county clerk and clerk of courts. In 1858 he removed to the district of Dakota, that being before the Territory was organized, and engaged in the practice of law. In 1861 he was elected to the Territorial legislature and officiated as President of the Territorial Council during the first session which was convened in March, 1862. Upon the outbreak of the Sioux Indians in the fall of 1862 he served ninety days in the volunteers, and took part in several skirmishes and engagements, one of which occurred at Sioux Falls. He also served in the second session of the legislature and was chairman of the judiciary committee. In the spring of 1864 he started from Minnesota for the Territory of Montana, and meeting General Sully at Sioux City, joined his expedition as far as the Yellowstone. At Fort Union Mr. Shober and companions parted with Sully's command and proceeded via Benton to Helena, reaching the latter place on September 18, 1864, and upon arrival found only six persons in the camp. He at once engaged in the practice of law and mining in Nelson and Holmes' gulches. In the fall of 1865 he was elected district attorney and re-elected in 1867. He has since continued the practice of his profession at Helena. In January, 1870, he visited Washington and was admitted to practice before the superior courts. In 1885 he formed a partnership in the profession with Thos. J. Lowry, which they have continued to the present time.

In 1866 Mr. Shober was a prominent member of the Constitutional Convention of the Territory. In November, 1865, he assisted in the organization of the Helena Lodge which was the first to organize in the vicinity. He is now engaged also in mining, being a member of the Elk Horn Mining Co. Mr. Shober has been an early settler in several of the states and territories and has had a varied experience in frontier life.

MAX SKLOWER, of the International Hotel, Helena, was born in Prussia, March 30, 1847. He emigrated to the United States in 1866; went to St. Louis, and from there started to Montana by river to Fort Benton, arriving in the territory in May, 1867. He came direct to Helena and began working at his trade of a baker, continuing until 1869. He visited Colorado, Wyoming, Utah; located at Stockton, and kept the "Stockton House," and afterwards kept the "Halfway House," between Salt Lake City and Ophir. In 1875 he returned to Helena, and was with Schwab & Zimmerman in the St. Louis hotel, and the following year opened the Imperial Restaurant. In 1877 he bought and opened the billiard hall, but in 1880 disposed of his interest, and in 1882 became interested with Marcus Lissner, owner of the "International Hotel," and since then has been the managing proprietor of this old established and popular hotel. Mr. Sklower was married May 15, 1880, to Miss Bettie Silverman, a native of Poland. She came here durin gearly childhood. They have two sons Joseph and Emanuel.

JAMES H. SMITH, P. O. Helena, was born in Missouri, April 8, 1838. His parents were William and Elizabeth (Walker) Smith. His father was a farmer and mill-wright, and built one of the oldest mills in Clay Co. J. H. Smith left Missouri in the spring of 1867, and came by way of Denver, Col, to Montana territory; was six months coming through, and the emigrant train was several times attacked by Indians. Mr. Smith had a cousin killed on this trip, and he, himself, narrowly escaped. On one occasion twenty warriors ambushed the train and frightened away all the stock. Arriving at Helena he stopped there about two years, and afterward located a ranch near the fair grounds, a portion of which is now sed for a Jewish cemetery. He took up the ranch upon which he now lives, in the lower part of Prickly Pear valley, in 1869. It consists of 160 acres, in good condition, and can all be irrigated. Mr. Smith was married to, Emma L. Riley, a native of Missouri, July 29, 1869, and they have five children, named: Luther Lee, Wm. Bennett, Hattie Helena, Arthur Burdette, and George Riley. Mr. Smith was in the sheep business, and drove a flock of sheep to Texas shortly after the outbreak of the war, and was paid off in Confederate money, thereby losing about $2,000.

JAMES M. SMITH, Pear Creek Valley, a native of N. Carolina, was born March 30, 1833. Mr. Smith's father was a gunsmith by trade, and mined in the gold fields of North Carolina for several years. In 1844 the family moved to Tennessee, remaining there till 1864. After serving an apprenticeship as a millwright until twenty-one years of age, Mr. Smith attended school for six months, learned the carpenter's trade, and worked at the business ten years. In 1864 he came to Alder Gulch and remained there until the spring of 1865, when he went to Fort Benton to meet Mrs. Smith, who was on the way to Montana. He made a stay at Fort Benton four weeks, waiting for the boat to arrive, and while there the massacre on the Marias river by the Indians, in which seven men were killed, took place. Mr. Smith would probably have been among the slain, had he accepted a proposition to go up on the Marias with the same parties who were killed, but declined on account of a difference of opinion as to the wages to be paid. Returning to Helena, Mr. Smith bought the ranch on which he now resides, on the 9th day of July, 1865. He owns 200 acres of land.

JOSEPH H. SMITH, Mitchell Gulch, is a native of Liverpool, Eng. He was brought to the United States by his parents when but two years old, the family settling in Iowa. In that State young Smith passed his life on a farm until the winter of 1871-72, when he removed to Montana, arriving at Deer Lodge City January 24, 1872. He spent the next four years mining and freighting in that vicinity, then one year at Phillipsburgh, after which he came to Mitchell Gulch, where, after some time spent in mining, he located his present ranch. Mr. Smith's principal business is raising horses.

J. C. SOMERVILLE, of Chockapee, Scott county, Minn., was born in Ireland, February 24, 1810, and in 1827 came to America, and lived in Orleans county, Vermont, until he had passed his twenty-first birthday. He served an apprenticeship to a millwright, and after leaving home, worked at his trade in Pennsylvania, Maryland, New York and New Jersey. In 1847 he went to Iowa, and spent the winter, thence to Wisconsin, and remained two years. In 1849 he removed to St. Paul, and locating in Scott county, Minn., there remained until 1864. Coming to Montana in that year by team, in company with the Sully Expedition, and arriving at Last Chance Gulch September 29. He devoted his time exclusively to mining for three years, and was one of the discoverers of Nelson's Gulch, on Christmas-day, 1865. In August, 1867, he returned to Scott county, Minn., since which time he has been engaged in farming there. Mr. Somerville had the honor of presenting the name by which the Capital of Montana is known, the citizens having called a meeting for the purpose of naming the town, and accepted Helena, as presented by Mr. Somerville.

HENRY SONNEFIELD, Helena, was born in Prussia, Germany, June 13, 1828. His parents emigrated to America in 1832, settled in Washington Co., Md., in the Hagerstown, thence moved to Greene Co., O. where they resided five years until 1840, when the family moved to Indiana. There he remained until the death of his parents and there attended school and served an apprenticeship as carpenter and joiner, at which trade he worked some time, engaging at Indianapolis in contracting and building from 1853 to 1863. During the fall of the latter year he went to California via New York City and the Isthmus, and remained in California until March 17, 1864. On St. Patrick's day, 1864, he went up the Columbia river to Portland, thence to Umatilla, and thence on foot to West Bannack, now Boise City, a distance of 400 miles, camping out during the whole of the journey, and thence, with two companions, crossed the mountains through an Indian country to Bannack, a journey of 500 miles more, which they also walked. He next engaged in mining in Alder Gulch until the fall of 1864, when he joined the stampede to Jefferson City, where he remained until the fall of 1865, thence to Confederate Gulch, where he engaged in mining and working at his trade. In 1869 he came to Helena, reaching that city only one day before the big fire, located on Broadway, and at once engaged in contracting and building, which business he carried on until 1880, having commanded the leading trade of the city and erected many of the best and most prominent of its buildings. Mr. Sonnefield met with serious losses during the Helena fire of 1872. On Broadway he also lost everything he had, but accepting his position in the best possible manner, he has pressed onward and made his success. In Diamond City he was one of the first admitted to the order of Masonry, and is now a member of Chapter, Council and commandery. His daughter is married to Mr. Lafe J. Burr, an extensive wagon manufacturer and prominent business man of Anderson, Ind. Mr Sonnefield has recently retired from active business and has paid his mother country and other foreign nations a visit.

JOHN SPENCER, Sun River, was born in Ireland in January, 1844. At ten years of age his parents came to the United States, proceeded thence to London, Canada, and there he assisted his parents in farming. At the age of eighteen he emigrated to Nevada, from there went to Montana and Idaho, and was engaged in milling and mining for two years. Went to British Columbia and engaged in the lumber business, purchased interest in a saw-mill, which he ran for three years. Went to the Saskatchewan and engaged in driving cattle north. In 1877 came to Sun river and located ranch. Has since been engaged in stock-raising, which he carries on at the present time. Married Miss Martha D. Mahur, of Canada, December, 1878. Has three children, Annie, Aller T., Ella May.

LOUIS STADLER, Helena was born in Karlsbad, Austria, June 15, 1849. At the age of 17 years he came to the United States, his destination being Helena. Arriving at St Louis he took passage on a steamboat for Fort Benton, but after being seven months in reaching Fort Lawrence, he with others were obliged to make the balance of the journey by land to Fort Benton. The Indians being so troublesome caused the vessel to be held four months in succession, and was the direct cause of their having to abandon the boat. The passengers were obliged to remain at Fort Lawrence for the arrival of assistance from Fort Benton to protect them on the trip. A party of four who had been traveling overland were just in advance of them after they left Fort Lawrence and discovering them coming, went into camp to avail themselves of the protection of the superior party. They had not been long in camp, however, before they were attacked by the Indians and two of their number shot and killed, the remaining two were obliged to flee for their lives and retreat being cut off were compelled to abandon the succor advancing with all haste, but reached Benton in safety. The party with whom Mr. Stadler was traveling camped on the same ground the former four men had occupied and soon after lighting the camp fires one of their party was killed by an Indian. Trouble continued during the night but the balance of the party escaped unhurt. Mr. Stadler resumed his journey by stage to Helena, where he arrived December 1, 1866, and immediately went into the business of stock-raising, and also opened a butcher shop. He was married in 1875, to a Miss Mary Boehler.

REGINALD STANLEY, P. O. Nuneaton, England, a native of England, was born May 2, 1837. He came to this country with a companion whose father was owner of a line of steamships, in 1857. The two young men came to this country for adventure, and after spending a couple of years in Minnesota, Mr. Stanley's comrade returned to Scotland, and in 1862 Mr. Stanley joined the expedition against the Indians in Minnesota. In the spring of 1863 he joined the expedition of Capt. Fisk, whose expectations were that he would be joined by some 2,000 men as a result of the great gold discoveries in Montana. The party numbered only 50 men and 20 wagons, and owing to the Indians being so troublesome and desperate it was regarded as rather a hazardous undertaking with so small a party. They set out, however, and overtook Gen. Sully on the plains with a command of 5,000 men. They traversed the northern route, and were not molested by the Indians, through their being mistaken by them for a portion of Sully's command. While on the trip they passed through immense herds of Buffalo, and arriving at Fort Benton, received the news of the great discoveries on the Stinking Water. The greater part of the men in the expedition, Mr. Stanley included, then stampeded and went to the Stinking Water country, where they erected cabins and prepared for the winter, which was spent in idleness, and enlivened only by the works of the Vigilantes. Mr. Stanley was present at the trial of George Ives, and assisted in capturing Gallaher, being present also at the hanging of the five. He remained in Virginia City and Nevada that winter, and the following spring, in company with Mr. John Crabb, started for the Kootenai mines, and about the 1st of June struck Last Chance gulch, having previously been joined in the valley of the Hell Gate by two men named Cowan and Miller. Mr. Stanley and his three companions were the original discoverers of Last Chance gulch. Owing to a scarcity of water they did not divide their discovery claim, but continued to work on together. In 1864 they discovered gold in Dry gulch, but neglected to work it. In 1865 Crabb sold his interest to Miller an a couple of nephews of Cowan, and in the fall of 1866 the whole party set out for the States, in the face of great danger owing to the fact that it was well known they had a large amount of gold. They left camp about midnight in a wagon, seated on boxes of gold dust, with shot guns slung over their shoulders and heavily loaded with buck shot. They went down the Missouri river in mackinaws, one of which accompanying them ran on a snag and upset in the rapid current, men, gold dust and all being cast into the raging water. Rearranging matters as best they could, they proceeded onward to Omaha, thence by rail to Philadelphia. After spending the winter in New York city, Mr. Stanley returned to Helena to settle up his business, after which he went to England, and engaging in business, has since been extensively interested in large collieries, employing from four to five hundred men. Mr. Stanley's experience as pioneer of Montana was highly fraught with adventure and thrilling scenes, interspersed with hardships and privations; but the spirit of adventure which first led him to visit the regions of the Rockies, and the wild and uncivilized countries of the far West, was fully satisfied, and having reaped a golden harvest, he has since been enabled to lead a life of affluence in his native country.

SOL STAR, Mayor of Deadwood, Dak., born in Bavaria, December 20, 1840, he, ten years later, came to the United States, and located in Ohio, where he received a practical business education. He was an early emigrant to Montana, locating at Helena in business with Seth Bullock, with whom he has been associated ever since. Reaching Deadwood early in 1876, his firm established the crockery business there, to which other branches have been added. He was appointed postmaster in 1878, filling the office with great ability. In 1883 he was elected to the City Council, and in the following spring was elected Mayor.

JOHN STEDMAN, Helena, was born at Holland, Somerset Co., Me., February 11, 1836. He as a boy farmed summers and attended school winters, and from fourteen to nineteen years of age was a student at an academy. Emigrating to California via the Nicaragua route, he came to the latter place when Walker was stirring up the people. He arrived at San Francisco in November, 1855, and at once commenced mining at Orville, following the business until 1858, in which year he went to Frazer river and with a company built three or four saw mills, enjoying a prosperous business for several years. While there Mr. Stedman, and one comrade ran a loaded boat down Frazer river. In dropping the boat by the great falls, which are forty feet high, it was, by mismanagement of those on the shore, dashed over the falls, but luckily neither was hurt. In 1867 Mr. Stedman came to Helena, overland, and putting up a saw mill operated it for three years. In 1870 he built a planing mill, the first ever put up in Helena, which he ran till 1877, then built a foundry and machine shop and still continues in the latter business. In July, 1872, he married Miss Alice Ormor, of Helena, Mont., by whom he has had three children. He is a Past Grand Master in the Masonic fraternity.

W. L. STEELE, M. D., Helena. Captain William Steele, the father of our subject, was a midshipman in the American navy, and was on the Chesapeake when the battle occurred between that vessel and the Shannon. He was transferred as soon as exchanged, to the frigate Constitution. Soon after the close of the war of 1812, Past-Midshipman Steele, was left a fortune by an uncle on condition that he would leave the service. He accepted the condition and settled at Pendleton, S. C., where, on the 17th of February, 1883, William L. Steele was born. He had an uneventful boyhood, was taught the ordinary branches at home, and at 18 years of age he attended Kennedy Thalian Academy two years; then went to Greenville, S. C., where he taught a private school and studied medicine for two years; then going to Charleston, S. C., he studied under Dr. Possher for two years more, after which he took a finishing course of one year at the State Medical College in 1857. He was then appointed surgeon to a railroad contractor, with whom he remained two years, when, having the asthma, he went to Central City, Col., and was engaged in mining, also practicing his profession to some extent until 1863. He then removed to Bannack, Mont. Soon after his arrival at the latter place, Alder Gulch was discovered, and he was among the first to go there. He succeeded in getting a good placer claim, and in company with his brothers, ran freight teams, and also practiced his profession. He was elected president of the district, and while holding this position condemned two men who had committed a murder to be hanged, but the Sheriff put the question to the spectators, while at the gallows, as to whether they should be hanged or not, and they deciding in the negative, Dr. Steele resigned his position. During December, 1864, the doctor and his brother came to Last Chance and paid out $17,000 for mining ground in Grizzly Gulch. Their tale, when told in Virginia City, caused a great stampede to Last Chance. The doctor now disposed of his Virginia City property and mined on his Grizzly claims during the summer, the diggings yielding $500 per day to each owner. In the fall of this year (1865) he married Miss Agnes Forbis, of Helena. In 1866 he bought a farm in Prickly Pear Valley, and buying stock, ran a freight train from Benton to various points in the Territory, at which business he continued for several years. In 1869 he was elected Sheriff on the Democratic ticket for Lewis and Clarke county. In 1873 he disposed of all his outside business and paid his entire attention to his profession from that time until the present. The doctor has four children. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias, also examining surgeon to the Associated Order of United Workmen.

GEORGE STEELL, Sun River, was born in Lower, Canada, in 1837. At the age of 12 years he entered real life, and after working a few years, devoted his earnings to educating himself, after which, he secured a position as clerk, at Rouse's Point, N. Y. He continued in that position two years, when he went to Boston, where he served in the capacity of clerk two years. He next visited St. Louis, and again accepted a position as clerk, one year. In the spring of 1857 he arrived at Fort Benton, with the American Fur Co., in whose employ he remained until 1864. He then built the first house erected at Fort Benton (aside from those built by the Fur Co.) and with Mat. Carroll was engaged in the mercantile business until 1871, and also in running the Old Diamond R. freight outfit. On January 1, 1873, he disposed of his interest in the freighting outfit, and going to Salt Lake City, engaged in the mercantile business. In 1875, he returned to Montana, and locating at Sun River, embarked in the general merchandise business, in which he is still engaged. At this time also, he invested in stock, which interest he disposed of in 1880, with the exception of horses, of which he now has about 100, and among them the noted Hambletonian stalion, Gen. Miles. In connection with Mr. Steell's business at Sun River he opened a drug store at Ulidia, Meagher Co. Mr. Steell is also quite an important land owner in Choteau and Meagher counties, having one of the best improved farms in the Sun River country. Mr. Steell was appointed Commissioner by the Government for the purpose of organizing the county of Choteau, and was immediately after elected commissioner of that county for a period of three years, after which he was appointed to fill a vacancy for eighteen months, in Lewis and Clarke county; and at the fall elections of 1876 and 1878, was chosen by the people of Lewis and and Clarke county to represent them in the Territorial Legislature. Mr. Steell is of Scotch descent, and his father having belonged to the Scotch Grays of the British army, took part in the famous battle of Waterloo, and at the time of the birth of the subject of this sketch, was a member of the British army.

J. H. STELLER, Helena, was born at Louisville, Ky., July 11, 1858, and in 1873 (being formerly employed in handling horses) made the circuit of Iowa with some of the noted flyers, and remained there two years, trotting and training horses. He then made a circuit through Illinois and into Kentucky, making several trips from Cairo to Quincy, with stock; and in 1876, took some horses to Cheyenne, where he remained some six months, and thence to Butte, and ultimately to Helena, where he is now handling some fine blooded stock for Messrs. Potts & Harrison.

J. A. STEMPLE, Gloster, was born in Preston Co., W. Va., March 16, 1834. In 1858 went to Iowa. In 1860 he crossed the plains to Oregon, returned to Virginia, where he remained about seventeen months, on a visit, came to Montana in 1867, and soon engaged in mining at Trinity, but soon went prospecting, and discovered good diggings at Virginia Creek, which caused a stampede for that place, and he was then appointed recorder. He left Virginia Creek in the fall of 1872, and while hunting in the vicinity of Gloster, discovered good prospects, and immediately moved to the present site of Gloster mines, he being the first discoverer of what is now know as Pelgan and Whipporwill mines, the territory in which they are situated being called the Stemple district. Mr. Stemple was married near Bonapart, Ia., January 6, 1876, to Miss Amanda A. Miller.

F. P. STERLING, Helena, was born at Elkhorn, Walworth Co., Wis., March 24, 1843, and is a son of Henry H. and Eliza Sterling. He was reared and educated in his native State. During the great civil war he entered the service at the age of 19 years, served over three years in the 10th Wisconsin infantry, and was mustered out as sergeant-major. While in the service he was wounded at the battle of Chicamauga, on the 19th and 20th days of September, 1863, during which engagement his regiment was completely surrounded by the enemy, when Col. J. J. Guffy gave the order for his men to cut their way through the line of the enemy. In so doing, out of 468 men only 26 escaped, and three of those were wounded. Mr. Sterling was also wounded at the battle of Hoover's gap, and participated in many of the hard-fought battles during the war. Returning from the service he went to Iowa and engaged in teaching and the study of law. In 1874 removed to Montana, and locating Helena, was occupied in the first year in contracting and building, after which he took charge of A. M. Holter & Bro.'s lumberyard. In 1876 he received from President Grant the appointment of receiver in the Helena land office, and in 1877 was reappointed to that office by President Hayes, serving in that capacity four years. At the expiration of his official term, he applied himself to the prosecuting of claims before the land office until the fall of 1882, he being at that time elected to the office of probate judge. Mr. Sterling was married in 1861 to Miss F. L. Rosencrans, of Beloit, Wis , and they are the parents of two sons, Fred. G. and Harry H. Sterling.

ED. STONE, Helena, was born at Janesville, Wis., September 29, 1846, and was educated in his native State. In 1864 he crossed to Oregon, where he remained until 1866, coming then to Montana and remaining until 1872, when he returned to Oregon and spent the principal part of the time until 1881 on the coast of Oregon and Washington territory and in Walla Walla. During 1881 he again came to Montana as general agent of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, devoting his attention to freight and passenger business, and all interests pertaining to the company. In September, 1881, the Northern Pacific land office was opened in Helena, and since then Mr. Stone has had the management of the land affairs of the company. The perfection and detail of the system which he has inaugurated in the land department is most admirable. Mr. Stone was married in 1876 to Miss Louise M. Beck, of Portland, Ore. They are the parents of one son.

M. L. STRANG, Sun River crossing, was born November 20, 1859, near Chicago, Ill. After leaving school he farmed until twenty-one years of age, when he came to Montana and located his ranch of 500 acres on Sun river. Mr. Strang was married to Miss Agnes Morrow in May, 1882.

JOHN STURROCK, of Sturrock & Lang, tinsmith and plumber's hardware, Helena, was born in Crawford Co., Penn., in June, 1855; lived there till twenty-five years of age; received a common school education; learned the trade of plumber and worked at it in Media; came to Helena in 1880 and started his establishment with small capital. Frank B. Lang, of the same firm, was born in Austria, October 2, 1855; came to this country at twelve years of age; attended school in the old country and a few years in his adopted home; went to Manitowoc, Wis., and learned the trade of tinsmith, and in 1876 worked at various trades in Wisconsin. Was subsequently in Chicago several years, and in 1876 went to the Black Hills, thence to Iowa, thence to Omaha where he worked two and a half years for the Union Pacific Railway Co., and finally settled at Helena, M. T., worked two years for John Kinna, and is now junior partner in business with John Sturrock. He is a member of the A. O. U. W.; belongs to the militia Light Guards and is assistant foreman of Engine Co. No. 1.

GEO. CLINTON SWALLOW, M. D., LL.D., Helena, was born at Buckfield, Oxford Co., Me., November 9, 1817. The name is an anglicism of the French Sevallien, who came to Britain with the Norman-French in the year 1066. The immediate ancestors of the present family came from England to the North Alantic states, and from this branch of the Sevallien's Prof. Swallow claims descent. During his early years he attended the common schools of Maine; afterward conducting schools there and in Massachusetts for fifteen years; entered Bowdoin College, graduated in 1843 with high honors, and immediately after was appointed lecturer on botany in that institution. In 1848 he established an agricultural college at Hampton, Me., having obtained a grant from the State for that purpose. In 1850 he was elected professor of chemistry and geology in the Missouri University, and in 1853 received the appointment of State Geologist—the first position of that order ever held in Missouri. He it was who made the first geological survey, and to him must be credited that elaborate report of his close geological inquiries, which formed the natural history record of that state. The most scientific work of Dr. Swallow has been in the economical geology of Missouri and Kansas. Prior to his survey of these states eastern Kansas and northwestern Missouri had been represented by Dr. D. D. Owen and others, as having no coal. But the first year of Dr. Swallow's survey showed this region to be underlaid by the true coal-bearing rocks; and he thus added to the known coal-bearing area of Missouri fully 20,000 square miles, and 6,000 square miles of coal area in Kansas. He also showed that the lead-bearing rocks extended under 200 square miles of southwestern Missouri, in which the great mining regions of Granly and Joplin have been developed. His discovery of the "Marl" beds was probably the most valuable economically of any geological discovery of the present age. During the anarchical times of 1861–5, the University, as well as the geological survey of Missouri were suspended, so that in 1865 he thought it prudent to accept the position of State Geologist of Kansas, the offer being founded on his valuable papers on the geology of that state following his exploration of the Permian formation there in 1858. This exploration first made the world acquainted with this formation in America, and was instrumental in increasing the Doctor's reputation in the scientific circles of the world. The University of Missouri was re-organized in 1870, the building enlarged, a full university curriculum adopted. Dr. Swallow received the chair of natural history, and Dean of the agricultural college. His connection with the University was severed because of his efforts to preserve the integrity of the agricultural college, and have its funds expended for its legitimate uses. Refusing all call for his continuance in the chair of natural history, he left Columbia in August, 1882, to accept an editorial position on the Independent. His membership of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and a large number of the scientific societies of Europe and America, as well as his anti-Darwin theories and writings, and his works on agriculture and geology have won for him a wide reputation. He is also recognized as one of the best educators of the West. His marriage with Miss Martha A., daughter of Rev. David Hill, of the Virginia Methodist church, took place in March, 1864. They are the parents of one daughter, Anna C., the wife of Col. A. M. Woolfolk. Dr. Swallow is a regular graduate in medicine, and received the honorary degree of LL.D., from the University of Missouri. He has made repeated examinations of the lodes discovered in various parts of Montana in 1867, and purchased interests in several lodes, to-wit: the "Hope," at Phillipsburg, the "R. E Lee," on "Ten Mile," and the "Forest Queen," at Highland. The following year he built a twenty-four stamp mill, then the best in the territory, on the Ballarat and Forest Queen, at Highland.

ALEX. SWAN, superintendent of Gloster mine, was born at Milford, Me., on January 1, 1840. Previous to his 20th birthday he had been engaged in the State of Maine in lumbering; in 1860 went to California and was employed at various mining camps until 1862, when he revisited the states. In 1863 he returned to California, visited Idaho and followed mining at Centerville one year. He then went to Coakney, B. C., returning to Centerville in 1865, and in the latter part of that year visited Diamond City and Helena, where he bought mines which he continued to work until the fall of 1868, when he returned to Maine and became interested in the lumber business for two years. He then went to Maine and was engaged with R. R. company for several months, and in 1872 revisited Montana; was interested in mines at Blackfoot until 1875, when he went to the Scratch Gravel mines near Helena and was employed in quartz mill until 1878. He then became interested in the Helena Water Company and was appointed collector, which position he filled until appointed to his present office in September, 1880. Mr. Swan was married at Helena September 19, 1877, to Miss Mary E. Currah. They are the parents of three children.

JOHN M. SWEENEY, of the firm of T. C. Power & Co., Helena and Bozeman, was born in Frederic Co., Md., January 18, 1842. When quite young he lost his father, a few years later learned the machinist's trade, and at the age of 20 he went to work for the firm of J. I. Case & Co., who made agricultural implements at York, Penn. The firm was burnt out here and removed to Racine, Wis. Mr. Sweeney worked with them till September, 1864, then he went with a train via Lander's Cut-off to Gallatin valley, Mont. The next spring he went to Last Chance Gulch and engaged in contracting and building until 1870. During this time, in 1868, he was elected to the fifth Montana Legislature. He declined reelection, but in 1875 was elected to the same position, in the ninth session, and again in 1878, to the 11th session, all from Lewis and Clarke Co. In the spring of 1871 he took charge of the business of T. C. Power & Co., at Helena, and in March, 1872, entered the firm as partner. In 1877 a branch house was started in Bozeman, and the firm have agencies at various points in the territory.

A. B. TAYLOR, P. O. Helena, son of Samuel and Amy (Bells) Taylor, was born in Leroy, Genesee Co., N. Y., in 1827. At eight years of age he entered school, continuing in attendance twelve years at intervals. His youth was passed on a farm. He moved to Chautauqua county when ten years old, and to Wattsburg when fourteen. In 1845 he went to Toledo, Ohio, where he served an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade. Removing to Chicago, Ill., in 1847, he worked at his trade until 1853, when he located at Rockford, still continuing work. In 1864 he crossed the country to Montana, arriving in August at Virginia City, at the end of a ten weeks' trip In 1865 he located at Helena. Mr. Taylor has in his possession the limb of the pine tree upon which Daniels and Sanders were hung. Twelve or fourteen persons were executed on the same tree. He also has the portraits of two young men who in day light took their horses and followed an old intoxicated farmer, also on horseback, out of Helena, knocked him off his horse with stones or bludgeons, robbed him of $400 or $500, and left him for dead. A farmer from the valley coming along discovered him about three miles from town, picked him up and brought him back, he subsequently recovering his senses. The would-be murderers, who when they left town were without money, returned with plenty. The suspicions of the citizens were aroused, and the two men were at once arrested by the city authorities and placed in jail. The next day they had a trial in front of the jail, and before the day was done were taken from confinement and hung by the vigilantes to the tree previously mentioned. Mr. Taylor was married at Leroy, N. Y., in 1847, to Dorcas L. Rider. They have two daughters living, one of whom is married, and two of their children are deceased. For over ten years Mr. Taylor has been engaged in the undertaking business, and during that period has cut down and buried several persons who had been hung, and has also performed the final offices for a number who were shot in quarrels, etc.

C. C. THURSTON, Helena, was born in New Hampshire, January 13, 1828. At fourteen years of age he went to Boston, Mass., and learned the mason's trade, at which he worked until 1850, when he went to New York city and engaged in building and contracting. In 1874 he entered the employ of the Utah & Northern Railroad, remaining until 1876, when he began business at Butte City, as builder, and started a brick yard, at which business he continued until the spring of 1883, when he came to Helena, where he bought a ranch of 300 acres and has upon it one of the finest brick yards in the Territory, and is now manufacturing 35,000 to 40,000 brick per day.

JAMES TIERNEY, Silver City, was born in Baltimore, Md., on January 6, 1855, and is a son of John and Ann Tierney. His father came to the Territory in 1864 and engaged in mining at Emigrant and Alder gulches, and also at St. Louis gulch and Diamond City, and commenced ranching on Little Pear Creek Valley in 1874. Mr. Jas. Tierney, Sr., died August 4, 1883, after a life of usefulness, but intermingled with privations and hardships. James Tierney came to the Territory in 1878, since which time he has been engaged in mining and ranching, and is at present performing the duties left dependent upon him by the sudden and unexpected death of his father.

JOHN S. TOOKER, Secretary of the Territory, Helena, was born in Seneca Co., N. Y., July 7, 1836. His parents moved to Michigan during his early boyhood and settled at Ann Arbor, where he received his education. In later years he engaged in the foundry and machinery business and was connected therewith for sixteen years. Afterward engaged in the drug trade. He was in the army during the war, having enlisted in the Sixth Michigan Cavalry. He served between one and two years and was discharged on account of disability. Mr. Tooker was elected mayor of Lansing in 1873 and re-elected in 1874, and in 1876, serving three terms. He was elected to the State Senate of Michigan in 1878 and was re-elected in 1880, and served in that body four years. He served as president of the Northern Relief and Benefit Association of Michigan, and has held other positions of honor and trust. He was appointed to his present position as Secretary of the Territory in January, 1884. In 1873 Mr. Tooker was united in marriage to Miss Agnes E. Edwards, of Fort Plain, N. Y.

EDWIN W. TOOLE, Helena, was born in Buchanan Co., Mo., to which place his parents emigrated from the State of Kentucky during the early settlement of the Platte Purchase. He is a lawyer by profession, and since arriving at the age of maturity has confined himself exclusively to the practice in the courts of record in Montana Territory. Prior to this his life was almost entirely spent in school, where he acquired a good literary and classical education. He was a student at the Masonic College, in the State of Missouri, at the close of that institution, and with the Hon. Stephen B. Elkins represented the Philologian Society in its annual discussion with the Erodelphians. In 1883 he left his native State for Denver, Col., from which place he came to Virginia City, M. T., in the fall of that year. Here he commenced the practice of his profession and moved to Helena City in the fall of 1884, where he has ever since resided, and enjoyed an extensive practice. It may fairly be said that no man in the Territories stands higher in his profession, in ability and integrity, and none deserve to. He was the nominee of the Democratic Convention for Delegate in Congress in 1872, and made an able and vigorous campaign, but was beaten on account of a disaffection growing out of defeating the Hon. J. M. Cavanaugh in the convention, a favorite of the Irish element of the party. Since this time, as before, politics occupies but little if any of his attention, while his partner and brother, Hon. J. K. Toole, now occupies that position as successor to the Hon. Martin Maginnis.

J. K. TOOLE, Helena, was born at Savannah, Mo., May 12, 1851. He attended school at St. Joe, Mo., and afterward entered the Western Military Academy at New Castle, Ky., under General E. Kirby Smith. He studied law in Kentucky, came to Montana in May, 1869, and was admitted to the bar during that year. He at once engaged in the practice of law, since which time he has thus been successfully engaged in the practice of his profession in company with his brother, Judge E. Warren Toole, except while holding the office of District

Attorney, to which position he was first elected in 1872, since which time he has been elected and re elected to that office. He was elected to the twelfth session of the Legislature of the Territory, and officiated as President of the Legislative Council during that term. In the fall of 1883 he was elected member of the Constitutional Convention, and served as member of that body, and in the fall of 1884 was elected congressional delegate, succeeding Martin Maginnis in Congress. (Vide general history and political history of counties.)

CAPT. OSCAR B. TOTTEN, Helena, is a native of New Jersey, where he was born on the 9th of April, 1830. In 1839 his parents moved to St. Louis, and in that city he was raised and educated. In 1846 he engaged in the river marine on the Independent plying between St. Louis and New Orleans, and afterward worked on the steamers Lightfoot and New Lucy. In 1850 he crossed the plains to California, and in 1852 returned to St. Louis, resumed steamboating on the Upper Mississippi, and afterward on the Missouri, and so continued until the fall of 1857. In 1858 he went to Colorado, being one of the pioneers of that country, and was one of the original party who located the present city of Denver. He remained in Colorado until 1862, when he returned to St. Louis and engaged in steamboating once more. During the war he was in command of the steamer New Ivo, passed through severe ordeals, and was noted for his courage and daring during those troublesome days. He earned an enviable reputation as one of the most popular commanders on the river. He continued steamboating until 1865, at which time he came direct to Helena, immediately turned his attention to mining, and has since been interested in mines. In 1868 he was appointed police magistrate and was afterward elected to that position for a term of three years. In 1875 he was elected clerk and recorder of Lewis and Clarke county, and was re-elected for four successive terms. He held the position for nine years and was one of the most popular officials in the Territory. Capt. Totten was married October 24, 1853, to Miss Josephine Little, of Maryland, to whom were born two children, Eugenia A. and Julia A. In closing this sketch the general historian requests the statement to be made that without Mr. Totten's cordial co-operation, so much of the material history of Lewis and Clarke county as is based on public records would be still unwritten.

FRED TRAUTMAN, Florence, was born at Strasburg, Germany, January 29, 1829. At an early age he learned the art of engraving on steel, iron and shell, which occupation he followed at Paris until 1855, when he came to the United States and immediately engaged with the American Fur Company and worked for them two years at Fort Benton and Fort Union; after which he went to the mines in Idaho, where he remained two years. Returning to Montana he spent several years in the various mining camps of the Territory. In 1864 he went to the Courtney mines in the Canadian Northwest, where he remained one year, when he again returned to Montana and engaged in mining at different camps until 1868. At this time he made a trip to Europe, remaining until 1870. On his return to Montana he engaged in ranching on the south fork of the Sun river, where he still is engaged in farming and stock growing.

W. H. VAN WART, Helena, of the firm of VanWart & Co., was born on the St. John's river in New Brunswick, June 17, 1830. Upon arrival at manhood he went to California, where he spent three years; then returned to his native country, bought a farm and devoted his time to the tilling of the soil until 1868. He then removed to Helena, Mont., soon after locating at Greenhorn, in the vicinity of the Mullen Tunnel, and there applied four and a half years of his life to the occupation of placer mining. At the expiration of that time he bought a ranch in the valley nine miles below Helena, where for eleven years he gave his attention to raising horses and cattle. He finally sold his ranch and cattle interests, but still retains his band of horses. In May, 1883, he established his present business, dealing exclusively in dry goods and ladies' wear, and controlling a fine trade Mr. Van Wart has never been sick a day, consequently he has never paid a dollar for doctor's bills, and has never played a game of cards or made a bet of a dollar.

D. S. WADE, Chief Justice of Montana, was born in Ashtabula Co., O., on the 23d day of January, 1835. His parents, Charles H. and Juliette (Spear) Wade, were old settlers of that county; the former being born in 1798, is still living, he being the next younger brother of the late Hon. Benjamin F. Wade. Judge Wade received a preliminary education in the common schools of Ohio, after which he attended the Kingsville academy, and at the age of 16 years began teaching school during the winter, which he continued for several years; then entered the study of law under the supervision of his uncle, Ben Wade; was admitted to the bar in 1857, and began the practice of law in partnership with A. S. Hall. In 1860 he was elected probate judge for Ashtabula Co., Ohio, which important position he filled for seven consecutive years; he then resumed the practice of law, and in 1869 was elected to the state senate, and while acting in that capacity he received the appointment of Chief Justice of Montana Territory from President Grant, said appointment being dated March 17, 1871. He arrived in the territory on April 29, 1871, and at the expiration of his term of office he was reappointed by President Grant, as also by Presidents Hayes and Arthur, and is now serving his fourth term, he having received the endorsement of the entire bar of the territory. In the year 1863 Judge Wade was united in marriage to Miss Bernice Galpin, of Andover, Ashtabula Co., O. He is a gentleman of superior judgment and ability, and his works are heartily indorsed by the people, he being prominently identified with all public interests and improvements and an important contributor to the law journals of the country.

JOHN W. WADE, Helena, was born in Boone Co., Mo., September 10, 1853. He was educated at the state university, and graduated from the academic and normal departments in the class of 1879. He made a special study of civil engineering, and qualified himself for that profession. In that state he was engaged about three years in teaching. Coming to Helena in September, 1880, he entered the service of the Northern Pacific railway. The following winter he taught the Jefferson school, and subsequently was employed as traveling correspondent. In September, 1881, he resumed work with the Northern Pacific R'y as assistant engineer on the Missoula division, and continued with that company until he was appointed to his present office, January 10, 1883.

EPHRAIM BLAINE WALKER, eldest son of Major R. C. Walker, born May 15, 1852, died at Helena September 22, 1883. He was educated at Notre Dame College, Ind., where he was distinguished for his talents and varied accomplishments. For some years he was a contributor of piquant articles to the press of the Territory, subsequently held a position on the local staff of the Herald, and at once became a favorite with thousands of readers who recognized his happy method of dealing with all items from music and the arts down to the ordinary events of every-day life.

L. A. WALKER, Helena, was born at Indianapolis, Ind., July 3, 1854, and was there reared and educated, completing his studies at the Northwestern Christian University, after which he was for several years engaged in the stove business with Walker Brothers. In 1879 he came to Montana with Mr. Harrison, they soon after organizing the Montana Cattle Co. and the Dearborn Sheep Co. Mr. Walker was elected to the office of secretary of both organizations, which are now numbered among the most important enterprises of the country. Upon arriving in the Territory, he at once assumed the position of Chief Clerk of the U. S. Assay Office, which position he still holds.

MAJOR ROBERT C. WALKER, Helena, Paymaster U. S. Army (retired), was born at Elizabeth, Allegheny Co., Pa., in October, 1821. He was the youngest son of eight children born to John and Diana (Craighead) Walker, pioneers of western Pennsylvania. His grandmother, Eliza Springer, was a native of Sweden, and a cousin of the late philanthropist, Reuben R. Springer, of Ohio, and akin to the historic Carl Chris Springer, of Stockholm, Sweden. Major Walker was educated at Allegheny and Washington Colleges in his native State, and subsequently (as early as 1840) was an active business man near Pittsburgh, Pa. In September, 1845, he was married to Miss Eliza G. Blaine, eldest daughter of Colonel Ephraim L. Blaine, and sister of James G. Blaine. In 1850–1 Major Walker represented his county as an old line Whig in the State Legislature; was elected and re-elected a member of the Board of Revenue Commissioners, and for six years was Secretary of the Pennsylvania State Agricultural Society, during which time he compiled and published, under legislative authority, three volumes of "The Transactions of the Pennsylvania State Agricultural Society." In 1851 he was elected the first Secretary of the United States Agricultural Society, Washington, D. C. As Secretary of the State Agricultural Society, he planned and superintended the construction of the temporary buildings for the agricultural fairs at Harrisburg, Lancaster, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia. The fair at Philadelphia in 1854 covered nineteen acres of the Pomelton estate, across the Schuylkill, which was the most successful exhibition ever held in the State. His management of this fair, where the net proceeds exceeded ten thousand dollars, was such as to be deemed worthy of some testimonial from the officers of the society and the citizens of Philadelphia, who presented him, in the name of the society, with a valuable silver tea service. This one exhibition gave the society a large surplus, $10,000 of which was appropriated toward the establishment of a Farmers' High School. The society appointed Major Walker one of a committee to locate the institution and make a selection of the land that was to be the model farm. At the breaking out of the rebellion he was largely engaged in merchandising and developing coal lands on the Monongahela, where he had valuable coal mines. The rebel embargo of the Mississippi cut off the market for coal long enough to injure the business and ruin the major financially. He then received an appointment in the army as a Captain and Commissary of Subsistence in October, 1861, on the staff of Major-General Daniel Butterfield, and was present at the battles of Antietam and Fredericksburg. He was commissioned Major and Additional Paymaster United States Army January, 1863, and was on duty paying troops in the field at Newbern, N. C.; Norfolk, Va.; Hilton Head, S. C., and Atlanta, Ga., until honorably mustered out November 15, 1865. He was commissioned Paymaster United States Army in May, 1866, paying troops in Arkansas and the Indian Territory with headquarters at St. Louis up to September, 1866; Chief Paymaster of the District of the North West at St. Paul in 1866 and 1867, paying troops at Forts Snelling, Ripley, Abercrombie, Wadsworth, Ransom and Pembina. He was ordered to Helena, and arriving there August 6, 1871, as Chief Paymaster of the District of Montana, holding the office from 1871 to 1874, and paying troops at Camp Baker, Forts Ellis, Shaw and Benton. He resigned September 3, 1874, was reappointed Major and Paymaster United States Army and retired June 22, 1878. Since his retirement the Major has interested himself in the commercial progress of Helena and Montana, and as secretary of the Board of Trade has worked for both, and has published two reports of its proceedings, which have afforded data and descriptive writings that have been quoted by the New West and other papers. The Major prepared the descriptive portion of the Historical Directory of Montana, published by F. W. Wanner in 1879, a work that is generally used for reference and correct information. The Major has reported the proceedings of the Montana Legislature in one branch or the other for five sessions for the Helena Daily Herald, and at the present time is the city editor of that paper. He is the father of a large family of children now fully grown, and as a resident of Helena is considered an old timer. Major Walker is thoroughly impressed with the progress of that city and its prospective importance as a great railroad center at no distant date. He is a ready and descriptive writer, and has for many years been correspondent of eastern papers. Mrs. Walker died at Baltimore March 3, 1885, in the 58th year of her age. She was the mother of ten children, eight of whom were raised to an adult age; a woman of remarkable talent, and possessed of all the excellent traits of character that ennoble the truly christian mother. Her death was announced throughout the country, and claimed from all classes expressions of sympathy with the family.

R. P. WALKER, superintendent of the Montana Cattle Co., P. O. Sun River, was born at Indianapolis, Ind., in 1857. He received a scientific education and graduated at Erndon, Mass., in 1877, after which he spent a short time in Indiana, then going to Texas. From Texas he went to Minnesota, and in 1880 came to Montana, locating at the mouth of the Sun River, and engaging in raising horses and cattle. In 1881 he was a member of the executive committee of the Stock Growers' Association of Lewis and Clarke, Choteau and Meagher counties, and has been secretary of various associations in the Territory. He was married in Chicago, Ill., in January, 1885.

M. E. WALTON, Silver City, son of Josiah and Latitia Walton, was born at Nashville, Tenn., June 10, 1824. From Nashville he went to Cass Co., Mo., where he was engaged in stock raising and farming until 1864, when he came to Montana, and engaged in mining and teaming about Helena until 1866. He then moved to Trinity, where he has since remained. Was engaged in mining up to a few years ago, during which time he has been engaged in ranching and stock raising. Mr. Walton was married near Versailles, Mo., December 4, 1849, to Miss Mary Gates.

HENRY WARD, Pear Creek Valley, is a native of Kent county, near London, England, but came from China to New York, in 1869. From New York he went to Detroit, Mich., and was a sailor on a propeller on the lakes, for about three months. Leaving the lake marine he came to Montana, and mined at Helena for about five months. Next engaged in prospecting, and afterward in farming. Mr. Ward is a sailor by occupation, and has been around the world three or four times, visiting the East Indies, Australia, China, and various parts of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

WILLIAM WARREN, Pear Creek Valley, was born in England, May 12, 1844, where his father was a smelter by occupation. He left England in the spring of 1860, for Rhode Island, U. S. A., where he remained for about one month, when he went to Lake Superior. For five or six years he worked in the extensive copper mines along the shores of the lake. In 1866 he went to Colorado, and in April, 1871, came to Helena; settled in the Pear Creek Valley shortly after, and has been engaged in farming for about seven years. He owns 160 acres of land, which is well improved, and a pleasant home and surroundings. He was married on the 19th of October, 1868, to Miss Lucinda Hardesty, a native of Boone Co , Ky. They are the parents of four children.

F. J. WASWEILER, Hot Springs Hotel, P. O. Helena, was born in Germany, April 28, 1836; came to the U.S. when twelve years of age, and settled at Milwaukee, Wis. Resided there until 1853. He then went to California, visiting and working in the mining camps of Pitt, Chester and northern California. Returning to Milwaukee in 1856, he visited Chicago, Ill. (where he remained some six months), going thence to Leavenworth, Kan., and thence to the Plains, where he was employed by the Government as Quartermaster's deputy, in charge of government trains, for a period of seven years, at the expiration of which time he came to Virginia City, and engaged in mining there, and at many other mining camps in the Territory. In 1865 he bought 160 acres, about four miles from Helena, where he erected a fine building and bath house for the accommodation of his many guests. In 1874 he sold 80 acres of his ranch, on which all his buildings were located, and moved upon the other portion, building a small dwelling, in which he remained until 1883, when he erected a fine hotel and bath house. The mineral springs are specially adapted to the cure of many ailments. Mr. Wasweiler was married at Leavenworth, Kan., in 1864, to Miss Caroline Warrel, formerly of Virginia.

N. H. WEBSTER, Helena, was born in New Hampshire November 29, 1837. His earlier days were spent in attendance at school. He graduated at New London, N. H., in 1857, after which he went to Boston, where he was engaged in a clothing store until 1861. He then went to St. Paul, Minn., and from there into Dakota with a surveying party, from July to November. The winter of 1861-2 was spent in Iowa with his uncle. In May, 1862, he went to Leavenworth, Kan., and from there to Denver, Col., then on to Central city, where he arrived in July. In September he returned to Omaha, where he obtained a stock of goods, returned to Central city and remained until August, 1863. Then, with 170 companions (all except himself and two others being Southern men), prominent among whom was Rader, after whom Radersburg was named, the party being called the Rader party, he pushed for Montana, arriving in Bannack November 8, 1863, where he remained until March, 1865, engaged in the tailoring business, in what was then known as the "buckskin tailor shop." In 1865 he moved his shop to Helena, and continued in the business until August, 1866, after which he worked in several mining camps until September, 1867, when he went to the States on a steamer from Fort Benton, having on board 144 fellow passengers. Upon arriving in St. Louis he spent two weeks, and then went on to New Hampshire, but in March, 1868, he returned to Montana, landing at Fort Benton on the 19th of June. He was soon after one of the discoverers of the Basin Gulch mines; sold out there in the fall, and spent the winter in Helena, and during the spring of 1869 went into the postoffice with Mr. Crounse as deputy-postmaster. After several months' sickness, on the 1st of January, 1871, he bought his present business, paying $315 for $2,100 worth of goods, and has continued to the present time. Mr. Webster was burned out in 1873 and 1874, and was the only merchant who saved his goods, which he did by putting them in wagons and drawing them out of town. He is interested in the Helena Electric Light Company, also the Artesian Well Company, of Helena, and one of the directors of the Montana National Bank, besides owning considerable property in the city of Helena. Mr. Webster was married in Wisconsin to Miss Ella M. Adams in 1876.

B. M WEIFERT, Pear Creek Valley, was born in St. Joseph, Mo., in 1835, where his parents, Ambrose and Mary Weifert resided, the latter having been dead 18 years; the former is a farmer by occupation, and by nationality a German. Mr. Weifert left Missouri in 1876 for Colorado, and after mining there for eight months went to the Black Hills, stopping there for a year and a half. Next came to Bozeman, and from Bozeman to this valley, where he has been principally engaged in farming and herding. He was corraled in Black Hills with numerous other parties and six men killed. He was corraled again by the Sioux while driving cattle through to the Big Horn, when four men were killed.' Was overhauled and mail taken by road agents while carrying United States mail from Deadwood to Custer Springs in the Black Hills, and had numerous thrilling adventures of such a character during his life in the mountain regions

GEO. W. WEIGANDS, Sun River Crossing, was born January 6, 1841, at Kurhessen, Germany; came to the United States in 1860, and at New York learned the trade of cigarmaking. In 1865 he opened a factory for cigars and tobacco, and carried it on until 1870. Leaving his business in charge of his brother and wife, he came to Sun River, formed a partnership with Michael Hartcom and established a brewery, buying his partner's interest a year later, and conducting the business alone until 1874. Then selling out he located a ranch on Sun River, where he built a stone house and began stock-raising and farming. He married Caroline Hartcom October 14, 1865, and they have seven children: Henry, Julia, Wilhelmina, Fannie, Clara, George W., Jr., and Emma. Mr. Weigands has had contracts with Fort Shaw for hauling and furnishing wood, hay, etc ; also a contract for building a Methodist church. In 1876 he was elected justice of peace, and in September, 1883, was appointed road supervisor. Mr. Weigands has been school trustee for six years, being one of the seven who built the school house.

JAMES WEIR, Helena, of the firm of Weir and Pope, was born at Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1836. He received a fair common school education, and at 15 years of age was apprenticed to a druggists' firm, with which he remained until 1856. He then went to Brooklyn, N. Y., and followed his profession one year; thence to Canada, where he served as clerk in a drug store until 1860. Then starting for California by steamer via the Isthmus of Panama, he arrived in San Francisco, accepted a position as drug clerk, and continued in that occupation until 1866, then forming a partnership with Mr. Pope, they purchased a stock of goods, went by steamer to the mouth of the Columbia river, and from there with pack animals to Helena, where they have since continued in the drug business, and now control a fine trade.

A. WEISENHORN, carriage manufacturer, Helena, was born at Baden, Germany, January 29, 1842. In 1855 he came to America, and locating at Quincy, Ill., learned his present business, and continued to reside in that city until 1863, when he went to Colorado, arriving in Denver on March 1 of that year. During the fall he came to Montana, and locating at Alder gulch, worked at his trade and engaged in mining until 1865, when he went to Diamond City, where he followed his trade until 1871. During this year came to Helena and established himself in business. In 1873 he was burned out, losing a large stock on which he had no insurance. He resumed business, however, and since 1875 has occupied his present location, and in 1877 erected his present business building. For five years he was in partnership with Paynter & Brown under the firm name of Paynter, Brown & Weisenhorn. He now succeeds the firm and has the leading carriage manufactory in the territory. Mr. Weisenhorn was married in 1879 to Miss Emma Bucher, of Indianapolis, Ind.

HENRY F. WELHOUSER, Sun River Crossing, was born at Newark, N. J., in 1847. His parents died a short time after his birth. Mr. Welhouser worked on a farm until 17 years of age; then enlisted in company F 5th N. Y. Heavy Artillery, and served with the command until the close of the war. Returning to New Jersey, he engaged in farming for Stephen McGee; subsequently worked in a spoke factory at Newark for six months; then in Pettit's trunk factory for three months, when he went to Leavenworth, Kan. There he re-enlisted in the army; six months after was transferred to Ft. Shaw, where he was stationed two and a half years. After obtaining his discharge he worked for Messrs. Ford, of Sun River, until 1874; returned to Newark, N. J., and engaged in the dairy business for two and a half years. In 1877 he returned to Sun River, worked for Messrs. Ford one year, and then located a ranch and commenced gardening and dairy business, which he carries on at the present time. He was married to Miss Sarah M. Frazer, of Newark, N. J., February 2, 1882.

JAMES B. WELLS, Helena, (vide General History.)

WILLIAM F. WENTWORTH, Helena, was born at Lebanon, Me., in 1831. His father was Colonel John J. Wentworth and his grandfather was Thomas Wentworth. The family came from England originally, and have a large family connection in all parts of the United States. His mother's maiden name was Susan Elizabeth Austin, who died in 1831, was also of English descent. He had but one sister, who is still living, and is married to James H. Smith and yet lives at the old home in Lebanon. Mr. Wentworth was raised on a farm. At the age of eighteen years he went to Boston and the first year he worked on a farm; after that he drove an omnibus between Boston and Roxbury for six years, then he entered the wholesale liquor house of T. J. Dunbar & Co., with whom he remained seven years. In 1860 he went into business for himself at Charlestown, Mass., and continued in it until March, 1864, when he moved to St. Joseph, Mo., and thence on April 26, to Virginia City, where he arrived in July, 1864. When Mr. W. left St. Joseph but two other wagons went in his company. They journeyed to Julesburg and only one wagon joined the party on the road. Here they crossed the Platte and continued on to the North Platte. Here, on account of rumors of there being many hostile Indians ahead, his party camped for two weeks for the purpose of increasing their number, to obtain an escort and also to procure a suitable guide. At the end of two weeks his party had increased to seventy-five wagons. In order to take the most direct route they hired the noted Jim Bridger as guide, at a cost $1,000. He piloted the party through Bridger's cut-off, it being the first train that went through that route. The party reached Wind river and prospected the country for a week. They only found poor prospects. Here Mr. Wentworth sold out his teams, wagon, tools, etc., and with a party of thirty went on a prospecting tour to the Big Horn. This river they crossed on rafts, experiencing great difficulty and narrowly escaping death in the torrent. The party prospected in the neighborhood for some time, then joined their train at Clarke's Fork of the Yellowstone, and all pushed forward to Virginia City, where the company dispersed. Many of them are still residents of the Territory. Mr. Wentworth engaged in mining for a short time, but not finding it as profitable as he had hoped, went into business at Virginia City. In August, 1865, he revisited the East, but returned in 1866, and settled at Helena, where he engaged in business for himself. In 1868 Mr. Wentworth went to Boston to purchase a new stock of goods which he brought to Helena, and engaged in the wholesale and retail liquor business, and continued in it until he was burned out. Since then Mr. W. has been the trusted salesman of W. G. Preuitt & Co. In 1868 Mr. Wentworth was married to Miss Maria C. Curtis at Boston.

D. H. WESTON, Treasurer of Montana Territory, is a native of the State of Massachusetts, was born April 8, 1833, and is a son of Isaac and Mary Weston, his mother being a sister to Ex-Governor Weston, of New Hampshire. He for a time attended the Williston seminary, and afterward the schools of Vermont. He spent some time in the city of Boston, and in 1860 went to Colorado, removing in 1863 to Montana and establishing the first boot and shoe store in the mountains of the Territory, under the firm name of Gurney & Co. Purchasing the interest of Mr. Gurney, Mr. Weston extended and carried on the business with good success until 1873, when he engaged in the sheep and cattle business, and has since been thus occupied. July 1, 1875, he was appointed and confirmed Treasurer of Montana Territory, which office he has held to the present time, the second appointment having been in February, 1883. Mr. Weston was married in 1879 to Miss Cornelia P. Sims, a native of Pennsylvania.

WILLIAM F. WHEELER, was born at Warwick, Orange Co., N. Y., July 6, 1824. In the year 1826 the family moved from Orange to Onondaga Co., and remained there until the spring of 1831, when they removed to Pen Yan, Yates Co., and in 1836 to Randolph, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y. From the age of nine until twelve Mr. Wheeler attended the Yates county Academy, but during his residence at Randolph, from 1836 until 1840, he had few school privileges. At the age of sixteen proposed to his father to let him have his time and he would get his own education. This was agreed to. In September of that year he entered the Fredonia Academy in Chautauqua Co., and for two years paid his own way by working mornings and evenings and during the vacations. At the end of this time he was prepared for college, but had no means to pay his way through. In November, 1842, at the instance of his brother, he went to Columbus, O., with the intention of taking a school, but found all in that city and vicinity taken. Just at this time it happened that a friend of his father received an urgent letter from west Tennessee to send a properly qualified teacher to Henry county. Mr. Wheeler immediately went to Cincinnati and took a steamer for the Tennessee river. By a most perverse fortune the Ohio river became frozen over, and the boat was ice bound at Evansville, Ind., until about the middle of December. He learned that the school intended for him had been given two weeks before to another. However, Major Kendall employed him to assist in the affairs of his plantation. It was the duty of Mr. Wheeler to attend to the delivery of the farm products, and to keep an account of sales, etc. In March following Major Kendall sent a flat boat load of farm products to New Orleans in charge of two of his nephews and Mr. Wheeler. The proceeds of their sale, some $4,000, were invested in purchasing supplies for the plantation. After attending to this business Mr. Wheeler returned to Ohio and entered himself an apprentice in the office of Colonel Samuel Medary, of the Ohio Statesman, to learn the printing business. He remained here three years, and during the sessions of the legislature for four winters reported their proceedings for the Statesman. He studied law during all his spare time, and in 1848 was admitted to practice. In 1853 he was married at Columbus, O., to Miss Charlotte Jersey, daughter of Dr. James Lee Brodbelt, of London, England. From this marriage have been born six children, four of whom are still living, viz: Charlotte Alice, married in 1881 to John P. Dyas, Miss Mary C. Wheeler, a teacher in the Helena graded schools, and William Meade and Henry Sibley Wheeler. In 1856 Mr. Wheeler removed with his family to St. Paul, Minn. The financial crash of 1857 prostrated all business. In that Spring, Colonel Medary, his old employer, was appointed governor of the territory of Minnesota, and he appointed Mr. Wheeler to be his private secretary and territorial librarian. The first state governor continued him in the same position. In the spring of 1858 Mr. Wheeler was commissioned by Governor Sibley as Lieutenant-colonel of the First Minn. Vol. Inf. In 1860 he located the first line of telegraph ever built in Minnesota—from St. Paul to Winona—and connected there with the line to La Crosse and Milwaukee. Colonel Wheeler was also one of the first incorporators and projectors of the railroad from St. Paul to Duluth in 1859–60, and was secretary of the company. By personal solicitation he secured enough money to pay for the survey of the line, but the breaking out of the war prevented its construction until after its close. In September, 1861, Colonel Wheeler volunteered and raised a company for the war, of which he was elected First-Lieutenant. His company (F) formed a part of the Fourth Minnesota Infantry, which was stationed at Fort Snelling during the winter of 1861–2. He served as Adjutant of the post during that time. In April, 1862, it joined General Halleck's army in front of Corinth, Miss., and was present at the time of its evacuation by the enemy. After the siege Lieutenant Wheeler was appointed aide-de-camp and A. A. Q. M. on the staff of General Hamilton, of Rosecrans' army, and continued in those positions until the spring of 1863. He fought in the battle of Iuka, where he was wounded; also in the battle of Corinth on October 3 and 4, 1862, and was complimented for gallantry in general orders. He served through the Vicksburg campaign and participated in all its hardships and dangers, and at its close was promoted to be Captain. Upon the entry of his division to garrison the place, after the surrender, he was appointed to the double duty of Inspector General and Picket Officer, which latter place he held on the march to Chattanooga. While on duty Captain Wheeler contracted such a cold as to result in his discharge for disability. For a year after his discharge from the army Captain Wheeler was unfit for any labor. His loss of voice was complete until he came to Montana (June 22, 1869), where he has partly recovered it. After the inauguration of General Grant as President he appointed Mr. Wheeler United States Marshal of Montana, May 15, 1869, and re-appointed him for a second term in December, 1873. On the accession of Mr. Hayes to the Presidency he re-appointed him, and he held the office until April 12, 1878. As United States Marshal Mr. Wheeler was ex-officio superintendent of the United States penitentiary at Deer Lodge. He opened and organized that institution in 1871, and managed it successfully until the expiration of his office. During the time Mr. Wheeler was in office, and indeed ever since, he has taken great pleasure in writing upon the great and varied resources of Montana. For four or five years he furnished the only reports the government has on the mines and mineral resources of Montana. They will be found published in full in the reports of Prof. R. W. Raymond, the United States Commissioner of Mines. Colonel Wheeler wrote a history of the Piegan war in 1870; has been a correspondent of the New Northwest and the Herald, treating in his letters upon general subjects, and has been a member of the Territorial Board of Canvassers. In 1870, as marshal, he took the census of the territory, and later was selected to assist in taking the census of the mines, which duty he performed to the satisfaction of his superiors. The father of Colonel Wheeler was the Rev. Harvey Wheeler, a clergyman of the M. E. church. This accounts for the frequent removals of the family in early times. His grandfather Wheeler served as a soldier through the Revolutionary war, and was elected sheriff of Orange Co., N. Y., from 1808 to 1812. In 1818 Rev. Harvey Wheeler married Miss Mary Lazear, of Orange Co., N. Y. Her father was also a soldier of the Revolution. His ancestors came from Holland, where they were known as French political refugees. Colonel Wheeler had four brothers and four sisters, two of whom still survive, viz: Mrs. Charles T. Greenleaf, of Bath, Me., and Mrs. Jonas Searing, of Newport, Ky.

T. F. White, Helena, of the firm of Miner & White, was born August 2, 1864, at Shakopee, Minn.; attended the public schools there until 1878, then left for Helena, Mont., arriving there August 29, 1878. He continued his studies for two years, then bought an interest in the business of F. D. Miner, of Sandy Creek, N. Y., who had been conducting the trade since 1878. Business has been carried on since under the firm name of Miner & White, carriage and wagon painters. Their shop is located on the corner of Price and Close sts.

Ezekiel S. Wilkinson, now a farmer of Pear Creek Valley, was born in West Virginia September 28, 1817. His parents' names were Joseph and Nancy (Stewart) Wilkinson; the former was a farmer and distiller by occupation and served as a soldier in the war of 1812. Mr. E. S. Wilkinson went to Shelbyville, Ind., in 1853, where he published the first paper in that county and remained there for about a year and a half; then returned to West Virginia, subsequently went to Missouri, near St. Joseph, where he remained 19 years, serving as Postmaster, at Weston four years under Pierce's administration. From Weston he went to Olathe, Kan., where he was elected Probate Judge, serving while Kansas was a territory and after its admission as a state, joined the Confederate Army under General Price and was in the service for about one year. In 1864 came to Alder Gulch and in the fall of the same year to Grizzly Gulch. After mining there a short time began the publication of the Rocky Mountain Gazette, August 11, 1866, and soon issued a daily paper. The subscription price was $28 for daily and $8 for weekly. He employed Major Maginnis in the office. The office and all its contents were burned by fire September, 1866. In December, 1875, he took charge of the Bozeman Times. He continued the publication of the Times until August 27, 1878, when he retired to his present ranch, which consists of 160 acres, and which had previously been purchased by him in 1866. Mr. Wilkinson was married in 1837, near Knightstown, Ind., to Miss Maria Freeland, a native of Greene Co., Pa. They have three children living: Lieutenant John W., of the Army; Allan M. and Robert F. There were three others: Henry, Josephine and Dora, numbered among the dead. Henry was superintendent of schools in Lewis & Clarke county previous to his death in 1878.

Joseph R. Witmer, Helena, was born April 22, 1844, in Waterloo Co., Ontario, Canada. He attended school at Hester and learned the blacksmithing trade at Dumfries. He worked subsequently at his trade at various points in the Dominion, including Wellington, Preston, Guelph, Woodford and Norwich, afterward at Salt Lake City, Utah, and again at St. Catherines, Canada. After four years spent at the latter place he pushed westward, arriving at Helena, Mont., May 31, 1878. For nearly two years he was employed by C. M. Jeffries, and then, with his brother, Martin A. Witmer, bought the stock and leased the building, purchasing the latter in November following. The firm of Witmer Brothers carries on a general blacksmithing and wagon and carriage making business. J. R. Witmer was married March 9, 1871, and has one son, Percy Rowland Witmer.

Martin A. Witmer, of the firm of Witmer Bros., Helena, was born April 14, 1848, in Waterloo Co., Ontario, Canada; attended school at Hesper; worked two years on a farm and learned the wagon and carriage making business at Hesper and Branchton. He worked several years at his trade in a number of Canadian towns, and was subsequently located three years at Corinne, Utah, one year at Franklin, Idaho, and since May 6, 1878, has been a resident of Helena. With his brother, J. R. Witmer, he bought out his old employer at this place, Charles M. Jeffries, and the two have since then (1881) conducted a flourishing business. Mr. Witmer was married December 28, 1878, to Miss Sarah E. Weldon, of Corinne, Utah.

JOHN J. WOODS, P. O. Florence, was born in Sheridan Co., Mo., February 9, 1847, where his parents, Patrick and Elizabeth Woods, resided for some years, his father being engaged in agriculture and dealing in stock, in which pursuits Mr. Woods took quite an active part until his coming to Montana in 1864. This trip was made overland by ox teams and numerous difficulties were encountered. Arriving in the territory he visited several mining camps. In 1868 he engaged in ranching in Meagher county. In 1879 he moved to Lewis & Clarke county and settled on Willow Creek; has since been engaged in sheep raising and ranching. Mr. Woods was married at Helena to Miss Lily May Vivion February 15, 1870. They are the parents of three children.

JOSEPH P. WOOLMAN, Territorial Auditor, Helena, son of James and Mary Ann Woolman, of Woodstown, Salem Co., N. J., was born February 5, 1841. He was raised and received a preparatory education in New Jersey, after which he attended the Pennsylvania State Normal School at Millersville. He then taught one year, and at the expiration of that time went to Philadelphia and became connected with a wholesale dry goods house, where he remained two years. In 1864 he moved to Salt Lake City and passed the ensuing year in teaching in the Salt Lake valley. During the year 1865 he came to Helena, engaged in keeping books in a grocery house, and for several years was connected with mercantile pursuits. In 1876 he represented Montana on the Centennial Commission, and was commissioned from Montana to the Paris Exposition in 1878. In 1879 he was appointed by Governor Potts and confirmed by the Council as Auditor of the Territory. He being afterward appointed by Governor Crosby and confirmed for three terms. Mr. Woolman is largely interested in stock-raising as also in real estate in various sections of the country. During the year 1880 he was married to Mrs. S. E. Glendinen, of Ohio.

HENRY C. YAEGER, Helena, was born at Carlsruhe, Baden, Germany, December 15, 1845, and from his eighth to his sixteenth year was instructed in all the different branches of music. A portion of this time was devoted to the gymnasium and two years to the polytechnic school; this forming a most excellent foundation for a useful and happy life. At the age of sixteen he left Germany, traveled a short time through France and England, and then went to America, landing at Portland, Me. Shortly afterward he went to Boston, enlisted in the volunteer army as a private in the Twentieth Massachusetts Infantry, a part of the grand army of the Potomac, and remained in the service until July 16, 1865. In October, of the same year, he re-enlisted in the regular army, connecting himself with the cavalry branch. After serving one year he was appointed leader of the band at Carlisle Barracks, Pa. In 1867 he was transferred to the Third U. S. Cavalry, at Fort Union, N. M., with duties largely instructive. After organizing a band at Fort Union he went to the Thirty-seventh U. S. Infantry, stationed at Santa Fe, N. M., and organized a band there. In 1869 he was transferred to the Third U. S. Infantry and appointed leader of its band, remaining with it until 1877, when he applied for and obtained a discharge. He then went to Helena and established himself as Professor of music, and at the same time organizing and leading the Helena Silver Cornet Band. He also became musical director of the "Harmonia." He was married to Miss Philomena Benda, of St. Louis, June 20, 1871, and has six sons: Henry Humboldt, Frederick Spencer, Chas. Newton, Lancelot Darwin, Arthur Payne and Eugene Huxley. The first was born at Fort Wallace, second at Fort Hayes, third at New Orleans, fourth at Holly Springs, fifth and sixth at Helena. Mr. Yaeger was wounded at the battles of the Wilderness, Malvern Hill and Deep Bottom, Va. He is a member of the A. O. U. W., also of Wadsworth Post, G. A. R., at Helena. He was elected to the Post of Public Administrator, December 15, 1884; was also elected D. G. M. of Montana in the A. O. U. W.

GEORGE YERGY, Helena, of the firm of Gebauer & Yergy, sash, door and blind manufacturers, was born in Pennsylvania in 1836. When seventeen years old he was employed in a planing mill, and spent four years in learning the business. He located in Helena, M. T., in 1878, worked four years in planing mills, then bought the interest of Mr. Horton in the planing mill business of Gebauer, Horton & Co. For two years he has also been successfully engaged in sheep-raising.

HENRY YERGY, Helena, was born in Montgomery Co., Penn., on the 13th of August, 1845. He lived at home, attending school steadily until he was sixteen years of age, when he enlisted in the 125th Pennsylvania Infantry, and served one year. Then going to Altoona, Penn., he worked in a shop for three years, learning the carpenter's and joiner's trade. He next obtained a position as foreman of a track-repairing gang, at Knoxville, Tenn., until the war ended, and soon afterward went west. After stopping some time at St. Louis, he came on to Helena, Mont., where he worked at carpentering for five years, at the end of which time, in 1871, he, in company with Mr. Sheffer, built a planing-mill, which they ran till 1882. Then, selling out his interest in that business, and a herd of stock that he had, Mr. Yergy entered into the hardware business. In 1877 he was married to Mrs. Ida B. Rinker, of Livingston, Iowa, and they have one child. Mr. Yergy is a director of the Helena board of trade, and owns one of the finest residences in town.

ED. J. ZIMMERMAN, International Hotel, Helena, was born at Frankfort-on-the-Main, March 20, 1838. His father died when he was but two years of age, and at thirteen years of age he secured a position in a mercantile house, at Frankfort, where he remained two and a half years. Then coming to the United States, he took a position in a mercantile house in New York city, where he remained until 1855, when he started for California, but stranded at Nicaragua. At seventeen and a half years of age he served as steward on the steamer Golden Gate; in 1856 was engaged as steward in the leading restaurant and hotel in San Francisco; in the fall of 1856 he went to Eureka, Nev., and was given charge of the Metropolitan Hotel in that city. In 1857 he went to Oregon, and took charge of the Union Hotel at Jacksonville, where he remained until April, 1858, when he joined the stampede to Frazer river. Soon returning to Victoria, B. C., his services were there secured in the American Hotel, and the following spring he bought the hotel business, which he ran until the fall of 1859, when he went to Oregon, and buying horses, went thence to Fort Thompson, on the Frazer river. In 1862 he returned to Victoria, and in the spring of 1863 went to Cariboo, in British Columbia, where he was occupied in the mercantile business two years. In 1865, with five companions, he fitted out twenty pack animals and five riding ponies, with which they crossed the mountains, reaching Helena in November. In the spring of 1866 he went to the Elk Creek diggings, and engaged in the mercantile business. In May, 1866, he made a trip down the Yellowstone, returned in the fall to Elk Creek, bought the No. 1 Discovery Mining Claim, and remained one year. In 1867 he went to Helena, and engaged in the restaurant and bakery business; in April, 1869, was burned out, but immediately rebuilt the Can-Can Restaurant, which he ran one year, and then formed a partnership with Sam Schuab. In October, 1869, he was married to Miss Ernestina Schuab, a native of Germany. They are the parents of two children, Adolph A. and Samuel M. In company with Mr. Schuab he bought the old Walla Walla stand on Main street, they changing the name to the Cosmopolitan Hotel, and so continuing till 1872, when the Cosmopolitan was burned down; but they having previously rented the St. Louis Hotel, opened it the day after the fire, and subsequently bought the house. About the year 1871 Mr. Zimmerman also bought a ranch in the Pear Creek Valley, which now contains 1,200 acres, well fenced, and finely improved.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

MADISON COUNTY.

R. P. Bateman, P. O. Sheridan, was born September 3, 1828, in Jefferson Co., N. Y., son of William Bateman, M. D. Our subject received his education in Clinton Institute, N. Y., and at the early age of nineteen commenced teaching school, a vocation he followed twelve years in New York State, after which he moved to Wisconsin and engaged in teaching, when he was elected Superintendent of public instruction. His next move was to Michigan, where he held the same position. From there he came to Minnesota, and here taught school in winter, farming in summer. In 1864 Mr. Bateman landed in the great mining fields of Montana, remaining in Alder Gulch six months and working in the mines by the day. He then moved to the Home Station and kept the place one year for Ben Holliday, making $2,200. After this he went on to Fish Creek and engaged in farming and dairying for eight months. In November, 1866, he located a farm of 160 acres on Mill Creek, and the following spring put in a crop of forty acres. In 1867 he received the appointment of postmaster, keeping the mail in a cigar box. At the same time he made his start in the mercantile business with a few overalls and shirts and a little tobacco. He continued to put a little more ground under cultivation from season to season, also to add to his lands and goods, and now he carries a stock of goods valued at $20,000, owning 1,280 acres of land on which the town site of Sheridan is located. It is the best location for a town in the Ruby Valley, protected as it is from all winds, having such excellent water resources and being the nearest town to the large quartz mines. Mr. Bateman was elected on the Democratic ticket to the office of County Commissioner and served two terms. In 1854 he was married to Ellen A. Crowfoot; to them have been born seven children: Ellen, born in Oakland Co., Mich., March 11, 1854; Helen, born in Minnesota, August 7, 1856; Charles R., born in Oakland Co., Mich., January 30, 1860, died August, 1874; Eva C., born in Sheridan, M. T., May 16, 1870, died September, 1870; Lucy F., born August 21, 1871; Ida T., born September 7, 1874; Mary E., born May 6, 1876; last three named born in Sheridan, M. T.

Geo. W. Beehrer, Willis P. O., son of Christian and Nancy Beehrer, was born at Stuttgart, Wurtemburg, Germany, April 24, 1834, was educated in Germany, immigrated in 1852 and settled in Michigan, where he was engaged in agriculture for over five years. He journeyed to California in 1858, mining and farming in that State until 1863, the date of his enlistment in the U. S. Cavalry. He accompanied the command to Washington, and served subsequently in General Lowell's Brigade as an officer. At the close of the war he revisited Germany, but in 1866 returned to the United States and located in Madison Co., M. T. Since 1866 he has been engaged in the dairy business at Butte City. He with his brother now own 900 acres on the Big Hole River, where they are engaged in stock and grain farming on an extensive scale.

A. N. Bull, P. O. Enniss, was born near the city of Columbus, in Franklin Co., Ohio; son of Dr. Nathan Thompson and Fidelia (Wilson) Bull, latter a daughter of Samuel Wilson, who died at Maumee City, Ohio. Dr. Bull settled in Columbus, Ohio, in 1812, coming from northern New York, near Lake Champlain. Our subject's parents reared a family of ten children, A. N. being the only son. His father, one of the old time citizens, died at Columbus in 1882. Mr. Bull was a farmer and a railroad man in Ohio, on the Columbus and Hocking railroad. He served in 133d Regiment under Colonel G. S. Ennis as Adjutant. On October 13, 1857, A. N. Bull married, in Joliet, Ill., Miss Alvira Dixon, daughter of John and Harriett W. Dixon, former from Zanesville, latter from Granville, Ohio. To this union have been born three daughters and two sons: Harriett F., now Mrs. Homer Hutton, of Gallatin Valley, Frederick W., Alice C., Horace N., and Mary F., all born in Columbus, Ohio., except Mary F., who is a native of Athens, Ohio. Frederick W. is a railroad agent at Buchtel, Athens Co., Ohio. Mr. Bull came to Montana June, 1875, and is one of the substantial and permanent citizens of Madison county. He is a member of the I. O. O. F.; was a member of the Grange in its day. In politics he is a Republican and a radical temperance man. He is a supporter of the Methodist church. He was a student of Otterbine. Mrs. Bull graduated at a Methodist college at Worthington.

G. W. Burns, P. O. Enniss, was born January 1, 1845, in New York City; son of James and Martha Burns, and in 1847 his parents brought him to Ottawa, Ill., where he engaged in farming. He served in the First Illinois Artillery, under Captain Hotaling (from Ottawa) for three years, in the war of the Rebellion, and was three months in the Western Army in various divisions under General Sheridan; was mustered out in Springfield, Ill., in 1864. In 1866 Mr. Burns crossed the plains to Montana and engaged in freighting between Salt Lake and Fort Benton to Virginia City for about two years; came to Madison valley in 1868, and after some years working on a ranch by the month, he, in 1876, purchased his present home of 320 acres as fine land as can be found in the valley, all under fence and cultivation. He does a general farming business, and for the past thirteen years has operated a threshing machine. His old partner was A. W. Switzer. Most of his business is in the Ruby Valley. His farm is provided with all modern machinery and houses for the care of it, and has good buildings for his stock and grain. Mr. Burns was a member of the Grange. He is a Good Templar, a Master Mason of Virginia City Lodge, being raised to the third degree in 1884.

JOSEPH J. BOYER, Pony P. O., was born March 15, 1832, in Coatesville, Chester Co., Penn.; son of Nicholas Boyer. Joseph J. resided with an uncle from his ninth to his sixteenth year on a farm; attended the Cooper's Academy at West Chester, Pa., for one term. Served an apprenticeship at the printing business in Wilmington, Del., in the office of the Delaware Republican. After his time expired worked as a compositor in some of the principal Eastern cities, and in the summer of 1854 went to Cincinnati and was employed by the Methodist Book Concern in the stereotype department. Here he obtained a situation as foreman of a newspaper to go to Kansas City, with Messrs. Miller & Elliott, the editors and proprietors, and the necessary printing outfit. They journeyed by steamboat, subsequently moved their paper to the Quaker Mission, and from there to Lawrence, a town of about seventy-five inhabitants and twenty houses, most of them made of poles, wigwam shaped, primitive in appearance, but comfortable. Their office consisted of a shake-house with sawdust floor, in size 12x16. Mr. Boyer acted as compositor, devil and pressman on the plain, and continued with the Republican until the spring of 1856, when the small rebellion occurred. Volunteers were called upon by the settlers of Hickory Point for protection from the bogus law party. They responded to the call, and the consequence was a battle and an arrest by the U. S. troops of 109 of the volunteers. Mr. Boyer was one of the number arrested. He was held as prisoner in Lecompton and Tecumseh about four months, when he escaped with others by digging through the brick walls of the court-house at Tecumseh. In the fall of 1857 he visited his home in Pennsylvania, returning the following spring to Lawrence in company with his brother William, who soon after joined a party en route for Pike's Peak. In the spring of 1859, receiving encouraging news from his brother, Joseph J. caught the gold fever, and accompanied by a friend started with a mule team for the Rocky mountains; arrived at the then embryo village of Denver on the 4th of July, and in a few days went to the Gregory mines.

WILLIAM BOYER, Pony P. O., brother of Joseph J. Boyer, was born July 16, 1834, in Chester Co., Penn. He received a common school education, and in 1858, in company with his brother Joseph, moved to Kansas. About this time an Indian showed them $200 worth of gold nuggets, which he said he got "way out Pike's Peak; lay down to drink in little creek; see um shine in water." A party of forty-eight, including Mr. Boyer, were soon on their way with ox teams and all necessaries for a long trip. The Indian declined to act as guide, saying, "White man no find gold, you hang Indian." They arrived the following 4th of July, but found no nuggets in the little creek. In a short time William joined a party en route to New Mexico; while there he heard gold was being found on the South Platte, and immediately started for the diggings. On their arrival the party immediately staked off a town site and named it Montana. Mr. Boyer with others became dissatisfied, went five miles down the stream and platted another town site. In 1863 the Boyer brothers, Joseph J. and William J., located in Montana, where they have since resided and have been engaged mostly in mining and prospecting. In 1871 they purchased a farm on Willow Creek, together with cattle and horses, and immediately engaged in farming and stock raising. In 1879 Joseph J. was elected to the territorial legislature. At the present time the brothers, with a sister, own 720 acres of good farming and meadow land with an excellent surrounding stock range. Boyer Brothers also own some valuable mining property.

JAMES E. CALLAWAY, Virginia City, was born in Kentucky in 1835. His father and mother were Kentuckians; his grandfathers Virginians; his paternal grandmother a South Carolinian; and his maternal grandmother (whose father, Col. James Hamilton, was killed in the revolutionary war) was a native of Georgia. His grandfather Callaway was also a revolutionary soldier, and was one of Boone's party when he settled in Kentucky with his family. The father of James E. Callaway was an eminent minister, a man of fine culture, who exercised the greatest care and zeal in the education of his children. After his collegiate days, James studied law with Governor Yates, of Illinois, and was admitted to the bar in 1857. He is also a member of the bar of the U. S. Supreme Court, and has been in active practice for over a quarter of a century. He was captain of the first company that entered the service in April, 1861, from Douglas Co., Ill., which became Company D, Twenty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers—General Grant's old regiment. He remained in the service until the close of the war, rose to the rank of Colonel, and part of the time commanded a brigade. For conspicuously gallant services he was by order of General Rosecrans placed on the "Roll of Honor," and made commander of one of his "Light Brigades." After the war he married an educated and estimable lady at Paris, Ill. They have three children, all boys, and reside at Virginia City, where the Colonel is engaged in the practice of law. Colonel Callaway is an experienced legislator and parliamentarian, having been a member of the Illinois Legislature, and a member of the Constitutional Convention of Montana. He has been a resident of Montana fourteen years, having served six and a half years of that time as secretary of the territory. In November, 1884, he was elected a member of the House of Representatives from Madison county, and on the assembling of the fourteenth session was elected speaker. He enjoys the distinction of being the first republican who has ever presided over a legislative body in Montana.

NIELS CHRISTIANSEN, P. O. Sheridan, was born in Toudor, August 13, 1840. He spent the early part of his life and was educated there, and in 1861 emigrated to America. He settled in the State of Missouri and followed farming for three years, then moved to the mines of Montana, arriving in due time at Alder Gulch, where he mined for eighteen months; then proceeded to Indian Creek, Ruby valley, and located a farm; this he afterward sold, then purchased Mr. Beardsley's ranch. Mr. Christiansen, in 1868, married Miss Carrie Crane, and to them were born, all in Ruby Valley, six children: Fannie, born June 11, 1870; Mary, born February 11, 1872; Mary J., born March 26, 1874; Christian, born January 4 1876; Hattie, born April 3, 1879; Esther, born December 23, 1882. Mr. Christiansen owns 240 acres of good agricultural land.

ALFRED CISLER, Sheridan P. O., was born in Muncy, Penn., February 6, 1823, son of Houston Cisler, a farmer. Our subject received a common school education, and at the age of nineteen went to farming for himself. He afterward engaged in the lumber business until 1860, when, concluding there was more money in mining, in Colorado, he went there, and mined in the Kent county lead, making in three years $20,000. In 1864 he went to Montana and in 1865 located the Mountain Queen mine, and the following year located his farm, and put in wheat, barley and oats. He paid 15 cents per pound for oats, 15 cents for barley; for wheat $8 per pound, and $100 per month for farm hands. His crop averaged 20 bushels per acre. He knew nothing about irrigating. In 1871 he located the Broadgauge lead, in company with Daniel Zim and Henry Eling, and they took out $100,000. In 1878 Mr. Cisler bought out his partners for the consideration of $10,000. He owns a half-section of land, also the Broadgauge 20-stamp mill. In 1887

Mr. Cisler was married to Miss Annie, daughter of Joseph Nichol, in Michigan. They have had seven children: Alfred Henry, born in Michigan, June 8, 1858, died August 16, 1858; Joseph E., born in Colorado, October 7, 1861; William Thomas, born July 19, 1867, died October 28, 1874; Charles Nichol, born July 29, 1869; James Franklin, born April 30, 1871; Mary Annie, born September 6, 1873, and Rachael Matilda, born March 31, 1877. Five last named born on Mill Creek, Madison Co., M. T.

F. E. CURTIS, Ranchman P. O., Fish Creek, son of J. C. and Catherine Curtis, was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., January 25, 1833, where he was educated and taught the trade of carriage-maker. In 1855 he visited Kalamazoo and Chicago; arrived at St. Paul, Minn., in 1857; visited the Red River country north to Fort Garry; returned to St. Paul; and in 1862, set out on his western journey to Idaho; arrived at Deer Lodge when there were only two families there; thence to Warm Springs; thence to Bannack, where he arrived September 30, 1862, to find 150 men at work before him. He remembers the panic caused by the presence of Winnemucca's band of Bannacks, in the fall of 1862, when those Indians supposed they had the Blackfeet in their power, and a hundred kindred items, many of which are related in the general history. In the spring of 1863, Mr. Curtis and Philip Lovell opened a butcher's shop at Bannack, which was carried on until 1866. In this year he moved to Beaver Head Valley, near Beaver Head Rock, and took up a ranch opposite Sim Estes' place, where he and Mr. Lovell have been since engaged in the stock business. Mr. Curtis moved to his present ranch in Jefferson Valley, in 1870, where he owns 480 acres of deeded land, 75 head of horses, and 1,000 cattle. He was married, October 8, 1864, to Miss Emma Witcomb, daughter of V. and M. A. Witcomb, born at London, England, December 1, 1846.

JOHN DONEGAN (Ranchman, Puller's Springs), born near Slane, in Meath Co., Ireland, December 10, 1836, came to the United States in 1851, with his parents and eight brothers and sisters. On arriving in New York, Mr. Donegan, Sr., established a brick yard opposite Stony Point, which he conducted until 1857, when the family moved to Galena, Ill. Here John Donegan, who preceded the family, established a beef and pork packing house. In 1863–4 the gold fever, Ben Holliday's coach, and a Mormon train, took him to Alder Gulch, where he arrived April 4, 1864, at a time when there was only one cabin between Box Elder, U. T., and Dempsey's ranch, on the Stinkingwater. Here he was employed by the California Co., at $7 per day, until the fall of 1864, when, with Stephen Cahill, he bought into mining ground at Elkhorn Bar, Nevada Dist. In 1866 he, with Lambrect Tallafero, General T. F. Meagher and others, purchased the first Catholic Church at Virginia City, for the use of the saintly Father Giorda. In 1865 he was elected member of the Legislature, and re-elected in 1868, on the Democratic ticket, his service being marked by honesty and industry. In 1877 the Republicans placed his name on their ticket. During this year he moved from his mines to his farm on the upper Ruby River, where he now owns 800 acres of land, about 200 head of stock, and a large grain product. He was married in August, 1868, to Miss Mary Crowley, a native of Monroe, Mich. This lady died January 13, 1883.

GEORGE L. DUKE, Lower Willow creek, is a native of Kentucky, born October 26, 1824, in Ohio Co., was the eldest of the family of ten children of Richard and Sarah Duke. At the age of twenty-one years he went to Missouri and engaged in farming, and in May, 1848, he married Miss Catherine Deering, and to this union have been born five children: Elizabeth, born in Lexington, Mo., February 13, 1849; Florence, born in Papinsville, Mo., March 22, 1859; George, born in Clinton, Mo., October 18, 1861; Virginia, born in Virginia City, M. T., October 31, 1864; Emma, born in Helena, M. T., April 11, 1866. In 1853 Mr. Duke moved to Papinsville for the purpose of studying law, but instead carried on a wool carding factory, a blacksmith shop, a hotel and a store. By frugal management and hard labor he accumulated about $15,000, when the war broke out and he lost all his property. He then took his family to Carlyle, Ill., and manufactured boots and shoes until 1864, when he crossed the plains to Montana, arriving in Virginia City July 20, 1864. During the winter of 1864–5 he supported his family by sawing wood through the day and mending boots and shoes in the evening. In the following spring he moved to Helena, where he teamed with one yoke of oxen until 1866, when he took contracts for putting up buildings. Mr. Duke was elected justice of the police court three terms. His next move was to Prickly Pear valley. Here he farmed awhile, then located a large ranch on Willow creek and engaged in cattle raising and farming. Was elected county commissioner in 1871 and held the office for seven years.

REV. HUGH DUNCAN, Sheridan P. O., was born near the city of Glasgow, Scotland, June 28, 1824, is a son of Rev. James Duncan, a clergyman in Scotland. Our subject worked in the mines of Scotland when quite young, and until he came to America. He is self-educated. After working all day in the mines he would study at night by the light of a candle. In 1852 he emigrated to the United States, where he could have a larger field for his labors, and went to work in the mines of Pennsylvania. In 1857 he moved to Kansas, where he lived during the Kansas trouble and until 1864; he then crossed the plains to Montana and located on German Bar, Alder gulch. Here he followed mining until 1869, and was here associated with the M. E. church organization. He labored in the mines during the week and preached on Sunday, being the only minister; he conducted all the funeral services. He organized the first Sunday School in the Territory. In 1869 he located a farm of 160 acres in Ruby Valley, and is now engaged in farming and stock raising, still delivering his Sunday sermons. In 1846 Rev. Duncan was married to Miss Christiana Young, daughter of a miner in Scotland, and to this union were born the following children: born in Scotland—Christinia, March 15, 1847; James, January 20, 1849; Thomas, February 23, 1851; Infant, April 25, 1854; Sarah, May 25, 1856; born in Kansas—Harry, September 28, 1858; Hugh, March 30, 1861; born in Alder gulch—Maggie, July 5, 1865; Florrie, December 10, 1867. Rev. Hugh Duncan was united with the Masonic fraternity in Scotland, is now D. G. M. He was one of the nine who first organized the Grand Lodge in Virginia City, M. T., January 24, 1866. He also belonged to the vigilance committee; he is a Good Templar.

WILLIAM ENNIS, P. O.; Ennis was born in Kirkestown, Down County, Ireland, March 17, 1828, sixth child of eleven sons and daughters born to John and Mary (McKey) Ennis. Our subject worked on a farm till he was fourteen years old, and then emigrated with his father to the United States. After three or four years his father returned to his native country, but young William thought America better suited to his liking, and so remained, and apprenticed himself to the moulder's trade in Albany, N. Y. Growing tired, however, before he had finished his apprenticeship, he went to Detroit, Mich., and became a machinist under the guidance of a Mr. Bartley. He then took a position as mechanic on the Michigan Southern R. R. until 1857, when he crossed the Missouri river into Kansas, proceeding from there to Pike's Peak. August 11, 1861, Mr. Ennis married Miss Catherine Shriver, born in Carroll Co., Ohio, daughter of John Shriver, one of the wealthy men of that section. To Mr. and Mrs. Ennis have been born two children: Jennie W., born in Ohio on the old homestead of her mother, and William John, born in Madison valley January 29, 1867. In 1863 Mr. Ennis crossed the plains from Pike's Peak to Montana, and after a short time spent in Bannack, the mining center, he came to Madison valley and erected the first cabin there. He was a freighter and wanted a home for winter; his experience in Colorado had taught him that a home would be valuable to him. In 1864 he returned with a team for his family and in 1865 had them with him in the valley. Our subject followed freighting in the mountains from the Missouri river to points in Colorado and New Mexico. He now owns his homestead of 280 acres in addition to a hay ranch, once the property of the notorious Slade, and a one-fourth section of R. R. land. During all Mr. Ennis' freighting he was never robbed or molested by any of the bands that infested the mountains. He opened the first store in the autumn of 1880, and a P.O. called Enniss was established in 1881. Mr. Ennis deals in general merchandise. He erected his palatial residence in 1882, occupying one year in building it. It is the best residence in the county, and one of the best in the Territory. It has fifteen rooms completely finished throughout in modern style of architecture. The main residence is 18x32; wing to south, 18x18; first story eleven feet. The whole is surmounted with a tower in which there are two good rooms, one vestibule and one room above. There are also a dining-room, a kitchen, a woodshed, a milk room and a pantry, and in an addition, 18x21, is the pump-room; in this is a drive well eighteen feet deep. Under the north building is a cellar well fitted up. The old building was carried away by Willie and his mother during Mr. Ennis' absence. In was an ancient land-mark and much missed by the natives. Mrs. Ennis took great delight and labored hard to get a home. She was the architect of her own house, assisted by a carpenter to make calculations, and it is now a very creditable work. Mr. Ennis has also a good barn building, 36x46. He was one of the committee to superintend the putting up of the hall, which cost about $2,000, in which the "old timers" enjoy themselves in church, dance and social gatherings. He is interested in the ditch now being excavated in the valley.

Z. D. Foster, P. O. Fish Creek, son of Zenas and Matilda Foster, was born near Indianapolis, Ind., February 1, 1836. In 1852 he moved to a point near Unionville, Ia., where he was engaged in agriculture until 1859. He was married March 1, 1857, to Miss Emily, daughter of Silas and Lucy Yonge, who was born near Lancaster, Ky., November 1, 1839, and settled with her parents in Jefferson Co., Ia., in 1843. In 1859 Mr. Foster, leaving his family in Iowa, started for Pike's Peak; but on reaching the Platte, turned his steps toward California, where he arrived August 22, 1859. In 1862 he returned to Iowa; but early the following year started with his own family and others for Green River, where his brother's wife and child died and were buried opposite where is now the R. R. depot. Mr. Foster remained at Green River in charge of the stage-station until the spring of 1864, when he proceeded to Alder gulch via Bannack, and on his arrival there engaged in hauling wood from the mountains, earning $16 per day. On February 1, 1865, the family left Alder gulch for Jefferson valley, where Mr. Foster located to ranch near Fish Creek. In 1869 he located his Spring creek farm, where he has made his home since that time. In the general history a full reference is made to those stirring times in which Mr. Foster came to the territory. Of him it must be said that he shared with the pioneers many of their trials.

James S. Garoutte, Sheridan P. O., was born October 28, 1828, in Ohio; son of James Garoutte, a farmer in Ohio, who held, at various times, the offices of sheriff of St. Joseph Co., Ind., and justice of the peace in Greene Co., Mo. Our subject resided with his father —attending school in Missouri—until the age of 15. He then went, without his parents' consent, to Kentucky; but finding no fortune there, he proceeded to Indiana and worked on a farm for two years, after which time he returned to his father's home in Missouri, and there remained contentedly two years. In 1850 he went to California, and there followed both mining and stock-raising until 1858; then went with a party on a prospecting tour to Frazer river, B. N. A. Abandoning the party, Mr. Garoutte returned to California and again engaged in mining; also started an express business, at which he continued until 1862, when he went to The Dalles and followed freighting. From there moved to the John Day country, and there mined three years. Then he journeyed to British Columbia, and from there into Montana in 1866, first settling at Summit in Alder gulch, where he started the first flume. Here he remained twelve years, accumulating $10,000 out of his mines, and in 1878 he bought Mr. Wakefield's farm in the Ruby valley, onto which he moved. In 1870 Mr. Garoutte married Miss Anna M. Roice, by whom he had seven children: Alfie Eureka, born at Summit, Alder gulch, July 18, 1871; Annie Laurie, born at Summit, September 28, 1872; Clarrie Bell, born in Virginia City, May 16, 1874; Wm. Herschel, born in Summit, April 18, 1876; Mary Jane, born in Summit, June 23, 1877; Thomas Homer, born in Ruby valley, August 21, 1879; James C., born in Ruby valley, April 27, 1881. Mr. Garoutte was elected on the Democratic ticket as representative of Madison county. He is a F. & A. M. He has 270 acres of land under good cultivation, 250 head of fine cattle and 100 head of good horses.

H. S. Gilbert, Virginia City, son of Henry and Lydia Gilbert, was born in Berks Co., Pa., December 31, 1833; moved to Indiana in 1854; visited Kansas and Missouri in 1855; proceeded to Ft. Laramie in 1856, where he traded with the Sioux and Crows. He carried on trade with the Snakes subsequently at South Pass, and there erected the first house, now known as Gilbert's Trading Post. He built another post twenty miles below South Pass, on the Sweet Water, where he carried on trade until the fall of 1860, when he moved to Ft. Bridger to take charge of Millet, Russell & Co's post, and to trade also with the Snakes and Utes. In 1862 he contracted to supply the garrison at Ft. Bridger with beef. After selling his interests at Millersville in August, 1863, he moved to Alder Gulch (September 1, 1863), where he mined in the Pine Grove district. In the spring of 1864 he started a brewery at Virginia City, which he has conducted successfully since that time. He was educated in Boyertown, Pa., where he learned the saddler's trade, and operated his own shop from the spring to the fall of 1854, when he entered upon his Western travels. In 1870 he was elected county assessor; in 1872, mayor of Virginia City; served as alderman of that city for two terms; was elected treasurer of Madison county in 1880. His grain and stock ranch on Madison creek is beautifully located and very fertile. There he grows the greatest part, if not all, the grain used in the brewery, and has a herd of seventy-five horses, together with stock. He was married at Fort Bridger to Miss Margaret, daughter of John and Elizabeth McMunn, November 20, 1860. They are the parents of fourteen children—eleven girls and three boys. During his life on the plains and among the mountains he has shared in many, if not all, the adventures of pioneer days.

George Gohn, Virginia City, son of George and Margaret Ann Gohn, was born in York Co., Pa., March 28, 1834; was educated in that county, and resided there until September, 1856, when he went to Kansas. In April, 1859, he moved toward Colorado via the Sante Fe trail, arriving there June 3, that year. He was engaged in mining and following the butcher's trade until the summer of 1860, when he moved to Nevada. He remained in that state until April, 1863, when he started via Salt Lake City for Montana, arriving at Bannack, May 11, 1863, where he mined until June 6, 1863, the date of his settlement in Alder Gulch. During his travels members of his party ate some wild parsnip. Measures were at once taken to rescue those poisoned—whisky, lard and eggs were freely administered—so that of the great number in danger of death only two succumbed to the poison. In the fall of 1863 Mr. Gohn revisited Colorado, returning to Alder Gulch May 1, 1864, and starting a meat market, which business he has carried on since that time. He was assessor of Madison county in 1872; school trustee for three years; county commissioner for four years, and city assessor, treasurer, and at present time school trustee. His wife, Miss Anna Zweifell, to whom he was married in 1861, was born at Zurich, Switzerland, February 20, 1843; came to the United States in 1853, went to Kansas in 1859, to Colorado early in 1860, and was married in Colorado in 1861. Mr. Gohn is a member of the K. T. commandery.

GEORGE LESLIE GORDON, Willow Creek, was born February 27, 1840, in Clinton Co., N. Y., son of William and Anna Gordon. He received a liberal education; served an apprenticeship as millwright. From 1860 to 1862 he mined in Colorado, coming in the latter year to Montana; prospected at Grasshopper Creek, where Bannack has since been built, but not finding gold in paying quantities, he abandoned the locality and went to Deer Lodge. Soon after learning that gold had been found on Grasshopper Creek, in paying quantities, he returned and immediately staked off two claims, out of which he realized $1,600. In 1863 Mr. Gordon moved to Alder Gulch and mined until 1865, when he moved to the Jefferson Valley and located a farm near Gallatin city, where he lived for ten years. Then selling his farm he purchased a half interest in the Norwegian lead for the consideration of $2,500; afterward sold it for $1,500 and returned to farming and stock-raising. January 23, 1882, he was married to Mrs. Rebecca C. Turner, the widow of the ex-assessor of Gallatin county.

JAMES GREEN, Lower Willow Creek, is a native of England, born May 1, 1830, son of William and Sarah Green. He emigrated to America with his grandparents in 1843; married Margaret, only daughter of William Willwood. This union was blessed with eight children: Mary Jane, born in Pottawatomie Co., Ia., June 7, 1852; William, born January 11, 1854; Eliza, born August 18, 1856; Melissa, born August 20, 1858; Joseph, born December 15, 1860; Andrew, born January 13, 1863; these five last named were born in Utah Co., Utah; Charles, born in Lower Willow Creek, M. T., February 19, 1865; George, born in Lower Willow Creek, M. T., February 3, 1867. In 1852 Mr. Green moved to Utah Co., Utah, and engaged in farming, continuing in same till 1864, in which year he moved to Montana and located his present home of 525 acres of land, situated on the Jefferson river at the mouth of Willow Creek. He raises both cattle and horses; has 525 head of cattle and 28 head of horses. When he came to Montana he had only five head of cattle.

AMOS C. HALL, Virginia City, son of Jesse A. and Rebecca Hall, was born in Lamoille Co., Vt., December 10, 1835. He moved to Janesville, Wis., in 1856, and early the following year to Kansas, where he took up land near the Linn county trading post. His location on the border of Kansas and his anti-slavery principles caused him to suffer at the hands of the pro-slavery party. On May 19, 1858, he with his brother, Austin W., and nine others, were shot by a party of border ruffians and left for dead. Mr. Hall and his brother were at their home with no thought of danger at the time the raid was made upon the settlement. Five of the eleven who were shot, including Mr. Hall and his brother, recovered. This is known as the Maridiscygnes Massacre. In October, 1858, Mr. Hall returned to Vermont. He revisited Kansas in 1859 and in company with his brother started for Pike's Peak over the Santa Fe trail, but meeting returning and disappointed prospectors, they also turned back. The brothers settled at Junction City, Kan. In 1860 Mr. Hall moved to Denver, Col., remaining until the spring of 1863 (May), when he set out for Bannack and Alder Gulch, at that time in Idaho Territory. He arrived at Virginia City in July and went to work in the mines at $6 per day. Later he went to prospect Bivens Gulch, and in September, 1863, with Leroy Southmayd, bought a half interest in a claim at Summit District, Alder Gulch, for about $500. In December, 1863, work on this claim was begun in earnest. The claim paid about $50 per day for each man employed. During the winter of 1864–5 Mr. Hall visited Vermont. Returning in 1865 he worked some old claims near Summit with such encouraging results that he bought a large number of them, which were supposed to be worked out, and in 1866 began working them systematically with a bed rock flume, the first ever built in Montana. Since that date until the present time Mr. Hall has been actively engaged in placer mining, always with success, and he still holds extensive mining interests in Alder Gulch. In 1879 he engaged in the banking business at Virginia City. He is senior member of the banking firm of Hall, Harrington & Co. Mr. Hall was married at Virginia City in 1876 to Miss Anna P. Griffith. They are the parents of two children. Like other old residents of the Golden Gulch he witnessed many if not all of the stirring scenes of the early days of Montana. He owned the pistol which the road agent Ives took from Southmayd, and to him is due the identification of this weapon (at the trial of Ives by the citizens' committee), from a record of the number which he had made in his journal.

SARGENT HALL, P. O. Sheridan, was born in England October 18, 1832; son of James Hall, a farmer there, who emigrated to the United States when our subject was seven years old. He was educated in the common schools of Wisconsin, where they resided for some years, and in 1860 went to Colorado for nine months, thence moved to Nebraska, and there farmed for two years, and in the spring of 1863 he moved to Bannack, M. T., where he remained but a short time and then proceeded to Alder Gulch, where he worked for wages until the fall of 1864, in which year he moved to Mill Creek, Ruby valley, where he located a farm and in 1865 raised his first crop, from which he made about $8,000. In 1866 he located the farm that is now his home and built the Sheridan mill, which he operates at the present time. Mr. Hall has about 800 acres of land and is the largest grain grower in Madison county. In 1878 he married Miss Sarah E. Richards, by whom he has four children: James R., born February 28, 1879; Sargent E., born February 26, 1880; Owen, born April 13, 1881; infant, born June 6, 1882; all born in Ruby valley.

HENRY C. HARRISON, P. O. Harrison, was born in Wilmington, N. Y., September 15, 1828, and was educated in the common schools of that vicinity. At the age of sixteen years he became his own master. In August, 1861, at Minneapolis, Minn., he engaged in the grocery business, and in June, 1862, joined Captain James Fisk's party, bound for the Salmon river mines in Idaho. Upon arriving at Fort Benton the men were informed that it was yet 600 miles to the mines, instead of 300, as they supposed. They were also informed that Prickly Pear Valley, in Montana, was a good section to winter in, and they accordingly headed for this valley, reaching it September 21, 1862. They began the erection of a fort 200 feet square, but stampeded to Bannack without completing it. The party consisted of 160 persons, including four families. Mr. Harrison left the fort in December, going to Bannack, and after remaining until the following July, went to Virginia City, where he established a lumber yard and worked at his trade. He erected the California Exchange building, the Beaverhead Game Tolling House, and the building now used as the Catholic church. In 1865 he located his present ranch on Upper Willow creek, and engaged in farming and stock raising, in which he has been remarkably successful. He owns 700 acres of good meadow, farming and pasture land.

J. F. HAYDEN, P. O. Enniss, was born August 14, 1838, on George creek, Fayette Co., Pa.; son of Jacob and Ruth Hayden, natives of Pennsylvania, the former of whom was a blacksmith. When our subject was but twelve years old he worked by the month through the county and at home, attending school in the winter, until past eighteen years of age. Then he came to Henry Co., Ia., intending to learn the carpenter trade of a friend with whom he went to Iowa. Hard times, however, prevented this friend from getting work and Mr. Hayden had to seek other employment, so he took a place on a farm until in the spring of 1859, when he went to Macon Co., Mo., and there pursued the same vocation. In the spring of 1863 he returned to Iowa, and in 1864 he crossed the plains with oxen to Montana, arriving at Alder Gulch about the middle of August, and immediately commenced mining. Since then he mined and farmed, and for a time kept a hotel on the Ruby, until 1871, when he located in Madison valley on his present home of 160 acres, and here carries on a general farming and stock-growing business. In company with another man he operates a threshing machine. Mr. Hayden was married, January 5, 1859, to Caroline Hume, born in Hardin Co., Ohio, February 28, 1843, daughter of James and Elizabeth Hume, native Virginians. To this union have been born four children: Eliza J., Sarah E., James J. and George W. Eliza J. is now Mrs. George H. Lyon, of Madison valley. Mr. Hayden was a member of the Grange, and has been road supervisor.

J. M. HERNDON, Virginia city, was born in Cooper Co., Mo., June 23, 1833; came to Montana in 1863, via Omaha and Salt Lake, reaching Bannack in October of that year; left Bannack for Virginia city the morning of the first stage robbery by the organized band of road agents; engaged in building and lumber trade in Virginia city, also dealing in furniture the past eight years. Was married May 21, 1857, to Miss Sarah Raymond, daughter of Mrs. D. Raymond, widow, who moved in 1865 to Montana with her family. Mrs. Herndon taught the first district school taught in the territory. Mr. and Mrs. Herndon are the parents of five children, four of whom are still living.

HORATIO S. HOWELL, P.O. Virginia city, member of the Con. Con. of 1884 from Madison Co., was born in New Jersey in 1844. Entering the army in 1861, he rose from a private to the rank of captain in 1864, and was mustered out in July, 1865. He came to Montana in 1866 and engaged in mining at McClellan and Independent gulches; entered the stage and express business in connection with the great overland mail and express company of Wells, Fargo & Co., and has been engaged in the same business to the present time. Mr. Howell was a member of the legislative assembly of Montana from Madison Co. in 1877.

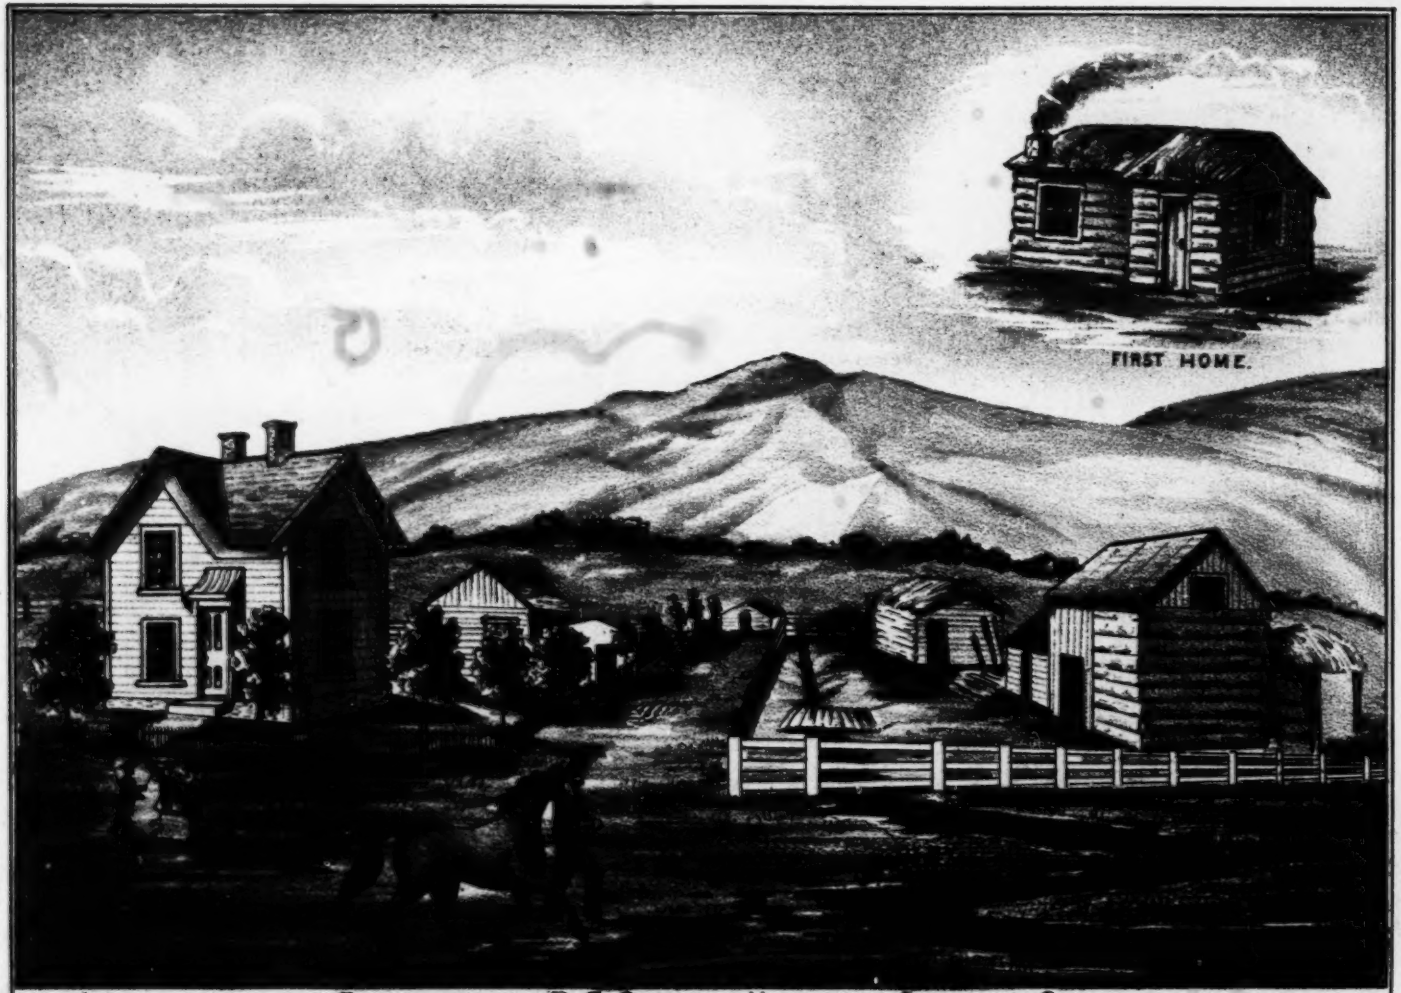
JAMES INGLIS, P. O. Sheridan, was born in Scotland February 17, 1831, and was educated in the common schools till he was 17, when he was apprenticed to a stonemason. When 19 years old he emigrated to the United States and first located in Wisconsin, where he followed farming for six years. He then moved to Missouri, and after one year and a half he moved to Colorado, where he remained until the spring of 1863. He then came to Alder gulch, M. T., and worked in the mines by the day until the summer of 1864. In company with five others he built a sawmill on Indian creek, and in 1865 located a farm on the same creek where he now lives. Mr. Inglis was married in 1879 to Miss Mary Stone, and by her has one child, Jay, born September 29, 1880, in Ruby valley. Our subject owns 280 acres of good tillable land in the Ruby valley, where he raises fine horses and cattle.

J. B. JEFFERS, P. O. Enniss, was born in Saratoga Co., N. Y., April 27, 1846, fourth child in the family of nine children born to Jefferson and Martha (Burton) Jeffers, of Saratoga Co., N. Y. Our subject's youth was spent in working on the farm and attending school at Saratoga. He graduated at Eastman's College, Poughkeepsie, and after completing his education he clerked for a time in a store, and in the spring of 1872 he came to Montana and settled in Madison valley. He was for seven years connected with his brother in the stock business, and in spring of 1880 they dissolved partnership. Our subject is now in cattle trade; has 220 acres of land in the valley on a branch of Cedar Creek, on which he makes a home. The herd ranges on the Yellowstone. Mr. Jeffers was married January 9, 1880, to Miss Susan L., daughter of Andrew W. Switzer, of Madison Valley. This union has been blessed with two children. Mr. Jeffers owns about 300 head of cattle together with some horses. His losses in 1881–2 were very heavy, else he would have a larger stock. He carries on his farm with all modern machinery. In 1882 he raised 1,600 bushels of grain on 40 acres, first crop, and on a portion of the land in 1881 he raised 65 bushels to the acre.

MYRON D. JEFFERS, P. O. Enniss, is a native of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., born September 16, 1833; eldest son of the family of nine children of Jefferson and Martha (Burton) Jeffers, natives of New York, former a farmer; they were married in Saratoga county, and are still living in New York. Our subject spent his boyhood days on the farm and received his education at Cooperstown and Charlottesville, N. Y. When about 21 years old, possessing a longing desire for Western adventures and an ambition to do for himself, he went to Iowa, remaining in Allamakee county for about one year, then moved to Rico, Col., where he engaged as civil engineer, and then to Nebraska, where he was on a government survey, next, in 1859, to Pike's Peak, Col. At this time he could have purchased Denver himself. His next move was to Montana, in 1864, where for first few years he followed freighting, and in the spring of 1869 went to Texas and brought into Montana about 4,000 head of cattle, taking six months to get them here, even then a very dangerous undertaking. It proved a success, however, and led others to a like speculation. Mr. Jeffers sold two herds, keeping one for himself, and has ever since been extensively engaged in the cattle business. In 1876 he located his present home ranch of 280 acres, and in 1878 married Miss Florence E., daughter of Andrew W. Switzer. They have three children; Jefferson Clifford, Walter Clarence and Paul, all born on the home ranch in Madison Valley. Mr. Jeffers made three visits to his native State. He has now about 25,000 head of cattle on his Yellowstone range, and 100 head American horses on his home range. He pays no attention to politics. Was a granger in its day.

AUGUST J. JESSEN, Virginia City, son of H. and C. Jessen, was born at Charleston, S. C., August 17, 1846. In 1860 the family visited New York, staying there until 1866. During this year Mr. Jessen moved to San Francisco, Cal. In the spring of 1867 he came to Montana via Portland, made a short stay at Bear Gulch, and proceeded to Virginia City via Helena. With the exception of a two years' residence at Helena, he has made Virginia City his home. His education was obtained in the schools of Charleston, New York, and a two and a half years' course in a private school in Europe. From 1867 to 1876 he was engaged in several branches of trade; in 1876 he was appointed Deputy County Clerk and Recorder of Madison Co., Mont., which position he held until the fall of 1880, when he was elected County Clerk and Recorder.

RES. & PROPERTY OF H. H. STONE, BLACK ST., BOZEMAN, GALLATIN CO.



RESIDENCE OF D. F. COWAN, HILLSDALE, GALLATIN CO.

ELMER F. JOHNSON, Virginia City, son of Franklin and Salome Johnson, was born at Wallingford, Conn., December 30, 1838. Early in 1859 he moved to Colorado, and there engaged in mining until March, 1863, when he started for Bannack, arriving there April 24 of the same year. He was one of the first to reach Alder Gulch after the discovery of gold there, and engaged in mining and prospecting. Mr. Johnson and two others constituted the party that first found gold in Bivens Gulch. Since his arrival in the Territory Mr. Johnson has been constantly engaged in mining and mercantile pursuits, and has great faith in the future prosperity of Madison county. He was married at Virginia City, May 24, 1881, to Miss T. Z. Baker.

J. B. LAURIN, Laurin P. O., (vide History Madison Co.)

HENRY LETTICE, P. O. Laurin, is of Irish extraction, born April 22, 1819, son of Michael Lettice, captain of the Kernal, a commercial vessel. Our subject was educated in the common school of Castle Garden. He was thrown upon his own resources when but nine years of age, and at the age of thirty he emigrated to America, settling in Wheeling, Va., and worked for Forsyth & Co. in the transfer business, remaining in their employ about two years; then decided to go west and seek for gold in Colorado. He stopped, however, in Illinois, and then went to Dubuque, Ia., and engaged in gardening for some time. In 1859 he set out for Colorado, and after his arrival located five leads, the Bobtail, Gregory, Discovery, Hayback and the Maraminga. He remained in Colorado until 1863, then went to Montana, stopping first in Bannack for a few days, then to Alder Gulch, where he located one claim and bought two others. Col. Wood and Mr. Lettice took the first gold out of Alder Gulch, but he took in partners on a working interest, and by mismanagement lost all his ground. He remained in Alder Gulch until 1865, then located a ranch at the mouth of the gulch, where he now resides. Mr. Lettice is now a well-to-do farmer and stock raiser in Ruby Valley. He owns 220 acres of land consisting of meadow and farming land, raises all kinds of grain and garden produce. He raises Shorthorn cattle, also Clydesdale and roadster horses. In 1862 Mr. Lettice was married to Miss Maria Ann, a daughter of Dr. James Bogaly, of Ireland.

WILLIAM MCKIMENS, P. O. Ennis, was born October 25, 1835, in Alleghany Co., Pa., son of William and Margaret (Hessel Zimmerman) McKimens. Our subject worked on the farm in boyhood, attending the public schools in winter until about eighteen years old, when he went to Rock Island and farmed there. He then moved to Pottawatomie Co., Kan., where he laid out the town of Westmoreland in 1857 (it became the county seat in 1882). In the spring of 1858, in company with Green Russel, Mr. McKimens went to Colorado, where Russel discovered the Gulch. There were thirteen men in the party then, and they were the first men that went out in 1858. November 11 they laid out the town of Denver, now the metropolis of the Rocky Mountains. In the spring of 1864 Mr. McKimens left Colorado for Montana, and arrived in Madison valley, locating on a farm, since which time he has never been out of the valley. He owns 200 acres of as fine land as there is in the valley. The farm is watered with living springs that seldom freeze. It is five miles from and in plain view of the Madison range, which is a spur of the belt range. Although his education was confined to he common schools of his native State, Mr. McKiment is one of the best read man in all the valley. He has a library of about 200 choice volumes, takes ten newspapers, dailies, weeklies and semi-weeklies.

ALPHONSO MARION, P. O. Laurin, was born in France, November 15, 1835; is self educated. When he was at the age of 15 his father died and the son was thrown upon his own resources. At the age of 20 he joined the 63d infantry of Napoleon III., remaining in the service five years. Then he emigrated to America and stayed in St. Louis eighteen months in the grocery business; next went to Colorado in 1861 and remained one year, seven months of which time he was sick, and he lost all his money. In August, 1863, he started to Montana, arriving in Virginia City, and worked in the mines two months, and then went to Bivens Gulch, staying there five months. Then bought ground and made a few hundred dollars, and the winter of 1864–5 he spent in Helena. He then located a ranch near the mouth of Prickly Pear valley and followed fishing and cutting wild rye for hay for four months. His machine for cutting the hay was a butcher-knife. He also hired a man to help him cut hay, and they cut as high as 3,000 pounds of green grass in one day. Sold the first for $1 per pound, the balance for 3 cents per pound; in three weeks made $1,200; then came to Virginia City and purchased four yoke of cattle and a wagon for $650, proceeding to Utah for supplies. He loaded his wagon with flour, salt and fruit; sold his flour for $25 per hundred, salt for $1 per hundred and fruit @ 60 cents per pound. He followed freighting until 1869 and cleared $7,000. He then purchased his farm of 300 acres, and in 1871 married Miss Laurin. Mr. Marion now tills his land and raises both cattle and horses.

E. A. MAYNARD, P. O. Virginia City, was born October 4, 1841, in Iowa Co., Mich., fourth child in the family of eight children of Gardner and Parnell (Dean) Maynard, former a native of Sandy Hill, N. Y., later of Washington Co., N. Y. Gardner Maynard was a farmer, and our subject worked on the farm; but when 23 years of age (in 1864) was seized with a desire to see the great western countries and participate in some of its adventures. He forthwith crossed the plains to Montana and located in Madison valley, on his present home, and engaged in farming and stock-growing. He now owns 260 acres at his home ranch and 150 at foot of mountains, all under cultivation, and has about 75 head of good horses and other stock. Mr. Maynard was married April 5, 1870, to Helen L. Briggs, a native of Clinton Co., Mich., and daughter of Artemus and Sarah (Tyler) Briggs, and to them have been born two children, Elbert A., born in the present home, December 13, 1872, and Alice, born in Madison valley, June 8, 1881. Mr. Maynard was a granger during its day, and is an A. F. & A. M. of a lodge at Portland, Mich.

ALEX. METZEL, P. O. Puller Springs, was born in York, Pa., January 14, 1835; left that vicinity in 1857, and resided three years at Iowa City, Ia. From 1860 until 1863 he was a resident of Denver, Col., coming to Montana in the latter year (August, 1863). By trade he was a butcher, and engaged in that business until 1870, when he turned his attention to horse and cattle raising, which he still continues. He began business without capital, but now owns a fine property. He was the first importer of Shorthorn Durham cattle from Kentucky, and his herd shows the stock. In 1860 Mr. Metzel married Miss Annie E. Spicer, of Indianola, Warren Co., Ia., who died seven years since, leaving five sons. Mr. Metzel received a common school education; is a Republican in politics; was elected County Commissioner, and appointed postmaster at Puller Springs. The farm was purchased by Mr. Metzel in 1865, but was only used as a pasturage in connection with his butcher business, until 1870, when he removed from Nevada and took up his residence on the ranch for the purpose of engaging in stock raising. York Ranch embraces between five and six thousand acres, all under fence, and divided into pastures, making the handling of the home herds as convenient as may be. During the past year he has erected a fine and commodious barn, himself being the architect, and E. L. Dickinson, of Sheridan, the builder. The dimensions of the building are 80x40 feet, with 20-foot posts, and it is a perfect model of convenience and utility. In 1871 he imported three thoroughbred Shorthorn bulls, three thoroughbred heifers, and four heifers of high grade. These, with those imported by Messrs. Sedman & McGregory, at the same time, for the Home Park herds, were with one exception the first thoroughbred horned stock imported to Montana. The exception was Lewis' bull, Diamond, at one time well known in Gallatin county. With his 600 head of cattle he has some 500 or 600 head of horses on the range, and his stables contain some valuable representatives of Norman-Percheron, Hambletonian breeds, and one thoroughbred, sired by Pat Mallory. This immense stock business has been carried on under Mr. Metzel's sole direction, and won for him the title of Cattle King of the Upper Ruby.

WILLIAM MITCHELL, P. O. Ennis, was born in Sullivan Co., N. H., in 1834, son of Charles and Sylvia Mitchell, natives of same county. Our subject received his education in the common schools of the county, and lived in the old home till 1854, when he moved to Polk Co., Ia., being one of the first settlers in that county. Here he made his home until he came to Montana with the stampede of 1864, to Alder Gulch. Mr. Mitchell was better fitted out than many of his fellow travelers on his journey across the plains, being provided with a mule team and covered wagon, and was in a train of 16 wagons. In crossing the Yellowstone they lost one team of mules, and his brother and E. W. Buck very nearly lost their lives by drowning. He mined with his brother until October 20, 1865, and then came to Madison Valley locating on his present ranch of 160 acres. Mr. Mitchell was married September 25, 1862, in Jasper Co., Ia., and has one son and one daughter: Lumyra and Henry Herbert. Our subject made a trip to the Yellowstone, in 1865, over the Bozeman Pass, taking three days to cross. The weather was so cold that the coffee would freeze while being conveyed to the mouth from the pot. The party did not suffer, however, as they were well provided with necessary clothing, etc., to keep them warm. Mr. Mitchell is a farmer and stock dealer. He has been school director every year but one since the school was organized.

HENRY B. MITCHELL, Madison Valley, was born March 8, 1842, and came with William to Montana, in 1864; spent eight years at Helena, with E. W. Buck, in Prickly Pear Valley; sold out to Mr. Buck and removed to Madison valley, where he is engaged in farming and stock growing. He has 140 acres of good land in a fine location.

HENRY H. MOOD, Pony, was born in New Jersey, May 5, 1830—the only son of Henry Mood. At eight years of age he was bound to a farmer named Jenks, of Bucks Co., Penn. As all bound children have a hard fate, Henry's was the same, and at the age of 13 years he ran away from Mr. Jenks, and apprenticed himself to F. Vansant, to learn the flour-milling business. At the age of 16 he took a position in a mill on Penny Pack, Pa., and stayed eight months, when he returned to his former employer, Vansant, and worked one year, then went to New Hope, Pa., and ran the Beaumont Mills one year. He then went into the baking business in Lambertsville, which proved a failure. He next moved to St. Louis, and found work in a mill for a short time. In April of the same year he went to Havana, Ill., for a short time; work being scarce, left for Bloomington, and there found no employment for millers; took up the carpenter trade, and worked for the I. C. R.R. at carpentering for ten months. Then he took up the lightning-rod business, with a capital of $900 and a good team, and in four months, with hard work, he found himself bankrupt. Again turning to the milling business in Lincoln, Ill., he took charge of the Olney Steam Mill, afterward the Lincoln Mills, in Logan Co. In March, 1859, in company with several others, he fitted out an ox team of five yoke, and headed for Pike's Peak. Proceeding as far as the turn table on the Platte river, he returned to Illinois, but after a short time started again. Had a hard winter's trip; arrived in Central City and found work in the mines; in the spring engaged with a company to go to Upper Fall River district, to erect quartz mills; completed the mill in the fall, and found no gold in the quartz. Mill-owners and all dropped to "bed-rock." Could get no work till March, 1863, when he found millwrighting in Nevada Gulch plentiful for the summer. In the winter of 1863 outfitted for Montana; arrived in Bannack March 14, 1863, with a stock of goods, comprising tobacco, clothing, etc. Found ready sale for his tobacco at $11 per lb., shirts $9 each, etc. Went to work at the carpenter's trade at $9 per day. Soon the stampede to Alder Gulch set in, and he joined it, taking 2,000 feet of lumber, and selling it at 45 cents per foot. This mining business paid, and Mr. Mood carried on the lumber and carpenter business in Virginia City to his advantage pecuniarily. In the winter of 1863–64, he joined a hunting party, which, in its wanderings, stopped on Willow Creek. Here they found game, and Mr. Mood laid claim to what he now calls Timothy Lawn. He put up a cabin, and has made it his home ever since. He now owns 4,000 acres—800 under fence—and a fine hay ranch for horses, to which he has been paying particular attention of late years. Mr. Mood will devote all his attention to horses. He has been county commissioner three years, and served two terms in the Legislature.

D. B. NOBLE, P. O. Sheridan, was born in Ontario Co., N. Y., March 18, 1822, son of Bohand Noble, a farmer. Our subject was educated in Bloomfield, N. Y., in the East Bloomfield Academy. At the age of eighteen he proceeded to Kentucky, taught school one year, then went to Dubuque, Ia., afterward settling in Delaware county as a farmer. After awhile he engaged in the lumber business, in which he continued until 1860; then he went to Colorado in search of a fortune, and there remained three years mining and milling. Fortune not favoring him fast enough, Mr. Noble determined to try the mines of Montana. After arriving there he forthwith located a farm and built a saw mill on Indian Creek. In 1866 he sold his interest in the farm and saw mill and returned to Iowa via the Yellowstone river in a scow boat, and in 1868 came back to Montana and commenced mining. In 1878 he built his mill located on the south fork of Wisconsin Creek one-half mile from the company lead and other leads of rich promise. His mill has excellent water power. To haul the quartz to the mill cost him seventy-five cents per ton, and it averaged him $25 per ton in gold. He is located in a mineral district rich both in silver and gold, and a great amount of galena. There has been $100,000 taken out of the company lead, down 180 feet. In 1842 Mr. Noble was married to Miss Minerva Peet, daughter of Levi Peet, a farmer in Cattaraugus Co., N. Y. Seven children, all born in Delaware Co., Ia., have blessed this union: Amy, born March 8, 1847; Cynthia E., born March 6, 1848; Minerva J., born March 4, 1849; Robert W., born November 4, 1851; Mary, born in 1853; Daniel H., born August 15, 1857; Flora A., born December 29, 1860, and died February, 1867. In July, 1885, he completed his ten stamp mill at the Company Mine. This important addition to the industries of Wisconsin District, was erected under the direction of A. W. A. Anderson, and takes the place of the arastras.

MARTIN PEEL, P. O. Ennis, is a son of John and Mary A. (Hewett) Peel. He was left an orphan at the age of eight years, and the first labor he remembers of performing was driving on the Pennsylvania canal, then worked in the coal mines in Schuylkill county. From there he moved to Illinois in 1849, and thence to Rock Island, where he mined. In 1852 he crossed the plains to California and was at Placerville and other points in the mines. Later he went to Yreka, Siskiyou Co., Cal., and mined on the Humbug. He remained here three years, and in 1855 returned to the States and resided in Peoria, Ill. In 1859, being seized with the gold fever again, he hastened to Colorado and visited nearly all the mining camps, but in 1862 decided to try a new field, so came to Montana, being one of the first prospectors; he found gold on the head of Big Hole. At this time there was a party of six on their way to Salmon. Mr Peel then went through Idaho to Oregon and on to Washington Territory. He returned to Boise Basin and mined in 1863, and the same fall returned to Montana and mined in Alder Gulch for fourteen years; then engaged in quartz mining at Red Bluff, and has been engaged in the same ever since in company with S. Word, of Virginia City. Mr. Peel married in 1865 Ellen Selley, of English birth, and to them have been born six children: John B., born March 28, 1866; William H., born July 19, 1867; Richard, born April 8, 1869; Mary E., born April 10, 1872; Martin, born February 14, 1877; George W., born August 16, 1879. Mr. Peel is an F. & A. M., Nevada Lodge, No. 4, meeting at Nevada. He has filled nearly all offices in the county. He has 160 acres on Cedar Creek, where he spends his winters. Mr. Peel's mining property is very valuable.

GEORGE E. RAMSAY, P. O. Sheridan, came to Montana in 1863, and bought a claim in Bannack in which he sank his last dollar. He then had to do something. His wife being equal to the trials of a frontier woman, went by coach alone to Virginia City. He followed with a sore backed cayuse, leading her most of the way. Mrs. Ramsay paid the fare, which was $10, and took the last ten they had. The stage driver left her in the street alone, and a Mr. Knox, one of the pioneers of 1862, escorted her to the Virginia Hotel, kept by Miles W. Brown (now of Radersburg). Only the walls of the building were up, and she slept on gravel in the rear of the establishment. The kitchen had a roof of canvas. Mrs. Ramsay went to work in the kitchen and Mr. Ramsay in the dining room. After awhile they went to Summit and here made something keeping boarders. In the fall our subject was offered a fine team and wagon and harness for his house, but refused to trade. Afterward sold a door for what the knob cost, and lost all the balance. From Summit Mr. Ramsay moved to Cold Spring ranch that had once been the home of road agents; from here they moved to Silver Spring and built a residence. This is one of the finest springs in the Territory, boiling out of the earth through pebbles. This spring furnishes the water power to run Silver Springs grist mill. Mr. and Mrs Ramsay have one child, a son—Frank A., born in Helena, March 27, 1871.

W. H. RAYMOND, Virginia City, proprietor of Belmont Park, was born May 12, 1845, in Cincinnati, O., son of Daniel Raymond, a lawyer of that place, and author of "Raymond's Political Economy." His father dying when he was but four years of age, our subject was thrown on his own resources, and at the age of seven years commenced work on a farm at 25 cents per day. In 1865 he came to Montana, bringing one team of horses and two yoke of oxen, with which he went into the freighting business with his brother, and hauled the stone for the Masonic Temple in Virginia City. In August, 1868, he went to Salt Lake with five yoke of cattle, and freighted from that place to the terminus of the Union Pacific Railroad, clearing $2,000 in three months. He then carried dried fruit to Virginia City, making thirty cents per pound. During 1869 and 1870 he continued the business, hauling from Corinne to Virginia City. In the latter year he bought his brother's interest in the train, and in 1871 the brothers opened a grocery store in Virginia City, continuing in the business until 1879. In 1874 a band of cattle, numbering 1,000 head, was driven east by Messrs. Raymond Bros., C. L. Dahler and Tom Allen (the latter acting for Hunter Bros.) These were driven through to Omaha, and thence shipped to Chicago, and constituted the first band of Montana cattle ever driven to an Eastern market. He is also an extensive breeder of fine horses, his stables being situate about 25 miles east of Dillon, and 20 miles south of Virginia City, on the Utah Northern Railroad, on the Sweetwater, a tributary of the Ruby, and which never freezes. When the Raymond Bros. were freighting, their cattle strayed away from the bridge, about eight miles from their upper home, and were found drinking, at the spot where the present stables stand, of the pure unfrozen water. This incident led Mr. Raymond to believe that he had found the animals' paradise, and in the succeeding year (1869) he built a cabin here, and thus he founded a home for the cowboy, which from time to time has been enlarged. The beginning of Mr. Raymond's business as a breeder and dealer was in 1876 when he founded his breeding ranch, with about 20 head of good stock. While at that time it required nerve and capital to embark in an untried business, 500 miles from railroad facilities, and subject to the annoyance caused by roving bands of Indians, yet he recognized that there was a great opportunity for profitable investments. He first bought Commodore Belmont, sired by Alexander's Belmont (the sire of Nutwood, record 2:18¼, and Wedgewood, record 2:19), by Alexander's Abdallah, sire of Goldsmith Maid, record 2:14. First dam by Hunt's Commodore, by Mambrino, by Imported Messenger; Commodore Belmont was bred by Benjamin Gratz, Gratz Springs Station, Ky. (Wallace Trotting Reg. Vol. 3), with 25 brood mares selected by himself from the best studs in Kentucky. These were shipped to Ogden and from there driven to their mountain home, arriving December 16, 1876. In 1878 our subject returned to Kentucky and purchased 45 head. In 1880 he visited that State a third time, purchasing 6 head of trotters, 1 thoroughbred and 2 Shetland ponies, among which were Tempest, 1881, by Almont, sire of Piedmont, record 2:17¼, first dam Siren by Edwin Forrest, second dam Water Witch, the dam of Mambrino Gift, record 2:20, and Scotland, 2:22½, by Pilot, Jr, sire of dam of Maud S., record 2:20¼, third dam Fanny Fern, by Kincade's Lawrence, 4th dam Brenda, thoroughbred. Also "Park" 1117; by Peavine 513, 1st dam by Edwin Forrest, second dam by Woodford, third dam by Bertrand, fourth dam by Pantaloon, and three brood mares, viz: Hesper by Administrator, Patsy by Strathmore, and Indianola by Indian Chief, and a thoroughbred colt by Pat Maloy, and Golden by Lexington Gold Dust. His Shetland ponies were the first ever brought to the territory. W. H. Raymond in 1879 bought out the interest which his brother had in the business. In the same year the Raymond brothers and Harrington, under the firm name of Raymond, Harrington & Co., established a banking house at Virginia City, where W. Raymond still continues with Harrington. W. H. Raymond has at present about 400 head of horses on his extensive range of 12,000 acres, enclosed in the foothills of the dividing range between the Blacktail and Ruby, on which is found the most nutritious grasses and finest water in Montana. On an area of twenty-five miles square there is but one other range, that of Orr & Poindexter, the largest owners of combined stock in Montana. Mr. Raymond is the second, if not the first, largest breeder of trotting stock in the United States. He has a farm of about 500 acres, located on the Telegraph line and old Salt Lake road. It is his intention to build a house and stables on the lower ranch, one of the most favorable locations for a race track in the territory, where a good five mile road can be had. On this range is Mt. Auourn, or "Jasper" mountain, the only one in the United States (as per Prof. Hayden). The range has an altitude of from 5,500 to 6,000 feet. From 5,000 to 7,000 feet is the altitude best adapted to the horse, as they do as well or better in from eight to fifteen inches of snow, and in cold winter they run to timber level. The character of the soil, the feed, the air they breathe on these native hills, combine to make the animals here superior to those in Kentucky for endurance.

J. W. SAUNDERS, blacksmith, P. O. Enniss, came to the valley in 1864 from the State of Maine, where he was born November 6, 1841; son of Wm. M. and Eliza Saunders, natives of Maine. He learned the blacksmith trade in 1873; is also a fine machinist. His father was also a mechanic. The education of our subject was confined to the common schools. In 1878 he married Miss Amanda Woodworth, of Ohio, and to them have been born two children: Wm. Millard and Eunice Maria, both born in Madison valley. Mr. Saunders has a good shop and 160 acres land, with good water-power. He raises horses.

FRED. SCHULZ, Sheridan, was born in Prussia October 13, 1840; son of Wm. and Maria Schulz, both of whom died while the subject of this sketch was in his youth. In 1856 Frederick emigrated to the United States, and in 1866 crossed the plains for Montana, arriving in the Gallatin valley via Bozeman, then a smaller town than Sheridan is at present. He mined at Alder gulch in 1867, but subsequently adopted a farmer's life in Ruby valley, and operated a threshing machine until 1878, when he opened the Sheridan hotel, one of the best in the territory. Mr. Schulz was married in 1878 to Mrs. Julia McCay. They have two children, Harry and Elbert.

O. G. SMITH, P. O. Enniss, was born in Wayne Co., Ohio, December 29, 1829, the third child in the family of seven children born to Allen and Margaret (Riddle) Smith, the former a native of Pennsylvania, the latter of Ohio. They settled in Ohio in an early day, when brush had to be cleared off to make place for a house. Our subject lived with his father until about thirteen years of age, when the latter died. Young Oliver then went to Edinburgh to learn a trade, which he completed and then moved to Knox Co., Ohio, where he worked at the carpenter's trade. In 1850 he went to Williams Co., Ohio, and engaged in merchandising till 1868, in which year he received an injury that disabled him for hard work. In 1869 Mr. Smith was elected treasurer of Williams county, serving two years. In 1872 he came out to the far West and settled in Madison valley, Mont., on his present home of 120 acres, and an improved farm of 640 acres on the table lands. This is an exceedingly productive farm. In 1874 he was elected probate judge, was sworn into office December 4, and served five years, one year being legislated in and the second year elected on the democratic ticket. Mr. Smith is a F. & A. M., Virginia City, No. 1, V. C., Montana; was a member of the grange. He was married in 1853 to Hannah M. Woodworth, of Williams Co., Ohio, and a daughter of Josiah and Eunice (Snow) Woodworth. To this union have been born six children: Allen J., born in Ohio, now in Madison valley; Ella (now Mrs. A. M. Bower), born in Madison valley; Ray G., born in Madison valley, Annie M. and Grace, born in Madison valley, and Melvin O., born in Ohio, where he died at the age of two years. Mr. Smith carries on a general farming business; his farm is located on the east side of the valley on the table lands, and is well watered and adapted to farming.

SAMUEL R. SMITH, P. O. Enniss, was born in Cornwall, England, February 12, 1846; son of James and May Smith. When he was but one year old his parents emigrated to the United States, but soon moved to Northumberland Co., Canada. Our subject worked on his father's farm till eighteen years of age, and then proceeded to Clinton Co., Mich., where he engaged on a farm, and remained till 1871, in which year he decided to visit the West. He came by rail to Salt Lake City, thence to Madison valley, Madison Co., M. T., where he located until 1880, then settled on his present home of 320 acres on Bear creek, a splendid water for stock, never freezing. Mr. Smith has an apple orchard, and his place is rendered delightful with beautiful evergreens. He was married September 13, 1868, in Clinton Co., Mich., to Miss Margaret E. Yaeger, born in Ashland Co., Ohio, February 1, 1851, removed to Clinton Co., Mich., in an early day. To this union have been born four children: John Oliver, born July 2, 1870, in Michigan, died December 3, 1878, while visiting the states for his health; one child died in infancy; Harriet M., born in Madison valley, May 11, 1876, and Gertrude, born October 15, 1880, in Madison valley. Mr. Smith has worked much at the carpenter's trade, and built his own present residence, one of the best in the valley.

J. G. SMITH (deceased), son of Allan and Matilda Smith, was born in Wayne Co., O., June 3, 1839. In 1861 he enlisted in the 38th Ohio Infantry as sergeant, served two years, during which time he participated in the battles of Wild Cat, Mill Springs and Pittsburg Landing. He was discharged for disability after the battle of Bridgeville, and returning to Ohio remained at home until his successful journey across the plains to Montana in 1867. During the last fourteen years of his life he was engaged in farming, stock raising and mercantile pursuits. In 1883 he moved into Virginia City to engage in the hotel business, still controlling his grain and stock farm, fifteen miles east of the city, of which 300 acres are fenced. He was married to Miss L. V. Wynne, daughter of Dr. and Mrs Wynne, of Williams Co., O., March 11, 1879, in Ohio. Mr. Smith was a member of the Masonic Society, and both were members of the Universalist Church. Mrs. Smith resides at Sterling, Ill.

J. B. SNAPP, Home Park, was born near Winchester, Va., June 17, 1836; son of E. Snapp, a blacksmith in Virginia. He was educated in the common schools and at the age of 18 commenced farming in Ohio and continued that pursuit until April, 1864, when he started for Montana, arriving in Virginia City August 25 of same year. He engaged in herding cattle for Stamberger until spring, then went to the mines, where he labored until the spring of 1871, clearing $2,000. In 1871 he located his ranch known as the Home Park. He bought 25 head of two-year old heifers and five mares, and in company with O. A. Sidman, L. H. Frazey and W. G. McGregory purchased 257 head of graded cattle—Shorthorns and Durhams, and 11 head of thoroughbred cattle. In November, 1882, Mr. Snapp and Mary A. Sidman purchased W. G. McGregory's interest in the Home Park ranch, consisting of 1,760 acres of land, and cattle and horses. They now own the Home Park and 1,000 head of graded cattle; the stock of cattle was imported from Missouri. They also own 85 head of horses and one Belmont stallion—dam Woodford Bell, sire Alex. Belmont. Four hundred acres of their land are in meadow and 600 in wheat and oats. They have raised as high as 80 bushels of oats per acre and 50 bushels of wheat per acre. The Home Park is situate on the Ruby river, where there is an excellent winter range for cattle and water that never freezes. Here is a post office with a semi-weekly mail; J. B. Snapp, postmaster. The following is a partial list of Mr. Snapp's graded stock, and where recorded. Cows: July 3; recorded vol. 8, page 385; Sallie Meadows, vol. 9, page 948; Emma Kendall, vol. 13, page 574; Lizzie, vol. 13, page 738; Alpha, vol. 13, page 443; Alfaretta, vol. 13, page 438.—Bulls: Ethelbert II, vol. 13, page 176, No. 17,057; Lord Lovell, vol. 13, page 249, No 17,573; Home Park Duke, vol. 17, page 2 598, No. 29,849.

T. B. SWITZER, Virginia City, born October 12, 1812, in Kentucky, near the town of Frankfort, is of German ancestry. He had a family of one daughter and two sons,—Andrew W., whose sketch follows this, being one of the latter. Our subject was a pioneer settler of Poweshiek Co., Ia., as well as of Madison Valley, Mont. A farmer by occupation, he is at present a hale, hearty old gentleman, and bids fair to live many years.

ANDREW W. SWITZER, P. O. Enniss, or Virginia City, was born in Michigan City, Ind., January 2, 1836, son of Taoner B. and Susan (Waltee) Switzer. In 1854 he moved with his parents to Poweshiek Co., Ia., and settled on a farm where he remained many years. Our subject never learned a trade, but worked at carpentering considerable. October 23, 1856, he was married, in Poweshiek Co., Ia., to Miss Lizzie, daughter of Joseph R. Martin, and born in Columbiana Co., O.; moved to the county where she married. To Mr. and Mrs. Switzer have been born five children, all living: Florence E., born October 7, 1857, in Iowa; Susan L., born November 25, 1859, in Iowa; Taoner B., born February 5, 1863, in Iowa; Mary R., born March 12, 1865, in Iowa; Nellie C., born September 5, 1867, in Montana. (Florence E. is now Mrs. M. D. Jeffers, and Susan L. is Mrs. J. Burton Jeffers, both living in Madison Valley). In 1860 Mr. Switzer followed the cry for Pike's Peak gold mines to Colorado, and after remaining there for one year returned to Iowa. In 1865 he crossed the plains to Montana, leaving Iowa May 27, and arriving in Madison Valley October 1 of same year. He came with ox team—a slow mode of locomotion compared to the Union Pacific railroad of to-day. He commenced immediately to make a home. His first work was to dig potatoes on his father's farm. Mr. Switzer now owns 140 acres good tillable land, raises wheat, oats, potatoes and cabbage. From 60 acres of cultivated land has raised 2,400 bushels grain. He is engaged in stock growing; has the thoroughbred Jersey stock, first in the county. Our subject was a member of the U. S. grand jury meeting in Virginia City in the early days, also of the session at Bozeman in the spring of 1882. He is an I. O. O. F., and was a granger in its day.

RILEY THOMPSON, P. O. Sheridan, was born in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., May 19, 1840, and was educated in the common school. He went to Illinois and engaged in farming and afterward in driving cattle and hogs. During the war of the Rebellion he joined the 120th Regiment of the Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and at the close of the struggle moved to Jo Daviess Co., Ill., where he remained until 1866, and then came to Montana, locating in Alder Gulch and teaming for awhile; after that he engaged in freighting, a business he followed for five years. Mr. Thompson then purchased the Harrison farm and the herd of cattle in the Ruby Valley for $7,000, and he now owns about 800 acres of land and a band of fine bred mares.

SANDERS C. WARD, P. O. Enniss, was born December 16, 1852, in Kentucky, son of Nelson and Margaret Ward, former a farmer. When our subject was but nine years old his parents settled in Clinton Co., Mo., and young Ward worked on the farm in boyhood; he was educated both in his native state and Missouri. He came to Montana in 1872, remaining on the Yellowstone until 1875; then located in Madison valley. He has now 320 acres of good land and is engaged in general farming and stock-raising, owning the farm alone; he was engaged in cattle business with Sam Ward, railroad attorney. When Mr. Ward came to the territory he had to get credit for his first week's board; now he has 50 to 60 horses and some few cattle besides the farm. He turns his attention chiefly to hay cuts, and bales 160 to 175 tons per annum, finding a market for it in Virginia City. Mr. Ward has also two well finished residences on his farm. He is unmarried.

HENRY WARNER, P. O. Harrison, was born in Berkshire Co., Mass., June 30, 1845; son of Earl Douglas Warner, a farmer in Berkshire county. Our subject was educated in the common school, and at the age of 16 joined the 31st Mass. volunteers under Butler; was in several engagements and served three years. In 1866 he crossed the plains for Montana, arriving in Butte City, where he followed mining for three years. Growing tired of a miner's life, he located a farm of about 200 acres on Upper Willow Creek and began farming. Mr. Warner married, in 1879, Miss Silvia Smith, daughter of Madison Smith, and to them were born in Madison Co., M. T., two children, Eleanor, born February 3, 1880, and Mabel, born September 21, 1882. His wife dying, October 10, 1882, Mr. Warner then married, February 23, 1883, Miss May Porter.

GEORGE S. WATKINS, Meadow Creek, was born February 14, 1837, in Jessamine Co., Ky.; son of Walter L. and Mary Ann (Holloway) Watkins, natives of Kentucky. When our subject was an infant his parents moved to Clay Co., Mo., and his boyhood days were spent on his father's farm and attending school. His education was received in William Jewell College, Clay Co., Mo., and Georgetown and Madison College, N. Y. He returned to his home in Missouri and worked a few years in his father's woolen factory, and then a short time in a grist mill erected by his father in Clay county. He was also engaged in lumbering and trading in Missouri until 1864, when he crossed the plains to Montana, arriving in Virginia City June 2, having made the trip in 90 days. Here our subject engaged in the mines for a short time; then came to Madison valley in the fall of the same year and commenced farming and stock-growing. He settled where he now resides on the St. Joseph and Jordan creeks, one and a half miles from the celebrated Madison cañon. After coming to the territory Mr. Watkins married Miss Fanny Fort, of Willow Creek. They have two children, Irene, born September 17, 1880, on Willow creek, and Spencer, born December 27, 1882, also on Willow creek. Mr. Watkins now owns about 600 acres of land and raises both horses and cattle; owns mining leads at Red Bluff and carries from 100 to 500 head of stock. He uses all modern machinery on his ranch.

OTIS C. WHITNEY, P. O. Enniss, was born in Washington Co., Maine, April 27, 1815, eldest of the family of seven children of Ephraim and Mary (Crocker) Whitney. When fourteen years old our subject commenced shoemaking and worked in Machias, Me. He afterward moved to St. Anthony's Falls, Minn., and engaged in lumbering; from here he went to the head of Lake Pepin, and in the fall of 1863 to Colorado, where he spent the winter. Not satisfied with this venture, however, he, in 1864, came to Virginia City, M. T., remaining until July, and then he located in Madison valley and commenced raising cattle and buying for others as well as for himself. He settled at this time on his present ranch on Odell creek, known as "Old Tex" ranch (a noted vigilanter home). The first crop he raised on this place was barley, averaging eighty bushels to the acre, and worth five to eight cents per pound. His residence, which was erected in 1878, of frame and logs, contains five rooms and is very comfortable. Mr. Whitney was in the valley when flour sold at $100 per sack, and his wife, being economical, would bake one loaf of bread, and from this give each one a slice. In 1865 Mr. Whitney started the first dairy in Madison county, and milked about thirty-five cows; butter sold for one dollar per pound; has made as high as 5,000 lbs. per annum. Mr Whitney was married February 23, 1856, to Miss Ellen Hill, in Wisconsin. They have had seven children, four deceased and three living: Jane, William, Dallas and James, deceased; Thomas H., Emma O. and Ellen Maria, living. Mr. Whitney has served as school director for eleven or twelve years. He has 420 acres of land, about 100 horses, and fifty to seventy-five head of cattle ranging over the hills.

CAPT. JAMES WILLIAMS, Puller Springs, was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn., January 9, 1834; son of John M. Williams, a farmer. Our subject was educated in the common schools of Pennsylvania, and in 1856 moved to Illinois, where he acted as clerk in a mercantile house for one year; in 1857 he went to Kansas and speculated in land for one year; then in 1858 proceeded to Colorado, where he mined for about three years, clearing $4,000. He then went into stock raising and farming, but having a spirit of adventure was carried with the excitement of 1863 to Montana, arriving at Bannack with about $1,500. He stayed there two weeks, then went to Alder Gulch, and arrived in June, 1863. His first enterprise here was to build some log cabins, 16x20, with dirt roof and floor, which he sold for $250 each. Then he ran a pack train from Elk City to Virginia City, making one dollar per pound for freight. He then formed a co-partnership with John Martin, and sent a four-mule team from Fort Benton to Salt Lake City, and during the winter opened a feed stable. In the spring of 1864 he bought out Martin and formed a partnership with his brother, which continued until 1870, and also bought and sold horses, and located a farm in the Ruby valley. In 1866 our subject married Miss Elizabeth, daughter of James Ledford, and to this union have been born, all in Ruby valley, seven children: James M., born September 6, 1867; May, born September 11, 1868; John Franklin, born March 21, 1870; Clara Maud, born February 23, 1871; George Wesley, born April 16, 1875; Annie Rose, born August 12, 1877; Charles R., born September 4, 1879. In 1865 Capt. Williams sold his corral in Alder Gulch, and in 1866 worked the Western Corral in Helena for one year, then moved on his ranch in Ruby valley and engaged extensively in stock raising. Capt. Williams owns 160 acres of land, 400 head of graded stock and twenty-five head of thoroughbred cattle. He was elected county commissioner in 1870; ran for sheriff twice.

JOHN E. WOODWORTH, P. O. Enniss, is the sixth child and fourth son of the family of nine children of Josiah and Maria (Snow) Woodworth, both natives of New York State. Our subject was born October 9, 1843, in Williams Co., O. When five years old his father was killed by lightning, leaving a widow with a number of small children. Young Woodworth went to live with a cousin, S. F. Snow, in Fulton Co., O. After remaining here some years he enlisted in the Army of the Union, in company C 111th Ohio regiment, under Colonel Bond. He was engaged in many hard fights; was through the Georgia campaign under Sherman, and received a bayonet wound at the battle of Franklin, Tenn. Mr. Woodworth left Ohio March, 1867, and after reaching Omaha, fitted out a cattle train, and in three months' travel arrived at Virginia City August 6, 1867. Commencing farming, he continued in that pursuit about six years, then followed freighting with oxen to and from Fort Benton and Helena to Corinne. This business he followed about four years. He then returned to Williams Co., Ohio, and was married March 22, 1878, to Miss Alice D. Miller, daughter of Adam D. and Annie M. Miller. They took the train from Franklin, and from there via wagon to Madison valley, locating on his present home ranch. After two years Mr. and Mrs. Woodworth returned to Ohio on a visit to their friends. He is now engaged in dairying and horse and cattle business. In 1882 he made 900 lbs. of butter from the milk of ten cows, and sold this for $400 cash. He has about 125 head of mixed horses, of good grade; does some farming, and has about 50 head of cattle. The residence of our subject is at the foot of the mountain range, facing a beautiful valley between Jordan and Jack's creeks. Mr. Woodworth, by hard work and good management, has obtained a nice comfortable home. He has 120 acres of land in his Montana home, and 120 in Guthrie Co., Iowa, 35 miles west of Desmoines. In politics Mr. Woodworth is identified with the Democratic party.

JACOB WYROUCK, Twin Bridges, son of John and Elizabeth Wyrouck, natives of Germany, was born at Bellefonte, Pa., September 26, 1832. All his brothers and sisters were born in Germany, and came to the United States with his parents in 1825. Mr. Wyrouck learned the blacksmith's trade in Pennsylvania, where he worked at it until 1855, when he moved to Chicago. In 1855 he went to Leavenworth, Kan., and in 1859 to Colorado, engaging in quartz and placer mining at Central City. In 1863 he came to Virginia City, where he established a general store. It is related of him and his partner that, within six weeks, they cleared $20,000, by taking their gold to Salt Lake and exchanging each dollar in gold for $2.40 in greenbacks; then bought Eastern exchange at 1½ per cent, so that the road agents, who were then numerous, would not capture their wealth, and went to Denver to purchase merchandise. Returning to Montana he continued in business at Nevada City until 1868, during which time he lost a great deal of money, owing partly, if not wholly, to the reckless trading of his partner. In this year he moved to his present ranch, where he owns six hundred acres of land, one hundred head of cattle, and forty head of horses. He was married October 14, 1869, to Miss M. J. Howe, by justice of the peace P. E. Evans. This lady was born in Pennsylvania in 1833, and came to Montana in 1864.

CHAPTER XL.

MEAGHER COUNTY.

WILLIAM ALLEN, P. O. Ulidia, was born in Mercer Co., Ky., November 15, 1838, and in 1834 removed with his parents to Missouri. He visited California and Montana in 1864, returning to Missouri in 1866. In 1875 he took up his permanent residence in Montana, and is now located on a fine farm in the Chestnut valley. The death of his wife, July 17, 1882, was a heavy loss to him and his family.

WALTER W. ARNOLD, was born in Woodford Co., Ky., in 1831. His parents died while he was yet young. When about fifteen years old he removed to Clay Co., Mo., and was in that State four years. He visited Kentucky but returned to Missouri and purchased and worked a farm. Selling out in 1864 he came to Montana, arriving at Alder Gulch August 12. He mined in various localities in the Territory, and made $44,000 in Cave Gulch in one season, afterward clearing $6,000 in New York Gulch. He sunk $10,000 in operations on Eldorado bar, and afterward purchased mining interests on Trout Creek, where the diggings recently have become famous. He operated a saw mill three years on Jackson, Buffalo and White Man Creeks. He bought the lower part of his present ranch during his mining operations, and finally made a permanent settlement upon it, where he turns his attention to farming and stock raising. Mr. Arnold married Eugenia Norman, at Helena, September 6, 1881. Her parents were citizens of Baltimore, Md.

C. H. AUSTIN, farmer and stock grower, P. O. Chestnut, was born in St. Albans, Vt., February 6, 1844. In 1862 he enlisted in the Twelfth Vermont Infantry, and served eleven months in the Potomac army, receiving honorable discharge at the end of that period. He paid a visit of several months to California, and then coming to Montana engaged in mining at Virginia City for several years. He subsequently became interested in dairying, but after some years sold out and bent his energies to the cattle business, which he still continues successfully. He has a well improved ranch.

JAMES BARKER, Townsend, son of James and Belinda Barker, of Herkimer Co., N. Y., was born October 12, 1811, and educated at Fairfield Academy. He removed in 1855, to Wisconsin, and in 1859, to Denver, Col., mining and ranching and dealing in stock. After remaining about four years in Colorado, he came to Montana and engaged in mining at Bannack and Alder Gulch. About August 15, 1863, he returned to Colorado, closed up his business and started back for Salt Lake, but was snowed in and had to build a cabin on Rock Creek, five miles from the station on the overland road from Denver to Salt Lake; stayed there five months until the snow melted; broke camp March 18, 1864, took the emigrant road for Fort Bridger, and thence by way of Bear River and Soda Springs for Montana, arriving in Alder Gulch about the middle of June. He brought two loads of merchandise to Bivens Gulch; he sold it and went to Virginia City (or Alder Gulch) to winter, and about February went to Last Chance Gulch (now Helena), took up the lot which Greenhood & Bohm now occupy, moved on a set of house logs and put them up: brought a stock of goods in, opened a mercantile house, and continued it about one year, selling out to Dow & Wilson in September. Then in a Mackinaw boat seventy-two feet long he went to Sioux City with eighty-four persons, taking some gold dust with him from the Last Chance Gulch. Finally reaching home he remained until 1866, then returned via Fort Benton, and arrived in Helena about July 11, 1868. He bought a stock of goods, employed a pack train, went to Wilson Gulch and opened a mercantile house. When winter set in he moved his goods to Jefferson City, selling goods until 1869, then selling out he returned to Helena. Was afterward for twenty two months in business at Cedar Creek, but closed out mines and goods and left for Helena again, purchasing a building on the ground where the Masonic hall now stands. This he removed to Centreville and opened a mercantile business at that place. In 1883 he moved his stock from Centreville, and opened a general variety store at Townsend. Mr. Barker was married in 1832 to Olive Phelps, and after her death to Anna Hubbard, in 1879.

AUGUSTUS R. BARROWS, P. O. Ubet, was born in Olean, N. Y., July 30, 1838; received an academic education; followed the business of lumbering during most of his life in "the States," removing from New York to Minnesota in 1855; enlisted as a private in H Company, 11th Minn. volunteer infantry and was mustered out as lieutenant June 30, 1865, and immediately thereafter removed to Wisconsin, settling in Chippewa Co.; was twice elected county treasurer and served one term as mayor of Chippewa Falls; was elected a member of the Assembly in 1877 and was chosen speaker on the organization of that body, January 9, 1878. Having been "at the front" nearly all his life, he removed with his family to Montana in 1879; engaged for a time in lumbering and then made stock-growing a specialty. He was one of the first to settle permanently in the famous Judith Basin, and named, founded and built all unto himself the "City" of Ubet. He has only one class of pets, Durham calves, and two hobbies, to wit: opposition to the grandest humbug inherited from old England, the Grand Jury system, and a desire to prevent by statute or otherwise the use of any name for town or post office containing more than seven letters.

JAMES BELCHER, Townsend, son of James and Dille Belcher, was born at Huntsville, Mo., November 20, 1847, and educated at the same place, at Mt. Pleasant college, his preceptor being Dr. W. H. Taylor. He graduated from the St. Louis Medical college in 1871, and practiced in Huntsville, Mo., for seven years, coming direct from there to Montana and settling in Centreville, Meagher Co. He married Miss Nannie Belle Rutherford, of Huntsville, daughter of Archie Rutherford, in 1872. Dr. Belcher practiced in Centreville and the surrounding valley, over a radius of sixty or seventy miles; then moved to the railroad town of Townsend and purchased lots of the Northern Pacific R. R. company, built a residence on one and an office on Broadway on another lot. Mr. Belcher has gained a high reputation in the surrounding country for his medical and surgical skill since he began practicing in this neighborhood.

W. J. BICKETT, P. O. Ulidia, was born in Kentucky, January 1, 1856, but removed when a child with his parents to Missouri, where he was educated. Coming to Montana in 1868, he entered a mercantile house at Helena as clerk, and remained in that position seven years. He then engaged in sheep raising, but met with indifferent success for a time, owing to severe winters.

ALBERT BRUCKERT, White Sulphur Springs, son of George and Emma Bruckert, of Bavaria, came to the United States in 1853, landing at New York, and settling afterward at Cincinnati, where he received his education. From thirteen until twenty-three years of age he worked at the barber's trade, being located at St. Joseph, Mo., from 1857 to 1863. In the latter year he moved to Denver, Col., and on the 29th day of March, 1864, left for Montana. After passing nine months at Alder Gulch he went to German Gulch, and in October, 1864, to Diamond City, where he opened a bakery, also followed mining in the gulch. He was a member of the California Ditch Co., who brought a ditch to the mines, costing $27,000. It was a total failure. Mr. B. remained in the diggings until 1871, when he located a ranch of 160 acres in the Missouri valley, and became a farmer and stock-raiser. He sold out to Abe Buckingham in 1874, and went over to Thompson's Gulch and sold provisions, etc., also engaging in butchering, baking, and hotel keeping, until 1881. Leaving that place for the Mouth-of-Woods Gulch Smith river, he located 240 acres under the timber act, improved the same and built a good residence. The ranch is handsomely situated, having one of the finest trout streams running through to be found in Montana. Mr. Bruckert was married to Miss Rachel Whitman, of St. Joseph, Mo., June 26, 1859. They have six sons, namely: Albert, born in St. Joseph, May 22, 1860; John, born in Missouri, July 12, 1862; George Edward, born in Virginia City, M. T., July 11, 1864; William Augustus, born at Diamond City, January 20, 1866; Charles Frederick, born at Diamond City, December 14, 1874; Frank, born at Helena, November 21, 1880. Albert Bruckert, Jr., has located a ranch of 160 acres adjoining his father's, and is cutting hay from his place for feeding his stock. John has taken up a cattle ranch on Sixteen Mile creek, having a few head of cattle and horses. George Edward and William Augustus are working with their parents. The other children are attending school at White Sulphur Springs.

BROOKS & HILGER'S Warm Spring Creek, Judith Basin, sheep ranch was located in 1881. These gentlemen started with 2,700 head of sheep, buying them in the Territory. The animals are high graded Merinos, shearing in 1883 7 lbs. 2 oz. to the head. In that year the owners had on the range 5,000 head, divided into three bands, one located on Dog creek, one at the home ranch on Salt creek, shown in an accompanying engraving, and the third on one of the tributaries of Salt creek, about twenty miles from Judith City, at the mouth of the river. Mr. Hilger and Mr. John Brooks superintend the sheep entirely. Mr. Hilger is considered one of the best managers and judges of sheep in Montana, having had an experience of several years in the business, and he is thoroughly practical. These ranges are quite extensive and well watered for sheep, with fine grass, and sufficient hay land for cutting and curing hay for winter use, should it be needed in case of severe weather. There has been little necessity for feeding, however. In 1883 the yield of lambs was ninety per cent. of the flock, that being an extra good season.—(Vide Hist. of Judith Cattle Co.)

W. H. CAMPBELL, Townsend, was born in county Northumberland, Ontario, Canada, June 25, 1848. He was educated at the Collegiate Institute of Port Hope, Queens, Kingston, and graduated in the class of 1874 with the degree of M. D. He had pursued the study of medicine several years previously under the direction of his uncle, Dr. Thorold, an eminent physician of Canada, and a graduate of Apothecary Hall and St. Bartholemew's Hospital, England. Dr. Campbell practiced his profession in Canada till 1881, when he came to Montana and located at Glendive. In November, 1882, he removed to Livingston, and at once entered upon the practice of his profession. In May, 1883, he opened a drug store at that place, and in July following admitted Mr. Fred W. Merrill, a practical druggist, to partnership. In September of the same year he opened a second drug store on Main street. December 14, 1883, Messrs. Campbell & Merrill bought out the drug business of Wright & Bartlett in the post-office building. They then removed the stock of the Second street store to the postoffice building, and consolidated the two. Dr. Campbell is now located at Townsend.

E. R. CLINGAN, P. O. Fort Benton, born in Ohio July 20, 1853, and after removing to Iowa attended school and graduated at the State Agricultural College. In 1874 he began studying law, and was admitted to the valley, where he was engaged in farming for six years. bar in 1876. In the following spring he was elected city attorney at Vinton. A year later he removed to Nevada and taught school one year; then came to Montana, and the next year settled at Benton and was appointed principal of the public schools, holding the position for three and a quarter years. Since, then he has been connected with the River Press. He married Miss Jessie Kennedy, of Benton, June 24, 1883, and is now a resident of Meagher Co.

W. T. CRESAP, P O. Cora, son of Michael S. and Sarah A. Cresap, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1845. In 1864 he moved to Placerville, Cal., and was there engaged in both mining and farming until June 5, 1866. (Mr. Cresap crossed the plains from Iowa to California with Joseph Meek, having worked his way through from the start). June 5, 1866, Mr. Cresap started for Helena in his own conveyance, where he mined until 1870, and in the mean time raised a stream of water from his mine in Ora Fino Gulch, which same stream now supplies the city of Helena with water. Mr. Cresap was extensively engaged in freighting here in early days. In 1880 he sold out his teams and bought a band of 2,039 sheep. He now owns 3,500 sheep, and has a good ranch located on Box Elder creek in partnership with T. C. Turner. He lived on this ranch until December 23, 1881, when he took two claims on Cora creek, built a hotel and stage station, and is now extensively engaged in this business, owing to the favorable position of the locality, being on the main road to the new Barker mines and the main cattle trail to the Judith basin, Muscleshell and other points on the Northern Pacific railroad. This station is well adapted for the accommodation of tourists, hunters, etc., being only a day's drive from the great Missouri falls, and a splendid cover for game of all descriptions.

WILLIAM C. DANIELS, Canton, was born in Newberry, Berkshire Co., England, June 6, 1841, the youngest of nine children born to William and Martha Daniels. He came to Canada in 1845, and to the United States in 1846, settling in West Virginia. He removed thence to Kentucky, and then to Van Buren Co., Ia., where he resided for some years; thence to Virginia city, Nev.; from there to Boise Basin, and in the summer of 1863 to the British possessions. Returning to the Missouri valley, he was the discoverer of Cave gulch, Montana. In the spring of 1866 he went to N. Y. gulch, and later to Cave gulch, where he was first to strike gold in paying quantities in deep diggings, paying $30 per day to miners. At Diamond Mr. Daniels spent about $15,000 mining. He then moved out into the valley and began farming, where he now resides. March 9, 1873, he married Rachel Geiger, of Van Buren Co., Ia. They have four children: Martha May, Daisy Dean, Cyrus Elmer and Harry Muller. Mr. Daniels now owns 200 acres of good land, well fenced and watered.

FRANK DAY, P. O. Reedsfort, son of Thomas and Charlotte Day, of Bishopton, county of Durham, England, was born July 25, 1836, and educated in the national schools of England up to the age of nine years, when he came to America, landing in New York, and traveled through to Mineral Point, Wis., living with his brother there until 1866. Coming west to Alder gulch in June of the same year, he drove mules across the plains for his passage; left Alder gulch, the day after his arrival, for Last Chance gulch, and worked there eleven weeks for wages; bought a blacksmith shop in New York gulch, and operated it until 1872; stayed and grew with the place, and as it got poorer he did the same; moved from there to Lower Cave gulch, and fared the same there, or if anything a little worse; left this place in 1877 to work for the United States government as quartermaster's blacksmith at Fort Logan. In September, 1883, he came over to Reedsfort and bought a ranch of 120 acres of Major Reed. The improvements at the time consisted of two log houses and a small log stable; since then he has improved the ranch, fenced the principal part, and built up the present improvements. The ranch is situated on the Martinsdale and Fort Maginnis stage road, and is one of the principal stage stations on the route.

ALFRED O. DE LORIMER, of firm Baker & De Lorimer, Fort Benton, was born May 16, 1852, in Montreal, Canada. At the age of seventeen he clerked in a dry goods store at that point, and in 1870 went to Chicago, where he was salesman for Tuohy Brothers, seven years, coming to Fort Benton, April 29, 1879. He was employed by T. C. Power & Brother, two years, having charge of the dry goods department; then formed a partnership with W. S. Baker and opened a dry goods store corner of St. John and Bond streets. This is the only exclusive dry goods house in Fort Benton. Mr. De Lorimer's present P. O. address is White Sulphur Springs.

MOSES DOGGETT, Canton, son of James S. and Hannah Doggett, was born September 19, 1829, near Louisville, Ky., and moved into Indiana when about eleven years of age. In June, 1847, he took up his residence in Iowa, and from 1859 until 1862 was engaged in mining in Colorado. Returning to Iowa, he removed to Montana in 1863, arriving at Horse Prairie Creek, August 2, with his family. He mined on Grasshopper Creek and at Alder Gulch (Virginia City), where he built the first finished house on Idaho street. His son, Jefferson Doggett, was the first white child born in Virginia City, his birth occurring October 29, 1863. When the little one was nine days old, Mrs. Doggett made the trip up the gulch, four miles, to her husband, on an Indian pony, taking the baby and another child on behind her. From January to October Mr. Doggett took out $14,000 from "No. 29," in Highland district, Alder Gulch, and selling out and removing to Last Chance Gulch (Helena), purchased two claims in Dry Gulch, below discovery, from which he took $1,500 in twelve days. In the fall of 1865 he located at what is now Canton, Meagher Co., having then but three neighbors, the nearest residing four miles away. He took a squatter's right and engaged in the stock business and dairying, his market being Diamond City. His ranch now consists of about 900 acres. He constructed the first irrigating ditch from the Missouri valley, and raised a crop in 1866. Mr. Doggett has been twice married, first on the 29th of August, 1849, and second, September 9, 1859. By his first marriage he has two children, Duane and Lafayette; and by the second, seven: Charles B., Jefferson, James, Loren, Ida Montana, Robert, and Lily Mabel. His second wife was Susan Rose, daughter of Lion and Sarah Rose, of Ottumwa, Ia.

LUTELLUS DOOLITTLE, of Licking Co., O., was born September 9, 1839; came to Montana with Jacob Hart in 1865, and has since been engaged in farming and mining. In 1872 he visited his home in Illinois, and returned to Montana in 1873. He owns the farm Mr. Hart resides upon, comprising 280 acres of excellent hay land. Its cost was about $5,000. He also owns seventy inches of water right.

DUNHAM & MALONEY, White Sulphur Springs. J. W. Dunham, of Dunham & Maloney, White Sulphur Springs, was born September 2, 1834, in Springfield, O., and moved with his parents to Preble Co., in that State, in 1839. He learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed in Ohio, Iowa, and Kansas. In 1859 he went to Colorado and California, sight seeing, returning the same year to Indiana. In 1860 he entered the Colorado mines, and in 1863 engaged in a mine at Alder Gulch, Montana. In 1865 he went to Last Chance (now Helena), and after making several changes, finally located, in 1878, at White Sulphur Springs, where he engaged in his present business together with ranching and raising horses. He is a member of the Masonic order. P. H. Maloney was born in 1844, in Ireland; came to Quebec, Canada, in 1845, with his parents, where his father was engaged as a stone mason. He left his home in 1858 and was employed as a sailor on the lakes, for five years. From 1863 to 1865 he was a passenger brakeman on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad. He was then employed as a watchman on the U. S. Mail steamer "Gen. Lytle," on its route from Louisville to Cincinnati, until 1866, when he came by steamer to Fort Benton, Mont., and engaged in mining at Diamond City, where he later served one term as under sheriff. In 1881 he formed the partnership now existing with Mr. Dunham, and devotes some time to horse raising. He is a member of the I. O. O. F.

JAMES FERGUS, P. O. Fort Maginnis, was born near Glasgow, Scotland, October 8, 1813. Upon reaching early manhood he came to the United States in 1833, settling in the Black Hawk purchase, now the State of Iowa, and was one of the earliest pioneers west of the Mississippi river. Soon after he went to Illinois and built powder mills and had charge of the manufacture of powder for two years. He then removed to Moline, Ill., and engaged in the foundry business there and at Rock Island, with General N. B. Buford, remaining eight years. He was also interested in paper mills. He went subsequently to Minnesota and located at St. Anthony's Falls, then to Little Falls, and laid out that town in 1857. The company under his supervision built the dam and a bridge across the river. He and Jos. Whitford owned the land where Fergus Falls is now located. Whitford was killed in the massacre by the Indians and the property was jumped, but the town was given Mr. Fergus' name which it still bears. In 1860 Mr. Fergus went to Colorado and the following year returned for his family. He found Capt. J. L. Fisk was coming out with an expedition, so he left his family and came with Captain Fisk by the northern route. They were three months on the way, reaching Bannack City in 1862, and engaged in mining. The following spring they went to Virginia City during the great Alder Gulch excitement, and Mr. Fergus was selected the first Recorder of that famous mining camp. He continued mining and prospecting in that vicinity until 1865, when he moved to Last Chance and remained one year. He then engaged in stock-raising and dairy business in the Prickly Pear Valley for some years, then moved to Prickly Pear canyon, where he continued in stock-raising and keeping station for ten years. He finally sold out there and removed to his present location on Armell creek, north of the Judith mountains, where he is engaged in raising cattle, horses and sheep, also farming. Mr. Fergus has been actively identified with the interests of Montana, and is well known throughout the Territory. He was the first Commissioner of Madison county, and held the same position in Lewis and Clarke county six years, and was twice elected to the Legislature. He was elected a delegate to the Constitutional Convention of January, 1884, of which body he was a useful member. The new county of Fergus is named in his honor. In 1848 Mr. Fergus was married to Miss Parmelia Dillen, of New York. They have four children: One son, Andrew, who manages the stock ranch, and three daughters, all married—Mrs. Gilpatrick, Mrs. Hamilton, and Mrs. Maury.

JOHN H. FORD, Canton, son of Henry and Rosa Ann Ford, was born December 17, 1851, in Canada West, and was educated in the public schools. His parents died when he was about ten years old, and he lived with friends for the next five years. He lived in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., for 15 years, then came to Montana in 1878, stopping at Mt. Pleasant, and subsequently locating at Canton, Missouri Valley, Meagher county. He worked for wages on a ranch about three years, then bought a ranch of 320 acres of Martin O'Herne. He erected his present saloon building in 1882. When he came to Montana he had but about $30 saved.

PATRICK GARNET, P. O. Canton, son of Patrick and Mary Garnet, was born in Kerry County, Ireland, about 1827. His mother died when he was an infant. He came to Quebec, Canada, at the age of nineteen years, thence going to Upper Canada and followed farming for a livelihood. After about three years he came across to Buffalo, N. Y., thence by the lakes to Chicago, Ill., where he took out his first naturalization papers. He was for five years at the Great Western Iron Works on the Alleghany river, in Pennsylvania, working in the rolling mills; then came to the Ohio river, working on the railroad at Hanging Rocks, and finally to Louisville, Ky., where he married Miss Ellen Dooling, May 14, 1852. He lived at Louisville six years, next settling in the old town of Omaha, Neb., in 1857, being one of the early settlers of that city. May 14, 1864, he left for Montana, arriving September 23, at Alder Gulch, and working in the mines for wages the first season. In the spring of 1866 he moved to the Missouri valley and located a ranch under the squatter's right. He afterward homesteaded the same, improved it, and is still farming it—160 acres. He also purchased a railroad section of 640 acres. Mr. Garnet was one of the committee to organize the first school in the district, in 1867. Mr. and Mrs. Garnet have four children living: Michael, born in Omaha, Neb., August 2, 1860; Bridget Frances, born in Omaha January 30, 1864; Mary Ann, born in Missouri valley, Mont., September 22, 1867; Patrick, born same place, January 30, 1872. May 14, 1868, Mr. Garnet took his family and a few provisions and went to Diamond City for protection during an Indian raid.

W. GORDON, P. O. Martinsdale, was born March 2, 1838, in Ireland; emigrated to the United States at the age of thirteen years, landing in New York; was in Kansas from 1858 until 1860, when he went to Colorado and followed mining. In the fall of 1863 he came to Montana, mining at Alder Gulch with indifferent success until 1864; went to Last Chance gulch and stayed one winter, then into White's gulch in the summer of 1865, mining until 1869. He invested some money in cattle and herded until 1872 on the site of Fort Logan, then drove to the Muscleshell in the company of William Swett. That was a severe winter for stock, many people meeting with heavy losses, but Mr. Gordon and his friend wintered their stock well. Mr. Gordon has been in the Muscleshell ranges since that time, and has at the present time about 1,200 head of stock cattle on the range.

THOMAS L. GORHAM, P. O. Ulidia, was born in Missouri, October 29, 1829. He was educated at a select school and remained at his home until 1846, when he enlisted in Col. Price's regiment and served in the Mexican war for eighteen months. In 1849, some time after his return home, he went to California and engaged successfully in mining, again returning to Missouri in 1851, and interesting himself both in mercantile pursuits and farming. In 1864 he located as a merchant at Virginia City, Mont., but not long afterward engaged in freighting and continued until 1868. The Indians raided his camp in that year and drove away 336 head of cattle, but he has weathered the storms of adversity and is now in good circumstances.

MARTIN T. GRANDE, Martinsdale, son of Terres Peterson and Christiana Grande, of Trondhjem, Norway, was born August 16, 1844, educated in Norway, and came to the United States in June, 1866, via Quebec. He worked for wages in the states until coming to Wyoming in 1869, thence to Montana in 1872, arriving at Helena and from there going to Sun river. He passed through the various phases of pioneer life in the territory, mining, hunting for the market, chopping wood, etc. He went to Boise City, Idaho, in August, 1878, with Smith Bros. to purchase sheep, securing for himself 666 ewes, and driving them to Smith Bros.' ranch in the Muscleshell valley, remaining through the winter. He located a ranch for himself in 1879 and drove the sheep upon it in the spring of that year; built a dwelling house and lived in it that winter, and also built stables and corrals for sheep. The next summer he fenced a pasture for bucks and horses and cut hay that summer for winter feed. He has had no necessity for feeding sheep any winter that he has been in the business. In 1883 he had about 4,800 sheep, the exclusive increase of his original flock of 666, besides having sold a considerable number. Mr. Grande married Miss Cora Edmondson, November 15, 1880, in Lewis & Clarke Co., Mont.

H. CLAY GRAVES, P. O. Townsend, was born March 5, 1838, in Kentucky. He completed his education in the Masonic College at Lexington, Mo., at the age of eighteen, purchased 600 acres of land and engaged in farming for three years. In June, 1861, he enlisted in the Missouri State guards, holding the position of second lieutenant. In May, 1864, he arrived in Montana, and was interested in mining and running a pack train until the next year, when he turned his attention to freighting, continuing it until 1872. He then located in the Missouri valley and engaged in stock raising. In the same year he was elected assessor of Meagher county, and held the position two terms. He is now making a specialty of breeding fine stock.

J. E. HALL, P. O. White Sulphur Springs, son of Frederick and Jemima Hall, was born in Ohio, July 23, 1834. He taught school for three years previous to coming West in 1859. In 1860 he located at Central City, Col., prospecting for placer mines, and in the fall of that year went down to the San Juan mountains prospecting. In the summer of 1861 he visited Santa Fe, and returned to the States in the fall. Late in 1863 he once more came to Colorado, but a year later removed to Montana, camping in Alder Gulch. Making two trips to Bitter Root valley after potatoes and grain, he left the gulch for Last Chance, and then to Confederate Gulch, locating claims and working at mining ten years, with indifferent success. In 1875 he visited Ohio and other Eastern localities. After investigating southern Colorado in 1876, and Texas in the fall of 1877, he returned to the Muscleshell valley, Montana, in 1878, and located permanently on 160 acres of land, making the lumbering business his principal occupation. Mr. Hall owns and keeps the Half-Way House between Copperopolis and Martinsdale. Mr. Hall married Miss Minnie H. Moore at Diamond, December 14, 1868, and they have had three children: Edgar M., born January 5, 1871; Frederick B., June 12, 1874; Harry Roberts, born October 1, 1880, and drowned while trying to cross the plank bridge to get to the mill (it is supposed by his body being found in close proximity to it) May 10, 1888; buried at White Sulphur Springs.

JACOB HART, Canyon Ferry, was born May 4, 1845, in Crawford Co., Ill., son of Miles A. and Nancy Hart. His father came from Kentucky when quite young, and still earlier from Pennsylvania. He was a farmer and mechanic, and Jacob Hart worked on the farm in summer and attended school in winter until 1865, when he left for the mines of Montana. He first visited Virginia City, and after ten days went to Diamond, from whence he teamed to Virginia City one winter, getting ten cents per pound for hauling freight. After this first winter he mined until 1869. Returning east he married Miss Alva Doolittle, of Crawford Co., Ill., August 18, 1873. To them have been born four sons: George W., Franklin, Charles A. and Jesse R. The spring succeeding his marriage Mr. Hart returned to Montana and settled in Oregon Gulch two years, then mined two years in Avalanch Gulch, finally deciding to locate on a farm. He rented the farm where he now resides, and has since been engaged in haying. He handles 175 to 200 tons per annum, finding a market in the mines.

JOHN HAY, Stanford P. O. John Hay, Andrew Hay and George Hay, sons of John and Mary Hay, were born in Wellington Co., Ontario, Canada, respectively, June 6, 1850, February 1, 1858 and August 29, 1859. They were reared and educated in Wellington county. In the year 1876 John went to Portage la Prairie, Manitoba, and the following year to Fort Walsh, where he was joined by his brother Andrew. In Fort Walsh they were working for wages until the fall of 1878, when in partnership they traded with the Indians until the spring of 1879. In May, 1879, they came to Fort Benton. Here they worked until the summer of 1881, when they bought 500 head of sheep and located a ranch on Arrow creek. In the meantime George Hay had remained in Canada, but in 1881 he came out to his brother's new ranch on Arrow creek, where the three have been working in partnership ever since. The Hay brothers are now interested in 14,000 head of sheep, are located in one of the best sheep and cattle raising districts in Montana.

JONAS HIGGINS, White Sulphur Springs, was born in England, November 5, 1815; self educated; came to Cincinnati in 1842; labored one year and went to the lead mines of Jo Daviess Co., Ill., where he mined five years, after which he farmed in Wisconsin till 1864, when he settled for two years in Colorado, selling a drove of cattle which he took there. In 1865 he bought a number of mules in Indiana and started them for Montana. Some of them died in Wisconsin and a portion were stolen by the Indians of Montana, after they were located near Diamond City. Mr. Higgins began merchandising at Diamond City in 1866 and continued until 1878, when he removed his stock to White Sulphur Springs and here carried on the business until 1882, when he sold to P. S. Price and retired. In 1884 he built the Higgins House, a fine brick structure three stories high, 80x50 feet, at a cost of $30,000. It has a basement the full size of the building, contains thirty-seven sleeping rooms. Mr. Higgins was married in 1844 to Bethsheba Jewell, a native of England, who died in 1873, having borne him several children, of whom Mary J., William J., Louvina A. and Samuel J. survive.

JOHN W. HOPKINS, P. O. Ulidia, was born in St. Louis Co., Mo., December 16, 1841, and there grew to manhood and was educated. In 1867 he came to Montana, and for two years was engaged in mining and stock herding, then operating a feed stable until 1875. From that year until 1882 he followed farm life, finally locating on his present ranch on Deep Creek, where he has excellent prospects.

JOHN S. HOUSE, P. O. Chestnut, was born in Barbour Co., W. Va., September 30, 1842. Leaving there in 1854 he removed to Missouri. During the late civil war he was in the Confederate service as a member of a cavalry regiment commanded by Col. Williams, and participated in many engagements. At the close of the war in 1865 he returned to his Missouri home, and in 1878 came to Montana. He now owns a good farm in the Chestnut Valley, and is a thorough business man. Both himself and wife are imbued with a spirit of hospitality which is a source of pleasure to the stranger within the gates.

L. JOHNSON, Buffalo Creek, P. O. Ubet, son of Alexander and Sarah Jane Johnson, was born in Shelby Co., Ky., September 23, 1830, educated in Indiana, and subsequently removed to Benton Co., Ia., where he located 120 acres of land, improved the ranch and lived upon it for thirteen years, when he sold out and lived in Shellsburgh two years. He joined the Sixth Iowa Cavalry at the beginning of the civil war, under the command of Gen. Selley, served three years and was discharged at Sioux City, returning home and farming until 1870, when he sold out and went to Montgomery Co., Kan. He located in Sumner Co., Kan., in 1873, on a farm of 160 acres, and improved and fenced the same. He came to Montana in 1879, stopping in Deer Lodge until 1880, then proceeding to the Judith Basin, where he located a ranch, homesteading same, and engaged in the sheep business on shares with his brother. Mr. Johnson married Miss Martha Jane Forsyth, March 5, 1851, and they have five children, four living, viz.: John Alexander, born February 5, 1852; Ara May, born July 15, 1853; Cordie Elsie, born July 28, 1855; Ida Inez, April 18, 1858; Allen Montague, born May 25, 1870. Allen Montague died April 13, 1876, in Sumner Co., Kan., and was buried in Oxford Cemetery.

THE JUDITH CATTLE COMPANY, P. O. Reedsfort, was organized in the summer of 1878, by the following capitalists: T. C. Power & Bro., of Benton; J. H. McKnight, of Fort Shaw, and H. P. Brooks. Mr. Brooks is the pioneer of this section of the Judith Basin. He had purchased a number of cattle in the Gallatin Valley and was authorized to drive them across the Missouri for the winter, but finding they were too poor he turned them out on Warm Spring Creek—1,800 head—and spent the winter with only four men besides himself to look after them. Wherever the cattle ranged they moved with them, and finding such excellent ranges, unknown to other cattle men, Mr. Brooks took up sufficient for the company's use. This he did, and the following year (1879) commenced building corrals and sheds for his herd. This was the first ranch located in this section. The engravings in this work show the present ranch and the residence of Mr. Brooks, situated about half a mile east of the old location. When that gentleman first became a resident here, the Indians were very troublesome, killing cattle and stealing horses. Buffalo ranged freely over the country. Now the buffalo are all killed or driven out, and only a few half-breed Indians remain. In 1879 Mr. Brooks added about 600 head to his herd of cattle, and a like number in 1880, selling nothing during this time but beef steers. In 1880 a few shorthorn bulls and heifers were purchased in the East and shipped to the ranch for the purpose of improving the herd. In 1881 a number of Shorthorns and Jerseys were shipped in, and in 1882 several Herefords and Aberdeen or Polled Angus cattle, others of the latter being added in 1883, from the finest families to be secured in Scotland. Among the Polled Angus is one cow worth $1,000, and a bull calf by Paris the Third, property of M. H. Cochrane, Hillhurst Compton, Canada, which is to be the head of the herd. There are also some very fine Shorthorn bulls of fine blood. The improvements on the ranch have cost the proprietors about $30,000. The herd ranges over an area of twenty-five to thirty square miles.

S. M. KRATON, Townsend, son of James J. and

Catherine A. Keaton, of Mercer Co., W. Va., was born March 18, 1841, at Mercer Co., Ky., and educated at a private school in St. Joseph, Mo. Upon arriving at the age of manhood he engaged in farming and stock raising in Buchanan Co., Mo. He joined the Confederate forces in 1863, under General Price, remaining in the army until the close of the war. Going to Colorado he engaged in freighting from the Missouri river to Denver. In the spring of 1866 he started from St. Joseph, Mo., with a train of sixty-two wagons, for Montana via Salt Lake, arriving in the Territory in September, and purchasing a placer claim near Radersburg, Jefferson county. Spending one summer there, he moved to the Missouri River bottom, in Jefferson Co., and in 1871 went home to Missouri and returned through Texas, buying cattle to drive to Montana. He reached the Territory again October 10, 1872, with 950 head of live stock; and located on the Jefferson, opposite the Three Forks, Jefferson county, herding there three years. During the time he located a ranch on the east side of the Missouri at Greyson Creek, Meagher county. He sold out his stock interests in 1878, and bought and raised horses three years, selling them in the spring of 1883, the herd consisting of California half-breeds. He then settled down and paid his attention wholly to farming, living on the estate of his deceased father, who bought the place in 1872 of Geo. Greyson, who gave the name to Greyson Creek. Mr. Keaton married Miss Mollie F. Wilson, daughter of J. S. S. and H. Wilson, of Andrew Co., Mo., at St. Joseph, October 20, 1881. J. J. Keaton, father of S. M. Keaton, was one of the first trustees of school district No. 6, Meagher county, about 1870.

Michael C. Larkin, Clendenin, was born June 30, 1830, in Kilkenny County, Ireland. After leaving school he engaged in farming until 20 years old, then left for the United States; landed at New Orleans; came up the river to Dubuque, Ia. There he opened a grocery and provision store (firm of Ryan & Larkin) and carried on the business until 1857. Selling out went to Hastings and was in business one year. He then returned to Dubuque, engaging in the same line for two years. He went to Deer Lodge, Mont., in 1862. On the Missoula River he purchased an interest in a ferry, and remained a short time. He brought a pack train to Benton in 1863, and afterward engaged in farming at Hell Gate; then mined at Alder Gulch one year; herded horses on ranch one year; was at Silver Bow and Benton in 1864; in 1865 went to Blackfoot; then opened a store in German Gulch, and in 1869 engaged in the cattle business at Madison. In 1878 he opened a saloon at Walkerville, which he kept one year, then left for Benton with a herd of cattle; afterward engaged in mining in the Barker district. He was superintendent for Wright & Edwards one year, and later Justice of the Peace and Notary Public at the Barker mines. He held similar offices in Deer Lodge in 1869, and was postmaster at French Gulch.

John Lloyd, P. O. Townsend, son of Richard and Ann Lloyd, from Ireland, was born in New York, September 17, 1836, and educated in the Ohio public schools. His parents died when he was young. In 1853 he entered the railroad shops at Richmond, Ind., learning the engineer's trade, and commenced running a passenger engine on the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton railroad, in 1854. He moved to Iowa in 1857, engaging in farming, and in the spring of 1861 started for Colorado. He ran an engine for a stamp mill in Nevada, and on the 1st day of September, 1863, started for Montana, arriving about the first of November, at the Grasshopper diggings on Horse Prairie Creek. In the spring of 1865 he located at Last Chance Gulch, and in the spring of 1866 at Confederate Gulch, where he remained until 1876. During the time between 1866 and 1876 he located a ranch of 160 acres in the Missouri valley, between Canton and Centerville, improved the same, built houses, and moved his family on the present ranch in 1871. Most of his time was spent in mining until 1876, when he settled on his ranch permanently, and engaged in stock raising and farming for a livelihood. Mr. Lloyd married Miss Catherine Green, of Richmond, Ind., August 17, 1856. They have four living children: Hannah Maria, born July 27, 1857; William Rd., born in Nevada, November 3, 1863; Winneford Agnes, born August 16, 1867; George, born December 19, 1869.

George Lyons, P. O. Martinsdale, son of George and Mary Lyons, was born in Ireland, June 16, 1843; came to the United States in 1854, and followed farming in the state of Massachusetts. In 1863 he went to California, mined and traveled through Nevada and came to Montana in May, 1866, arriving in Last Chance Gulch. After one month, he came into Meagher Co., to Nelson Gulch, and mined and prospected in various localities until 1876, when he settled in Musclehell Valley, locating 320 acres under homestead and pre-emption and 80 acres under the timber act. Mr. Lyons has a large herd of cattle, besides a considerable number of horses. He has built a neat farm dwelling at a cost of $3,000, being the finest in that section. Mr. Lyons married Miss Mary Orr, of Massachusetts, March 10, 1880.

James J. and Thomas Mayne, of Canyon Ferry and Martinsdale, are sons of Joseph and Priscilla Mayne, J. J. born in 1843 and Thomas in 1844, both in Cornwall, England. The former emigrated to the United States in 1862 and Thomas in 1864. Both located in Grass Valley, Cal., and followed placer mining. In 1865 they went to Virginia City, Nev., and mined a short time. James desired a new field for his labors, and hearing good news from the Montana mines he departed in 1866 for New York Gulch in that territory, and engaged in mining until 1870, and then settled on the present home ranch of 640 acres. Thomas followed his brother to Montana in 1870 and located on the ranch directly. J. J. Mayne married in 1881, Matilda Johnson, of Montana, and Thomas married, in 1875, Laura A. Bleoins, a native of St. Louis, Mo. To Thomas and Laura Mayne have been born two children, James and Olivia, both in the state of Nevada. The Mayne brothers own one of the finest hay ranches in the territory, and deal extensively in hay, cutting from 150 to 200 tons annually. Thomas Mayne has more recently located a fine blue joint hay ranch of 320 acres in the Musclehell Valley, about four miles from Martinsdale. The two gentlemen make the raising of cattle and horses their principal occupation.

F. T. McCormick, Townsend, son of Thomas W. and Harriet McCormick, of Sheridan township, Missouri, was born December 15, 1850, and educated at Magee College, Missouri. He left school at the age of 22 years; clerked in a store some time, then went into business for himself for a few years, and came to Montana in April, 1879. He first settled at Centreville, Meagher Co., clerking for James Barker, subsequently coming to Townsend, Meagher Co., purchasing, with others, three lots of the N. P. R. R. Co., and building the first livery barn, 110x85 feet, and office and saloon 20x50 feet, stocking the livery stable with buggies and road wagons of the latest patterns and styles from the Eastern market, at a heavy cost, and also stocking up the stable with the best livery driving teams that could be procured in the valley, consisting of about six spans and a few saddle horses. The total outlay was $8,000. Mr. McCormick now has ten teams, and has closed his saloon.

Jno. B. McCormick, Townsend, son of Mason and Lucy E. McCormick, was born in Randolph Co., Mo., April 17, 1853; educated at Huntsville, Mo.; left school at the age of 19 years and labored on a farm; came to Montana in May, 1874; settled on Grayson Creek, bought a farm of Andy J. Cooper and improved the same. The farm contains 100 acres of grain and 300 of hay land and is well watered from Grayson Creek.

JAMES L. MOORE, Townsend, was born in Missouri in 1850, and when quite small his mother died. His father went to California and there lost all his property, so that near the age of nine years young Moore began supporting himself. In 1865 he came to Montana and took employment to drive a team from Fort Benton to Virginia City, and a freight team in return to Fort Benton. During the winter of 1865 he hauled hay from the Madison Valley to Virginia City, then with his blankets on his back traveled the following spring to Diamond City, thence to the Gallatin Valley, where he worked on a ranch for $60 per month and subsequently bought and improved a farm, which he traded for a butcher shop in Bozeman. He later quit the butcher business and managed a bedrock flume at Avalanche Gulch for two years, in which enterprise he did not meet with success. He then helped to construct smelting works at Helena at $100 per month. In 1871 he went to Missouri Valley, worked on a ranch. In 1872 he was unsuccessful in mining. He afterward bought an interest in a fine stallion, realizing for services during that season $1,085, but the animal died and he subsequently lost all he had mining. He began again by buying a half interest in a ranch and stock, going in debt $3,200, over half of which he paid in one year. The second year himself and partner put in 160 acres of oats and wheat, which was totally destroyed by the grasshoppers. He then merchandised for awhile with his brother in Missouri. In 1878 he returned to Montana and took up and improved land in the Missouri Valley, a part of which he still owns. In 1880 he bought one half interest in the Indian Creek Ferry, which was located in 1865. Teams going east to Townsend, Diamond City and White Sulphur Springs, and west to Radersburg, Bedford and Helena cross this ferry. His partner is Thomas E. Wine. Mr. Moore is also ranching, raising cattle and horses. He was married May 18, 1880, to Mary Hughes, of Butte City. Is a member of I. O. O. F. Mr. Moore has accompanied Nelson Story on some of his strategic Indian chases to recover stolen stock.

PERRY J. MOORE, P. O. Martinsdale, son of John W. and Eleanor Moore, was born May 8, 1844, in Shelby Co., Mo., where he was educated in the district schools He came to Montana in July, 1866, making Diamond City (or Confederate gulch) his first stopping place, and living there three years, mining and teaming. In 1869 he entered the lumber business in Smith river valley, buying a saw-mill in partnership with his brothers, and manufacturing lumber for Diamond and Thompson gulch, also supplying the lumber for building Camp Baker, now known as Fort Logan. The winter of 1871-72 he spent in Oregon and California, purchasing stock cattle; he brought back a band of horses to Smith river and sold them the following season. In 1873 he went into the cattle business, remaining on Smith river until the winter of 1877-78, when he moved into the Little Elk of the Musselshell, locating a ranch of 160 acres, besides 400 acres of desert land, now all under fence and improved. Perry J. Moore married Miss Nella Robertson, of White Sulphur Springs, August 17, 1881. They have one child, Pearl Eleanor, born September 24, 1882.

JOHN E. MORGAN, P. O. Ulidia, stockman, was born in Indiana February 9, 1842, and was educated and reared as a farmer in that State. In January, 1862, he enlisted in the 5th Ohio Cavalry and served until the close of the war in 1865. He participated in many battles; was captured in 1864 and held a prisoner until 1865, when he was released and returned home. He came to Montana in 1871, and is now located in the Chestnut valley, being one of the largest cattle owners in this region. He has a fine farm and is in easy circumstances.

E. J. MORISON, Philbrook, was born in Belfast, Me., May 9, 1851, of Scotch-Irish parents. His ancestors came from the north of Ireland and settled in New Hampshire, thence moved into Maine about the beginning of the present century. Mr. Morison was reared to a knowledge of the hardware business, and engaged therein upon his own capital when nineteen years of age, his father having deceased seven years before. He was successful in business, but on account of failing health removed to Montana in May, 1880, and engaged in lumbering. In 1881 he associated himself with parties from Maine in the sheep business in the Judith Basin. His health was so much improved in this climate that he returned to Maine in the winter of 1881-2, disposed of his hardware business, and came back to Montana to make it his permanent home. Philbrook village was established in August, 1881, and named for Mr. Morison's grandfather, John Philbrook, of Knox, Me. The postoffice at Philbrook was established in the winter of 1881-2, mail service beginning in April following. The settlement is prosperous has a good school, M. E. church and Sabbath-school, and being centrally located, is destined to become of considerable importance. The only bridge on the Judith river is located at this place. Mr. Morison was married in 1876.

W. H. NAFUS, P. O. Townsend, son of Highland and Elizabeth Nafus, was born March 10, 1840, at Elizabethtown, Ky.; was educated in the public schools at St. Joseph, Mo., and commenced supporting himself at the age of 13 years; his mother died when he was about 5 years old, and his father died when he was 9 years old; he lived with his brother-in-law until commencing to work for himself; he worked principally on a farm for wages. He left St. Joseph May 17, 1864, and crossed the plains with Wood's train for Montana, making camp at Alder gulch, Madison Co., in the fall, remaining there until 1865, working for wages in the mines. He then pushed for Prickly Pear valley, near Helena, and engaged in farming. Locating 160 acres, he improved the same, living there until the spring of 1871, when he sold out and came to the Missouri valley, bought a ranch already improved, and settled on it. He married Miss Cornelia Woods, of St. Joseph, Mo., on the 11th of May, 1864, and they have the following children: Annie Dixey Nafus, born March 3, 1865; Marion Wallace, born August 7, 1867; Harry Edwin, born February 13, 1870; Harry Edwin, born February 13, 1870; Nellie Earnestine, born April 11, 1873; George Allen, born August 20, 1875; Richard Marion and Mabel Clare, twins, born August 4, 1878; baby girl, not named, born October 21, 1882. Mrs. Nafus was born in Sheridan Co., Mo., September 28, 1840.

THOMAS NIEL, P. O. Canton, was born August 6, 1841, at Duckinfield, England, and was in his youth employed in a cotton-mill. He emigrated to the United States in 1857 and was a resident of New York until 1859, when he journeyed to Colorado and entered upon mining life, working in various diggings in that territory and New Mexico. He at length started for Montana via Utah, but on the way was exceedingly troubled by Indians, who had stolen the stage stock, and who endeavored to get possession of the horses belonging to Mr. Niel's party, but without success. There were evidences all along the route of desperate encounters with the savages by other parties, and they found stations broken up and deserted in most instances. At Salt Lake City they were warmly welcomed by "Bill" Hickman. They finally reached Lemhi, Idaho, after a more or less exciting trip, and at that place one of the men, called "Frenchy," was killed by the accidental discharge of a rifle. There they left their wagons and harness and proceeded with pack animals to Fort Owen and Deer Lodge.

While prospecting on Pioneer they struck pay dirt and called the diggings Pike's Peak gulch. Mr. Niel was afterward at Bannack, Jimmie's Bar and Nelson gulch, and in the fall of 1866 came into the Missouri valley and located land where Canton now stands. He sold this and became possessed of his present ranch of 560 acres, improved the same, and has continued to reside thereon. Mr. Niel was married in October, 1875, to Miss M. A. Speigal, and they have one son, William, born August 11, 1876.

JOHN OAKS, Canyon Ferry, was born in Somerset Co., Penn., April 10, 1831; son of John and Eve Oaks. His father was a farmer, and in 1844 moved to Muscatine Co., Ia., where John lived until 1864. The latter in that year became a resident of Bannack, Mont., and commenced mining on Horse Prairie in Jeff Davis gulch. Later in the fall he went to Salt Lake and purchased a load of flour; and after selling it out at $27 per sack, moved into the Missouri valley and farmed near Canyon Ferry, and in company with two others put the boat on the ferry. In the spring of 1866 he sold his interest in the boat and again commenced ranching above the ferry. In 1868 he moved to Hell Gate, on his present home of 320 acres. He has been in the cattle trade, but sold out in the spring of 1882, and gives his attention to farming exclusively. November 6, 1878, Mr. Oaks married Mary A. Stairley, born in S. C., daughter of Hugh and Elizabeth Ross. They have one child, Eve May, born May 21, 1881, at Hell Gate. Mrs. Oaks' first marriage was to Joseph Stairley, by whom she has four children, Wallace T., Waverly R., Etna M. and Jessie M. The two daughters were born in Montana.

J. L. PERKINS, P. O. Ulidia, was born in Jackson Co., Mo., February 11, 1844. He was there educated and engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1864, when he removed to Montana and for a few months worked in the mines at Virginia City. Afterward, until 1866, he was at Grizzly gulch and Helena, and in the year last mentioned began teaming on a small scale, continuing four years. Then selling out, he located at his present home in the Chestnut valley, where he has 680 acres of land under fence, 80 horses, and about 2,500 head of cattle on the range.

JOHN G. PICKERING, Canton. In 1630 three brothers, Thomas, James and John Pickering, left England for the United States and landed where the city of Portsmouth, N. H., now stands. They constructed a raft and with the tide floated up the Piscataqua River to Great Bay. Here they located a tract of land, which has since been divided into nine farms. John G. Pickering is the son of Thomas Pickering, and was born July 22, 1831, on the old homestead which he inherited. He began his career as a sailor boy, and after being shipwrecked off the Bahama Islands relinquished the calling as not being congenial to his tastes. He then engaged in hunting along the coast, from Portland, Me., to New Orleans. In 1853 he married Miss Hannah M. Goodwin, of Acton, Me., abandoned hunting, and in September of the same year moved to Green Co., Wis., and engaged in farming. Mr. and Mrs. Pickering have had six children, viz.: John G., Frank G., Annie, now Mrs. Joseph Cline; Lola M., now Mrs. Geo. Perkins; Ida, and Carrie M. John died in infancy, April 18, 1866. Mr. Pickering, after having spent two years in the Federal army under General Sherman, left for the mines of Montana, but after five years' hard labor, finding himself destitute, packed his worldly possessions, consisting of a few blankets, and abandoned the too risky business of mining, and without a dollar purchased a small portion of his present farm on credit, and began improving it under the most unfavorable circumstances, as the grasshoppers had set in for a three years' siege. From time to time he has added to his possessions, until the homestead property now embraces 1,900 acres, besides the ranch at the ferry on the Missouri river. He also owns the ferry, and a steam saw-mill seven miles therefrom, one of the finest mills in Montana. Its capacity is 1,000 feet per hour. Mr. Pickering's ancestors were all mill men. His education was acquired in the public schools of New England. On his ranch he uses a steam threshing machine, and three self binders, using nothing but the latest improved machinery. He employs from twenty to thirty men, and in busy times from forty to fifty. His son Frank manages the entire business in the absence of his father. Mr. Pickering is largely interested in blooded stock, and imports his own fine blood horses. He is the projector of a good road over the mountains to White Sulphur Springs. His residence is on a direct line from the Springs to Helena, a much nearer and better route than any other, and was erected in 1880. His farm barn is 84x42 feet, with 16-foot posts and stone foundation. The floor in the center is 16 feet wide; stables both sides, 16 feet each; mangers 20 inches; bottom of mangers 18 inches from the floor; they are 4½ feet wide, same as stalls; iron bars are erected to prevent hay from falling in the stalls; feed trough at right side in front of manger; a car track 2x4 spiked down on which a car 6 feet wide is run to feed hay and grain from, taken from above through trap doors. There is also a track in rear of horses to carry refuse out to the dumping place. Extending from the barn eastward is a shed 200 feet long by 20 feet wide, open to the south, front 16 feet high, frame of heavy timber and stone foundation. His granary is first class, 30x50 feet, and holds 15,000 bushels of grain, but not nearly all that is grown. Mr. Pickering is a member of Union Lodge, No. 42, F. & A. M., in Wisconsin; a Democrat in politics, and very temperate in habits.

BENJAMIN F. POTTS, Townsend. Ex-Governor Potts, was born in Carroll Co., O., January 29, 1836, and was educated in the common schools of the country, and Westminster College, at New Wilmington, Pa. After leaving college he taught school for two or three sessions, in the mean time reading law, and was admitted to the bar of Ohio in 1859, practicing in his native county until the breaking out of the war in 1861. In July of that year he raised a company, in response to the call for three years' troops, and was elected Captain of Co. F, which was assigned to the 52d Ohio Vols. He served in the regiment until he became its Colonel, December 25, 1862. He was promoted Brigadier General in 1863, but did not obtain his commission until 1865, at Savannah. For good conduct and bravery he was brevetted Major General, in March, 1865, and on January 15, 1866, he was mustered out. On leaving the service, although a volunteer officer, General Potts was recommended by Generals Howard, Logan, Smith, Blair and Sherman for a colonelcy in the regular service. During the war, in the industrial life in which he has taken a part, and in the political life of the Territory, he has sustained his reputation. After the close of the war he resumed the practice of his profession at home, and was elected to the Ohio State Senate from Carroll County, in 1867, re-elected in 1869, served three sessions, was chairman of the judiciary committee, and resigned upon receiving his appointment as Governor of Montana Territory. He arrived at Virginia City in August, 1870, was reappointed by President Grant, in 1874, and again by President Hayes, in 1878, serving until January 15, 1883, a period of twelve years and a-half. He was succeeded by J. S. Crosby, of New York. Governor Potts was married May 29, 1861, to Angeline Jackson, a native of Carroll Co., Ohio. James Potts, the father of the governor, was born in Washington Co., Pa., in 1796, and was a son of Jno. Potts, a native of Virginia and a soldier of Virginia through the Revolutionary War.

J. D. RICKARD, P. O. Cora, son of John and Sarah Rickard, was born at Meadville, Pa., in 1845. In 1864

he moved to Baker City, Oregon, and there was engaged in the stock business until 1879, when he sold out and purchased a band of cattle, which he drove through to Wyoming. In 1880 he made a journey East; returned to Oregon in 1881, purchased 230 horses, and drove this band to Dillon, M. T., in the summer of 1882. Since that time Mr. Rickard purchased another large band of horses, which he now has on his Cora Creek farm. He was married October 7, 1883, to Miss Marian Dunn.

ED. SAYRE, P. O. Martinsdale, son of William and Amelia Sayre, was born May 5, 1844, in Salem Co., N. J., and educated in the district schools. He came to Montana in 1867, stopping at Confederate Gulch, working for wages, mining. He located one claim, which he worked with indifferent success. After about two years he went to Smith river valley and engaged in the lumbering business, marketing his lumber at Diamond, Fort Logan and Thompson's Gulch. In 1875 sold out mill and interests and visited the East, remaining until after the Centennial exposition; then returning to Montana in the spring of 1877, he engaged with his brother in the sheep business, on the head waters of the Muscleshell. The two brothers located 600 acres of land, and have at the present time 5,500 sheep, all ewes and lambs. The clip has averaged seven pounds and two ounces per head, and the wool is usually sold at Benton, wool-buyers always being found within fifty miles of the ranch. The Sayre Bros. were the first to organize a joint stock company in the sheep business, starting with a stock amounting to $7,000, in shares of $100 each. It has paid a dividend of thirty per cent. per annum to stockholders for several years. Sayre & Bro. have since bought the company out, and reorganized with a capital stock of $18,000, which is all taken. The sheep are graded ewes, between Cotswold and Merino, and thoroughbred Merino bucks.

SEVERANCE & Co's sheep ranch, in Judith Gap, was located in 1877, being the first in the basin. The firm was originally Severance & Son, who started in on shares with Burt, Gans and Klein's sheep, and 1,500 of their own, keeping the company's sheep for one season and buying the whole interest the next season. Since then they have been adding to the flock, and at the present time have about 11,000 head of graded sheep. Of these 1,800 head are high-grade Merinos, and 500 head are thoroughbred bucks and ewes. The company makes a business of breeding thoroughbred Merinos for the trade. The average clip per head for this band runs seven pounds and twelve ounces. The range extends over an area of about seventy square miles. The improvements on the ranch have cost about $25,000, including sheds, outhouses and dwelling houses. The parties composing this company are: Jacob Severance, Charles E. Severance, and Timothy E. Collins, of the Bank of Northern Montana, Ft. Benton.

D. L. SHAFER, Reedsfort, was born March 16, 1835, at Springfield, O. His parents were stock-raisers and farmers. Mr. Shafer emigrated to Iowa in 18[illegible] locating at Trenton, Henry Co.; farmed there two years; sold out and went to Nebraska; was engaged breaking prairie two summers for different individuals; contracted for building, etc., until 1859, when he left for Pike's Peak, following lumbering and mining during his stay there, and in the spring of 1864 removed to Montana, making for Virginia City, or what was at that time called Alder Gulch. After a short time he bought cattle in partnership with Mr. Perkins, drove them to the three forks of the Missouri river, and engaged in farming and stock-raising at what is now called Gallatin City. In the spring of 1869 he sold out to Mr. Perkins, and moved to Lewis and Clarke county, on the Prickly Pear, renting a farm during 1869-70. Not liking farming he moved into the Missouri valley, below Beaver creek, Jefferson county, went into the stock business, and has made that his occupation to the present time. After selling out at Beaver creek to Mr. Nelson he settled on the Cottonwood, Judith basin, Meagher county, about half a mile south of the old Carrol road. There he still follows stock-raising as a business. Mr. Shafer married Miss Donnie Perkins, of Brunswick, O., December 26, 1866. In 1869 he represented Gallatin county in the territorial legislature, was the first surveyor of that county in 1865-6, and served in 1867-8 as justice of the peace.

WM. J. SHARP, P. O. Tosten, was the son of Abram Sharp, ex-county judge of Logan Co., Ky., and was born January 14, 1836. His education was acquired in the common schools of Illinois. At the age of 14 he ran away from home, and began life's labor for himself. In 1854 he moved to Illinois. In 1859 he emigrated to Colorado and followed freighting and mining. In 1864 he came to Montana and followed the vocation of a miner in Alder, Cave, Confederate, German and French gulches. In 1871 he moved to the Missouri valley and worked for wages. In 1873 he rented the Grasen farm for three years, and in 1877 he bought the place in partnership with his brother, A. M. Sharp, commencing to raise horses and cattle in 1874. Sharp Bros. are extensive farmers and breeders of fine horses, owning 600 acres of land and a large band of horses and cattle

MARK SHELLEY, P. O. Townsend, son of William Shelley, an English farmer, was born March 14, 1825, and educated in the common schools of England. At the age of 15 he was apprenticed for six years to learn the wheelwright's trade, and at 21 he began work in the Woolwich arsenal. In 1850 he married Miss Sampson, the daughter of a butcher in England. They have but one child living, Mark H., who was born in Minnesota August 4, 1856. When Mr. Shelley came to America he first located in St. Louis, Mo., and conducted a shop for the manufacture of wagons. His next move was to LaCrosse, Wis. While there he worked at his trade and followed farming. In 1854 he located at Brownsville, Minn., in the same business. From Minnesota he moved to Nebraska, thence to Colorado, where he remained five years engaged in stock-raising and farming, making considerable money. In 1864 he came to Montana, first locating near Jefferson city, remaining 18 months and engaging in dairying. He spent one summer in Deer Lodge county, and in 1866 moved to his present home and located a farm. In 1882 he built the Missouri valley mill. Shelley and Son own 837 acres of land and the Missouri valley mill.

COURT SHERIFF, Canyon Ferry, was born in Mercer Co., Ill., in 1845, where he was educated and assisted in his father's store until 1866. During this year he drove a mule team from Missouri to Montana, via the old South Pass; stopped at Virginia city for some time, later proceeded to Meagher county, and mined eight years in Confederate gulch and in the Magpie district. He moved to Helena, where he engaged in jobbing for a short time; next held the position of book-keeper in one of the wholesale houses of that city for two years, then opened a general store at Cave gulch, and in 1880 moved to the Ferry. (See history of county.)

B. R. SHERMAN, White Sulphur Springs, son of Norman C. and Julia Ann Sherman, of Essex Co., N. Y., was educated in Wisconsin. He traveled to California in the spring of 1859, and followed mining until 1860, going from California to Placerville, southern Oregon, mining in Jackson and Josephine counties with moderate success until 1862, when he went to Idaho, locating in Boise basin. In 1864 he came to Montana, running the first grist mill at Fort Owens, Missoula Co. The next spring he bought a farm in the Bitter Root valley, but sold it in the spring of 1869, bought some cattle and drove to Meagher county, locating in White's gulch, and running a dairy two seasons. He then moved the stock to the north forks of Smith river, near White Sulphur Springs, having the finest ranch in the valley, being only one-quarter of a mile from the town, and consisting of 320 acres of arable land under fence. He has continued the dairy business for the accommodation of the citizens of White Sulphur Springs, raises horses, and is also conducting a livery barn at the Springs. Mr. Sherman was married January 1, 1868, to Miss Adelina Woods, of Bitter Root valley, by whom he has two sons: Charles Henry, born December 11, 1869; Byron Fredrick, born November 2, 1872. Mrs. Sherman died May 14, 1880, and was buried in the cemetery at White Sulphur Springs, Montana.

JOHN A. SMITH, P. O. Townsend, was born in Saline Co., Mo., October 12, 1834. He was the son of Col. John Smith, a veteran of the Blackhawk war, and received a liberal education in the common schools of Missouri. At the age of 17 he went to Colorado and was engaged in mining for nine years. In 1860 he returned home to Missouri and enlisted under Price in the Confederate army. In 1864 Mr. Smith came to Montana seeking for wealth in the Alder gulch mines September 30, 1864, he married Harriet Keaton, daughter of J. J. Keaton, a freighter. Their children are: Martha C., born September 24, 1865; James D., July 15, 1867; Valine, December 20, 1870; Archie S., May 20, 1878; Hubbert S., July 15, 1880. Mr. Smith moved to his present home in 1868. He follows farming and owns 160 acres of land; belongs to the M. E. Church South; is superintendent of the Union Sabbath school, and a stanch Democrat.

ROBERT SMITH, Canyon Ferry, son of Robert and Rebecca Smith, was born in Ireland, May 15, 1833; came to St. John's, Canada, with his parents, in 1848; to Chicago, Ill., in May, 1857, where he worked at the baker's trade until 1859, when he visited Louisiana. Returning north, he farmed in Iowa; went thence to Deleware, Col., in 1861; revisited the States, and came to Montana in 1864. He was engaged as baker in the Highland Mg. district; again at Helena and Diamond. At this last named place he followed mining and farming for over five years. In 1870 he went to Oregon Gulch, thence to French Bar, where he conducted the hotel until August, 1871, when he revisited Colorado. In March, 1872, he came to Yam Hill, M. T., where he engaged in the hotel business. In 1873 he visited Helena; in 1874 made a stay at Dog Creek, and the same year came to Eldorado Bar, where he has since been engaged in mining and stock raising. Mr. Smith was married at Montreal, P. Q., to Miss M. Shortley, December 31, 1856. They are the parents of five children.

J. V. STAFFORD, Canyon Ferry, son of Jesse and Parmelia Stafford, was born in Greene Co., Ind., January 31, 1831. His father was a native of Kentucky, and his mother of Ohio; and they became residents of Indiana but a short time previous to the birth of Joseph. The elder Stafford had previously settled in Jefferson Co., Ohio, where he was married. He died when the son was about fifteen years old, and the latter, in 1847, removed with his mother to Scott Co., Iowa, engaging in farm work. About 1852 he journeyed overland to California, halted at Placerville, and spent the time in the mines until 1858, in the fall of which year he returned to Iowa. Until 1864 farming claimed his attention, but in that year he once more crossed the Missouri and departed for the Yellowstone country. In Emigrant Gulch he opened a small farm; but because of the neighboring mines not proving good, he pushed on to Helena, and finally, in 1865, to Canyon Ferry. Mr. Sewall, who located the ferry, sold a one-third interest each to Mr. Stafford and a man named Oaks. Mr. Stafford in time became sole proprietor of the ferry and hotel. In 1867 he established the Oaks post-office. He built the road through the canon at his own expense, also the White's Gulch road, and has been interested in several others, expending large sums of money from his private means. January 31, 1868, Mr. Stafford was married to Minnie B. Kamber, a native of Vermont. Their children are: George M., Jessie P. and Joseph Z. For two and a half years, beginning with 1873, Mr. Stafford and his family resided in Cave Gulch, his ferry property being rented during the time to Joseph Hershman and L. Rotwill. Returning, he lived at the ferry until 1880, when he sold it to Henry Cline, and located and moved upon the Avalanche ranch of 1,800 acres. In 1875 Mr. Stafford's smoke-house, together with 15,000 lbs. of bacon, for which he had contracts at 25 cents per pound, was destroyed by fire; and May 25, in the same year, the ferry-house was burned; loss $3,000. Mr. Stafford's residence at his ranch is at an altitude of about 4,000 feet. In its rear is the entrance to Avalanche Canon, one of the most romantic spots in the Missouri valley. Mr. Stafford filled the position of Commissioner for Meagher county. He is a member of the Odd Fellows order, and is engaged in farming and stock raising.

GRANVILLE STUART, of Fort Maginnis, son of Robert and Nancy (Currence) Stuart, was born at Clarksburg, Va., August 27, 1834. The family came originally from Scotland at an early date in the history of the Atlantic States, and was identified with Virginia until 1837, when Robert Stuart moved to Illinois. In 1839 we find the family settled in Muscatine Co., Ia. In the last named state Granville Stuart received his early education, attending school until 1846. Subsequently Mr. Stuart assisted on the homestead farm and in the Heath store at West Liberty village. In 1849 Robert Stuart visited California, remaining there until the winter of 1851, when he returned to his Iowa home. In May, 1852, he set out on his second overland trip to California, accompanied by his sons James and Granville. These sons remained in California until 1857, when they came to Montana, then Washington Territory, and settled in Deer Lodge valley, about three miles north of the present village of Pioneer, at the mouth of Gold creek. In company with James Stuart, Rezin Anderson, Thomas Adams, Fred. H. Burr and John H. Powell, Granville Stuart did the first prospecting and mining for gold in Montana, on Gold creek, near Pioneer, from 1858 to 1862, and their operations caused the stampede which settled this portion of the country. In 1867 James Stuart visited his Iowa home, returning to Deer Lodge the same year, where he resided until 1870, when he was appointed physician at the Fort Peck agency. There he died September 30, 1873, from natural causes. His body was transferred to Deer Lodge, where it was interred. Granville Stuart has been a permanent settler from 1860 to 1863, claiming only a traveler's or prospector's acquaintance with the place previous to that date. His letters to Thomas Stuart, now of Deer Lodge, then residing at Black Hawk, Colo., were the first to draw attention to that part of Washington now known as Montana, and were the primary attractions to the gold and silver excitement of 1862, which led to the settlement of this Territory twenty years before its time. In 1863 he moved to Alder gulch a few months after its discovery, where his brother and he engaged in mercantile work. He remained in business there until September, 1865, when the establishment was sold to Gorham & Patten, both of whom are still residents of the Territory. In the fall of 1865 Granville joined his brother in business at Deer Lodge, and conducted a large trade until 1873, having purchased his brother James' interests there in 1870. In 1873 he retired from mercantile life on account of ill health and engaged in mining. In 1876 he moved to Helena, and became a stock-holder in the First National Bank, and also bookkeeper in that pioneer financial house. In 1879 the state of his health necessitated a change of life and urged him to engage in the cattle business. In this he was associated with S. T. Hauser, of the First Natl. and A. J. Davis, the millionaire miner of Butte. He has been controller and manager of this extensive business since 1879, starting in with a capital of $150,000, and doing a business of $40,000 per annum since that time, increasing the value of the investment to $400,000 in July, 1883, as evidenced in the sale of a two-thirds interest to Conrad Kohrs for $266,667, being the shares of Messrs. Hauser and Davis, Mr. Stuart still retaining his position of superintendent as well as his valuable interest in the company. Owing to the attention which the business with which he has been and is connected required, the desire to take part with his fellow citizens in the work of the organizations of defense and offense was always overmatched, and for this reason his name does not appear in the records of these adventures. He was a member of the Territorial Council in 1872; of the House in 1875, 1879, and the Extra Session of July, 1879, and President of the Council in 1883, being elected on the Democratic ticket, of which party he has always been a member.

ALBERT H. SWERDFEGER, Cappiani Ranch, was born in Canada, where he resided until 1867, when he settled in the United States. He came to Montana in 1882, and took the position of ranchman.

W. C. SWETT, P. O. Chestnut, was born in New Hampshire, January 3, 1834. In 1855 he removed to Jasper Co., Iowa, and subsequently to Dickinson Co., in April following the massacre of February, 1858. In these counties he was engaged in farming. In 1859 he went to Colorado, and freighted between Denver and various points until 1863, when he came with his teams and effects to Montana, and has since been a resident of the territory.

R. P. THOROUGHMAN, P. O Chestnut, was born at St. Joseph, Mo., December 18, 1847, and was there educated. In 1862 he removed to Denver, Col., where his father was engaged in the stock business. After three years spent at Denver, Mr. Thoroughman decided to try his fortune in Montana, and, locating at Helena, remained one year. Then removing to a ranch fifteen miles northeast of that city, he entered the dairy business, taking cows on shares. He determined to pay for ten head of cattle the first year, and from the start thus made he has developed a fine business, having now a large number of cattle on the range, and an excellent tract of land in the Chestnut valley, well improved. Mr. T. was married in 1870 to Miss Anna E. Bickett, who was born in Maryville, Nodaway Co., Mo., May 4, 1850, and educated at the same place. Mr. and Mrs. Thoroughman have two children.

THOMAS TOSTEN, P. O. Tosten, was born at Bergen, Norway, in August, 1820. He came to the United States of America in 1843, landing in New York July 4, and coming directly to Wisconsin. He worked at farming for his brother one year, then at mining at Mineral Point, Wisconsin, for eight or ten years for himself, in the North Survey. He made only living wages at this, and again engaged in farming. He went to Chicago at the time of the cholera scourge, and was taken for a nurse for the first case of cholera in the city in 1845, 4th July. He remained there for a year, then engaged in lead mining in Wisconsin, and left Mineral Point on the 1st day of April, 1864, for Montana. He camped at Virginia City the 13th of July following, and worked there hauling timber for wages until April, 1865, and moved to Last Chance Gulch the same year. While there he finished the carpenter work of the Union Hotel, foot of Broadway, also putting up log-houses for miners. He moved in August to Diamond City, building there for one year, and, leaving in the spring of 1867, went to St. Louis, Indian Creek, Jefferson Co., mining and helping to open the gulch for mining purposes. After about seven years he moved to what is now known as Tosten, in 1871. His principal occupation is farming. Mr. Tosten pre-empted the ranch where he is now living in 1871, and improved the same with residence and farm buildings. In July, 1876 he built a ferry across the Missouri river, known as Tosten's Ferry, the first on the river, below the junction of the Three Forks about fifteen miles. He discovered the Little Giant gold bearing quartz ledge in 1870, in St. Louis district, Jefferson Co. It has been worked by different parties for ten years, producing on an average ore valued at $45 per ton.

A. VAN CAMP, P. O. Martinsdale, son of William and Jane Van Camp, was born March 5, 1845, in Canada West. He came to the United States in 1864, going to Colorado, and thence, in April, 1865, to Montana, where he mined in Alder Gulch, Last Chance, White's Gulch, New York Gulch, and Cave Gulch. In 1872 he gave up mining and invested in cattle, herding in Smith River valley and on the Muscleshell until 1883, when he sold out the entire herd, consisting of about 300 head, with the intention of investing the proceeds in sheep.

J. D. WEATHERWAX, located at Utica, Judith Basin, in May, 1881—this being a trading station between Philbrooke and Stamford, twenty miles from Stamford and six miles from Philbrook. It is also a post office and stage station between the two places. Mr. Weatherwax is engaged in horse-raising, to which business his place is well adapted, having a good bottom for hay and splendid ranges on the hills surrounding.

J. R. WESTON, Townsend, son of E. C. and C. Weston, of Onondaga, N. Y., was born April 24, 1824. He was educated at the high school at Homer, Cortland Co., N. Y., and graduated in medicine at the Geneva Medical College in 1846. He engaged in merchandising in Allegany Co., N. Y., until 1862, when he sold out, came to Montana in 1863, and engaged in mining in Bivens Gulch, Madison county; moved to Helena in the fall of 1864 and took up a ranch below Three Mile; next went to Diamond City in the fall of 1865, and engaged in the hotel business, afterward in mining, at which he was unsuccessful. He was elected a member of the legislature in 1867, on the democratic ticket, and was a member during the organization of Meagher county. He afterward moved to Radersburg, in the spring of 1870, and was probate judge of Jefferson county for seven years. During his residence in Radersburg he was engaged in the drug and notion business, and was also postmaster ten years. He left there in 1882, came to Townsend, purchased lots of the N. P. R. R. Co. and erected a business house which he still occupies as a drug store. Mr. Weston was admitted to the bar at Diamond, Meagher county, in 1868.

HENRY WHALEY, P. O. Canton, son of Peter and Mary Whaley, was born in Ireland, July 6, 1830, and came to the United States in 1840, landing at New York. Going to Wisconsin territory in 1841 he engaged in mining until 1850, when he went to California, from there to Minnesota, and in 1860 to Colorado. In 1862 he joined the Salmon river expedition, and in the spring of 1863 went to Bannack, Mont., and from there to Alder Gulch, being one of the first to join in the second stampede to those diggings. In 1866 he went to Confederate Gulch, in 1867 to Cave Gulch, and in 1869 to Indian Creek. In 1871 he moved into the Missouri valley and located a ranch of 160 acres, improved it and seeded a few acres. Since that time he has been farming, having purchased from the railroad 160 acres additional. He cultivates 225 acres. Mr. Whaley married Miss Mary Fay, January 11, 1857, in Minnesota, and they have four children living: William C., born in Minnesota, December 19, 1867; Philip H., born in Minnesota, February 20, 1869; John C., born in Alder Gulch September 30, 1864; Mamie V., born at Indian Creek, March 19, 1870.

EDWIN P. WOODS, Townsend, son of Patrick and Eliza Woods, was born September 30, 1844, in Sheridan Co., Mo., and educated near St. Joseph in the common schools. He commenced supporting himself at the age of eighteen years, freighting from St. Joseph to Denver with two yokes of cattle, in company with Mr. Bullard's team, making several trips back and forth. In the spring of 1864 he left St. Joseph for Montana, and arrived September 5 at Virginia City. During the first winter he took charge of cattle in Gallatin valley for his father and himself; he moved the following spring to Prickly Pear valley, located a quarter section, improved the same and lived there until the fall of 1869, when he sold to Mr. Frost, came to Missouri valley, Meagher county, and homesteaded a quarter section, which he improved. He has since entered into the stock business on this ranch. Mr. Woods married Miss Lizzie Keaton, sister of Steward Keaton, September 17, 1872. The issue of this marriage is as follows: Edwin V. Woods, born June 21, 1873, died January 1, 1877, and is buried in Deep Creek cemetery; Newton P., born March 31, 1875; Arthur M., born December 20, 1877; Winnie L., born March 25, 1880, and Vincent K., born June 1, 1881.

CHAPTER XLI.

MISSOULA COUNTY.

D. J. ARMSTRONG, Missoula, publisher and editor of the Missoulian, was born at Canton, Ohio, February 22, 1845. The family moved to Janesville, Wis., in 1848, where he attended school until 1861, when he entered the office of the Monitor. In 1863 he entered the Janesville Gazette office; subsequently worked at Milwaukee, Tiffin, Ohio, Chicago, Ill., St. Louis, Mo., Pueblo, Col., Elizabethtown, N. M., Denver and Golden City, Col., Cheyenne, Wy., San Francisco, Cal., New York city, again at Chicago, Yankton, Dak., to Benton, Mont., in 1877, and Missoula, August 1, 1877, where he entered the office of the Missoulian, then owned by Chauncey Barbour. He purchased the office in 1879, and has conducted the Missoulian since that time. He was married to Miss Mary Rudd, of Pine Plains, N. Y., September 2, 1880. Mr. Armstrong is a member of the Montana Press Association.

J. W. ARTHUR, Missoula, was born August 14, 1848, in Washington Co., Ore. Was engaged in farming until 19 years old; then began dealing in horses, trading and driving horses for six years. In 1876 he went to New Tacoma, W. T., and began contracting for house building. After three years he removed to Spokane Falls, and engaged in hotel-keeping with his brother (S. T. Arthur); also carried on a contracting business. In 1882 he came to Missoula, formed partnership with Y. J. Bottcher, and opened what is now known as the Arthur House. Married Miss Wilds, of Butte Co., Col., May 13, 1880. Mr. Arthur carries on the Missoula Skating Rink and the Town Hall, which is used by theatrical companies, public meetings, etc.

JOHN ANDERSON, Missoula, came to Alder Gulch in 1863; mined there until the summer of 1864, when he took a trip to the Kootenai mines, in British Columbia, but only remained for one summer, when he went to American Bar, Salmon River mines, 50 miles from Lewiston, where he made some money with a rocker that winter. Returning to Montana by the way of the Mullen Road, he joined the stampede to Blackfoot, on Little Blackfoot River, and prospected on the tributaries of Little Blackfoot until 1865. Late in the fall he went to Bannack, working with rocker in small diggings there during the winter. In March, 1866, he came to Bear Gulch, remaining until the middle of August, and next went to Highland Gulch, on a stampede. Here he engaged in business and remained for six years. Leaving there he spent a year and a half at Divide, on the Big Hole River. From Divide he went to Silver Star, where he engaged in hotel business for one year, afterward engaging in the merchandising business under the firm name of Delaney & Anderson. In January, 1881, he sold out, and during the summer went to Washington Territory and Oregon, and after spending ten months in traveling, returned to Missoula, formed a partnership with Mr. Arthur, and soon after began the erection of the Occidental Hotel. Mr. Anderson was born near Milesburg, Penn., in 1832, but left that State with his parents in 1834 and came to Ross Co., Ohio, where they resided for six years. In 1840 his parents moved to Iowa, since which time Mr. Anderson has resided in the West, chiefly engaged in mining pursuits.

SAMUEL T. ARTHUR, Spokane Falls, Ore., one of the proprietors of the Occidental Hotel, Missoula, was born in Oregon, and in 1876 came to Spokane Falls, W. T., where he was engaged in the hotel business for four years. Leaving Spokane he came to Missoula, and in connection with Mr. Anderson erected the Occidental, which was opened November 11, 1882. In July, 1878, Mr. Arthur was married to Miss Nettie Marsh, a native of Michigan. His father was one of the pioneers of Oregon, crossing the plains with Colonel Meeks' outfit during the early emigration to the coast.

DAVID AUSTIN, P. O. Missoula, late Commissioner of Missoula county, was born in New York, October 5, 1832, where his father, George Austin, was a farmer. At the age of 16 David served apprenticeship as a carpenter; was educated in the common schools of New York, and at the age of 18 was dependent upon his own resources. In 1854 he emigrated to Sura Co., Cal., where he mined seven years. In 1861 he moved to Virginia City, Nev., worked in the Cornstalk mines, and in 1863 moved to Boise City, Idaho, where he remained one year, and then started for Montana. He proceeded to Kootenai, in 1865, returned to Montana; first stoped at Helena, mined there during the fall, and went thence to the Blackfoot country, remaining three years. He removed to Missoula in 1869, went to Cedar Creek, followed mining, returned to Missoula and purchased a farm. Mr. Austin followed farming and stock raising, owning 320 acres of grain and meadow land. In 1874 he married Miss Almira Moon. He was elected County Commissioner in 1874, on the Democratic ticket. (Vide Political History.)

BASS BROTHERS (Pine Grove Fruit Farm) stand at the head, as the most extensive and successful fruit growers in the Territory. They own 320 acres of land. Their orchard consists of apple, Siberian apple, plum and cherry trees, besides numerous varieties of small fruits, such as currants, gooseberries, raspberries, strawberries, etc. This ranch was first staked off by the Bass brothers, in 1866; but before they commenced their improvements, the land was pre-empted by other parties. In 1868 the right of those parties who had located the land was purchased, and D. C. Bass moved on the ranch and commenced the improvements which have proved successful. In 1870 they brought their first fruit trees to the valley. Their first importation consisted of 100 small apple grafts. As these did fairly, they have from time to time added to their orchard from importations and from trees grown in their own nursery, until their orchard numbers 1,000 apple trees, about 100 plum and 50 cherry trees. They have about 50 head of cattle and 100 head of horses. Bass Brothers and Wilson own a sawmill which cuts 50 to 60 M of lumber per week; also a large agricultural warehouse in Stevensville; also mines that are developing fine prospects. The Bass Brothers are natives of Vermont, but were raised in New York. W. E. Bass was born August 16, 1838, the eldest of five children born to W. B. and Ruth Bass. D. C. Bass was born August 10, 1842, in Clarendon Springs, Vt. They came to Montana in 1864. W. E. Bass has served four terms as member of the Territorial Council, and three terms as member of the Legislature. W. E. Bass married, in 1862, Miss Jennie Emmett; D. C. Bass married, in 1876, Miss Ellie Emmett, sister of Mrs. W. E. Bass, and daughter of L. S. and Eva Emmett, of Marysville, Mo.

W. E. Baggs, Stevensville, was born at Philadelphia, Pa., August 26, 1854. In 1860 he went to Smyrna, Del., where he was educated; then entered a dry goods house for one year, and was subsequently engaged as railroad conductor. In 1877 he came to Stevensville, where he has resided since that time engaged in selling machinery and farming implements, and as book-keeper for Bass Bros. He is a partner in a blacksmith shop in the village of Stevensville, and a member of I. O. G. T.

C. W. Berry, ex-sheriff of Missoula, is one of the pioneers of the Pacific slope of 1849, and of Montana, of 1864. He was born in Portsmouth, N. H., February 25, 1827; was brought up in his native state, and in the fall of 1849 went to California via the Isthmus route, and arrived at San Francisco in December of that year. He passed the first season in placer mining on the south fork of the American river. The following season he went north to the mountains of Siskiyou, where he remained ten years. In 1861 he engaged in freighting, carrying passengers in Washington Territory, then comprising the present Territory of Idaho and part of Montana, and in October, 1861, he took the first train from Lewiston to Florence, Idaho. During his freighting and passenger business he met with some pretty rough adventures. At one time he was held up and robbed of $1,100, the proceeds of that trip. He pursued the robbers and recovered the money, and had the satisfaction of seeing the parties hanged. He was obliged to quit the freighting business in 1863, as the road agents, who were friends of the parties that he had caused to be hanged, made it too hot for him. In 1864 he freighted from Alder Gulch to Cow Island, below Fort Benton. He next went to Walla Walla, but returning to Montana in 1865, made Missoula county headquarters. He was in Bear Gulch from 1866 to 1868; was deputy sheriff at Lewiston one year; went to his native State in 1870; returned the same year, and located near the mouth of Cedar creek, where he engaged in mining, and subsequently in ranching. He was elected sheriff of Missoula county in the fall of 1882, on the democratic ticket, by nearly 800 majority.

A. S. Blake, Bitter Root Valley, was born November 29, 1837, at New Haven, Vt. He is the son of Abijah and Elvira Blake and the sixth child of a family of seven children; five of the number are still living. When but seventeen years of age young Abraham went to California via Nicaragua, and engaged in mining in Yuba county, for about six years, when he went to the Oro Fino mines, Idaho, and the same season, 1861, came to the Bitter Root Valley, and stopped at Fort Owen. During the winter he went to Deer Lodge Valley on a prospecting tour with P. W. McAdow and Maj. William W. Graham. They prospected in Pioneer Gulch and were the discoverers of that famous mining district; prospected and mined until September, 1862. Mr. Blake went to Bannack, and in April, 1863, joined the Stuart expedition to the Yellowstone country. He returned to Alder Gulch in July, where he remained until September, going thence to Idaho city, where his brother had some valuable claims. In 1867, weary of a miner's life, he settled in Bitter Root Valley. He was engaged in the war against the Nez Perces in 1877. Mr. Blake cultivates over 100 acres of land, and is also engaged in stock growing, owning 120 head in all; he has about twenty head of horses. Mr. Blake was married in 1869.

Brigham Blodgett, Sleepy Child Creek, born October 25, 1852, near Ogden, Utah, was named for Brigham Young. Here he lived until 1870, when he came to Montana and engaged in mining and freighting until 1875; then he moved to his present ranch on Sleepy Child Creek. He rented for four years and then bought his home, consisting of 200 acres of land well fenced and sixty under cultivation. He raises of wheat an average yield of twenty-five bushels per acre. Mr. Blodgett summer fallowed a small piece of land and found a great increase in the yield. Oats average thirty-five bushels per acre. He has several acres of alfalfa, which thrives. Mr. Blodgett is married and has three children.

Joseph S. Blodget, Sleeping Child Creek, was born in Ohio, December 27, 1835; is a son of Norman and Sally Blodget and brother of Lyman Blodget, near Corvallis. Joseph Blodget was raised in Hancock Co., Ill., his parents moving there when he was but a mere child. In 1847 he moved to Iowa, where he resided three years, when he went to Utah and settled at Ogden. In April, 1854, he went on an Indian trading expedition among the Snakes, but soon left the expedition, and in company with Wm. McWhirk and John Jefferys, went to Oregon; moved in 1855 to California with a herd of cattle; remained one year working in the mines and then went to Walla Walla, W. T., and was in the employment of Capt. C. P. Higgins when the treaty with the Indians was made by Gov. Stevens. After the treaty had been signed the Indians became dissatisfied and attacked Capt. Higgins, who had left the fort with a wagon and only seven men. The fight commenced at ten o'clock in the morning and continued until midnight, when a company of soldiers arrived with a cannon. The company all reached the fort with the loss of a few oxen only. An attempt was then made by the redskins to fire the fort, but was not successful, and finding themselves defeated they ran up a white flag, whereupon a new treaty was made with them. While it was being signed every soldier and volunteer stood with gun in hand ready for immediate action should it be necessary to keep the Indians quiet. In 1858 Mr. Blodget ran a schooner from Cascade to The Dalles and in 1859 came to the Bitter Root valley and purchased a pack train of Major Owen at the fort. At this time there were but twenty-nine white men in Bitter Root valley. Mr. Blodget trapped and hunted until 1862, when he went to Utah and brought back with him wagons, teams and necessary farming implements, and located on a ranch below the present town of Corvallis. In 1877, during the trouble with the Indians, Mr. Blodget was with General Gibbon and in company with eight men was left at camp to await day light, when they were to bring the cannon on to the field for use. About the time the firing commenced they started with the cannon and when about half way down to the front they were attacked by the Indians, and one man killed and two wounded, but by taking to the timber the balance of the company reached the wagons, which had been arranged for defense. Mr. Blodget, like all his brother pioneers, has passed through some very hard and trying times.

L. J. BLODGET, Corvallis, was born in Bath, N. H., September 19, 1833, son of Norman and Sally Blodget. He was reared on a farm in Hancock Co., Ill., his father having moved there when he was quite young. Lyman Blodget went to Montana in 1868, and located at Corvallis; in 1871 he sold his ranch, went to Utah and purchased a band of cattle; in 1872 returned to Bitter Root valley and bought his present ranch. He was married July 20, 1856, to Miss Mary Ann Parkes, daughter of George and Ann Parkes, natives of Wales. They are the parents of eleven children, as follows: Mary Catharine, born August 24, 1857, and died 1873; Sally Ann, born April 16, 1860, died 1862; George, born September 29, 1862; Horace William, born November 8, 1864; Newman, born March 14, 1867; Polly Ann, born July 16, 1869; Melissa, born February 12, 1872; Martha Elizabeth, born April 10, 1874; Joseph, born November 12, 1876; Minnie Bell, born July 8, 1880; Laura A., born January 20, 1882. George is married and lives in Montana. Mr. Blodget's ranch is opposite Corvallis in a small valley reaching from the river back to the mountains; large timber borders it on the west and runs some distance to the north. His land is very fertile and embraces 320 acres, all under fence, of which he cultivates about 100 acres.

JOSEPH S. BOOTH, P. O. Missoula, was born August 28, 1838, son of Robert Booth, a head-constable of the Irish constabulary. Joseph was educated at one of the queen colleges in Ireland. At the age of sixteen he went to Australia, where he followed mining until 1852. In 1857 he went to New Zealand, followed mining there until 1861, when he moved to Victoria's Land and thence to San Francisco. He prospected in Idaho for some time, and in 1865 came to Montana, discovered Bear gulch and earned $11,000 there. In 1866 he went down to Missouri river on a flat boat, got his money coined in Philadelphia, revisited Ireland and in 1867 returned to Bear gulch, and followed the vocation of miner until he sold out his interests for $15,000. He built Cedar creek ferry, and also a bridge. In 1870 he went to Frenchtown, built the Arcade house. In the year 1872 he married Miss Mary McMurry, to whom six children were born, viz: Annie McMurry, January 18, 1872; Catherine, September 8, 1873; Lillie, April 12, 1875; Mary, June 12, 1877; Susie, April 4, 1879; Robert, November 16, 1882. In 1874 he bought McMurry's farm on the Bitter Root, where he is engaged in farming and stock raising, and owns 240 acres of meadow land.

G. J. BOTTCHER, Missoula, was born at St. Paul, Minn., January, 1861. His parents soon after moved to Virginia City. After leaving school he engaged in the grocery business with Nelson & Co. In 1882 he came to Missoula, formed partnership with J. W. Arthur, and engaged in the hotel business, the house being known as the Arthur House.

JOS. M. BOURRET, Stevensville, was born in Canada, October 28, 1838, and came to the United States in 1856. Was educated in Canada; came to Champaign City, Illinois, where he was apprenticed to a saddle and harness company; served eighteen months, when he became a journeyman workman, going from point to point; worked for a railroad some time, and followed many things for a support until 1874, when he came to Montana and worked in the mines for some time. At present he is in the saddle and harness business at Stevensville, M. T.

M. J. BROWN, P. O. Missoula, was born in the State of New York, March 13, 1843; was educated in the district schools, then learned the blacksmith's trade, and followed blacksmithing for some years; moved in 1865 to Illinois, where he worked one year on a farm. He went thence to Fort Dodge, Ia., where he resided until 1870, engaged in railroading. During the war he belonged to the Fourteenth New York regiment, with which command he served through many battles. In 1870 he commenced work for the Northern Pacific railroad company, and worked for them until 1874, when he came to Bitter Root valley, where he has since resided. He has 150 acres of land under fence and sixty in cultivation, and a well improved ranch. Mr. Brown was married in 1870, is a member of the Catholic church. His wife is also a member of the church.

JOHN GRANT BRYANT, M. D., Missoula, was born at Milwaukee, Wis., in April, 1846. His parents removed some years later to the Feather river, California. Five years later they located at San Francisco, Cal. After leaving school he began studying medicine, graduating from the University of California in 1872; removed to Calooza county, where he practiced for two years. In 1874 located in Shasta county, where he practiced for five years, where he was then appointed surgeon for the Seattle Coal and Transportation Company, in whose employ he remained two and one-half years. After practicing in Dillon a few months he came to Missoula and was appointed county physician, which position he holds at the present time. Dr. Bryant is also visiting physician at the Sisters' Hospital; was also appointed by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company as surgeon and physician for the road.

AMOS, FRED and HENRY BUCK are natives of Sandusky Co., O., sons of George and Susan Buck, who came from Lebanon Co., Pa. They opened a mercantile establishment at Stevensville, February 1, 1876. Their sales amounted to about $50,000 per annum. Amos Buck came to Montana in 1864, in advance of the other brothers, and engaged in mining in Alder Gulch, Helena, Lincoln Gulch, and lastly at Cedar Creek—covering a period of about ten years. He was in Helena when the town was laid out. At Cedar Creek he was favored by fortune, and made something out of the mines. Fred Buck came to the territory in 1866, and the other brother, Henry Buck, came in 1868, since which time they have been in partnership in all their business undertakings. In 1873 the Buck brothers engaged in ranching about eight miles below the present town of Stevensville. Since 1876 they have turned their whole attention to the mercantile business, and have been deservedly successful. Henry Buck was married April 2, 1878, to Miss Clara, daughter of David and Amelia Elliot.

F. C. BUELL, Corvallis, late agent of the N. P. R. R. Co., Missoula, is a native of Ohio, and came to Montana in 1878. At that time he was connected with the Signal Service Department, and for some time held the position of circuit manager of the military telegraph line, establishing military telegraph offices at Bozeman, Benton, Assiniboine and Ft. Shaw, and beginning with Ft. Ellis, located all the offices west of Ft. Custer; served three years and a half in the Signal Service Department at Washington, D. C., and in this territory, then located at Missoula, and ultimately at Corvallis. Mr. Buell was born at Urbana, O., in December, 1856, where he spent most of his boyhood days and acquired a knowledge of the art of telegraphy. In 1871 he repaired to St. Louis, where he engaged in a wholesale house for a time, afterward went to Cairo, Ill., where he became agent for the Cairo & St. Louis Railroad Company; from Cairo went to Washington, D. C., an djoined the Signal Service Department. On December 25, 1882, his 26th birthday, he was mar ried to Miss Annie L. Thomas, a native of Massachusetts.

H. B. CALFEE, Missoula, is a native of Arkansas, and was born January 3, 1848. His boyhood was spent in the Southern and Eastern States. He came to this Territory in 1867, engaged in painting for several years, then engaged in prospecting and was interested in mining for some years. Having a natural taste for art and photography he gave his attention to that, and for the past five years has been engaged in making sketches and views of the natural scenery in the Territory, mostly in the National Park. He has made more views than all other artists, and has an established reputation, and has orders for them from all over the country, and has a large trade. He has prepared at great expense a panorama of the wonderful scenery of the National Park.

CAPLICE & SMITH, Missoula. This firm began business at Alder Gulch in 1863; two years later moved to Henderson Gulch, then established a branch at Lincoln Gulch. In 1869 removed to Cedar creek, and in 1876 established a branch house at Missoula, where the firm carried on a general merchandise business. In 1878 the company located the main house at Butte City.

J. P. CATCHING, P. O. Wallace, was born in Andrew Co., Mo., December 20, 1842, a son of Wm. W. and Angeline F. Catching. He was raised in Oregon, his father being one of the pioneers of that country, having moved there in 1845. His time was occupied by duties upon the farm and assisting his father in the occupation of millwright, with whom he learned the business, his father having erected some of the first mills built in Oregon. In 1862 he came to Idaho and there followed the various pursuits of hotel-keeping, butchering, mining, milk ranch, pack trains and mercantile business. In 1865 he came to Montana and opened a meat market at Reynolds, Deer Lodge county, thence went to Philipsburg, where he opened a meat market and continued in such business until 1868. In 1869 he went to Pioneer, where he followed mining for three years; then took contracts for building flumes. In 1874 he went into the saw mill business at New Chicago, which he continued two years, and in 1876 took his mill to Butte, where he bought another saw mill and continued the business there until 1881. While in Butte he was also interested in wood business and teaming. In 1881 he erected his two mills near Wallace, where he filled lumber contracts for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. Mr. Catching was married at Portland, Ore., September 13, 1883, to Miss Rosa Reeves.

W. E. CATCHING, P. O. Wallace, was born in Oregon, May 27, 1857, a son of Wm. W. and Angeline F. Catching. He remained in Oregon engaged in farming and teaming until February, 1883, when he came to Montana, first stopping at Wickesville, where he remained about four weeks, and then removed to his present location and established himself in the mercantile business at Wallace. He is also superintendent of his brother's milling business at that place. Mr. Catching is very fond of hunting and fishing, and as a sportsman has quite an envious reputation. He was married in Oregon January 27, 1883, to Miss Florence Butt.

J. B. CATLIN, Stevensville, born June 21, 1837, at Cleveland, O., is the oldest of a family of five children born to A. S. and Mary Catlin, who moved to Laporte Co., Ind., in 1840, where Mr. Catlin enlisted in the 87th Indiana Volunteer Infantry August 4, 1862; was soon after promoted from the ranks to fifth sergeant; a few months later to commissary sergeant, and on July 1, 1864, to captain of company I, and was placed in command of company H; served three years, and was mustered out June 10, 1865. In 1866 he came to Montana, located at Rocker, on Silver Bow Creek, in 1867, having passed the winter on the Big Hole, hunting and fishing. He mined at Rocker about two months, working some claims on shares, getting three dollars a day and one half of the bullion pro rata with the other men, making about seven dollars per day. Went to German Gulch and mined for a short time, then started out prospecting through Idaho and Oregon, visiting a great number of places, until his return to Montana in 1868, arriving in Bitter Root valley on the 2d July. He has resided here ever since. In 1877, during the Nez Perces war, he was elected captain of a company composed of his fellow citizens. They erected a fort at Shalkaho, near the head of Bitter Root valley, and gathered in all the families. The top of the fort was provided with portholes. Another company was organized of about fifty men, and put in charge of Mr. Catlin. The Nez Perces stopped in Big Hole Basin, and were cutting lodge poles and preparing for their onward march, thinking themselves so far ahead of Gen. Howard's troops as to be perfectly safe. The Indians came into Bitter Root through the Lo-Lo Pass, with Gen. Howard far behind them. Gen. Gibbon came down the Big Blackfoot, and reached Bitter Root about three days after the Indians. At first Gen. Gibbon refused to take any volunteers from the valley, but while camped at Lockwood's ranch, about sixteen miles above Skalkaho, he sent for Captain Catlin, and requested him to take the lead, which he did, with a company of twelve. On the 8th he camped within two miles of the Indians; during the day some of the men discovered the Indian camp and reported the fact. During the engagements which followed Captain Catlin and his company took an active and prominent part. (For further particulars, see History of the Nez Perces War). Mr. Catlin was married December 6, 1870, to Miss Lizzie, daughter of W. B. and Rebecca Taylor, of Waterloo, Ia. They have had three children; Fred. Taylor, born September 7, 1871; died April 11, 1883; Mary Belle, born August 3, 1873; Arthur Wilbur, born February 4, 1876.

ANTHONY CHAFFIN, Gird's creek, was born January 9, 1813, in Jackson Co., Tenn., near Gainsboro. In 1840 he went to Missouri and engaged in farming in the northern part of the state for seven years, after which time he moved to the southern part of the state and remained several years. In 1856 he moved to Kansas, where he participated in the troubles incident to that period. The 13th day of May, 1864, Mr. Chaffin started for Montana, and located the same year in Bitter Root valley—a few miles above Fort Owen. In 1866 purchased his present ranch, where he owns 320 acres of good land, 65 acres being under cultivation. His wheat average is 30 to 35 bushels per acre, and oats 40 to 50 bushels. He has about 15 acres of timothy, from which he cuts about two tons of hay per acre. He has a fine orchard of about 200 fruit trees of different varieties—some of which are bearing and others are young trees. Plums, currants, gooseberries and all small fruits grow well. In 1847, on the 14th day of February, Mr. Chaffin was united in marriage to Miss Pennelope Wells. To them have been born five children, of whom three are living.

ELIJAH CHAFFIN, Corvallis, was born in Jackson Co., Tenn., February 11, 1833. He is the fifth of a family of nine children, of whom six are still living. He resided in Tennessee until 11 years old, when the family moved to Sheridan, Mo. Living here only two years, they moved to Springfield in the same state. In 1855 Elijah Chaffin settled near Fort Scott, Kan., remaining there until 1864. He then crossed the plains to Oregon, stopping to winter in Bitter Root valley. In the spring continued his journey to Salem, Ore. In 1866 returning to Bitter Root valley, he purchased his present ranch of John Slack, and engaged in farming and stock-raising. February 1, 1858, he was married to Miss Margaret Mitchell, daughter of Cowan and Ellen Mitchell, residents of Kansas. To them have been born 11 children—only one deceased. Mr. Chaffin's wife died February 18, 1878. This gentleman's ranch is located about half a mile north of Corvallis. He has 320 acres of land, and cultivates about 120. Raises grain and all kinds of vegetables. The average yield of wheat is about 25 bushels per acre; oats, 40 bushels per acre; potatoes 200 bushels per acre. He has a good orchard of different kinds and varieties of fruit. Has plum trees that have been bearing eight years, and has had a full crop each year, and also crabapple—the transcendent Siberian and Hyslop varieties, and the early May cherries—all bearing—and a great many other kinds of trees not old enough to bear. He has never had a tree winter-killed; has altogether 150 trees, including apple, of which 50 are just beginning to bear; also currant and gooseberries in great abundance. He owns about 200 head of cattle—100 of them are cows, and has some blooded stock.

N. J. CHAFFIN. Bitter Root valley, was born in Greene Co., Mo., March 8, 1849, and remained in that state and county until 1854, when his father moved to Kansas and settled near Fort Scott, where they remained until 1864, when they moved to the Bitter Root valley, where they have been since that time. He is a well-to do farmer, having 320 acres of land, all under fence, 40 acres in range. He was in the company formed in this valley in the year 1877, when the Nez Perces came through, and was in the battle fought on the Big Hole, known as the "Gibbon's battle." Mr. Chaffin was married in 1880 to Miss Josey Tillan. She is a member of the Christian church.

J. M. CHAPMAN, Stevensville, was born at South Bend, Ind., September 20, 1855. When three years of age he went to North Liberty, Ind., where he was educated. Five years later he removed to Goshen, Ind., and thence to California, where he remained until 1880, when he revisited the East and resided in the States and Canada until 1882, when he came to Montana, and during the summer of 1883 came to Stevensville, where he is at this time operating a blacksmith shop in partnership with W. E. Baggs.

JOHN CHATFIELD, Stevensville, was born November 11, 1825, in Kirkland, O.; he is the son of Isaac and Sabina Chatfield, and the youngest of a family of 7 children of Connecticut ancestry. He resided in his native place until 10 years of age, when the family moved to Peoria Co., Ill. In 1847 he crossed the plains to Oregon via old Fort Hall and down the Snake river. In April, 1849, he went to California and engaged in mining in various places until 1851. He then returned to Yam Hill county, Ore., and engaged in farming until 1860, when he came to Montana, locating at Fort Owen, in the Bitter Root valley. The fort was then in charge of Major John Owen.

L. H. CHOQUETTE, M. D., Missoula, was born August 10, 1843, at Montreal, Canada; studied medicine and graduated from Victoria College at Coburg in 1868. He came to Montana in 1877, arriving at Missoula July 4th that year. In August of the same year he was appointed physician at the Flat-head agency, where he remained until September, 1882, when he moved to Missoula and purchased the drug store and interests of Jacob Reinhardt. He has a good paying business aside from his practice as a physician of the allopathic school. Dr. Choquette was married in 1869 to Miss Hermine Brunette, of Montreal. To them have been born five children.

ALFRED CAVE, Missoula, was born in Boone Co., Mo., October, 1829. At 7 years of age he removed with his parents to Van Buren Co., Ia., where he assisted in farming. In 1850 he went to California and engaged in mining on the Yuba and at Trinity gulch. In 1862 he engaged in packing and trading at Red Bluffs and Humboldt Bay for three years. He formed a partnership with his brother and opened a general merchandise store at Sawyer Bar, the firm being known as Cave Bros. He carried on business there for 11 years; was one of the incorporators of the Black Bear Mining Co., and superintendent and secretary for the company. He was also engaged in the cattle business, but lost his stock during the Indian wars. In 1865 he went to Umatilla and engaged in packing until 1870 in Montana, Idaho and Washington Ter. He formed a partnership with Mr. Buck and engaged in the general merchandise business at Cedar creek for 5 years. Mr. Cave then purchased Mr. Buck's interest and carried on the business alone for 4 years longer. In 1879 he opened a store at Nine Mile, sold out in a short time, came to Missoula in 1874, carried on packing between that point and Butte, and was engaged in farming and stock-raising; had a contract with the Government to furnish wood to the fort, and also for furnishing poles for the first line of telegraph in 1879. He married Miss Heckelman, of the Bitter Root valley, in 1871. Mr. Cave represented Missoula county in the legislature in 1876, and in 1883 was appointed to take charge of a party engaged in surveying the county line between Missoula and Deer Lodge.

OSCAR CLARK, Victor, was born December 17, 1834, at Charleston, Va., son of James and Harriet Clark, the fourth of a family of seven children. In 1855 they moved to Kansas, where he resided on a farm for eight years. In 1863 came to Montana, stopped a short time at Bannack, and late in the fall went to Alder Gulch, where he remained until February, 1865, engaged in the manufacture of shingles, selling all he could make for $12 per thousand. He sold out, went to Helena and fitted up a machine and manufactured about 300,000 shingles, selling them at $10 per thousand; sold largely on credit and in the end lost heavily. He came to Blackfoot after having been in Helena about six months, and engaged in mining. During the next four years he mined in McClellan, Bear and other gulches. In 1871 he decided to become a tiller of the generous soil of Montana, and located his present ranch in Bitter Root Valley. In 1858 Mr. Clark was married to Miss Amelia Baker, daughter of Joseph Baker, of Kentucky. Mrs. Clark died in Alder Gulch, December 26, 1863, leaving four children, viz.: R. A. Clark, born June 29, 1859; Joseph, born November 19, 1860; James O., born March 18, 1862; Monte, born December 25, 1863. Mr. Clark has 160 acres of land and cultivates 100 acres, and raises about 75 hogs per year, dressing from 100 pounds to 250 pounds each, some much larger. He has a few brood mares, and is breeding to Percheron-Norman stock; he has about twenty head of horses and thirty head of cattle. Mr. Clark was in the Big Hole battle, 1877, under General Gibbon, as a volunteer.

T. C. CRANE, Spring Hill, was born in Ireland, in 1836; was brought to America when an infant. In later years he went to Canada, then moved into Wisconsin at the age of 7 years, and resided at Oak Creek, Milwaukee Co., for twenty years. Moving to Rochester, Minn., he resided there four years. On May 22, 1867, crossed the plains to Montana, arrived in Helena October 12 of same year, and June, 1868, moved to Spring Hill and established a blacksmith shop. He now owns his shop, which runs by water power, also runs a machine for boring fence posts of his own invention. The machine is a very ingenious affair, and proves a great labor-saver to the farmers of the vicinity.

JOHN F. DELANEY, son of Henry M. and Hannah Delaney, was born in New York State, May 21, 1842. In 1853 he settled in Columbiana Co., Wis., where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1866. In this year he moved to Bates Co., Mo., where he farmed until 1877, when he came to Butte City. He engaged in freighting and teaming, which business he continued up to the fall of 1883. He established his ranch, stock farm and butcher's store in 1880, and to these departments he now gives his attention. Mr. Delaney was married in Wisconsin, February 6, 1865, to Miss Martha J. Young. They are the parents of two children.

W. H. H. DICKINSON, Missoula, was born in Ohio, in 1840, where he received a fair business education. At the age of 20 years he went to Kansas, and there enlisted in the Eighth Kansas Infantry, which was afterward consolidated with the Fourth Kansas Regiment (known as the Tenth Regiment), in which he served until the close of the war. He revisited Ohio, and returning to Leavenworth shortly after, engaged with the government until 1868, and then engaged in the insurance and other business. He came up the Missouri River to Fort Peck, thence to Fort Benton, and shortly afterward to the Bitter Root country, locating at Gird's creek, where he taught school three months, after which he engaged in mining a short time and then engaged temporarily in the photograph business. In 1872 he was appointed postmaster at Missoula, which office he still holds. Mr. Dickinson has during his time in the Territory served as school clerk ten years, and as superintendent of schools one year. He is a member of the Odd Fellows association, and has served in the various offices of that order. In 1871 he married Miss Emma C. Slack, of Baltimore, Md., by whom he has three children. Mrs. Dickinson, since moving to the Territory in 1869, has led quite an active and important life, having taught the first public school held in Missoula, which duty she performed shortly after her arrival in the fall of 1869, after which she taught several other terms with great satisfaction both to the parents and children. She is also an active member of the M. E. Church and was one of the organizers of that church in the city of Missoula. Mr. and Mrs. Dickinson were the first couple married at Missoula by the Rev. T. C. Iliff, the first resident minister of that place, and their eldest son was the first child baptized in the M. E. Church of that city. Mr. Dickinson, during his numerous years spent in the wilds of Montana, has suffered many privations and hardships, passed unscathed through various encounters with the Indians, and as a memento of the past life of uncertainty and peril, has in his possession a scalp which he himself secured from the pate of an Indian he killed out of a band that sought to take his life.

FRANK DIERMAN, Missoula, was born in Germany, May 11, 1844, and with his parents came to the United States when six years of age, and settling at New Orleans, remained there ten years, after which he moved to Missouri, and during the great civil war acted as spy. During this service he received a charge of shot in the breast, but being so fortunate as to be very heavily clothed at the time, the shot only passed through his skin. In 1865 he engaged in farming in Warren Co., Mo., and so continued until 1869. He then went into the saloon business, which he followed one year and then went to California and Oregon, and there ran threshing machines and kept a grain warehouse. He next went to Nevada prospecting, at which he spent two years; he then started for the Black Hills, but when he reached Laramie changed his mind and went to the Big Horn Mountains on a prospecting tour, which occupied some seven months; he then went to Missoula in 1876, where for two years he was employed at various works. In 1878 he went into the saloon business, and is also engaged in supplying the city with wood. Mr. Dierman was married at Missoula in January, 1882, to Miss Alice Carwell, by whom he has one child. During his time in Missoula he has served in the capacity of Deputy Sheriff two years.

ALEX DELONG, P. O. Missoula, was born in Ohio, August 6, 1831, son of George and Rebecca (York) Delong. His father was one of the first settlers in DeKalb Co., Ind., where Alexander moved with his parents at six years of age, and remained until 1850 engaged in the duties of farm life. At that time he went to California, and there devoted eleven years to mining, butchering and running pack trains. In 1863 he went to Idaho and spent two years mining. Came to Montana in 1865 and settled first at Gold Creek; went thence to Pioneer and in 1870 went to Flint Creek; next went to Oregon and Washington Territories, and returning opened a ranch near New Chicago, where he remained until 1882, when he made a visit to the States. Returning the same year he bought and settled his present ranch, three miles from Missoula. Mr. Delong was married in Pike's Peak Gulch, on July 27, 1868, to Miss Elizabeth Jeffrey.

REV. PETER JOHN DE SMET, commonly called the Apostle of the West, was born at Termonde, East Flanders, January 31, 1801, and died at St. Louis, Mo., May 23, 1873. He received that education in the colleges of Belgium which fitted him at once to be traveler, writer and priest. In July, 1821, this celebrated missionary father left Belgium at the call of Rev. Charles Nerinckxe; accompanied by Rev. Mr. Nerinckxe and fathers Felix Verreydt, of Diest, Peter Joseph Verhaegen, of Hsecht; Josse Van Assche, of St. Amand, John Baptist Smedts, of Rotselar, and John Anthony Elet, of St. Amand. This party arrived at Lima, Peru, May 11, 1824. From 1824 to 1839 his life was one continued round of spiritual duties. Then began that career which gave to the far Northwest at least two Christian nations, and which prepared, as it were, the way for the children of industry to occupy and develop the land. In the history of the churches a review of the life of this illustrious and truly pious man is given. His military and diplomatic duties are referred to in the Indian history, and in the following letters and orders. On May 15, 1858, Rev. P. J. De Smet received the following letter from the Secretary of War: "The President is desirous to engage you to attend the army for Utah, to officiate as chaplain. In his opinion your services would be important in many respects to the public interest, particularly in the present condition of our affairs in Utah. Having sought information as to the proper person to be thus employed his attention has been directed to you, and he has instructed me to address you on the subject, in the hope that you may consider it not incompatible with your clerical duties or your personal feelings to yield to his request." This proposition was received favorably by the Father Provincial and other consultors of the Society of Jesus, and as a result the priest found himself at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., where he was installed by General Harney, a member of the Seventh Regiment under Col. Morrison. Col. Morrison, addressing Gen. Harney, said, "I thought myself highly honored when entrusted with the command of the engineers; to have attached to my command a representative of the ancient and venerable church I hold as an additional favor." He left Fort Leavenworth with this regiment June 1, 1858. Returning to St. Louis in September, 1858, he tendered his resignation; but instead of it being accepted he was asked to act as Chaplain to Gen. Harney's corps, and left New York with that command September 20, 1858, for Oregon. General Harney's letter, dated Headquarters, Department of Oregon, Fort Vancouver, W. T., June 3, 1859, refers to Father De Smet's description of Washington Territory in the vicinity of the Rocky Mountains, and also to the Father's plans for the settlement of the Indians. "The plan proposed by Father De Smet," says General Harney, "is not open to objection. It places the Indians in a country abounding with game and fish and sufficient arable land to encourage them in its gradual cultivation; and by the aid of the missionaries at present with them, that confidence and influence will be established over their minds by degrees as will induce them to submit to the restraints of civilization, when the inevitable decree of time causes it to pass over them." The plan spoken of was that which provided reservations and special privileges for the Catholic Indians, and one under which they have advanced far above the state of barbarism and attained a moral state which is indeed enviable. A communication dated Headquarters, Department of Oregon, Fort Vancouver, W. T., June 1, 1859, contains in itself a testimonial to his invaluable services: "My dear Father: The general commanding instructs me to enclose a copy of his special order, No 59, of this date, authorizing you to return to St. Louis through the different tribes of the interior, which you are so desirous to visit once again; for the purpose of confirming them in their good disposition toward the whites, as well as to renew their zeal and intelligence in the elements of Christianity—the means so signally productive of good-will and confidence in your labors of last winter, requiring such self-denial and resolution. On your arrival in St. Louis the general desires you to report by letter to the adjutant-general at Washington, when your relations with the military service will cease, unless otherwise ordered by the War Department. The general is anxious that I should communicate to you the deep regret with which he feels your separation from the service, and in making the announcement he is assured the same feeling extends to all those who have in any way been associated with you. By the campaign of last summer submission has been conquered, but the embittered feelings of the two races excited by war still existed, and it remained for you to supply that which was wanting to the sword. It was necessary to exercise the strong faith which the red man possessed in your purity and holiness of character, to enable the general to evince successfully toward them the kind intentions of the government, and to restore confidence and repose to their minds. This has been done, the victory is yours, and the general will take great pleasure in recording your services at the War Department; for such services no one feels more sensibly than yourself the proper acknowledgment is linked with the hopes that are cherished in the fulfillment of a Christian duty. Satisfied that all necessary blessings will be bestowed upon you in whatever sphere of duty you may be called to serve, the general will always be happy to tender to you the evidences of his esteem and friendship. I remain, Father, with the highest respect, your most obedient servant, A. Pleasanton, Captain Second Dragoons, A. A. G. Rev. P. J. De Smet, S. J., Chaplain U. S. A., Fort Vancouver, W. T." This closed the official connections of the priest with the soldier; but not his service to the country. Fully aware that Indian wars would result only in the ruin of the Indian, he inculcated peace, and to him principally is due the happy state in which the Indians of western Montana exist and advance. His learning and piety are everywhere testified to—in service to the New Northwest he had no rival—no equal.

DAVID EDWARDS, Missoula, was born in Scotland in 1857, came to America in 1873 with a colony of Scotch colonists, locating at Kincardineshire, N. B., where he remained for two years. He went thence to the town of Holton, where he was employed for two years learning the baker's trade. Saving his earnings he rented the shop of the proprietor and began business for himself, which he continued for three years, when he was burned out, losing nearly everything that he had accumulated. After that misfortune he sold out his remaining property and came direct to Missoula, where he pitched his tent and commenced the bakery business again by building a small oven with a load of brick and clay, and carried his bread, cakes, etc., in a small basket. This was in June, 1882. He next made a hand-cart, in which he used to carry confectionery, etc., and finally his business increased so much that he was compelled to procure a horse and an express wagon and enlarge his establishment to a much greater capacity, and recently has completed a new bakery. He has also accumulated valuable property and has done all his own work.

A. G. ENGLAND, Missoula, was born November 1, 1830, at Lawrenceville, Ill. He is the son of Joel W. England, and the eldest of five children—none of whom are living except himself and the youngest of the family. He lived at home until March, 1853, then crossed the plains to California with an ox team, being from April 28 until August 6 going from St. Joseph, Mo., to Hangtown, Cal. He engaged in the feed stable business at Marysville for one year and a half. Mined first in 1855 at Stoutwater crossing of the Yuba. Thence he went to Allegheny town, Sierra county, where he remained until the spring of 1860. Moving to Carson valley, he remained a few weeks, then started for Oro Fino, Idaho, and in 1864 he came to Missoula. He first engaged in gardening on the site of his present home. After a short time he went to raising grain, and has been one of the heaviest grain growers in Missoula county; he has raised 6,500 bushels of wheat and 1,900 bushels of oats in one year. Mr. England cultivates 200 acres; his principal crops are wheat and oats. In 1879 he procured eight pounds of Clawson winter wheat from the agricultural department at Washington He sowed this the 23d day of September the same year, and from this he harvested 1,320 pounds of choice wheat. This he sowed the 24th day of October, and harvested 470 bushels, or 28,200 pounds. A large portion of this was sold for seed. In 1875 he sowed three bushels of white Siberian wheat, which yielded 98 bushels the first season; from 50 acres of second sowing he harvested 1,976 bushels. He procured eleven pounds of seed oats from a teamster, from which he raised eighteen bushels. Mr. England also deals in hay; he cuts 140 tons per annum. He has 60 acres of timothy meadow and 40 acres of natural grass. When he was engaged in gardening it was on an extensive scale, selling on two occasions $1,000 worth of vegetables in one week. He raised onions that weighed one and a half pounds each, and strawberries of enormous size, some measuring six and three quarter inches in circumference, and many measuring six inches. Mr. England was married March 11, 1873, to Miss Mary Cessens, daughter of Edward G. and Adeline Cessens. Their children are: Ella Missoula, born December 27, 1873; Orville G., born November 6, 1875.

R. A. EDDY, of the firm of Eddy, Hammond & Co., Missoula, M. T., was born in Oswego Co., N. Y., in the year 1837, where he received a fair business education. At the age of sixteen years he went to Oregon, and in 1856 went to the Indian war on Puget Sound and Walla Walla country; thence to The Dalles in Oregon, and in the spring of 1857, in company with E. L. Bonner, began trading with the Indians. In the fall of 1858 he went to Walla Walla, and there took up 160 acres, which he improved and cultivated until 1877—in the meantime following up the mining excitement, trading and speculating in mines and other properties. In 1865 he came to Montana, and finding tobacco, blankets and other goods very scarce and in great demand, brought in a stock, and making his headquarters at Helena, soon disposed of the goods. In 1866 he went to Elk Creek with parties whom he had been furnishing with supplies, they having struck some good diggings in that vicinity. He remained in that neighborhood until 1868, having been joined there by E. L. Bonner and D. J. Welch, with a stock of merchandise, which they disposed of under the firm name of Bonner & Welch, they having in 1866 founded a branch store at Missoula, of which Messrs. Bonner and Welch took charge, leaving Mr. Eddy to attend to the business affairs at Bear Gulch. Closing out the affairs at that point in the fall of 1868 he went to Walla Walla, where he opened a branch store, and continued one year, and in 1870 went to Frenchtown, where he started a store and continued two years, when he went to Missoula, and taking charge of the outside business of the firm, has continued to date. In 1872 Mr. Bonner took charge of their business at Deer Lodge, leaving the business of the Missoula house under the supervision and management of Mr. Eddy. In 1876 Mr. Hammond became a partner in the Missoula business, and in 1877 the firm opened a branch house at Stevensville. In 1882 they opened another branch store on the Flathead reservation. Mr. Eddy is also an important stock owner in the Missoula National Bank and the Montana Improvement Company, and is now alderman of the city of Missoula. He was married in 1869 to Miss E. M. Abbott, of Iowa. In 1883 Mr. Eddy was elected a representative of Missoula county in the constitutional convention, and served in that convention during the session of 1884.

FRANK ESS, Bitter Root Valley, was born June 20, 1843, in Bavaria, in a village called Burybury. He came to America in 1852; spent one year in New York state, and two years in Cincinnati, O., but afterward settled in Minnesota, where the family still resides. Mr. Ess crossed the plains to Montana in 1868, and worked in the mines of Diamond and Confederate Gulches, and later worked at Helena and Blackfoot. In 1869 he abandoned the mines, located in Bitter Root Valley, and engaged in ranching; located several places and sold them, and in 1876 he located his present ranch, where he has since resided. Mr. Ess has 160 acres of land, and cultivates about sixty acres. His largest business is gardening, in which he has been very successful. Mr. Ess was united in matrimony to Mrs. Rose Ann Skaggs, July 17, 1882, a daughter of Henry and Nancy Miller.

SAMUEL M. FAWSETT, Missoula, was born in Marshal Co., Tenn., July 8, 1835. In 1861 he became a member of the Federal army and engaged in several battles; after three years was discharged. On coming to this territory in 1875, he stopped at Butte City, where he resided until 1882, when he bought a ranch in Bitter Root Valley, where he lives at this time. He owns in Butte City ninety five lots, known as the Fawsett addition. This property is east from the original town, on Park and Broadway streets. The street railroad runs through it.

REV. GEORGE M. FISHER, resident pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Missoula, was born in Adams Co., O., October 31, 1849, and brought up in Washington, Pa. He received a collegiate education at Washington and Jefferson college, and graduated in the class of 1875. He next took a regular course at the Theological Union Seminary of New York city, and graduated in 1882. He came to Missoula, M. T., in November of that year, to accept his present position as resident pastor of the Presbyterian church, and entered upon the discharge of his duties December 8, following.

REV. THOS. W. FLOWERS, P. O. Stevensville, was born in Franklin Co., Miss., October 24, 1828. In 1850 he moved to Jefferson and remained in that and in Sunflower county until 1860, when he returned to Franklin county. In 1861 he joined the Confederate army and served as Chaplain of the Seventh Miss. Infantry, until 1863, when he joined the Mississippi Conference of the M. E. Church South; served different circuits until 1871, when he came to Montana and traveled different circuits here until 1880, when he settled at Stevensville, where he owns a 200 acre ranch, half a mile from town, and a good property in town.

THOMAS FOLEY, P. O. Missoula, was born in Ireland, December 15, 1838. Thomas came to America at the age of nine years, located in Pennsylvania and was educated in the common schools of that state. At the age of fifteen years he was employed in mining; went to Rhode Island in 1852, and in 1855 to Wisconsin, where he was engaged in farming until 1860; when he moved to Colorado, and thence to Alder Gulch. He worked in the mines at Bivens Gulch for ten months, thence to Hell's Gate in 1864, where he rented a farm for two seasons. In 1865 he located his present home ranch, and in 1866 he moved thereon, where he follows farming and stock raising,, and owns 320 acres of farming and meadow lands. This ranch is situate on the Bitter Root, near Fort Missoula, five miles from Missoula City.

R. S. FOWLER, P. O. Victor, a native of Tennessee, was born at Clarksville and reared near Nashville. He is the third child of Walter and Mary E. Fowler. He came to Montana in 1874, and in the following year located his present ranch, where he has since resided. July 17, 1873, he married Miss Mary Knight, daughter of William and Susan Knight, of Macon Co., Mo. Mr. Fowler owns a farm on first bench land on west side of Bitter Root creek, and south of Sweat House creek. He cultivates about 110 acres, and raises all kinds of grains and vegetables,—wheat averaging 30 bushels, oats, 50, potatoes, 200, on one occasion gathering 25,000 pounds of onions from one and three-fourths pounds of seed sown on one-half acre of ground. In 1882 he raised 28 acres of peas, from which he made 6,000 pounds of pork, besides keeping over 43 head of stock-hogs. Beans only yield 700 to 900 pounds per acre. During this year (1882) he made from 500 to 600 pounds of butter from ten cows.

W. M. FRANKS, Stevensville, a native of Tennessee, was born in 1846, and came to this Territory in 1874. He moved with his father to Missouri in 1852. In 1868 he sold his interest in that State and went to Nevada, where he was engaged in the lumber business until 1869, when he went to Oregon, and was there engaged in the stock business until 1874, when he came to Montana; resided at Sheridan until 1875; proceeded thence to Bitter Root, where he owns two ranches of 320 acres, well improved.

WILLIAM H. FRENCH, of the firm of French & Sherwood, attorneys-at-law, Missoula, M. T., was born at Paris, Canada, September 9, 1852. He received a common school education and took a regular business course at the commercial college of Toronto, graduating in 1868. He went to the southern States the same year and spent three years in travel and in book-keeping. In 1871 he went to California, and the same fall to Oregon. In the spring of 1872 he went to eastern Oregon, and three months later to Salt Lake City, where he was employed as hotel clerk awhile. He then went to Cottonwood, Utah, thence to Eureka, Nev., where he worked at carpenter work. In 1874 he went to Morey, Nev., and in 1875 to Tybo, in the same Territory. He walked from the latter place to Battle mountain, Nev., thence to Reno, and next to San Francisco, Cal. There he engaged in carpenter work until 1877. He then began the study of law and was admitted to the bar in January, 1878. The following July he was admitted to practice in the supreme court, being the only one passed out of a class of eleven. In February, 1880, he went to Arizona, practiced law at various points, and in March, 1881, went to Seattle, W. T., next to Cheney, and thence to Missoula, in April, 1882, when he formed the partnership with Edwin Sherwood.

MONROE FULKERSON, P. O. Stevensville, was born August 24, 1844, in Yates Co., N. Y., on the shore of Seneca Lake, the son of Samuel H. and Jane Fulkerson, who reared a family of seven children. Monroe was educated in the common schools, and afterward attended the Starkey Seminary of Yates county. In 1863 he started for the far West, to seek his fortune in the mines of Idaho; remained there one year; returned to the States, and entered the German Medical College; but having been in the West, he could not resist the temptation to quit college and go to the Rocky Mountains again. In 1870 he came to Montana, and located his present ranch in the Bitter Root Valley, where he now resides. He owns 200 acres of land, and cultivates 100 acres; grows wheat, of the white club variety, average crop 30 bushels per acre; potatoes average 300 bushels per acre; he also grows corn, beans, melons, tomatoes and squashes; in short, he can grow anything that will mature in New York State. All vegetables grow to great proportions. On July 1, 1873, Mr. Fulkerson married Miss Lucinda, daughter of Thomas W. and Loyetta Harris, born at Fort Owen, in the Bitter Root Valley, February 7, 1858, being one of the first white children born in Montana. To them have been born five children, viz.: Harlan M., born June 19, 1874; George D., born May 18, 1876; Thomas H., born September 25, 1878; Alice, born February 29, 1880; Ellen J., born February 23, 1882. In 1871 Mr. Fulkerson set out some fruit trees, which grew well until 1877, when a hailstorm ruined all, with the exception of a few crabapple trees. He has now a fine orchard of apple, plum and pear trees. He also has a fine assortment of currants, gooseberries, strawberries, etc., which are both prolific and hardy.

W. E. FULLER, Missoula, was born November, 1838, in Ontario Co., N. Y. At nine years of age he went to Madison, Wis., where, after leaving school, he engaged in the liquor business. In 1862 he enlisted in the First Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, with which he served through the war. After being mustered out, at Milwaukee, he went to Jackson, Mich., and engaged as salesman for Tucker & Co., whom he represented on the road for two years. In 1867 he engaged in the liquor business, at Council Bluffs, Iowa; carried on a large manufacturing business until 1871, when he sold out, and moved to Salt Lake City, Utah. Here he was identified with different mining interests; also built a hotel, which he carried on until 1878, when the hotel burned down. In that year he went to Eagle Rock, Idaho, engaged in the liquor business, and following the Utah Northern Road to Dillon, carried on the liquor business one year and a half, when he came to Missoula, and opened a wholesale and retail liquor store, which he carries on at the present time.

GEORGE W. GIBBINS, plasterer, Stevensville, was born in Washington Co., Ky., February 24, 1838. His father moved to the State of Missouri in 1842, and there George W. was raised and educated. In 1872 he came to Montana. He was in the United States service for six months, a member of the Eighty-first Missouri Regiment. On coming to this Territory he stopped at Pioneer City, and was in the mining business five years. In 1876 he revisited Missouri, but in August, 1878, returned to Montana, and settled in Bitter Root Valley, where he has a good ranch on the Burnt Fork. Was married to Miss N. S. Baker, in 1868. Himself and wife are members of the M. E. Church South.

L. C. GOODSPEED, Missoula, began business at that place in 1882, and has since then been dealing in clocks, watches and jewelry. Mr. Goodspeed is one of the oldest pioneers of the West, coming here in 1854, and hence has had a very long experience in the occidental portion of the country. He was born in the town of Middleton, Ct., in 1830, but when quite young his parents emigrated to Massilon, Stark Co., Ohio, where Laban spent most of his boyhood days until 1844, when he went back to Massachusetts. Returning to Ohio he engaged in the jewelry business for two or three years, then went to California, arriving there April 13, 1854. In 1856 he took a trip to the Society Islands, in the Pacific; and in 1869 went to Nevada, and finally to Yankee Fork, in Idaho, whence he came to Missoula.

C. GOFF, Bitter Root Valley, was born July 31, 1837, in Howard Co., Mo. He is the seventh child of a family of nine children born to Morris and Polly Goff. In 1855 Carter Goff moved to Brown Co., Kan., and participated to some extent in the Kansas troubles of that time. In 1864 he emigrated to Oregon; and in 1866 he moved to Bitter Root Valley in company with Elijah Chaffin and party. Mr. Goff only cultivates 30 acres of land, but in the most systematic manner. He raises 50 bushels of wheat per acre, and has raised as high as 100 bushels of oats per acre. Has averaged for seven years 70 bushels of oats per acre. Cuts yearly 120 tons of hay. He has an average of about 70 head of cattle, selling them as fast as they get old enough for beef. He has one of the best houses and farm buildings in Bitter Root Valley. Mr. Goff was married, March 29, 1858, to Miss Sarah Strange, daughter of Jacob and Catherine Strange. To Mr. and Mrs. Goff have been born two children, viz: William Goff, born in Brown Co., Kan., December 16, 1860; Clarence Goff, born March 20, 1877.

A. B. HAMMOND, of the firm of Eddy, Hammond & Co., Missoula, was born in New Brunswick in 1848; there received a fair business education, and at sixteen years of age went to the State of Maine, where he remained one year, going to Pennsylvania, where he spent another year, after which he came to Montana and served in the employ of Durfee & Peck three months; then ran a wood yard for nine months, and next went to Puget Sound, where he embarked in the lumber business, which he closed out at the expiration of two years, and returning to Montana located at Cedar Creek, where he followed mining a short time. Moving to Hell Gate he served as clerk in the mercantile business. In 1872 he went to Missoula and there secured a position as clerk for E. L. Bonner & Co., remaining with them four years. In 1876 the present firm of Eddy, Hammond & Co. was formed, of which firm he is the second partner. Mr. Hammond is also a stockholder of the Missoula National Bank, of which he is vice-president, and is also manager of the Montana Improvement Company, the object of said company being to obtain control of the Northern Pacific Railroad timber lands for the purpose of railroad improvements, the building of steamboats, docks, mills, mining works and factories of all kinds. In 1882 they cleared the right of way and furnished the ties and bridge timbers for 265 miles of the Northern Pacific Railroad. The company constantly employ from 400 to 500 men, and are now operating six saw mills, and during the year 1882 did a business amounting to the sum of $1,000,000. In 1878 Mr. Hammond was married to Miss Florence Abbott, of Oregon, to whom were born three children.

EDMOND HAMON, P. O. Frenchtown, was born in St. Marys, Province of Quebec, January 17, 1841. He was educated in St Marys, and at the age of fourteen learned the blacksmith's trade. In 1857 he came to the United States, and located at Burlington, Vt., where he remained and worked at his trade two years; he then went to California. In 1867 moved to Helena and operated a blacksmith shop for a short time. Mr. Hamon is now one of the proprietors of the hotel at Frenchtown, and is also engaged extensively in stock growing.

DWIGHT HARDING, of the firm of Harding & Co., Missoula, and son of Curtis and Pattie Harding, is a native of Wyoming Co., Penn., where he spent his boyhood days, not having been twenty miles from home until 1856, when he went to Minnesota, where he remained two years, when he crossed the plains by way of Red river to Frazer's river, remaining at the latter place for one summer, when he went into Washington and Oregon, coming to Montana in 1862. On arriving in Montana he went to Deer Lodge, Gold Creek and the Beaverhead mines, wintering on Bitter Root river. He mined in various parts of the Territory until 1866, when he located in Missoula to engage in the butchering business. Having been in the butchering business for two years he again engaged in mining for three or four years, after which he bought a ranch, but sold out and has continued in the butchering business ever since. He is now principal member of two butchering establishments, both on Front street, also a dealer in cattle, and has a stock ranch on head of Bitter Root river of 460 acres, upon which he keeps about 600 head of stock, besides having a residence and owning some other property in Missoula. In 1882 Mr. Harding was married to Mrs. Woodward, of Virginia City, who is the mother of three children: Wilda, William and Della Woodward.

W. B. HARLAN, Como, a native of Columbiana Co., Ohio, came to Montana in 1866, with a party among whom were the Fisk Brothers of Helena, Ed Stackpole, of Deer Lodge, and many others who have since become prominent in public affairs. At that early day this party accomplished the remarkable feat of reaching this section by an overland route via Dakota, north of the Missouri, not having crossed that stream during their trip, and for 350 miles their course was kept entirely by compass, their being not even a trail to mark the way. Mr. Harlan located at Helena, engaged in mining in the gulch above town, where he remained for two years In 1868 he came to Bitter Root Valley, located above Stevensville and engaged in stock raising and farming. In 1879 he moved to his present location at Como, about fifteen miles above Corvallis, in order to get cattle range, and it has proven to be very favorable for that purpose, as will be seen from the fact that during the winter of 1882–83 cattle were fed but two weeks. Mr. Harlan also finds his location very favorable for fruit raising, having twenty varieties of apples, eight of pears and the same of plums. The oldest trees were set four years ago, and a number added from year to year, until there are now about 700 trees. Of all those planted not one has been winter killed. The whole upper valley has a rich and warm soil, and this with the protection afforded against the north and west winds, by the numerous mountain points and timber belts, and against severe frosts by the great depths of snow, all combine to make it the most successful fruit growing district in the Territory. The post office of Como was established August, 1882, and W. B. Harlan was appointed postmaster.

GEO. B. HARTMAN, Missoula, was born in Lycoming Co., Penn., in 1837. His parents removed to Napoleon, Henry Co., O., where he engaged in farming until the breaking out of the war, when he enlisted in the 14th Ohio infantry under Gen. Steedman. While carrying the flag at the battle of Chickamauga he was wounded, and becoming paralyzed in his limbs was sent home. Here he remained for two years unable to engage in business. In 1865 he removed to Fort Wayne, Ind., and clerked in a mercantile house. In the spring of 1871 he came to Montana and located in the Bitter Root valley, where he was engaged in farming for six years; then removed to Missoula, where he still carries on market gardening. Has also a store, where he keeps a full supply of vegetables, fruits, garden seeds, and all kinds of country produce. At one time he supplied the town with milk, butter and eggs, and was one of the first to raise fruit in the Bitter Root valley. Mr. Hartman was married to Miss Louise Elliot in 1869.

J. L. HARTT, manager Caplice & Smith, Missoula, was born at Victoria, New Brunswick, in August, 1856. Completed his education at college in Quebec, and in 1877 went to Manitoba in the employ of the Canadian government Was in the employ of freight department of the Canadian Pacific Railroad Company for one year. In July, 1879, came to Missoula and entered the employ of Caplice & Smith. In January, 1883, he was appointed manager of the firm, which position he held to June, 1885, when Caplice & Smith sold out, leaving him free.

LUKE S. HATCH, Stevensville, was born in Michigan October 3, 1844; remained there until he was 25 years of age, and there was educated in the district schools until he was 13 years of age, when he attended the Jesuit schools for 18 months. In 1861 he entered the army in the 9th Indiana infantry, with which he served three months, when he enlisted in the 1st Michigan infantry, and served until 1865, at close of his term. He was in many battles, and was wounded three times. Returning to his home in Michigan in 1865, he resided there until 1869, when he moved to Missouri, and was engaged in farming until 1872. In this year he engaged in buying cattle and driving them from Texas and Arizona, and continued in that business from 1872 to 1881; at that time he started for Stevensville, where he has resided since. Mr. Hatch was married in 1868 to Miss E. A. Van Tuyl.

C. F. HAWKES, of the firm of C. F. Hawkes & Co., Missoula, arrived in Montana in 1880. For four years previous to his arrival here he had been engaged in the hotel business along the line of the Utah & Northern railroad, and was proprietor of the Valley House, and had the misfortune to have his hotel burned in Beaverhead cañon in 1879, when he lost everything, not having any insurance. Mr. Hawkes' parents, William and Eliza, where old settlers of Chicago, coming to that place in 1837; and Mr. Hawkes was born in 1844 in a small cottage on corner of what is now LaSalle and Randolph streets. In 1875 Mr. Hawkes went to Nevada, where he remained about three years engaged in mining and prospecting. In 1881 he was married to Miss Rilla Lings, of Salt Lake city, who died the same year.

EDWARD HAYES, Missoula, born January 16, 1834, in Tipperary Co., Ireland, came with his parents to America in 1841, locating in McHenry Co., Ill. When 17 years old he left home to seek his fortune, and spent one winter on Island No. 63 in the Mississippi. The following summer he engaged in rafting, which occupation he followed for three years, and in 1855 he moved to Warren, Ill., and engaged in farming. In March, 1864, he was married to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Martin and Sarah Speakes, to whom four children were born. Immediately after they started to Nevada, via Utah, and Mr. Hayes was attracted to the silver mines of Stockton, Utah, and decided to stop there, where he built the first adobe house. In 1866 he came to Montana and located in Washington gulch, where he followed mining three years. In 1866 he was twice in Bitter Root valley, by way of Skalkan. In 1870 he left the mines heavily in debt, settled in Bitter Root valley and engaged in farming. first as a renter and later in the season filed on a tract as pre-emptor. He turned his attention largely to grain and vegetable farming—to stock and hay-raising. He has raised on ¼ of an acre of land 18,000 pounds of onions. On 80 acres of land he raised oats that averaged 70 bushels per acre. Wheat will average on summer fallow 52 bushels per acre—without summer fallow 30 bushels per acre. In 1883, on one-sixteenth of an acre of well manured land he raised and sold 80 bushels of potatoes. He has 30 head of horses—two of Mountain Chief stock.

F. S. HEDGER, M. D., Missoula, was born at Jerseyville, Ill., October 6, 1861. While a youth he removed to Old Oscaloosa, Ia., thence to Walla Walla, W. T. After completing his education, he went to Philadelphia and studied medicine at the Hahnemann University, graduating in 1881; a few months later he came to Montana, and locating at Missoula began practicing medicine.

CAPT. C. P. HIGGINS, Missoula, was born in Ireland in March, 1830, and coming to the United States in his youth, received a fair business education. At 18 years of age he enlisted in the U. S. Army and served five years in the Dragoons. In 1853 he joined Gov. Stephens' expedition and assisted in the first survey of the N. P.

R. R., and continuing in that employ until 1855, at that time accompanying Gov. Stephens to form a treaty with the Nez Perces Indians, which resulted in a treaty with the Flat Heads and Pen d' Oreilles. After this his party went to Fort Benton to treat with the Blackfeet tribe, and returning to Olympia, disbanded. Mr. Higgins was soon after appointed by the Government as captain of the military force and ordered to subdue the Indians, and continued in that service until 1856, after which he was assigned to the Quartermaster's Department, in which position he served until 1860, having in the meantime served two years in Walla Walla as agent for the Government. In 1860 he bought Mr. Isaac's interest in the firm of Worden & Isaacs at Walla Walla, and shortly after, packing 75 animals with merchandise, came into the Hell Gate valley, located near the present site of Missoula, and engaged in business. In 1865 Mr. Higgins located the present townsite of Missoula, and removing his business to that place, has continued to the present time in company with Mr. Worden. In 1865 they erected a lumbermill and a flouring mill at that place, and in 1870 erected the old Higgins-Worden block. In 1870 he engaged in the banking business, which has since emerged into a national bank, of which Capt. Higgins is president. He has for a long time been engaged in the raising of horses and cattle, and in 1883 bought the stock owned by Messrs. Buck, Myers & Co., of Choteau county. He is also owner of properties in Portland, Ore., and Seattle, W. T., and of several valuable farms in the vicinity of Missoula, and is largely interested in mining properties. Capt. Higgins was married in 1862 to Miss Julia P. Grant. They are the parents of seven children. Being a gentleman of remarkable business ability and honorable dealings, he has made his life a success, and is greatly admired for his energy and enterprise. (Vide General History.)

EZRA J. HILTS, Stevensville, was born at Stratford, Perth Co., Canada West, November 23, 1852. He left home when very young and served an apprenticeship as miller. Came to this territory in 1879. Mr. Hilts is owner of the large mills on the Burnt Fork of the Bitter Root, 35 miles from Missoula.

EMIL HENKE, M. D., Missoula, was born at Berlin, Prussia, 1837. There he attended school and graduated from the University of Berlin in 1860. He came to the United States in 1862 and located in New York city and began practicing medicine. In the spring of 1866 he came to Virginia City and was engaged in mining for two years. He then moved to Missoula, where he resumed the practice of medicine. In 1872 he engaged in the drug business. This he carried on for six years, when he sold out and began practicing medicine. In June, 1882, he resumed the drug business and carried it on in connection with his professional work. His contributions to the geological history of western Montana are referred to in the general history.

JOSEPH HOULLE, P. O. Frenchtown, was born in Canada, March 7, 1836. At the age of 16 he moved to New Hampshire, where he resided for five years. In 1856 he moved to St. Paul, where he remained and worked in the lumber business three years. He then moved to St. Louis, Mo., remained one winter, and in the spring hired to the American Fur Co. to go to Fort Benton. He remained in the company's employ until 1863, trading with the Indians in the Yellowstone and Sun river country. In 1863 he heard of gold being discovered at Virginia City and moved to Alder gulch, residing there eight months. He then went to Colorado, but soon returned to Frenchtown to buy cattle to take to the mines, but winter setting in, Mr. Houlle commenced farming and stock-raising there. In 1865 he married Miss Eliza Brown, daughter of Louis Brown, one of the pioneers of Montana. This union has been blessed by seven children: Joseph, born February 13, 1867; Celix, November 1, 1869; John, November 11, 1872; Delphine, December 27, 1874; Frederic, May 22, 1877; Lenora, April 16, 1879; Annie, May 17, 1881. Mr. Houlle owns 320 acres of farming land and a large number of cattle.

J. L. HUMBLE, the subject of this brief sketch, was born November 19, 1847, in Smith Co., Tenn.; son of Michael and Betsey Humble, and the fifth child of a family of ten children. In 1850 his father moved to Green Co., Mo., near Springfield. Here Mr. Humble resided until 1870, when he crossed the plains to Montana and located his present ranch of 320 acres of very choice land. At that time there was not a house east of the Stevensville road above Stevensville. January 7, 1878, being tired of single blessedness, he thought to take a companion for life, and married Miss Caroline Wilkerson, daughter of Jackson and Matilda Wilkerson. Mr. Humble now cultivates about 200 acres of his land; his principal crop is oats. In 1882, from 120 acres of oats he raised 6,800 bushels, an average of 56½ bushels per acre, and on 40 acres he raised over 3,300 bushels, or over 85 bushels per acre. Wheat averaged 37 bushels per acre. From two-thirds of an acre of potatoes he raised over 300 bushels. He has about 100 fruit trees of apples, plums and cherries; he irrigates his land.

DANIEL A. HYDE, Missoula, was born at Wolfboro, N. H., in 1823, and after residing there until about 21 years of age, went to Massachusetts, and learned the trade of house-carpenter. In 1861 he joined company C of the 17th Mass. Infantry, and was detailed as commissary of the regiment. He served in the army for 22 months, until discharged for disability. In 1883 Mr. Hyde came to Missoula, where he has resided since. He was married to Miss E. K. Smith, a native of New Hampshire.

FRANK C. IVES, Bitter Root valley, was born in Kendall Co., Ill., January 13, 1845. Son of Simeon and Martha P. Ives, being the third of five children. His father was a Baptist clergymen, and preached at various places in Illinois. In 1861 he moved with his family to St. Louis, Mo., and in the fall of that year the subject of this sketch enlisted on the first call for three-months men. At the expiration of his term of service, he entered a commercial college at St. Louis, and afterward learned the carpenter's trade. In 1871 he came to Montana, settling in Bitter Root valley, on land adjoining the farm of W. E. Bass & Bro., and engaged in farming. In 1876 he was elected to the Territorial Legislature as a member of the house on the democratic ticket. In 1878 he was elected to the council. The most striking feature in Mr. Ives' public life is a devotion to the interests of his constituents, and a hostility to railroad subsidies in every form. The session of 1877 granted the U. & N. R. R. a subsidy of $1,750,000 on conditions which were rejected by the railroad company. In 1879 a strong and determined effort was made to exempt the railroads from taxation, if completed within a certain time, for a term of years but it failed, and in July an extra session was called for the express purpose of considering a bill of that nature. Mr. Ives was at work in his field when he received notice of the extra session, and he had but five days in which to reach Helena. He started at once, and made all haste to reach Helena in time to be present at the organization of the council. Kennon, member from Deer Lodge, sustained a fracture of the leg, which disabled him from taking his seat; this placed the party in favor of railroad subsidy in a majority of one, owing to the absence of Conrad of Choteau. The minority exhausted every parliamentary right to delay the passage of the bill, but the time came when it was evident that the bill would be passed the next day. At this juncture a secret caucus was held in the evening, and it was decided by the five anti-subsidy members to go in a body to Benton the following morning, to procure the attendance of Mr. Conrad if possible. The coach was chartered, and before daylight the five members—Cessily of Hickman, Sidman of Madison, Hays of Gallatin, Barber of Beaverhead, and Ives of Missoula, were on their way to Benton, having walked out about two miles before they took the stage, which, by previous arrangement, was to overtake them. The driver had been instructed by the superintendent of the stage company to "send 'em for all that was in 'em," and they went, making the best time ever made on the road. In Helena all was commotion, as no one knew where the absent members were. The incoming coach was besieged as soon as it arrived, and the driver plied with questions. And in answer he related that he saw Ives of the council on the driver's seat of the outgoing coach, going toward Benton at a rapid rate. Not knowing the cause of the excitement, he unwittingly gave the distance out of the Benton coach about fifty miles greater than it really was, hence all thought of pursuit was abandoned. Benton was reached, Conrad secured, and the party started back. Upon their arrival, the council having been again called together, there were seven votes cast against the bill—a member heretofore doubtful having voted against it—and it was lost, the session adjourned, and this was the last attempt to subsidize railroads in Montana. Mr. Ives being convinced that the Northern Pacific grant ought not to cover the lands south of the Lo-Lo, he personally visited every settler in the valley, and solicited contributions to a fund to contest the claim, and Mr. Frank Howard of Missoula and Capt. John Mullen of Worthington were employed to conduct the case. In 1883 a decision was rendered in favor of the settlers. Mr. Ives is now engaged in farming and operating a sawmill. He was married May 14, 1867, to Miss Sarah Agnes Bass, daughter of W. B. and Ruth C. Bass. They have had four children, two of whom are living: Mary Adella, born June 14, 1868, died May 20, 1882; Simeon Dudley, born June 14, 1870, died January 6, 1883; Almon Edward, born August 24, 1872; Martha A., born February 19, 1877.

WM. KENNEDY, Missoula, was born in Ohio on August 18, 1835, and is a son of James and Catharine Kennedy. He was raised on a farm and worked in hotels in Ohio until 1855; he then enlisted in the 10th U. S. Infantry and served five years. In 1860 he went to California and followed mining on the Feather river. In 1861 he went to the Oro Fino mines in W. T., and in 1862 came through by the Elk City and Florence trail to Fort Benton and to the States via the Missouri. The following spring he returned to Benton and shortly after started for Fort Edmonton on a prospecting expedition expecting to be gone only a few days. He took only ten days' provisions, but made a journey of 400 miles and did not return until the spring of 1865, having lived some five months on buffalo meat and came near freezing to death. He next went to Silver City prospecting, and then to Virginia City, where he fitted out and went to Omaha for his family. Returning to Helena with them in 1865, he took up a ranch on the Prickly Pear which is still called "Kennedy's Ranch." In August, 1866, he sold out on time and went to Benton, where he kept a hotel and restaurant. The ranch not having been paid for came into his possession again in 1867. He therefore disposed of his business in Benton and returned to the Prickly Pear valley with his wife and one child and accompanied by one man and a half-breed Indian. As they reached the top of a hill near the Dearborn, they were surprised and captured by sixteen Indians, who took a vote as to whether they should kill them or set them free. The result of the vote was a tie. They then allowed the half-breed a vote and he cleared them and they were set at liberty, but afraid to leave for fear some of the Indians would follow and massacre them, it being 9 o'clock at night before they were given their freedom. He, however, sent the half breed for the chief, who ordered two Indians to get the oxen and attach them to the wagon, and informed Mr. Kennedy through the half-breed that his safest plan was to go on. This he did, arriving with his family safe at their former home. The same band murdered a man at the same place the following day. He remained on the ranch until 1869, when the Indians became so troublesome that he took his family to Corinne and sent them to the States, himself returning to Helena and soon after went to the Yellowstone country, then to Bozeman and back to Helena, where he purchased a stock of goods and followed the Cedar creek stampede. In 1871 he went to Missoula, where for a number of years he has been engaged in the hotel and restaurant business, and is now proprietor of the Kennedy restaurant in that city, his family having returned in 1870. In November, 1871, he sold out his hotel business and moved with his family to a ranch which he had purchased, two miles from the city, where he still resides, his son having charge of the restaurant. Mr. Kennedy was married in Richland Co., Ohio, December 14, 1863, to Miss Lizzie Sweeny, she being the first white woman to traverse the Upper Missouri river in a mackinaw, making the trip late in the summer of 1866 from the mouth of the Prickly Pear to Benton.

E. A. KENNEY, Missoula, was born in Guilford, Vt., in 1844. A few years later his parents moved to Meriden, Conn. There Mr. Kenney attended the primary schools; subsequently went to Yale, and upon his return from college began the study of law. The war breaking out he enlisted in 1862 in Co. F, 15th Conn. Infantry, and served through the war. Was promoted to rank of captain. Upon the close of the war was reappointed in the regular army and stationed at Fort Macon, N. C. After serving a few months he resigned and returned home. In 1868 he re-enlisted in the regular army at Philadelphia, and was stationed at Fort Ellis near Bozeman with 2d Cavalry; served five years, and obtaining discharge, engaged in business with Hugh Hoppy, establishing a trading post where Livingston now stands, which they carried on for three months, when he sold out and went to Helena. In 1874 he came to Missoula and began teaching school. After teaching three years and a half was elected sheriff, the only officer elected on the Republican ticket at that election. In 1883 he engaged in the saloon business with Hiram Beigle. He was married to Miss Pelkey, of Missoula, January 1, 1875.

JOSEPH LACAFF, Missoula, came to Alder gulch in 1864, moved to Last Chance in May, 1865, thence to Bear gulch, next to the Clearwater country, and ultimately to French gulch, where he mined two years. From 1868 to 1874 he was a ranchman in the Warm Spring (D. L. Co.) District. From 1874 to 1877 mined in the Cable District, then moved to Butte; located the Shonberger mine in 1879 (which was in the courts for the two succeeding years); resumed work on this mine in 1882, taking out from twelve to fifteen tons per day. Mr. Lacaff is a native of Luxemburg, Holland, came to the United States in 1863. Mr. Lacaff's first wife died in 1878. Three years later, in 1881, he married his present wife.

JOHN W. LANCASTER, Stevensville, was born December 18, 1829, near Owensborough, Davis Co., Ky., son of Littleton and Nancy Lancaster, and the sixth of a family of twelve children, five of whom are still living. In the year 1844 the family moved to Clinton Co., Mo., and found only a vast wilderness, with a few settlers scattered over the county. In 1849 he crossed the plains to Oregon via Old Fort Hall and down the Snake river. He remained in Oregon for the most part of twenty years, spending a short time in California. At 20 years of age he went to Fort Leavenworth and engaged to drive a team to Old Fort Hall for the consideration of $20 per month. On arrival he and his companions were given their choice of going to Oregon, Utah or return; twenty of the number decided to go to Oregon. They were discharged and paid off at Vancouver. John W. was among the number, and on his arrival at Portland, Ore., he met some old Missouri friends just from California, who assured him the mines were all worked out, and advised him to remain in Portland, where he made his home for eighteen months, then went to Yreka, Siskiyou Co., Cal. He remained here about one year, then crossed the line into Jackson Co., Ore., and mined about eighteen months, then went to Polk county, near Salem, where under the local law he got half a section of land, and engaged in tilling the generous soil. He resided there from 1854 to 1869, when he sold out all his interests and came to Bitter Root valley, and located the land now owned by C. H. Flannigan. In 1874 Mr. Lancaster purchased his present ranch of 160 acres, and his sons own 240 acres, making a total of 400 acres in one body. They cultivate about 100 acres. He was married in 1854 to Miss Nancy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Reese Sanders. Ten children have been born to them, of whom eight are living. He has erected a comfortable and commodious dwelling house about three miles from Stevensville.

ROBERT L. LANE, Sheriff of Missoula, was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., December 14, 1842. He was brought up in that city until 1858, when he went to California. He remained in that state until 1862, when he went to Virginia City, Nev., thence to Salt Lake City, next to Leesburg, Idaho, and in May, 1867, came to Bannack M. T. In 1870 he moved to Cedar Creek, Missoula county, and was engaged in mining and clerking until December, 1882, when he came to Missoula as jailor, was appointed under sheriff in June, 1883, and elected sheriff in November, 1884.

REV. W. D. LEAR, Corvallis, was born in Garrard Co., Ky., February 17, 1846. In 1859 he went to Missouri; returned to Kentucky in 1862, where he remained until 1868, attending for a time the Lexington university. In 1868 he revisited Missouri and attended the Canton university for three years. His father dying when he was 19 years of age, he was left to work out his own course in life. He commenced preaching when very young, which profession he has followed down to the present time. Mr. Lear belongs to the Christian church. He came to Montana in 1880, where he remained for some months, when he visited Iowa, and remained until 1883, when he returned to Corvallis

GEORGE W. LISH, Missoula, was born in Michigan, January 14, 1842. At seven years of age he removed with his parents to Missouri, where they remained one year, and then moved to Iowa. After a residence of five years in Iowa, Mr. Lish moved to Utah in 1855, where he passed one winter, and then went to California, where he followed teaming a number of years, as also in Nevada. Moving to Idaho, he followed farming and stock raising some two years; he also resided in Utah some time since leaving Idaho, speculating while there in live stock. In May, 1882, he came to Montana and is now interested in stock-raising and ranching. Mr. Lish was married in California, March 4, 1861, to Miss Rachel Sharp, by whom he has five children.

MYRON M. LOCKWOOD, a guard of the United States Territorial penitentiary, was born in northern New York, January 8, 1841. He went to Vermont just before the late war and enlisted in September, 1861, as a private of company F, Fifth Vt. Vol. Inf. He re-enlisted in the field in 1863, and served to the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged with the rank of First Sergeant. He received a serious gunshot wound at the battle of Savage Station, in the spring of 1862, and another at the battle of the Wilderness, in 1864. After the close of the war he removed to Iowa, where he resided until the spring of 1867. He then came to Helena and spent one year in mining, and then located on a stock ranch up the Missoula valley. In the winter of 1869–70 he was cleaned out by the Indians, losing his stock and his improvements. He subsequently resumed the stock business and still has an interest in ranches in the Missoula and Bitter Root valleys. In 1867 he volunteered in the Nez Perce Indian war, and served under General Gibbon. He participated in the terrible fight at Big Hole, in August, 1877, where Gibbon's small force was surrounded by an immense body of Indians and badly cut to pieces. He lost his brother, Almon Lockwood, who was shot through the head in that engagement, and he himself was shot through the body, causing a wound that nearly cost him his life. In June, 1879, he was appointed to his present position of guard at the penitentiary.

ANDREW LOGAN, Missoula, was born March 14, 1855, at Troy, N. Y., and is a son of Wm. A. and Jane Logan. He learned the blacksmith trade, worked at this trade in his native state, coming west in 1877, making trips through the Missouri and Yellowstone river countries, making his headquarters at Bismarck, Dak. In 1878 he came to Missoula and worked at the fort as post blacksmith until 1882, when he established his present business. Mr. Logan was married at Missoula January 11, 1880, to Miss May Ford, to whom two children were born.

JOSEPH E. MARION, Frenchtown, Commissioner of Missoula county, is the son of Amable Marion, a merchant of Contrecoeur, Canada, who was one of the patriots, and took an active part in the war of 1837. Joseph was born in the province of Quebec, January 23, 1842; he received his education in St. Mary's college, Montreal. In the fall of 1860 left home for St. Louis, Mo.; remained during the winter. In the spring of 1861 he entered American Fur Co's employ, and started for Fort Benton, but at Fort Union their boat burned. Mr. Marion and eleven others were chosen to go to Fort Benton on foot, 400 miles, and get teams and pack horses to transport the goods. Mr Marion then spent the winter getting out timber to build boats to return with in the spring, and turned to St. Louis, revisited Canada. He married Miss Josephine Dufresne, daughter of Civille Dufresne. This union was blessed with seven children: Emma was born at Cedar Creek, September 15, 1870; Ida, February 8, 1872; Louis Joseph, December 28, 1873; Civille Albert, October, 1875; William Henry, May, 1877; Anna, September 15, 1879; Annie Amable, December, 1882. From Canada he emigrated to Colorado, thence in 1867 moved to Alder Gulch, and in the spring of 1869 went to Kootenai; remained but a short time and then started for White Pine, but hearing of Frenchtown, moved to that settlement. In 1869 he went for his family. In the same year he went to Cedar Creek and was elected Recorder; made $1,300 in ten days. In 1870 returned to Frenchtown; in 1872 was elected Sheriff of Missoula county on the Democratic ticket. In 1878 was elected to the Legislature; in 1882 was elected County Commissioner and re-elected. Mr. Marion is now owner of a general store at Frenchtown.

R. W. MARTIN, Corvallis, was born in Michigan in the year 1843. In 1846 he moved with parents to the State of New York, where he resided until 1854. At this time he returned to Michigan; was there educated, and remained until 1865, when he went to Nevada Territory; but at Salt Lake had to stay during the winter, owing to the fact that his horses died. In the spring of 1866 he came to Montana, worked for some time at Helena, and settled in Missoula county in 1867, where he has resided since that time He owns thirteen lots with improvements at Corvallis, including the Corvallis Hotel.

ALVA MASON, Missoula, was born in Indiana, May 12, 1844. When young he moved to Illinois, where he remained until 1865. In 1881 he came to this territory, where he is at this time located in Bitter Root Valley, and engaged in the dairy business.

DUNCAN MACDONALD, Ravalli, was born at the old Hudson Bay post, in 1849, raised at Ravalli, and is a son of Angus Macdonald, at that time a stockholder in the Hudson Bay Co. Mr. Macdonald was educated by a Plute teacher, and at the age of fifteen years went into the Hudson Bay Co's employ as a trader with the Indians, and remained in that business five years, after which he became interested in mining one year, and then joining the Pen d' Orielle Indians went on the war-path with them, accompanied by the military force in the war against the Bloods and Blackfeet. He remained with them several years, after which he returned to the mercantile business, running pack trains and speculating. In 1877, at the request of Captain Mills, wrote the history of the Nez Perces. In 1872 Mr. Macdonald was engaged by the N. P. R. R. Co. as interpreter, and for the purpose of keeping the Indians in a peaceful state while the building of the road was in progress, and supplying the company with piles and ties for the building of the road through the reservation, a distance of fifty-two miles. In 1882 he established his mercantile house. He has been of great service to the settlers of the territory by keeping the Indians in peace and harmony. He speaks twelve different Indian languages. Mr. Macdonald was married to a native of Montana, by whom he has two children.

J. W. MCCARTY, Bitter Root Valley, was born in 1846, in Green Co, Mo. He moved to Kansas at an early age, and thence to Montana in 1864, and settled in Bitter Root Valley. The only settlers above Stevensville at this time were Jack Slack and Henry Cone. In 1870 he located his present ranch, where he has since resided. He cultivates about sixty acres. Wheat averages thirty bushels per acre, and oats about fifty bushels per acre. Mr. McCarty, becoming tired of bachelorhood, in 1870 was united in marriage to Miss Ettie Backus.

MICHAEL M. MCCAULEY, Fort Missoula, was born in Leitrim Co., Ireland, and emigrated to the United States when but 15 years old. He resided in New York city until 1851, when he went to California via Panama, crossing the Isthmus on a mule. While in California, he was commissioned Second Lieutenant of San Joaquin Mounted Rifles, a volunteer company, by Governor John B. Weller, in 1858, and in 1861 he was commissioned Captain of the Stanislaus Guards, by Governor John G. Downey. He remained in California until 1865, when he came to Montana, and engaged in mining, at Blackfoot City, until 1868. He was appointed Indian Agent for the Flat Heads, stationed at the Joco Agency, and in 1870 was appointed agent of the Blackfeet. Mr. McCauley is now ranching and keeping a dairy in the Bitter Root Valley near Fort Missoula. In 1870 he was united in marriage with Miss Margret McCarty, of Washington, D.C. This union has been blessed with seven children, of whom four are living.

T. A. MCCLAIN, Missoula, was born at Mount Pleasant, Iowa, May 11, 1849, moved to California in 1869, and was there engaged in carpentering and farming until 1879, when he came to Montana, and settled in Bitter Root Valley. Here he owns a fine ranch, which he is constantly improving. This ranch is fifteen miles south of Missoula.

WASHINGTON J. MCCORMICK, Missoula, was born in Indiana, in 1835, and received his education at Asbury University, at Greencastle, Ind., and after finishing his studies and reading law for several years, was admitted to the bar, and in 1857 went to Utah, where he was appointed Acting Secretary, Attorney-General and Chief Justice. Returning to Indiana, he resided there until 1863, when he came to Montana, located at Virginia City, and there followed his profession some two years. In 1864 he was elected to the Territorial Legislature, from Madison county, was secretary of the first democratic convention held in Montana. In April, 1865, he moved to Deer Lodge county, and in the fall of 1866 was appointed Indian Agent, and had charge of the Flat Head agency until September, 1868. Then he moved to Missoula, where he has since followed his profession, and in the years 1875, 1877 and 1878 was elected to the Legislature from Missoula county, and member of the great convention of January, 1884. In 1875 he became interested in milling and stock raising in Missoula and Choteau counties, and was also largely interested in town properties and various farming lands in the territory. He is the second heaviest taxpayer in Missoula county. Mr. McCormick was married, in 1869, to Miss Kate Higgins. Mrs. McCormick was born in Kildare Co., Ireland, came to the United States with her parents in 1853, and was married at Missoula November 11, 1869. This lady came to Montana in the fall of 1865. She is a sister of Captain Higgins, whose sketch is found in another column. They are the parents of seven children, four boys and three girls. Mr. and Mrs. McCormick are now living in Missoula.

THOS. J. MCNAMARA, Missoula, was born in Clare Co., Ireland, in 1824, and assisted his father in farming until of age. In 1851 he emigrated to the United States, located at Oneida, N. Y., and engaged in farming for six months; left that to work on depot at Crawfordsville, Ind., thence to New Orleans, and in 1851 went to California, engaged in mining in Placer county, also on the Salmon river until 1862, when he left for the Florence diggings, but changing plans went to Bannack. He mined at Alder Gulch seven years. When the excitement of Cedar Creek occurred he went there and mined two years. In 1871 he came to Missoula, formed partnership with James Campbell, and opened a saloon; in a short time bought him out and carried on the business alone. In 1878 engaged in the general merchandise business with Thomas Williams, which, after carrying on for two years, he closed out. Mr. McNamara, besides owning the saloon, has fourteen town lots and other real estate. He was married to Miss Cunningham, of Alder Gulch.

WILLIAM MCWHIRK, Corvallis, was born August 16, 1827, in Knox Co., O., and reared in Franklin county in the same state. While a lad he read an account of the Rocky mountain adventures, written by a trapper, and he became infatuated with the idea of going to the great West, and in 1852 he went to Fort Hall, Idaho, where he remained two years in the employ of Richard Grant, who was the trader at the Fort. After leaving his employ he went thirty miles below Salmon Falls, and sawed the lumber with a whip-saw to build a boat, and hauled it 180 miles; then run his boat down Snake river, a dangerous and exciting trip, to Ft. Boise, and here he run it as a ferry for three years at the mouth of Boise river where it empties into the Snake river. In 1857 he went to the present site of Walla Walla, where he built the first house and put in a stock of goods. He afterward sold both house and goods to Frank Worden, in 1859. Here he engaged in farming, and cultivated a large amount of land, and engaged heavily in stock-raising. In the winter of 1866 he lost all his stock, and in consequence lost all his other property. In 1866 he came to Missoula without a dollar and located a piece of land on the Rattlesnake, at its junction with the Missoula river. This he sold in small lots to different parties—a portion of the town of Missoula is built on this tract. In 1877 he located in Corvallis, where he is engaged in the mercantile business.

REV. JOSEPH MENETREY, S. J., resident priest of Missoula, was born in Switzerland, educated in Europe, and came to America in 1847, landing at Portland, Oregon, from the first French vessel to make that port. He joined his brethren in the mission work on the Pacific slope, and has worked faithfully and efficiently in this field for thirty-seven years, the past twelve of which have been spent at Missoula. The personal history of Father Menetrey is so interwoven with the history of the church in this region that it is but a recapitulation to speak of it in this chapter.

ROBERT NICOL, Skalkaho, born at Dearbornville, Mich., March 4, 1847, is the youngest of a family of six children. His father's family moved to South Bend, Ind. In 1853 they moved to near Aurora, Kane Co., Ill., and in 1855 moved to northern Iowa, where they remained until 1863. Robert Nicol, Sr., died in 1850, and his widow married D. C. Elliott in 1853. In 1864 the family, consisting of Mr. and Mrs Elliott, L. C. and Clara Elliott, son and daughter of Mr Elliott, and Robert Nicol came to Montana, and D. C. and L. C. Elliott and Robert Nicol located each a piece of land adjoining each other, and all in one body. L. C. Elliott was killed in the Big Hole battle of 1877. D. C. Elliott was appointed postmaster in 1874, and Robert Nicol his deputy. D. C. Elliott died March 2, 1881, and Robert Nicol took his place. Mr. Nicol cultivates about sixty acres of land, with an average wheat yield of twenty-five bushels; oats forty bushels per acre. His principal business is stock-raising, both horses and cattle, marketing his young stock as fast as it becomes marketable. He has about thirty head of horses. He has about 175 fruit trees, consisting of apple, crabapple, plum, cherry, etc., a few vines of Concord grapes, and some strawberries are found in his orchard. Mr. Nicol was married April 2, 1878, to Miss Nellie, daughter of Jacob and Emma Goff. Mr. and Mrs. Nicol have two children, viz: Florence, born July 28, 1880; Robert, born July 6, 1882. February 8, 1883, before 6 A.M., Mr. Nicol's house caught fire and burned to the ground—with nearly all the contents—saving only a little clothing and the post office.

C. C. O'KEEFE, P. O. Ardrum, was born in Cork, Ireland, September 12, 1827. In 1853 he came to New York, where he remained two years, then moved to California, and followed farming. In May, 1859, he joined Mullan's expedition and came to Montana. In November, 1879, he located his farm in O'Keefe's Cañon, where he brought the first threshing machine to the neighborhood, and also the first reaper and mower. In 1860 he raised his first crop, and sold 100 bushels of wheat for $1,500. Mr. O'Keefe follows farming and stock raising; owns 160 acres of meadow and farming land. In September, 1865, he married Miss Annie Lester. They have two children: Mary, born November 26, 1866; Maggie, born May 25, 1868. (Vide General History.)

ROSSWELL PARKHURST, Stevensville, is the youngest of seven children. He was born March 9, 1839, at Potsdam, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y. He afterward lived in Essex, Clinton Co. When 21 years old he moved to Red Wing, Goodhue Co., Minn., where he resided until 1866. He came to Montana by way of the route north of the Missouri, and got into the Territory without crossing that river. He came with the Fisk party, and arrived in Bitter Root Valley August, 1867. At this time there were but four buildings at Stevensville, consisting of one mercantile house, one blacksmith shop, one carpenter shop, and a cabin. Mr. Parkhurst first located the ranch on the west side of the river, now owned by Monroe Fulkerson. In 1871 he abandoned this ranch and located one on the east side of the river, above Stevensville. His land lies near the foot hills, and is very fertile soil. Wheat averages 30 bushels per acre, and oats 60 bushels per acre. He has 1,000 currant, gooseberry, raspberry and blackberry bushes growing, 50 grapevines, and 1,800 fruit trees, consisting of plum, cherry, pear and apple trees.

ROBERT A. PELKEY, of the firm of Moya & Co., Missoula, is a native of California, where he was born near Sacramento City, October 28, 1857. Leaving California his parents moved to St. Louis, Mo., and thence went to California in 1860, traveling over the State and to all the different mines. In 1872 he went to Walla Walla, remaining there until 1877, when he came to Missoula to make it his home. He is a printer by trade, and has been engaged in that occupation for the past 16 years, and is at present foreman of the mechanical department of the Missoulian. He has been associated in business with Mr. Moya since October, 1883. On July 4, 1882, he married Miss Effie M. Beardsley, a native of Michigan.

C. W. PENROSE, Lieutenant U. S. A., Fort Buford, Dak., son of Major William H. Penrose, U. S. A., was born at Niles, Mich., March 16, 1857. He went to London, Canada, in early youth, and was a student of Helmuth College, of that city. On returning to Michigan he was engaged as salesman in a Detroit mercantile house, then went to Philadelphia, and took a course of civil engineering at the State University, and graduated in the spring of 1876. April 10 of that year he was appointed an officer of the Art Department of the Centennial Exposition. In June, 1877, he went to Yankton, Dak.; thence to Little Rock, Ark., where he was in Government employ as clerk in the Commissary Department until May 30, 1880. He then accepted a position with the Rose City Iron Works, of Little Rock, until January, 1881, when he came to Montana. He served as bookkeeper at Butte until December 17, 1882, when he received his appointment as Deputy Clerk of the Second Judicial District of Montana. Lieutenant Penrose began life as a Government officer at Camp Supply, under Captain C. A Reynolds, of the Quartermaster's Department, who appointed him Storekeeper to fill vacancy when only eleven years of age, at a salary of $900 per year. He is now Second Lieutenant, U. S. A., stationed at Fort Buford.

LAWRENCE PETER, Missoula, is an old experienced tailor, having had an experience of eighteen years, and learning the trade in Europe. In March, 1872, he came to the United States, and for two years lived in Penn., thence to Illinois, where, after remaining for six months, he moved to California. In the latter State he lived for five years. He next repaired to Walla Walla, and resided there three years, and then came to Deer Lodge. From Deer Lodge he moved to Missoula, in July, 1883. Mr. Peter is a native of France, and ever since coming to this country has had to depend upon his own efforts.

ASBURY PLUMMER, Missoula, of the firm of Hayes & Plummer, was one of the earliest settlers of the Territory, arriving at Bannack in 1863, and remaining there until 1864, when he went to the Bitter Root Valley, where he engaged in the stock business. After farming and raising stock for awhile in Bitter Root, he sold out and came to Missoula, to engage in the livery business, and where he has since accumulated other property. Mr. Plummer was born in 1841, four or five miles from Indianapolis, Ind., and remained in that State until 1855, when he came to Illinois, and thence direct to Bannack. As an instance of the value of farm produc in early times in Montana, Mr. Plummer relates that he once sold a wagon load of potatoes for $1,100 cash.

JOHN S. POOL, Bitter Root Valley, was born June 24, 1840, in Decatur Co., Ind., the son of Joshua and Julia Pool. In 1861 John S. Pool went to California and located in Siskiyou county, among the beautiful hills, but only remained there one year, when he went to Canyon City, on the headwaters of John Day river. While living on this river the Indians killed three white men near Mr. Pool's place, and to escape a like fate he retreated at the rapid rate of thirty miles in six hours. He then went to Idaho in 1863, where he worked in the mines for one season and the following fall went to Grand Ronde Valley, Ore. He came to Montana in 1865 and engaged in mining in Bear Gulch and at Hendersonville. In 1873 he located his ranch on the Skalkaho, in Bitter Root Valley. In June, 1871, he was married to Mrs. Clemma Le Master, widow of John Le Master, and daughter of George and Mary Troutner, of Iowa. To them have been born seven children.

REV. A. RAVALLI, S.J. (deceased), born at Ferrara, Italy, May 16, 1812, died at St. Mary's Mission, Missoula Co., M. T., October 2, 1884. He entered the Society of Jesus, November 12, 1827, and made his last religious vows April 21, 1844, some time after his transfer to the Holland Mission. In the month of December, 1843, he, accompanied by F. F. Vorcruysse, Accotti, Nobilli and Frere F. Huybrechts, following the lead of the great Missioner De Smet, sailed from Flushing, Holland, via Cape Horn to the mouth of the Columbia, at Fort Van Couver, and thence up to the Williamette Mission on St. Paul's Prairie, where they were welcomed by Revcrends Blanchet and Demers, and where Father De Smet left them, while himself proceeded toward the mountains. In the spring of 1845, Father Ravalli was sent among the Kalispels, where Father Hoecken had been since the year before; in September he was sent to Colville to build a chapel, and in October, 1845, was dispatched to St. Mary's (Flathead Nation), to replace Father Zerbinati, who died there the previous summer, and as assistant priest to Father Mengarini. Here he remained until the fall of 1850, during which time he built the first flouring mill and the first saw mill in that region. In 1849–50 a number of hunters, whose religion was whisky and women, came to the Mission to poison the Indian mind. As a result St. Mary's was closed and Father Ravalli moved to the Coeur d'Alene, where he erected the great church, and of which Mission he was appointed Superior. In 1857 he was appointed to the charge of the Colville Mission. Shortly after his arrival at Colville an Indian woman hanged herself, news was brought to the priest, who hastened thither, cut the lariat and loosened the windings round her neck. The neck was undoubtedly broken, but Father Ravalli breathed into her mouth, and within 45 minutes the woman showed signs of life; within four hours she was restored to life and lived to a good old age. In the fall of 1860 this Mission was closed and the Superior assigned to Santa Clara, Cal., where he was appointed Master of Novices; in 1863 he returned to the mountains and was stationed at St. Ignatius Mission; in August, 1864, he was transferred to St. Peter's Mission among the Blackfeet, where, during the Sun River stampede, he threw the Mission open to the suffering stampeders, and rendered such kindnesses and medical aid to the freezing miners, that his name became the only one to be respected in the wild orgies of the camp, while it was venerated by all during the sober working hours. After this he extended his spiritual and medical assistance everywhere throughout the Territory; but while thus engaged, he fell sick, was cared for by Thomas and Mrs. Foley, near Missoula, whose tender solicitude for him for over two months was most remarkable. St. Mary's Mission was re-opened in the fall of 1866, and in 1867 Father Ravalli moved thither from Hell Gate to make the old Mission his home. He never recovered from the fatigue and trials of 1865–7. In 1880 he suffered an attack of paralysis, which confined him to his bed, until death came to his relief. The funeral service was performed by Father J. Menetrey, the present senior white resident of the Territory, assisted by Rev. F. J. D'Aste, L. B. Palladino and L. G. Tremblay. He never revisited his parents in his native Italy; but making the sacrifice complete, ordered his body to be interred with the Flatheads, among whom his soul had worked.

J. L. REES, of Rees Bros., Missoula, was born in New Brunswick, September 26, 1858. After leaving school he learned the trade of carpenter, then took charge of men working for other parties on contracts, and in 1880 came to Missoula. He worked for two months at the Fort, then formed a partnership with his brother T. D. Rees, and began contracting and building, the firm being known as Rees Bros. Since their organization they have built most of the principal houses in the city, such as the bank, Eddy & Hammond's store, Episcopal church, J. P. Reinhard's, Armstrong's and Williams' residences.

JAMES P. REINHARD, Missoula, was born August 14, 1840, at Louisville, Ky. He moved with his parents, Paul and Martha Reinhard, to St. Louis in 1848, and later to Lexington, Mo. His father was a hardware merchant, and James at the age of sixteen enterered his father's office as book-keeper, remaining there until nineteen years old. He was then receiving and forwarding clerk on the Missouri river. In the year 1864 he came up the river to Benton, and in 1865 came to Missoula, where he procured a position as book-keeper for the firm of Worden & Co.—the first book-keeper employed by the firm. He filled this position about five years, when he turned his attention to the hardware business, but still posted the books for Worden & Co., He has continued in the hardware business ever since, and is numbered among Missoula's most prosperous merchants. Mr. Reinhard was married April 2, 1881, to Miss Linda Miller, daughter of Henry W. and Caroline Miller. By this marriage they have two children: Paul Miller, born January 29, 1882, and James Gilbert, born February 10, 1884.

J. ROBERTS, Missoula, was born in September, 1854, in North Wales, where he attended school at Beaumans, afterward at Shrewsbury, England, completing his education at the Liverpool Royal College. In the summer of 1880 he came to Canada and located at Quebec. In a short time he joined the Northern Pacific corps of engineers under Colonel Dodd, and assisted on the railroad for six months, when he came to Missoula and was engaged in surveying the Flat Head Indian reservation. He located in June, 1882, at Missoula City, and opened a book, stationery and news depot.

JOHN S. ROBERTSON, Stevensville, born September 25, 1839, in Henry Co., Tenn., is the son of James and Ellen Robertson. His father is a native of North Carolina, and his mother, a Pennsylvanian. He is the third child of a family of six sons and one daughter, all yet living. All the brothers of Mr. Robertson served in the Union army during the war, John being (as he expresses it) the stray sheep in the family, strayed away into the Confederate service. In the year 1845 the family moved to Missouri, where they remained for some years. In 1863 John S. came to Montana, locating near Virginia City during the summer, and in September came to Bitter Root valley and engaged in farming and stock raising. He has cultivated this ranch for seventeen years, farming about 100 acres high land. He brought the first harvester into the valley in 1877, for which he paid $375. He owns about sixteen head of American mares, and has commenced the breeding of mules. He has about 400 fruit trees of different varieties. He also has about 2,000 sheep in partnership with J. W. Winslett. Cost of herding 2,000 sheep, $720 per annum; shearing, $200; twine and sacks, $150; expense and loss, $430, or a total of $2,000. Wool, 13,000 pounds at 22 cents, $2,860; increase average, $1,200; profit on 2,000 sheep, $4,060. On June 20, 1866, Mr. Robertson married Miss Eva Arnold, stepdaughter of Dr. J. B. Price and own daughter of Martha Price, who was the widow of John Arnold.

W. H. RODGERS (deceased), was the oldest hotel man in the territory, having arrived in Montana in 1864. Captain Rodgers was born in Clarke Co., Ind., in April, 1814, while that region was a territory. He resided in Indiana until 1839, when he went to Savannah, Mo., and engaged in merchandising. In 1863 he removed to Nebraska, and spent one year in Nebraska City. In 1864 he came to Montana and located at Virginia City, where he built the Missouri House. He kept that house until 1869, when the name was changed to the Rodgers' House, and remained in that hotel until October, 1881, when having bought the Rodgers House at Missoula, he removed to this place and resumed his former business. He was married in Missouri, in 1843, to Miss Jane Logan. They have had seven daughters and four sons, of whom only four daughters and one son are living. Mr. Rodgers was one of the territorial officers in an early day, having been appointed territorial auditor by Governor Meagher, and reappointed. He held various local offices, and was an esteemed citizen up to date of his death, April 8, 1885.

GEORGE A. SALSIG, Stevensville, was born in Bethlehem, Penn., May 9, 1834; moved in 1837 with his parents to Michigan where he was educated. He was clerk in a general merchandise house at Three Rivers, St. Joseph Co., Mich., until 1857, when he went to Plattesmouth, Neb., and remained there engaged in merchandising for eighteen months. Then moved to Denver, Col., where he prospected for gold. In 1859 he went to California, where he was engaged principally in mining and worked on a farm until 1864. Then visited British Columbia for one year when he returned to Washington Territory via the Columbia river, and was there engaged in trading and packing for two years, when he came to Bitter Root Valley. He was engaged in agriculture until 1875, when he commenced business in Stevensville, which business he has continued until the present time.

COLE B. SANDERS, P. O. Stevensville, born in Morrow Co., Mo., December 5, 1832, moved in 1854 to North Missouri, where he resided until 1864. His father then moved to Oregon where Mr. Sanders was raised and educated. In 1869 came to Bitter Root Valley and has made his home here since that time. He has a good farm of 320 acres, six miles west of Stevensville, well improved. Mr. Sanders has taught school in the valley; is a member of I. O. G. T. and also a member of the M. E. Church.

ROBERT C. SATTLEY, Missoula, resident engineer Missoula Division, operating department, Northern Pacific Railroad, was born in Vermont, November 26, 1856. He was educated at the University of Vermont, at Burlington, and graduated in 1879, after taking a regular engineering course. In July, 1879, he went to Western Dakota, where he entered the employ of the Northern Pacific Company, August 6 of that year. After one year and three months spent in that region, he was assigned to the Missoula Division as assistant division engineer, with headquarters at New Chicago. Since November, 1882, he has been resident engineer with headquarters at Missoula.

PETER SCHEFFER, P. O. Frenchtown, was born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, October 6, 1849. He was educated in St. Columbia College. In 1869 moved to California, remained but a short time; then moved to Carson City, Nev., followed the wood business from which he accumulated considerable money. In 1872 he moved to and located on Six Mile Creek. Mr. Scheffer is a stock raiser and farmer; owns 360 acres of land. In 1882 he married the second time.

FRANK SEE, P. O. Skalkaho, was born in Missouri, November 29, 1829, and is the eldest of a family of nine children born to George and Malinda See. In 1850 Frank See went to California and mined in Eldorado county, near Placerville, and later near Johnstown. He returned to Missouri only to retrace his footsteps westward, this time going to Montana in 1864 and locating with his family at the mouth of the Big Hole river, near what is now known as Salisbury. In 1867 he went to the Bitter Root valley and located on Willow Creek near the present site of Corvallis. In 1870 he purchased his present ranch on the Skalkaho where he has ever since resided. He was a heavy stock raiser until the past few years; the range growing smaller and the grass getting short, he sold his stock and only keeps about 150 to 300 head. Like most of the pioneers of Montana he tried his luck at mining, both placer and quartz. As civilization increases and neighbors multiply he feels crowded and longs for the frontier again. On January 31, 1861 he was married to Miss Margaret Jones, daughter of Calvin G. and Eliza Jones, of Marion Co., Mo. To them have been born eleven children; ten are living at home, one died in infancy. The following is the family record: Frank, born April 6, 1864; Samuel Clay, born March 18, 1867; William, born February 13, 1869; Daragin, born March 14, 1870; George, born January 19, 1872; Maggie, born May 11, 1874; Mary, born November 13, 1876; Alice, born March 19, 1878; Catherine, born October 3, 1879; Armstrong C., born February 25, 1881.

JACOB SHERRILL, Gird's Creek, is a native of Tennessee, born on Lick Creek, Williams Co., November 23, 1810; the second of a family of twelve children born to Ambrose and Margaret Sherrill. His father moved to Carroll county and settled on a farm. Jacob Sherrill resided here until 1840, when he went to Missouri and settled on Bear Creek, Polk Co., but on the division of that county he found himself in the portion called Dade county. This was again divided, and he was a citizen of Cedar county. Thus he lived in three different counties without changing his place of residence. Came to Montana in 1865, and in October located in Bitter Root valley, on Willow creek. The following spring he engaged in freighting and continued in this business till 1870, when he returned to Bitter Root valley and purchased his present ranch and engaged in farming. In 1878 he sold out and moved to Texas, but the love for his Montana home was so great that in 1879 he sold out and returned to Montana and purchased his old place, where he has ever since resided. In 1849 Mr. Sherrill crossed the plains to California, and after one year's residence returned by steamer to New Orleans via Panama. In 1856 he once more went to California, taking with him a band of cattle. He went to Missouri in September, 1857. In 1834 Mr. Sherrill was married to Miss Joannah, daughter of David and Sally Robinson, of Tennessee. They have had twelve children, four of whom are now living, having lost the three oldest sons in the late war. Following is the family record: Sarah J., born October 12, 1834, died in Deer Lodge, wife of John E. Hartley; Jacky A., born February 16, 1836, married S. D. Brown: Matilda C., born June 16, 1840, married J H. Graff, died in Montana; Cornelia A., born February 6, 1847, died on the plains; Green L., born July 9, 1838, killed in the war in 1864; Nathan H., born March 28, 1842, killed in the war in 1864; Benjamin F., born September 20, 1843, killed in the war in 1864; George Solomon, born April 12, 1845, died of scarlet fever; Jacob Tyler, born April 12, 1849; Winfield Scott, born April 6, 1851; Millard Fillmore, born January 2, 1854; Thomas Crittenden, born August 24, 1856. The last four are all residents of Bitter Root valley. His ranch, five miles above Corvallis, contains 100 acres; he also owns 320 acres under patent and 160 under preemption.

GILBERT SIMMONS, Stevensville, has been twelve years in the Territory and nine years in Bitter Root valley. He married a daughter of Elijah Chaffin, of Corvallis, and this union has been blessed with three children. Mr. Simmons' ranch lies about seven miles above Stevensville. He has 160 acres and cultivates about 100 acres. His wheat will average 35 bushels per acre, and oats average 75 to 80 bushels per acre. He purchased his ranch of Harlan. A part of the land had grown up to sunflowers very rank. This he plowed late and very deep, and sowed oats very thick, and killed them completely. He has tried this plan several times in different places, and has always found it successful. He has a young orchard well started.

JOHN A. SLACK, Corvallis, was born July 5, 1835, in Baltimore, Md., where his parents, Andrew and Margaret Slack, resided. At five years of age the family moved to Manchester, about 35 miles from Baltimore. John A. attended the public school until 17 years old; in 1851 started for California and arrived in San Francisco in January 1853. Was to have sailed December 5 on the steamer San Francisco, but was refused passage because of having been exposed to the small-pox. Five days later the San Francisco was wrecked. December 10 he took passage on the Northern Light via Nicaragua, and had a safe journey. He mined in northern California, and in 1856 went to Oregon and mined in Sailor Diggings nearly two years. In 1858 he went to British Columbia, stayed one year, when he returned to Oregon, and in 1861 came to Oro Fino mines in Idaho. In 1862, in company with a party of prospectors, he crossed the Cœur D'Alenes and Bitter Root range, and about August 1 they struck new diggings in Big Hole basin. He mined all the fall, and late in the season came to Bitter Root valley and located his present ranch, being the first farmer above Fort Owen. The Snake Indians raided the valley several times and killed other Indians, but did not molest the white man. When Mr. Slack first came to Bitter Root valley he had one old horse and $50 in cash. Locating his ranch, he built a cabin, and in the meantime his horse died, leaving him on foot. He went to Joe Blodget's for potatoes and purchased 5 bushels at $5 per bushel, and to Thomas Harris for flour at $10 per 100 pounds. Now his $50 were gone, and no seed. He came back to his land and started across the mountains to Bannack, where he arrived in safety and worked in the mines until February, when he returned to Bitter Root via Deer Lodge and engaged to take 5 head of horses over to the valley for a friend. Getting snow-bound, he was five days going 60 miles, and two and a half days without food. He obtained some seed at Hell Gate and came to his ranch, borrowed a yoke of oxen and an old plow of some Indians and put in a crop. He then went to Bannack, and thence to Alder gulch, where he located a claim and represented it according to law; not being able to open his own claim, he worked by the day. Failing to represent in one month, his claim was jumped, and proved to be very rich. Purchasing a team and wagon, he returned to his ranch in time to secure his crop, and has remained here ever since. Mr. Slack was married in 1864 to Miss Mary, daughter of Balsam and Nancy Chaffin. While Mr. Slack was away from home, and his wife alone, a band of the Snake Indians attacked a Flat Head squaw, killed and scalped her near Mrs. Slack's home, but did not harm any of the whites. At the time of the Nez Perces raid, Mr. Slack being away from home, Mrs. Slack and her little ones stayed on the ranch alone and unharmed; all the rest of the settlers went to the fort. They have six children, four sons and two daughters: Wm. Henry, born December 3, 1865; Franklin J., born June 5, 1867; Minnie A., born December 16, 1868; Jasper, born March 18, 1870; John L., born August 9, 1873; Nancy M., born July 22, 1875.

JUDGE JOHN L. SLOANE, police magistrate and justice of the peace, Missoula, was born in New York city March 27, 1847, where he received a common school education. He enlisted in the late war as a private in the "Duryea Zouaves." He was commissioned second lieutenant, assigned to the 2d California Cavalry, and served until March, 1866. He was wounded at the battle of the Yellow Tavern, Va., August, 1864, receiving a gunshot wound in one leg. He was mustered out in California, went to Kansas in 1867, built the first building at Sedgwick, and engaged in merchandising. In 1872 he moved to Dodge City, where he kept hotel until 1873. He then went to New Orleans, and thence to Missoula. He was elected justice of the peace in the fall of 1882, and police magistrate on the organization of the city in 1883.

WILLIAM N. SMITH, Bitter Root Valley, born Sept. 19, 1833, at Paris Hill, Oneida Co., N. Y., son of Isaac and Mary Smith, being the seventh son and twelfth child of a family of thirteen children, five of whom are still living. Isaac Smith moved to Lenawee Co., Mich., in the summer of 1835, locating on his homestead the day William was two years old. W. N. Smith grew up and was educated, and afterward learned the carpenter trade. In 1857 he moved to Kansas, stopping at Leavenworth about three months, then went to Nebraska, and worked at his trade until 1859, when he started with three others for Pike's Peak. Mr. Smith's comrades, however, went back from Salt Creek, and he was left to proceed alone. He finally succeeded in reaching his destination, and stood on the summit of Pike's Peak. He remained in Colorado, until 1862, working some at his trade at Denver, and later mined on the head of the Arkansas river. In May of the same year he started to Idaho, via Lemhi, then crossed over the mountains via Florence, and stopped in the Big Hole Basin, where diggings had been found. In August he went to Bannack, where he resided until 1863. In April John Sanders organized a party of 20 men to prospect on Snake river and in the Yellowstone country. Mr. Smith made one of the number. They prospected up the east fork of the Snake river, finding some gold, and they determined to go down as far as Jake Meek's ferry, and get supplies to last during the summer, for which they paid in gold dust. This created some excitement, and Harry Ward, being somewhat under the influence of whiskey, intimated that they had struck good diggings up the river. To get farther particulars Ward was freely supplied with whiskey, and the result—hundreds of men, on a stampede, pursued the party, and found them camped on the summit of the mountains, between the Snake and the Yellowstone rivers. One of the party, named Miller, blazed a large tree, and wrote thereon: "This 4th day of July, 1863, 18 of us pusillanimous fusileers camped beneath this tree." July 5 the party moved on, and crossed the Yellowstone river into an unknown country, being the first white men on the head waters of the Yellowstone. Followed down the river to the lake, and around the lake. Here they found the remains of an old corral, where the logs had been cut with an axe, evidently the work of white men. This was the only sign of civilization in the upper Yellowstone country. No mines were found, but the beauties of the lake were admired. Followed on down to the falls, and spent one day lost in admiration and awed by the sublimity of the scene. Following on down they soon reached the river below the Grand Canyon, and a few miles farther were seen signal fires lighted by the Indians on every side of them. At daylight, after having spent a sleepless night, the party turned from the river, and went up a ravine to cross the mountain. This was a perilous undertaking, but they reached the valley on the other side with safety. They passed up the Yellowstone as rapidly as possible, and crossed over into the Gallatin valley, and came down to Gallatin City. Here they saw the first white man aside from their own party since leaving Meek's ferry on the Snake river, and heard for the first time of Alder Gulch, and started immediately for that place, arriving there on the 1st September. Mr. Smith remained here until July 4, 1864, when he went to Kootenai, in the British possessions, followed mining until 1866, returned to Montana without a dollar, and hired out to dig potatoes. In the fall he purchased his present claim of Bass Brothers, and settled on it. He has a homestead of 160 acres on Sweathouse creek, and cultivates about eighty acres. He has timothy meadow from which he cuts three tons per acre. He raises on an average 40 bushels wheat per acre on summer fallow. Has twelve head of horses and thirty head of cattle; has his farm well fenced, and good buildings, all the result of a few years' farming. Mr. Smith married on March 28, 1871, Miss Lotta A., daughter of Norton and Louisa Zuxbury, of Kent Co., Mich. They have one child, Julia Vick, born August 15, 1877.

HARRISON SPAULDING, Missoula, was born at Fairfax, Franklin Co., Vt., November 17, 1857. He received his education in Vermont, and completed a classical course at St. Alban's College. In December, 1880, he entered the office of the Fairfax Tribune, subsequently managed the Minneapolis department of the St. Paul Globe in 1881, again was editor of the Minneapolis Evening Herald in 1882. This position he occupied until his visit to Colorado in July, 1882. In October, 1882, he came to Missoula, through the advice of John B. Reed, Commissioner of Montana, at the Denver Exposition. Prior to leaving Denver, he purchased material and presses for the Times, so that one month after his arrival here he established his newspaper.

WILLIAM SPURGIN, Missoula, was born in Davidson Co., N. C., August 13, 1837. His parents moved to Saline Co., Mo., where he remained until eighteen years of age, assisting in farming. Went to Dover, Lafayette Co., and learned the trade of blacksmith. After working four and a half years, moved to Georgetown, Pettis Co. He enlisted in the 27th Mo Volunteers June 14, 1861. Was captured September 15, 1861, by General Price and paroled at Lexington. Re-enlisted in the 45th Mo. Infantry, with which he served until discharged at Benton Barracks, St. Louis, August 20, 1865. He opened a blacksmith shop in Selma Co. August 10, 1866; formed a partnership with Simms Brothers and also engaged in the agricultural implement business. In 1882 he sold out business and came to Missoula; established a blacksmith and wagon shop, where he is engaged at the present time. Mr. Spurgin married Miss Orlino C. Reid, February 2, 1875. She died August 29, 1883, leaving two children, Verdie, Minnie. During the war Mr. Spurgin held the office of orderly sergeant two years, also 2d Lieutenant two years. Has been associated with the A. F. & A. M. for 17 years, served three terms as presiding officer; also associated with the I. O. O. F. for twelve years, served five terms as presiding officer, and as District Deputy Grand Lecturer of the U. S. Benevolent Fraternity.

W. M. STRANGE, Corvallis, was born in Kentucky in 1843, where he was educated. In 1855 he moved to Missouri, then engaged in farming one year, when he left for Kansas and remained in that state until 1864, when he sold out, moved west and settled in Oregon. His father died in 1856. He remained in Oregon until 1866, when he came to Bitter Root valley, where he has remained since that time. Has a good farm well stocked. He has kept his mother with him since the death of his father. She is eighty-one years of age and very feeble at this time.

Judge W. J. STEPHENS, attorney-at-law, and ex-Judge of Probate, County Clerk and Recorder of Missoula County, was born at Kingstown, Dublin County, Ireland, in 1835. Emigrated to the United States in 1847. Made his home at Baltimore, Md., until 1850, when he went to California and engaged in merchandising and mining. He also studied law, and in 1864 moved to Nevada, where he was admitted to the bar the same year and entered upon the practice of his profession. In 1865 he moved to Idaho and practiced law until May, 1866, when he came to Montana and established himself in practice in Deer Lodge Co. In 1870 he moved to Missoula and was appointed Clerk of the Second Judicial District Court. He held this office from December, 1866, for two years. He was elected to the offices named above and re-elected to the same in 1882. (Vide pol. hist.) Judge Stephens discharged the various duties of his several offices with ability and dispatch, and is said to be the most industrious county official in the Territory. Judge and Mrs. Stephens' residence is situate below the city, on the Missoula river in a beautiful location.

JOHN J. SULLIVAN, Skalkaho, was born in 1840, in Cork Co., Ireland, emigrated to America, May, 1849, and located in Dubuque Co., Ia., where he resided until 1864, when he came to Montana and located in Alder gulch. The same season went to Silver Bow; there he remained mining until 1872, when he came to Bitter Root valley and located his present ranch in the Skalkaho, where he resided until 1878, when he revisited Idaho. September 7, 1878, Mr. Sullivan was married to Miss Anna Theresa Cain, of Dubuque, who died December 6, 1880. He has two children, Mary Ellen, born June 19, 1879; John Joseph, born November 30, 1880. In 1884 he had a farm of 160 acres, 250 head of cattle and twenty-two horses. In that year he established a stock ranch in the Canadian Northwest.

J. L. SWEENEY, Missoula, first arrived in Montana at Virginia city August 3, 1864, and mined in Bummer Dan Bar in 1865 and 1866, and was interested in Sweeney Bar. In 1866 was connected with Pine Grove Flume Co., in which Capt. Rodgers, Wm. Thomas and others were interested. Afterward bought out the company, and owned the flume up to the time the diggings were worked out. In 1868 he left Virginia city and made a trip to the states, coming back in 1869 and engaging in the furniture business in Helena until 1870, when he moved to Deer Lodge, where he continued in the furniture business until 1874, when he went to the Cable mines, remaining there until 1878. Then came to Missoula, where he has been ever since. Was carrying on the furniture business at Missoula until October, 1883, when he sold out to his son, George L., who continues to carry on the business. Mr. Sweeney has been twice married, his first wife dying May 15, 1882. On July 18, 1882, he was married to Miss Eliza J. Rodgers, niece by marriage of the late Capt. Rodgers. Mr. Sweeney is the father of four children—two boys and two girls: George L., Lewis Connor, Frances Imogene, now Mrs. Thurman; and Susan Lavina, now Mrs. Dr. Whitford.

T. O. WADE, Missoula, of Wade & Stoner, was born in Virginia in 1848, moved to Missouri in 1869, where he remained for three years and then migrated to Montana, arriving at Big Hole in 1872. Here he stopped for three years, having charge of a herd of cattle during that period. From Big Hole he went to Butte, where he engaged in mining, freighting and trading. In 1880 he started in the livery business, and has been devoting his attention to that business ever since. Also buys and sells stock, and owns the one-half interest in the livery stable of Wade & Stoner, at Butte. He was married to Miss Priest, a native of Missouri, in December, 1881. This lady died in October, 1882.

I. S. WEEKS, Missoula, division engineer of the Missoula Division of Northern Pacific Railway, beginning at French Woman's, on the Little Blackfoot, and ending at the mouth of the Missoula, was born at Barnstable, Mass., May 8, 1848. Received a scientific education, and graduated from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the class of 1871. He was employed as civil engineer on various roads until 1879, when he came to Montana and entered the employ of the N. P.

R. R. on the Pen d'Oreille Division. He was in charge of construction of that division during the entire work.

H. V. WHEELER, Missoula, deputy United States mineral surveyor and civil engineer, was born in Caledonia Co., Vt., August 16, 1850. He received an academic education, taking a regular civil engineering course. He was engaged in engineering work in Vermont until 1871, when he removed to Cleveland, O. He spent six years in that city, the last four of which he was assistant city engineer. In 1877 he went to Santa Rosa, California, and engaged in surveying. He was one year in the employ of the California Southern railway as draughtsman. In October, 1882, he came to Missoula, entered the employ of the Northern Pacific railway, and was appointed deputy United States mineral surveyor in November, 1883. Mr. Wheeler was married at Cleveland, O., on the centennial fourth to Miss Sarah, daughter of Henry B. Tibbits. Mrs. Wheeler was born in Buffalo, N. Y.

E. B. WILES, P. O. Stevensville, was born in the State of New York, April 3, 1830. At the age of four years he moved with his parents to Ohio, where he resided until 1854. During this year he went to California, worked there at his trade until 1855, when the Curran River excitement took place. He joined in the stampede. In 1856 he returned to California, and worked at his trade and mining for two years, when he revisited his first home in this country. There he was engaged in building a flume until 1859, when he went to San Jose, where he remained until 1865, when he joined the First California Cavalry, and went to the southern portion of the state. He was mustered out of service in 1866, when he returned to Ohio, and remained until 1868, when he came to Montana, where he has made his home since that time.

THOMAS WILLIAMS, Treasurer of Missoula county, and ex-officio Superintendent of Schools, is one of the pioneers of 1864. He was born in Ireland, in 1831, came to the United States in 1850, landing in New York. He has resided in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Missouri, California, Colorado and Montana, engaged in mining and merchandising. Mr. Williams came to Montana in 1864, opened a general store at Virginia City, and subsequently another at Cedar Creek. In 1870 he came to Missoula, and engaged in merchandising, which business he continued until 1880, when he was elected County Treasurer. He served the two years' term, and was reëlected November 7, 1882, and November, 1884, for the term of 1885-6.

P. B. WINSTON, Minneapolis, contractor and tracklayer of the N. P. R. R., was born in Virginia, August 19, 1845. He was brought up near Hanover Court House, and was educated at home. He enlisted in the Confederate Army, in August, 1863, as a member of Company E, Fifth Virginia Cavalry, was promoted to a captaincy, and assigned to General Rosser's staff, where he served until the close of the war. In 1872 he came west and engaged as contractor on the N. P. R. R. He superintended the laying of 870 miles of track on this line. On closing up the gap Wr. Winston laid from the west and Wm. O. Winston from the east, and their last day's work is the greatest on record, being nine miles and 300 feet, of which they laid about equal portions each. They have laid the entire track from Bismarck, Dakota, to the crossing of the Pen d'Oreille, a distance of 870 miles. P. B. Winston makes his home at Minneapolis, Minn.

J. W. WINSLETT was born in Jasper Co., Ga., July 13, 1821. His father moved to Alabama in 1829, and settled in Barber county, where Mr. Winslett received his education. In 1845 he went to Arkansas, where he was engaged in farming. From this state he went to Louisiana, where he stayed one year; thence he went to California, where he was engaged, until 1863, in the hotel business. In that year he was burned out, and engaged in mining, moved to Idaho, and was in the hotel business. In 1865 he came to Stevensville, where he engaged in selling goods, and where he has resided since that time. Mr. Winslett has 4,000 sheep on his range.

VAN R. WOODMANCY, Bitter Root Valley, a native of Syracuse, N. Y., was born there August 1, 1834; lived in Syracuse until 19 years of age, attending the district school and the academy at Courtland. At that age he commenced railroading, and at 23 began running a steamboat, in which business he continued for seven years. In 1860 he went to Colorado, and later to San Juan, N. M., thence to Arizona, and in 1863 came to Montana, stopping at Alder Gulch. He followed mining and worked in nearly every camp in the Territory until 1874. He helped lay out the towns of Virginia City and Blackfoot City, and in the spring of 1865 he went to Helena with the first stampede, assisting in surveying and laying out that town; came to Stevensville in 1874, built a house and opened a restaurant. In 1876 he engaged in farming on his present ranch. He cultivates about 50 acres of bench land, raising vegetables chiefly. The fertility of his land is indicated by such large yields as 200 bushels of potatoes per acre, 25,000 pounds of onions; wheat, 60 bushels. Mr. Woodmancy was married October 11, 1880, to Mrs. Susan Davis, widow of Washington H. Davis.

FRANK H. WOODY, Missoula, was born December 10, 1833, at Chatham, N. C. At 15 years of age he taught school. In September, 1852, he left home to be absent six months, and prolonged his stay until April, 1879. He went to Indiana, April, 1853, and remained two years; then went to Kansas, landing in Leavenworth, April 19, 1855. There were only four or five houses in Leavenworth at this time. After two months, he joined a train en route for California, but at the Platte was obliged to quit the train, owing to sickness. Some time later he went to Salt Lake and spent the winter there. The crops had failed from drouth and grasshoppers, and he nearly starved. In the spring he went down to a reservation on what is known as Spanish Fork and remained until September, then returned to Salt Lake; met Captain Hooper and joined his expedition to the Flathead country as a "bull whacker." On arriving at Fort Hall, he found a large party; among the number was Judge Irvin, now of Butte City. He arrived in Missoula valley October, 1856. At this time there were no houses between Fort Owens and St. Ignatius Mission. They wintered in what is now known as Council Grove. Mr. Woody cut and hauled timber for Neil McArthur, who was building a trading post, which was erected in Grass Valley on what is known as the Phil Lynch estate. In the fall of 1857 Hugh O'Neil built the first house in the valley. In April, 1859, Mr. Woody, with the assistance of Henry Brooks and James Holt, made a plow of pine wood and plowed the first furrow in Hell Gate Valley. A little land had been plowed at St. Mary's Mission, about 35 miles above, in Bitter Root Valley. They sowed wheat, planted potatoes and turnips and other vegetables, and the night of August 14 a severe frost killed all but the onions and turnips. Mr. Woody then went to Walla Walla on an Indian trail that was afterward the Mullan road. He returned to Hell Gate Valley with Worden & Higgins, in August, 1860, and located about five miles below Missoula, and built the first house in Hell Gate Valley. Mr. Woody took a trip to Gold Creek, Bannack, Alder Gulch, etc.; returned to Hell Gate, April, 1864, and has since resided in this county. In 1865 he moved to Missoula village in the employ of Worden & Co. In 1866 he was appointed County Clerk, and held the office until December, 1880; was also Probate Judge for six years, and the first deputy district clerk. He was admitted to the bar in January, 1877, after some years of faithful study, and has since that time followed the profession successfully; is now employed by the Northern Pacific railroad as their local attorney, and to look after their lands. In 1871 he married Miss Lizzie, daughter of Horace and Elizabeth Countryman. Mrs. Woody is a Californian by birth. This union has been blessed with one son and four daughters: Frank Woody, born December 1, 1872; Mary Alice, born July 2, 1874; Rose Anna, born December 19, 1877, died October 5, 1879; Flora Pyreena, born November 3, 1879; Ruth Emma, born January 10, 1882, died in infancy. Mr. Woody was the first postmaster appointed with an office worth $12. After one year he resigned and was again appointed postmaster with an office worth $88, and increased to $520, when he again resigned. He was elected to the Council in the fall of 1869 from Deer Lodge, with Dr. Mitchell, W. B. Dance and Asa Brown. After this election it was the general opinion that a legal session of the Legislature could not be held, and after a lengthy correspondence between Mitchell, Dance, Brown and Woody, they unanimously agreed not to attend, which agreement was kept by Woody and Brown. After the Legislature convened no quorum could be obtained, Dance and Mitchell suddenly determined to attend, which made a quorum and the session was held. As Mr. Woody was marked absent at each roll-call he considers his legislative record clear. A reference to the history of Missoula county and to the pages of the general history will point out the part Mr. Woody has taken in the settlement and progress of the Territory.

F. L. WORDEN, Missoula, was born in Vermont in the year 1830, and there received a fair business education. At the age of fourteen years he began clerking in the city of Troy, N. Y., in which occupation he continued for a term of seven years In 1852 he went to California and served as clerk at San Francisco during the greater part of two years, having in the meantime made a trip down the coast to Panama from California; he went to Oregon and there followed mining about one year, after which he started for Colville, but stopping at Snake river, returned to The Dalles in Oregon where he remained a short time, after which he went with the Oregon volunteers in a war against the Oregon, and Washington Territory Indians in the year 1855, and was out on that expedition some nine months. He then engaged as clerk in the Indian department under Isaac I. Stephens, in which occupation he continued until 1877. He then served as clerk a short time at The Dalles, after which he went to Walla Walla county with a small stock of goods, he being the second person engaged in the merchandise business there, and soon after bought out the business of the gentleman who had preceded him, and thus became the only mercantile man in that country. He was soon after commissioned the first postmaster at Walla Walla, and thus continued two years. In 1860 he formed a partnership with Capt. C. P. Higgins, and locating in the Hell Gate Valley, four miles above the present city of Missoula, engaged in the mercantile business, and has since continued in trade, their business now being conducted in the city of Missoula. In 1864 they built a saw mill and grist mill, and in 1866 finished the finest and most complete milling property in the valley. In 1862 gold was first discovered on Gold Creek, and they immediately built a store, put in a stock of goods, and there continued in trade until 1863, when they moved the goods to Deer Lodge and opened the first store in that town, continuing there until 1868, when they sold their interests at that place. Mr. Worden, in company with Messrs. Higgins & McCormick, has laid out about 100 acres in town lots as an addition to Missoula city. In 1883 he engaged in ditching and laying pipes for the purpose of supplying the city with water, which work he completed in 1884. In 1866 Mr. Worden was married to Miss Lucretia Miller, of Pennsylvania, by whom he has six children. He was elected to the Territorial Legislature, representing the counties of Missoula, Deer Lodge and Choteau in 1864, and was also elected County Commissioner, of which body he served as chairman. In 1875 he was again elected to the Territorial Legislature from Missoula county, and in 1880 was elected to the Legislative Council, and was the only Republican representative in that body.

P. R. YOUNG, Corvallis, born December 2, 1817, in Vermont, is a son of Phinias and Sarah Young, being the youngest of five children. In youth he clerked in a store and learned something of carpentering, and in April, 1850, he started for California via Panama, stopping four months at the latter place, where he and his brother built a house for the agent of the steamship company. Arrived in San Francisco, September 2, he remained in California until 1860, when he went to Portland, Ore., and thence to Lewiston, Idaho. On October 6, 1863, he left Elk City, Idaho, in company with Daniel Kinney, Matthew Adams and John Murphy, packers, a cook called Bill, and a train of thirteen animals, intending to go to Virginia City, M. T. Before reaching Clear Water they met the men who had murdered McGrudger, and consulted with them in reference to a camping place. (Vide Hist. of Vigilantes.) After having traveled about three weeks a violent snowstorm set in and they lost the trail and were obliged to cache their goods. On October 17 Adams, Murphy and Bill started out to find grain, leaving Young and Kinney behind with the animals, where they agreed to wait ten days. Young and Kinney having waited until after the expiration of the time agreed upon, and having in the meantime found the trail, took four animals and started on their journey, but after a day or two lost the trail, and in going around a point of rocks one horse went over a precipice, and two days were spent in trying to get their remaining animals out of this place. They were compelled to abandon them, and taking their guns, axes, provisions and blankets pushed on. The snow by this time was waist deep, it having snowed for fifteen days. At night they would dig a hole in the snow and in this build a fire, which was kept burning all night. On November 15, they cooked their last cake and ate a portion of it. Kinney went out to procure game, and they did not leave camp until nearly noon; soon after which they came across the newly-made trail of two men which they recognized as that of Adams and Murphy, and at once started after them, but after having traveled about a quarter of a mile with so little progress it became evident it would be impossible to overtake them. Several shots were fired but received no reply. After camping for the night Young and Murphy could hear the others chopping wood, and guns were fired again, but to no purpose. A note was written and placed on a stick and planted in the snow as a last hope of catching their attention. They then pushed forward, without food for five days, then the flour sack was scraped and from nine spoonfuls of lumps thus obtained, pots of porridge were made at intervals of five days to December 1, 1863. During this time they made but a few hundred yards per day. One night the snow fell so fast they were unable to keep a fire, and both were badly frozen, Kinney being so badly frozen he had no use of his hands, becoming so weak they could go no further, and Kinney being unable to rise, begged Young to push on and leave him behind. This Young refused to do, and for two days was barely able to collect firewood enough to keep the fire alive, but felt that he could not do so another day—his hands being so badly swollen that he could hardly hold the ax. He tied up a diary with his own and companion's names written plainly on the fly leaf and the date and their condition, together with a small bible, in a handkerchief, and hung this on the limb of a tree overhanging the trail. While meditating on their condition, Young heard voices, and by almost superhuman exertion, managed to rise up far enough to see out of the hole, and a glad surprise met his gaze. Murphy and Adams were coming down the trail, a moment more and Murphy threw off his blankets and jumped into the hole with them and was greeted with "God bless you, John, have you anything to eat?" A little coffee and a spoonful of boiled wheat was given them. Adams hurried down the mountains to where they had flour and returned with this by sundown, and as soon as the moon rose Adams started for Bitter Root valley, sixty or seventy miles away, for assistance. On arriving he was so exhausted he could not return, but Joe Blodgett and Fred Loveland started back with provisions. A sled was constructed with poles and a blanket and Kinney was drawn on this. Mr. Young's boots were taken off and the bones of his big toes found protruding through the flesh half an inch, and his legs to his knees were badly frozen and raw, and covered with blood; his feet were tied up in rags, and in this condition he hobbled along for two days. The party followed the trail and then abandoned it and went down into the canon, thinking the horses could be gotten to them, but the sick men could go no further. Blodgett leaving Loveland to take care of them, went on to find help—for five days they waited for help, and were three days again without anything to eat, when they were taken to the Bitter Root valley by A. Talman, Loveland and Brown. It had been forty days since they had lain down to sleep. Kinney lived but ten weeks. Mr. Young recovered and still lives to tell the tale. He is now engaged in the mercantile business at Corvallis.

CHAPTER XLII.

SILVER BOW COUNTY.

E. D. AIKEN, Butte, a native of Grafton, Vt., was born in 1838, moved to Massachusetts, thence, when twenty-five years old to Des Moines, Ia., came in 1864 to Montana. In 1866 visited Silver Bow, and in the fall went to Cable City, where he engaged with the M. & M. Tunnel Co., to run a tunnel under the Iron Mountain. He spent four and a half years in putting this tunnel 1,100 feet into the mountain. It is now being worked by the Cable Company. From 1871 to 1878 he engaged in mining in Little Moose Creek District; sold his interests there in 1878, came to Butte and began quartz mining. In 1880 he and Salton Cameron purchased the Butte Foundry, of which he became and still remains foreman. Mr. Aiken received a fair education at Leland Seminary, Vt. Taught school one winter in Deer Lodge valley; was school trustee and clerk of District No. 10. Served two sessions in the Territorial Legislature and one session in the Council. He was married April 20, 1882, to Miss Ada M. Rodgers, daughter of the late Capt. W. H. Rodgers, of Missoula. He is a member of the Blue Lodge and Chapter and of the Knights Templar and the acting Master of Mt. Moriah Lodge at Butte, and King in the Chapter and Prelate in the Knights Templar.

HIRAM A. AMSDEN, M. D., Butte, physician and surgeon, was born in Meigs Co., Ohio, in 1847; received his literary education in the Marietta and Ohio Wesleyan College; then took a regular course at the Miami Medical College of Cincinnati, and graduated in the class of 1874. He was engaged in the practice of his profession at Racine, Ohio, till 1881, when he came to Butte, and has since acquired a good practice here. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

D. H. ANDERSON, Butte, was born in Virginia, June 6, 1840; is a son of Samuel and Elizabeth Anderson. He was raised in Cedar Grove and Lexington, where he attended the Washington College, and afterward engaged as clerk in a merchandise store. Leaving home he went to San Francisco, Cal., soon after going to Santa Cruz county, where he erected and operated a flouring mill some three years, after which he engaged in copper mining about two years, and then turned his attention to saw-milling in Tulare Co., Cal., and also engaged in ranching, continuing in such business four years. He next turned his attention to lead smelting in the Cerro Gordo mines, and was thus occupied about two years; after which he built three flouring and one saw-mill in California, and was engaged in mill work in Virginia City, Nev. After which he went to Old Mexico, where he erected a large quartz mill. After remaining there about one year he returned to Idaho and built the Bonner and the Isler mills in Boise Co., Idaho, as also the Plowman Mill in the same county, and was engaged in mill building in Owyhee county. In 1878 he returned to San Francisco, where for some time he operated in stocks, and while there obtained patents on stamp mills, ore feeders and water mills; he was also engaged in building mills in the vicinity, and at intervals was employed in the machine shops in that city. In 1879 he came to Montana and has since made his headquarters at Butte City, devoting his time to the occupation of millwright and draughtsman, and took contract for building the Centennial mill at Butte, the Drumlumon mill at Marysville, the Gloster mills at Gloster and the Moulton mill and works, also having charge of the erection of the Montana Smelting Co's works. In 1881 he went to Marysville, Utah, and erected the Copper Belt Mining Co's mill, after which he went to St. Louis and remained some six months, experimenting on concentrators of his own patent. Returning to Butte his services were secured for the drafting of the plans for the erection of a concentrator, smelter and refining mills, of the Anaconda mills at Anaconda, and for the drafting of the Flint Creek flouring mills near New Chicago, Mont.

F. C. ANDERSON, Butte, was born in Prussia, Germany, in 1845. After leaving school he learned the trade of barber and surgeon. For several years he was employed on an ocean steamer running between Bremen and Baltimore. After leaving the steamer he started a barber shop in Baltimore, but in a few years moved to Chicago. Being burned out there he moved to Pioneer Gulch, M. T., in 1871; prospected one year, then opened a barber shop, and three years later removed to Helena; two years after, being burned out, he went to Deer Lodge. In 1877 came to Butte and opened barber shop and bath rooms; in 1881 leased the Centennial mill; in 1882 purchased interests in several mining claims, and also an interest in Silver Bow brewery, with Jacob VanGundy. Mr. Anderson carries on the saloon in the brewer's interest, having placed his barber shop in charge of other parties. He was married to Louise Clark Battinger, of Chicago, in 1869.

J. W. BAKER, Bonanza mine, Butte, was born in Whiteside Co., Ill., April 30, 1844. After leaving school, engaged in farming, came to Montana in 1863, and located at Alder Gulch; after mining one winter went to Silver Bow; in a short time left for Confederate Gulch, and mined one summer. He then went on the Sun River stampede, December, 1865; remained there until March; weather was so cold, being 40 degrees below, that men were frozen to death. Since that time Mr. Baker has followed prospecting and mining; visited every camp in the territory. He also engaged in lumbering in Oregon for three years, and mining in Nevada. In Alaska mined for short time. In 1882 he located at Butte. Since then he has been connected with various mines in the camp. At present he holds position as foreman at the Bonanza mines. Besides this he is interested in placer mining at Missoula Gulch.

THOMAS T. BAKER, deputy United States mineral surveyor, Butte, was appointed to this office in December, 1877. Mr. Baker is a native of Virginia; settled in Iowa in 1865, gradua'ed from Iowa College (Grinnell) in the class of 1874, and the year following came to Montana. During the winter of 1875-6 he taught school in the Ruby valley; moved to Virginia City the following winter, participated in the war against the Nez Perces in 1877; was elected first surveyor of Silver Bow county, which office he held up to the close of last year. He is a skilled mining engineer, having given this department of his profession much study, and proven it by extended practice.

A. W. BARNARD, Butte, arrived at this point in 1866. From that time until 1872 he was engaged in placer mining, and is now largely interested in different mines within the camp. He was born in 1846, in New York. When quite young moved to Wisconsin with parents, and at the age of nineteen started across the plains by way of old Ft. Laramie, Ft. Reno, Ft. Phil Kearney, and across the Big Horn. Arrived in Virginia City in July, and the following August proceeded to Butte. This was the year of the Phil Kearney massacre, and also the same year that Captain Bozeman established a ferry on the Yellowstone. In the train Mr. Barnard came with there were about forty-five persons, and the company was in charge of Peter Murray. While crossing the Rosebud, in the vicinity of Ft. Phil Kearney, Mr. Barnard had a narrow escape from being drowned. It was the custom to stretch a rope across the streams, and the men to wade. One of the party, an Irishman, attempted to wade, but losing his foothold, he clung to Mr. Barnard and came very near drowning both. Mr. Barnard was married first to Miss Anna Mary Henson, and secondly to Miss Jessie G. Addys, January 8, 1880. He is one of the pioneers of the camp and has taken a very prominent part in building it up to its present importance. (Vide History.)

A. T. BARNEY, Butte, was born at Boston, Lincolnshire, England, October 17, 1853. In 1879 he visited the United States, ranched in Idaho for some time, then returned to his native country, and re-visited the United States in July, 1882. He was assayer for the Morning Star Mining Co., at Leadville, for six months; remained a few months at Salt Lake, Utah territory; came to Montana in April, 1883, being employed since that time by the Alice Gold and Silver Mining Co., as assayer, merchant and book-keeper, respectively. Mr. Barney was a student of the Royal School of Mines from 1873 to 1876; traveled two years—in 1877-8—in Southern Africa; was assistant to engineer Brough Smythe in his prospecting tour for gold and silver in India; was for one year surveyor of coal mines in Staffordshire. He also served for a time as practical superintendent of the telephone company in Scotland, and also as Secretary of the English Electric Light Syndidate.

A. H. BARRETT, of the firm of Barrett & Jacky, Butte, was born at Litchfield, Grayson Co., Ky., January 25, 1834. After receiving a common school education he left for Texas, at the age of thirteen. Located at Marshall, Harrison Co., where he clerked for several years, then obtained the position of traveler for a drug house, in 1852, and sold goods until 1857. That year he removed to Shreveport, La., and clerked in a cotton house for two years; moved thence to St. Louis, and engaged in the gents' furnishing trade, on Olive street, but on the approach of the war closed out, and entered the employ of A. W. Sprole & Co., clothing merchants. In 1865 he resigned that position, came to Alder Gulch and engaged in placer mining for two years. Was then appointed private secretary to the Governor, also to the position of assistant auditor under John Ming. In 1868 he went to Radersburg, formed partnership with R. W. Minnus, and established a grocery house. After carrying on business for three years Mr. Barrett started a harness shop at Alder Gulch, in 1875. In 1877 he removed to Pony, where he carried on business for one year, then removed to Butte, formed partnership with Jacky, and opened a saddlery and harness shop on Park street, which business is being carried on under the firm name of Barrett & Jacky. The firm have also established a branch house at Anaconda. Mr. Barrett in 1865 was appointed chief clerk of the House of Representatives. This position he held until 1877. He served as member of the Legislature from Jefferson county, two years. Has held the office of Justice of the Peace eight years, two years in Silver Bow, two in Madison county, and four in Jefferson county. Mr. Barrett is also largely interested in the Shonbar mine, besides other valuable claims. He was married to Miss Elizabeth A. Brooke, at Helena, November 19, 1880.

JACOB BAUER, Butte, was born at Wittenberg, Germany, May 18, 1824; then learned the tanner's trade, and at the age of 26 years came to the United States, locating at Baltimore, Md., the first year. He moved to Pennsylvania, thence to Ohio, where he resided at Sandusky for 4 years; thence to Illinois, where he operated a hotel for 18 months; again moved to Minnesota, and engaged in farming for two years; next crossed the plains to Colorado, and resided at Russellville for three years, farming and stock raising. In 1863 he opened a boarding-house and saloon at Alder Gulch; then moved to Silver Bow as a miner; next engaged in the wood business, which he continued five years; operated a hotel at Silver Bow for one year; re-engaged in mining for six years, and then established his present saloon. Mr. Bauer was married at Sandusky, Ohio, in 1854, to Miss Johanna D. Myer.

ELIJAH S. BAXTER, Butte, was born in Friendship Township, Allegany Co., N. Y., April 2, 1837. He moved with his parents to Rock Island, Ill., in 1846, and there engaged in farming until 1859, when he commenced his trans-Mississippi travels. From 1860 to 1863 he mined at Pike's Peak. Leaving Colorado in 1863 for Montana, he arrived at Nevada, Madison Co., in the fall of 1864. In 1865 he and his partner took up a ranch in the Gallatin, subsisted on potatoes and beaver for a few weeks, and returned to Alder Gulch. In the spring of 1866 he visited the East Gallatin, and put in the first crop in what is now known as the Grogan Ranch, near Bozeman. In 1867, while en route to the Salmon River country, he stopped at Homestake Gulch, engaged in the express business there, soon after moved a mill into the gulch, and in 1867-8 operated a pack-train there. About this time he established a freight line between Helena and Benton, and in 1870, between Helena and Corinne. From 1871 to 1874 he was in the employ of the Overland Stage Co., with the exception of the few months in 1871 during which he was sick. From 1874 to 1876 he was engaged in freighting between Bozeman and Butte, or farming in the Gallatin. From 1876 to 1879 he filled wood and lumber contracts for Butte parties, and has since that time devoted his attention to vegetable farming, dairying, and the wood business. His marriage with Miss Elizabeth D. Hamilton took place at Butte, April 9, 1877.

DR. G. W. BEAL, proprietor of the Centennial Hotel, Butte, came to Alder Gulch in July, 1864, and mined there until January 1, 1865. For eleven years prior to taking up his residence at Butte (which city he has been a resident of for nine years), he practiced medicine at German Gulch: represented Deer Lodge in the Legislature in 1875–6; was elected mayor of Butte in 1881, and has been identified with the development of the camp since 1876. The Doctor was born in Harrison Co., Ohio, in 1828, but moved with his parents to Athens Co., Ohio, in 1835–6, where he was educated. He followed a general course of study at the Ohio University, for three years, read medicine for the same length of time with Dr. Carpenter, graduated from the Ohio Medical College, Cincinnati, in 1863, and entered on the practice of his profession at Athens, the same year. In 1857 he was married to Miss S. J. Townsend of Belmont, Ohio, a sister of the late Secretary of State. They are the parents of four children, namely: Perry H. Beal, now connected with the Centennial Hotel; Mrs. Dora Bateman, Mrs. Ella Newkirk and Miss May Beal.

J. FRANK BECK, miner and real estate dealer, Butte, was born in Oconee Co., Ga., in 1834. He received an academic and business education; moved to Kentucky in 1858, where he resided until 1861. He taught school in his native State and in Kentucky for seven years. From 1861 to 1864 he was engaged in the mines of Colorado. In the spring of 1864 he came to Alder Gulch, and mined in the West until December, when he moved to the Butte camp. In 1870 he and Hugh T. Patton discovered the Vipond, including Quartz Hill, which caused the stampede of that year. He was interested, with Thos. Rutter and other discoverers, in the Highland lead, and owned 1,000 feet of the gulch. He has not been actively engaged in mining since 1875, although interested in the mines. Mr. Beck was fortunate in his investment in real estate in Butte, and has operated successfully in that line for several years. He served as deputy clerk and recorder under Caleb Irvine; deputy sheriff under James McAndrews; deputy county treasurer under Lou Coleman (was connected with that office five or six years), and was city marshal, treasurer and collector of Butte. He was married at Butte, in the spring of 1877, to Miss Agnes Reid, daughter of Matthew Reid, of Michigan.

W. G. BENHAM, Parrot Silver & Copper Company, Butte, was born in Ansonia, Conn., in 1857. After receiving a common school education, he obtained a position as bookkeeper in Wallace & Sons' extensive manufacturing establishment. In 1881 Mr. Benham came west and located at Butte, M. T.; was appointed bookkeeper for the Parrot Silver & Copper Company, which position he holds at present date.

GEORGE BENJAMIN, Butte, was born in Du Page Co., Ill., November 13, 1838, and there received a practical education. He moved to Iowa in 1857; was elected treasurer of Shelby county in 1859, and subsequently recorder of that division of the State. In 1864 he came to Jefferson City, M. T., where he was engaged in prospecting and saw milling for about six years, and in freighting for four years. In 1876–7 he mined at Elkhorn; came to Butte in 1877, established a livery stable, engaged in freighting and horse raising, and had charge of the lumber yards in that city. In 1881 he passed five months in Beaverhead county, returned to the vicinity of Butte, where he is now engaged in ranching and horse raising.

WM. BIRDSELL, Silver Bow, was born in Lincoln, Engand, April 21, 1820. In 1865 he came to America, going to Salt Lake City, but only remained until 1866, when he came to Montana, locating the ranch where he at present resides. He has 220 acres under fence, on which he raises excellent crops of hay and grain; he also has quite a large number of cattle.

REV. S. C. BLACKISTON, pastor Episcopal church, Butte, was born near Chestertown, Kent Co., Md., January 13, 1846; son of Wm. Henry and Hannah Mariah Blackiston. He was but six years old when his father died. His mother soon after rented the farm and moved to Middletown, Del., where Mr. Blackiston remained until about twelve years of age. He lived one year at Lock Haven, Pa.; attended school two years at Milton, Pa.; returned to Middletown and was soon after sent to Washington college, where he took a three years' course; accepted a position as teacher in a private family near Baltimore, serving in that capacity one year, during which time he devoted his spare moments to the study of medicine under the supervision of an eminent physician. At the close of the war and the return of his brother from service in the army, they together engaged in farming on the old homestead two years. He then went to New Orleans, and soon after to St. Louis; after several months proceeded to Columbia, Mo., and taught in the public schools for four months; accepted a position in the male department of the seminary at Monroe City, where he continued one year; was a student in the Theological Seminary near Milwaukee, Wis., one year. In 1869 he applied and was admitted by Bishop Robison, of Missouri, as a candidate for holy orders in the Episcopal church, and in July, 1872, was ordained by said bishop and given charge of the missions of Marysville and Savannah, Mo., where he erected a church and discharged the duties of his calling eighteen months. In 1873 he was advanced to the priesthood and appointed to the charge of the church at Gracetown, Col.; remained six months, and was sent to Austin, Nevada. Upon his arrival he found only two members of his church, and for some time held services in the court house; remained there about five years, during which time he erected a fine church building at a cost of $40,000, which sum, with the exception of $5,000, was raised in the town, the members numbering 40. From Austin he went to Toledo, O., where for a time he had charge of Grace church, and in 1879 came to Montana, made his headquarters at Helena, visited the numerous towns and mining camps in the vicinity and as far north as Fort Benton, doing missionary work; while thus engaged traveled by coach in one year a distance of 7,000 miles. In the fall of 1880 he gave up general missionary work, and locating at Fort Benton, became the first resident clergyman of that town, built a church, and held services. While located there he visited and held services at Forts Shaw and Assiniboine. In 1875 Mr. Blackiston came to Butte, where, in 1881, he erected the finest church in that city, and where he still resides, devoted to his duties. He was married near Columbia, Mo., July 13, 1868, to Miss Margaret Monroe.

O. P. BLAINE, Butte, Superintendent of the Silver Bow Water Works, a native of Ohio, came to Montana in 1864. He passed the winter of 1864–5 at Virginia City. He visited Butte early in 1865, engaged at once in mining here, and made the camp his permanent home. In September, 1881, he was elected Superintendent of the Silver Bow Water Works, to which position he has been elected annually since that time.

HENRY C. BODLEY, Butte, under-sheriff of Silver Bow county since December, 1882, was born in the city of Baltimore, Md., where he was educated by private tutor. He removed to Nebraska in 1857 and engaged in the forwarding and commission business at Omaha. In 1868 he went to Salt Lake City and was interested in mining in Utah until 1879, when he came to Butte, M. T., and the following year was appointed deputy clerk and recorder of Silver Bow county, holding that position until December 18, 1882, when he was appointed under-sheriff. In the election of 1882 he was a candidate on the Republican ticket for the office of Clerk and Recorder, and was defeated by only 150 majority. During his residence in Salt Lake City he was deputy clerk of the district court one term.

GUSTAVUS BOGK, Butte, was born in Germany, January 5, 1826; came to the United States in 1847, locating in New York city; removed thence to Milwaukee, Wis., and operated a bakery three years; followed the same business at Oshkosh, also being proprietor of a leading hotel until 1870, when he came to Montana, locating in Helena; mined for four years; was at Deer Lodge until 1877, when he became a resident of Butte, and for a time was occupied in mining, after which he turned his attention to the restaurant business and is now proprietor of one of the finest restaurants in the city. Mr. Bogk was married August 3, 1847, to Miss Margaret Schipman. They have five children: Frederick, Annie, Eva, Rosa, and Emma.

E. L. BONNER & CO., wholesale and retail dealers in dry goods, clothing, etc., Butte, is one of the oldest and most extensive mercantile firms in the country. The members are, E. L. Bonner, J. H. Robertson and M. J. Connell. The Butte House was established in 1874, with M. J. Connell resident partner and manager. The company's building here, 72x135 feet, was erected in 1882 at a cost of $50,000. They carry an average stock worth $250,000. E. L. Bonner is one of the pioneer merchants of the Territory, and is the senior partner of the firm of E. L. Bonner & Co., of Deer Lodge City, where he resides. He is also senior partner of the largest general store of the Territory, that of Eddy, Hammond & Co., Missoula. (Vide Gen. Hist.)

J. M. BOWES, Butte, was born in Washington Co., Me., in 1825; was educated and learned trade of carpenter and cabinet maker, and carried on furniture business in that county and also at Hope, Me., for several years. In 1856 he migrated to California and located in the Timbuctoo mountains. For a period of three years Mr. Bowes was employed as carpenter and in a lumber yard. In 1863 he removed to Virginia City, Nev. One year later went to Ione, Nevada Co., and started a restaurant and lodging house, general store, stable and post office, which he carried on for five years, then moved goods to White Pine; built and opened a store there, and in the spring of 1870 removed to Helena, thence after a short time to Deer Lodge, where he built a large number of houses, among them being the residence of Edward Larabie and the Presbyterian church. After five years he removed to Butte; began working as carpenter and contracting for houses; purchased four lots, one on which his present place of business stands for $135. Started furniture business in wooden building which has since been torn down, on Main street, the stock being hauled from Corinne, Utah, by team. In 1881 Mr. Bowes built his present brick furniture warehouse and three adjoining buildings. He now devotes his attention to the cabinet business, which he carries on in connection with his extensive furniture warehouse and salesrooms. Mr. Bowes was married April 17, 1878, to Mrs. Sprague, of Union, Me.

JAMES R. BOYCE was born October 11, 1837, New Russellville, Ky. His father, Richard Boyce, was a native of Virginia; removed at a very early period to Kentucky, and settled in Logan county; was prominent in its local affairs, having filled the offices of Justice of the Peace, Judge of County Court and Sheriff. His mother was also a native of Virginia, a woman of strong intellect and deep Christian devotion. At the age of eleven years the subject of this biography was apprenticed to a merchant of Russellville, Ky., William Wright, from whom he learned the details of mercantile work and accountant, and remained in his employ until he arrived at the age of twenty, when he married the daughter of his employer, Maria L. Wright, in the year 1836, the mother of all his children. This lady died at Helena, Mont., in 1872. James R. Boyce has been all his life engaged in active business, earnest in his friendships and giving much attention to the local enterprises of the sections in which he has lived. He was once, without his solicitation, elected by the citizens of Lewis and Clarke county, a member of the Legislature, and on the first ballot elected Speaker of that body, but never having indulged in political aspirations or sought any political office; in the social relations always taking an active and prominent position. Having at the age of twenty-two united with the Masonic fraternity, he became deeply interested in its beautiful ceremonial and sublime moral precepts, and was honored from an early age with official position, having during his life filled all the minor offices in Lodge, Chapter, Council and Commandery, also eleven years as Master of different Lodges, one year as Deputy Grand Master and one year Grand Master of Montana, also four years as High Priest of a Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, five years as T. I. M. of Council of Royal and Select Masters and five or six years as Eminent Commander of Knights Templar. He participated in the early struggles of founding new Territories, new churches and new Masonic bodies. Life with him has been an earnest struggle, ever standing forth as the defender of right against wrong, and virtue against vice, too pronounced in his opinions to always succeed, never compromising his principles for the sake of policy. He united himself with the Lost Cause in 1861-65, was driven to seek the far west during that struggle, and thus became identified with Montana from its organization and participated in founding that beautiful queen of the mountains, removing to that Territory in 1864. Major Boyce was married the second time in 1876, to Ada F. Wiemann nee Jackson, who is also of old Virginia stock.

J. E. BRANSCOM, P. O. Divide, born in Perry Co., Mo., in 1853; learned the printer's trade there, and in 1866 moved to California, where he was engaged in mining until 1878, when he came to Montana. Here he was engaged in mining and other enterprises until 1880, when he established his present farm and stock ranch. Mr. B. was married to Miss R. A. Parker. They are the parents of one child.

P. J. BROPHY, of the firm of Casey & Brophy, Butte, was born in Carlow, Ireland, in 1855. After leaving school he engaged in the grocery business at Dublin, holding the position of salesman in a store until 1877, when he emigrated to the United States, located at Chicago, and was there engaged in the spice business for six months. During that fall he went to Evanston, Wy. T., and held the position of salesman for three years in the grocery business. In 1881 he removed to Butte and engaged in the grocery and men's furnishing business with George H. Casey.

JOSEPH BROUGHTON, Walkerville, born at Bradford, England, in 1832, was brought up in woolen clothmaking from his early childhood. In 1867 he came to the United States, moved to Utah October 16, 1867, with his family. (His son was drowned in the Jordan river, Utah, at the age of 21 years.) Was for two years in the employ of John Sharp & Co.; then as waresman in employ of W. S. Godbe & Co., in Salt Lake city, fifteen months; next a clerk in Salt Lake city postoffice one year; then again in employ of W. S. Godbe & Co. one year; spent two years with Mansfield, Atchison & Stell, in the liquor business, when he moved to Rush Lake, Utah, about 1875, and was engaged in merchandising four years. He revisited England with his wife, and on returning to Rush Lake sold out and came to Montana September 20, 1880, opening a store at Walkerville in connection with Walker Brothers, of Salt Lake city. He is a stockholder in the Alice Gold and Silver Mining Company. The mercantile business was conducted under the name of J. Broughton & Co. until May 10, 1883, when it was sold out to Caplice, McCune & Co., of which firm he became a member, and continued manager of the business. This firm graded what is known as the Anaconda Branch of the Union Pacific railroad. Mr. Broughton has been postmaster at Walkerville since the office was established.

HORACE T. BROWN, manager of the Butte Miner, was born in Summit Co., O., July 16, 1844. His parents, Horace and Mary D. (Peck) Brown, the former a Virginian and latter a native of Pennsylvania, being early settlers of Ohio. The family moved to western Ohio, where Mr. Brown, Sr., died. Mrs. Brown and her family returned to Hudson. There Mr Brown attended school for some time, and subsequently worked in the Maze mills at Butler, Ind. He moved to Newaygo Co., Mich., in 1861, where he entered the office of the Republican, then published by James H. Maze. Leaving that office in July, 1863, he enlisted in the 10th Michigan cavalry, and served with that command until November, 1865. The command was mustered out at Jackson, Mich., on the date mentioned, when he returned to Ohio and entered partnership with Mr. Maze in Mill building. In April, 1867, he left Ohio en route to Benton, arriving at that post after a journey of 60 days. Proceeding to Virginia city, he entered the office of the Post, then edited by Capt. Mills. In 1868 he visited Helena and took a position in the Herald office. In July, 1868, he revisited Ohio. Remaining there a short time, he began his return journey to Montana, and entering the office of the New Northwest, took part in issuing that journal July 4, 1869. In July, 1874, he moved from Deer Lodge to Virginia city, where he was manager of the Montanian, then edited by Henry M. Blake. In April, 1876, he came to Butte, and with James H. Mills and Harry Kessler inaugurated the Butte Miner, issuing the first number June 1, 1876. Since that time Mr. Brown has been connected with the Miner, and when the present stock company was organized he was appointed business manager. He was married October 16, 1872, to Miss Mary E. Rose, of Edgerton, daughter of Justus O. Rose. They are the parents of two children.

JAMES BROWN, of the firm of Kirkendall & Brown, Butte, came to the territory in 1866, and for over 15 years had been associated with his present partner in the freight business between Utah and the Canadian Northwest territory; also from Kansas City, Omaha, and other points to Montana. In 1870 he organized an extensive freight service, which has grown annually up to the present time—increasing since the advent of the railroads. So that in addition to headquarters' office at Butte, an important branch office is located at Helena. In 1872 Mr. Brown had charge of an outfit to protect the Northern Pacific railroad surveyors, which necessitated numerous battles with the redskins, in one of which the party abandoned their wagons. During the Nez Perces raid he had to abandon his train at Falling Rock, and again while en route to Benton had a train stolen by the Indians. Mr. Brown is a native of Illinois, from which state he went to Kansas in 1850, thence to Colorado, Utah, and to Montana in 1866.

ROBERT BURDESS, P. O. Divide, born in Durham Co., England, December 22, 1831, came to America in 1853 and engaged in mining and other enterprises in West Virginia and Ohio until 1855, when he visited California. There and in Idaho he mined until 1866, when he moved to Montana, where he was engaged in several enterprises throughout the territory until 1877, when he took up his present farm and stock ranch. This tract of 320 acres is under fence, claims substantial buildings, and is one of the choicest farms in the Big Hole country. Here is a living spring which never freezes, supplying his herds with the finest water the year round. Mr. Burdess was married in 1867 to Mrs. Katner.

W. BUTCHER, proprietor of Grand Central Hotel, Butte city, came to the territory in 1882, and is interested in the mining business, among the leading mines with which he is connected being the "Poser," "Andy Johnson" and "Bonanza"—all of them now in operation. Mr. Butcher was born in Wirt Co., W. Va., in 1851. Leaving West Virginia he came direct to Butte, arriving May 9, 1882. John W. Butcher, brother of the proprietor of the Grand Central Hotel, was born March 27, 1847, and came from West Virginia to Butte in 1882. He is interested in mining properties with his brother. Was married to Miss Margaret Jane Boggs, of West Virginia, and has two children.

JOHN D. BUTLER, Butte, was born at Madison, Wis., February 5, 1834. After leaving school he went to Port Huron, Mich., opened a saloon, which he carried on for three years, when he migrated to the Black hills, where he had charge of a liquor store. He returned to Chicago, and thence, on May 8, 1875, removed to Indianapolis. In 1879 he started the Mint Saloon, which he sold out after a year and a half, and purchased the Little Elite.

HARWOOD BUTLER, Butte, was born in Vermont, November 22, 1818. In 1834 he removed with his parents, James B. and Erispa (Morgan) Butler, to Ohio, thence, in 1837, to Wisconsin, where he followed lead-mining and smelting until April, 1863. At this time he visited Colorado, made a stay of some months there, and came to Alder Gulch in September of the same year. Here he mined until 1866, when he went to Grizzly Gulch. In May, 1867, he moved to the Salmon river mines, but in August of that year returned to Butte, and mined in that camp and vicinity until 1876, when he visited the Black Hills. In June, 1877, he revisited the States; returned to Butte in June, 1878, since which time he has been engaged mining and prospecting in that neighborhood. He served in company I, 16th Wisconsin volunteer infantry, from October, 1861, to February, 1863; was wounded several times, captured at Holly Springs, Miss., paroled, and discharged at St. Louis on account of disability.

SALTON CAMERON, Butte, was born at Kingston, Canada in 1836; emigrated to California in 1858, where he worked as millwright for several years. In 1863 he moved to Nevada, where he worked alternately at mining and at his trade for two years. He came to Montana in 1865, and located for a short time at Helena. During the summer of that year he, with some others, discovered what is known as the Snow-Shoe and the Deadwood Gulches, in Deer Lodge Co., where they worked in placer mining and prospecting until the fall. Returning to Helena, he worked at the carpenter trade during the winter of 1865-66. Between 1866 and 1868 he built the Judge Turnley ten-stamp mill, the Columbia Company's twenty-stamp mill, the Whitlatch twenty-stamp mill, and the Alice Blue Cloud twenty-stamp mill, all in Lewis and Clarke Co. In the summer of 1868 he built the twenty-stamp Cable Mill. In the spring of 1869 he bought a one-third interest in the Atlantic Cable Mine, from which he took out ore to the value of $250,000, and then sold the mine. In 1875 he located the Pyrennees Gold Mine at Georgetown, Deer Lodge Co., and in 1880 built on it the five-stamp mill which operated on the ore with good results. In 1881, in company with W. W. Williams, he located the Southern Cross gold mine, which they bonded in 1883 for $30,000. In 1879 he discovered the Cameron silver mine, in Deer Lodge Co. He owns an interest in the Balkan silver mine, and in several other promising leads. In 1878 he built a good residence at Butte City, and in 1879 he built a large tenement house on east Park street, and bought another house in Butte. He owns a half interest in the Butte Foundry, with E. D. Aiken as partner and foreman. He held the office of notary public for several years at Cable City, and was postmaster at that place for two years. He became a citizen of the United States in 1875.

JOHN CAPLICE, merchant, Butte City. (Vide General and Local History).

T. M. CARR, Butte, was born in Albany Co., N. Y., in 1847. Engaged in farming in Green county until of age, when he began selling patents through the states. In the spring of 1867 he traveled west through the various states and territories; mined at Sweet Water; in 1868 came to Montana and mined in quartz at Sterling, then left for Bozeman, where he built a stable and engaged in the livery business. In the spring of 1870 he went on the Cedar Creek stampede. After mining several years he went to Deer Lodge. Here he worked as carpenter for six months, then moved to Butte, still following the same trade for one year, when he engaged in hunting and prospecting until 1876. That fall he returned to Butte. In a short time he took a trip through Utah, Washington, Oregon, etc., looking for a location, accompanied by his family, and traveled over 2,100 miles. Mr. Carr, not finding suitable location, returned to Butte and worked as carpenter until 1881, when he purchased a stable from Ed. Stoner and engaged in the livery business, which he carries on at the present time. He was married to Miss Church, of Bozeman, in 1869.

JOHN J. CARROLL, Butte, was born at Rochester, N. Y., in 1859. He received a common school education, removed to Greensburg, Penn., and was engaged in taking care of stock, until 1879; then came to Montana, locating at Butte, and working in the Dexter mill eight months; resigned position and took charge of the amalgamating department in the Moulton mill, in which position he is now serving.

GEORGE H. CASEY, of Casey & Brophy, Butte, was born in Ontario, Canada, in 1852. After completing his education he left, in 1876, for California; was employed in San Francisco and Sacramento in the clothing business for one year, when he removed to Echo, Utah, where he clerked for Beckwith & Lander. After remaining one year, he went to Evanston, Wy. T., and held a position as salesman with Beckwith, Quinn & Co., until 1881, when he removed to Butte, and formed partnership with Mr. Brophy, in the grocery and gents' furnishing goods business. The firm began business in a frame building, in June, 1881. Removed, in 1882, to their present brick on the corner of Broadway and Main.

J. W. CHAPMAN, Butte, born in Kentucky, in 1840; moved to Missouri with parents in 1841; resided there until March, 1864, when he moved to Illinois, and to Idaho in the summer of 1864, arriving at Boise City August 10. In May, 1867, he settled in Montana, operated his placers in Sky High Gulch until 1868; moved to Dry Gulch in 1869, and thence with the stampeders to Cedar Creek. In 1869–70 he ran a saddle and pack train. He has been engaged since that time in farming and freighting, and now carries on the transfer line at Butte City, where, with the exception of one year, he has resided since 1877. He was married at Helena, in 1877, to Miss Phœbe Orr, daughter of Sample H. Orr, a pioneer of the territory. Mr. Chapman belongs to the I. O. O. F., and has been a staunch member of the I. O. G. T. since 1869, and always active in the temperance cause.

J. CHAUVIN, Butte, was born in Sherburne, Vt., November 27, 1848, where he was reared and educated. For ten years he was an enterprising merchant in Burlington, Vt.; came to Butte, M. T., in June, 1881, since which time he has been identified with the city in merchandise, mining, and as real estate broker. Fully believing Butte the best and largest mining camp in the world, he has spared no expense in bringing the same to the notice of capitalists in the East and abroad, and the prominence which the silver and copper mines of this district have attained in the East are due in a great measure to his untiring efforts. He is also an owner in several mining claims in and about Butte. The principal one is the Kentucky, situate a half mile east of the famous Lexington. This mine (Kentucky) has had recently erected a commodious shaft house and hoisting apparatus. The rich silver ore runs from 48 to 437½ oz. silver, and 18 to 35 per cent. copper. This mine promises to be one of the bonanzas of the camp. Mr. Chauvin has a collection of 500 mineral specimens of representative Montana ores and other natural curiosities. He was married December, 1870, to Miss Carrie Germain, of Burlington, Vt. They have two children.

—W. A. CLARK, Butte, was born in 1839, near Connellsville, Fayette Co., Pa. He attended public school in winter and worked on his father's farm in summer until fourteen years of age, when he entered Laurel Hill Academy. In 1856 his father moved to Iowa, and there W. A. Clark engaged in farm work one season and taught school the winter following. He then attended an academy at Birmingham one term and spent one term at the university at Mt. Pleasant, where he began the study of law, which he prosecuted two years. In 1859 and 1860 he taught school in central Missouri. In 1862 he drove a team across the plains to the South Park in Colorado, and worked in the quartz mines at Central City until the spring of 1863, when, hearing of the discovery of gold on Grasshopper creek, he determined to emigrate thither. After sixty-five days' travel with an ox team he arrived at Bannack on the 7th of July. On the night of his arrival he joined a stampede and secured a placer claim on Horse Prairie, which he operated successfully until the close of the season, and there he earned his first thousand dollars, which was the basis of the vast fortune he has since accumulated. Winter coming on he bought a mule team and went to Salt Lake City and loaded with provisions, which he sold on his return to Bannack in January, at extraordinary high prices. On the opening of spring he resumed mining and continued until fall. Selling out his interest in his placer mines, he returned to Salt Lake City and purchased a variety of merchandise, which he had freighted to Virginia City, and there he spent the winter of 1864–5. During this winter flour became very scarce, and sold at from one dollar to one dollar and a half per pound. A riot followed and all the flour that could be found was seized and distributed. Many persons lived on meat and others on beans alone for some time. In the spring following Mr. Clark opened a general merchandise store at Blackfoot, then a new mining camp. On his way to that place he crossed the Mullan Pass in the first stage coach that crossed the Rocky mountains in northern Montana. In the following fall, finding the markets of the Territory short of tobacco, he sold out his store and rode horseback to Boise City, Idaho, at which place and at Idaho City he purchased several thousand pounds of that article, at a cost of about a dollar and a half per pound. He bought a team and drove it through to Helena, where he arrived in January and disposed of his stock of tobacco at from four to six dollars per pound. In February, 1867, he joined the stampede to Elk creek, 100 miles west of Helena. He engaged a pack train to convey a stock of merchandise to that new district, and there he sold goods until the fall of that year, when, selling out his store, he rode to Walla Walla, and thence went on an extended trip to the Pacific coast, going by steamer from Portland to San Francisco, returning to Portland by stage from Oroville, and thence to Montana, with a stock of goods. In October, 1867, he went by stage to Fort Benton, where he embarked on a Mackinaw, and after an adventurous voyage of thirty-five days, reached Sioux City, Ia. After a short visit with his parents in the latter State he set out to "see the sights" in the great cities of Chicago, Boston, New York and Philadelphia, and passed a few pleasant days at his old home in Pennsylvania. Thence he went to St. Louis and bought a few car loads of meats, which he shipped to Mississippi to cover expenses while obtaining a glimpse of the "Sunny South." Spring returning he started for Montana again, and at North Platte, then the terminus of the Union Pacific Railroad, took passage in a stage coach for Helena. The route lay through Denver and Salt Lake City, and the trip occupied thirty-five days' time, and was attended with much discomfort. Upon arriving at Helena he entered into a sub contract to carry the mails for four years from Missoula to Walla Walla via Pen d 'Oreille Lake, a distance of about four hundred miles. This service he and his associate had performed, and meanwhile he made frequent trips on horseback over the line, and twice in winter, when portions of the journey had to be performed on snow-shoes. Mr. Clark made his home at Helena during 1867-8, where, in addition to his mail contract business, he was engaged in buying and selling gold dust, merchandise, cattle and grain. In the autumn of 1868 he again went east, and in New York formed a co-partnership with Mr. R. W. Donnell, for the purpose of engaging in the wholesale mercantile trade in Montana. They shipped a large stock via the Missouri river, and opened a wholesale house at Helena. In the spring of 1870 it was deemed advisable to move this business, and consolidate with a large house owned by Mr. Donnell, at Deer Lodge, at which time Mr. S. E. Larabie was admitted into the firm, and a banking house was also established by the firm. In August of that year they sold out their mercantile business and erected a banking house, and to this business gave their exclusive attention. In 1872 they organized a national bank, of which Mr. Clark was elected president. During the first years of its existence the purchase and shipment of placer gold dust formed a leading and lucrative feature of the business, amounting each season to over a million of dollars. In 1878 this bank surrendered its charter and the business was continued under the previous firm style, with a branch bank established at Butte City, where they built an elegant and commodious brick banking house, Mr. Clark being the resident partner and manager. In May, 1884, Messrs. Clark and Larabie purchased the interest of Mr. Donnell in all their Montana business. In 1872 Mr. Clark turned his attention to the quartz mines of the Butte district, at which time he purchased an interest in the Original, the Colusa, the Mountain Chief and Gambetta mines. His experience in quartz mines in Colorado probably led him to this. The winter following he spent at the School of Mines, of Columbia College, New York city, studying assaying and analysis, and the knowledge there acquired proved afterward of great service in his extensive mining and reduction experience. During 1873 and 1874 he began the exploration of the Colusa and Gambetta copper mines, shipping the ore by wagons to Corinne, thence by rail to San Francisco and Baltimore. Silver mines in the Butte district were first discovered in 1875, and Mr. Clark began prospecting for and purchasing mines of this character. In the spring of 1876 he furnished the means to complete the Dexter Mill, the first successful silver stamp mill operated in the camp, now owned and operated by him. In May, 1879, he organized the Colorado and Montana Smelting Company, now grown to be one of the largest plants of the kind in the West, and of which he is yet part owner and vice-president. In 1875 Mr. Clark located the Moulton mine and in the autumn of 1880 he incorporated a company and arranged with a syndicate to sink a three compartment shaft to the depth of 800 feet, place therein Cornish pumps, build suitable hoisting works, with large pumping and hoisting engines, and a complete dry crushing and chloridizing forty-stamp silver mill. This was all done at a cost of about $400,000, and the works are now in constant operation. The mine is a steady dividend payer, and one of the leading properties of the district, Mr. Clark being the principal stockholder and president of the company. He is also president of the Original Mining Company, which, since its formation, has paid over one hundred thousand dollars in dividends. He is likewise part owner of the following valuable silver and copper mines, some of which are yielding handsomely, viz. Gambetta, Piccolo, Modoc, Travona (the first producer of silver ores in the district), Ella, Ancient, Black Rock, Elm Orlu, Cameron, 4th of July, Gold Hill, Hope, Late Acquisition, Morning Star, Steward, Little Treasure, Limitation, Fashion, Burt, Barsgee, Original Butte, Gagnon, Wm. Penn, Pennsylvania, Right Bower, Ringgold, Saqua, Seymour, Spruce, Diamond, North Pacific, Burlington, Self Riser, Nettie, Fredonia, Silver Safe, Pollock and Gold Flint. He is sole owner of Clark s Colusa, Neptune, Fraction, Missing Link, Mountain Chief, Joseph and Mt. Moriah. Mr. Clark is now one of the largest producers of copper in Montana. At his Colusa mine he is hoisting over 200 tons of ore daily, that averages over 20 per cent. copper. He has extensive concentrating, calcining and smelting works connected at a short distance with the mine by an automatic tramway, and his plant is a model of perfection for convenient and economic treatment of copper ore. He has obtained government patents for all his mining properties, and in their development and operation he gives employment to several hundred men. Mr. Clark is a one-third owner of the wonderful Shoshone Falls on Snake river, Idaho. He has also a large interest in the Water and Electric Light companies, and is the owner of large real estate interests at Butte. He is constantly engaged in building new works and in enlarging and improving those already established. In 1876 Mr. Clark was appointed by the Governor of Montana State Orator to represent the Territory at the Centenial Exhibition at Philadelphia, and his address on that occasion was considered a masterly production. In 1877 he was elected Grand Master of Masons in Montana. In 1878 he received a commission from the government as Major of the Butte Battalion of Volunteers in the movement against Chief Joseph. Proper reference is made to this in the history of the Nez Perces invasion which appears in this volume. In 1883 he was elected delegate to the Constitutional Convention which assembled at Helena in January, 1884. Of this convention he was made president and received many encomiums for the ability displayed in that position. In 1885 he was appointed by President Arthur one of the commissioners to the World's Industrial and Cotton Exposition at New Orleans, where he spent several months in the interests of the Territory. In March, 1869, Mr. Clark was married to Miss Kate LeStauffer, of Connellsville, Pa., and on the morning of the wedding-day he left with his bride for Montana. Their first child, Mary, was born in January, 1870, at Helena. Their next child, Charles, was born at Deer Lodge in November, 1871. In May, 1875, twin girls, Jessie and Katie, were born at Deer Lodge. One of these, Jessie, died in April, 1878, and to perpetuate her memory Mr. Clark afterward erected a very handsome memorial window in the chancel of St. John's Episcopal church at Butte City. This he had painted by a celebrated artist in Europe. Their next son, William A., was born at Deer Lodge in March, 1877, and their youngest child, Francis Paul, in January, 1880, in the City of Paris, France. Mrs. Clark received an academic education and is a lady of great refinement and intellectual qualities. In the autumn of 1878 Mr. Clark's family visited Pennsylvania, and soon afterward he joined them there, and with his wife and two eldest children, sailed for Europe. They placed these children in school at Paris and in the spring following returned to the United States, Mr. Clark going to Montana and his wife to Pennsylvania for the younger children and returned with them to France, where Mr. Clark joined them the following winter and remained with them until spring, when he returned to his business in Montana. The winter following he rejoined them at Paris, from which place the family went to Nice, on the Mediterranean. There they left the younger children under the care of friends, and taking the two eldest ones, they visited the principal cities of Italy. Returning to Paris for a month, they went in April to Dresden, Germany, where they placed the eldest children in schools. Mr. Clark then visited Leipsic, Frankfort, Bingen, the Rheingan, and returned to Montana. In January, 1882, he crossed the Atlantic, and was met at London by his wife, and on their way to Dresden they visited Strasburg, Baden-Baden and Stuttgart. After a short visit with the family they set out for the Orient, stopping at Prague, Vienna, Buda-Pesth, and following down the valley of the Danube, visited Bucharest in Roumania and Varna on the Black Sea. Their sojourn at Constantinople was full of interest. Thence they journeyed to Smyrna and as far as the ruins of Ephesus in Asia Minor. Returning, they stopped at Athens, examined the Acropolis and the many ruins in that classic city, ascended Mount Pentelicus, saw the famous battlefield of Marathon, Mount Parnassus, and other places of renown in ancient Greece. Thence they visited the island of Corfu in the Adriatic sea, landed at Brindisi, revisited Rome and Milan, stopped at Verona and crossed the Alps by the Brunner Pass to Innspruck, and thence to Munich. From here they returned to Dresden and their family by Nurnberg and Carlsbad. Soon afterward they spent some days at Berlin. Leaving his family in Dresden, Mr. Clark returned to the United States, visiting, on his way to Liverpool, Hanover and Cologne. In the autumn following Mr. Clark's family left Germany and went to Switzerland, where they passed some weeks at Lucerne, Geneva, and other places, and then went on to Mentone, a winter resort on the Mediterranean, and here he rejoined them in January, 1883. Leaving the younger children again with friends at Nice, he, with his wife and two eldest children, set out for a voyage; revisited Florence, Rome, Naples, and the ruins of Herculaneum and Pompeii; thence crossed over to Sicily, stopped at Palermo, Girgenti, Catania, and ascended Mt. Etna, the volcano, as far as possible, on account of snow, and then, after visiting the ruins of ancient Syracuse, embarked for the island of Malta. Thence they went to Tunis and Bone, on the coast of Africa. From the latter place they went inland toward the desert to Constantine, the last stronghold of the Moors during the French invasion; thence to Setif, where they took the diligence and passed through the wonderful Chabet Gorge to Bougie on the sea. Here they took steamer for Algiers. From this point they made another inland journey, and embarked at Oran for Gibralter. After visiting that renowned fortress they entered Spain at Cadiz, visited Jeres, the celebrated Sherry district, Seville, Granada, Toledo, Madrid and the Escurial; thence went to Bordeaux, Marseilles, Nice and Paris. The family spent several weeks seeing London, while Mr. Clark visited the exposition at Amsterdam and made a tour through Holland and Belgium. In June Mr. Clark and his family sailed for New York, at which place and at Garden City on Long Island, they have since resided for the purposes of education, Mr. Clark spending most of his time in Montana. During Mr. Clark's visits to France he acquired a thorough knowledge of the French language, and now speaks, reads and writes it with fluency and ease. Mrs. Clark also acquired a knowledge of both French and German, and the children learned these languages very thoroughly. Mr. Clark is a conspicuous type of a thorough Western and self-made man, and to such dauntless and enterprising spirits as his is the great Northwest indebted for its marvelous growth and development.

REV. CHARLES W. CLARK, Baptist church, Butte, was born at Syracuse, N. Y., September 20, 1835. When he was about four years old he moved with his parents to Fayetteville, N. Y. He entered Madison University at Hamilton, N. Y.; graduated from Union college in 1858, and in the same year entered the Madison Theological Department. Then he settled at Newark, N. J., as pastor of the Fairmount Baptist church. On January 1, 1868, he became pastor of Red Bank Baptist church in New Jersey. In December, 1870, he became pastor of the Baptist church at Galva, Ill., and three years later of the Baptist church at Springfield, Ill., where he preached six years; then moved to Berlin, Ill., remained one year, then moved to Newark, N. J., where Mrs. Clark died, March 6, 1882. In May, 1883, he received an appointment to the Baptist church at Butte city, M. T., from the American Baptist Home Mission Society, and entered on his ministerial duties in that church June 1, 1883. He was married January 19, 1858, to Miss Rilla Clark, by whom he had four sons and one daughter; three of the sons are yet living.

HENRY S. CLARK, Butte, County Clerk and Recorder of Silver Bow county, was born in Lewis Co., N. Y., October 5, 1832, received an academic education, and entered business life at Rome, N. Y. In 1855 he moved to Chicago, where he held a position in the U. S. Express office for five years, as messenger and agent. In 1859 he went to Des Moines, Ia., with Parker's Ex. Co., and subsequently to Kansas City with the U. S. Ex. Co. From January, 1860, to 1866, he was engaged in business at Colorado City and at Denver. In 1866 he moved to Montana and opened a general store at Greenwood, a settlement between Helena and Little Blackfoot. He was elected Clerk and Recorder of Deer Lodge county in 1871; was re-elected and served until 1878. In 1879 he took up his residence at Butte, engaged in mining and milling, and is still interested in mines about Butte. In November, 1882, he was elected to the offices he now holds on the Democratic ticket. Mr. Clark is prominent in Masonic, Oddfellow and A. O. U. W. work. He was married in Colorado September 1, 1863, to Miss Laura, daughter of Samuel K. Roberts, one of the pioneers of this territory. Six sons and one daughter were born to them, of whom two sons died. (It is related of Mrs. Clark that while living on the ranch her husband was called to Helena, leaving her in charge of an infant child and small boy. During his absence a grizzly bear sought the cabin's hospitality, placed his paws on the window, and peered in cautiously. Mrs. Clark told her boy to get out the rifle, but bruin retired. The next evening he repeated his visit and carried off a calf; but on the third night, when he came, the rifle was ready, and bruin's days of rapine were ended.) Mr. Clark has the reputation of being a capable and faithful officer of the county, is genial in his intercourse with the people, and one of the most esteemed citizens of western Montana.

J. K. CLARK, Walkerville, Supt. Moulton mine, was born February 2, 1842, in Fayette Co., Pa.; removed to Iowa in 1856, and in 1862 to Colorado. In 1864 he joined in a stampede to Arizona, and mined a short time at Santa Fe. That fall he went to Virginia City, M. T., and soon after to Salt Lake, where he wintered. In the spring of 1865 he returned to Montana and mined at Alder gulch; then sold merchandise, leaving for Blackfoot City to dispose of stock; afterward joined partnership with John Robinson in mining claims; mined at Elk creek in 1866–7; engaged in merchandising at Bear gulch; sold out soon after and took a sub-contract for carrying mail from Missoula to Walla Walla. After holding this for seven years he sold out and speculated for a year in grain in Missoula county. Came to Butte in the fall of 1875 and purchased an interest from his brother in mines; took charge of the Dexter mill as superintendent, and held the position five years. In 1881 he took charge of the Moulton mill and mine as superintendent, which position he holds at the present date. Mr. Clark is not only interested in the Dexter, Moulton, etc., but in numerous other claims in the camp.

ROYAL FRANCIS CLARK, physician and surgeon, Butte, was born at Haverhill, N. H., in 1839. He was educated at the Methodist Seminary of Newbury, Vt., and at Samptor Seminary, Newbridge, N. H.; afterward attended Dartmouth College and graduated in 1861. He then entered the service as assistant surgeon in the 5th N. H. Vols. In the summer of 1862 he left the service, but soon afterward joined the army as surgeon, and remained in it until the fall of 1864, when he went to Lowell, Mass., and practiced his profession there until 1869, at which time he went to Kansas. In 1874 he moved to California, in 1882 to Helena, M. T., and thence to Butte. In 1860 he married Miss Jane Warren, of Haverhill, N. H.

W. F. COBBAN, Butte, superintendent planing mill department of Montana Lumber Company, and stockholder of the firm, is a native of Eau Claire, Wis. Mr. Cobban is a lumberman by occupation, and for some time previous to coming west followed that business in northern Wisconsin. Has been in Montana for the past three years.

R. M. COBBAN, insurance and real estate, Butte, was born at Chippewa Falls, Wis., in 1859. After completing his education he engaged in the mill business with his father. Several years later he removed to Eau Claire, Wis., his father having mills at that point; engaged in that business. In 1880 he came to Montana and located at Butte. There he built a planing mill, which he carried on until 1883. It was then incorporated August, 1883, and is now known as the Montana Lumber and Produce Co., with Mr. Cobban in charge as foreman in planing mill. In January, 1884, he sold out interest in mill, and engaged in the insurance and real estate business.

W. G. COLE, Butte, came to the territory in 1864, and remained here at that time for about five years, being chief engineer of Yellow Jacket, in which he set up a 3,000 feet line of pump work; Comstock lode, for six years; of Silver Hill, and also of Meadow Valley Mining Company, at Pioche, Nevada, serving with the latter company for about five years. In fact Mr. Cole has been engaged in engineering ever since he was 14 years of age. Was born in London, England, April 29, 1842, and arrived in America in 1863. Shortly after reaching the United States went to Nevada, and from there came to Montana. To him is credited the work of placing in position the new machinery of the St. Lawrence, at Butte. In 1866 he was married to Miss Anna Hobson, a native of England, whose father was an employe of the Rogers locomotive works, at Paterson, N. J.

S. B. CORMICK, Butte, was born at St. Louis, Mo., March 7, 1847. His parents removed to Lincoln county a few years later. Mr. Cormick left at the age of 17 years, and began peddling sewing machines through Illinois and Iowa. He also carried in connection a patent corn cultivator, which his father had patented. In May, 1865, he gave up the business, and moved to Salt Lake city; came to Montana in 1866, and mined at Big Indian gulch; after mining there two years went to Sky High gulch, where he followed mining until 1874. That year he located at Butte, where he made claims which he holds at the present date. Mr. Cormick was elected in 1879 to the eleventh session of the Montana legislature.

JOHN H. CURTIS, of the firm of Curtis & Majors, Butte, was born in the village of Cloyne, sixteen miles from the city of Cork, Ireland, in 1839. At eleven years of age he emigrated with his parents to the United States, and settled in the city of St. Louis, Mo., where he and his brother Charles were placed at the Christian Brothers' school, remaining five years, and receiving a fair education. Leaving school, young Curtis was offered an opportunity to go and study for the priesthood, by Bishop Kendrick, of St. Louis, which he declined, and left school to battle his way in the world. Obtaining a situation in the sheriff's office of the county of St. Louis, under Michael Cerre, he remained under sheriffs Cerre, Courtney and Andrews. A new sheriff being elected, he was again offered a deputyship, but declined on account of his not being able to take the Drake iron-clad oath of office. During all this time young Curtis, seeing the advantages of a good education, went to school at nights. After he left the sheriff's office he entered Jones' Commercial College, at St. Louis, where he graduated with much credit to himself. This was the last schooling he received. He then began the study of law, and read under John F. Darly for over two years. After his examination he was again opposed by the Drake oath, as all attorneys admitted to the bar were required to take this oath. After this he obtained a clerkship in the general office of the North Missouri Railroad, occupying the position of general ticket clerk, handling and keeping an account of all the tickets sold to the local agents over the entire road. This position he retained until 1865, when he engaged in the fire and life insurance business, which he continued until 1866, when the Montana fever took hold of him, and having a brother in the mountains, he turned his face thither, taking passage on the steamer Waverly, and arriving at Fort Benton in May, 1866. He arrived in Helena with but $2.50, all the money he had in the world. He at once found his brother, Colonel Charles D. Curtis, who gave him employment in his house as clerk, at which he continued until a better paying position was offered, then engaged as bookkeeper for the firm of La Croix & Owings, grocery merchants, at Helena, at which place he remained until the firm closed out. Having saved his earnings, which then amounted to $1,100, he went to Benton and bought a small stock of groceries, brought them to Helena, and in 1868 opened in business for himself, which he continued until 1875. Then he sold out his stock and went to old Mexico, for his wife's health. Mr. Curtis made his grocery business a great success, and retired with honor, owing no man a single dollar, and having acquired considerable property. Upon his return from Mexico he came to Butte and took charge of the lumber business of William Thompson, remaining for eight months; then bought out the firm of Barret & Warren, real estate and mining brokers, in which business he is at present engaged. Mr Curtis went to Missouri in 1873, and married Miss Mattie Fant, the daughter of Lym J. Fant, of Fulton, Mo. They have had four children: Willie, George D., Sophie, and John H. Curtis, Jr. Willie and Sophie are dead, but two boys are living, making home happy. Mr. Curtis has had numerous narrow escapes and adventures, being fired at by road agents, and chased for miles when on collecting trips through the Territory; was surrounded by Indians; stopped on the road by drunken Indians, and several such adventures. In 1882, before the supreme court of Montana, he was admitted to the bar as an attorney and counsellor-at-law. Mr. Curtis is essentially a self-made man, who was thrown upon the world and driven to win his way by force of his own energies to the prominent position he now occupies. He has hosts of friendf all over the Territory; is one of the largest and most liberal hearted Montanians, friendly and sociable with all, a man of strictly temperate habits. In a financial point of view his great energy and prompt attention to his business has enabled him to add to his own pecuniary worth. Careful in all his dealings, we are assured beyond doubt that he is now worth over $75,000, owning property in Silver Bow, Lewis and Clarke, Jefferson, Madison and Choteau counties. In 1885 Mr. Curtis formed a partnership with Mr. Greene Majors, and added an insurance department to their office.

MARCUS DALY, Butte, general manager of the Anaconda mine and smelter, was born in Ireland in 1842 He came to Montana in 1876, and soon after was appointed general manager of the Alice Silver Mine at Butte. Later he was appointed manager of the Anaconda mine by Messrs. Haggen and Travis, the owners. Mr. Daly is a practical miner, an expert assayist, skilled in the construction of mills and machinery, and an unerring judge of mines and mineral lands. He was elected delegate to the Constitutional Convention of January, 1884, and participated in the deliberations of that body. (Vide History of Deer Lodge and Silver Bow.)

WALTER B. DANCE, who died October 4, 1878, was born near Wilmington, Del., in 1820, and early in life, after living a time in Philadelphia, started out for what was then the Far West. In St. Louis he became traveling agent for John Howe, then, and for many years succeeding, one of the largest merchants of that city. In 1862, in a party of which Governor S. T. Hauser, Henry Bryan, Jere Sullivan and H. B. Bryan, were members, he came to Montana and joined the Stuart brothers, James and Granville, in mining operations at Gold Creek. Thence all went to Bannack, and when Alder Gulch was struck, Dance, Stuart & Co. established a mercantile house in that city, remaining there until 1866, when they transferred their business to Deer Lodge and continued it until 1870. He represented Deer Lodge county repeatedly in the Legislature, once as presiding officer of the council, and was closely identified with societies.

JUDGE ANDREW J. DAVIS, President of the First National Bank of Butte City, and Vice-President of the First National Bank of Helena, was born in the State of Massachusetts, where he received a fair business education. At sixteen years of age he went to Madison, Ind., where he remained one year; then moved to Nashville, Tenn., one year after to St. Louis. After spending the winter there he went into Iowa in 1838 and opened a farm on the Des Moines river, to which he from time to time made additions, until in 1853 it covered an area of 1,000 acres. This farm he still owns. During that time he also engaged in milling, distilling and in the mercantile trade. In 1853 he leased his farm and went to California, where he spent four years as a speculator and broker. In 1857 he returned to Iowa, made additional improvements, and engaged in the mercantile business until 1864. He then came to Montana, having sent in a large stock of merchandise, which he disposed of to the various merchants of the Territory, and returning to Iowa in the spring of 1865, shipped a large stock of goods up the Missouri river. In 1866 he sent a train load through via the wagon route, and in the winter of 1866 took a stock of goods from Virginia City to Helena and sent another stock into the Gallatin Valley. He introduced the first flouring mill machinery into the Gallatin valley for the Gallatin City Flouring Mill, which he erected and sold shortly after. In 1864 he began loaning money on various properties, and in so doing acquired such heavy interests that he was obliged to remain and participate in the hardships and perils of Western life. Numerous properties fell into his hands by the non-payment of moneys borrowed on them, and buying the wrecks of twenty-seven mills and other establishments, he converted them to other uses. He made the first land entry in Silver Bow district, received the first patent issued, and in 1876 furnished $80,000 worth of machinery for mills in this district. During that year he built the Lexington mill and numerous others in the vicinity soon after. In 1881 he disposed of a part of his interest in several mines and mining properties. In 1883 he bought the Silver Bow property and is interested in all the Silver Bow mines, besides various mines in Lewis and Clarke and Madison counties. He is also interested in the Butte Foundry, and in flouring mills in the Gallatin valley. He is an important real estate owner in the city of Butte and very heavily interested in the First National Bank of that city, as also in the First National Bank of Helena. In the sale of the New Lexington he received one million dollars in cash, and in the agreement compelled them to expend $613,000 in improvements on the property and allow him 15 per cent of the net earnings during all the time to come.

DANIEL N. DELLINGER, Butte, was born at Ripon, Fond du Lac Co., Wis., May 25, 1850, and is a son of George W. and Margaret Dellinger, our subject being the first male child born in the city of Ripon, and there received his education, which he finished at the Ripon College. After leaving school he went to Fond du Lac, where he learned and worked at the tanner's trade, and from there went to Chicago, where he remained until the great fire in that city in the fall of 1871. He then went to Pittsburg, where he remained eight months, and in the spring of 1872 came to Montana, and locating at Deer Lodge was employed by Mr. F. B. Miller, which situation he held for five years, after which he came to Butte and established the first hardware store in the city, and in June, 1877, admitted Mr. Hyde as a partner in the business, which partnership they continued three years. Mr. Hyde then withdrawing, the business was continued by Mr. Dellinger alone, and he commanded a very large trade until July, 1883; he at that time disposed of the business to W. R. Kenyon & Co., and returned to the States, having business interests there which will, in the future, occupy the greater part of his time. Mr. Dellinger erected the second fire-proof building in the city of Butte, and has been during the past years largely interested in mining, and prominently identified with all public improvements, having also been quite an active dealer in real estate in the city. Mr. Dellinger is a prominent and most worthy member of the Masonic Order, as also of the Knights Templar, of which organization he was the first member in the city of Butte.

A. DELMORE, Butte, was born September 15, 1836, in Switzerland; came to the United States in 1854, located in California and mined for six years, visiting the Fraser river country during the excitement following the discovery of gold in that district; returned to California and was for four years interested in sheep raising. From the latter part of 1861 to 1865 he prospected, mined, ran pack trains, cut wood, etc., in Nevada; came to Montana and located in Alder Gulch, prospecting and mining; also visited Helena, Blackfoot and other mining camps in the Territory; returned to Nevada, prospected for a time, afterward engaging in the milk and dairy business; in 1874 he made a trip to Arizona; returned to Nevada and again engaged in the milk, dairy and stock business until October, 1881, when he came to Montana, and settling near Butte, has since been engaged in supplying that city with milk, raising stock, etc.

LOUIS DEMERS, Butte, was born at Quebec, Canada, December 20, 1830; in 1846 he moved to West Lebanon, N. H., and until 1849 was engaged with the Vermont Central R. R, bridge building, etc. He spent one year in St. Louis, Mo., then going to St. Joseph, and in 1852 moved to Green river, Wy. Ter., where he was occupied in getting out boat timber and running a ferry. In 1856 he kept a trading post on the Big Sandy river. In 1860 he started for Oregon, wintered on the present site of Deer Dodge City, and at the solicitation of Granville Stuart he remained in the Deer Lodge valley, soon after taking a band of horses to Salt Lake City, where he traded them for flour and provisions, with which he returned. In 1862 he purchased a stock of merchandise at Ft. Benton, returned to Deer Lodge and engaged in trade until 1865, having in 1862, with the assistance of John Pemberton, organized the present city of Deer Lodge, and erected the first saw mill on the Cottonwood creek. In 1865 he visited his native place; returned to Montana in 1866, and piloted a train of emigrants from Ft. Kearney to Virginia City. Soon after he revisited Canada, and remained two years; then went to Chicago, where for six years he was a member of the Board of Trade. From 1871 to 1880 he resided at Corinne, Utah; then moved to Reno, Nev., and in 1881 went to Butte City, M. T., where he is now conducting a bakery. Mr. Demers was married at St. Celestin, Canada, February 13, 1866, to Miss Clementine M. Marquis. Their children are W. H. Eddy, Louis Charles, Mary E., Isabel and Eleanor.

ORLANDO DEWING, miner, Butte, was born in New York, April 28, 1840, son of Madison and Deborah Dewing. He farmed in Walworth Co., Wis., and in 1861 enlisted in the Tenth Wisconsin Infantry, serving three and one-half years, participating in many battles, and was mustered out as Sergeant. Returning to Wisconsin he remained until the spring of 1865, when he came direct to Helena via Denver and Salt Lake City; was barkeeper four years; went to Emigrant gulch, on the Yellowstone, and engaged in mining about two years; in 1871 he went to Cook City, mined in summers and spent the winters in hunting, until the fall of 1882; was also interested in pack trains between Bozeman and the National Park, and vicinity. He participated in the many difficulties with the Indians in that district; was one of the party of five who held at bay 250 Sioux at Ft. Pease for four hours. One of his companions was killed and all the others badly wounded, Mr. Dewing being struck in the breast, the ball passing along the breast-bone and through the arm below the shoulder. Mr. Dewing is interested in mines at Cook City, and was part owner in a fine billiard hall at Butte.

WILLIAM H. DEWITT, member of the law firm of Randolph & DeWitt, of Butte City, was born in New York in 1855. He received his literary education at Hamilton College, and graduated in the class of 1875. He then took a regular course at the Columbia College Law School of New York city, took his degree, and was admitted to practice by the Supreme Court of New York in 1878. He practiced his profession in New York city until the spring of 1879, then came to Helena, M. T., where he practiced until May, 1881, when he moved to Butte, and formed the existing partnership with George C. Randolph, under the firm name of Randolph & DeWitt. He was appointed United States District Attorney March 2, 1883. Mr. DeWitt, although comparatively a young man, has, by his scholarly attainments and thorough devotion to his profession, won his way to the front, and is justly classed among the leading attorneys of the Territory.

STEPHEN DEWOLF, attorney at law, Butte, was born in Hawkins Co., Tenn., in March, 1838, studied at the Pennsylvania University at Gettysburg, and the Jefferson College, Canonsburg, entered law studies at Lexington, Mo., continued at the Lebanon Law School, graduated in 1857, and began practice at Lexington, Mo. In 1859 he moved to Salt Lake, U. T., as agent and attorney for Russell, Magors & Waddle, army contractors; subsequently accepted the editorial management of the Valley Tan, and while holding this position wrote the first account of the Mountain Meadow Massacre. This article created so much hostility in Mormon circles, that a delegation of saints waited on him, demanding a retraction. He refused, and was warned to leave Salt Lake without further notice. He told them he would fight out the battle on that line. He did not receive any physical injury, but his office was destroyed by a mob in his absence. After a residence of five years in the city he engaged in the live-stock business in California. Three years after he returned to Salt Lake, and acted as United States Attorney for Utah. In 1879 he settled at Butte, opening a law-office that year. He was elected representative from Deer Lodge Co. in 1881, ran for the Territorial Council on the democratic ticket at the following election, but was defeated by eleven votes. During the few years he has been a citizen of Montana he has built up a large practice, and won a first place in the legal circles of the Territory.

J. E. DICKEY, Butte, was born in Fleming Co. Ky., April 10, 1843. At ten years of age his parents removed to Illinois. After living there five years, here moved to Independence, Mo. Mr. Dickey here learned the trade of printer, working three years. His father purchasing a farm in Cass Co., he left his trade, and worked on the farm one and half years. When eighteen years old he started for New Mexico. At Jackson, Mo., he was taken sick, and remained there three months. After recovering he went to Kentucky, where he spent the winter of 1860. In the spring of 1861 he returned to Missouri, arriving at St. Louis the day of the fall of Fort Sumter. In June, 1861, he enlisted in the State service, where he served four months. He then enlisted in the Confederate service, serving through the war, surrendering at Jackson, Miss., May 19, 1865. He then returned to Missouri, April, 1866, and came to Virginia City, M. T., and wintered there. In spring he began mule whacking. He then left on the Salmon river stampede, but returned the same winter to Virginia City. Next March he went to Highland Gulch, mined there and in the vicinity for three years. Discovering mines at Goose Creek, he left Highland Gulch and mined there five years. After prospecting all summer he came to Butte, where he mined five years. He was then elected clerk and recorder for Deer Lodge Co., October, 1878. This position he held for two years. In January, 1881, he opened a drug store in Deer Lodge, where he carries on business at the present time. He married Miss Elma Comforth, of Madison Co., M. T., March 12, 1878. They have one child, Ora May.

W. W. DIXON, attorney at law, Butte, was born at Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1838, and at the age of seventeen years began the study of law. When in his twentieth year he was admitted to the bar of Iowa, having resided there from his youth. After his admission he practiced in Iowa one year, and moved thence to Arkansas, where he spent another year at his profession. He made a short stay in California, and went to Nevada, where he practiced four years, when, in 1866, he came to Montana, and locating first at Helena, remained but a short time, when he moved to Deer Lodge, and there pursued his professional duties for a period of thirteen years. In 1879 he became favorably impressed with the Black Hills, and going there remained until such impression had disappeared. Returning to Montana in 1881, he located in the City of Butte, and has since continued there in the practice of law. Mr. Dixon became interested in mining in Nevada from 1862 to 1866, but with ill success. He has also been interested to some extent in Montana mines, which have proved unsatisfactory to him. In 1871–72, he was elected member of the Territorial Legislature, and in 1883 a delegate to the constitutional convention held at Helena in January, 1884. Mr. Dixon was married to Miss Ida Wilson, of St. Louis, Mo., in 1874, and they have had two children.

ALBERT DOUD, of the firm of Mulville & Doud, blacksmiths, of Butte City, was born in Vermont in 1829. In 1848, he came to Wisconsin, and was one year in Greene Co., Ill. In 1852 he crossed the plains to California, arriving late in the fall; the next spring he went to Siskiyou Co. In 1864 he went to Boise Basin, and two years afterward to Montana. He has been engaged in the blacksmithing business since 1859. In 1866 he had a blacksmith shop in Last Chance, where he stopped for one year. From there he went to Cable City, where he opened a shop in 1867, it being the first building and first blacksmith shop there; thence proceeded to White Pine, returning to Cable City by way of Wood river, in the fall of 1870. In 1871 he went to Deer Lodge, which was his home until 1876; and in 1877 he came to Butte, establishing in business here in the spring. In 1878 he closed out and went to Idaho, returning again October 5, 1881, and forming a partnership with Mr. Mulville in 1882. The firm does a general blacksmithing, wagon making and repairing business.

JOHN DUCIE, Butte, was born in England, near Shrewsbury, came to the United States in 1862, and for three years lived in Wayne Co., Ohio, and then went to the southwest, spending four years in Texas, Indian Territory and Arkansas From that section he went to the Pacific coast, and in 1875 to New Mexico. In about a year he removed to Colorado, finally coming to Butte. He is interested in about twenty-five claims in and near town, some of which are well developed. He has followed mining for the past ten or twelve years, and is interested in some of the most important mines, among which may be mentioned the "Hesperus," adjoining Butte on the east, "Adirondack," etc. Most of these claims were taken up between the years 1878 and 1882.

G. E. F. DUFFET, Butte, assayer, Moulton Mill, was born February 22, 1858, at Paris, France. After leaving school he assisted his father in teaching the French language. In 1879 he came to the United States with W. A. Clark, proceeding directly to Butte; worked in the mines until 1880; was then taken into the assay office of the Moulton Mill, and after serving an apprenticeship, assumed charge in January, 1883. Mr. Duffet, besides attending to his duties as assayer, gives lessons in the French language.

W. H. DUNCAN, Butte, was born April 11, 1852, in Missouri. His parents removed to Oregon several years later. When old enough he assisted his father in taking care of cattle. He then engaged in trading in Idaho, also teaming and taking care of cattle. He followed this for three years, then left for the Black Hills, prospected three months, left his claim and went to Fort Custer, where he wintered. In the spring of 1878 he started a hotel at Vestelberg. After running it for two years he failed. Located at Butte and after teaming a short time, obtained the position of salesman for the Montana Lumber and Produce Co.

E. F. DUNCKEL, Butte, was born in June, 1849, at New York. His parents removed to Lansing, Mich. At eleven years old his parents changed residence to Boone Co., Iowa. Mr. Dunckel farmed for eight years in that county, then removed to Butte Co., Cal., and engaged in placer mining three years. He then returned to Iowa. One year later he went to the Black Hills, where he mined for two years. Again returning to Iowa, he engaged in farming; after following this for one and a half years, he came to Butte in 1881; December 23 he engaged in the wood sawing business with his brother. The machine used in the work was patented September 11, 1883. It is known as the Patent Portable Wood Sawing Machine. Mr. Dunckel was married in 1872 to Miss Sarah Ellisberry, of Iowa.

EDWIN N. DUNCKEL, Butte, was born June 25, 1849, in New York. A few years later his parents removed to Michigan. Here Mr. Dunckel was raised on a farm. At the age of eighteen he enlisted in Company C, 23d Infantry and came west. Was stationed for three years at Canyon City, Col.; was then transferred to Camp C. F. Smith, afterward removed to Camp Harnie. Upon obtaining his discharge he returned to Canyon City and worked at the trade of carpenter. He then removed to Winnemucca, Nev., where he worked at the same trade for three years. He afterward located at Battle Mount, following the same trade for three years. In 1877 Mr. Dunckel came to Butte, M. T., and carried on business as carpenter and contractor for two years. He then embarked in the wood sawing business with his brother, E. F. Dunckel. Mr. Dunckel was married January 1, 1874, to Miss Ellen A. Hillinger, of California, formerly of Indiana. Mr. Dunckel was the inventor of the Patent Portable Wood Sawing Machine. He obtained a patent for the same September 11, 1883. This machine is universally acknowledged to surpass anything in the way of wood sawing machinery invented for years. It not only does the work more rapidly but is also a great saving of money, requiring very little help. We quote below work accomplished by the machine: 62 cords sawed in eight hours, and at another time, 114 cords sawed in two days. Mr. Dunckel is selling county and state rights for the above. Further particulars may be had by addressing Edwin N. Dunckel, Butte, M. T.

FRANK DURAND, Butte, was born in Canada May 27, 1855, where he was educated and learned the mercantile business in his father's store. In 1872 he came to the United States, and first engaged in the wood business in Michigan. After a stay of eight months, he came to Montana and established the wood and stock business at Virginia City, where he resided eight years. He then moved to the vicinity of Butte, where has since devoted his attention to ranching, stock raising and wood business. He also owns a blacksmith and wagon shop. Mr. Durand was married at Virginia City April 3, 1879, to Miss Emily Landenberg.

A. J. DUSSEAU, proprietor of Dusseau's Art Gallery, and pioneer photographer of Butte, was born near Burlington, Vt., in 1842; settled at Bloomington, Wis., in 1863; moved to Prairie du Chien, Wis., as carpenter for the Milwaukee & Prairie du Chien railroad, in 1865; was assistant engineer on steamer between St. Louis, Mo., and Memphis Landing for some time, when he moved to Julesburg, then the terminus of the Union Pacific railroad; followed the road to Cheyenne; moved to Helena in 1869, where he was a musician for five years. About 1874 he moved to Deer Lodge, opened an art gallery and made that city his home until 1877, when he located at Butte, opened a gallery in the same building (now occupied by the postoffice), moving to his present location in 1882. He has served as leader of the Silver Cornet Band and Orchestra, of Butte, for over three years. In 1881 he was married to Miss Amanda Henault, a native of St. Joseph, Mo.

JOHN EDDY, Butte, born in Cornwall, England, April 1838, came to the United States in 1849 and settled at Dubuque, Ia., where he resided until 1862, when he went to Colorado. He mined in the Bobtail Lead for some time, and on February 20, 1863, left Denver for Montana in Hugh O'Neill's party of 120 men; arrived at Bannack April 20 that year; mined there until June, when he joined the stampede to Alder gulch. From June, 1863, to January 1, 1865, Mr. Eddy mined in the famous gulch. On the last named date he moved to Silver Bow, where he found about 500 men along the creek, and quite a number at Butte, i. e., five miles below Silver Bow and six miles above, where mines were worked during the winter of 1864–5. He remained in what is now Silver Bow county until 1870; subsequently mined in Washington, Idaho, California, Nevada, Clorado and other districts until 1877, when he made Butte his home. Mr. Eddy is treasurer of the Miners' Union, as organized June 13, 1878, and is interested in mining property within the Butte camp. His marriage with Miss Henrietta Bickett (daughter of one of the pioneers of the Territory) took place at Dubuque, Ia., in 1877.

W. D. EDMUNDS, P. O. Butte, engineer at Montana Copper Co's works, was born in Michigan in 1844, moved to California in 1857, where he resided for twenty-six years, engaged principally in the duties of mining engineer. He settled in Montana about four years ago, and has been connected with the Montana Copper Co. for the last three years. Mr. Edmunds was married to Miss Julia Howard in 1873.

WESLEY P. EMERY, Butte, is interested in the placer and quartz mines of this camp, and one of the pioneer miners of the Territory, having been at Bannack in May, 1863. He was born in Erie Co., Pa., November 25, 1838; moved with his parents to Ohio a few years later, migrated to Iowa at the age of 16 years, and thence to Colorado in 1860. During his thirty months' residence there he was engaged at Pike's Peak, Central City and Blackfoot Point. In May, 1863, he passed a few weeks at Bannack, thence to Alder Gulch, moved to the Gallatin Valley in the winter of 1863–4 returned to Alder Gulch in the summer, and in October, 1864, came to Butte. From this time to 1871 he explored almost the entire Territory. From 1871 to 1875 he passed the summers in Jefferson Valley, and since 1875 he has made Butte his permanent home. Few if any men in the Territory have had a wider or more varied experience than he has had during his life among the mountains.

W. A. ESTABROOK, P. O. Butte, foreman and engineer of Lexington (Old Mill), came from Fort Fairfield, Aroostook Co., Me., and has been in the employ of the company during the past two years. Is an engineer by profession, married, and resides in Butte.

A. EUSTIS, Butte, son of William and Mary Eustis, principal member of the firm of A. Eustis & Co., proprietors of the Palace Meat Market, was born at British Hollow, Wis., in 1849. Mr. Eustis' father came to Wisconsin in 1836 and his mother three years afterward. His father was a miner by occupation, but afterward dealt in real estate. Our subject spent his boyhood days in his native State, and at the age of 23, left for California, where he became interested in mining for twelve months, at the end of which time he repaired to Pioche, eastern Nevada, remaining there for seven years, after which he went to southern Utah, stopping there for one year, and then came to Butte City, M. T., where he is at present interested in one of the leading meat markets of the city. Butchering, buying and dealing in cattle has been Mr. Eustis' principal occupation for three years prior to leaving Wisconsin, though for six or seven years after coming West he was a speculator in mines. In 1882, February 23, Mr. Eustis was married to Miss Eliza Vincent, a native of Wisconsin, and has one daughter named Myrtle, born August 11, 1883.

DAVID M. EVANS, Butte, has been a resident of Montana since 1876. On coming here he took charge of the Lexington mine for the Walter brothers, and subsequently had charge of all of Judge Davis' mines here. He was engaged in assaying and conveyancing in the Cataract district for one year, was connected with various mines subsequently until the fall of 1883, when he took charge of the Neptune and Fredonia mines. Mr. Evans is a native of Guernsey Co., Ohio, being born there April 21, 1852. In 1869 he moved to Utah, where he resided six years, participating in all the leading stampedes of that period. He is a member of the I. O. G. T. of Butte, and is at present Lodge Deputy.

J. W. EVANS, Parrot Silver and Copper Co., Butte, was born at Baltimore, December 12, 1844. He learned the trade of smelter, working at Baltimore until twenty-eight years of age. He then moved to Colorado, and worked one year in the smelting works, then left for Utah. There he was appointed foreman for the Chicago Smelting Co. Served in that capacity for eleven years. In 1881 he removed to Butte, worked at Belle mine nine months, when he received the appointment of foreman of the Parrott Silver and Copper Mining Co.

JOHN FAGAN, an employe of the Silver Bow Mining Co., Butte, was born March 18, 1845, in New York City. Came to Chicago in his infancy, with his parents, who were among the early settlers of that city, and who are now residents of Englewood, Ill. In 1861 he enlisted in the Twenty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, served at Lookout Mountain under Hooker, and again under Sherman, until discharged at the close of his term of service. He came to the West about sixteen years ago, spending the last five years in Montana.

GEORGE FALLIGAN, member of the firm of Bielenberg & Falligan, Butte, came to Butte in 1876, and the following year established a house in Walkerville, where he continued in business until 1880, when he formed a partnership with Mr. Bielenberg, and has since been located at the present quarters in Butte. Mr. Falligan is a German by birth, having been born at Haltenhofen, Kingdom of Wurtemburg, in 1848. He came to the United States in 1865, and for some time after arriving resided in the East; thence went to California; thence, after remaining five years, to Utah, and from there came to Montana. He has had seventeen years experience in the butcher business; is proprietor of two slaughtering houses in Butte, and part owner of a herd of 2,200 head of cattle, besides having an interest in the wholesale butchering business. On Mr. Falligan's arrival in New York from Germany, he states he had not a single dollar.

W. L. FARLIN, Butte, son of Joseph and Lydia Farlin, was born at Cambridge, Pa., in 1838; came with parents in 1843 to Iowa, and at about nineteen years of age started across the plains for Salmon river. From Fort Kearney to Green river traveled alone, stopping with trains occasionally and frequently meeting with Indians. Route chosen was to Green river, Old Fort Bridger, Snake river and then to Fort Lembi. At Snake river joined some parties from Pike's Peak, and going forward discovered Pioneer gulch. On learning that Grasshopper had been struck, he went thither, located claims and mined that fall. In September he located and recorded the Dacotah, and named it Trueau. This Mr. Farlin claims to have been the first lead that ever went on record within the limits of Montana. Remained at Bannack that winter, and on April 16, joined company of twenty-one organized to go on Snake and Yellowstone rivers, being an exploring and prospecting party. On July 2, discovered Yellowstone river in the National Park; on the 3d the Lake, and on the 5th of same month the Great Falls; thence went to what is now Clarke's Fork Mining District, and on to the Yellowstone, just above Yellowstone canyon. Returning to the head of Clarke's Fork, went down to the Yellowstone, and crossing over to the north side were attacked by Indians. Returning from Yellowstone came over the divide to Gallatin valley, where Bozeman now is, and then hearing that Alder gulch was struck, set out for that place, arriving in Virginia City September 20, 1863. Stopped at the gulch that winter and afterward joined a company formed for the purpose of going to Arizona, on a prospecting trip. Returned in the fall to Virginia City and three weeks later (November, 1864) came to Butte, locating a number of leads during fore part of the winter of 1864–5. In these locations made first discovery of gold in the veins. During that winter, three men, Ed. Sanders, Preston Scott and Mr. Farlin formed a company to prospect. Mr. Farlin did not accompany the parties but was equally interested with Sanders. The object of the company was to prospect the tributaries of the Blackfoot river. During the month of February they discovered paying placers at Ophir gulch. They then sent word to the friends of the other parties, met the different parties at a point about ten miles above Deer Lodge city, and organized a company and the next evening arrived at the gulch. The snow was so deep that not being able to secure forage for their horses they left for home. In the spring returned and opened up the mines. In June, 1866, he discovered and located the "Trevonia," which then was called the "Asteroid." By roasting and amalgamating, produced one bar of silver weighing one ounce, being the first silver produced in the camp. The years 1867–68–69 were employed in developing mines at Butte. In the fall of 1871 remained at Bannack; during winter and summer of 1872 located "Excelsior" mine there, and that fall went to the States, and returning next June, sold it. Same year went to Salt Lake City and on to Washington City during 1874, and after returning from there to Kansas came to Butte. In February, 1875, began developing Trevonia mine and erected first ten-stamp silver roasting mill in Butte. Since that time has been residing in Butte.

ADAM FARRADY, Butte, arrived in Montana in May, 1865. Came to Butte in the fall of 1866, and in 1868 began prospecting, discovering the "Morning Star." He is now interested in numerous mines, many located within the present city limits of Butte. Since the discovery of the Morning Star on St. Patrick's Day, 1878, it has produced about $150,000. Mr. Farrady was born in Loraine, France, in 1827, and coming to the United States in 1832, resided about eight miles from St. Louis, Mo., until 1852, when he went to California. In 1863 he moved to Nevada, and thence to Alder Gulch; next to Helena and Confederate Gulch; returned to Helena, and went to McClellan Gulch, where he remained until the fall of 1866, when he came to Butte. A portion of the time he was engaged at blacksmithing.

JOHN J. FEELEY, Butte, born at Athlone City, Ireland, June 16, 1830; came to Boston, Mass., May 3, 1844, and resided there until 1850, when he moved to New Orleans, La. From 1862 to 1866 he resided in New York; then moved to Missouri where he remained five years. In 1871 he came to Highland gulch, M. T., and engaged in mining there until the fall of 1876, when he purchased his present ranch on the Overland Stage Road, where he now has 320 acres under fence, and cuts about 400 tons of hay annually. The Village of Feeley, on the U. & N. R. R., is named in honor of this sterling citizen. He was married to Miss Annie Powell, September 21, 1850; they are the parents of Mrs. Flowers, Mrs. Gallagher and one son, Louis P., aged fourteen years. Mr. and Mrs. Feeley are true types of the better class of Montana pioneers.

J. M. FISH, Dep. U. S. Marshal, and constable of Silver Bow Co., Butte, was born at Sandy Hill, Washington Co., N. Y., November 22, 1837. He came West in 1864, arrived at Virginia City in July of that year, and mined there for two years. In September, 1874, he proceeded to Deer Lodge as warden of the Territorial Penitentiary, filling the position until 1879, when he resigned. He purchased the Deer Lodge brewery in May, 1879, and conducted this industry until May, 1881, when he settled at Butte, holding the office of Dep. Sheriff until December, 1882. He was appointed Dep. U. S. Marshal in 1872, which position he still holds. In November, 1881, Mr. Fish was married to Mrs. Marshall Stone (nee Miss Warren), widow of Marshall Stone.

GEORGE C. FITSCHEN, Butte, was born at Hanover, Germany, June 2, 1843, emigrated to the United States in 1858, and resided in New York. In 1861 removed to San Francisco, carried on butchering for two years; went to Calaveras and Amador counties and followed mining for a short time, and returning to San Francisco resided there until 1866, when he came to German Gulch, M. T., and started a butcher shop. Went to Texas some months later, purchased cattle and drove them to Montana, establishing a ranch on the Big Hole, located a butcher shop at Silver Bow, and carried on stock business and shop until 1876, when he moved to California. In 1878 he located at Butte and engaged in the liquor business. September 13, 1858, the steamer Austria on which Mr. Fitschen sailed was burned off the coast of New Foundland, 500 lives lost, he being among a few who escaped. During trip to Texas in 1874, had several narrow escapes from Indians. Being out one day in one horse wagon was pursued by three Indians; Mr. Fitschen drove toward a cabin. Upon reaching it the horses fell dead in their tracks, and he had just time to get in the cabin. The Indians were then driven off.

JONATHAN F. FORBIS (deceased), Butte, one of the pioneers of Virginia City was born in Lincoln Co., Ky., January 27, 1816, received a common school education, and in 1836 moved to Platte Co., Mo., where he was engaged in agriculture and mercantile work. In 1864 he moved to Alder Gulch, invested in mines there, and in 1865 went to Helena, where he was engaged in mining and farming up to the period of his death, January 26, 1877. He represented Lewis and Clarke counties twice in the Legislatnre, and served three terms as County Commissioner. He was the first to call attention to the Mullan Pass as the most feasible route for the Northern Pacific Railroad. Mr. Forbis was married in 1836 to Miss America A. Perrin (daughter of William A. Perrin), born in Kentucky in 1818. They were the parents of three sons and seven daughters, three of the latter dying in infancy. Mrs. Edwin H. Irvine, of Deer Lodge; Mrs. W. L. Steele, of Helena, and Mrs. R. L. Russell, of Butte, with William P., John F. and James W. Forbis, all of Butte, are their children. (Vide gen. hist.) John F. Forbis, of the law firm of Knowles & Forbis, is a young and promising lawyer, who has been brought up in the Territory, and who has twice represented his county in the Territorial Legislature.

WILLIAM FORREST, P. O Divide, born in Illinois in 1841, visited California in 1852 and remained there until 1857, when he returned to Illinois making a stay of ten years in his native State. He moved to Montana in 1867, located at German Gulch until 1870, when he established his present farm and stock ranch, of which 240 acres are under fence. He was married in 1865.

J. D. FOX, of the firm of Fox & Price, Butte, was born at Westfield, Mass., in 1839. At the age seventeen he went to Boston where he learned the trade of watchmaker; shortly afterward removed to New York where he was in the employ of jewelers and watchmakers until 1852. Since that date he has traveled through the western States and Territories, stopping a few years at each place, working at trade sometimes and at other times keeping his own establishment. In 1878 he came to Butte and opened a watchmaker's and jewelry establishment. In 1882 formed a partner-hip with Albert Price, the firm carrying on the jewelry business in connection with groceries. To this department Mr. Fox gives his especial attention.

JACOB FREEMAN, Butte, was born in Kentucky, June 1, 1845. In 1855 he moved with his parents to Kansas where he remained seven years. In 1861 he entered the Union army, served one year, and in 1863 moved to Colorado. In 1864 he settled at Iron Rod, M. T., where for ten years he was engaged in teaming and ranching. About 1874 or 1875 he settled near Butte city. Mr. Freeman was married to Miss Jennette Porter, at Butte, June 22, 1879.

MILO FRENCH, Police Magistrate and Justice of the Peace, Butte, born in St. Joseph Co., Mich., June 8, 1845, was educated in that State, arrived at Virginia City or Alder Gulch April 14, 1864. He was engaged in placer mining here and in the Blackfoot country; was 14 years foreman for the Quartz Mining Companies. He came to Butte in 1867, remained a short time, and returned with the quartz stampedes of 1875, since which time he has been a permanent resident. For the past five years he has been proprietor of the Girton House—a miners' hotel; he owns the business interests of the house and over half the property. Mr. French operated this hotel for Robert Girton several years, purchased an interest in the building and grounds in 1879, and has since conducted it as a first-class house. This hotel accommodates 125 guests and is centrally located on Quartz street near Main street, and well patronized. The owner devoted much of his time to school teaching prior to entering hotel life. He was elected to his present position in May, 1883.

E. C. FREYSCHLAG, of the firm of Gamer & Co., Butte, was born at Fayetteville, Ark., October 15, 1852. At eleven years of age went to St. Louis; after leaving school served as messenger in the International Bank for two years. He then went to Texas and engaged in driving cattle to Montana, after driving six months went to Helena and clerked for Sands Bros., dry goods, for three years. November, 1877, came to Butte, formed partnership with Fred Gamer, of Helena, and opened a boot and shoe store. Firm being known as Gamer & Co. This business is carried on at the present time. In 1880 Mr. Freyschlag was elected alderman for two years.

DANIEL GAMER, of the firm of Schmidt & Gamer, Butte, was born in Baden, Germany, September 14, 1847, emigrated to the United States in June, 1860; remained a short time in New York City; removed to Chicago, and six years later to St. Joseph, Mo., where he engaged as clerk; in June, 1870 located at Deer Lodge, M. T., in the boot and shoe trade; came to Butte City in 1877 and engaged in the brewing business which he has since continued. Mr. Gamer is a member of the Masonic Order, the I. O. O. F. (Lodge and Encampment) and the A. O. U. W. He was married at Deer Lodge, May 4, 1873, to Miss Lena Rornig. They have two children, Emma and Albert.

THOS. B. GARDNER, Silver Bow, was born at Warehouse Point, Conn., October 24, 1824. When he was ten years old his father removed to Ohio, where he learned the cooperage business. In 1849 he went to California, where he engaged in mining until 1863, when he came to Montana. He mined in various parts of the Territory until 1869, then located a ranch on Silver Bow Creek. In 1874 he located his present ranch, where he is engaged in raising hay and grain, and also stock, having 260 acres under fence. Mr. Gardner has been one of the school directors for Silver Bow County, for the past six years. He is a member of Fidelity Lodge No. 8, I. O. O. F. November 1, 1868, he married Susan Townsend. They have two children, Chas. T. and Turner M. Gardner.

J. L. GARWOOD, Butte, engineer at the Silver Bow mines, is a native of Indiana. He moved to Michigan in childhood, and resided in that State until 1874, when he visited California, and Virginia City, Nev., remaining in the latter city until the winter of 1875, when he moved to Lake Tahoe, and thence to Arizona. He passed three years and a half in that Territory, then moved to southern Utah, thence to Bodie, Cal., and in August, 1881, settled in Butte City. He was an employe of the Mountain Consolidated & Bell Mining Company previous to taking up his present position. Mr. Garwood was married in March, 1883, to Miss Ida Le Master a native of Missouri.

H. GASSERT, Silver Bow Junction, born in Benton Co., Pa., April 14, 1841, is a son of Frederick and Hannah Gassert, his father being a native of France and his mother of Germany. In 1857 he moved with his parents to Minnesota, and shortly after their arrival he set out on a tour through the western and southern States on each side of the Mississippi river. Reached Louisiana and returning to Rock Island, Ill., in 1859, started for Pike's Peak; returned to Minnesota in 1861, and there enlisted in the forces raised against the Indians and served as first lieutenant. At the battle of Devil's Lake he was wounded and was confined to the hospital for five months; after recovering was detailed to the quartermaster's department in Tennessee, where he had charge of the government lumber yards and afterward was given charge of the wagon and repair shops, and so continued till the fall of 1865, when he was mustered out, returned to Minnesota, and during the winter applied himself to the insurance business. In the spring of 1866 he came to Montana, was six weeks in the Big Horn valley, when he and his comrades were driven out by the Indians and followed by them until they crossed the Yellowstone river. Mr. Gassert and his companions were obliged to hew out timber and build a ferry boat before they could cross, and while so doing were in constant danger from the Indians and were compelled to be on their guard at all times. After crossing they built a stockade with their wagons, etc. While preparing to continue their retreat the Indians ran off the greater part of their stock. Proceeding onward to Clarke's Fork, they were there also obliged to provide a ferry-boat for the crossing of their wagons, and Mr. Gassert remained at that point for some time after the departure of his comrades and occupied his time by attending to the ferry, hunting, etc. But the Indians becoming troublesome in that quarter he was obliged to move onward, and went to Virginia City, thence he went to Silver Star, where he remained until 1869 engaged in prospecting, mining and ferrying, and built the first bridge across the Jefferson river at Silver Star. He moved thence to Silver Bow, and in company with Jacob Reding discovered the first silver mine in the Butte Camp, he being also one of the discoverers of the famous Burlington mine, also the Blue Bird, Bunker Hill, Mono and various other mines, and is now interested in the Blue Bird, Bunker Hill and Mono. Mr. Gassert built the first primitive quartz mill erected in the Silver Bow country, which for years did quite a business, having a capacity of about four tons of ore per day.

J. E. GAYLORD, Butte. (See General History and sketch of Parrot Mine.)

FREDERICK GILBERT, Butte, was born at Laurens, Otsego Co., New York, February 8, 1845. The first twenty years of his life were passed on a farm; afterward he was engaged in the drug business for a few years. In 1871 he came to Utah in the employ of the Union Pacific Railway Co. Came to Montana in 1878, when with the surveyor general he made an extended trip through the Yellowstone valley, examining government surveys. In the spring of 1879, with his family, he came to Butte, and soon after opened a news and fruit store under the name of Gilbert & Tyler. Since January 1, 1882, Mr. Gilbert has been sole owner, and has largely increased his business by the addition of fire arms and fishing tackle, representing in the last named line of goods the celebrated house of Abbey & Imbrie, New York. Mr. Gilbert is the owner of valuable real estate in the city and built the first house on what is known as "Nob Hill." He is also one of the committee of St. John's Church.

GOLDSMITH & Co.'s clothing house, one of the leading houses of Butte, was established December 14, 1880 (a branch of the Baltimore, Md., house, the latter managed by Lewis Goldsmith), with E. Sigel, manager. This gentleman is a native of New York city, and is married to a lady of New York. He has been identified with the clothing trade since sixteen years of age, and is considered one of the leading business men of Butte. The business which he manages here was established at Salt Cake City about twenty years ago.

ROBT. GRIX, Butte, was born at Liverpool, England, in 1854. After school days he entered as clerk in a shipping office. In 1872 he came to the United States and located at Salt Lake City, Utah. For a few months after arrival he kept books in a grain house; then entered the employ of James Dwyer, bookseller and stationer, and was employed as salesman and manager for six years. In 188[illegible] he came to Butte; formed a partnership with E. S. Richards and opened a book and stationary store. In August, 1883, Mr. Grix purchased Mr. Richards' interest in the business. Mr. Grix makes a specialty of school supplies, and besides keeps a full stock of all kinds of reading matter.

WM. E. HALL, superintendent of the Alice Works, was formerly in charge of Walker Bros'. works in Utah, known as the Antelope and Prince of Wales. For 36 years, or ever since he was ten years of age, he has been directly connected with mining interests in various places. He is a native of Cornwall, England, came to the United States in 1859, and for a time afterward was connected with the copper works in Michigan. After a long experience in Michigan in mining he moved to Utah, where he was taken notice of by the Walker Bros., who gave him charge of their works, in which position he served for seven years. While there he had a remarkable adventure in 1875. Three parties, including himself, were carried down 4,000 feet by a snow-avalanche, and one man was killed, though fortunately Mr. Hall escaped with little injury. This occurred within half a mile of the Prince of Wales works. Mr. Hall is married and resides at Walkerville.

WILLIAM HAMILTON, Butte, was born in Scotland, June 12, 1833, where he learned and followed the trade of boot and shoe maker. On coming to America, he passed a few months at Montreal, Can.; then migrated to Milwaukee, Wis., where he resided from 1852 to 1863. He came to Montana in the spring of 1864, mined at Alder gulch until 1865, when he opened a boot and shoe store at Helena. There, in 1869, he was burned out. In the spring of 1870 he began placer mining on the head waters of the Pipestone, and after three years there moved to Fish Creek, where he worked at his trade and engaged in horse-raising until the fall of 1875, when he settled at Butte. In 1876 he purchased his present ranch in the suburbs of Butte.

C. M. HANDSCOMB, Butte, was born in 1853 in Washington Co., Me.; received a common school education; left for Cuba at the age of 18; held the position of salesman in a shipchandler's office for two years; returned to Maine, but in a short time left for Darien, Ga., where he engaged in the lumber business. In June, 1879, Mr. Handscomb came to Montana, prospected and mined at Butte for two years, and since then has been engaged in the Lexington mill. Mr. Handscomb is also interested in various mining claims.

PETER HANSON, Colorado Silver and Copper Co., Butte, was born March 25, 1845, at Hallon, Sweden. At the age of 15 he emigrated to the Udited States. Located at Princeton, Ill., where he followed farming for two years. He then removed to Batavia, Ill.; was employed for two years in a stone quarry. Came west in 1874 and located at Black Hawk, Col. There he was employed as furnace man in mill. After working five years came to Butte, M. T. Was furnished by same company a position in the Colorado Silver and Copper Co., where he engaged to date. Married Anna Gustafsen, of Colorado, on the 25th day of April, 1874.

T. W. HARDWICK, Butte, was born in Carroll Co., Mo., January 25, 1844; moved with parents to California; returned to Missouri in 1852; went to Texas in 1857, and from 1859 to 1861 assisted his father in driving cattle to Missouri. He then enlisted in the Confederate army, with which he served until 1864. On November 12 he arrived at Virginia City, M. T., purchased a ranch at Blacktail cañon; but returned to Virginia City and mined until the spring of 1865. From that year to 1867 he was engaged in mining, and was one of the discoverers of Thomas' Gulch. He prospected and mined a short time at the different camps in the Territory, located a ranch on Willow Creek; a year later went to the Yellowstone and traded with the Crows until the spring of 1869, when he went to the Bannack camps Wy. T.; next kept corral for herds of cattle, and that year the Sioux drove off all herds except his. In 1869-70 he traded with the Arappahoes; was held prisoner, but being taken sick with mountain fever, an Indian hauled him on a sled to Fort Fetterman. Returned to the Arappahoes and was again held prisoner until fall, when he was taken to the Muscleshell, where he escaped with his property. Sitting Bull was then at Washington; 1,800 or 1,900 lodges were in the Indian encampment on Tongue River, and fighting, scalping prisoners, and taking money were of frequent occurrence. August 31 the Crows and Sioux fought at Fort Muscleshell. Mr. Hardwick accompanied the Crows, who numbered 27; the Sioux 30. One Sioux was killed. Another fight occurred September 10, one Indian being killed. That fall Mr. Hardwick went to the Little Rockies, 20 miles above Fort Holly. October 31 a party of Sioux and Assiniboines attacked the trading post, but were driven off. February 4, while sitting in his cabin, Mr. Hardwick was attacked by two Crow Indians. He killed one, and wounded the other fatally. Though severely wounded, he left that night for Fort Browning, and was thirteen days making the trip, losing his way in the snow storm. Fortunately he met a party of hunters twelve miles from the fort. He remained at the fort until the spring of 1871, in employ of Government agents; afterward spent some time at Deer Lodge, Benton, and in the Sweet Grass country. In the winter of 1871 a party of Sioux stole their horses, but were followed on foot for 150 miles and the animals recovered. A subsequent unsuccessful attempt to recapture them was made. During this trip they had fights with the Piegans and Sioux, killing four, and with a body of 80 Sioux, who were driven off by the fifteen men in the party. Mr. Hardwick secured one scalp. In the winter of 1872 he started with five men for the British Possessions, hunting and wolving; went into winter quarters on Bow River, 100 miles from Whoop-up. Traded with the Indians; returned to Benton in the spring. While encamped on the Teton, Indians stole 37 horses. Mr. Hardwick with ten others and one half-breed followed them 200 miles, into the British Possessions; rain fell fourteen days; found 44 lodges of Crees and Assiniboines encamped in the Cyprus mountains, on Massacre river, and engaged them (May 20, 1873), from 3 p. m. until dark. Forty Indians were killed; one of the party,

Ed. Grace, was shot through the heart by an Indian, whose thigh was broken. The Indians captured were released. This was known as the Extra Edition Fight. Mr. Hardwick returned to Whoop-up in the fall, with six men, four women and a half-breed boy. They were attacked on Little Bow River, at midnight, by a party of Sioux, one of whom was killed; and again, on the Big Bow, when the Indians succeeded in driving them away from their wagons. Mr. Mullen of the party was shot eleven times, his wife once, and Charles Du Val's wife also; five horses were killed. Mr. Hardwick shortly after rescued the survivors. In 1876 he started a livery stable at Benton. He conducted a party of 148 men to the Black Hills without loss; was in the employ of General Crook when Lieutenant Kenny was killed; that fall opened a saloon at Deadwood, Dak.; also acted as private detective; captured Harry Williams, a murderer who had escaped from Knoxville, Tenn.; took him to Knoxville; suffered great privations in doing so; the county officers refused to pay the promised reward of $6,800; sued them, and the supreme court decided that they were not liable, holding county offices; afterward Mr. Hardwick arrested Patsy Stack, a murderer for whom $1,000 reward was offered. Mr. Hardwick served as deputy sheriff one year. He purchased a ranch on Owl Creek, continuing also in the livery business. He sold out in 1882 and came to Butte, where he deals in fine stock.

J. H. HARPER, of Harper & Baker, surveyors, Butte, has been engaged in mechanical work since 1866. In 1870 he came to Nevada. He built the first furnace for the Hecla company at Glendale. In 1878 he and Mr. Baker established their office at Butte. Mr. Harper was born at Harpersfield in 1847—a town patented from George III, king of Great Britain, by the great grandfather of O. F. Harper, father of J. H. He first studied engineering at the Franklin Engineering school, New York.; worked as machinist at Scranton, Pa., and came West as an employe of the railroad company, reaching the territory in 1870.

D. L. HARRIS, Butte, established his meat market April 1, 1880. Previous to that time this house was conducted by J. F. Potling, who located in the fall of 1879. Mr. Harris was born at Dayton, O., December 15, 1829, and in 1844 moved to Iowa, which state has been his home up to date of settlement here, with the exception of eight or nine years. In 1853 and 1854 he was in California, and in 1860 in Colorado. He has followed the butchering business for 37 years, also mining some. In 1862 he went to the Nez Perces mines; remained three months; wintered at Lewiston; in fall of 1863 came to Montana, and was in Alder gulch in the summer of 1864; was engaged in the butchering business at Helena, in 1865–6, being there at the time of high prices; in the fall of 1866 he went down the Missouri river from Benton to Omaha. Mr. Harris has been married three times, lastly to Mrs. Rosa Ricker on July 25, 1882, who died at Chicago, March 3, 1883.

C. H. HART, Butte, was born at Peoria, Ill., in 1837, where his parents, natives of Ireland, were old settlers. After leaving school he went to Minnesota, located in Kandiyohi county and engaged in farming. In 1861 Mr. Hart enlisted in company I, 7th Minnesota infantry, with which command he served through the war. Upon obtaining his discharge he left for Montana, arriving at Helena in 1866. He then commenced mining, which he followed up to 1883 at Butte, Silver Bow, Cedar creek, etc. Took charge of mines at Phillipsburg for Tower & Co. for nine years, acting as superintendent. In October, 1883, he came to Butte, bought out Connelly & Co.'s livery stable, which he now owns and manages.

JOHN H. HASSINGER, chief engineer Parrot mine, Butte, was born at Reading, Penn., March 29, 1839. After receiving a common school education he learned the trade of engineering at the Reading railroad shops. Followed railroading for three years, then left for California in 1858 and located at San Francisco. Worked at his trade two years in the Union Iron Works; then went to Livermore, Alameda Co., mined there one season, and located a ranch in same county, which he carried on for 12 years. This ranch he sold and removed to Virginia city, M. T. Held position as chief engineer at Baltimore mines from 1871 to 1877, then accepted a position at Bodie, Cal., as chief engineer of the Bechtal mines for nearly five years. May 31, 1881, he erected two engines at Bodie in Tailings' mill. On coming to Butte, M. T., he worked on repairs at the Alice mill for five months. He then assisted putting up engine at the Anaconda works, and on December 18, 1883, was appointed chief engineer of the Parrot mine, which position he now holds.

H. D. HAUSER, assistant cashier of the First National Bank, of Butte, was born in Pendleton Co., Ky., where he received a fair business education. In 1865 he came to Montana, and locating at Virginia City, obtained a position in the Internal Revenue Department, and so continued until 1868, when he returned to the States. After a brief visit he returned to Montana, and locating at Helena, engaged in speculating in mining interests and stocks for a period of three years. He then went to Cedar Creek, began the purchase of gold dust, and continued in that business one year, after which he went to Oregon, and purchasing 3,000 sheep, drove them into Montana, and remained in the sheep business until 1881. In 1878 Mr. Hauser moved to Butte, and there took charge of the banking business of S. T. Hauser & Co., they having at that time converted their private banking establishment into a National Bank, of which Mr. Hauser was manager for several months, prior to accepting the position of assistant cashier, which he still retains, being also interested in the affairs of the institution as stockholder. In 1882 Mr. Hauser was elected councilman of the city of Butte. (Vide History of Silver Bow.)

SIMON HAUSWIRTH, Butte, was born in Switzerland in 1844. In 1854 his parents and family came to the United States and located in Wisconsin. Here Mr. Hauswirth was raised on a farm. In 1863 he enlisted in the 35th Wis. Inf., with which he served until the close of the war. He was then transferred to Texas. Upon obtaining discharge in 1866 he returned to Wisconsin and engaged in farming. In the spring of 1870 he came to Montana, and located a ranch in Deer Lodge valley. In 1875 he removed to Butte; formed a partnership with his brother John, and opened the Mineral Hotel. After keeping this for two years they dissolved partnership, Mr. Hauswirth selling out. He then engaged in the livery business for two years. Mr. Hauswirth still leases same property. In September, 1882, he formed partnership with Mr. Tonk, and opened a saloon; purchased Tonk's interest in a short time, and admitted James Job into the firm. Mr. Hauswirth, besides carrying on the saloon, is interested in mining claims.

WM. HERRMANN, Butte, was born at Steinfelt, Bavaria, in 1838; there learned the trade of cabinet-maker, and at the age of twenty-one years emigrated to the United States; located at New York city, where he worked at his trade for one year; thence moved to Des Moines, Ia., where he worked until 1864, when he joined the stampede to Alder Gulch; worked there six months, then left for Last Chance, where he worked as carpenter and cabinet-maker until 1869. He then opened a furniture store, manufacturing by hand and horse-power. This business was carried on until 1872, when he went to California; thence to Alaska, and returning to California, located at Los Angeles, carrying on the cabinet business there for two years. In 1876, news of the Black Hills reaching him, he went there and followed cabinet making for two years. After leaving the Black Hills he located at Helena, and forming a partnership with his brother, carried on the furniture business for three years. He then sold out his interest and came to Butte, where he associated with M. Klee and T. Ehret, and they established what is now known as the Butte Furniture Company.

GEO. J. HILLEBRAND, Butte, foreman of Lexington Mill, was born in 1855 in Germany; at the age of 14 he emigrated to the United States, and was located in Eastern New York for a few years; then left for Missouri. Several years later he moved to California, learned the trade of mill man, and afterward went to Utah, where he worked in that capacity, and in 1881 came to Butte and began working in the Alice Mill where he had charge of the battery. In 1882 he was appointed foreman of the Lexington.

G. A. HINES, Butte, was born in Springfield, Mass., December 25, 1841, son of George A. and Ellen Hines. He received a common school education, and learned the watchmaker's trade in the Waltham watch factories; working several years in Springfield on watches and various models. In 1867 he went to Illinois and worked three years in the Elgin watch factory; assisted in establishing the watch factory at Springfield, Ill.; took charge of a portion of the Cornell watch factory, and was one of the organizers of the Rockford Watch Co., having an interest in the enterprise. He remained there until 1877; sold out and came to Montana, and, in company with Mr. Halberson, opened the first jewelry store in the city of Butte. Since coming to the territory he has been interested in mining, and is now in company with Mr. Wilter, working the Moody, Sanky and Kossuth mines under lease. Mr. Hines was married at Rockford, Ill., in December, 1863, to Miss Olive Beers. They have three children.

HOGE, BROWNLEE & Co., Butte. (See Banks and Bankers of Butte.)

GEORGE S. HOLBROOK, P. O. Butte, head carpenter Alice mining works, was born January 6, 1846, in McHenry Co., Ill., came to Alder Gulch in the fall of 1864, where he resided two years, when he visited California, and took up his residence at Los Angeles. He returned to Montana in May, 1880, and has served as head carpenter in the Alice Mining Works since that time. Mr. Holbrook was married in Utah to Miss Jane Bromhead.

D. G. HOLMAN, Butte, engineer at the Liquidator mine, has held that position for the last five years. He settled in Montana January 1, 1880, moving from Wyoming. Mr. Holman was born in Georgia, left that state in his youth, was raised, so to speak, on the Atlantic, as steamboat engineer. He served in the Brazilian navy for some time, also in that of Peru, and served along the coasts of Africa and the East Indies. He came west in 1857, was chief engineer of the Eureka mining works in California, and has been always connected with mining works since coming to the mountain region. Mr. Holman was married to Miss Mary Talbert, at the Hoosac Tunnel, Mass., in 1866.

LEVI E. HOLMES, M. D., Butte, born at Bridgeton, Cumberland Co., Me., in 1841, received his education in the academy there. At the age of 20 years he enlisted in Co. I, 15th Maine Vol. Inf., was appointed hospital steward, promoted Second Lieutenant of the Second Louisiana Engineers; next Assistant Surgeon of that command, and served until February 14, 1865. At that time he proceeded to New York City, took a regular course at Bellevue Hospital of the Medical College, and graduated in the class of 1866. He entered upon practice in Massachusetts; moved to Newmarket, N. H.; thence to Newark, N. J., and, receiving the commission of Assistant Surgeon at Camp Logan and Fort Klamath, Cal., August 10, 1867, proceeded at once to his post, holding the position until he resigned in 1870, when he came to Montana. He practiced the first year at Cedar Creek; in 1871 formed a partnership with Dr. A. H. Mitchell, which continued until 1875, when Dr. Holmes moved to Helena. In 1878 he established his office at Butte, in which city he now resides. He was married to Miss Sarah Hall of Oregon, in 1868. Dr. Holmes is Grand Marshal of the I. O. O. F., Grand Encampment, and P. G. M. of the society in this Territory.

HERMAN H. HORST, Butte, was born in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, April 7, 1839; emigrated to the United States at the age of 11; spent a few days in New York, then went to Newark, N. J., and worked for a milkman; after working four months he ran away and started in the vegetable business, with a capital of $10, after a few months he purchased a horse. In course of two years he had $35,000. He then removed to Hartford, Conn., and purchased a house and lot for $3,000. Four years later sold this properey to Colt's Factory for $10,000; then removed to Kansas in 1857; was elected the first Captain of the German Turners; removed to Colorado; was elected Colonel of the First Volunteers of Colorado; resigned in four months and came to Montana. Crossing Snake river in boxes, one of them turned over, and Mr. Horst lost $10,000, and came very near losing his wife. Indians followed them to Fort Lemhi, doing no harm with the exception of stealing a pony. The party crossing after him had fifty-four killed. After leaving the fort he came across a train which had been burned, and rescued one woman who had been buried alive. He then went to Salt Lake. Here they met Brigham Young, who took charge of them three months, until they were entirely rested. Mr. Horst then left for Virginia City. Upon arrival he started a restaurant, his wife assisting in the management; ran this for six months, clearing $20 a day. Leased the Tabor house for three years for $600 a month; leased portions of the house out so as to be able to clear $600 a month. After the lease expired he began mining at Yellow Jacket; spent five years speculating in mines, purchasing one for $120,000 In 1878 he returned to Virginia, City kept the Virginia saloon for two years; then went to San Francisco and started the Palace Bakery and Restaurant. During this time he sold as high as 4,000 meals a day. Had all the Chinese trade of the town, but leaving a party in charge, the business broke up. In 1880 he came to Butte and started the Milwaukee saloon, which he keeps at present date. Mr. Horst is also largely interested in mines.

C. B. HOUSER, of the firm of C. B. Houser & Co., Butte, was born in Fleming Co., Ky., in 1832. A few years later his parents removed to Indiana. Here Mr. Houser received a common school education, remaining until grown. He then went to Jacksonville, Ore., and mined two years for the California Placer Co. He then prospected one year in the vicinity, and then traveled from place to place mining and prospecting at nearly every camp in the territory. In 1865 he located in Virginia City, where he mined until 1877. He then removed to Butte and opened a wholesale liquor house. In 1881 he formed a partnership with Pfouts & Hamilton and increased the stock of liquors and cigars, being now able to meet all demands. Mr. Houser was elected members of the 12th legislature, representing Deer Lodge county.

GEORGE W. HOWE, Butte, one of the pioneers of Alder Gulch, mined there from 1863 to 1866; crossed the divide to Emigrant Gulch in the latter year and was engaged there until 1869, when he returned to Alder Gulch to operate a quartz mill. In 1872 he revisited the States, the first visit in twenty-four years, returned to Butte the same year, then traveled for one year in Mexico; was a ranchman in the Gallatin valley in later years, and organized a party of fifteen men to pursue the Indians, who killed his neighbor. Those Indians they found and killed—only two of his company being wounded in the affair. Mr. Howe was a member of the Vigilantes of Alder Gulch, and assisted the other "good men and true," who executed the notorious road-agent, George Ives. (Vide Gen. Hist)

CHASTEEN E. HUMPHREY, Butte, was born at Charlottesville, Albemarle Co., Va., November 18, 1829. His parents during his infancy moved to Kentucky, where he was apprenticed in 1844 to learn the carpenter's trade. He afterward visited Agency City, Iowa, and Ralls and Marion Cos., Mo., where he spent about three years working at his trade. Was one and a-half years in Lewis county, returned to Marion county, and in 1851 started for Salt Lake City with Maj. Blaikie; arriving in a Mormon camp on the Missouri river he left Maj. Blaikie and returned to Palmyra, Mo., journeyed overland in 1854 to California, arriving in Dutch Flat in August, engaging in mining; the following May he moved to Nevada City, and followed blacksmithing and mining; went to Washoe, Nev., in 1859, laid out the present City of Virginia in that territory, and engaged in freighting and blacksmithing until 1863; returned to Nevada City, Cal., and in 1866 came to Montana on horseback, arriving in the Butte camp June 5. He at once began mining, and in September, 1866, platted the present City of Butte. In October, accompanied by G. W. Beal, he crossed the Cœur d'Alene mountains to Portland, Ore., thence proceeded to San Francisco and Nevada City, and in February, 1867, returned to Butte, which has since been his home. Mr. Humphrey was married to Miss Maria Sutte, December 11, 1850. They are the parents of eight children.

G. O. HUMPHREY, Butte, born in Todd Co., Ky., January 24, 1833, moved with his parents to Iowa in 1844, and to Canton, Mo., in 1845, thence to Ralls county, and in 1848 or 1849 to Palmyra, Marion county, where he resided until April, 1854, when, accompanied by his brother, he crossed the plains to California, mined in Placer county one year, moved to Nevada City in 1855, thence to North Bloomfield, where he remained until early in 1856, when he visited the South Fork of the North Yuba; returned shortly after to Nevada and engaged in rebuilding that town after the fire. In 1857 he took a party of prospectors to the summit of the Sierra Nevada mountains, and there discovered the mysterious stone fortifications. In 1858 he went to Vancouver's Island, returned in the fall to Nevada City. In 1859 he opened the first meat market in old Virginia City; revisited California, Oregon and Idaho in 1862, and in the spring of 1863 started across the mountains with several comrades, arrived in the Bitter Root valley, and proceeded to Bannack, thence to Alder Gulch, and in 1864 to Emigrant Gulch. Returning from the Yellowstone, he made a short stay at Virginia City and proceeded to Butte, where, in company with Wm. Allison, he located some claims—they being the only residents in the vicinity in 1864. In the fall of 1865 he took out the largest nugget ever found in Montana, which he sold to Tutt & Donnell, who entrusted it to him for delivery in New York city in the spring of 1866. Returning to Montana that year he put in the first water ditch in the vicinity of Butte, and in 1868, he and his brother commenced the Atlantic and Pacific Ditch. He visited the Black Hills in 1877-78; made a trip to the Goose Creek mountains, U. T., in 1878, thence to the Salmon Mountain district in search of cinnabar ore, which he found in small quantities. On returning to Butte he resumed mining, and is now engaged running a tunnel 475 feet long to tap three leads. Mr. Humphrey served as the first clerk and recorder of Deer Lodge county, having been appointed by the first governor in 1864.

JOSEPH A. HYDE, banker, Butte City. (Vide General and Local History.)

GEORGE W. IRVIN, Butte, was born at Chicago, Ill., February 22, 1844, of which city his father, J. B. Irvin was an early settler. In 1848 the family moved to Pennsylvania; thence in 1853 to southern Illinois, and subsequently to Dubuque, Iowa, where his father had railroad construction contracts. In 1861 George W. enlisted in a three-months regiment, but owing to his youth was rejected. In July, 1863, he assisted John Bozeman in organizing a party for northern Idaho; but when 125 miles from the Platte (where Buffalo, Wy., now stands), they were intercepted by the Sioux and Cheyennes. After parlying a few days Mr. Irvin and another man were sent to Ft. Laramie for relief, which the commandant refused, whereupon the party returned to the Platte river. Bozeman, Irvin and eight others left the party, when it was decided to return, and each with a horse, one day's rations, rifle and ammunition, struck forward at midnight to pursue their journey. In August, 1863, the little party crossed the summit of the Belt mountains, where their eyes were greeted with a view of the Gallatin Valley. Mr. Irvin named the gap Bozeman Pass. Where they camped that night is called Bozeman City. At the three forks they met two white men, who informed them of the Alder Gulch discovery. Mr. Irvin reached Bannack, August 22, 1863; mined there, at Alder, and at California Gulch for two years, was appointed one of the Commissioners to codify the laws in 1865, and was also clerk in Col. Sanders' office. In 1866 he was appointed assistant assessor of revenue, of Deer Lodge, Missoula and Beaverhead, served as deputy United States collector, Deputy United State marshal; was first postmaster at Deer Lodge, 1866-7; deputy sheriff of Deer Lodge in 1874-6; public administrator of Deer Lodge, 1876; clerk of 2d judicial district, in 1879; sheriff of Silver Bow, 1882-4, together with holding the offices of justice of peace and United States court commissioner. From 1870 to 1874 he was engaged in mercantile and mining operations with his brother, Thomas H. Irvin, jr., now of Custer county. In 1881 Mr. Irvin moved to Butte city. He was married in Deer Lodge Valley October 23, 1867, to Miss Bettie H. Irvine, daughter of Thomas H. Irvine, one of the pioneers of the Territory. Doctor C. N. Bowie and Miss Mollie Irvine (cousin of Mrs. Irvin) were married at the same time. Three hundred citizens of the Territory attended the reception at the Deer Lodge hotel, among whom were a few Indian women, wives of white settlers. The affair was one of those joyous ones peculiar to the time and place, which can never be reproduced in modern Montana. This plain recital of events in the life of this pioneer is all that may be said to give him his proper place in the history of the Territory.

CALEB E. IRVINE, Butte, clerk of probate court, was born in Robertson Co., Tenn., September 4, 1825, where he received a fair business education. At 14 years of age he accepted a position as clerk in Nashville, Tenn., where he continued until 1843, after which he clerked on a steamer on the Mississippi river and in Clarksville, Tenn., until 1846. He then enlisted in Fremont's Regiment; was subsequently transferred to the third cavalry and served through the Mexican War under General Scott, and in 1848 was promoted to a Lieutenancy. In 1849 Mr. Irvine crossed the plains with his regiment to Oregon. In 1851 he resigned and came to Montana in company with Major John Owens, at that time trading with the Indians in the Bitter Root valley. Mr. Irvine also engaged in trading with Indians, emigrants and Mormons, until 1856, and in 1859 raised the first crop in the Bitter Root valley, except such as had been raised at Fort Owen and other places by the Jesuit missionaries. In 1860 he transported the first annuity goods from Ft. Benton to Ft. Owen for the Flathead Indians. He was in the employ of the Indian Department a short time, and in 1864 went to Virginia City and there passed the winter of 1864–5, as a clerk of the Legislature. He was appointed the first probate judge of Deer Lodge county, after which he served as county clerk of Deer Lodge and deputy clerk of that county for a period of two years. In the spring of 1867 he came to Butte and served in the capacity of Justice of the Peace until 1871. He then returned to Deer Lodge and served as Justice of the Peace until 1873, after which he was probate judge of that county until 1875, when he again came to Butte and engaged in mining and trading until 1878. During that fall he was re-elected Justice of the Peace and served two years, and in the spring of 1881 was elected Probate Judge of Silver Bow county for two years; he is now engaged as clerk of the probate court of Silver Bow county, and was reelected judge of probate in November 1884. Mr. Irvine was married in 1866 to Mrs. Reiswick, of England, by whom he has two children. As an American pioneer of the Territory Mr. Irvine ranks among the very foremost.

W. M. JACK, Butte, was born at Glasgow, Scotland, February 28, 1838. At ten years of age he came with his parents to the United States, located with them at Pittsburg, Penn., and a few years later removed to Maryland. After working several years in the coal mines Mr. Jack left for Duquoin, Ill. There he clerked for two years in a general store. In 1858 he moved to Salt Lake City, thence to Colorado, afterward to Idaho, where he was engaged in mining seven years. In 1866 he located at Helena. There he began clerking for Mr. Kenna, and in 1874 was admitted to the firm and the business was carried on under the firm name of Kenna & Jack. In 1878 Mr. Jack came to Butte and opened a branch house. In April, 1883, this firm dissolved partnership, Mr. Jack purchasing Mr. Kenna's interest in the Butte house. Since that time Mr. Jack has carried on the business individually. In June, 1883, a branch house was opened at Anaconda. Mr. Jack was married to Miss Josephine McGovern at Helena, in 1873.

HENRY JACOBS, Butte, the senior partner of the firm of H. Jacobs & Co., was born in Baden, Germany. When nine years of age he emigrated with his parents to America, was brought up in the Southern States, and was a resident of Mississippi during the late war. He came to Montana in 1866 and opened a clothing store at Diamond, in company with Mr. L. Marks, under the firm name of H. Jacobs & Co. In 1869 he closed out at Diamond and removed to Deer Lodge, where he opened a similar store and carried on the business alone until 1876, when he removed to Butte City. He was one of the first merchants in the place, and has been in business here continuously since. He erected the first brick residence in the city, where he now resides, and has made other substantial improvements. He has been chosen to fill several positions of public honor and trust, and has always discharged his duties with ability and fidelity. He was elected the first mayor of Butte, and served one term; was chosen one of the School Trustees and served three years, and has held many minor offices. He is prominently identified with several secret and benevolent societies, being an officer in the I. O. O. F., and President of the Hebrew Benevolent Association.

H. JACOBS & CO., Butte, is composed of Henry Jacobs and Herman Ganz. The business was established at Butte by Mr. Henry Jacobs, who conducted it alone until 1879, when he formed the existing partnership with Mr. Ganz. They carry an average stock valued at about $70,000.

J. C. JOHNSTON, M. D., one of the leading regular physicians of Butte, was born in Fayette, Penn., in 1850; was educated at Wooster College, Ohio, from which he graduated in 1869. He took a thorough course at the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, and received the degree of M. D. in 1875. Dr. Johnston commenced practice at Connellsville, Pa., in 1876. One year later he visited Montana and made a stay of a few months at Phillipsburg. In the winter of 1877–8 he moved to Butte, where he has built up a fine professional name and large practice. Dr. Johnston is one of the physicians to the Sisters' Hospital at Butte.

JOHN JOLLEY, Butte, came to the Territory in 1870, locating at Butte, where he has resided since. He was in partnership with a man named Black, and the firm was known as Black & Jolley, being located corner of Main and Park streets, but Mr. Jolley purchased Mr. Black's interest and moved to his present location, where he has the largest blacksmith and wagon manufacturing establishment in the city. Mr. Jolley is a son of John and Mary Jolley, and was born in New York city, January 3, 1832. When eight years of age he went to Syracuse, same State. Leaving Syracuse he went to Arizona, and was gone about five years. Returning to the States, he next came to Montana, by way of the Union Pacific Railroad. Was married to Ella Brush, a native of Ohio, July 16, 1878, and has four children.

RICHARD S. JONES, Assayer, Silver Bow Mine, P. O. Butte, was born in Tyrone Co., Ireland, December 26, 1836. After leaving school he clerked in a dry goods store; in 1856 he emigrated to the United States, and located at Amboy, Ill., where he was salesman in a dry goods house for several years. He then left for St. Louis, in the spring of 1861; enlisted as a soldier for the protection of emigrants at Walla Walla. Upon arrival, finding the Indian troubles had subsided, the company was disbanded, and he joined in the Salmon River stampede being one of the first to reach the mines. Returning to Walla Walla, the same winter, he entered the employ of the Quartermaster, serving two years at that point. In the spring of 1865 he went to British Columbia, returned to Montana after a few months, and mined at McClellan Gulch. Spent two seasons at Maginness Gulch. In 1868 returned to British Columbia and mined at Perry's Creek one winter. Returned to Montana and prospected until the spring of 1870, then located at Butte and carried on placer mining for five years. He assisted in locating and obtaining patents for the Silver Bow Mine, and after the mill was built he accepted the position of assayer, which he holds at the present time.

WESLEY W. JONES, Butte, born in Rochester, N. Y., April 25, 1841, is a son of Justice B. and Ruth R. Jones. In 1851 his parents moved to Belvidere, Boone Co., Ill., where he remained until the breaking out of the war, when he enlisted as captain of Company B, 15th Ill. Infantry, enlisting first in the three months' call and serving two years and ten months, during which time he participated in the battles of Shiloh, Vicksburg, Natchez, Fort Donelson and various other engagements, and was mustered out at Memphis, Tenn., after which he returned home and spent a few months in visiting his relatives and friends. Then moved to Virginia City, M. T., on June 14, 1864, and engaged as clerk in a mercantile store, where he continued eight months. During the season of 1865 he devoted his time to the occupation of prospecting at Lewiston, and in 1866 engaged in mercantile trade, which he continued until 1873, having the main business located at Reynolds, with branch stores at Elk creek, Yreka and Topo Deep, being also interested in mining at Elk creek and Topo Deep from 1867 to 1870, and in 1869 was elected sheriff, which position he occupied four years, and in 1874 received the appointment of under-sheriff, which position he held several years, also serving as deputy U. S. marshal under Marshal W. F. Wheeler from 1869 to 1874, and for several years past has been interested in mining pursuits in and around Butte, which he still continues. In 1881 he became a partner with a Mr. Warren in conveyancing business, which he dropped in 1882 and took charge of the works in the Belle mine, being now employed by the firm of Lee W. Foster, of Butte city Mr. Jones has been quite an active resident of the territory, having twice served as chairman of the Territorial Central Committee, being also one of the foremost in the organization of the Masonic lodge at Deer Lodge city, as also one of the organizers of the Grand Army of the Republic at Butte, and during the past never swerved from the right in assisting in the good works of the Vigilantes, of which order he was a worthy member.

GERMAINE A. KELLOGG, Butte, Deputy U. S. Mineral Surveyor, was born in 1850 at New Haven, Conn., moved with his parents to northern New York in childhood, and there, in later years, received an academic education, and fitted himself for the profession of civil engineer. He then entered the employ of the Ontario Lake Shore R. R. Co.; was subsequently employed on the N. Y. Oswego and Midland R. R.; next opened an office at Rochester, N. Y.; moved to Canada, where he held the position of Division Engineer on the Ontario R. R., and in 1873 came to Helena, M. T., where he was appointed Dept. Ag. Surveyor for Montana, and filled that position for five years in conjunction with that of D. M. S., to which he was appointed in 1874. In 1878 he moved to Deer Lodge, where he resided until 1881, when he took up his residence at Butte. Mr. Kellogg has served several terms as surveyor for the counties of Deer Lodge and Silver Bow. He is a member of the Masonic society, and in politics a Republican.

HARRY C. KESSLER, Butte, Superintendent of the Clear Grit mine, and also interested in other prominent mines, including the Banker and Oro Butte lodes, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1844; was educated in the public schools of that city, and at the age of 17 left the city high school and entered the army as Second Lieutenant Company G, 104th Regt. Pa. Vols. He was promoted, and held the position of captain on detached service, acting as Asst. Commissary of Subsistence. He received a gunshot wound at the battle of Fair Oaks. He served over two years in the Union Army. Mr. Kessler was engaged in the lithographic business for nine years in Philadelphia. He came to Montana in 1874, became one of the proprietors of the "New North-West", and in 1876 came to Butte and established the "Butte Miner," an independent paper. Was elected one of the commissioners for Silver Bow county in 1882. He was married at Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1876, to Miss Josephine A., daughter of William Dilworth, of that place. (See General History, and references in other sketches.)

HIRAM KNOWLES, Butte, senior partner of the law firm of Knowles & Forbis, was born at Hampden, Penobscot Co., Me., January 18, 1834. In 1837 he accompanied his parents to Hancock Co., Ill., and settled in that part now known as Warren county. A few years later the family moved to Iowa, from which State his father and himself went to California in 1850, returning to Keokuk, Ia., the following year. In 1854 he entered Denmark Academy, Ia.; subsequently studied two years at Antioch College; began the study of law in Judge Miller's office, Keokuk, in 1858, and was admitted to the bar in 1859. He attended lectures at the Cambridge Law School, graduated in 1860, and began the practice of his profession at Keokuk. In 1862 he moved to Dayton, Mo., was appointed District Attorney for Humboldt county, and elected Probate Judge of that county. He moved to Idaho City in 1865, and pursued the practice of his profession there until the following spring, when he came to Bear Gulch (Reynolds City, then a place of about 1,500 inhabitants, but now deserted or unknown), bought a placer claim in Deep Gulch, and mined there until the fall of 1866, when he returned to Keokuk and practiced law there until 1868, when he was appointed one of the Supreme Judges of Montana. He filled this position with distinction from July, 1868, to August, 1879. In 1881 he formed the existing partnership, and in March, 1882, took up his residence in Butte City. Judge Knowles was married at Athens, Mo., on April 12, 1871, to Miss Mary C., daughter of Julius C. Curtiss, a native of Lima, O.

R. C. KNOX, Butte, born in Westmoreland Co., Pa., March 11, 1838, moved to Cleveland, O., in 1843 and resided in that city until 1848. During the latter year he went to Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., in charge of shipping interests. In May, 1850, he visited St. Paul, Minn., and there engaged in the produce commission business and building trade. In June, 1862, he joined the Fisk expedition to Montana, served as wagon master during the trip, and arrived at Fort Benton September 6, 1862. He proceeded soon after to the Deer Lodge valley, thence to Bannack, and in 1863 to Alder gulch. On the establishment of the territory in May, 1864, he assisted in framing a code of laws for her government. He was appointed the first sheriff of Madison county by the first commissioners of that county, and served in that office until the first regular election in October, 1865. In 1868 he moved to St. Paul and was appointed Superintendent of the N. P. R. R. Co's dock and canal at that point. In 1874 he returned to Madison county, and the following year moved to Silver Bow county, where he has been engaged in milling business for several years. In 1882 he was elected probate judge, and filled that office with marked ability. He was married to Miss Elizabeth Hall (a native of Canada) at Monroe, Wis., in October, 1862. They are the parents of two daughters, one of whom is the wife of Headly Deugan, of St. Paul. Judge Knox is a member of the Masonic society, a Republican, and as genial as he is large in stature.

P. A. LARGEY, of the Butte Hardware Company, Butte, was born in Perry Co., O., in March, 1838. There he attended school, completing his education at St. Joseph, O. At 23 years of age he went to Omaha, Neb., and engaged in buying and selling cattle for two years. He then left for Montana in charge of a train of 60 wagons for Ed. Creighton; arrived at Virginia city in the fall of 1865, and in the spring of 1866 opened a grocery house at Helena, which he sold out that fall. Then began freighting to Salt Lake city, purchasing mule trains from Majors & Russel, and that year carried $60,000 worth of gold out to Salt Lake, with mule train; also embarked in the cattle business in the Jefferson valley. For a short time he carried on a general merchandise business in Virginia city, but closing out stock accepted a position in the grocery house of Creighton & Ohle; served four years, then opened a hardware store in that city, which he carried on for eight years, selling out in 1880 to Elling, Knight & Co. Coming to Butte, he formed a stock company, known as the Butte Hardware Company, with A. J. Davis, president; Jas. F. Talbot, vice-president; S. B. Rice, secretary; and P. A. Largey, superintendent. In 1883 that firm established a branch house at Anaconda. Mr. Largey built in 1867 the lines for the Western Union Telegraph Company from Virginia city to Helena. In 1868 built for same company from Helena to Ft. Benton; in 1869, between Helena and Deer Lodge; in 1870 between Helena & Bozeman; and in 1879 built the line between Deer Lodge and Butte. This was afterward known as the Montana Central Telegraph Company. Upon the arrival of the Northern Pacific railroad in the territory, sold a portion of line to the government. Mr. Largey was also engaged in the banking business in Virginia city and Helena. He was married in 1877 to Miss Lula Sellers, of Chicago.

SAMUEL B. LARMOUR, Walkerville, came to this Territory in 1874; stopped at Silver Star until the fall of 1875, when he came to Butte and engaged in mining.

At the time of his arrival in Butte there were about 100 houses and 400 people in the camp. He has since become largely interested in mines, and with his brother, W. M. Larmour, owns several that are patented. One of these mines, the "Mariah," is now under bond for $25,000. S. B. Larmour was born at Alexandria, Va., in January, 1827, and after leaving there went to California, and for thirty years lived on the Western Coast, never having been farther east than Ogden, Utah. W. M. Larmour, Butte, was born in 1828, and came to Montana in 1878, from California; mined at Comstock, Austin, Reese River, and in the copper mining district of California. He has been engaged in mining ever since coming west, mostly placer mining; resides with his brother at Walkerville.

C. X. LARRABEE, proprietor and manager of the Mountain View Mine, settled at Butte in the winter of 1875–6, and has been engaged in mining in the camp since that time. Mr. Larrabee is a native of Portville, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y. When quite young he moved to Wisconsin, in which state he continued to reside until 1875, when he came to Montana. During five years of his residence here he held an interest in the Anaconda Mine, which he sold to the present operators; he still holds 35 acres of mining lands, including the Mountain View, Shannon and Manitou mines. In August, 1882, he opened the Mountain View lead, and has mined to a depth of over 525 feet. He it was who sunk the shaft of the Mountain Boy mine to a depth of 514 feet, supposed to have been the deepest shaft sunk by horse-power in the territory. His brother, referred to in the history of Deer Lodge and Butte, is one of the leading bankers of Montana.

ROD. D. LEGGAT, Butte, proprietor of mines in the Summit valley, Highland, Boulder and Cardwell districts, was born at Albany, N. Y., in 1841, moved to Michigan, where in 1862 he raised a company for the Michigan sharpshooters, of which command he was commissioned captain. In 1865 he came to Ft. Benton as supercargo of a steamer loaded with general merchandise. After this he became interested in mining at Dry Gulch. On the discovery of Highland he moved to that point, and carried on a general store from 1866 to 1873. He is sole proprietor of the mining property of Highland Gulch, where he has three miles of the ditch (begun in 1877) completed. He is also interested in the Point-of-Rocks, Copper and Vipond districts. Each of his claims is rich in mineral, and all await only development to surrender their wealth of precious metals.

I. I. LEWIS, Ketchum, Idaho, was born at Meriden, Conn., May 7, 1825; settled with his parents in Illinois in 1831; moved to Minnesota in 1847, and was the first white citizen of Minneapolis, where he built the first store in 1854. In 1858 he located the village of Watertown, west of Minneapolis; came to Montana in 1871, located at Clancy, where he leased and worked the Legal Tender mine, and afterward purchased it of Jas. Stultz. In 1872 he formed a company comprising himself, Benj. S. Bull, C. H. Petit and H. J. McKee. In November, 1871, they shipped the first ore to the smelter of Sturrett, Lathrop & Marsh, near Jefferson City, and during the winter, shipped ore to the Helena Smelter. In the spring of 1872 Mr. Lewis shipped the first ore from the Legal Tender to Swansea, and in September shipped some to Wm. Nolan, which was also sent out of the Territory. In 1873 he shipped ore to Frieburg at a cost of $52 per ton, and found his best market there, the ore yielding 400 ounces of silver, 30 per cent of lead, with a small per cent of zinc. In 1875 the shaft was the deepest vertical one ever sunk in Montana to that date. The mine closed down, owing to the strong flow of water. In March, 1876, he took charge of the Rumley mine, near Wickes, shipping the ores to St. Louis, Mo., and New York, getting an average assay of 140 ounces of silver per ton, and 32 per cent lead. In 1877 he was superintendent of the Hope Works, at Phillipsburg, for a St. Louis company. In 1878 he moved to Butte as ore purchaser for the First National Bank of Helena, and in September entered Hauser & Co's bank as book-keeper. In the spring of 1880 he purchased his assaying outfit, and proceeded to the Wood River country, where, on May 3, 1880, he located on the site of the present town of Ketchum, Idaho. Two weeks later a prospector discovered the Elkhorn mine, which Mr. Lewis purchased for $12,000. From this mine he shipped the first ore to Salt Lake ever shipped from Wood River district. In 1883 the mine declared $136,000 dividends. Mr. Lewis and Geo. P. Hodson platted the town of Ketchum, which in 1883 claimed 1,000 inhabitants, and one of the largest smelters in America. Thus he may be called the founder of three important centers of settlement in the United States. He assisted in the original survey of Minneapolis and as Deputy Recorder of Hennepin county, recorded the first deed for a lot in that city. He was elected to the Minnesota Legislature in 1863; served in the Council of Montana in 1875 and in 1877, and has taken a full part in the progress of the trans-Mississippi country. Mr. Lewis was married in 1852 to Miss Georgina, daughter of C. W. Christmas, of Minneapolis, Minn. One of their sons, Horace Lewis, is manager of his father's mercantile, mining and banking interests, while Geo. J. Lewis is editor of the Ketchum Keystone, a weekly newspaper. Mrs. J. H. Ritchie, wife of the leading dentist of Ketchum, is a daughter of Mr. Lewis; another daughter is attending Holyoke College, while their third son, now ten years of age, resides with his parents.

FRED. LOEBER, Butte city, arrived at Alder gulch in 1865, thence proceeded to Blackfoot, where for a time he engaged in mining, afterward in butchering. In the fall of 1868 he went to Deer Lodge, and after eight months to Pioneer, where he remained until 1872. Then moving to Helena he was engaged in mining until the spring of 1873 in Last Chance. During the summer of 1875 he herded cattle on the plains for other parties, and in the fall came to Butte, the first two months working for wages, and then buying the property he now owns—Butte meat market, California brewery, Eagle bakery and a vegetable store connected with the other three buildings. Since coming to Butte Mr. Loeber has accumulated property rapidly, having made all that he now owns in this place. His is the oldest established butchering house in the place. He built the first public hall in 1876, called Loeber Hall, now used as the California brewery; also brought the first roller skates here that were seen in the place. When he first arrived he engaged in different pursuits, driving stage coach, hauling wood, etc., and afterward went into the butchering business. Dealing in cattle and sheep is his principal occupation at present. In Sioux city, Ia., Mr. Loeber enlisted in a volunteer pioneer company to make a new road from Omaha to Virginia city that was ordered by the government. The party were corraled by the Sioux and Cheyennes for 13 days in one place and eight of the company were killed. The company consisted of 460 men, commanded by Col. Sawyers, of Sioux city, Ia. They were corraled on the head of Tongue river. While in that predicament three men were dispatched by night to Gen. Connors, encamped near the Missouri river, and he sent re-enforcements, commanded by Cap. Brown, of California. Horses and men experienced a great deal of suffering from thirst before reaching Powder river, and had to make two dry camps without water. Ned Hedges, of the firm of Hedges Bros., prominently known at Sioux city, was killed and scalped on the east side of Powder river, while hunting for water. The company made the road, however, and established it from Sioux city to Virginia city. The men started May 22, but did not reach their destination until the following October. Mr. Loeber was married in June, 1882, to Miss Otto, a native of Germany.

J. H. LYNCH, Butte, was born at Galena, Ill., a state of which his people were pioneers. In 1867 he moved to Dakota, where for fifteen years he divided his attention between ranching in Dakota, mining and lumbering in the Black Hills, and official life as deputy sheriff of Orange county, and deputy assessor of Lead City district. He came to Montana in 1881, opened a produce house at Butte, and was next employed as book-keeper by Lavelle & Co. In the summer of 1883 he moved to Anaconda, where he is interested in the Homestake Hotel with Mr. Mather, also in the livery establishment; is agent for the Montana Lumber and Produce Co., and representative of J. C. Savory & Co. Mr. Lynch was married to Miss Mary Lackie, March 30, 1880.

W. W. MCCALL, Butte, was born at Millersburg, Holmes Co. O., November 15, 1845. In 1846 his parents moved to Van Buren Co., Ia., where he was engaged in farming until 1866, at which time he came to Montana, and first located in Alder Gulch. There he was engaged in farming until 1868, when he went to Silver Star, where he resumed ranching for one year, when he went to Spring Creek, and remained until 1875. He then went to Butte City, where he went into the hotel and boarding house business, also engaging in teaming and wood business, and continued two years, after which he again turned his attention to ranching, in the Jefferson valley, until May, 1880, when he moved to his present location, and has since given his attention to the hotel business and the raising of stock, and on the 28th day of July, 1882, received the appointment of postmaster at the Grace post office, Jefferson Co., M. T., Mr. McCall was married on Fish Creek, M. T., on the 16th day of March, 1873, to Miss Celeste Grace Jordan. They are the parents of three children.

JEFFERSON MCCAULEY, P. O. Divide, born in Venango, Pa., February 10, 1843; farmed for a short time, and learned the blacksmith's trade in his native county; came to Alder Gulch in 1864. In 1871 he took up his present ranch on the Big Hole, and is now extensively engaged in agriculture and stock-growing. He was married October 13, 1869, to Miss N. Shriver. They are the parents of four children.

JOHN MCCLOSKEY, Butte, from Dubuque Co., Ia, came to Montana in 1865, but returned the same year. In 1873 he revisited the mountain region. James and Henry McCloskey, brothers of John, came to the territory in 1874 and 1875 respectively. On arriving here they cast aside their profession as railroad engineers, and adopted that of mining. In company with Mr. Mulholland, they are owners of the Big Timber mine, situate five miles east of Butte. This mine presents exceedingly rich prospects, and bids fair to repay them for years of hardship and toil among the Rockies. They are also interested in the Silver Crown, Mountain Chief and Park Lead mines, all of which are undoubtedly of superior merit.

DAVID MCCRANOR, Butte, was born at Germantown, O., January 8, 1841; received a business education; emigrated to California in 1856, and engaged in mining at Johnson Bar, on the Scott river; returned to Ohio in 1857, and in November, 1858, started for Pike's Peak, wintering in St. Joseph, Mo. In March, 1859, he with six companions started across the plains, but his comrades became discouraged and returned to the States. Arriving at Pike's Peak he mined in Russell's gulch. In 1860 he went to Leadville, found only seven men there before him, and with three companions erected the first house in that camp. During 1861 and 1862 he was employed by Field & Leiter, of Chicago, and in company with Mr. A. Woods, traveled through the greater portion of Colorado, locating mines for that firm. In 1863 he came to Montana, and locating at Alder gulch, was soon after appointed sheriff; in the spring of 1864 he was elected to that office in the Summit district. During that season he prospected for five months in British Columbia. Returning to Alder gulch, he mined and was in mercantile business. In the spring of 1867 he was elected sheriff of the county, and closed out his business. He was the only Republican elected on the ticket. He served two years, and then went to Silver Bow, where he engaged in mercantile business in company with Messrs. Hamilton, Houtz, and Hauser for one year and a half. He visited the East, but soon returned, and locating at Sheridan, M. T., again engaged in merchandise trade and mining, in company with his former partner, Mr. Hamilton. They disposed of their mercantile business in 1879, but still continue mining operations in that district.

WM. MCDERMOTT, P. O. Butte, was born at Milwaukee, Wis., in 1850. After leaving school he learned the trade of engineer, working three years at Fulton City. He then went to Chicago and learned the trade of ship and bridge carpenter; was appointed foreman for Munsen & Broughton; put up the trussroots at Joliet, Ill.; also bridge and buildings on the Chicago & Paducah railroad, and the C. B. & Q. railroad; was superintendent of work on the Polk street bridge, Chicago; superintended the building of bridges between the Red and Missouri rivers for the Northern Pacific railroad. In 1874 he came to Montana and engaged in placer mining at Overland gulch. One year later he made the Meadow Brook discovery; worked one year; came to Butte in 1876, and took position as millwright in the Centennial mill; held the same position in the Monroe, Lexington and Dexter; in 1878 built the Clipper mill; purchased the Belle mine in 1879, forming partnership with Lebelle. After taking out $60,000 worth of ore, he sold the Belle mine to C. T. Meader for $100,000; purchased five-eighths of the Liquidator mine in April, 1882, and is its superintendent. This mine has been very productive. Mr. McDermott is also interested largely in other mines in the vicinity of Butte.

PETER MCDERMOTT, Butte, was born at Chicago, Ill., February 22, 1855. After leaving school, at the age of twelve, worked as civil engineer and surveyor until eighteen years old. Assisted his brother in Illinois and Indiana one summer building bridges; since then has been lumbering, also working as mechanical engineer in Dakota and Montana; located at Butte in 1881; held position as foreman in mine for one year; resigned that position to take charge of the Liquidator mine.

D. F. MCDEVITT, contractor, Butte, was born at Londonderry City, Ireland, May 27, 1850; came to the United States in 1864; settled in California, and was engaged in mining and building throughout that State from 1868 to 1880, when he came to Montana. He has been engaged in his present business at Butte for over four years.

DENNIS MCDONALD, Butte, was born at St. Louis, Mo., in 1853. After leaving school he entered the shops of the Northern Mo. R. R. Co., learned the trade of engineer, remained with the company five years, came to Butte in 1877, and at once began work placing in machinery at the Anselmo, Morning Star and Shonbar. Mr. McDonald afterward ran an engine at Shonbar for a short time. During the setting up of machinery he experienced great difficulty in obtaining material to use with them; had to cut up ropes, bags, etc., to obtain a sufficient amount. After leaving Shonbar Mr. McDonald had charge of placing machinery in Legal Tender mine. In 1879 he assumed charge of the Colusa engine. At present has charge of the Mountain View engine. During Mr. McDonald's experience of seven years as an engineer in Butte, he has devoted especial attention to machinery under his charge, and by promptness in answering the bells, has escaped wounding any men in the mines.

ED. MCGOVERN, Butte, an employe of the Silver Bow Mining Co., was born in Iowa in 1856. In 1879 he moved to Idaho, where he resided two years prior to his settlement at Butte, M. T. Since coming to the Territory he has been principally engaged in mining and freighting.

PETER MCMAHON, P. O. Silver Bow, was born in County Clare, Ireland, June 29, 1833, and in the fall of 1849 came to the United States, settling in Carthage, N. Y. In 1851 he went to New Orleans, thence to St. Louis, where he arrived with but fifteen cents in his pocket, and cut wood for his breakfast. Obtaining work on a steamboat, he made a trip to Lasalle, Ill., and back; thence to Alton, and worked on a farm one month, for which he received no pay; worked a short time on the Alton & Lafayette R. R.; was employed in Tinsley's packing establishment at Springfield, Ill., part of the time as assistant engineer. After several months he went to Lecompton, Kan., serving afterward as scout for Gen. Cook in New Mexico, during the war against the Comanches, when he received $1,000 for delivering a dispatch to Gen. Cook, seven messengers being killed in attempting to deliver the same dispatch. In 1859 he went to Pike's Peak as a teamster, and engaged in mining until 1863; joined the Baker and Blue River stampede; in 1863 he proceeded to Bannack, M. T., thence to Alder Gulch, and mined one year. He then started on a prospecting tour, and with his comrades camped for the night on Silver Bow creek, where he was the first to discover gold, and that before going to bed—it paying $1.65 to the pan. The party named the creek "Silver Bow" the following morning, from its silver-like surface when the morning sun shone upon it, and the semblance of its course to a bow from where they viewed it. Mr. McMahon was the first to crush the quartz in the Butte camp. He prospected on Cedar creek and the Blackfoot country, and in the McClellan, Lincoln and Stonewall Gulches, Camp and Moose Creeks, Melrose and the Trapper district, also spending two years prospecting in the Cœur d' Alene district. In 1873, with five companions, he crossed the range on foot to Blackfoot, thence returned to Butte. In 1876 he joined a party who set out to head off the Nez Perces, and arriving at Missoula found the redskins had crossed the river below. They were then ordered back by Gov. Potts. Mr. McMahon has discovered many quartz leads in Butte and vicinity that have developed remarkably fine and rich ores, and is still interested in mines of good prospect.

A. A. MCMILLAN, blacksmith and wagon maker, corner of Park and Wyoming streets, Butte City, began in business in this city in December, 1881, but recently sold out to McGregor & La Point, who carry on business at the same stand. He was born in the town of Alexandria, Glengarry Co., Canada, in 1854, and came to Montana June 10, 1880, locating in Butte, where he has followed blacksmithing. He is one of the leading men in the Independent Order of Good Templars, and is also a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

HENRY MCMURPHEY, Butte, was born in Delaware in September, 1843. In 1855 he moved to Maryland, where he served an apprenticeship to general merchandise trade; in 1863 he moved to Indianapolis as an employe of C. E. Greisendorff & Co.; moved to Prescott, Wis., in 1866, and in March, 1868, came to Montana, staying one year at Fort Benton. In 1869 he established business for himself at Helena, was burned out in the fire of January 9, 1874, losing all his property except a suit of clothes and a pair of blankets. With this outfit he set out on foot to Blackfoot agency, 142 miles distant, sleeping in the snow at night, tramping all day until the journey was ended. He was employed at the agency as commissary until September, when he returned to Helena. In July, 1875, he moved to Deer Lodge as salesman for Charles Blum. In 1876 he came to Butte as manager for Mr. Blum, and after his failure had charge of the stock for Sands Bros. In June, 1880, he was instrumental in organizing the great firm of Sands & Boyce, in whose employ he has remained to the present time. Mr. McMurphey was married at Deer Lodge, November 15, 1876, to Miss Anna Evans (daughter of Philip E. Evans), a native of Missouri. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., K. of P. and A. O. U. W., and is an earnest worker in all matters relating to the city's educational interests.

W. J. MCNAMARA, Butte, was born in Cambridgeport, Mass., March 4, 1842. When he was one year old his parents moved to Jones Co., Ia. He came to Montana in 1864 and mined at Virginia City; came to Silver Bow in 1865 on foot, carrying his blankets. Walked to Helena, met about 150 Minnesota emigrants, who discouraged him; pushed on to Virginia City, waded the swollen streams, slept out at night and suffered much from cold; arrived at Virginia, found mines frozen up, no work to be had and provisions very high; finally secured work at stripping frozen ground and removing waste dirt. In 1865 Mr. M. came again to Silver Bow on foot with blankets on his back and slept in a hay stack on Big Hole river; obtained a placer mining claim and worked it successfully about eight years; came to Butte prospecting for quartz leads in 1873, and discovered the Never Sweat lead, which he sold in company with his partner for $30,000 in January, 1883. They also discovered the Mountain View and McCauber leads. He owns an interest in mining properties in and near Butte, and in town property on W. Granite St and his residence on W. Copper St. Mr. McNamara worked his way to Montana by driving an ox team, and had twenty dollars left when he arrived in Alder Gulch. He has some stirring experiences of the Virginia City flour riot, and of the stirring scenes of the old camp. He is a member of the Butte town council.

J. O. MADDEX, P. O. Divide, was born in Jefferson Co., Ill., September 31, 1847, educated in Montgomery county, and there entered the office of the Marysville Republican. He came to Ruby Valley, M. T., in 1873, and worked on the Madisonian for some time previous to his removal to Silver Bow county. On coming here he established his present farm and cattle ranch within easy distance of Melrose and Glendale. His father is his neighbor on one side and his brother on the other. His marriage with Miss L. M. Church occurred March 14, 1880.

CHAS. MAGUIRE (deceased), late of Butte, was born in Ireland in 1844. His parents soon after emigrated to the United States, locating at Osceola, Ia. Here he remained till grown; came west in 1873 and engaged in general merchandise business at Ogden, Utah, for three years; sold out and engaged in trading; traveled through Utah, Idaho, Nevada and Montana for eight years, selling merchandise. In 1880 he married Miss Rosana Smith, of Montana; in 1881 came to Butte and opened a feed and picture store. While absent in Idaho he was seized with typhoid fever and returned home, where he died October 27, 1883.

MILES MAHAN, Butte, foreman of the Gagnon Mine, was born in Champaign Co., O., in 1838; left Ohio in 1864 for Montana and arrived at Helena in 1866, residing there during the ten succeeding years; moved to Wickes in 1876 and to Butte in 1878. He has been engaged in mining here for the past five years, being employed at the Gagnon. Mr. Mahan is a carpenter and millwright by trade. His marriage with Miss Margaret Noonan, a native of Massachusetts, took place in 1883.

L. R. MAILLET, of the firm of Maillet & Co., Butte, was born in Canada in 1834; moved with parents to Vermont, and remained there until 10 years of age; attended French school in Canada for three years; then went to St. Louis and entered a general store; subsequently clerked for one year in a general merchandise store at St. Joe, Mo. In 1850, Mr. Maillet, with Richard Pierson, purchased a stock of merchandise and began trading with the Indians; witnessed the treaty at Laramie, Colonel Mitchell commanding party; that fall went to Salt Lake, thence to Fort Ogden; here, with the assistance of John Grant and Thomas Lavado, he prevented the Indians from murdering a party of Mormons; soon after this he joined a party of trappers and went to Fort Hall; spent the winter with Captain McArthur packing furs to Oregon, and then entered the employ of Allen, McKinley & Co., who had the largest stores in the territory. After serving in their employ a short time at Oregon City he was sent to take charge at The Dalles; remained with them the summer of 1852. In 1853 purchased a steamer and placed it in the upper Columbia. This was the first in those waters. Mr. Maillet took charge of steamer, running it between The Dalles and the Cascades. Formed partnership with Captain McArthur and purchased 250 head of horses, together with merchandise, which were sent to Fort Hall. Afterward purchased 100 head of cattle, which were disposed of; in 1854 left for Oregon with 40 head of pack animals to purchase goods for the Hudson's Bay Co.; located at Fort Vancouver; after returning was in the employ of Gen. Sanders until 1855; then acted as guide for party of Mormons to Salmon river; assisted in building Fort Lemhi; in 1857 he engaged in trading and dealing in stock in Bitter Root Valley; acted as guide for party going to Fort Bridger. The Indians had driven the Mormons from Fort Lemhi, making the trip exceedingly dangerous. In the winter of 1857–58 Mr. Maillet entered the employ of Captain Richard Grant; brought the first wagon across the Deer Lodge Divide. This outfit went to the Jocko Reservation In August, 1858, he left Fort Owen for Ft. Benton; made trip in three and a half days; proceeded in a skiff to St. Louis, depending upon game for food; visited the Eastern states; came out to Fort Laramie in 1859 as interpreter and guide for Colonel Lonsdale, who was sent out with presents to the Indians for good behavior. Mr. Maillet purchased a herd of cattle and took them to California; returned to Montana in August, 1860, and opened trading post at Garrison in Bitter Root Valley; in the spring of 1861 left Ft. Benton for St. Louis in a mackinaw boat. Upon arrival purchased stock of goods and started across the plains to Montana; was captured by the Indians in September and lost $2,500 worth of goods. The Indians kept him prisoner, but he escaped soon after. Mr. Maillet opened the first store in Deer Lodge Valley, where Garrison stands, selling to traders and Indians. In 1862 he walked on snow shoes from Missoula to Hell Gate, thence to Elk City with cattle. On the way from Deer Lodge to Grasshopper creek he was held up by highwaymen, Chas. Reeves and Plummer. This was the first occurrence of the kind in Montana. From that time on Mr. Maillet has carried on a general trading business, going to and from the States; he also engaged in mining and stock-raising. October 31, 1883, he formed a partnership with Lee, Foster & Co., and purchased the establishment of Marcheseau & Valiton. Mr. Maillet was elected assessor for Silver Bow county, in 1882; elected to council from Missoula and Deer Lodge counties in 1874; appointed one of the first commissioners from Deer Lodge to organize the territory. Mr. Maillet was married in 1875 to Miss Henrietta Levitse, of Albany, N. Y.

LEE MANTLE, business manager of the Inter-Mountain, of Butte, was born in England in 1854; came to America in 1863, and located at Salt Lake City, Utah; removed to Idaho in 1870; in 1872 entered the employ of the Western Union Telegraph Company; the same year took charge of the company's office at Williams' Junction, M. T., on the old Corinne Stage Line; at same time acting as agent for the Gilmer & Salisbury Stage Company. In 1878 he moved to Pleasant Valley, Idaho, 18 miles south of Williams' Junction; remained there as telegraph operator and stage agent until 1877; then moved to Butte, M. T., where he opened the express office of Wells, Fargo & Co., and also acted as agent for Gilmer & Salisbury. Upon the completion of the Montana Central Telegraph Company's line in 1879 he was appointed manager at Butte. In 1880, on account of ill-health, he resigned position as Wells, Fargo's agent and telegraph manager; in 1881 he took prominent part in the organization of the Inter-Mountain Publishing Company, and was elected treasurer and business manager, which position he still retains. Mr. Mantle is a staunch Republican, and has taken an active and earnest interest in city, county and territorial politics. In 1880 he was elected as Alderman from the 1st ward to the first city council of Butte, in which capacity he served for one year. In 1881 he was elected chairman of the city Republican committee, and the following year as chairman of the county Republican central committee. At the present time he is a member of the territorial Republican central committee. In 1882 he was elected representative to the territorial legislature by a handsome majority, in which position he served with credit. In May, 1884, he was elected as one of the delegates from Montana to the National Republican Convention at Chicago, his colleague being Col. Wilbur F. Sanders. The struggle over, this election was the bitterest and most hotly contested of any that has ever occurred in the territory, due to disagreements within the party. In the fall of 1884, upon the resignation of Governor Crosby, Mr. Mantle was strongly urged by West Side Republicans, and, to a considerable extent, by those of the East Side, for the position of governor of the territory. His name was presented to President Arthur, together with that of Capt. James H. Mills, Judge Hiram Knowles and Maj. Geo. O. Eaton. All three of these gentlemen afterward withdrew in Mr. Mantle's favor, but a strong opposition was encountered from Helena, the capital of the territory, on account of local disagreements. Mr. Mantle then withdrew in favor of Capt James H. Mills, but the hot fight for the position among residents of the territory finally resulted in the appointment of Hon. B. Platt Carpenter, of New York. Mr. Mantle is a member of the order of Knights of Pythias, and at the organization of the Grand Lodge of Montana in January, 1885, he was elected to the position of Grand Chancellor Commander, which he now holds.

S. MARCHESSEAU, Butte, born at St. John's, Canada, September 23, 1838, was educated there, and subsequently passed 6 years as salesman in the store of E. Bourgeois in that city. He was engaged in general merchandise at Burlington, Vt., for 2 years; returned to St. John's to assist his brother in closing out business, and next accompanied a party of 11 to California, via St. Louis and Independence, and thence overland. They were received cordially by the Mormons and Indians, and reached California via Carson Valley with pleasant experiences of the white and red barbarians mentioned. In 1851, he, with a large party, took part in the Fraser river stampede; three months were occupied in reaching Addison. The cargo of merchandise, which this party took with them, was lost. Mr. M. then proceeded up Bridge river to Williams, thence to Cariboo, organized a party there, went over the line prospecting, but owing to the devilry of the Yukon Indians, they were forced to return to Bridge river. There the provisions gave out, compelling them to eat their mules and horses. Returning to California, Mr. M. mined in French gulch up to 1860, then established a general store at American river; resumed mining in French Gulch in 1862; sold claims in 1862 or 1863; visited the North Atlantic country, and returning to the mountains by way of steamer to Ft. Benton, proceeded to Dry Gulch, M. T., where he contracted with Prof. Hodge to dig a tunnel in the Union Lode, working one year at this. In 1867 he came to Butte, and in partnership with Joe Lemme established a general store, which they closed one year later, owing to scarcity of water doing away with mining works there, when Mr. M. moved to French Gulch, where he conducted a general store for 4 years. For three months he purchased gold dust for Donnell, Clark & Larable, making a trip to Deer Lodge from French Gulch once a week. Owing to the depredations of road agents he resigned this position, and engaged in buying flour and loaning money at Stevensville. In 1876 he returned to Butte, built the first stone store there, corner of Granite and Main street, and in partnership with Peter Valiton engaged in general merchandize business. In 1878 they closed out stock of merchandise, but continued the grocery department until November 1, 1883, when Marchesseau & Valiton closed out their interest in stock to L. R. Maillet.

M. E. Mayer, assayer, Butte, was born in Baden, Germany, December 25, 1840. He received a collegiate education, and in 1856 emigrated to the United States; resided in Buffalo two years; then went to California, settling at Donnerville; in 1860 was employed by the Mexican Mining Company at Virginia City, Nev., as assayer (having been taught the profession in Germany). He continued in that situation nine years; was two years at Hamilton, and in 1871 located in Toole Co., U. T.; came to Butte in 1877, where he is now engaged as assayer for some of the leading mines and banks of the city. Mr. Mayer is a member of the Masonic order. He was married in 1879 to Miss Dora Engel; have three children.

David Meiklejohn, Butte, was born February 29, 1848, in Scotland; emigrated to the United States when a child, and in 1855 journeyed overland to the Willamette Valley, Ore., returning to Missouri in 1860, and in 1861 going to Nevada and joining O'Conner's command bound for Utah. He was one of the party that established Camp Douglas, in Utah. During the winter of 1861-62 he started for Montana, but was stopped by the Indians and robbed in Cache Valley, on the Bear river; turned back and again joined O'Conner's command, and soon after participated in a fight with the same Indians, where he received a wound and was left for dead. In 1863 he again started for Montana, and arrived in Bannack March 11, in company with Peabody's express and several other parties. He was placed in charge of stock and was twice assailed by the Indians and robbed; remained in Bannack during all the Indian troubles. February 11, 1864, he went from Deer Lodge to the Kootenai mines in British Columbia, remaining until 1865; was afterward, until 1867, in the Cœur d'Alene mountains and the Boise Basin district, Idaho, visiting Warren, Florence, Elk City and Oro Fino mining camps; went to the Columbia river in 1867 during the first gold excitement in that country, and was three months crossing the Great and Little Arrow lakes in a boat through the ice. Returning to Coleville, Stephens Co., Wy. T., he was elected constable of Pinckney City and had charge of the first prisoners held in the county jail, accused of murdering Judge Stewart. In 1877 he was in the United States marshal's employ, serving also as watchman for the Truckee Lumber Company of Salt Lake City. In following and attempting to recapture convicts that had escaped from the Salt Lake Penitentiary, and in an open fight with them, he was wounded in each thigh and in the left arm; after recovering, he went to Butte City, M. T., where he has since been engaged in mining; in the fall of 1883 he was elected to the office of street commissioner, and was later made chief of police. Mr. Meiklejohn is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the A. O. U. W. He was married September 18, 1876, to Miss Anna Clarke, and they have three children.

Frank R. Miles, P. O. Silver Bow, was born in New Brunswick, June 1, 1852. He farmed in New Brunswick, and was also foreman for several large lumbering firms. December 15, 1878, he arrived in Montana, locating his present ranch. Mr. Miles is a representative, go ahead Western man. The night of his arrival in Silver Bow, after paying for his supper, he had but four bits left. During the winter he worked at what he could find, and in the spring of 1879 started to improve what folks called a "barren" piece of land. Going to work systematically, he has made that "barren" piece of land fairly a land of promise. Besides working his farm, he engaged in the business of buying and selling hay, and he handles more hay than any other man in the county. November 8, 1878, he was married to Miss Ellen M. Lawson.

Thomas O. Miles, Silver Bow P. O., born in New Brunswick, December, 1844, came to Alder Gulch, M. T., in 1866, and was a resident of Virginia City until 1870, when he, with his brother, T. C. Miles, located their present ranch in Deer Lodge Valley. He has four hundred acres of land under fence; is engaged in hay and grain farming and in stock raising. Mr. Miles was married to Miss Agnes Goddard, in October, 1880.

Thomas Moffit, Butte, member of the firm of A. Eustis & Co., and practical butcher, has been connected with the Palace Market since its establishment in Butte, and has followed the business of butchering all his life, having learned it from his father, who was a butcher of thirty years' experience in the Fulton market, New York city. The son left for California when about ten years of age, and from there went to Bodie Camp, Nevada, where he remained for some length of time, coming to Montana in 1881. He is a single man, 32 years of age. William A. Richards, another partner with the firm of A. Eustis & Co., and book-keeper of the firm, is the son of William and Mary (Eustis) Richards, and was born at British Hollow, Wis., in 1849.

D. A. Morrison, Butte, a native of Nova Scotia, was born July 28, 1852. He was raised on a farm, and at nineteen years of age went to New York City, where for three years he was engaged in the manufacture of lime at Sing Sing, and at the expiraton of that time went to Chicago, where he accepted a position as clerk with Sheppard & Co. He moved to Laramie City, where he worked in a rolling mils one year, and went thence to Idaho, where he spent one year as contractor with the Utah & Northern Railroad Co. At this time he located at Glendale and was engaged in mining and the manufacture of charcoal about eighteen months. He next went to Twin Bridges and applied himself to the hotel, express and freighting business for one year; moved to Butte in 1880, and from thence to Mount Horeb, where he served as postmaster one year, and has been engaged in mining and the manufacture of lime to the present time. Mr. Morrison was married at Butte City, February 2, 1883, to Miss Isabella Cameron, a native of Scotland.

Clinton H. Moore, the first postmaster at Anaconda, and one of the merchants of that village, was born at Piermont, N. H., August 14, 1847; received the rudiments of education there, entered Kimball Union Academy, and in 1870 entered Dartmouth College, from which he graduated June 25, 1874, (in the class of 82, with the degree of A. B., and in 1877 with that of A. M. During the winter of 1874-5 he was Principal of Lyndon Academy, Vt. Shortly after he visited Nevada, and was appointed principal of the school at Elko, where he resided until October, 1877, when he was appointed Principal of the Deer Lodge, M. T., city schools. Here he advocated the establishment of a Collegiate Institute, enlisted the influence of many leading citizens, and under his management a college building was erected. He was chosen first President in 1878–9. In the latter year he was appointed principal of the Boise City, Idaho, schools for two years; was also United States Supervisor for taking the Tenth Census of Idaho. In 1881 he returned to Montana and entered business life at Butte. He was elected Superintendent of Public Instruction for Silver Bow in November, 1882, and served until December, 1883. During the summer of that year he was appointed postmaster at Anaconda. Mr. Moore was married at Helena, in August, 1880, to Miss Jennie Hutchins, of Grafton Co., N. H.

NELSON MOORE, Butte, came to Montana in 1873, proceeding to Legal Tender mine, near Helena, and remaining in that section for five years; thence made a trip to Seven Devils' Mountain, Snake River country, Idaho. Returning that fall, he came to Butte, and has resided in the latter place ever since, most of the time being employed by the Montana Lumber and Planing Mill Co. Mr. Moore was born in Anson, Somerset Co., Me., in 1843. In 1869 he migrated to Wisconsin, in 1872 to Minneapolis, Minn., and on June 27, 1873, in company with four others, left for Boulder City and Gold Hill, Col., and from the last camp came to Montana. Was married to Miss Mollie J. Feifer, and resides in Butte.

E. L. NEWELL, Butte, came to Montana in 1864, and located at Deer Lodge. He engaged in mill building and contracting. Built the first station at Silver Crossing, comprising hotel and blacksmith shop. In the spring of 1865 he went to Missoula Valley to build the town of that name, and that fall erected Worden & Higgins' block and saw-mill. Went thence to the Jocko agency and built flouring mill. In the spring of 1866 he returned to Missoula and erected stores for Bowen & Welch, Reinhardt, etc.; also built hotel and stable for David Pettit. In the spring of 1867 he built a quartz mill at Phillipsburg. Later in the season he constructed the Standard Flouring mill at Helena, for Hartwell, Jurgen & Co. This was the first mill erected in the valley. In 1868 he built a quartz mill at the head of Ten Mile Creek, for the St. Louis Gold and Silver Mining Co. This mill was afterward transferred to Dry Gulch, above Helena, thence brought to Pony, thence to Silver Creek, at which place it is still used and known as the "Whippoorwill" mill. In 1869 Mr. Newell engaged in the merchandising business at Gallatin City. He rebuilt the Madison flouring mill for G. T. Thomas, and took charge of it for a short time. In 1871 he bought a ranch near the Gallatin Ferry, at the head of Missouri, which he ran for two years then sold to Mr. Frey. He then built a flouring mill at Warm Spring called Bedford, for Wm. Vantilberg. In November, 1875, he returned to Butte, built the Centennial mill here, first erected at Butte for John Howe. In the fall of 1876 he built a 10-stamp mill for A. J. Davis. This was known as the first Lexington mill. It was completed January 18, 1877. In 1878 Mr. Newell invented the wooden amalgamating pan which is used to-day in the Lexington, Burlington, Clipper and other mills. At the time of Chief Joseph's raid Mr. Newell built a mill at the head of Grasshopper Creek. Though deserted by his companions he remained at his post and completed the work. Of later years Mr. Newell has carried on a general carpenter and contracting business. He was married in 1869 to Miss Post, of Grand Rapids, Mich., at Radersburg, M. T.

GEORGE W. NEWKIRK, Butte, is one of the pioneers of Montana, arriving in Alder gulch in November, 1863. He wintered at Butte mining camp in 1864, and locating several leads at that time with other parties. In the spring of 1865 he went to Deer Lodge; returned to Butte in 1866, and has resided at this place since, except three years spent mining at Silver Bow. He has been engaged in his present business as saloonkeeper for the past five years. Mr. Newkirk is a native of Kingston, N. Y., on the Hudson, but left that State when ten years of age and came to Wisconsin; came to Montana in 1863, overland via Council Bluffs and Denver. The party numbered three at the start, one of them being George W. Sparling, a prominent attorney of Chicago, and the other is now dead. He has a rare collection of specimens and curiosities, in fact one of the largest and finest cabinets in the West.

ERASTUS A. NICHOLS, Butte, was born at Chicago, Illinois, in January, 1841; was educated in that city, and in December, 1861, enlisted in battery L, Second Illinois Artillery; won a Captaincy in the field, and served with the army of the Tennessee until June, 1865. In 1866 he visited Idaho, returning to Chicago the same year. In 1878 he settled at Butte, M. T., engaged at once in mining, and is now interested in the Amy, Silversmith and Goldsmith mines. In December, 1882, he was elected Justice of the Peace. Mr. Nichols was married at Chicago, Ill., in August, 1870, to Miss Sarah E., daughter of Sylvanus B. Warren, a native of Paw Paw, Ill. They are the parents of five children.

HENRY NICKEL, Butte, began business November 1, 1883, buying out Fred Loeber, with whom he had previously been in partnership. He arrived in the territory in 1877, coming directly to Butte. He was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1853, and came to America in 1871. On arriving in New York he went to New Orleans, from the latter city to California, and thence to Nevada; from Nevada he came to Montana. He spent one year and a half in California and three years in Nevada, being employed in the butchering business. Mr. Nickel is proprietor of the Main street meat market at Butte.

G. R. NOYES, P. O. Butte, was born at Chesterfield, Washington Co., Me., June 8, 1830. After leaving school he learned the trade of blacksmith. Until 21 years old he worked at ship-building. He then removed to East Minneapolis, Minn., opened a shop and worked at trade until 1862, when he journeyed with the Fisk expedition to Walla Walla; mined that year at Gold creek, then went to Boise City, Idaho, mining one season. In 1864 he returned to Minnesota; came to Bannack in 1865, opened a shop, formed a partnership with Major Watson, and carried on a hotel and feed store in connection for two years; sold out, built a hotel at Silver Star, and kept it for two years. He then sold out and engaged in the cattle business, purchasing cattle in Colorado and driving them to Montana; made $9,000 in eight weeks; another trip lost 700 head of cattle and 60 horses. He then gave up the business and located at Butte in 1875; made iron-work for the Dexter mill, and is employed there at the present time as blacksmith. Mr. Noyes has also made iron work for other mills, besides carrying on a general custom business. He married Mrs. Hubbard, of Montana, in 1870. Mr. Noyes has a ranch of 400 acres on the Little Pipestone, which he devotes to agriculture; has also valuable placer mines on the tract.

JOHN NOYES, Butte, was born in Canada in 1829; received a business education; was reared on a farm and at 21 years of age commenced the work of brick making. In 1859 he went to California and engaged in placer mining until 1859; then went to Nevada, and until 1861 was engaged in locating and speculating in mining properties, shingle making, etc. He afterward went to Florence and the Salmon river country, managed a pack train one season, spent the winter of 1862-63 in The Dalles, Oregon, and established a feed and livery stable at that place, which he disposed of in the spring of 1863. Going to Idaho he located in Placerville, and engaged in placer mining two years; returned to The Dalles, was eighteen months in the hay and livery business, and in 1865 came to Montana, locating in McClellan Gulch mined until September of that year, when he went to Fort Benton, took passage on a Mackinaw down the Missouri to Omaha, and from there proceeded to Canada on a visit to his old home; returned shortly after to St. Louis, Mo., via New York, with the intention of buying a farm and settling on it, but finding the farming community in straitened circumstances decided to give up the idea. Buying a large stock of goods in St. Louis for the Montana market, he shipped on the steamer "Grant," March 1. March 15 the steamer sank with all on board. Mr. Noyes, however, having taken the precaution to insure his goods, received his insurance and returned to St. Louis. Duplicating his bills he shipped on the steamer "Waverly" and landed in Fort Benton in June, 1866. He immediately took his goods to Elk creek, disposed of them at wholesale, went to Butte City to look after and sell a quartz lead, bought an interest in placer mines and has since been engaged in mining operations in that vicinity. In 1881 he, in company with Mr. Upton, laid out two additions to Butte, one of 20 acres called the Noyes & Upton addition, and one of 30 acres known as the Noyes & Upton railroad addition. Mr. Noyes was mainly instrumental in securing the Silver Bow water works, which now supply the city of Butte with water. He was elected the first president of the company; is also a member of the Consolidated Mountain Mining Co. and has been interested in the Mountain Boy mine, the Ottawa, Alexander Scott, New Era and numerous other important mining companies, besides having large interests in city and other properties, having erected fifteen residences and business buildings, the most important of which is the house occupied by Messrs. Casey & Brophy and his own private residence, which is one of the most complete and elegant structures in the city. In 1878 Mr. Noyes was elected to the territorial legislature from Deer Lodge county; for a period of five consecutive years served as grand juror, and was the principal actor in obtaining the charter for the organization of the city of Butte. He was married in 1871 to Miss Elmyra Meiklejohn, and they have four children. Mrs. Noyes is a prominent member of and worker in the Eastern Star organization, and one of the founders of that order in Butte; was the first Worthy Matron of the same. She is also a member of and ardent worker in the Episcopal church.

JOHN O'ROURK, Butte, was born in Kerry Co., Ireland, in 1845. At the age of 7 years he came to the United States and located at Madison, O., where he received a common school education. At the age of 18 he came to Montana, located at Virginia City and engaged in mining. After a short time he went to Helena, mined in the vicinity for twelve years, then prospected and mined through different portions of the terrritory. In 1877 he came to Butte and engaged in the wholesale liquor business with James Mathews, and is here established at present.

WILLIAM OWSLEY, of the firm of Owsley, Valiton & Co., livery stable proprietors, Butte, was born in Andrew Co., Mo., in 1842. In 1860 he moved to Idaho, and in April, 1863, joined in the stampede to the Bannack Diggings, arriving there April 15 with the first wagon train from the south. In June, 1863, he joined in the stampede to Alder Gulch, being one of the first in that camp. In May, 1864, he moved to Butte camp, where he has operated in placer and quartz mines uninterruptedly since that time. He has two mines patented in the Red Mountain District, together with other mining interests. From 1874 to 1877 he conducted his livery business alone. In the latter year Henry Valiton became his partner, and more recently Mr. Cowan was admitted into the firm. In 1882 he was elected mayor of Butte, holding the position until May, 1883. He was married at Butte in November, 1869, to Miss Kate Van Ettin, a native of New York.

F. E. W. PATTEN, Butte, was born in Missouri; enlisted for the Mexican War, served under the late Con. Gen. Price fourteen months, and after the campaign established a general store at Huntsville, above St. Louis. In 1856 he moved to the village of Iowa, Kan.; went to Denver, Col., in the spring of 1862, and came to Montana, settling at Virginia City in August, 1863. Until October, 1864, he was engaged freighting between Salt Lake and Alder Gulch, then established a general store at Virginia City, and one branch house. From 1870 to 1875 he was agent for H. F. Gaylord's coach line to Helena and Bozeman; was councilman of Virginia City for four years, and acting mayor; and served the fourth term as member of the legislature of 1878. On May 1, 1881, he moved to Butte, where he has since been engaged in the business of insurance and collecting. He was married in August, 1872, at St. Joseph, Mo., to Miss Mary A. Armstrong, a native of North Carolina.

W. H. PATTERSON, of Patterson & Blackburn, dealers in ice, Butte, was born in St. Louis Co., Mo., in 1839, and there also his father, Louis Patterson, was born in 1807. William H. Patterson came to Montana in 1864 with Joseph L. Patterson, F. A. Blackburn, Barnaby Harris and W. H. Hume. They made the journey overland with ox teams, and arrived at Alder Gulch August 5 that year. In October following this party discovered Grizzly Gulch, named by them on account of a grizzly bear they saw there at the same instant they saw the gold. They mined in the gulch until the spring of 1866, when they moved to Bear Gulch, Deer Lodge county. In 1867 Mr. Patterson moved to Diamond City, where his party paid $700 per day for water to operate their mines. The water failed, and so did the venture. Returning to the States he remained until late in 1868, when he revisited Montana and located on a ranch near Helena; next established his ice trade at Helena, and in October, 1878, established the business at Butte. He is interested in the Fish Creek placer claims, patented in 1883; also in the Little Fish Creek claims in Silver Bow county, and in the Grass valley lead near Helena, patented in 1879.

W. Y. PEMBERTON, District Attorney, 2d judicial district, Butte, was elected to that office in November, 1882. Mr. Pemberton was born at Nashville, Tenn., June 1, 1842; was educated at the Masonic College, Missouri, read law and entered the Lebanon Law School of Cumberland University; graduated in January, 1861; was admitted to the bar of Missouri, and commenced practice the same year. In 1863 he visited Alder Gulch, formed a law partnership with E. W. Toole, and took part in all the stirring scenes of that camp up to the spring of 1865, when the firm moved to Helena. He was appointed by Gov. Edgerton as the first district attorney of the Helena district. In 1865 A. M. Woolfolk was admitted a member, and continued in partnership until 1868. During this year Mr. Pemberton moved to Texas, where he resided until 1880, when he returned to Helena. In January, 1882, he moved to Butte, was elected district attorney that fall, and in November, 1883, was elected member of the Constitutional Convention held at Helena in January, 1884 (vide Pol. Hist.). He was married at Helena, October 26, 1865, to Miss Clara M., daughter of J. C. Hutchinson, a pioneer of the territory. They are the parents of five children. Mr. Pemberton is a member of the Masonic, Oddfellows and A. O. U. W. societies. (Vide general and local history.)

B. PETTIT, Butte, was born in April, 1839, at Baltimore, Md.; learned the carpenter's trade; removed to Chicago, where he worked from 1851 to 1856 as journeyman carpenter; emigrated to Pike's Peak, Col., in 1857; worked as carpenter in Denver for several years; removed to Olathe, Johnson Co., Kan., where he remained until 1863; was appointed deputy sheriff of the county. In 1863 he removed to Bannack, and one year afterward to Virginia City. Here he filled contracts for two years, and upon removing to Helena, worked six months at his trade. Proceeding to Blackfoot, and from there to Highland Gulch, he engaged in cabinet making; returned to Helena in 1869, and soon after joined the Cedar Creek stampede. After remaining two years, he located at Deer Lodge, and engaged in the furniture business until 1876; sold out, came to Butte, and engaged in contracting and building. He erected a shop on the lower end of Broadway, which burned down soon after, then built a house and established himself in the furniture business on the upper side of Broadway. This he also lost by fire, but in 1882 he rebuilt the premises where he has a furniture store at the present time.

W. G. Pfauts, Butte, was born at New Philadelphia, Ohio, in 1840; several years later his parents removed to Missouri. In 1858, Mr. Pfauts went to Colorado; mined near Denver; prospected with Gregory, and now has property in what is known as No. 7 Gregory Lead. After leaving the mines he engaged in stock-raising for 2 years. In 1864 he came to Montana, bringing merchandise to Virginia City; clerked for the firm of Russell & Pfauts, grocers, for 3 years. The firm then dissolved, Mr. Pfauts' brother selling out. Mr. Russell then formed partnership with Mr. Pfauts, the latter after three years purchasing Mr. Russell's interest, and conducting the business alone for 5 years; sold out and followed quartz mining one year at Pony, Madison Co. In 1880 Mr. Pfauts came to Butte, formed a partnership with T. S. Hamilton and opened a grocery and feed store, the firm being known as Hamilton & Co. Mr. Pfauts at present has sole charge of the business.

John D. Phillips, Butte, was born near Marshall, Mo., in 1860; farmed until 1880; emigrated to Montana; spent the summer of 1880 mining on Washington Bar, Madison Co.; went in the fall to Boulder, and a few months later to Unionville, working at quartz-mining for Rev. H. W. Curren, with whom he went to Boulder and worked in Placer mines in the summer of 1881. July 26, he had his leg broken by a cave in the mines, and was confined to his room for three months. He was then at Helena two months recovering from his injury. December 27, 1881, he came to Butte and worked at various occupations until September, 1882, when he became traveling correspondent and soliciting agent for the Butte Miner. He has since visited nearly all the mining camps and principal settlements of Montana, extending his canvass also to Idaho, Utah, Dakota and Washington territories and Oregon. He received a common school education in the select school of Marshall, near the place of his birth.

Frank Pink, Butte, was born in Germany in 1843. He learned the cooper's trade, and in 1866 emigrated to the United States; worked 1 year in New York at his trade, then removed to Chicago and worked another year. In 1869 he located at Virginia City, M. T.; mined 1 year; joined the Cedar creek stampede, and during the trip he, with his partner, Bards, discovered Sun Rise Gulch; worked 1½ years, then went to Quartz Gulch and mined 6 months. Mr. Pink then went to Fredericktown, but in a few months proceeded to Alder Gulch, where he mined 1 year; located diggings at Silver Star, and mined 2 years. In 1874 he went to California and mined in Columbia Co. 1 year; thence removed to White Pine, Nev.; mined 2 years; returned to Montana and located at Silver Star in 1877, mining 3 years. Upon arrival at Butte in 1880, he entered the employ of W. A. Clark and took charge of the Original mine as foreman.

Willden Pinkham, auctioneer and commission merchant, Butte, was born at Townsend, Lincoln Co., Me., May 4, 1838, where his father, Capt. Jason Pinkham, resided. At the age of 14 years Mr. Pinkham went to sea, and worked his way up through all grades to master. In 1861 he enlisted in Company I. 4th Maine Infantry; served for a short time, and was honorably discharged. Subsequently he was employed in the express and police departments at Boston for 9 years. He was married in September, 1863, to Miss Frances H. Ramsdell, daughter of Capt. G. A. Ramsdell. In 1870 Mr. Pinkham visited Kansas; proceeded to Hilliard, Wyoming, in 1875; to Utah in 1879, where he built the tramway for the Carbondale mine. After this he had charge of building the U. & N. railroad from Franklin to Big Hole, and charge of construction from Blackfoot to Eagle Rock. He had the honor of laying the first railroad tie in Montana on the U. & N. at Monida, March 9, 1881. He drove the silver spike, and has converted the tie into a cabinet. Mr. Pinkham was the projector of the Dillon townsite. He induced 11 others to join in the purchase, which cost $10,500. This enterprise was attended with signal success. He settled at Butte in the spring of 1881, and engaged in contracting and building. In April, 1882, he started his present business, and is the only general auctioneer in the city. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. and K. of P., and is a councillor of the city.

J. C. and Polona (Mounts) Orton (deceased), were early residents of Virginia City, M. T., having located there in 1864. J. C. Orton was a native of New York, and Polona Orton of Ohio. They came west in 1861, settled in Utah and remained there until coming to Montana. Mr. Orton was a brick mason and erected some of the first buildings in Virginia City. He moved in 1878 to Butte, where he died October 29 in that year. Mrs. Orton continued to reside there until her death in August, 1882. Mr. and Mrs. Orton left six sons, as follows: Alfred M., Van, Frederick L., William C., James and Walter. The eldest, Alfred M., learned the printing business in Virginia City. He also worked in the Avant Courier office in Bozeman, and on some of the leading papers of Butte City. He was married in Salt Lake City, December 21, 1882, to Miss Maria DeBooth, and now resides in Butte, where he is in company with his brothers, F. L. and W. C Orton, in the management of the Renshaw Opera House rink. Van Orton is an accomplished musician; F. L. Orton is a competent engineer, and W. C. Orton is a clerk in the furniture store of Mr. Bowes.

Thomas C. Porter, Butte, public administrator of Silver Bow Co., is one of the very first settlers of Butte Camp, having located here in October, 1864, and continued his residence here down to the present time. He was born at London, Eng., in 1835; came to America in 1843, and made his home at Gloverside, N. Y., until 1858, when he moved to Illinois. In 1859 he joined the Pike's Peak stampede, and mined in Colorado until 1864. On hearing of the discoveries at Alder Gulch he joined a party of prospectors, and reached that famous camp in March, 1864, where he mined until October, when he moved to the Butte camp. At this time there were a dozen white men there, among whom were Geo. W. Newkirk, Dennis O'Leary, G. O. Humphrey, J. F. Beck, Joe Ramsdell, Alex. Scott, H. H. Porter and Wm. Owsley. (Of this number only four remain.) On arriving here he engaged in mining, and is still interested in several paying mines. He it was who organized the first school district, in what is now Silver Bow county, in the winter of 1865-6. The school house was built on the present site of the St. Nicholas. He conducted this school until he found that funds were obtainable to pay a teacher, when he turned the school over to Colonel Wood, the first regular teacher. In 1867 he, with O'Leary, Ramsdell and Wm. Parks, erected the first smelting works in this region; but after operating the blast by horse-power and expending $7,000 economically, the enterprise was voted a failure. Mr. Porter is now interested in the Posey, Eagle, Bird, Lillie and Morning Star (Fraction) mines. He was elected Public Administrator of Silver Bow county in December, 1882, in which office he has served faithfully. He is a fair specimen of the old time miner, claiming a thousand warm friendships in the camp he aided to establish.

ABRAHAM POST, Butte, was born in Cayuga Co., N. Y., April 15, 1816. He received a common school education; followed farming until 1855, when he removed to Michigan and settled in Kent county. In 1864 he came to Montana with the Bridger expedition, and, locating at Virginia City, engaged in freighting between that point and Helena, Fort Benton, Bozeman, the Gallatin Valley and Richmond, and other points in Utah, spending the two winters following in Utah. In 1865 he removed to Helena, and in 1868 took up a ranch on Crow Creek, afterward residing at Radersburg for eighteen months; moved to Butte in 1872; followed freighting until 1880; is now largely interested in horse raising, having a fine ranch in the Bitter Root Valley. He has also had large mining and real estate interests in the territory. Mr. Post was married in New York in July, 1836, to Miss Polly Spicer, who died in Michigan in 1859.

ALBERT PRICE, of the firm of Fox & Price, Butte, was born in Saratoga Co., N. Y., in April, 1857. After leaving school, Mr. Price taught several terms, then clerked two years in a grocery and hardware store at Saratoga, resigned position and accepted another at Burnt Hills. Finding his health failing he came to Butte M. T., in December, 1882, formed a partnership with Samuel W. Skelton and opened a grocery store. After carrying on business three months, Mr. Price purchased Skelton's interest and admitted J. D. Fox into the firm which is now Fox & Price.

JOSEPH RAMSDELL, Butte, proprietor of the original Parrot mine, the Little Annie and Gray Eagle, was born in Huron Co. (now Ottawa Co.), O., June 15, 1824; moved to Bureau Co., Ill., in 1847, where he was engaged in farming until 1857, when he visited Macon, Mo. In 1859 he sold his livery business there, moved with his family to Denver, and was engaged in the mountain freighting business until 1863. During this year he located at Virginia City, M. T., and at once engaged in cattle and horse raising. He began mining in German Gulch in the spring of 1865; placed his children in the schools of Salt Lake the following winter, and returning in 1866, placed a full freight train of forty yoke of oxen and a number of horse trains on the road. The Parrot mine was discovered October 1, 1864, by Dennis O'Leary. Mr. Ramsdell located his claim joining it on the east and called it Parrot No. 2, which he now operates. In the fall of 1866, he, with T. C. Porter and W. Parks, erected the first smelter in the territory, and shipped the first ore from this camp. The twenty-five tons of ore taken out daily (which is sold to the Copper company, of Butte, in whose works it is reduced) yield from 20 to 60 per cent copper. He was married in Illinois in 1847 to Miss Clara, daughter of Walter R. Williams, a pioneer of Huron Co., O. Their children are Clayton Ramsdell, a resident of Deer Lodge, and Mrs. James A. Talbott, a resident of Butte City.

CHARLES H. RANG, engineer at Col. Thornton's mine, Butte, was born in Ohio in 1857; moved to Michigan in 1879, and to Montana a short time after. During the past five years he has followed the engineer's profession.

JACOB REDING, miner, Butte, was born in Luxemburg, Germany, in 1817. There he followed the trade of carpenter and cabinet maker until 1848, when he came to New York city, where he was employed as a cabinet maker. In 1850 he removed to Chicago, where he was similarly employed. On leaving Chicago he was employed in the machine shops at Geneva, Ill., until 1856, when he moved to Kansas. In 1858 he went to Colorado, followed mining there for five years, and coming to Montana in 1863, engaged in freighting between Alder Gulch and Salt Lake. In August, 1864, he made a trip to Butte, revisited the camp in October, and remained there whipsawing lumber and ditching until early in 1865. He began mining then and "got broke." From this period until 1874 he remained in the Silver Bow diggings. Joining the Jefferson stampede, he returned shortly and began work on the Burlington leads, which he followed down to the present day.

ED. REIMEL, Butte, was born in Eastern Pennsylvania June 7, 1839; after leaving school he learned trade as millwright; in 1868 went to Nevada; worked in mills a few years and proceeded to California, thence to Utah, working at his trade until 1877. He came to Butte in July and built the old Alice Mill, which was the first one erected on the hill; worked four years for the Co. and one year in the Moulton Mill. In 1882 he came to the Lexington mill, where he holds the position of millwright.

O. J. REIMEL, Butte, foreman blacksmith at the Anaconda works, arrived in the Territory August 1, 1867, and has since been a citizen of Butte. Has followed his present occupation since 1859, with the exception of three years in the U. S. Army, from August 3, 1861, to August 3, 1864, as a member of Battery F, U. S. artillery. He was in the army of the Potomac from the time McClellan took command until he was removed, and also served under Generals Burnside, Pope, Meade and Grant; participated in eighteen battles, including Antietam, Gettysburg, Yorktown and Fredericksburg. Had three brothers in the service, two of whom were killed, one at Chancellorsville and the other at Gettysburg. At White Oak Swamp Mr. Reimel was slightly wounded. He is a Pennsylvanian by birth, having been born in Northampton county, June 10, 1839. Leaving Pennsylvania in 1877 he came direct to Butte. He was married in 1876 to Mary Ace, and is the father of five children.

JAMES RENSHAW, Butte, was born at Baltimore, Md., in 1837. After completing his education he went to New York city and learned trade of engineer in the Novelty Iron Works, remaining with that company six years. The war breaking out he enlisted in the U. S. Navy as engineer, serving seven years. He then accepted a position in the Buenos Ayres navy, in which he spent four years. Resigning his position he returned to New York and was employed as engineer in the Knowles Pump Works for nearly three years. He then came west and accepted a position with the Ontario mine in Utah; held position as chief engineer for four years; came to Butte in 1882 and opened a depot for mining and milling supplies. Mr. Renshaw had the agency for the Knowles Steam Pumps, also for Fraser & Chalmers' mining and milling machinery, which have been introduced into the principal mills of the West. He has since moved to Colorado.

S.B. RICE, of the Butte Hardware Co., was born in December, 1830, in Kennebec Co., Me. After completing his school studies he assisted in a general store for three years. In 1853 he entered a dry goods and millinery house at Syracuse, N. Y.; moved to Chicago in 1854, where he took the position of bookkeeper and was also treasurer for a flouring mill company. These positions he held for ten years, when he became bookkeeper for a machine shop, and subsequently for a cigar and tobacco manufacturing house. He came to Montana in 1866 and mined at Red Mountain. In 1867 he engaged in the commission and grocery business at Virginia City, closed out this business in 1870 and accepted a position as teller and bookkeeper in Hussey, Dahler & Co's bank, which he held eight years. He then engaged with P. A. Largey in the hardware business; moved it to Butte in 1881, and incorporated under the title Butte Hardware Co., of which Mr. Rice is secretary.

M. C. RILEY, engineer, Butte, was born at Pottsville, Penn., in 1847; worked until nineteen years of age in the coal mines; railroaded for four years in Michigan and Missouri; was engineer at hoisting works in the Silver mountains, Cal.; worked three years in Nevada and fourteen months in Marsack and Park City, Utah; in 1879 came to Butte; worked in Silver Bow mill a few months; ran hoisting machinery for the Grey Rock; was engineer at the Belle of Butte, and in March, 1882, took the position of engineer at the Lexington mill.

T. M. ROBBINS, Melrose, was born in Sullivan Co., Ind., April 23, 1834, and received a limited education at the common schools of his district. In 1855 he became a member of Smith's Red River Exploring Expedition, organized for the purpose of erecting forts and driving back the English hunters who were crossing the line and destroying game, contrary to law. In the spring of 1857 he joined an expedition sent out to capture the perpetrators of the Mountain Meadow Massacre. He remained at Camp Floyd until 1860; then prospecting a year, he entered the employ of the Overland Mail Company, remaining with them until 1863. He then came to Montana, engaging in various occupations until 1874, when he settled down on a ranch. Mr. Robbins is largely interested in cattle, and in 1872 built a hotel at Melrose, which he now owns. He was married in 1863 to Miss E. L. Whitney. They have one son.

HORACE D. ROBERTS, Butte, proprietor of butcher shop and meat market, 209 Main street, began business in Butte city in April, 1882. He is a native of Onondaga Co., N. Y., and son of Truman and Betsey Roberts, the father being a farmer by occupation. Mr. Roberts learned the trade of butchering at Seneca Falls, N. Y., but leaving that state in 1858, came to Platteville, Wis., where he was engaged in the stock and butchering business for six years, and then came to Alder gulch in the summer of 1863 via Bozeman cut-off. In 1865 he returned to Wisconsin via Fort Benton, and in 1880 moved to Tuscarora, Nev., remaining there for a year and a half. From Tuscarora he came to Butte city. Mr. Roberts was married to Miss Jennie Morton, a native of Scotland, January 22, 1857, and they have four children.

J. R. ROBERTS, one of the leading architects of Butte city, located at San Francisco in 1866. He began in business there as a builder, continuing in that occupation for two years. In 1869 he left San Francisco for the White Pine district, and in six months returned to Elko, going on another stampede to Owyhee, where he followed mining and prospecting for a few weeks. From there he returned to San Francisco and was engaged on the government works on Angel Island. Mr. Roberts superintended the work there for an army hospital building, and erected three residences for the officers. From there he went to Owens and erected a 30-stamp gold-quartz mill; was foreman millwright afterward for an English company and went to Virginia and Carson cities. Mr. Roberts' native place is Redruth, Cornwall, England, where he was born March 15, 1843. He was married to Miss Jennie Hague, of Dunkirk, N. Y., July 18, 1879. Since locating in Butte Mr. Roberts has planned the new court house, a very fine piece of architecture, also the new Catholic church building.

DAVID W. ROSS, Butte, son of Wm. L. Ross, was born in Ohio March 6, 1855. He was engaged in farming until December, 1876, when he went to Monmouth, Ill., and witnessed the competition of classes for the highest honors in Monmouth college; thence to Clarinda, Page Co., Ia., and spent several months with his brother and sister; also visited other portions of that state. In June, 1877, he returned to Monmouth, Ill.; to witness the commencement exercises of Monmouth college; thence proceeded to Ohio, where he remained on the farm with his parents until 1879, when he visited Cleveland and Cambridge, O. In March, 1881, he sold out his property interests in Ohio and came to Montana to seek better health. The train was delayed by floods and washouts, but he finally arrived at Dillon, Mont., March 29, 1881. During the summer of 1881 he was employed by the Rocky Mountain Life Insurance Company, and came to Butte in company with Albert Likens, traveling with a team and camping out. After about three months spent in the insurance business, he began working at his trade as carpenter, and in 1883 became a member of the firm of Buch, Wampler & Ross, contractors and builders, in Butte city. He owns an interest in several houses in Butte, also in good mining property. He received a common school education; is associated with the Congregational church in Butte and takes an active interest in the Sunday-school and other good causes. He is a member of Ridgeley lodge of the I. O. O. F., and permanent secretary of the same.

REV. JAMES R. RUSSEL, Butte, was born at Danville, Ky., in 1847; graduated from Center college in 1866; passed three years in Louisiana employed as book-keeper and teacher; entered Princeton college, N. J., in 1869, graduated in 1871, and was ordained a minister of the Presbyterian church. He was assigned to a charge in New Hampshire, where he preached one year; passed one year in Kentucky, visited Colorado, and afterward Helena, M. T., where he organized the first Presbyterian society (see hist.). One year later, in 1872, he organized the Presbyterian society at Deer Lodge; moved to Deer Lodge in October of that year, where he built the first Presbyterian house of worship in the territory in 1874–5, and dedicated it February 21, 1875. In 1879 he moved to Butte, and in 1880 began the work of church building there. While at Deer Lodge he was instrumental in securing the transfer of Collegiate Institute property to the Presbyterian society (see history of Deer Lodge); was elected first president of the trustees of that institution, and took a most earnest part in building it up to its present importance. Mr. Russel was married at Helena July 27, 1875, to Mrs. Fanny (Forbis) Irvine, widow of the late D. L. Irvine, and daughter of Jonathan F. Forbis. (Vide history of Silver Bow county.)

SANDS & BOYCE, Butte, one of the leading mercantile firms of the Rocky Mountain region, established their firm so recently as June, 1880, although they have been prominent in the business circles of Montana since her pioneer days. They are the most extensive advertisers in the northwest, and their enterprise in this and other directions, together with abundance of capital, have rendered this firm well known before the Eastern commercial houses, as well as throughout the mountain country. Their business is that of jobbers and retail dealers in dry goods, ladies' suits and wraps, men's and boys' clothing, carpets, house-furnishing, etc. Their commodious salesrooms are on the corner of Main street and Broadway—one of the most desirable locations in the city. The firm is composed of A. Sands, J. Sands and J. R. Boyce, Jr. The Sands began the dry goods business at Alder gulch in 1864. They continued there until 1868, when the business was moved to Helena, where they have ever since conducted an extensive trade. Shortly after opening at Helena, J. Sands took up his residence in New York city as resident buyer in that market. A little over three years ago A. Sands moved to Denver, Col. (where he is president of the Denver Brewers' Association), leaving the Helena house in charge of his brother, Morris Sands. J. R. Boyce, Jr., is the resident and managing partner of the firm. To his brilliant business qualities is largely due the marked success of the house. He first entered the employ of Tootle, Leach & Co., of Alder gulch, in 1865, as a salesman—(this house was established in 1864.) In 1868 that firm moved to Helena, when Mr. Boyce was admitted a partner. Four years later he and his father succeeded Tootle, Leach & Co., under the title J. R. Boyce & Co. In 1876 Major Boyce withdrew, leaving the house the sole property of J. R. Boyce, Jr., who conducted it until 1880, when the firm of Sands & Boyce was founded, with Mr. Boyce managing partner. The Messrs. Sands have large sums invested in cattle, by reason of which they are classed among the "cattle kings" of the territory.

F. V. SCHEUER, Butte, was born in Germany March 10, 1833. At an early age he emigrated to the United States; clerked in a grocery store one year; located in Allen Co., O.; clerked for Geo. W. Overmeyer, general merchant, for four years; then went to Evansville, Ind., entering the wholesale house of I. & D. Hyman; left for Colorado in 1859; mined at Russel gulch until 1862; joined a stampede to Salmon river; not being successful went to Salt Lake, and soon after to Virginia city, where he mined nearly four years. In 1866 he removed to Helena and worked for Jas. W. Whitlach, Columbia County Mining Company, until 1879. He then came to Butte and opened a grocery store on Park street. Mr. Scheuer married Isabel Hickley at Helena in 1868.

LEOPOLD F. SCHMIDT, Butte, was born in Prussia; his parents moved to Weitburg, and he was reared in the ancient town of the Princes of Orange. He attended the common schools and the Latin school, and was also in attendance at the Gymnasium. Having a great desire to travel, he entered the Seamen's school of Hamburg, and subsequently lead a sailor's life for a number of years, visiting the United States, South America, Norway and Sweden, and the various countries of the Mediterranean Sea, and finally received his discharge in New York city. He then went to Chicago and spent some time sailing upon the great lakes, but soon after engaged for a short time in farming in Missouri; served an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade, and subsequently worked his passage from St. Louis to Fort Benton on the steamer "Nick Wall." From Benton he walked to Helena, where he secured work at the carpenter's trade and obtained something to eat, having traveled 48 hours without food. During that summer he went to Deer Lodge, thence to Butte city, working at his trade. In 1875 he formed a partnership with R. Saile and built the Centennial Brewery at Butte, with a capacity of 500 barrels per annum. The first sale of beer of their own manufacture was made June 12, 1876. Mr. Saile sold his interest in 1877 to Daniel Gamer, since which time the business has been conducted by Schmidt & Gamer. They have since increased the capacity to 3,000 barrels per annum, erected a fine three-story malt house with a capacity of 20,000 bushels, also a fine steam brewhouse, which increases the capacity to 6,000 barrels per annum, and renders it the most complete and best appointed mill in the Northwest. In September, 1878, Mr. Schmidt visited his native place, stopping on the route at Paris and visiting the great exposition. April 19, 1879, Mr. Schmidt was married, and set out the same day on his return to Montana, arriving in Butte city May 26. The firm of Schmidt & Gamer have branch houses at Glendale and Anaconda, and an agent at Dillon. They are also interested in the beer-bottling department of A. Speckart & Co., of Butte city.

MOSES SCRAMLIN, Butte, assayer at the Dexter Mill, was born at London, Canada, in 1827; left that country in 1838, and settled in Michigan, where he resided ten years prior to his removal to Wisconsin. He was engaged at lumbering in the last named State until 1852, when he went to California. There he was engaged in mining and mercantile life until 1865. The trip to California was made with forty other emigrants. Near Council Bluffs they were attacked by about 300 Indians, fourteen of whom they killed, and drove off the others. During his residence in Nevada he operated the Star and Geneva mills, near White Pine, for five years, and was employed in the Old Dominion Mill for about three years. He was married in 1867 to Miss Elsie Stuart. This lady died in 1880. On coming to Montana he was employed in operating the Belmont Mill near Helena.

LOUIS SECKELS, Butte, was born at Saratoga, N. Y., in 1855; received a common school education; left at the age of 15 for New York city; joined Captain George M. Wheeler's corps of engineers, and accompanied him through Utah, New Mexico, California, etc., acting as meteorologist from 1873 to 1879. He then came to Butte and accepted the position of book keeper at the Lexington Mill.

J. B. SHARKEY, Spokane Falls, was born in 1839, at Mansfield, O.; learned trade of carpenter; at 17 years of age went to Omaha, Neb., where he worked at his trade for eighteen months; he then worked on the Union Pacific railroad, in charge of bridging, for two years. In 1881 he came to Butte and began contracting, also worked at the different mills as carpenter. In 1883 he was offered the position of carpenter for the Lexington Mill.

WILLIAM L. SHOVELL, foreman of the Alice works, Butte, was born in 1853, in Cornwall, England. He came to the United States in 1873; entered the mines of Clinton Co., N. Y., near Lake Champlain, where he passed one year; moved thence to Calumet, Mich., where he was engaged in mining for about a year, when he migrated to Utah. From Utah he came to Butte, where he has been in the employ of the Alice Co. for the past nine years. He has been engaged in mining for sixteen years.

JAMES C. SINGER, Butte, was born in Ayrshire, Scotland, November 22, 1833; learned trade of cabinet maker; emigrated to Canada; located near Galt and taught school for two terms. He then came to the United States and located at Buffalo, N. Y.; worked one and a half years in a piano factory; removed to Philadelphia and worked two years in an ornamental furniture factory; worked also at Grand Haven, Mich., and Chicago, Ill. At Independence, Mo., Mr. Singer kept a drug store for a short time; sold out and went to Fort Leavenworth, where he was engaged in carpentering. In the spring of 1864 he came to Virginia City, but soon after removed to Helena, where he engaged in contracting and building, carrying on a general jobbing shop until 1875. During this time Mr. Singer had the misfortune to be burned out three times. In 1875 he went to Unionville, where he worked as millwright, and in 1877 came to Butte and worked for a short time in the Alice Mill. In the same fall Mr. Singer erected a number of buildings. In 1878 he put up a frame building and engaged in the furniture business. In 1883 his store was burned but he rebuilt, put in a fire proof cellar and greatly increased his stock of furniture.

WILLIAM F. SINSEL, Butte, foreman of Wild Bill mine, has been a resident of the Butte camp for the past six years, and of the Territory since 1869. He has been engaged in placer and quartz mining for over eight years. On coming to the Territory, he passed the winter of 1869-70 at Sun River and at Kennedy's Ranch. He worked in Last Chance and Dry Gulch from the spring of 1871 to 1874; then followed quartz mining and settled at Butte in the fall of 1876. Mr. Sinsel is a native of Newark, N. J. From 1866 to the date of settlement in Montana, he traveled in Iowa, Missouri, Kentucky and Dakota. His marriage took place at Butte, December 20, 1882.

LOU P. SMITH, Butte, a miner of 1862, was born in Orleans Co., N. Y., in April, 1838; moved with parents to Green Lake Co., Wis., in 1840; went to Colorado in 1859, and in the spring of 1862 moved to Montana, with Patrick Maloy, John White, John Lynch, Harry Houston, Louis Borin and two others. (Vide General History.) The same party who discovered Grasshopper Diggings (three miles below the village of Bannack), while en route to the Florence mines. Mr. Smith states that the party got cornered near Lemhi and had to abandon the train. Taking pack-horses they crossed the divide into Deer Lodge valley, leaving the train to make the circuit around by Snake River. Mr. Smith's party prospected along their route, struck the shanty of Captain Nick Wall, at the mouth of the Little Blackfoot, now Garrison. Finding supplies at this point, they fitted out a party of five, who started out prospecting on the Grasshopper river, and "struck it rich" at White's Gulch. He passed the winter of 1864–5 at Virginia City; joined the stampede to the Ophir diggings in 1865; subsequently followed mining, contracting, building and dealing in real estate until 1876. He moved to Deer Lodge in December, 1875, was appointed Deputy Sheriff, and in 1876 Under Sheriff. In 1880 he was elected Sheriff of Deer Lodge, which position he held until the division of the county in May, 1881. In 1879 he took up his residence in Butte, and was elected Marshal of that city in May, 1882. Mr. Smith was married at Deer Lodge, in January, 1878, to Mrs. Susan Wright, widow of Charles Wright, mother of Mrs. J. H. Mills, of Deer Lodge, and Miss Olive B. Wright, of Butte. In 1878 Mrs. Smith established a millinery house at Butte, which she has conducted since that time with marked success.

OSCAR SMITH, P. O. Divide, was born in Meeker Co., Minn., in 1856. His entire family were murdered there by Sioux in 1861, so that at the age of five years he was thrown on his own resources; later learned the trade of machinist in the Minneapolis iron works; next was fireman on the St. P. & P. railroad, in which position he served until 1879, when he came to Montana. For four years he engaged in prospecting, then leased a foundry at Butte, which he operated for one year. He then formed a partnership with Mr. Patridge, built a quartz mill on Charcoal creek, which has proven a marked success since its establishment.

W. EGBERT SMITH, Butte City, was born at Finesville, Warren Co., N. J., December 13, 1836. He was educated at the public schools, and taught school in his native village in 1854–55. On arriving at his majority he pursued a course of study at the Collegiate Institute at Charlotteville, N. Y., and prepared himself thoroughly as a professional teacher. He was employed mainly in that vocation in the East until 1865; he then removed to Savannah, Mo., where he was engaged in the manufacture of stoneware. Three years later he accepted the position of principal of the city schools; and after serving in that capacity two years, removed to Deer Lodge, Montana, to accept a similar position in that city. In the spring of 1875 he removed to Butte City, and spent the summer of that year prospecting for mineral lodes in the Summit valley district. After locating and recording the "Banker," "Clear Grit," "Oro Butte," "Silver Smith," "Jersey Blue," and other properties, now patented mines, he began development on the Banker lode, producing silver ore of high grade, and in the fall of the same year built an arastra for the reduction of his ores. In 1876 he became associated in the ownership of mines with Harry C. Kessler. One of the earliest successful efforts at the reduction of silver ore in the Summit Valley mining district was by the arastra owned and operated by Smith & Kessler, in Yankee Doodle Gulch. This arastra was run by water-power, day and night, winter and summer, for five years, commencing in 1876. The water was taken from the creek, in a covered ditch only 500 feet long, to a fifteen-foot overshot water-wheel, under cover, and never froze up so as to stop work during the period mentioned. The daily capacity of the works was one and a half tons of crude ore. The net product was about $20,000 yearly. The ore was mined from the Banker, Oro Butte, and Plutonian lodes—that taken from the Banker especially being of high grade and free reduction. The arastra—a crude grinding mill of Spanish or Mexican origin—was used for pulverizing the ore, after which it was treated in a wooden pan with steam, salt and bluestone, in a manner similar to the treatment in iron pans at the mills. Steam was generated the first year in a home-made boiler with wooden ends; but these blew out, and a small steamboiler was shipped from Philadelphia. With this the pulp was heated to the boiling-point, and treated chemically, as indicated; quicksilver was then added, and the silver amalgam was then caught on copper plates in bottom and sides of the pan. As only rich top ores could be profitably reduced by this process, it was abandoned when the mines had been worked to water level and more refractory ores encountered. On the death of Dr. Anson Ford, postmaster at Butte City, Mr. Smith accepted that position in December, 1878—first as acting postmaster under Dr. Ford's sureties, and in the spring of 1879 was duly appointed and commissioned by President Hayes. He was reappointed by President Arthur in 1883. Mr. Smith was married in Newark, N. J., May 9, 1883, to Miss Rose M Roff, a native of Newark, then living with her uncle, Horace Alling, of 44 Walnut street, daughter of George Roff, of Danbury, Conn. Mr. Smith is republican in politics, and for two years held the office of Territorial Superintendent of Public Instruction, to which he was appointed by Governor B. F. Potts in 1879.

C. H. SMITH, Butte, was born near Toronto, Canada, in 1835. His parents removed to Aurora, Ill., in 1861. At the age of sixteen Mr. Smith left for Corinne, Utah; learned trade of saddler and harness maker; worked three years; returned to Illinois and located at Downer's Grove; formed partnership with Hodgman Bros. and engaged in the brick business for three years, then dissolved partnership. Mr. Smith went to Nevada; worked at railroading three years; resigned position and located at Ogden, Utah, working at his trade that winter; followed the U. P. R. R. from Franklin to Dillon, moving his shop from town to town as the railroad progressed. He carried on business two years at Dillon, then disposed of his shop. Mr. Smith was one of the twelve who located the town site for Dillon. In May, 1880, he came to Butte, and opened his present saddlery and harness shop on Park street, near Main.

JULIAN SMITH, foreman carpenter and millwright of Anaconda works, Butte, was born in Kentucky in 1835. Leaving Kentucky in 1856 he emigrated to Kansas, and in 1858 went to Pike's Peak. From Pike's Peak he came to Idaho, afterward going to California, visiting Nevada, British Columbia and Alaska, and reaching Montana during the summer of 1877. Mr. Smith has been one of the leading carpenters and millwrights since coming to the territory, and one of the pioneers of construction in Butte, having built or put up the first works, first machinery and first pumps here. He also built the celebrated Alice mill. His experience as a millwright covers a period of twenty-five years. Mr. Smith is a married man, his wife's name being Mary Elizabeth, and they have two children: a daughter, Bertha M., and a son, Julian, Jr.

ADOLPH SPECKART, Butte, was born at Westphalia, Prussia, February 20, 1841. After leaving school he learned the trade of jeweler and watchmaker. In 1861 he emigrated to the United States, and located at Philadelphia. Worked in the gas lamp factory for two years, then removed to St. Louis, opened a jewelry establishment, carried it on for a short time, sold out and went to Illinois, where he engaged in farming until 1868. He then came to Montana, located at Helena, and opened a jewelry store. Two years later sold out and entered the office of Charles Rumley, assayer, remaining in his employ seven years. In 1875 he removed to Phillipsburg, and was appointed assayer and foreman for the Northwest mill. He came to Butte three years later, and engaged in the sodawater bottling business. He formed a partnership with Schmidt & Gamer, and opened a wholesale liquor house on Main street. He also carries a full line of tobaccos and cigars. Is sole agent for Schmidt & Gamer's centennial beer. The sodawater establishment is carried on in connection. In this line Mr. Speckart has the largest trade in Montana. He married Mrs. Disch, of Butte, in December, 1881.

W. O. SPEER, Butte, attorney at law, was born in Butler Co., Pa., in 1846, and removed to Scott Co., Ia., with his parents in 1855. He received an academic education at Davenport, Ia., and began the study of law at that place in the office of Brown & Campbell, in 1872. He was admitted to the bar in 1874, and pursued the practice of his profession in Davenport until June, 1880, when he removed to Butte, Montana, and has since been in practice at this place. He was the Republican candidate for district attorney for the Second Judicial District in the election of 1882, and was defeated with the rest of his ticket. He was also a candidate for the House of Representatives of the Fourteenth Legislative Assembly, and was elected, being the only Republican from his county out of four elected to that body that year (1884). He was pre-eminently noted as an opponent of "class legislation." Mr. Speer has, during his residence in Montana, taken an active part in politics, territorial and county, and has stumped the "west side" three times in behalf of his party. He has made his own way in the world. He taught school and worked at carpentering while fitting himself for his profession. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. and A. O. U. W.

J. M. SPENCER, Butte, was born at Hollyville, Wales, in 1840; learned trade of machinist; removed to England and worked at Liverpool, Birkenhead, and several smaller towns. He emigrated to the United States in 1863, and worked in the Pennsylvania coal mines. A few years later he removed to California, Mo., purchased a coal mine, and operated it five years; disposed of the mine and removed to Belleville, Ill.; worked at his trade two years. Receiving an appointment as chief engineer for the U. P. R. R. coal department, he came to Wyoming Territory, and after serving six years resigned his position and located at Phillipsburg, M. T., coming to Butte four months later. Here he worked at his trade in the Moulton mill for a year, when he returned to Wyoming Territory to fill his old position. In the spring of 1883 he again came to Butte, where he now fills the position of machinist at the Moulton mill.

H. H. STACKPOLE, Butte, was born at Titusville, Penn., in 1841. After leaving school he engaged in the oil business with his father. Mr. Stackpole had charge of the third engine at the third well sunk at that city. He remained in the oil business until the war broke out, when he enlisted, in 1861, at Leavenworth, Kan., in the Seventh Kansas Regiment, under Captain John Brown, serving through the war. After his discharge he returned to Pennsylvania, and engaged in milling until 1875, when he came to Montana. He worked as carpenter for three years at Silver Star; in 1878 came to Butte and worked as carpenter in most of the mines in camp, the principal ones being the Dexter, Clipper, Centennial, and Moulton, with which latter he is at present connected as carpenter.

W. J. STAMBAUGH, fireman at the Colorado Smelting Works, Butte, was born in Pennsylvania in 1854; came to Montana in 1882, where he has been connected with mines and mining works since that time.

REV. EDWIN J. STANLEY, Butte, was born in Buffalo, Mo., February 19, 1848, and in 1859 went with his parents to Kansas, where, in 1867, he began the work of a circuit preacher, as supply on the Irving mission, at the age of nineteen years. He was converted at the age of eleven years, and first licensed as a local preacher on the Kansas frontier. He had good success on his first mission, and in 1868 was appointed to Holden mission. In 1869 he was admitted on trial in the Missouri Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and in 1870 traveled the Troy circuit in Kansas. In 1871 he was ordained Deacon, by Bishop Marvin, sent as missionary to Radersburg, M. T., and preached his first sermon on that mission on the present site of Boulder City, to six persons, near where the beautiful stone church now stands. In 1872 he was appointed to the Gallatin Valley mission, in 1873 to Diamond City, and in 1874 he was appointed Presiding Elder of Virginia City district, and Pastor of Virginia City circuit. In 1875 he was re-appointed Pastor of Virginia City mission, with Jefferson Valley attached to it, in the Silver Star and Fish Creek country; also Bannack and Salmon cities west of the mountains. In 1876 he was again pastor at Boulder, and in 1877 the entire Territory of Montana was put into one district, over which he was made Presiding Elder. In 1878 this district was divided, and he was assigned to Deer Lodge district, including Missoula on the west and Boulder on the east, to which he was returned in 1879. In 1880 he was appointed to Missoula and Stevensville mission, including all the Bitter Root country. He remained two years on this mission, and was made Presiding Elder of Butte district in 1882. In 1883 he was stationed as pastor of Butte Mission, including Deer Lodge city and valley and the new town of Anaconda. During the years of his ministry up to 1883 his Conference boundaries were so changed as to make him a member of four different annual conferences without ever taking a transfer. While Presiding Elder of Deer Lodge district he lost his horse and buggy in the Bitter Root river, and narrowly escaped drowning, being barely able to swim ashore. He had several narrow escapes from perishing in the mountains in snow storms, several times being belated and remaining in the mountains all night, with no food, and his only bed or covering his saddle blankets. During the Nez Perces Indian raid he volunteered to go with the citizens of Bitter Root valley in pursuit of the hostiles, about 300 miles, over Elk pass or trail into Idaho. He was instrumental in the erection of the stone church at Boulder City, and it was through his earnest appeals that the M. E. Church South were awakened to organize a church extension society for the purpose of aiding in building churches in the less populous districts occupied by their societies. Strong inducements have been offered him to quit his Montana field for positions of advantage and comfort, but the warm attachment he feels for the old pioneers among whom he has labored so long has induced him to refuse all offers of ease or promotion, and remain in Montana. He is the author of "Rambles in Wonder Land," a work giving a very clear account of his travels and observations in the National Park or Great Geyser Basin. None have been more devoted to the ministry of the church in the mountains, and none more deserving of creditable mention for their works' sake than he.

REV. LEARNER BLACKMAN STATELER, a native of Kentucky, is a son of Steven and Rhoda Stateler, a grandson of Rev. Ignatius Pigman, who was an itinerant Methodist preacher in the first conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church organized on the American continent. He was, it is believed, a member of the famous "Christmas Conference" when that body was organized. After many years of itinerant labor, he located, and with his family emigrated to the then new state of Kentucky, his eldest daughter, Rhoda (Stateler's mother), being then about grown. After settling his family, and after the marriage of Rhoda to Steven Stateler, Mr. Pigman left for New Orleans, and was there when the city was environed by the British forces, and in common with other citizens, was placed by General Jackson in the service to assist in protecting the city. He died just after the grand victory was gained. An acquaintance from Kentucky visited him just before he breathed his last, and he sent this dying message to his family: "Tell them I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." His body rests in the city of New Orleans. Rev. L. B. Stateler joined the church at the early age of seven years. When quite young he became strongly impressed that it was his duty to preach, and at once started in the work. He was admitted on trial into the Kentucky Conference of the M. E. Church in October, 1831. There being an urgent call at this Conference for volunteers for the then distant field in Missouri, he offered himself, was accepted and started at once to the distant mission of Cedar Creek circuit in Boone and Callaway counties; next to the Bowling Green circuit, and then served on different circuits until the fall of 1837, when he was sent as a missionary to the Delaware Indians, west of Missouri, and for the succeeding fourteen years served as missionary to the various Indian tribes scattered throughout that extensive territory, reaching from the Red River of the North to the Red River of the Southwest. He belonged to nine different annual conferences, and has been only transferred twice from one conference to another The explanation is: The country was so extensive that as the work grew and new conferences were formed, he was found always on the border, following the tide of emigration westward, until to-day he is in the far-off Rocky Mountains, two thousand miles from where he first started. Mr. Stateler was the first circuit preacher sent by the M. E. Church into the new territory—now the State of Iowa—and organized the church in Madison, Burlington, Yellow Springs, High Grove, Farmington, and neighboring towns and communities, in 1835. An incident occurred during his labors which came near proving fatal. In attempting to cross the Mississippi, from the Illinois to the Iowa shore, the boat, which was very frail, suddenly sprung a leak when midway up the stream, and would soon have filled with water and sent all to the depths below, but one of the party snatched some blankets from an emigrant wagon which was on the boat, crammed them into the holes and the boat reached the shore in safety. In 1854 the territories of Kansas and Nebraska were organized, and for eight years he labored among the white settlers who came pouring into the eastern portion of the territory of Kansas. In 1862 Mr. Stateler prepared an ox team, and outfitted with a few articles, such as corn meal and other necessary supplies, he left for the Rocky Mountains in Colorado. Two objects were had in view: the one was to take charge of the M. E. Church South in Denver, to which he had been appointed by the bishop; the other was to get away from the fearful conflict going on everywhere in the country around him. He left his family at home and well provided for, supposing that they would not be molested. It took two months to make the trip across the plains to the mountains. He had been there but a short time when a letter from his wife brought the terrible news that their beautiful dwelling, together with all belonging to it, was in ashes. A miserable fiend, under cover of the darkness, had fired the building at midnight hours when all were wrapt in slumber, apparently intending to destroy the inmates also in the flames. But a kind Providence interposed. A good lady living near was mysteriously awakened from her sleep, was prompted to go to the window, when she saw the house wrapt in flames. She called her husband, who ran with all his might, aroused his family, and rescued them from a terrible death. Mrs. Stateler gathered what she could of the scattered remains together, and late in the fall started by wagon, driving a few cows across the plains. It was a bold adventure, but she possessed the spirit of a true heroine and was equal to the occasion. She was met at Fort Kearney on the Platte river by her husband, and thence, in dead of winter, the family made their way to Denver, where they arrived some time in January. The trip was attended with intense suffering, the snow often very deep, and scarcely any timber for fuel; the thermometer away below zero, and the wind sometimes blowing a hurricane. A house was secured at Denver, where the family found a temporary home and remained until the spring of 1864. The church building of which Mr. Stateler was to take charge had gone into other hands, but he formed a circuit in the vicinity of Denver which he traveled for about a year, preaching regularly at various points, and for which he received the entire sum of forty dollars, all told. In the spring of 1864 he and his family emigrated to Montana, where they arrived in July and found a temporary home in a mining camp at Norwegian gulch. Here they found friends, and although without a dollar in money, and with only a part of a sack of flour for bread, they felt happy to know that the long and tedious journey was at an end. An arbor was erected and seats prepared, and the first Sunday after arriving Mr. Stateler preached to an attentive congregation. A few cows that had traveled the entire journey gave them milk, and by fall supplied them with sufficient butter to sell and buy bread and some groceries for the winter. And thus with a half dozen cows to milk they were saved from suffering and starvation, and in course of time were enabled to live comfortably. In the meantime Mr. Stateler preached at Virginia City and organized a society at Willow Creek the following January. He received no assistance from any missionary board for the first seven years, but still kept on at his work, traveling, preaching and organizing societies at various places throughout the Territory. He went with his family to Oregon, traveling across the mountains by way of the Mullan road. While there he took charge of a circuit and put in the time in earnest labor. He returned the next summer. In 1867 he was appointed Presiding Elder of Montana District, but remained almost the sole preacher of his church in this broad field until 1871, when three young men were sent to his assistance, but not until he had promised that their traveling expenses should be paid to the Territory. Since that time he has been constantly in the active work, always filling his appointments with great regularity and promptness. He represented the Montana conference in the General Conference at Nashville, Tenn., to which he was a delegate in 1881. He has made repeated trips to the States in the interest of the church in Montana, bearing his own expenses, and has given hundreds of dollars toward the erection of churches in various places. His house has ever been a home for the preachers. He has been on the frontier from the Mississippi almost to the Pacific ocean, preaching the gospel to rich and poor, to white and red and black men all alike, and is known and loved and honored by all classes throughout the entire church and country. He is now presiding elder of the Montana District, which embraces the entire Territory. Mr. Stateler lives on the Jefferson river fifteen miles above Three Forks, in a well-sheltered, beautiful and retired place. He has a comfortable residence, is surrounded with the comforts of life, the result of the faithful and patient efforts put forth by himself and his heroic wife. (From sketch by Rev. Edwin J. Stanley.)

O. STENBERG, began business in Butte in 1879, and is located at No. 32 Park street. He is a native of Stockholm, Sweden, and came to the United States in 1864, stopping in Richmond, Va., for one year. From Richmond he proceeded to New York and New Orleans, remaining at the latter city for one year; thence to Omaha, two years and a half, later to Salt Lake City, and finally arrived in Butte. He is a practical painter of twenty-five years' experience and received the first silver medal for sign painting given in Salt Lake City. In 1869 he was married to Hanna Amelia Lôfgren, a native of Sweden.

WM. STOLTE, Silver Bow, was born in Hanover, Germany, October 18, 1833. In 1853 he came to America, and followed the sea until 1863, when he went to California. He mined there and in Nevada until the spring, of 1865, when he came to Montana. He located in German Gulch, remaining there until 1872, when he went to Silver Bow, going in the employ of W. H. Welbbold. He remained with this firm until 1878 managing a branch store in Butte for three years of the time. In 1880 he bought the Silver Bow Hotel, of which he is still proprietor. A genial heart and an old-timer, he is well and favorably known throughout the whole county. He is a member of Fidelity Lodge, No. 8, I. O. O. F. Mr. Stolte was married February 15, 1879, to Catharine Dries. They have two children.

S. H. STUART, Walkerville, was born in February, 1828, at Robbinston, Me., and at the age of seventeen went to sea. In 1851 he engaged in placer mining in California, and in 1865 came to Helena; engaged in mining at Cedar Creek, Missoula and Deer Lodge until 1875. Then coming to Butte he began working for Clark Bros. He had charge of the Dexter mines for four years, subsequently leasing it for two years. He was then appointed foreman of the Moulton Mill; had charge while it was being built, also charge of building the Silver Star.

J. T. SULLIVAN, Butte, the pioneer watchmaker and jeweler of Montana, came to Gold Creek or Pioneer Gulch in July, 1862, moved to Bannack the following winter, where he prospected and mined until the fall of 1863, when he moved to Alder Gulch. He mined there for a short time, and then established the first jewelry store and watchmaker's shop in the Territory. In May, 1865, he went to the Blackfoot country and mined there until January, 1866, when he moved to Helena, and opened the first jewelry store at that place. In 1878 he moved his stock to Butte, carried on business for some years on Broadway, moved thence to what was known as Sullivan's Jewelry Store, and carried on business there until his recent retirement. Mr. Sullivan is a native of Cork Co., Ireland. In 1837 he came to the United States, settling at Troy, N. Y.; moved to Dubuque, Ia., in 1839; thence to St. Louis, Mo., where he was educated in the College of the Jesuits; learned the watchmaker's trade, and with his brother carried on business there until 1862, when he came to Montana as one of its very first pioneers.

PATRICK TALENT, attorney at law, Butte, was born at Dublin, Ireland, in 1842; came to the United States in 1852, and was brought up in Illinois. Mr. Talent was educated at Galesburg College, Ill., from which he graduated in 1869. He studied law under Judge Lamphire, of Galesburg, was admitted to the bar in 1873, and practiced law in that city for one year previous to coming here in 1874. He opened a law office at Helena in 1874, and moved to Butte in the spring of 1875, of which city he was attorney for one year and six months. Mr. Talent was married at Deer Lodge, June 15, 1882, to Miss Clara, daughter of David Lincoln, of Vassalborough, Me. He is a member of the Masonic society and secretary of the Chapter R. A. M.

ALEX. H. TARBET, Butte, was born July 21, 1861, at Johnson, Ia. After completing his education left for Utah in 1875, mined at that Territory for three years; then removed to Butte, M. T.; took charge of ore department for C. T. Meador for nearly a year; then held same position for the Montana Copper Company until 1880; was then appointed superintendent of the Belle mine, with which he remained two years. Receiving appointment as superintendent for the Shakespeare mine, held charge for eight months, since then has been taking ore contracts, having one with the Parrot mine which expired January, 1884. Mr. Tarbet is also interested in the Summit Valley Railroad, which was incorporated October, 1883, being one of the main stockholders.

WILLIAM H. THOMAS, Walkerville, P. O. Butte, engineer at Bell Mining Works, was born in Cornwall, England, in 1851; came to the United States in 1872; resided in Michigan for one year and moved to California in 1873. He made a stay of seven and one-half years in the Golden State prior to his settlement at Butte, three and one-half years ago.

J. D. THOMAS, Butte, was born April 30, 1830, in South Wales. At the age of fifteen he entered a grocery store; at the age of twenty engaged in railroading and had charge of a train on the South Wales & Great Western Railroad for several years. During this time he was detailed to take charge of train for party attending the funeral of Lord Wellington. In 1855 Mr. Thomas emigrated to Canada; accepted a position on the Grand Trunk Railroad. In 1856 moved to Iowa and farmed in Harrison county for three years, then fitted out at Council Bluffs, Ia., with party, and started in April for Colorado. After a few days a great number began to get discouraged with fear of Indians and the poor prospects of finding gold upon arrival at the diggings. That year, however, the Indians were not very bad. Upon arrival at Denver it was found to be a wild looking place, most of the inhabitants living in tents expecting to move at any time, having little confidence in the country. In 1860 Tarry-all, Blue River and Georgia Gulch mines were discovered. Mr. Thomas mined at these points until 1863. The fall of that year having realized good returns from the diggings, he left for Europe. In the spring of 1864 he returned to the United States; at Omaha fitted out a company for Montana. After traveling as far as Fort Laramie the party halted waiting for another outfit. In a few days the outfit arrived; they then started with a train of 175 wagons, well equipped for any emergency. In about a week's time the party overtook Bridger's outfit. After crossing the Big Horn and Yellowstone their boats were buried in the sand for other emigrants to use and for the purpose of preventing the Indians from destroying them. As Bridger was an old mountaineer, he was hired for guide. The next party that followed had to fight their way through, and many were killed. It took the party something over thirty days from Fort Laramie to Virginia City. Mr. Thomas prospected there for two years, then went into the grocery business with O. D. French at Nevada City for two years, when the firm dissolved, Mr. Thomas going to Virginia City and opening a grocery store, where he remained until 1878. In the meantime he also engaged in the cattle business. Finding they were not very profitable, he sold his cattle interests and removed his stock of groceries to Butte, locating a store on Park street near Main, where he carries on a large retail and wholesale trade.

JAMES THOMPSON, M. D., Butte, was born at Plattsburg, Clinton Co., Mo., November 28, 1844, educated at Jacksonville College, Ill., and at the Asbury University, Ind. He began the study of medicine in Plattsburgh in 1867, took a regular course at the St. Louis Medical College in 1868-69, and at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, from which he graduated March 12, 1870. He entered on practice in 1869, at Osborne, Mo., and after taking his degree of M. D. continued there until 1874, when he moved to St. Louis, Mo., where he practiced until June, 1878. Since that date he has been a resident physician of Butte; was elected the first county coroner of Silver Bow early in 1881. The doctor is a thirty-second degree Mason, and has served as Dep. Sup. Chancellor of the Knights of Pythias for Montana. He was married at St. Louis, Mo., in 1881, to Miss Annie H. Marsh, daughter of Major Darius Marsh, a native of that city.

JOHN Q. THOMPSON, Butte, was born in Harrison Co., Ohio, June 17, 1824. His earlier years were passed in the towns of Carlton and Rumley, O. The five years ending in 1840 were devoted to farming. In 1840 he moved to Kokomo, Ind., thence to Iowa, where he remained until 1849, when he settled on Feather river, California. After two years there he visited San Francisco, Lake Nicaragua, C.A., New York city, and thence to his old home, where he was engaged in mercantile work for seven years. In 1858 he visited California, and subsequently was mail contractor in the State until 1864, when he came to Alder Gulch. The same year he returned to the States, where he engaged in farming until 1880, when he moved to Montana, and mined on his claim near Walkerville. He, with his brother, is interested in sixty acres of the Homestead placers. He was married June 10, 1851, to Miss Martha C. Thompson, of Fairfield, Jefferson Co., Ia. During his residence in Iowa he served two years as deputy sheriff of Keokuk Co., and one year in a similar position in Wapello Co.

WILLIAM THOMPSON, Butte, is a native of Cobourg, Canada, where he was born March 1, 1838. In 1850 his parents moved to Detroit, Mich. In 1856 they moved to Lacrosse, Wis., and in 1859 went to Minnesota, where they remained until 1861, when they moved to Dakota and were among the first settlers of Yankton. William Thompson remained there over two years, then starting for Montana with a team, reached the Territory about August 28, 1863, having come by the Landers Cut-off, and having brought the first kit of carpenter's tools into Virginia City, at once engaged in the manufacture of window sash, first hewing the material from dry pine poles, and receiving fifty cents per light for the sash. He with a partner burned the first kiln of lime produced in Alder Gulch. He also engaged in building during the winter of '63 and '64 and the following spring and summer. In the fall of 1864 he constructed thirteen boats on the Yellowstone for the purpose of transferring to the States those who were anxious to return. On October 10, everything being in readiness, they started on the return trip, 168 men taking passage. Mr. Thompson was regarded as the leader of the fleet, and he succeeded in conducting them without molestation to the mouth of the Yellowstone. At Painted Woods they passed a band of Indians belonging to the Santee Sioux tribe, who endeavored to induce them to land, and his companions felt inclined to do so, but Mr. Thompson determined to push onward with his boat and the fleet followed him. The Indians, finding they would not land, came out upon a sand bar and fired upon them, but aiming too high, the shots passed over them and they escaped uninjured. They halted at Forts Union, Buford, Rice, Randall and Thompsons then the Winnebago agency, at each of which place, they were very hospitably treated by the soldiers. They arrived at Sioux City on the 12th day of November, 1864. Mr. Thompson wintered in Minnesota, Michigan and Canada, and in the spring of 1865 returned via the Missouri river to Fort Benton, soon after went to Helena, on which journey he was obliged to run the gauntlet, as the Indians were very troublesome and desperate in that vicinity. From Helena he went to Virginia city and resumed building with his partner, Mr. Griffiths, who had a building under way when he arrived. The following year he went to Helena and engaged in contracting and building; next year he returned to Virginia City, where he was occupied for two years in building quartz mills, during which time he bought a saw-mill, and has since been engaged in the saw-mill and lumber business at Virginia City, Butte and Glendale. In 1874 he left Virginia City, and going to Glendale remained until 1878, when he went to Butte, where he still continues in the business and has now in operation six steam mills. He is also interested in mining, and is prominently identified with all public improvements in the city, and has been an active and prominent member of the Vigilantes' order, having built the scaffold on which five men were hung at one time in Virginia City, one of whom, an innocent man who came to the Territory with Mr. Thompson from Dakota, had unknowingly carried a letter for the road agents, for which he was hung. Mr. Thompson was married on the 13th day of October, 1869, to Miss Anna M. Boyce (daughter of Major Boyce), by whom four children were born, Wm. B., Jas. R., Edward and Flora May. Mr. Thompson is a prominent member of the Knights of Pythias and the order of Masonry, in which he has taken every degree in both Scottish and York rites.

COL. JOHN C. C. THORNTON, Butte, was born in Clay Co., Mo., October 20, 1834. After leaving college in Virginia he returned home, devoted his time to the study of law, and was admitted to the bar in 1856, after which he followed the practice of law at St. Joseph, Mo., but upon the breaking out of the Rebellion, joined the confederate service as captain of the first battery of artillery raised in that section. He was soon after appointed major and commanded a battalion of six companies. After the battle of Shiloh he was put on detached service for a time and was afterward commissioned for the recruiting service in the State of Missouri, and proved one of the most efficient commanders in the service. He was constantly in communication with Gen. Price, and his recruits numbered thousands more than were furnished by any other officer. It was a desperate undertaking to recruit on the north side of the river. He was commissioned by Gen. Price and placed in command of his recruits, and remained in the service until the close of the war. In the fall of 1865 he started west and drove an ox team to Denver, thence traveling by stage to Salt Lake, where he met friends interested in prospecting, and went south to Tucson and Prescott, and after passing through innumerable hardships and dangers, returned to Salt Lake in March, 1866. He soon after came to Montana with his brother-in-law, they bringing with them 3,000 sacks of flour, the former taking part of it to Helena, and he proceeding with the remainder to Blackfoot City. During the winter of 1866 he went to Deer Lodge City and engaged in the practice of law, which he continued for several years. In 1875 he went to Butte, where he continued the practice of law some three years, when having become interested in mining, gave up active practice and turned his attention to mining pursuits, and now owns and operates the Gagnon mine and constantly employs from forty to fifty men; the shaft extends some 500 feet in depth and has turned out an immense amount of ore which is constantly increasing in richness. Col. Thornton is a gentleman of superior business tact and thoroughly devoid of political aspirations, although he was elected to the Constitutional Convention. His father, John Thornton, crossed the Missouri river in 1815, and for thirty years represented his district in the Legislature. Col. Thornton in former days was largely interested in Kansas, which interests he lost through the perfidy of his agent and attorney. He was married in 1864 to Miss Louisa A. Archer, of Platte Co., Mo., to whom were born eight children.

BENJAMIN TIBBEY, Butte, superintendent of Parrott Silver & Copper Mining Co's No. 2 mine for the past three years, has followed mining since the age of sixteen years. He has had several narrow escapes, notably that of Compagne, in England, where twenty-seven of his comrades were killed, himself having to walk a half mile in the darkness, seeking means of escape; at St. Clair, Pa., he was wounded during a mine explosion, and at Lucas, Ia., during the burning of a shaft, six years ago, he and twenty-six others were below, but were rescued after two hours of terrible suspense. Mr. Tibbey was married in 1871, to Miss Hannah Corbey, a native of St. Clair, Pa.

WM. F. TOMPKINS, Butte, was born at Clyde, Wayne Co., N. Y., in 1835. Removing early in 1856 to Chicago, Ill., he became connected with the grain and produce trade. In 1858 he was married to Miss Jennie S. Hayward, who was brought when an infant of a few months of age to Woodstock, Ill., by her parents, who were among the early settlers of that section. This marriage has resulted in the birth of six children, of whom the first three died in infancy, and of the remaining three Edward M. is at school at Ripon, Wis.; Emma L. is at school at Janesville, Wis.; and the youngest, Alice B., is at home. He was prominently connected with the grain and provision interests of Chicago for upward of twenty-five years, organizing for the board of trade of that city the office for the registration of grain receipts, and holding the position of registrar until the State of Illinois relieved the board of trade from the control of the inspection of grain. He was then appointed by Governor John M. Palmer to the office of chief inspector of grain for the State of Illinois, organizing that department and holding the office for one term. His visit to Butte, M. T., early in 1882, resulted in his engaging in the auction, storage and commission business, and the making of that city his permanent home.

C. M. TURCK, of the firm of Leyson & Turck, jewelers, was born in New York city, December 17, 1848. After completing his education he was in the employ of W. H. Lewis, jeweler, for four years. In 1870 he resigned that position, and went to Cheyenne, W. T., where he was in the employ of the firm for five and one-half years, the firm then establishing a house at Salt Lake City, and there Mr. Turck remained in their employ two and one-half years longer. In 1880 he came to Butte, formed partnership with A. M. Leyson, and established their jewelry and watch-making business on Main street. On January 13, 1883, a petition from the city council was received, authorizing them to adopt a standard time. This petition had been received and adopted by a unanimous vote.

GEORGE W. TURRELL, Butte, was born at Plattsburg, N. Y., April 7, 1846. While quite a youth he enlisted in Company H, General Connor's command, in September, 1863. The company arrived in Utah, in the spring of 1863; was transferred to Idaho to protect emigration, and remained there until the spring of 1865. Obtaining his discharge he went to Oneida, and worked at the salt works. These works were the first to furnish salt by evaporation. In the summer of 1866 Mr. Turrell joined the Salmon river stampede, and after remaining four months returned to Virginia City, where he was employed digging ditches and laying pipes for the city. That winter he went to Bozeman; in the spring moved to Helena, and was engaged in placer mining at Last Chance gulch until 1876. He then located at Butte. Since that time he has been prospecting and mining for himself, and also for other parties. Mr. Turrell was married May 2, 1869.

SHELLEY TUTTLE, Butte, was born at Kalamazoo, Mich., September 14, 1852; removed to Independence, Ia., in 1863, and in 1868 to Omaha, Neb., thence, after one year, to Wyoming Territory; visited Chicago in 1871, thence going to St. Louis, where he was engaged in building elevators, bridges, etc., in the city, and for the Little Rock & Arkansas R. R., in bridging Red river. In 1875 he returned to Independence, Ia., followed contracting and building one year, and in the spring of 1876 went to Rawlins, Wyoming Territory; thence to Butte, M. T., in 1877, where he was in the employ of the Alice Mining Company about two years. He built the Montana Concentrator and the Moulton works, and was employed on various works as millwright. In 1881 engaged in business for himself at Butte City, where he has a foundry and machine shop. Mr. Tuttle was married to Miss Charlotte Long, December 14, 1882.

D. N. UPTON, Butte, one of the Pacific slope miners of 1854, came to Montana in 1865. He was born in New Brunswick, Canada, in 1836; moved to California when eighteen years old, (via Panama), where he mined until the fall of 1862, when he moved to Florence, Wyoming Territory. In the summer of 1864 he was one of the party who discovered the Idaho basin diggings; next visited British Columbia, then came to Helena, M. T., and passed the winter of 1865-6 prospecting on the Yellowstone. He settled at Butte in September, 1866, and has been interested since in quartz and placer mines in that neighborhood. He has passed through all the vicissitudes of a miner's life, paid as high as $2.50 per pound for flour, and $1 per pound for oats, reducing the latter to meal for food. Mr. Upton was married at Butte, November 22, 1879, to Miss M. Ellie Lewis, of Platte Co., Mo.

H. G. VALITON, Butte, was born in August, 1842, at Montbeliard, France; emigrated to the United States with his parents when nine years old, locating at Dubuque, Ia.; attended school and worked on a farm until 1859, then went to St, Joseph, Mo., and the next March left for Pike's Peak; mined two years at Delaware Flats, in Summit Co., Colo.; started for Salmon river, but stopped at Virginia City and engaged in teaming between that city and Reese river and Deadwood. In the spring of 1864, with eighteen others, he fitted out for prospecting; mined at Jordan, Idaho, a few months, then left for British possessions, and prospected, mined and ran a saloon until the fall of 1865; returned to Montana, and mined at Blackfoot and Confederate gulches until the spring of 1866; mined at Bear gulch a few months, then went to Deer Lodge, taking a herd of horses on shares. In the spring of 1867 he engaged in the livery business with Mr. Hardenbrook, the firm being known as Hardenbrook, Valiton & Co. In 1879 he formed partnership with Wm. Owsley, and opened a livery stable at Butte. In 1880 Mr. Valiton sold out his livery business at Deer Lodge and removed to Butte. Here he carries on a livery and boarding stable in connection with the baggage and passenger transfer. He married Miss Mary M. Rhea, of Michigan, in December, 1881. Mrs. Valiton came to Montana at two years of age.

JOSEPH M. VENABLE, Butte, born in Shelbyville, Ky., January 25, 1843, moved with his parents to St. Joseph, Mo., in childhood, where he received his education. Mr. Venable visited Nebraska in 1862, and in 1863 moved to Alder Gulch, then called Varina. In 1864 he visited Last Chance (Helena), thence to Grizzly Gulch, where he passed one year; next to Highland, and lastly to Butte in 1875. He continued in active mining life until 1870, and still attends to his mining interests. He was appointed City Marshal in 1881; elected Treasurer in 1882, and Marshal in 1883. Mr. Venable was married at Memphis, Tenn., in 1878, to Miss Mary R., daughter of E. M. Richardson, a native of Mississippi. He is a member of the A. O. U. W., and in political life is a Democrat.

A. M. WALKER, of the Montana Lumber and Produce Co., Butte, was born in Lee Co., Ia., January 14, 1839. In 1863 he came direct to Montana, and for a short time was located at Bannack, then went to Virginia City, and in the fall of 1863 put up one of the first saw-mills erected in that vicinity, which was for a time operated by horse power, and afterward by water power. In the fall of 1864 he sold out his interests, moved to Iowa, where he spent the winter, and in the spring of 1865 returned to Virginia City, engaged in the mercantile business, having, in company with his brother and Mr. A. Hardenbrook, brought a stock of goods with them on his return from Iowa. In the fall of 1865 they took their goods to Deer Lodge, where they opened a store and there continued in trade until the Elk Creek excitement in the spring of 1866, when they took their goods to that camp and soon after disposed of them, after which Mr. Walker and his brother went to Helena, and engaging in the lumber business continued until 1872, having during that time also engaged in the freighting business between the different points of importance in the Territory, which business they still continued under the management of Mr. Walker's brother. After disposing of their lumber interests Mr. Walker went to Nevada, where he purchased and put on the road another freighting outfit and continued there in business two years, and on January 1, 1875, returned to Helena, resumed the lumber business in partnership with his brother, who had invested in the business some time prior to this, and so continued one year, when they then became interested in sheep raising in Meagher county, which they followed three years. In 1881 he came to Butte City, and during that summer was interested with Mr. Thompson in the lumber business, after which he, in company with T. P. Newton, bought a saw-mill and engaged in the manufacture of lumber, etc., which they still continue, and are largely interested in the Montana Lumber and Produce Co. of Butte City, having branch houses at Dillon and Anaconda. In March, 1882, Messrs. Newton & Walker, in company with Mr. Bartlett, opened the Granite State Pavilion, which they still operate, with fair success. Mr. Walker was married in 1871 to Miss Abbie Beatrice Creel.

R. B. WALLACE first came to Montana (Butte City) in 1878. Was superintendent in a quartz mill in Butte for four years, after that he went to Deer Lodge Valley, March, 1883, where he started a store near Stuart, in which he has carried on business. Mr. Wallace was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1845; was there raised and educated, until the war broke out, when he enlisted, in 1861. He served in the army two years, and then enlisted in the navy, where he served four years. Mr. Wallace was married to Miss Mary Griffiths, October, 1880. Has one child.

ALFRED I. WASHBURN, Butte, was born at Kingston, Mass., in 1846; went to Boston when a boy, and learned trade of wood turner; this he worked at for twelve years. He enlisted in the Twenty-second Massachusetts Infantry, in 1864. This regiment was afterward consolidated with the Thirty-second Massachusetts, with which he served until the close of the war. He then found employment at his trade in the organ factory of Mason & Hamlin for ten years, afterward working two years in Maine and one year at Boston. In July, 1880, he came to Butte, M. T., and worked for W. J. Davis, assisting in building shafts and hoisting works for three months; prospected that winter, and in the spring of 1881 assisted in putting in the Moulton Ditch; cut cord wood until the spring of 1882; worked at his trade for Jeffries & Jovall, and in September, 1882, came to the Lexington mill, where he holds the position of roaster

DANIEL J. WELCH, Butte city, is one of the California pioneers of 1853. He was born in Ireland in December, 1836; came with his parents to Boston, Mass., in 1849, and in February, 1853, proceeded to California (via the Isthmus of Panama), where he remained until 1857, when he moved to Portland, Ore., as agent of Wells, Fargo & Co. On the discovery of the Fraser river diggings he was the second trader on the ground, and passed two years there. He next engaged in merchandising at Rock creek, B. Columbia. In March, 1866, he joined E. L. Bonner in shipping goods by pack-trains over the mountains from Walla Walla to Bear and Elk gulches. In October, 1866, he erected a store building at Missoula and traded there under the firm name of Bonner & Welch. This partnership was dissolved in 1870, after which Mr. Welch carried on the business at Missoula until 1878, having, in the meantime, established branch houses at Butte and Glendale, which he closed in 1890. He was vice-president of the Missoula National Bank for several years. He was elected treasurer of Silver Bow county in May, 1881, and re-elected in 1883 by an increased majority. In 1885 he was appointed by President Cleveland Collector of Internal Revenue for the district of Montana, which position he now holds. Mr. Welch was married at Deer Lodge city in October, 1871, to Miss Alice, daughter of James H. Brown, a prominent mining man of Montana. The Alice Mine near Butte is named in honor of this lady.

DR. O. B. WHITFORD, Butte, born in Ohio in 1834, graduated from the Eclectic College of Cincinnati in 1858, and in 1859 went to Denver, Col., where he practiced as a physician until 1864. At that time he came to Montana, and, locating at Virginia, continued his practice four years. In 1868 he went to Rochester, where he passed two years, and in 1870 he located in Deer Lodge, where he resided until 1876. He at that time selected the city of Butte as a most desirable place to reside in, and, locating here, has since continued in the practice of his profession. In the meantime Dr. Whitford has been quite largely interested in mining operations, and from 1864 to 1868 expended large amounts of money in developing the Sterling Co. mines, and in prospecting. From 1868 to 1870 he belonged to a mining organization formed by Judge H. Z. Hayner. This company was quite noted and made some very large sales of mining properties. In 1872 Dr. Whitford discovered a mine in the Cable country, which he has developed, and in which he still owns a half interest, and is also interested in two mines in Beaver Head county, and is owner of the silver mine "Wanderer," having purchased the same in 1876. He is also interested in the Meadeville valley mines. In 1868 he built the Miners' Hospital of Butte city, which is the third hospital he has erected in the territory, he having formerly built one at Virginia city and one at Deer Lodge, and during the four years intervening between 1871 and 1874, inclusive, was surgeon of the penitentiary at Deer Lodge. In 1880 he was elected alderman of the city of Butte, and in 1883 was elected mayor. In 1855 Dr. Whitford was married to Miss Mary Jane Tanner, of Indiana, to whom three children were born. Mrs. Whitford died in 1870, and in 1873 Mr. Whitford was united in marriage with Mrs Susan Lavina Holoway, of Montana. His eldest son, Chas. S. Whitford, born in 1856, graduated at the Eclectic College of Chicago in 1881, and is now in practice with his father.

JAMES W. WHITLATCH, Helena, was born in Pennsylvania September 12, 1843. His parents were in indigent circumstances, and from the time of the death of his father, which occurred when James W. was about eight years of age, he was left to fight the battle of life alone. When about seventeen years old he started, in company with an acquaintance, for Colorado via the plains. His friend became discouraged after reaching Kansas and returned to the States. Mr. Whitlatch hired as a cattle driver and pursued his way to Colorado. Here he located a claim and began mining on his own account. Pluck and energy, backed by a lucky hit, helped him to accumulate something over $10,000 the first season. He spent three years in this region, but by some unfortunate speculations lost his entire capital. He then packed his kit and went to Nevada. Once more fortune smiled upon his efforts, and he accumulated a large amount of dust; and again unlucky speculations as quickly swept it away. In 1865, with nothing but his rifle and mining kit, he tramped across Idaho to the then famous placer diggings of Montana, arriving at the "Last Chance" diggings at Helena without a dollar in his pocket. Reasoning that where so much gold had been found on the surface there must be a supply of the same somewhere in the quartz adjacent, he built himself a cabin and for months ranged up and down the cañons in search of gold-bearing quartz, that he felt bound to discover, in spite of the jeers and ridicule of disappointed miners who had preceded him in a like search. After years of almost hopeless labor, during which he endured hardships and privations that would have discouraged a less resolute man, his experienced eye detected in the opening of a gopher hole an unusual display of gold-bearing quartz. Quickly plying pick and shovel, he had the satisfaction, when at the depth of three feet, of discovering a rich gold-bearing vein. This mine more than made good its promise, and under the name of Whitlatch Union Mine, produced for its owner up to the date of its sale to the New York Mining Company, the snug sum (as shown by the books) of $3,663,000. The history of his efforts to develop the mine, working without capital or influence, would show a record of the exercise of determined energy, sagacious judgment, and indomitable pluck, that is unequaled in the annals of the mountains. The first ore crushed from the Whitlatch Union Mine was crushed in the National Mining and Exploring Company's mill, in September, 1868. The Turnley mill and the Hendrie mill each began reduction in December, 1868, and Lensenderfer mill in September, 1869. These mills up to 1870, in round numbers, crushed the following number of tons: Turnley mill, 2,500; Hendrie, 2,700; Hodge (National Mining and Exploring Co.) 9,000; Whitlatch & Lensenderfer, 10,000; I. X. L. (Ricker & Price), 8,000; total, 32,200 tons; the average yield per ton being $31.10, making an average yield of $1,001,500. This is from the rock as it runs. (The above was written in 1870.) He sold the Union, and with the proceeds continued his explorations. He discovered other valuable claims, which he opened up, procured stamp mills and batteries, enlisted outside capital, and operated with such. He erected nine mills in all. At the age of 26 he was worth a million of dollars. The fame of his discoveries in the vicinity of Helena attracted immigration to that point, and from a little collection of mining huts, as it was when he found it, he witnessed its growth to a city of substantial and lofty brick blocks, with many palatial residences, fine churches, and other public buildings, commanding more business than any other city in the Territory. He erected many of its finest structures. Mr. Whitlatch left Montana in 1871 for his old stamping ground in Nevada. After several years spent in mining in the Spruce mining district, he sold out to advantage and removed to California. His ventures in that state not panning out to his satisfaction, he abandoned the field and invested in mining in Arizona. Again selling out at a profit, he determined to try his fortune in Mexico. Several years were devoted to his favorite pursuit (mining) at Madrid, Laud, Durango and Chihuahua. Again he changed base, and this time sought the gold fields of Bolivia, South America. The rich mines and tropical luxuriance of the country were attractive and promising. But finding the overpowering heat and climatic influences were surely undermining his health and energy, he at last turned northward, and brought up at Leadville, Col. There he once more "struck it rich," and made a handsome stake. Hearing the flattering accounts of the mining operations of his old home (Montana), urged, too, by the promptings of his heart, to return to his old love, he soon after reappeared on the scenes of his former struggles and triumphs. He has come to stay and is heartily welcomed by old-time friends. Montana will once more feel the influence of her favorite son whose former brilliant and successful enterprises marked a prosperous era in her history. He is once more in the field, having secured a property that will rival the Whitlatch Union in its palmiest days. Last July (1883) he bonded a group of mines for $30,000 in the immediate vicinity of the famous Cable lead, and which he was then satisfied were extensions of the Cable. The group consisted of the Southern Cross, Sonora, Monitor, Pleiades and Monitor Extension. Immediately after bonding he put a force of men to take ore from the Southern Cross, the most promising of the group. He has now 1,200 tons of ore on the dumps, which will go from $8 to $12 per ton in free milling gold. In the spring of 1884 he shipped a twenty-stamp mill from the East to erect upon this mine. Mr. Whitlatch was married at Brooklyn, N. Y., April 21, 1869, to Miss Josie Williams, daughter of J. D Williams, of that city, and he was congratulated upon having made the richest and happiest discovery of his life. Subsequent developments have verified the prediction to the fullest extent.

HENRY WILLIAMS, superintendent of the Colorado Smelting Works, near Butte, has been connected with the present company since its organization. He was the locator of the works, having been sent here by other parties to investigate the resources of the neighborhood, and on the strength of his report the work of construction was begun and carried forward successfully. Mr. Williams is a smelter by trade, served in various works in Wales and England, for four or five years. He was sent to Mexico to purchase ore for one of those establishments, passing three years in that country. From 1872 to 1879 he resided in Colorado; in the latter year he moved to Montana and took charge of the mines of the Colorado Smelting Co. Mr. Williams attended the Hanover School of Mines, and is a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers.

GEORGE WOODWORTH, Butte, was born in Williams Co., Ohio, August 31, 1845. He received a common school education and in 1865 came to the Madison Valley, M. T., and engaged in farming until 1868; then moving to the Gallatin Valley he freighted from Corrinne, Utah, to various points in Montana for ten years. He at length settled in Butte and became interested in mining, afterward opening a confectionery, fruit and cigar store, which he still conducts. Mr. Woodworth was married May 1, 1881, to Miss Florence Emerick, daughter of Adam Emerick, of Fayette, Ohio; they have one child.

SAMUEL WORD, Attorney at law, Butte, was born at Barbourisville, Knox Co., Ky., January 19, 1837; was partially educated in the colleges of Lancaster, Ky., and Bethany, Va.; studied law with Andrew J. James, Attorney-General of Kentucky, and under ex Governor Silas Woodson; was admitted to the bar in August, 1858, and at once entered upon the practice of his profession. From 1858 to 1863 he practiced in the courts of Holt and Buchanan Co's, Mo., and Doniphan Co., Kan. On his arrival in Montana in September, 1863, he established his law office here, and for almost a quarter of a century has been prominent in the legal circles of the Territory, and served three years as District Attorney of First Judicial District; served three sessions in the House of Representatives, and two sessions in the Council; being elected Speaker of the first Chamber in 1876, he held that position to the close of 1877. In 1884 he was chosen by the Democratic Convention of the Territory to be one of the representatives of Montana in the Democratic National Convention at Chicago. To his efforts and those of his colleague are the Territories largely indebted for the first vote cast by them in a national convention, as well as for representation on the National Democratic Committee. Mr. Word has been the legal representative of the Union Pacific Railroad Co., in Montana, for the past five years.

A. S. WRIGHT, Silver Bow, was born in Erie Co., N. Y., November 16, 1833. In 1837 his family removed to Indiana, where he remained until 1856, when he went to Iowa. In 1858 he went to Kansas, remained one year, and moved to Colorado. He remained in Colorado only a short time, returning to the States, where he stayed till 1863, when he again visited Colorado, going from there to Montana in 1863. From the time of his coming to Montana until 1878, he engaged in mining in various parts of the Territory, also in freighting and farming. In this year he bought the ranch where he is at present located. He has 300 acres under fence, raises large quantities of hay and grain, and is also engaged in stock-raising. Mr. Wright was married in Elwood, Kan., in 1860, to his first wife, who died in 1869, leaving him five children. In 1882 he was married to his present wife.

E. W. WYNNE, Butte, was born in Grant Co., Wis., May 1, 1859. Parents removed to Warren, Ill., a few years later; after living there four years went to Chicago; four years later returned to Wisconsin. In 1870 came to Alder Gulch, M. T. Here Mr. Wynne completed his education at Virginia City. He then went to work in the drug store of J. B. Hinchman. After serving one and a half years, left his employ and clerked in a dry goods store; also mined. In 1881 he came to Butte and established a drug store on Park street. February, 1883, he formed a partnership with J. D. Thomas, and bought out W. F. Stanley's druggist stock on Main street. Business is carried on under the firm name of E. W. Wynne & Co. Mr. Wynne married Miss Blood, of Virginia City, July 9, 1880.

W. H. YOUNG, Butte, is a native of Chautauqua Co., N. Y., and was born May 12, 1844. During his infancy his parents moved to Wisconsin and settled in Columbia county, where he was raised, and there remained until April, 1864, when, in company with his brother, he started west with an ox team, the same being twin steers given them by their father when calves. They had a great deal of trouble on the trip with Indians, and on Powder river fought them a whole day. They, however, reached Virginia City on July 26, 1864, and engaged in hauling wood, and in January, 1865, started for Helena with the Last Chance Gulch stampede, and during the following spring prospected Canyon and Greenhorn Creeks, and continued mining there and in Nelson's Gulch until 1871; he then moved into the head of Grizzly Gulch and followed mining there and in the Red Mountain District until 1875. He at that time came to Butte and has since discovered the Burlington, Nettie, Fredonia, Cora, Aurora and Badger State leads, all of which have proved to be valuable mines, and the last three named are now owned by Mr. Young. In the fall of 1876 the Burlington Mill was built, and has since been in constant operation under the firm name of Rodabush & Young. Mr. Young owns the Fausett addition to the city of Butte. On November 29, 1869, Mr. Young was married to Miss Chelnessa J. McDaniel, of Kansas, by whom he has five children as follows: Cora E., William M., Hattie M., Nettie G. and Henry DeWitt.

CHAPTER XLIII.

YELLOWSTONE COUNTY.

JOHN J. ALDERSON, ranchman and one of the leading business men of Billings, arrived at Bozeman in 1864, in company with his brother, W. W. Alderson. He had a ranch on the site of Bozeman for five years. At this time he paid $175 for a plow, 50c. per pound for potatoes, and $1 to $1.25 for flour. He went to California in 1869 or 1870, in 1870 or 1871 to Kansas, where he was engaged in the stock business until 1875, when he started on his journey to Puget Sound. In 1876 he returned to Bozeman, 700 miles, on horseback, bringing with him his family and two of Dr. Price's children. In 1877 he settled on the present site of Coulson (his family being the first there) when there were only four settlers in the vicinity, viz: Corcoran, Clark, McAdow and O. N. Newman. He laid out that town, and was postmaster there for three years. After Billings was founded, he connected the towns by a street railway. Prior to the completion of the N. P. R. R. to Coulson, he kept a stage station, and the largest hotel in the valley up to 1883. He owns 160 acres adjoining West Billings and Coulson on the east side. He has had charge of the Artesian well at Billings since its opening in August, 1883. Mr. Alderson served with the 1st Minn. Volunteer Infantry in 1861, was wounded at the First Bull Run, and imprisoned at Richmond until 1862, when he was exchanged and discharged. He was married in 1872 to Miss Ellen Armstrong, of Illinois, who died here in January, 1883.

J. I. ALLEN, known as Col. Ike Allen, born at Buffalo, N. Y., in 1845, came to Fort Benton on steamer Spread Eagle, and was in the employ of the A. F. Co. from spring of 1863 to spring of 1863, when he joined the stampede to the Deer Lodge Co. goldfields; returning he re-entered the employ of the A. F. Co., had some thrilling adventures with Blackfeet and Gros Ventres. He returned to the States, was presented with a farm by his father near Alton, Ill., which he conducted for five years, when he revisited Ft. Benton. In 1869 he went to Helena, thence to Bozeman, and next to the Yellowstone Valley. He wintered nine miles below Emigrant gulch in 1869–70; in the spring of 1870 was employed at the Crow Agency and worked there until 1873, when he prospected on Clarke's Fork. In the fall of 1874 he engaged in trading with Indians at Benson's Landing, next assisted in building Fort Pease; then joined the Black Hills stampede, returned, and arrived at Terry just as General Terry's forces were crossing the Rosebud in pursuit of the Sioux. For some time he was engaged in mining. Again as courier for Lieutenant Doane, interpreter at Fort Keogh, and guide for Lieutenant Clark in 1878. He entered mercantile life at Stillwater in 1883. From 1879 until 1883 he had traded for the trader at the Crow Agency. During his Western life he saved four men from drowning—one at Wolf's rapids, one on the Yellowstone and two on the Missouri.

W. A. ALLEN, dentist, Billings, was born in Summerfield, Noble Co., Ohio, and when but ten years of age proved himself to be one of the finest rifle shots in the country. In 1865 his parents moved to Centerville, Iowa, where his love for the gun grew to such a passion that in 1876 he embarked for the Black Hills. Once in the wilds and among the big game, his feats became perfectly reckless. His comrades often remarked that the grizzly or Sioux would soon "round him up," as he often staid out at night watching the actions and habits of wild animals. In 1877, after the fearful slaughter of whites at Spearfish, the captain of the Big Horn Mountain prospecting expedition resigned, and one hundred of the party turned back. Soon thereafter the deserted party were corraled at Red Water. The doctor hearing of it, raised a small company of horsemen, and after three hard days' traveling and fighting, rescued the balance of the train, also a government surveying outfit on Hay creek, and although still considered a boy, he was unanimously elected to take charge of the train with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. He stoutly refused, as there were several mountain men of experience in the train. Thomas Nickelson, of Ohio, and others, gave him a fine horse, and insisted that he should proceed, which he finally did and found those sterling men of the plains ever ready with good advice, which enabled him to carry out his plans with dispatch at all times. His whole train was ever ready to adopt his plans, as he always took hold first himself. Many deaths occurred on the route, as it was a long, tiresome journey, but he joined in the camp-fire songs and was ever the same jolly colonel. When provisions were scarce, meat hard to get and Indians dangerously near, he never failed to bring in venison or some other variety of game. Dr. Allen will be remembered kindly by the Big Horn train of 1877, and the many strange scenes through which his curiosity led him have often been the topic of conversation until late at night. In imagination his voice can yet be heard around the camp-fires singing Sherman's march, or some Irish ballad, of which he never tired, or telling the boys of the time he rode the old muley cow in Ohio. After the train reached Bozeman, he began traveling over pioneer stage lines as messenger from Bozeman to Miles City, which soon became, as he said, too tame; then he joined Hiram Stewart, a noted hunter and trapper, and became noted as a bear hunter, traversing the Big Horn Mountains, Rockies and the Crogles. He has killed some of the largest grizzlies ever killed in this country. He soon learned the Indian language and obtained many fine robes and much information in regard to their religion, their beliefs, marriage ceremonies and the history of their tribe. Dr. Allen was among the first visitors at Custer's battle field, from which fatal spot he obtained and now has many relics. He was among the first settlers of Clarke's Fork, and has traveled the country from the Union Pacific to the British possessions; has killed numbers of every animal that roams the Western wilds, and for nine years he has been preparing a book of his travels and adventures among the wild game of the Western world. The manuscript is finished. He has the finest illustrations of wild animals possible to produce, and all killed by himself. Among his friends and among the noted Indian chiefs of the plains, his work is being called for by hundreds who knew him as a boy, a man and a hunter.

H. H. BOLE, Billings, clerk and recorder of Yellowstone Co., and principal member of the firm of H. H. Bole & Co., druggists, arrived in Montana in the fall of 1880, being then a practicing physician on the Northern Pacific Railroad. In September, 1882, he became associated with Dr. D. M. Parker, in the drug business, locating in Belknap block. They now carry a fine stock of goods and do a wholesale and retail business. Dr. Parker continues the practice of medicine, having his office in connection with the drug store. Dr. Bole is a native of Pennsylvania, but has been in the West since 1876, when he located at the Black Hills.

GEORGE E. BREAKENRIDGE, of the livery firm of Wheatley Bros., Billings, was born in Canada and reared in Wisconsin. He began mining in Colorado in 1859, and continued until 1861, when he engaged in the livery business at Denver until 1863, then locating at Alder Gulch. In August, 1864, he went to Denver, Col., where he resided until 1867, engaged in the freighting business. About this time he journeyed to New Mexico, turned northward to Ft. Phil. Kearney, and thence to old Fort C. F. Smith, where he stayed a few months. He visited Cheyenne, went to Utah in 1869, thence to Denver, and was a contractor on the K. P. R. R. for eighteen months, when he settled at Fort Laramie, and remained there six years. In 1877 he visited the Black Hills, and in 1882 came to Billings, where he resides with his family.

J. BREUCHAUD, Treasurer of Yellowstone county, P. O. Billings, was engaged as engineer in the preliminary survey of the N. P. R. R., and thus came to Montana in the fall of 1880. In the winter of 1881 he located his ranch within one mile of the present town of Billings. After serving as engineer for a time he took a contract on the road; this completed, he came to reside at Billings. Previous to his journey westward he was employed as engineer on the Boston water works for seven years. During the winter of 1881 he was a partner of P. W. McAdow in the general store at Coulson, and remained with him to within a short time of his election as county treasurer. Mr. Breuchaud is of Swiss descent, and a native of New York city; his wife, nee Miss Irene Gibbs, is a native of Massachusetts.

EDWARD CARDWELL, P. O. Stillwater, ranchman and dealer in stock, is a native of Wellington Co., Canada, and the son of William and Catharine Cardwell. In the fall of 1871 he went to Michigan, and in the spring of 1878, to Ogden, Utah. There he made an engagement to take a freight outfit to Helena, where he remained only a short time, having accepted a proposition to ranch on shares along the Boulder and Jefferson. While thus engaged he had the misfortune to lose his crops by grasshoppers. He then began mining at Virginia City, and continued the same for six summers, accumulating a small store, which he tried to make useful at White Beaver Creek; but he soon tired of mining, and located his present ranch of 160 acres, adding thereto 120 acres by purchase. It is situated on the north side of the Yellowstone, and capable of being irrigated at small expense. Miss Jennie Cardwell, sister of Edward, is a native of Mount Forest, Canada, and came to the Yellowstone Valley in the fall of 1882. She has since continued to live with her brother.

W. H. CLAUSSEN, ranchman, P. O. Stillwater, born in Hanover, November 23, 1835; came to New York in 1863, and thence proceeded to Helena in 1865. He was one of the contractors in building the prison at Deer Lodge, where he passed ten months of the year 1870, after which he was engaged for eight years freighting between Ft. Benton and Helena. In 1867 he visited the Black Hills with a company numbering 203 men. He returned via Benton in 1868, arrived in the Yellowstone valley in the summer of 1878, and located his ranch four miles below Merrill, which now is increased to 300 acres, all well improved. Mr. Claussen was married to Mrs. Mary Albertson, a native of Pennsylvania, April 13, 1882. His brother, Peter W., was drowned in the Yellowstone two miles below Stillwater, August 13, 1879.

C. H. COUNTRYMAN, Stillwater, son of Horace Countryman, was born in Wisconsin, April 5, 1851, and in 1852 crossed the plains with the family en route to Marysville, Cal. In later years he visited the East, taking the ocean route, recrossed the plains, since which time he has worked at the wheelwright's trade with his father. He came to the Yellowstone with W. H. Norton, they being the first settlers at Stillwater, their ranch being three miles above the present station. Two years after, he located his present ranch, on a portion of which Stillwater is situated. Since his settlement here he has been principally engaged in trading with the Crow Indians. Mr. Countryman was married to Miss Rosa B. Gibbons, a native of Montana, in the fall of 1882.

HORACE COUNTRYMAN, proprietor of the Stillwater Hotel, is the son of Peter and Margaret Countryman. He was born at Cleveland, O., in 1824; moved to a point near Janesville, Wis., in 1844, and made his home there until 1852, when he brought his family across the plains to Marysville, Cal., where he was engaged in milling, mining and erecting machinery until 1859. In July, 1866, he moved to Virginia City, M. T., where he erected a large quartz mill; subsequently built a 24 stamp mill on Lucas Lead; and a 15 stamp mill for Kearsage, McClure & Co. In the spring of 1867 the family moved to the Philipsburg district, and there Mr. Countryman erected the first silver mill ever erected in Montana, and commenced taking out the first silver bullion ever extracted by the silver process. In 1872-3 he erected the Flathead flouring and saw mills. In 1878 he went to Highland, and erected a 28 stamp mill; also built a mill for the Montana Silver Mining Co. at Philipsburg, and next erected the finest mill ever built at Sterling. He built a gold mill at Helena, of which Prof. Swallow was superintendent. In 1879 the family moved to Salt Lake City, thence to White Pine, where he erected a silver mill, returned to Deer Lodge county, where he remained two years. In company with his son, he ranched opposite the Old Crow Agency, in 1873, and abandoned the location in July, 1874, for a new one near Stillwater. He has served as postmaster since the establishment of the office, moved in 1882 to the station. He was married in 1850 to Miss Elizabeth Payne, of Illinois, whose father took an active part with Governor Dodge in the conquest of the Fox Indians in 1832.

CHARLES DEAL, P. O. Huntley, son of John and Matilda Deal, was born in December, 1855, at Albany, N. Y., settled in the Gallatin valley early in 1877, and proceeded to the Yellowstone in the spring of 1878, where he purchased a ranch one and one half mile below Col. Baker's battle ground. This purchase was made in 1882. Here he has 140 acres of fertile land under fence, devoted to hay-farming, grain and vegetable culture.

ALEXANDER DEVINE, Billings, one of the editors of the Billings Herald, arrived in the city in April, 1882, and in company with E. A. Bromley began publishing the Herald, with which he has since been connected. Before coming to Billings Mr. Devine was secretary to the general traffic manager of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha railroad. He is of French and Scotch descent, and was born near Montreal, Canada. The Herald office was the fourth building put up in Billings. (Vide History of County and Press Chapter.)

A. S. DOUGLASS, proprietor of Billings Saw and Planing Mills, and dealer in shingles, etc., arrived in Montana from Dakota and established his business in November, 1882. He is a native of Vemilion Co., Ill., where he was born November 30, 1849, but left that state when five or six years of age, moving to Iowa, where he remained until 1868. He then went to Dakota, and from the latter territory, in 1882, came to Montana. He married Miss Elizabeth M. Kinslow, in Dakota, in 1875. His son, Archie Billings Douglass, being the first born white child in Billings, June 12, 1882, received a handsome present from Hon. Fred. Billings. Mr. and Mrs. Douglass have also two other children.

SIDNEY H. ERWIN, Billings, member of the legislature, arrived in Montana in 1865 at Last Chance, and wintered on McClellan gulch, about 12 miles east from there. In 1866 he went to Grizzly gulch, where he remained until the spring of 1867, when he went to Salmon river mines. Returning from there in the fall of 1867, he came to Radersburg, stopping at Keatingville, near Radersburg, for four years. In the spring of 1872 he went to Pioneer, Deer Lodge county, and from there came to Judith basin, on what was called Beadler's stampede. He remained here until the spring of 1876, when he went to the Black Hills. The next winter found him in the Big Horn mountains, on Wind river. The next summer was spent at Fort Custer, and the next fall he came to the Yellowstone, where he has since been. At the time of the Nez Perces war he was a scout for Gen. Howard; was engaged in business at Canyon creek in July, 1879, and came from there to Billings July 1, 1883. He was deputy United States marshal over four years. Mr. Erwin was born December 19, 1847, at Malone, Franklin Co., N. Y., but leaving that state went to Minnesota, and for two years acted in the capacity of a scout during the Sioux war. He came from Minnesota to Montana; is married, and with his family resides in Billings.

L. H. FENSKE, proprietor of Fenske's wine, liquor and cigar establishment, opposite the Windsor Hotel, at Billings, is a son of Lewis Fenske; was born in 1854 in Wisconsin; came to Montana in 1882 and engaged in the wholesale liquor business, both at Billings M. T., and Bismarck, Dak.

H. A. FRITH, ranchman, Huntley, was born in Scotland in 1847; came to the United States in 1868; visited Texas, of which state he was a citizen for a few years, and served there in the United States army, making a stay of nine years in the state. He took up a ranch on the Yellowstone immediately after the Custer massacre of 1876; was a merchant at Huntley for some time before he established his trading post on the Musselshell, at Big Bend. His ranch consists of 160 acres, very fertile, and produces grain without irrigation.

O. F. GODDARD, attorney, Billings, is a native of Iowa, born January 20, 1852, to R. T. and Elizabeth (Tannehill) Goddard, natives of Champaign Co., O., and among the first settlers of Davis Co., Ia. The father resides on the same farm settled by him in 1842; the mother died in 1876. O. F. attended the country schools as much as possible, aside from farm duties, until 18 years of age, when he entered Troy Academy, where he graduated four years later, having taught some during this period to obtain means to defray necessary expenses. He taught for a time after completing his academic course and then began studying law with Tannehill, Postner & Fee, at Centerville, Ia., and after three years' attentive and persistent study, coupled with practice during the last year, he was readily admitted to the bar of Appanoose county. He soon completed arrangements for a partnership with the firm he was studying with, and gathering his small amount of worldly treasures, started for Corydon, Wayne Co., Ia., where the Tannehill & Fee firm were then located, and on his arrival found the contents of his pocketbook to be two dollars, one of which was expended for a night's lodging and meals. In two years he withdrew from the above named firm and opened an office by himself. He rapidly grew in the estimation of the citizens of Corydon, and as an appreciation of the value of him as an honest, upright gentleman, they elected him Mayor over Judge Freeland, one of the first and most highly respected citizens of the county. In 1883 he opened an office in Billings, where he has merited a good practice, and has recently been appointed deputy district attorney, under Judge Blake. He is also the Billings attorney for the Northern Pacific Railroad. He has always been active in politics, and during the late campaign "stumped" Yellowstone county for the republican, territorial, judicial and county ticket. Mr. Goddard realizes what it is to fight life's battles openhanded, but like the most of persons who have studied economy and who love and adhere strictly to their profession, has been successful, being now the owner of some good property in Billings. He was married January 20, 1881, to Allie, a daughter of Dr. and Rev. R. Stephenson, so well known and respected in Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Goddard have one child, Lora, born February 16, 1882.

T. C. GRAHAM, of Graham Bros., Junction City, was born in Benton Co., Ark., in 1849. When a boy he moved to Jasper Co., Mo., and there engaged in farming until 1877, when he came to Montana by team, making his final settlement at Junction City, where he engaged with his brother, J. H., a native of the same county, in the freighting business, freighting from Junction City to Maginnis and other places, which they still continue. In 1885 they erected a blacksmith and repair shop, and have a good trade. T. C. Graham married Nellie A. Moose, and J. H. Graham married S. M. Climent, both of Missouri.

F. L. GREENE, member from Yellowstone county of the Constitutional Convention of 1884, was born in Ohio; graduated at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., in 1866, and served in the United States navy as master until 1873. He then resigned his commission and removed to Arizona, New Mexico and Colorado. He came to Montana in 1880, located in Yellowstone county and engaged in stock-growing and freighting.

ALBERT HARRISON, brother of Waborn, of Sweet Grass, left Canada in 1856 and came to Minnesota, remaining there until 1866, with the exception of his army service. He served fourteen months in the Fifth Minnesota Regiment, and was mustered out in 1865. Leaving Minnesota in the spring of 1866 he came to Montana, and for two years lived on the Benton road. He built the first stage station on the road, at Bird Tail. He then went to Utah, California and Nevada, and returned to Montana in 1871, stopping at White Tail, Jefferson county. He took up a ranch there with his brother, Waborn, and was engaged in the dairy business most of the time, until 1876, when he went down through the Yellowstone country to the Black Hills. He made the campaign of 1876 with General Crook, and in 1877 returned to Montana, on the Sweet Grass, locating his ranch on June 10. It consists of 280 acres, well fenced and in good condition for a stock farm. He was married December 20, 1879, to Alice E. Davis, a native of New York. Mr. Harrison has had numerous adventures with the Indians. Once while living on White Tail creek in 1875 he went out in company with Charles Hadley to salt his cattle, and found some of his neighbors' horses in a gulch below. They had been stolen by Indians. Leaving Hadley with the horses Mr. Harrison commenced looking for the Indians and found them peeling bark from a pine tree. Slipping upon them unawares he pointed his gun at one of them, and motioned him to surrender. In an instant one of them seized hold of Mr. Harrison's gun and engaged him in a long and severe tussle. Mr. Harrison finally succeeded in shooting him. The other Indian ran away, and the horses were returned.

ISAAC M. HENSLEY, Rapids, born in Spring Valley, Mo., April 24, 1856, came to Montana in 1875, and freighted for two years, from Benton to Helena, and from Utah to Montana. In 1877 he took up a ranch of 360 acres near Rapids, where he now resides. Mr. Harrison was appointed in 1881 the first postmaster of the Rapids office, and has had numerous adventures with the Indians, and a sharp call from the Bannacks between Coulson and Fort Custer in 1878.

B. B. KELLEY, practicing physician, Billings, came here in July, 1882. He is a native of Ohio, but when very young removed to Nebraska. In 1876 he went to the Black Hills, and finally to Billings, where he has since practiced. Dr. Kelley is a graduate of Rush Medical College, Chicago, and practiced medicine in Grand Island, Neb., about five years, before going to the Black Hills, where he practiced some time before coming to Billings, where he resides with his family.

JNO. R. KING, sheriff of Yellowstone Co., first came to Deer Lodge, and after remaining there one year moved to Helena. Remaining here about a year, he went to the Judith and Musselshell country, where he traded with the Indians for about twelve months. He then went to Bozeman, where he kept a hotel and resided about five years. In 1873 he came to the Yellowstone, and in 1874 again visited the Judith country, returning to the Yellowstone in 1875. He assisted in building the Crow Agency in 1875 or 1876. One of Mr. King's prominent exploits, while on the Yellowstone, was the running of a fleet of mackinaws loaded with supplies from Benson's Landing to the relief of the troops at the mouth of the Rosebud. In December, 1876, he took a dispatch from Bozeman to Fort Keogh alone—a very hazardous undertaking at that time. During the summer of 1877 he ran mackinaws on the Yellowstone, and carried dispatches during the Nez Perces war; rode from Bozeman to Stillwater in thirteen hours, carrying a dispatch to General Sturgiss. In the summer of 1878 he ran mackinaws and carried dispatches, making another trip to the Crow Agency in twenty hours at the time of the Bannack war. In the fall of 1878 he located and established the town of Coulson, remaining there during the summer of 1879, rafting lumber to Miles City a portion of the time. In the spring of 1880 he went to the Judith country on a stampede, returning to Yellowstone in the fall of 1881, when the railroad was built, and engaging in the ice business at Coulson. Since March, 1883, he has been in the hardware business with Mr. Camp. The Camp Brothers, partners of Mr. King, are from Pontiac, Ill., and Mr. King came from the same State. He is about thirty-six years of age and married.

OLOF LAFVERSON, farmer and stockman, P. O. Stillwater, born near Solvesborg, Sweden, in 1829; came to America in 1853; lived in Illinois until 1864, when he came to Boulder, Jefferson Co., M. T., where he was engaged in farming until 1878. In this year he located his ranch on the Yellowstone, near Stillwater. Here he owns 171 acres, well improved, and about 400 cattle.

JOHN MCGINNESS, Billings, probate judge of Yellowstone Co., was born at Ottawa, Canada. He moved to the United States in 1868, living in New York four years, when he set out on those extensive travels which made him conversant with almost every State east of Kansas. From 1873 to 1876 he was a visitor at his home in Canada. In 1877 he traveled to Deadwood, and thence in 1882 to Montana; was elected first probate judge of Yellowstone Co. in May, 1883. Having been engaged in the practice of the law for ten or twelve years, he brought to his judicial office a ripe experience.

THOMAS MCGIRL, ranchman, Huntley, a native of Ireland, came with his parents to the United States in 1851, and settled in Rhode Island. Three years later the family moved to Lexington, Mo., where he remained until 1865, when he started to carve out his fortune. He was engaged in railroading in Texas, and in other ventures in Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho, and Montana, until, with Mr. Hoskins, he established his ranch on the Yellowstone, now comprising 1,000 acres. In 1877 he established the first stage station at Huntley, which he conducted for five years. He has experienced many close calls from the Indians, and in 1877 the Nez Perces camped within two miles of him—he being ignorant of their proximity. Omar Hoskins and himself were the first white settlers in the valley between Stillwater and the Big Horn, and Mrs. Hoskins the first white woman in this portion of the Yellowstone country. When Mr. McGirl began business he had a capital of $5,000, which his application and tact have increased to $100,000. His stock business is extensive.

O. N. NEWMAN, Billings, one of the "pioneers" of Montana, came to the Territory by way of Bannack, and after stopping there a few days arrived in Alder Gulch July 16, 1863. From Alder Gulch he went to Madison Valley, where he lived on what was known as the "Elkhorn" ranch. Thence he went to White Pine, Santiago, Southern California, and Lower California. He returned north in the summer of 1873, and wintered near Salem in Oregon. The summer of 1874 he spent on Puget's Sound, thence took a road across the Cascade Mountains to a place called Moscow, and during the summer of 1875 reached Walla Walla. He returned to Gallatin Valley, M. T., by way of Boise City, Idaho, lived in Gallatin Valley on a farm two years, and then came to Yellowstone Valley. In the spring of 1878 he settled on the river, about two and a half miles from the depot site, at Billings, where he has since lived. His ranch consists of a 140-acre claim, ninety acres of which is under cultivation—grain and vegetables being the principal productions. He is married, and, with his family, was among the first to locate in this vicinity.

W. H. NORTON, Stillwater, was born December 24, 1847, near Clayton, Adams Co., Ill.; was raised on a farm, where, after ten years of age, he worked in the summer and attended school in the winter. He enlisted as a private in the fall of 1863, in Co. B, Fiftieth Illinois Infantry, then in the Second Division, Sixteenth Corps; served in the Atlanta campaign, and upon the reorganization of Sherman's forces after the fall of Atlanta was transferred to the Fifteenth Corps; was on the march to the sea; thence through the Carolinas to Washington via Richmond; was in the grand review at Washington, and mustered out of the service with his regiment at Louisville, Ky., in August, 1865. In the spring of 1866, in company with old army comrades, he started for Montana with a freight outfit, and after three months of hard, tedious travel, and several raids from predatory bands of Indians, but without any material loss of stock and none of life, the outfit finally reached the Big Horn river, where it met 1,500 lodges of Sioux, Arrapahoes and Cheyennes. While camped almost in their midst they neither molested nor annoyed the party, but soon broke camp. Then trouble began. Mr. Norton and a companion fought 32 of them for half an hour on the open plain over the stock herd before help came; they saved stock, killed one and wounded two Indians, but after two days and nights the Indians succeeded in stampeding nearly all the stock. Mr. Norton and ten others volunteered to stay and guard the property until help could arrive. For four weary weeks the little band of eleven zealously guarded their trust, being over 200 miles from the nearest aid, possessing only 35 rounds of ammunition to the man, and half of their guns muzzle loaders. Near the last of the fourth week troops came up and established Fort C. F. Smith; teams soon arrived and took the party to the mines at Virginia City. Mr. Norton's first venture was farming; two comrades and himself seeded and planted 225 acres of grain and vegetables, investing their bottom dollar in the enterprise. Their crops looked splendid, and they were even maturing plans to return east, after disposing of their produce; but "the best laid plans o' mice an' men gang aft agley." The grasshoppers with one fell swoop in fifteen hours left their fields as bare as a brickyard. Disappointed but not discouraged the party began to look about for something else to do. Dividing their little effects, each started on his own hook, with the understanding that he who first struck anything was to notify the others. Mr. Norton secured a job hauling quartz from the mine to the mill, but had no team. Seeing that there was money in it he went to a gentleman who had a bull he was trying to sell off, told his business, and without a dollar bought five yoke of oxen and two wagons on time; but when he returned to commence on his contract the company failed, and he had a team and nothing for them to do. Concluding to try something else, he struck out for Fort Benton, 250 miles distant; succeeded in getting freight on good terms, and after an absence of sixty days returned and paid for his team in full. He can never forget the many hardships of that trip—all alone, heavily loaded, among strangers when he was with any one, but mostly alone with none but his oxen for company; many long evenings, while sitting by his little camp-fire, with the wolves howling around him, he experienced an intense yearning for the old home in Illinois. After about a year and a half of freighting, he caught the mining fever, sold his teams, and went into it with all his might, and after about eight years' mining, prospecting and stampeding, enduring all the hardships incidental to such a wild, exciting life, only to strike promising bonanzas and spend money and muscle, then find it a failure, he at last reluctantly gave that up and cast about for something more tangible. Finally, in company with two others, he came in 1875 on the Yellowstone river to start a trading post, and what with the incursions of the Sioux and other Indians into that region, killing and robbing the hunters and trappers of their outfits, most of which Mr. Norton and his partner had supplied to them taking chances on their catch to get their pay, they "went broke." Mr. Norton sought and readily obtained employment, and after three years again opened a mercantile business, which he is still engaged in. His experience on the Yellowstone for three or four years was full of peril and excitement; whenever a man went out of rifle range of his house he had to carry his gun, for skulking bands of Indians would lie concealed for weeks at a time waiting for a favorable opportunity to shoot a man unawares and not expose themselves. But the greatest trouble was to protect stock from being stampeded or stolen by them, and a trip to Bozeman, 110 miles distant, for supplies and goods, over precipitous bluffs, gorges and mountain streams, and hounded two-thirds of the distance by savage Indians, trying to intercept one at every vantage point, kept one's nerves strained to their highest tension, but, says Mr. Norton, "thanks to an overruling God, I have lived to see these things pass away, and the land where once the savage foe to the frontiersman lurked in ambush for the weary, lone traveler, to be now enjoying the blessings of peace and blooming like a rose under the magic touch of the quiet husbandman. Great herds of cattle and sheep have replaced the immense herds of buffalo and elk and antelope that but a few years ago thronged the valleys and plains. While I have endured many privations and been personally engaged in several sanguinary but unequal contests with the Indians during those trying years, I do not regret them, or the humble part I took when I look upon the new and advanced order of things." The people of Yellowstone county honored Mr. Norton by electing him as their first representative to the legislative assembly which convened in January, 1885, and in which he served with distinguished credit as a man of sound logical ideas and strict integrity. The first news of the Custer massacre was sent by Mr. Norton in a special to the Helena Herald. He was married in 1876 to Miss Eliza Labey, a native of the Isle of Jersey.

A. E. PARKER, ranchman, Park City, was born at St. Charles, Kane Co., Ill., November 30, 1848, and made that village his home until April, 1863, when he traveled outside the State for three years. In July, 1867, he visited Minnesota, moved to Dakota, where he engaged in freighting along the line of the N. P. R. R Coming to Montana he worked between Glendive and Coulson for one year, and was the first settler between Young's Point and Stillwater. His ranch between Park City and Stillwater consists of 160 acres of good land, all fenced, and devoted to grain crops.

BENJAMIN F. PEARSON was born in Iowa, in October, 1850. In 1872 he came direct to Deer Lodge county. After a stay of four and a half years there he returned to Iowa, and eighteen months after came back to Deer Lodge county. He located his ranch near Merrill, May 21, 1880, while the country was yet wild and sparsely settled, where he now owns 320 acres of land, with good buildings and improvements. His marriage with Miss A. J. Campbell, of Richland Co., Ohio, took place in Iowa, in April, 1878. In 1881 the Northern Blackfeet took two of his horses. He was among the first visitors to the National Park, which, had it not been for sheer good fortune, would have proved his last visit also. There he was chased by a huge bear, which gave up the pursuit before Mr. Pearson fell exhausted.

R. W. PETERS, Rapids, assessor of Yellowstone county, was born in Tennessee November 18, 1849. In 1863 he went to Missouri, but in one year came to Montana and remained in Virginia City twelve years. From there he proceeded to Bozeman, where he remained six years, and in 1881 went to Coulson and was employed as stock detective for one year. He then located at Billings, where he opened a meat market in company with J. M. Hensley; selling out in 1882 he came to Rapids and located his present ranch, where he still continues in the stock business. Mr. Peters married Miss Hensley October 26, 1882.

F. M. PROCTOR, Billings, member from Yellowstone county of the Constitutional Convention of 1884, was born in Kentucky in 1828. He was a farmer in his native state until the Mexican war broke out, when he joined the 4th Regt. of Ky. Vols. under General Scott, remaining with his command until the close of the war. He emigrated to California in 1849; was admitted to the bar in Sierra county in 1858, and was a member of the Constitutional Convention of Nevada, and afterward a senator. He removed to the Black Hills in 1877, and to Custer county, M. T., in 1881, where he engaged in the practice of law and mining He is a life-long Democrat.

CHARLES R. RUGG, Park City, was born in Clay county, Minn., in 1852; moved to Fort Keogh, M. T., in 1877, where he was employed for a time to put up hay for the government. In 1878 he engaged in hauling wood and furnishing fuel to the Yellowstone steamboats, and in 1879 located his ranch near what is now known as Park City. He has served as justice of the peace here almost since the time of his settlement.

W. R. STEBBINS, banker, Billings, started the bank of Stebbins, Post & Co., at Cheyenne, Wy., and afterward the First National Bank of Deadwood, Dak., but in 1880 he sold out that bank, and in conjunction with Mr. Mund and others, organized the Merchants' National Bank of Deadwood, which is now the leading bank in the Black Hills. Mr. Stebbins is also the principal owner in banks at Central City, Sturgis and Spearfish, in the Black Hills, and at Buffalo, W. T.

First National Bank of Billings, successors to the banking firm of Stebbins, Mund & Co., of Billings, began business in Billings June 1, 1882, when there were not more than 20 houses in the town. At that time Mr. Post was a member of the firm, but sold out to Mr. Stebbins August 1, 1883, since which time it has been known as Stebbins, Mund & Co. The same parties also have banks at Livingston and Miles city.

E. S. TUTT, Billings, stock-dealer and commissioner of Yellowstone county, is a native of St Louis, Mo. He came to Montana in 1878, accompanied by five other young men from St. Louis. A short time after taking up his residence here he placed 1,000 head of cattle on the range, since grown to 3,000 head. His home and surroundings compare very favorably with pleasant homes in the States, and form a very valuable property.

WILLIAM B. WEBB, Billings, one of the commissioners of Yellowstone county, was born in Connecticut, settled at La Crosse, Wis., and moved thence to Montana, taking up his residence at Billings. Mr. Webb is a member of the firm known as the Minnesota and Montana Land and Improvement Company; and is also interested in real estate in Billings, where he and his family reside.

ALONZO J. YOUNG, Park City, the first settler in upper Clarke's Fork Bottom, arrived in this section in the spring of 1877, the year following the Custer massacre. He kept the stage station there and was the first postmaster. His adventures with the Indians were numerous and stirring, even up to the period of his removal to Park City.

THE EIGHTH CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church South was held at Willow Creek, August 6 to 10, 1885, Bishop R. K. Hargsom presiding; E. J. Stanley, Secretary, and J. W. Kemper, Assistant Secretary. The report credits the church in Montana with eight church buildings, one parsonage, and other church property, amounting in all to the value of $24,300. There are twelve Sunday schools, with 372 scholars. The ministers of the Conference are: L. B. Stateler, P. E.; J. B. Whitford, E. J. Stanley, T. W. Flowers, J. L. M. Spain, W. W. Spain, L. P. Smithey, E. L. Lee and William Hall. (Vide chapter on churches.)

"SUN RIVER SWEET BYE-AND-BYE CLUB" is an institution peculiar to the Sun River country, and embraces among its active and honorary members many leading citizens of that section. Its objects and secrets are carefully guarded; but the organization is said to be based on all the better objects of the older secret societies. No married man can become a member, and a member after marriage forfeits such membership. A member who takes all the degrees becomes an officer for life, shares in the annual feast and in the monthly fish and oyster dinner during the season, to which friends of members are invited. The following list contains the names of charter members, as well as officers of this club: L. S. Wells, President; H. F. Rowls, Vice-President; Ben Steell, Treasurer; James Gibson, Chaplain; D. B. Hall, Recorder; Jerry Collins, Publisher; Malcom Craik, Master of Baton; A. S. Hall, Provost; Chas. T. Rowles, Tyler; Henry Kelly, Inquisitor; Henry Mahoney, Judge Advocate; Judge J. E. Lippincott, Orator; Isaac Bourk, Chief Steward; Wm. Ulm, Chief Shepherd; Geo. Lane, Master of Trumpet; Thos. Chusty, Guard of Archers; Robt. Ells, Warden; James Hennebery, Musical Director; William Crispin, Knight; Joseph Hilderbrand, Marshal; Mathew Carroll, Pioneer; Edward Garrett, Indian Agent; R. L. Ford, Commissary; Wm. Flynn, Chief Caterer: Robert Vaughn, Chief of Transport. The badge of the club is a coffin lid with skull and cross-bones at head, trumpet and baton crossed in center, with initial letters of the club name in the angles; below a heart pierced by a sword, and at foot the words, "Organized 1883." Other emblems of the club are: Bible, hoe, rake, and cornucopia. (Vide page 754.)

SAMUEL T. HAUSER finds mention in almost every chapter of the history proper, and many references are made to him in the personal reminiscences, but no attempt has been made to review all these characteristics which won for him the place of social and political head of the Territory. Here, however, we take much pleasure in printing the following statement of fact from the pen of one of Montana's pioneers and ablest lawyers, who has known the Governor through all the years which have elapsed since both took the initiatory measures for the organization of Montana Territory: "An analysis of the character of Governor Hauser," says this pioneer, "would be signally incomplete which did not make prominent his abounding hospitality in the widest sense of that term. His father was a lawyer of high character and professional standing in the State of Kentucky, not at all in sympathy with the passions and high temper that is supposed to characterize in a greater or less degree many members of the profession of that State, and his son possesses in an eminent degree that calmness of judgment, mildness of temper and friendliness of spirit that induces him to welcome all diverse views, and, whatever may be their merit, to treat them with deference. In an active career, extending over more than thirty years, it may well be doubted whether he has ever made an enemy. This has not been the result of any absence of opinions of his own, or any disinclination on his part to assert them on all proper occasions, but rather out of the habit of his life, not to combat the opinions of others earnestly and honestly maintained. Throughout the Civil War Mr. Hauser's intimate friends differed widely as to the merits of that controversy, and whatever opinions he may have entertained, they never seemed in any way to affect his friendship for the sincere men on either side. He is pre-eminently a man who likes his friends; he chooses them after a deliberate examination of their qualities, and when he has once selected a friend, stands by him through every vicissitude of fortune. He has been fortunate in his business relations, fortunate in social and domestic life, possessing a wide acquaintance and a host of admirers over the entire continent. Indeed, his wide acquaintance with the people is a great surprise to those persons who know that his active life has been largely spent in the remote and heretofore isolated portions of the Rocky Mountains. The members of all political parties were greatly rejoiced at his recent selection by President Cleveland to be Governor of Montana. Entirely without pretense himself, he is, nevertheless, a man of liberal education, and while yet a boy, had charge of most responsible professional duties as a civil engineer in the construction of the early railroads in the State of Missouri. He turns his attention to all forms of human activity with equal facility, and seems to make a success of whatever he undertakes. Buoyant of spirit and of a hopeful temperament, he never doubts his own capacity, and if any enterprise with which he is connected fails, he turns his attention to something else without depression, and with the same enthusiasm proceeds with it to its consummation. Under a quiet exterior he hides an unbending resolution, great physical and mental activity and a personal courage that knows no such word as fear. Abounding good nature is a leading trait in his character. His early enterprises in the West were valuable, as developing his character and teaching him self-reliance in an eminent degree. If the West sometimes causes its pioneers to degenerate, as a popular error asserts, nothing of this kind has ever occurred to Mr. Hauser, and he is a type of the noblest Kentuckian, and a true devotee and disciple of what is best in our Western civilization."
